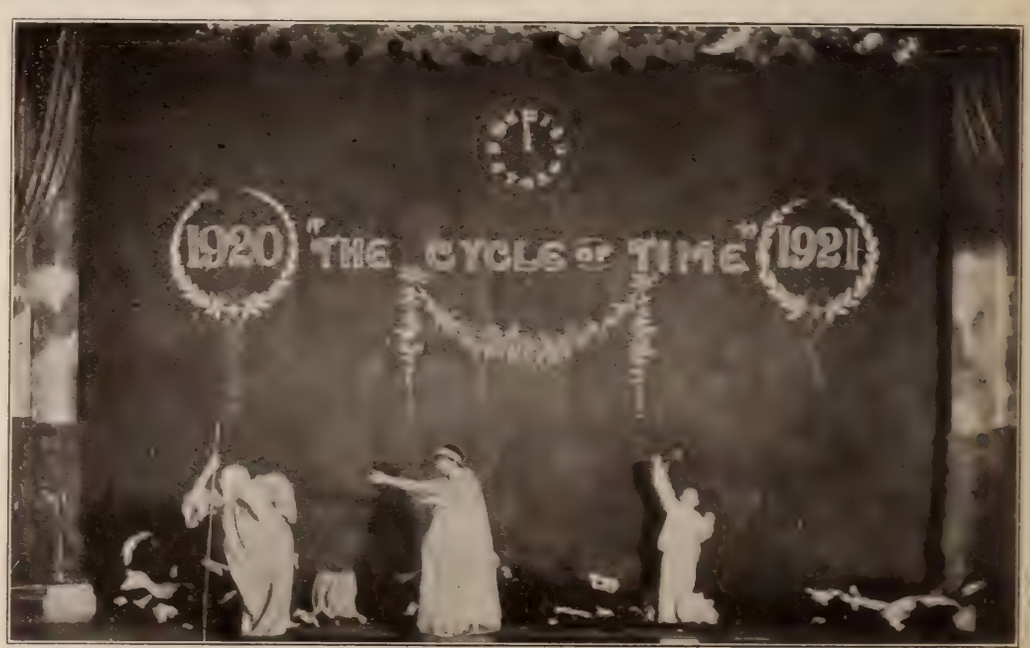
The Regent specialty began with a drill by the ushers dressed in their natty new uniforms.



While the boys were softly marching, the floor manager came down the center aisle singing the chorus of "Rose," a popular song hit. Then came the head usher, the doorman, janitor, stage carpenter and electrician. From the balcony came a sweet tenor voice—it was none other than the chief operator who had stepped from the booth long enough to join in the chorus. The house roared and applauded when the final chorus was sung by two clever girls dressed to represent the scrubwomen.

Frank H. Burns, publicity director for the Orlando Enterprises Inc., at Orlando, Fla., recently put over a stunt for "Idols of Clay" in connection with the Orlando Sentinel that got front pages for the picture for ten days before the showing and had all of Orlando talking.

Mr. Burns' scheme was to have the Sentinel offer prizes, consisting of tickets to the Phillips theatre, one of the Enterprises houses for the best reviews of the picture.

The scheme worked like a charm, business being increased fifty per cent, with the cost nothing but a few passes.

Working the Village Cop in on Exploitation

Ever and anon there comes a report from a small town exhibitor of an exploitation stunt that must make the big town man feel envious because it is one that he can't use himself.

In every small town are characters known to every other person in the city and this fact gives the exhibitor the chance for utilizing an intimate touch that is denied his big-city brother. Every small city and town has a constable who is known to every man, woman and child within his jurisdiction. Usually the job is not redundant with fees and the constable is available for special work that is not beneath the majesty of the law.

Tocco, Ga., the home of the Star theatre, managed by Joe Burton, has such a constable. Mr. Burton counts the constable as a friend and recently offered him a job which the constable was glad to accept not only for the fee connected with it but because of the humor with which it abounded.

A few days later the prominent citizens of Tocco received a visit from the constable. Apparently it was an official visit for after the usual exchange of greetings the constable dug down into his pocket and produced a number of summonses. Selecting one of them he handed it over with the remark usual in such cases:

"Nothing much to worry about I guess, but I had to give it to you."

The recipient of the summons found it made out to his own name and apparently it was an action in court brought against him by Joe Burton. On opening it, however, the joke was out for the inside was worded as follows:

"In the case of Joe Burton, manager of the Star Theatre vs. John Smith, and all others who wish to laugh. To any lawful Constable of said County, Greetings:

"The above named defendant is required to be and appear at the usual place for the showing of motion pictures, namely the Star theatre, on Dec. 8, 1921, before the regular showing hours, to make answer to the plaintiff's demand that he try to keep from laughing at Mack Sennett's funniest comedy, 'Married Life.'"

The wording was surrounded by the usual legal formalities required of a summons.

Mr. Burton had the constable distribute 1,000 of the "summonses" and nearly every one responded.

Double Page Newspaper Spread Exploits "Something to Think About"

"Something to Think About" jumped into fame in Topeka, Kan., because of a double page newspaper spread in the Topeka Daily Capital, which was arranged to exploit the picture. The stunt was unique in the annals of Topeka's motion picture history and marked a new spirit of advertising aggressiveness on the part of the local paper, which gave the full assistance of its staff in obtaining the necessary space to fill the two pages.

Home Talent Wins in Canada

Prologues With Local Players Make Big Hit in London, Canada

THAT home talent prologues can be put over in even the largest towns has been demonstrated by John Minhinnick, managing director of the Grand Opera House, London, Canada.

For the recent showing of "Behold My Wife," Mr. Minhinnick had a special stage setting constructed representing an Indian camp at the foot of the mountains. Moonlight cloud effects and a very realistic snow storm were introduced. The music was arranged by A. J. Jordan, head of a London conservatory of music and dramatic art. Ten of the most popular young people of the city took part. The program included such songs as "By the Waters of Minnetonka," "From the Land of Sky Blue Water," "The Light Dawn Is Stealing," "Far Off I Hear the Lovers Flute," "The Moon Drops Low" and others. Then there was a big corn dance by the Indian girls for the pleasure of the chief of the redskins. All the music rendered during the prologue was founded on authentic Indian airs. The prologue was greeted by rousing applause at every performance.

The week following Christmas, when business was reported unusually "off" in the more important cities of the territory Mr. Minhinnick again "copped" a record with "Humoresque." Mr. Jordan and his pupils were again induced to appear in another prologue entitled "Yesterday and Today." A second elaborate setting was built. This time it represented a street in the Ghetto. The audiences were taken on a "slumming" expedition through New York's East Side, during which they were greeted with singers, dancers and street musicians. An automobile party in a big limousine drove onto the stage, stopped and tossed coins to the entertainers. Signs above the candy, fruit and clothing stands along the street bore the names of well-known local merchants, reminding one of the old-time "Merchants Carnival" and indicating that these local boosters unquestionably helped pay for the stage setting.

The prologue opened with a scene that immediately gave the audience the proper atmosphere of "Humoresque." A rabbi sang "Eli,Eli," and a group of girls followed with another appropriate song. Then the scene shifted to the "East Side," where there was comedy and pathos aplenty.

London is a city of 60,000 people, but these prologues would do justice to a city thrice that size. Mr. Minhinnick is having little trouble now lining up talent for his next prologue, which probably will be for "Heliotrope."

"Something to Think About" for Neighborhood Managers

"The good-will and favor of the people who are regular patronizers of your theatre is the uppermost necessity toward success with a neighborhood motion picture house," declared Hector Pasmezoglu, manager of the Delmar and Congress Theatres, St. Louis.

In line with this theory, Pasmezoglu undertook a novel plan by which he hopes to gain the highest favor of his patrons. During the last three months of 1920, the Manager of these two theatres instructed his doormen and ushers to obtain the addresses and names of the various persons who were seen at the theatres regularly with each change of program. As the program is changed three times a week, plenty of opportunity to obtain this information presented itself.

Having secured a list of over 1,000 names and addresses by Christmas time, Pasmezoglu had a large number of New Year's cards printed bearing, beside the usual seasonal greetings, the following statement:

> Your constant patronage of our theatres has been sincerely appreciated by the management. It has enabled us to present the highest caliber of feature productions and to bring our success to a high step. Enclosed you will find two tickets good at either the Delmar or the Congress Theatres on any night during 1921.

The response to this clever bit of advertising is evidenced by the fact that more than 600 of the tickets have already been taken up at the doors.

Carrier's Practice What They Preached

"Gift Book" Idea Goes Like Wildfire in Southern City

THE holiday shopping season of 1920 ushered in a new idea in the sale of "gift books" by many theatres. A lot of exhibitors have done so well with the gift book idea that each succeeding Christmas time will see them on sale, but it has remained for those erstwhile exploitation experts, Jimmie and Eddie Carrier, who recently took over the reins of the Kearse theatres in Charleston, West Va., to turn the plan into something that went over so big that the original idea almost gets lost.

The Carriers went into the gift book sales campaign on a wholesale scale. The aid of the city's largest book store was solicited and arrangements made for a special display of Gift Books in the most conspicuous shop window—incidentally, the store to receive 15% of sales to cover cost of overhead, etc.

The aid of the American Legion was sought, and inasmuch as the local Post was in dire need of funds, a scheme was speedily worked out whereby the Legion Committee would have full charge of the Gift Book sales, receiving 15% of gross receipts. Within the course of a week a city-wide campaign was launched. The Legion officials prevailed upon every society to distribute its "quota" of Gift Books.

Societies, clubs and lodges vied with themselves in the sale of Gift Books. A booth was erected on the postoffice steps by the Legion, girls being posted throughout the day to handle sales. Other girls organized a house-to-house campaign, covering the city in an unescapable net. Every channel of reaching the general public was skilfully utilized. Among organizations helping in the drive were the American Legion, Red Cross Chapter, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, White Cross Girls, Ladies Auxiliary and several smaller clubs and lodges.

Unlike so many exploitation "stunts" where expenses and other incidentals eat up all profits, the Gift Book campaign will always stand out in bold relief. Here's the inside dope! Exactly 10,000 Gift Books were originally printed, divided equally between children and adult sizes. At the time of this writing a rush order had been given the printer for 5,000 additional books.

At the inception of the Gift Book idea, both Jimmy and Eddie planned to devote a few weeks of real honest-to-goodness hustling in "putting over" the idea. But as soon as the American Legion Committee got busy on the job, the entire burden was shifted from their shoulders.

Schade Plays "County Fair"

Sandusky Exhibitor Gives Burgess Play Great Exploitation Campaign

PATRONS of George Schade's Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., when they came out to see "The County Fair" recently were greeted by perhaps the most pretentious effort to secure realism ever attempted by any moving picture manager in Sandusky. From ushers attired in sunbonnets and gingham dresses to a genuine rube band, nothing was lacking to create the illusion suggested by the title of the picture.

The theatre itself was decorated with corn shocks, while in the vestibule patrons passed a long row of exhibits labeled first and second prizes, as the case might be. There was a cage containing a pair of doves, a duck which was called "goof" duck. Rabbits, chickens and other exhibits were also displayed. Vegetables and fruit and grain were shown as well.

After the ticket had been purchased from a pretty sunbonnetted miss, the patron was offered candy and peanuts free at the door. These he could munch as he watched the pictures. Another young woman, sunbonnetted and clad in a gingham dress, took up the ticket, and ushers, similarly attired, escorted the patron to a seat.

Inside the eye was confronted by such signs as: "Don't Josh the Ushers!" "Watering Trough on Each Side of Entrance!" "Keep Your Hands in Your Own Pockets!" and similar warnings. Before entering there was a place where cigar and cigarette butts could be left, according to a sign which read: "Park Your Butts Here!"

The music was a real feature, however. A rube orchestra which played everything from "Annie Laurie" and "There Will Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," to "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" and "Reuben, Reuben, I've Been Thinking," made a distinct hit.

On the opposite page is a layout of cuts which will illustrate the extent of Mr. Shade's exploitation.

Novelty Window Card for "Blind Wives"

Manager Ben Jackson of the Audubon theatre, on upper Broadway, New York city, demonstrated at his recent showing of "Blind Wives" that he is anything but a blind manager.

Jackson's contribution to the science of theatrical advertising consisted of an ordinary white window card, with the following copy printed in large letters across its face:

"Don't be 'Blind Wives.' Trade here and have money."

To make sure that the name of the picture would not be lost sight of in the terseness of this commercial wallop, Jackson had the lettering down in black, with the exception of the words "Blind Wives," which were printed in large red letters.

The entire neighborhood was soon talking "Blind Wives" and the sudden change of heart on the part of certain merchants who had theretofore steadfastly refused to "clutter up" their windows and showcases with anything that might help advertise another man's product was forcibly demonstrated when three additions of the cards were exhausted and Jackson was compelled to place a fourth "rush" order with the printer.

Good Stuff if Nature Provides the Snow

Nature is a good exploiter; she knows how to advertise. W. H. Ostenburg, Jr., manager of the Orpheum theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., went to nature to exploit the local showing of "The North Wind's Malice."

There was plenty of snow in the street in front of the theatre. Mr. Ostenburg had it shoveled into the lobby of his theatre after constructing a rude log cabin about his box-office and having a few small pine trees set up and a polar bear skin hung from the roof of the cabin.

New Slant to Window Display Advertising

"Out where the west begins"—otherwise Holdredge, Neb., Dan Roche, exploitation representative for the Chicago territory of Paramount Pictures, staged an exploitation campaign that was unique for completeness. The picture in question was "Something to Think About" at the Auditorium Theatre. Holdredge is a small rural town of 3,000 with a newspaper of 2,200 circulation and a motion picture theatre of generous seating capacity.

The prize stunt of the exploitation consisted in a teaser window display. For two days the leading department store closed the curtains on their windows and advertised their wares with one line on the outside of the window: "This window will contain 'Something to Think About.'" The raising of the curtains was timed coincidently with the first run of the picture at the theatre. The window displays contained articles of women's apparel, men's clothing, jewelry, knick knacks and odds and ends that would give customers of every description, "Something to Think About."

In addition to the window display, Roche used a mailing list of 2,500, extensive newspaper advertising, including a two-page advertising tie up and had the manager of the house, through the staff, call up patrons on the telephone service and advise them of the picture's coming For a town of 3,000 Holdredge played to a record capacity on the run.

Another Saenger Theatre Pulls "Married on the Stage" Stunt

The theatre was decorated with white wedding bells. With the lights on a local singer rendered "Oh Promise Me" to the organ accompaniment. At the finish of the song the orchestra began playing the "Wedding March." Then a wedding party, consisting of the lady ushers, appropriately attired, met a "bride and groom" at the head of an aisle and the party moved down the center aisle. A "preacher" came on the stage about this time, making a second surprise. The "bride and groom" mounted to the stage and the ceremony was begun. The "preacher" stalled through the service and as the "groom" attempted to put the ring on the "brides" finger, the band was allowed to drop to the floor with a loud crash of cymbals. Lights were then faded out and the title of "Married Life" flashed on the screen.

Mr. Greenblatt states that the prologue went over better than anything the Isis has ever presented and was the talk of the town. The audience did not know whether the marriage was real or not.

Christmas stage setting used by the Gowanda Opera House, Gowanda, N. Y., as told in the accompanying story

Ideal Small Town Theatre

How the Gowanda Opera House Gives Its Patrons Big City Shows and Still Makes Money

GOWANDA, N. Y., to most people may be but a name that sounds as as if it might have originated with the Indians, which it did. It is not a metropolis, for after a century of existence the village boasts of only four thousand population.

However, from a motion picture angle Gowanda should be more than a name, more than a village that affords one theatre and more than a place of historical interest. Gowanda is the home of the Gowanda opera house, of John W. Schatt, the owner and proprietor, and of Mrs. Marie Cummings, the manager. The Gowanda opera house, its owner and its manager seems to us to embody all that the small town motion picture house may hope to achieve. In its appointments, policy and management is to be found an inspiration for every exhibitor in a small city or village. It is a big city house, run along big city lines, doing more business and making more money than a good many metropolitan theatres.

There is a reason, of course, for this exception to the rule in small town theatres. A reason that began with Mr. Schatt and continues with Mr. Schatt and his manager, Mrs. Cummings.

John W. Schatt is a Gowanda business man of means who decided that he wanted a hobby, something to have fun with. The result was the Gowanda opera house, a theatre that most showmen would say was too good for the town. It is to be presumed that originally Mr. Schatt didn't expect that his theatre was going to be a good business bet. He wanted to give Gowanda city entertainments and have something to play with. Early in the history of the Gowanda opera house, Mrs. Marie Cummings, a widow with several children who had seen some hard times, became manager of the opera house and thus was completed a combination in showmanship that makes Gowanda an entertainment center, the like of which will be hard to find in a village of its size.

It is within the past year that the Gowanda theatre has really blossomed forth as a house in a class by itself and become worthy of this eulogy in a section of the NEWS that seldom can spare space to devote anything but a plain record of exploitation. Many improvements that add to the comfort of the opera house patrons have been consummated during the past twelve months.

New opera chairs placed far enough apart so that even the longest legs are comfortable have been installed.

The theatre has been redecorated in pink and gold with highly artistic panels, real works of art, placed about the auditorium.

In presentation, Mrs. Cummings can give her city brothers many a lesson. Stage settings, prologues and special numbers are a weekly feature on the bill.

Manager Joseph Rickli of the Eagle Theatre, Pana, Ill., did not spend a cent of money in exploiting "The Last of the Mohicans," but he succeeded in attracting exactly 1,000 of the 2,400 inhabitants of his town during the one day the picture was presented. This was the largest daily attendance in the history of the theatre and the only day on which a continuous show from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m. was found necessary.

This is how Manager Rickli put it over:

"The Last of the Mohicans" was the subject of a literature study in the Pana High School for a period of over a month. When the opportunity to book a picture the name and plot of which was identical with the current curriculum of the town's high school, Rickli grasped it.

He then consulted the chairman of the local board of education and induced him to permit all the children, who desired to see the picture, to use their tickets to the Eagle Theatre as an excuse for their absense on the day the picture was shown. It is needless to say that every student in both the high and primary schools had their tickets. Accordingly it was necessary to begin the showing of the program at 11 a. m. and continue far into the night that every adult who wished to see "The Last of the Mohicans" might get his chance. The local papers gave considerable space to the idea and heralded the feature two days before it arrived.

Delivering the Herald in the Home

A keen understanding of human psychology helped Harry Swift, exploitation representative in the Albany territory for Paramount Pictures, to put over one stunt in connection with the showing of "Something to Think About" at the new De Luxe Theatre, Utica, N. Y.

Swift wanted to have his message delivered right in the home by personal letters; but he knew that the ordinary circular might reach the waste basket before it ever reached the eyes. So he had small folders made up that could be bent to fit in the envelope, so that the only thing showing through the window of the envelope was the name of the addressee and the left hand corner of the check showing "Pay to the order of"—and below the first words "Twenty-five."

It was a sure-fire hit. Swift knew, and the average man knows too, that anything resembling a check will make the receiver dig for the envelope like a ground hog burrowing into the earth. And then after they had opened the envelope and unfolded the contents for a careful look—they got the message of "Something to Think About."

If you question the potency of this stunt sometime try it on your own patrons and watch them. Ten to one you hear of it too—and favorably.

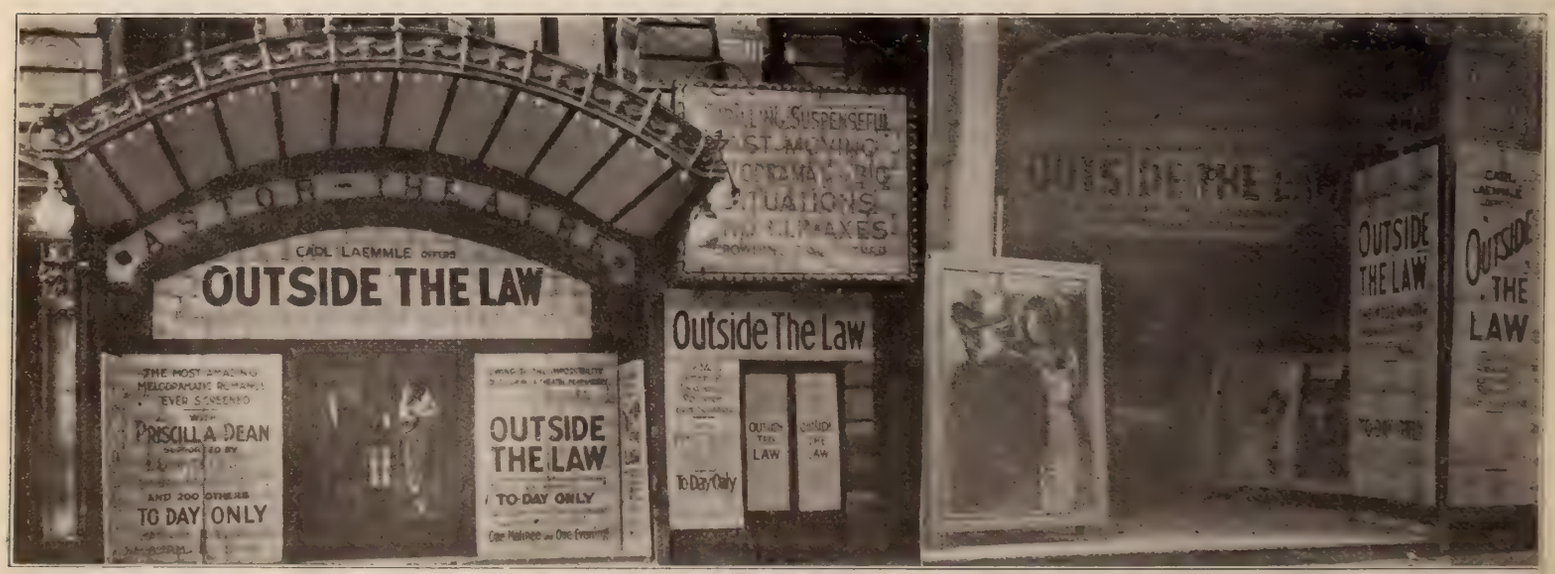
American Aviators' Escape Affords New Tie-up

Exhibitors who are about to play "Nomads of the North" have an excellent opportunity to link the picture up directly with one of the biggest news sensations of the year.

This opportunity arises out of the fact that "Nomads of the North," as a story, has its locale in the Hudson Bay country where the three American aviators so nearly lost their life.



It is recommended to exhibitors who are to play "Nomads of the North" during the next thirty days, that they insert in their advertising copy and advance notices a few lines, embodying the thought that "Nomads of the North" should have additional interest for every American at this time, because it brings vividly home, through the similarity of its scenery to that which formed the background of the aviator's tragic adventures, the hardships and trials through which the heroes were compelled to pass before they reached the frontiers of civilization again.

How Schaefer Bolstered Christmas Week Business

Hearing of a worthy Christmas charity fund being raised, Miss Nash and Schaefer decided to add to it. Miss Nash volunteered her services as a singer. Thereupon Schaefer made a touching appeal, and promised his audience that Miss Nash would sing if those present would contribute to the Christmas fund.

How to Use Music in the Small House

Many pictures that are taken as a matter of course by the patrons of the first-run motion picture theatres in the larger cities can be put over by the managers of smaller cities in a way that they will give them the style and atmosphere of super attractions. Special music is one thing which always makes a strong appeal to patrons of those theatres which have limited orchestras and when occasion offers the change for the musical exploitation of a feature, the exhibitor can bring added money into his box office by utilizing it.

The New Grand theatre, managed by J. C. Snyder, serves the population of Williston, N. D. Mr. Snyder is up against the same conditions as confront the usual manager in the same position—inability to get experienced players at a price commensurate with what the theatre ought to pay. When the New Grand booked "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" he immediately recalled the song successes that had grown out of the original stage production of the George M. Cohan hit, and sent for the complete scores and orchestrations on four of the music numbers.

When they arrived, he found what he had suspected, that the music was not so complicated or difficult but that it could be played by musicians at his disposal. What he did and what is accomplished is best told in his own words:

"We secured all the orchestrations and five of the song hits, hired a five-piece orchestra and a chorus of six boys and used the songs during the screening of the picture. Opened the picture with a light overture until Ray boards the train for New Rochelle, then the orchestra played 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway' with the chorus singing it. When the town band meets Ray, our orchestra played 'There'll be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight' out of tune until the town band is stopped by the leader. This caused much laughter.

"With the next scene we used orchestra and song, 'Mary is a Grand Old Name.' with the chorus. When the old lady enters the room when the player piano is running and Ray dances around with her until he pushes her out of the room we used the selection, 'Wait 'Till the Cows Come Home' and jazzed it up during the dance. This scene brought the house down in laughter. When Ray first takes Mary out in the car we used the selection, 'My Baby's Arms.' At the finale we used orchestra and chorus on 'So Long Mary.'"

Invites Local Notables for Special Show

K. L. Burk, manager of the Baker Theatre, Baker, Ore., pulled an unusual stunt in exploiting "Earthbound," for its three-day showing in that city. He gave an invitation showing of the photoplay two days before the opening day of its booking to about 150 invited guests from among the most prominent men and women in the city.

Among those present was W. W. Gardner, Mayor of Baker. Before the picture was shown, Manager Burk distributed paper and pencils to every person in the audience and then, at his request, Mayor Gardner asked each person present to write out his opinion of "Earthbound." The Mayor set the example.

Mr. Burk then took a sheaf of the opinions to the Baker Daily Democrat, which printed them along with a brief account of the advance showing, under a two-column head.

Another of Hyman's Prologues Described

One of the most novel prologues devised by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman for presentation in connection with a feature production was served to Brooklyn Strand audiences last week for "The Last of the Mohicans."

The photograph reproduced on this page explains partly how Hyman put it over, but, like all other photos, fails to convey to the reader the impression it made on the Strand audiences. In the strict sense of the word it was not a prologue, inasmuch as the picture was thrown on the screen and ran several hundred feet before it slowly faded off the screen, and the lights from off stage, slowly coming up, revealed the stage set almost identically with the shot at which the projector was stopped.

Cleveland Theatres and Newspapers Cooperate

Demonstrating that "It's always fair weather, when good showmen get together," William Freedman, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, and Paul Gusdanovic, manager of the Strand Theatre, both of Cleveland, made permanent records in the annals of Ohio's best showmanship with a joint exploitation campaign just completed.

Involved in the campaign which Messrs. Gusdanovic waged with such remarkable success, were 200,000 subscribers of the Cleveland Press, approximately 5,675 Cleveland newsboys, Miss Gladys Briggs, and "Dinty."

The first step in the campaign was naturally the agreement of the managers of the Strand and Metropolitan to play a day-and-date showing of "Dinty." This accomplished, the next move was the matter of interesting the Cleveland Press.

The most important step in the campaign was to interest the Cleveland Press in a plan whereby the paper was to lend its editorial support to a big party for every newsboy who sold the Press in Cleveland.

The managers outlined their proposition. It was to be a big celebration. The Cleveland Press was to be given credit for providing the entertainment. The Press thought the plan was a good one. It was a bit of publication enterprise that would awaken interest among its readers. News stories began to appear about the to have, at the same time making it plain good time the Press newsies were going that "Dinty" was a great picture. For a week in advance of the special showing the Press kept the story on page one.

A surprise was added to the celebration when the Press announced that a local girl, Gladys Briggs, ten years old, would appear in a "Dinty" prologue, as a newsboy.

Hyman Grabs Publicity on Current Events Strip

The minute Managing Director Hyman of the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, learned that Pathe was shooting out news reel service on the flight of the three naval officers who lost their way and were found in the wilds of Canada, and he invited the officers and their wives to a showing of the picture.

Lieut. Hinton speaking for his two companions seemed inclined to doubt the possibility, of getting into Brooklyn, even with Hyman's offer of special conveyance, but expressed their desire to see the picture and promised to be on hand during the week.

Hyman immediately got his press department on the job.

Reproduces Studio Scene as Window Display

That the readiest method of motion picture exploitation is so simple that it is often overlooked was exemplified again when "Idols of Clay" was exhibited at the Strand Theatre, Seattle, Wash. The story centers around the career of a rising sculptor, so what should be more natural than that a sculptor's studio should provide the exploitation for the picture?

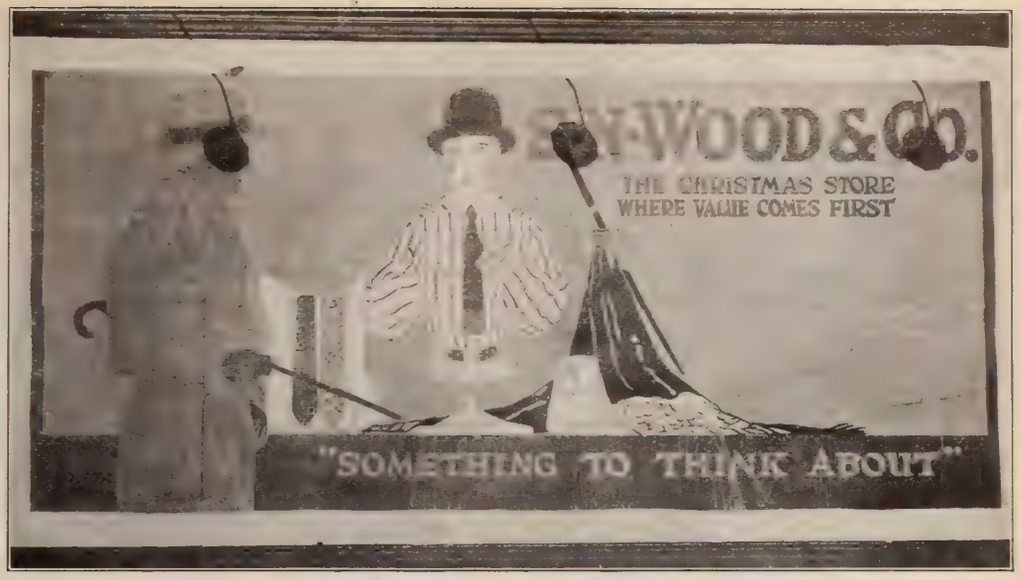
From 11 until 5 daily, a well groomed figure, believing the usual hearsay about the profession, clad in artist's smock, tam o' shanter cap and a flowing tie, modelled away at clay figures to the intense interest of the crowd that filled the sidewalks outside the window.

The total cost to the Strand Theatre was negligible, a small charge being made for the rental of some of the articles shown in the window. The sculptor gave his time, elated at the publicity it gave him. The results spoke for themselves.

The Evolution of a Small Idea



Here's an exploitation stunt that started out as a small idea and developed until it spread over 50 billboards in the most prominent location in San Francisco.

At the time the Imperial theatre was playing "Something to Think About," the S. N. Wood & Co.'s business was preparing a big outdoor advertising splurge. John Howard, exploitation representative for the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, stuck his oar in and sold the clothing company's advertising manager, both on the advantages of tying up with motion pictures and the punch of the title, "Something to Think About."

Somewhat skeptical of the result, the advertising manager tried it out on one billboard first. What followed must, in large measure, be credited to the outdoor sign painters, who were responsible, although Howard originally conceived the idea. The first painting was done in futurist style, with dabbed cheeks, a crescent to represent a mouth, two whirligigs for a mustache and a circular derby, which was accentuated by the lack of a jacket over the shirt. The hand lettering was distinctive and refined, while the title of the production, run in quotation marks at the bottom of the drawing, provided the motion picture angle.

When the advertising manager took one glimpse at the appearance of the first billboard his doubts vanished, and within a week 50 had been completed, covering all the outdoor sign locations in Frisco worth covering.

It was a splendid drawing card for the theatre and the picture. The most important point from a practical standpoint is the permanent value of the tie-up.

McDonald Originates Good Idea for "The Thief"

An inexpensive and novel stunt for the exploitation of "The Thief" has recently been put over by J. W. McDonald, manager of Fox's Nelson theatre, Springfield, Mass.

Stickers on which was printed teaser ads were distributed about the city.

Following is some of the copy Mr. McDonald used on the stickers:

Did You Lock The Back Door When You Came Out: You'd Better. For THE THIEF is coming.

Where Do You Hide Your Money at Night? "The Thief" can find it.

With the Crime Wave At Its Height. The Thief is coming to Springfield.

Who's that Behind you? Look Quick. It may be THE THIEF.

Wendt Advertises His Ads

To avoid any possibility of readers missing his ads, Harold F. Wendt, advertising manager of the Rivoli, Toledo, O., has hit upon a plan whereby he almost forces his message to the readers—while they are hardly aware of the fact—looking for it and reading it most willingly.

Aside from his regular ads in the movie columns, each day on the second page of Toledo papers there is a small ad—one column by one inch—that hardly takes on the appearance of an ad at all. Set up similarly to a daily magazine page feature, there appears the sayings of "Movie Mabel." Each day there is a new morsel of philosophy, worthy of being sought. This philosophy, while the reader is unaware, only tends to arouse interest in the subject matter on the picture.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE five-reel Western production, the "Hunger of the Blood," starring Franklyn Farnum, is stated as the next release for the Canyon Pictures Corporation. In this production, Mr. Farnum plays the part of a youthful Indian chief who fights for the honor of his people against the encroachments of the white man. The "Hunger of the Blood" is described as the most pretentious of all the pictures made by Colonel Selig for the Canyon Pictures.

Joan Film Sales Company announces that it has prepared a novel and inexpensive circular on the Fanny Ward feature, "She Played and Paid," which is now being used by state right buyers, to interest showmen in their offering. The entire circular is of such small proportions that the exhibitor can digest its contents at a glance and need not wade through a bulky press book to glean the selling points of the production.

Joan states that Sam Zierler of New York, who bought this feature for his territory, is making successful use of these circulars, as also is Sam Grand of Boston, A. M. Gollos, of Chicago, Frank Salley of Atlanta, Peter Oletsky of Baltimore, etc. These exchanges are timing mailing of these circulars to precede their salesmen visits.

Inter-Ocean Has New Film

CONTRACTS have just been signed under the terms of which Inter-Ocean Film Corporation acquires the exclusive foreign distributing rights, with the exception of Holland, to Frederick Burlingham's special five-reel production, "The Wild Men of Borneo."

It will be recalled that Mr. Burlingham last year led an expedition into the heart of the Dutch Borneo jungles 350 miles from the coast, where he succeeded in filming the intimate life of the wild men in their home. The newspapers of America, the Orient and Europe all have published special accounts of this expedition, the New York World, among others, having published two pages with text and photographs, while the news agencies carried special accounts by telegraph.

This production has now been edited, assembled and titled, and is available either as a five-reel special, continuity complete, with display photographs, or where desired can be exploited in single reels in progressive serial form under the following titles: "A Borneo Venice," "Monkey Land Up the Barito River," "Towards the Savages," "Jungle Belles of Borneo," "A Wedding Feast Among the Dayaks."

Besides the Borneo picture Inter-Ocean also secured several new single reels of Mr. Burlingham showing scenes in Japan, several South Sea Islands and films taken in the Malay States.

In consummating this new deal Inter-Ocean now controls the foreign sales of Dr. Burlingham's entire production consisting already of approximately fifty reels, showing his widely known adventures in the Swiss Alps, his English and Continental pictures, as well as his adventures in America, the extreme Orient and the South Seas.

Eckels Seeking New Units

Independent Films' Head May Acquire New Product for Release

EDDY ECKELS, president of the Independent Films Association, has been visiting the various independent exchanges on his trip to the Coast. He was scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles Saturday, January 22. The prime object of Mr. Eckel's going to Los Angeles, is to devote his time to supervising the production of the units now operating through the Independent Films Association. Next in importance is that he be on the ground in order to secure additional units for independent distribution.

Harry Rice, business manager of the Independent Films Association, states that Mr. Eckels, while constantly on the alert for new units, will only accept those that have been first submitted to the independent exchanges for approval, that being one of the policies of this organization. He also states that a new series of five reelers have been closed and will be ready for announcement during the coming week. This will give the Independent Films Association two series of five reelers and one comedy unit.

Richard Robertson, director of publicity and exploitation of the Association, has been in the East for the past three weeks in the interests of the Independent Films Association's product. He will return to Chicago the early part of the week at which time a very interesting announcement is to be made.

H. E. Belford, salesmanager, has been on a tour of the East, which will terminate in New York City during the coming week.

Few States Remain on "The Devil's Angel"

According to a statement from Clark-Cornelius there are only a few states left unsold on "The Devil's Angel." Those buyers who have already purchased this picture, are, as a general rule, putting it on as a road show, the company states.

GREATEST SINGLE REEL IN FILMLAND
"Screen Snapshots"

MAX E. MAZUR, treasurer of Sherman Productions Corporation, in the absence of President Harry A. Sherman, who is now en route for the Pacific Coast, where several of the concern's pictures will be produced during the coming year, announces the final allotment of territorial rights in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas for the exclusive distribution of all Sherman productions during the next five years to T. O. Tuttle of Dallas, Texas.

Mr. Tuttle is widely known to the exhibitors in the Southwest, where he is manager of Criterion Film Service, 1913½ Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas, a distributing organization handling many of the big independent specials released in that territory.

It is understood that he has secured the franchise in Sherman Productions Corporation on his own account and not on behalf of the Criterion and will personally represent the Sherman interests in the three states mentioned.

Electrical Experts See Levey Production

The first three episodes of "The Modern Aladdin," Harry Levey's electrical feature series, had their premier showing to an audience of electrical experts on January 18th. at the New York offices of the Westinghouse Electric Company.

"The Modern Aladdin" is to be released in the form of a series of ten one-reel pictures, each one complete in itself and dealing with a different phase of the story of electricity, but each having a logical connection with the next.

Farnum Feature Goes Big in Milwaukee

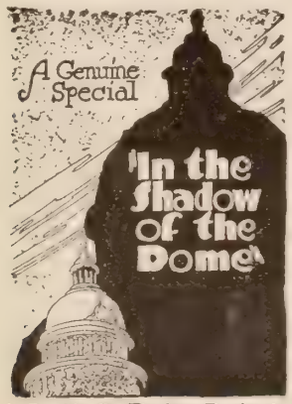
The latest production to be released by the Canyon Pictures Corporation is Franklyn Farnum in the "Fighting Stranger." This production, which is the third of a series of six 5-reel pictures, has just been released by the Walter A. Baier Film Company, Milwaukee. The first reports which have been received in New York indicate that the "Fighting Stranger" will be the biggest success which has ever been handled by the Baier offices. Advance bookings in other sections which this production is slated for early release, indicate that it will duplicate its success in these territories.

The Independents' Crucial Year

By Mr. Hecht, Treasurer of Top Notch Co., of Cleveland

THE independent film man does not realize the menace that threatens him in the current year; in fact, the independent film man never realizes anything, as he is the happy-go-lucky kind who does not take anything too seriously. He dropped into the film business and went right along with the tide. Conditions are changing every year, as the industry grows, but the independent exchangeman does not seem to note the difference, until he will lock himself out accidentally and leave the key inside.

When the independent producer makes a picture or a series of pictures, his only thought is to secure release or sell his picture. He often finds that the independent distributor or exchangeman has not the $20-30,000 on hand to buy his product, so he agrees to a release on the percentage basis. The result, in nine cases out of ten, is that the producer, who is usually backed by outside finances, will not even get back half of the original cost of the production from the release; therefore, losing his backer, and as he must keep on producing he will find new capital to work with. The second time he does not give his film to the independent distributor to release on the percentage basis, because he feels that by releasing his own pictures direct to the exchanges, although it is a more expensive and more tiresome process, will repay him, both for the production and distributing expense; however, he will again find disappointment, as in selling direct to the independent exchangeman he will find that the price he can obtain for his state-rights will not pay him back the expense, much less will it leave him any profit.



The only thing left for the producer and distributor is to release his own production direct to the ultimate buyer, the exhibitor, but to do this he must have his own exchanges and to open a chain of exchanges covering the country and to upkeep those offices, costs rather a large sum of money and money is or rather was hard to get.

Nineteen hundred and twenty-one has changed this situation. The industrial unrest and the financial panic in all other industries laid off millions of workers. This, consequently had its effect on thousands of other business men, who cannot cling to their losing business, but sold out and are selling out daily and are looking for some other business or investment to capitalize their time or turn their money where they can make more than 8% profit on it. The film business is the fastest growing of all industries and the present oppressed financial condition did not seem to affect the motion picture business in the measure that might have been expected, consequently good promoters and financial brokers will be able to raise more money this year, in this particular field than among prosperous circumstances. Nevertheless, the independent distributor either gets a reasonable price for his state-rights, or will be forced to join hands and open their own exchanges.

I believe that 1921 will decide the fate of their organization and its bearing on the independent field. If the independent exchangemen, as many of them do today, with due respect to the exception, will not be able to take out his C. O. D., and will not pay a price that at least will repay the original cost of production and exploitation; this company will be forced to open their own branches and will, in union with a few other independent producing and distributing corporations, book their own pictures and buy up the negatives of feature productions of any independent producer that may come to their attention.

I believe that this year will be the most prosperous for the film producer and distributor who wants to raise capital and that all large independent distributing organizations are contemplating to determine the fate of their future product, whether to sell to the independent exchanges for a prize that affords them a living; or get to the exhibitor direct and if necessary to go still further and purchase or build their own theatres, as the film industry must survive and this cannot be unless all branches will produce a reasonable profit.

The independent exchanges, not only a few but all of them, must adopt substantial business methods, thus knowing what their income and expense is and keeping account of same, as they will not be forced to issue bad checks and return C.O.D. shipments on account of lack of funds. Again we apologize to the exception to this rule. I am in hopes that the independent field will become substantial in the current year or it will undermine its own future.

To Exploit "The Deceiver"

Arrow Film to Give Wide Publicity to Lifeograph Feature

AN announcement is made by the advertising and publicity department of the Arrow Film Corporation that "The Deceiver," the five-reel special production which was made for Arrow by the American Lifeograph Company, of Portland, Ore., is to be exploited in a big way.

It will be advertised in the national trade papers, and in addition will have an especially devised advertising and exploitation campaign worked out for the benefit of the independent exchangemen, who purchase this picture for their territory, and a separate advertising and exploitation campaign for the exhibitor who books the picture.

A number of territories have already been sold in this picture, it is said. W. Ray Johnston, vice-president and general manager of Arrow, has received a number of letters complimenting Arrow on the title of this picture and the advertising possibilities which it contains.

"The Deceiver" is a story of the great North Woods, and is described as a powerful drama of the human emotions of the people who live in the timber lands, and who face death daily as a matter of course in their occupation of getting out the lumber with which to supply the builders throughout the country. It narrates the adventures of a man who becomes obsessed with the greed of gold and the lure of ambition and seeks to further his interest by fair means or foul, and who for a time is successful by using unscrupulous tactics and riding rough shod over his fellow workers.

"He's In Again" Sells Entire West Series

The arrival of the third Billy West comedy, "He's In Again," caused the entire series to be booked by many Pittsburg exhibitors, according to reports received from Joe Skirbell of the First National of Pittsburg, who purchased territorial rights to the Joan series of comics. Many exhibitors, he states, were waiting to see the third West two-reeler before booking the entire series of twelve. Forty-three contracts for the series were obtained last week, he states, following a showing of "He's In Again."

Sam Zierler of New York, who has the West series for the upper part of the state and Northern New Jersey, reports fifty-eight new contracts following a showing of "He's In Again" to expectant exhibitors.

EVERYBODY KNOWS "The HALLROOM BOYS"

"Hush" Screened for Chicago Exhibitors

At a memorable gathering of Chicago's exhibitors, the fifth Clara Kimball Young production "Hush," whose author is Sada Cowen, was presented at the Ziegfeld theatre last week. I. Van Ronkel, of the Favorite Players Film Corporation of Chicago, who has the distribution rights of the coming series of Equity's Young productions for Illinois and Indiana, declared that this private trade showing surpassed any Chicago has yet seen.

Among the prominent exhibitors present were the Ascher brothers, Balaban and Katz, Lubliner and Trinz, Aaron Jones of Jones Linick and Schaffer, Marx and Goodman, Abe Gumbiner, Harry Schoenstadt, and Andrew Karzas of the Woodlawn.

After the showing, Mr. Van Ronkel states that he was besieged with impatient inquiries for booking dates on "Hush."

To insure thorough preparation for the bookings that are pouring in fast numbers on "Hush" from all parts of the Chicago territory, Mr. Van Ronkel has opened a branch office in Indianapolis, Indiana, in the Wimmer building. This expansion was undertaken to give Indiana exhibitors more direct and personal attention, and also better service on the Young productions. Mr. Lee is in charge of this branch office.

Sport Pictorials for Capital Theatre

W. Ray Johnston, vice president and general manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, reports that the series of twelve single reel subjects known as the Sport Pictorials, produced by Jack Eaton of Town and Country Films and edited by Grantland Rice, are proving extremely popular throughout the country.

As evidence of this popularity the important bookings being obtained on these pictures are cited. "Making Man Handlers," a Sport Pictorial dealing with the athletics of the future generals of the United States Army as illustrated by the curriculum of sports at West Point, has been booked in the Capitol theatre, New York City, for the week of January 16. This picture has also been booked for the Brooklyn Strand, while Fabian's new million dollar theatre, the Branford, of Newark, N. J., has booked the entire series of twelve Sport Pictorials.

Buyers Interested in First Prizma Drama

Many state rights buyers are writing to the C. B. C. Film Sales Co., of New York, announces Jack Cohn, of that company, inquiring into the release of the first Prizma dramatic story, "Heidi." This is a colored picturization of the classic by Johanna Spyri which ran at the Capitol theatre in New York during Christmas week.

Billy Quirk Comedies Offered by Zenith

The Zenith Pictures Corporation of New York announce that they will present to the trade a series of two-reel comedies featuring Billy Quirk, supported by Peggy Shaw, formerly of the Zeigfeld Midnight Frolic. J. A. Fitzgerald has been selected by President E. Don Greaves to direct Mr. Quirk. Albert Hofbauer is the camera chief. The first comedy now under production is from the pen of D. V. Wall, and is entitled "Romeo Up to Date."

D. J. Mountain, formerly of Fox Film Corp., will handle the sales end.

AFTER a study of conditions in all fields of distribution, Herman J. Garfield has decided to launch his production of the Dan Sully stage success, "The Parish Priest," through independent exchanges. Since giving the new picture a try-out at the Capitol theatre, Wilkesbarre, the owners of Independent Exchanges throughout the country have shown such a live interest in the subject that Mr. Garfield has become convinced that in order to insure the picture version of the popular old drama the special handling it has always received as a play, it should be placed with showmen, and he believes that the training of the state right buyers in exploiting special productions makes them the logical choice to give "The Parish Priest" the attention it deserves.

In line with his decision, Mr. Garfield has doubled the numbers of styles of advertising matter to be used in heralding the picture. Among the innovations which he will introduce in connection with launching of "The Parish Priest" are four styles of one sheets.

Foreign Films to Be Offered

Herz Film Has Twelve Sascha Productions for Independents

THE Herz Film Corporation, of New York, announce that they have acquired the entire output of the Sascha Film Company of Prague, to consist of twelve feature productions a year, which they will offer in this country on the independent market. The announcement is made following the recent visit to this country of Count Alexender Kolowrat, president of the Sascha company, who returned to Europe a few weeks ago after a thorough study of American film market and American production methods.

Vladimer Herz, president of the new company, points out that these pictures are to be made for the express purpose of reaching the American market. Instead of buying a foreign made picture which has a hit-or-miss chance of appealing to an American audience, these productions will be made with a view of pleasing United States screen lovers. Mr. Herz states that it practically amounts to having their own studio in Europe.

By the terms of the contract the Herz company will acquire the world's rights to the entire output of the Sascha company with the exception of continental Europe. In this country they will be offered on the independent market. The negotiations were started several months ago.

"I have long realized," said Mr. Herz, who was formerly sales representative for Goldwyn, "that really good films were being produced by certain European producers and further that these films would eventually find a favorable market here. On account of my connections abroad I have probably been in a somewhat unique position to study this situation and could not share the view of so many American distributors that foreign films would never find a market here.

"Of course anyone holding this opinion could not be criticized, as no doubt the European made films as seen here before the war did contain many un-American characteristics. But these producers have now acquired a knowledge that has resulted in the buiding up of the international, or, in other words—pictures of American quality and standard."

Mr. Herz states that the first production to be released, which is already completed, is a story by George Ohnet, an internationally known author, and is to feature Lucy Dolaire, a European star. It is to be offered under the title of "The Love Slave." Scenes for this picture were actually taken in Damascus, along the Mediterranean, and in Trieste. Every production to follow will be from a well-known book or novel by an author of world-wide fame.

"I also wish to announce," stated Mr. Herz, "that I have associated with me, C. H. MacGowan, who has had a long and varied experience in the motion picture business. He was for several years connected with the Universal company."

Kineto Release is Arranged

National Exchanges to Handle Chas. Urban's Kineto Review

IT has been announced by Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., that a contract has been closed with the National Exchanges, Inc., whereby the entire distribution for the United States and Canada for the Kineto Review, "The Living Book of Knowledge," will be handled by them.

"The Living Book of Knowledge" is the encyclopedic film project that is being carried out by Mr. Urban. It will contain more than a thousand reels. Each reel deals with one subject and each Kineto Review comes in one reel.

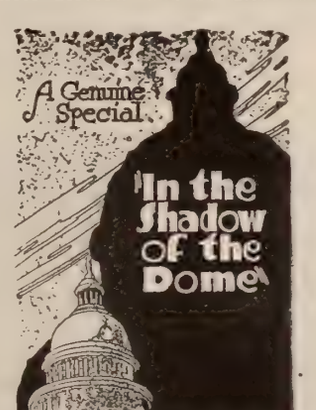
Mr. Urban's collection of film material has been gathered in every country of the world and the constant accession of new negative material he is receiving gives "The Living Book of Knowledge" a magnificent background.

The National Exchanges, Inc., has formed an organization through the ranks of some of the biggest independents in the film trade.

Through its organization the Kineto Review will be distributed in New York by its own exchange, headed by Joseph Klein, a well-known exchange manager, who has held several important exchange managerships in New York; notable among them that of First National. In Buffalo, too, National Exchanges, Inc., will operate its own office.

In New Jersey, the Jans Film Service, Inc., hold the franchise. In Boston, Portland and New Haven, and surrounding territories, the American Feature Film Co. are the franchise holders. The Philadelphia territory will be operated by the Metro Film Corporation., under R. F. Lynch. The Chicago office will be under Harry Weiss, operating as the National Exchanges, Inc.

The Baltimore, Cincinnati and Cleveland offices also will be under the national name. Ruben and Finkelstein, with J. F. Cubberly in charge, will hold the franchises for the Minneapolis and Milwaukee territories. In Kansas City it will be the Allied Exhibitors, Inc.; in St. Louis, the Standard Film Co.



Dallas, Oklahoma City and Little Rock will be handled by the National Exchanges, Inc. of Texas. Atlanta will be under the Savini Film, Inc., and New Orleans' franchise is held by S. T. Stephens Film Distributing Co., while San Francisco and Los Angeles are held by All Star Features Distributors, Inc., a Sol Lesser organization. Detroit will be manned by the J. H. Kunsky Enterprises, and Denver and Salt LakeCity territories will be in the hands of the Swanson Theatre Circuit.

All the Canadian offices will be managed by the Royal Enterprises, Inc., of Canada, an Allen Bros. organization.

The Kineto Review has been shown to the critics of the film trade press for many weeks past and the published opinions have been unanimous in their enthusiasm over its fine subject matter and its beautiful photography.

It has also been frequently represented on the programs of the Capitol in New York and the Mark Strand in Brooklyn. The subjects were picked for their variety and in every case the response of the audiences was full of praise.

An especial feature of the Kineto Review, announces the company, quite apart from its own value, is the readiness with which it lends itself to especially fine presentations. Both Mr. Rothafel and Mr. Hyman proved this beyond a doubt.

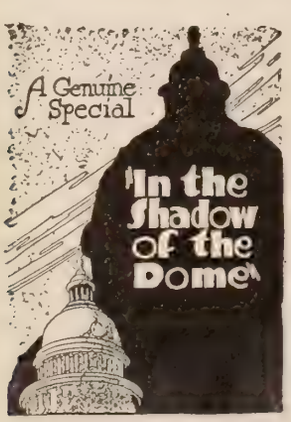
Luporini May Form Big Export Organization

It is rumored in local film circles that Luporini Brothers will shortly form a large export organization to be backed by unlimited capital for the purpose of carrying out extensive and far-reaching plans in the foreign market. The new corporation, it is intimated, will furnish an outlet to American motion picture producers for the distribution of their product in foreign film territories, and will likewise serve as a connecting link with Continental Producers in the distribution of their productions in this country.

To Play Vitagraph Serial in One Week

Here's something unique in the film annals of Dunlap, Iowa, according to a statement just received from the Vitagraph headquarters. Mr. Taylor, owner of a local theatre, the Idle Hour, after inaugurating a policy of running two episodes a week of Vitagraph serials, decided to go a step further. Consequently at the present time Mr. Taylor has determined to run "The Silent Avenger," starring William Duncan, in its entirety during the one week. He announces that beginning with October 23rd and continuing up to October 31st, he will play two episodes each night.

School Coupons Prove Exploitation Aid



"School coupons" issued in connection with the run of "The County Fair" at the Leader theatre, Washington, D. C., by the Super Film Attractions, of that city, resulted in bringing hundreds of school children to the theatre during the run of the feature. The coupon, with fifteen cents, entitled the holder to one admission.

The exchange states that the coupons were gotten out merely as an experiment, but proved so successful from a point of view of cost and expense that the idea is being carried out in connection with other shows.

Another idea worked out was to have an exploitation man or theatre representative call at the school and make a definite matinee appointment for the entire class. On one afternoon 109 children, escorted by their teachers, marched to the theatre in a body.

Baker Changes Title of "Temple Dusk"

"Without Limit," is the new title decided upon by Sawyer and Lubin for their forthcoming George D. Baker production for S. L. Pictures of Calvin Johnston's story. "Temple Dusk," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The new designation was chosen after considering that persons unfamiliar with the story might think from its title "Temple Dusk" that it was laid in India or the East.

New St. Paul House Opened

Electric Display Feature of First Night; "The Furnace" Heads Program

WHEN Finkelstein and Rubin opened their New Garrick theatre in St. Paul, the week of December 11, they did it with a blaze of light that attracted wide attention and big crowds.

Huge electric signs formed the outstanding feature of the display. The theatre stands on a corner where two important streets intersect. Over the sidewalk is a marquee and atop of this a big three-sided electric sign. On each of the sides in large letters are the words "New Garrick."

Below the signs are spaces for announcements of the current production. Over the entrance to the lobby is another sign, composed of heavy block letters. At the time of the opening of the house it carried the announcement, "Now Open." This served to focus the attention of passersby whose interest had been aroused by the larger and more prominent display.

Additional electric lights illuminated other sections of the theatre front, where the words "New Garrick" again appeared. The display was rendered still more effective by the fact that the marquis was painted in a light color. Inside and outside the lobby were displays containing announcements of the picture being played.

The striking thing about the New Garrick is the emphasis placed on the theatre itself, while the production is given comparatively little attention.

According to reports, the theatre held capacity crowds on its opening week and business exceeded expectations. The New Garrick opened with "The Furnace," Realart's William D. Taylor production.

Ten More Cuneo Pictures in 1921

Ten more Lester Cuneo pictures are set for production in the coming year, according to an announcement of the Capital Film Co., of Chicago. "The Ranger and the Law" is this star's most recently completed feature, and his second starring vehicle for that company.

Cuneo entered pictures many years ago, and made his screen debut with the old Selig Polyscope company. He then played in support of Kathlyn Williams, and later joined the Essanay Film Company. There he appeared with such stars as Washburn and Bushman. His coming features will be virile, lively stories of the West.

"Cut-Backs" Link Episodes in Serial

"Cutting Back" into the action of a preceding episode so as to give the audience a chance to make the transition to the new episode with an understanding of the sequences of the plot is a plan being followed in the presentation of Pathe's new serial, "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchison. This is the plan followed in the opening of "The Harbor Bandits," the title of the second episode, which Pathe will release January 30th. At the close of the first episode, the bad man fires and the hero is seen to fall down the narrow steps of a fire-escape, as the picture fades out. In the new episode, this incident is repeated with the subsequent action of the hero's escape.

Francis Ford in Cast of Guinan Pictures

Word comes from Los Angeles, where the Texas Guinan series of eight five reel Western pictures are being produced, that Francis Ford has decided to appear in all of the series.

Under the original agreement Mr. Ford was engaged by Victor Kremer to produce the pictures only and had not been considered as a prospective member of the company, but after reading the several scenarios Mr. Ford arrived at the conclusion that in each of the pictures there was a role that in his judgment fitted his particular talents and decided that for the better presentation of the finished product he would enroll himself as an active member of the cast.

Although Miss Guinan reached Los Angeles but a week ago work has already started on the first picture and it is expected that it will be ready for release late next month or early in March.

Robert W. Priest Signs Lottie Kendall

Robert W. Priest, president of "The Film Market, Inc.," has signed contracts with Lottie Kendall calling for a series of four six-reel special photoplay productions to be released on the state rights plan. The name of the director will be announced later. These productions will be made in the East.

Greenwich Village in Independent Picture

At least two thousand feet of Roy Sheldon's production, "Is a Mother to Blame?" is laid in Greenwich Village, it is stated, and the scenes were not only staged on the spot, but actual Greenwich Village artists took prominent parts in them. The "mother" of "Is a Mother to Blame?" was an artist and the part was played by Modre Kovska, who is an artist in real life in addition to being an actress.

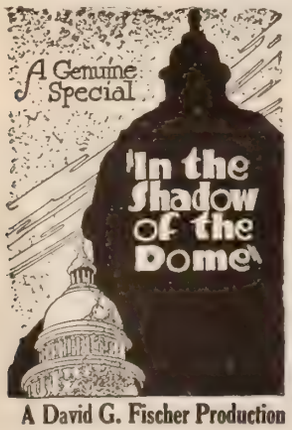
Canyon Westerns Are 50% Sold

Six Franklyn Farnums Find Buyers Despite Pessimism

IN spite of the widespread cry of bad business and depression, the chief executives of the Canyon Pictures Corporation in New York have just announced that by persistent activity coupled with optimism, and have disposed of the rights of more than half the country on their series of six five-reel Western features starring Franklyn Farnum.

Both Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg of the Canyon offices, believe that the reason for their success have been two-fold. Mr. Goldstein said in part: "We believe that the policy upon which all successful business operations have been carried on is just as essential, if not more so, to the picture industry as to the fields of industrial endeavor. This policy is simply this:

"We must produce product which can be sold at a profit to an exchange which in turn will sell to the exhibitor at a profit. This product must be of a nature which will find a general market among his exhibitors and must be sold at a price to the theatre manager that will assure him a reasonable profit also. We take into consideration the exhibitors' problem the minute we begin to produce. We realize that a picture must have not only heart interest and artistic value, but must possess a large measure of commercial appeal."



In seconding the remarks of Mr. Goldstein, Mr. Weinberg said, "It has always been my contention that the success or failure of a production is determined in the studio. Extravagant waste due to temperamental actors and directors has been the cause of more failures than anything else. Colonel William N. Selig, under whose supervision Canyon pictures are made, has an inestimable asset in his long years of progressive experience as a picture producer and exploiter. He realizes that for every dollar spent in production, it is absolutely necessary to receive in return a full dollar's worth of value.

"We do not believe in cheap pictures, but we do believe in pictures which represent the full value of the money invested in them. It takes no great skill or shrewdness to sell a product which is honestly made, and we believe that each and every one of the Canyon pictures are one hundred per cent. honest."

The third of the series of Franklyn Farnum Westerns, "The Fighting Stranger," has just been completed and the print has reached New York. It is a story which gives the star every opportunity to impress an audience by his daredevil stunts and thrilling horsemanship. It is adapted from the novel, "Danger," by William E. Wing, and contains, in addition to its thrilling Western action a real gripping mystery story, with suspense as to the real identity of the star up to the very end.

It is this combination of a good mystery story with a thrilling Western, which, Canyon believes, will give 'The Fighting Strangers" an especial apeal to the average audience. The story revolves about a mysterious 'man higher up' in crooked business and his false promises to get an innocent man out of prison. The story opens in a city, and the action stays there just long enough to allow Farnum a thrilling scene when he walks across a narrow plank connecting the roofs of two buildings.

A David G. Fischer Production

JACOB WILK announces to state right buyers that he is offering in certain territories three two-reel comedies starring Jane and Katherine Lee, who are at present being featured on the Keith and Orpheum circuits. The titles of these comedies are "The Circus Imps," "The Dixie Madcaps" and "The Hicksville Terrors." For several years William Fox starred these two children in a number of features which made both for the producer and exhibitor large sums of money. Their advent into vaudeville created a sensation and so successful were they that at the Palace Theatre, New York City, they were held over for a second week.

"Reckless Wives" Press Book Completed

Master Advertisers of Chicago, who prepare all advertising material and accessories for the Independent Films Association productions, have completed the press book on "Reckless Wives."

Sam Gold states that Master Advertisers also have in preparation the press and accessories book on the Pinnacle Comedies starring Max Roberts. The Pinnacle Comedy press book will be ready for distribution within a couple of weeks.

Arrow Exchanges Formed

Shallenberger Heads Exchange to Serve Theatres in N. Y. Territory

AN announcement was issued this week by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, of the formation of a new company headed by himself, which is to conduct an exchange in Greater New York. The name of this new organization is Arrow Exchanges, Inc., and its purpose is to conduct an exchange serving the theatres of Northern New Jersey and Greater New York.

The New York exchange of the Empire State Film Corporation, formerly owned by Arthur G. Whyte, has been taken over in its entirety by the Arrow Exchanges, Inc., who will retain the same offices and continue the distribution of all films which were the property of the Empire State.

The personnel of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., is W. E. Shallenberger, president; W. Ray Johnston, treasurer, and N. R. Champion, vice president and general manager.

Mr. Champion, who will manage the exchange, is said to be one of the best known exchangemen in the east. He was for a long period manager of the Washington exchange of Pathe, where he made a record for that organization. He is well known throughout the trade and is thoroughly conversant with exchange management from every angle.

Arrow Exchanges, Inc. is a distinctly separate company, having no connection whatsoever with the Arrow Film Corporation, the former being a releasing exchange operating in the aforementioned territory, while the latter is a distributing organization marketing films produced for distribution on the independent market.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the newly formed Arrow Exchanges, Inc.

"What do you want in 1921?"

Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of the Dominant Pictures Corporation, in an attempt to obtain an early solution of this question has sent out a questionnaire to independent exchangemen and state rights operators requesting that they express their views on the type of pictures they would like to handle in their respective territories in 1921. Thus Mr. Kopfstein expects to feel the pulse of state rights buyers and be able to accede to their demands during the coming year.

The questionnaire which has been prepared by Mr. Kopfstein will be sent out to every independent exchangeman in the country. While there will undoubtedly be no unanimity of opinion among state rights buyers, the replies will to a certain degree act as a barometer of opinion as to the type of productions best suited to the demands of exchangemen in various territories.

Second Baumer Ready

Baumer Films, Inc., producers of industrial-educational films, have just completed their second picture for the Kelley-Springfield Company. It is a single reel into which is woven the story of the production of rubber tires.

Arrow Makes Big Contract

Charnas, Enlarging Exchanges, Buys Many Features for Ohio Releases

AN announcement of important sales made in the independent field is issued this week by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who consummated a deal with Harry Charnas, president of the Federated Film Exchange of Ohio, for a series of features in that territory, which Arrow claims is a record breaker.

The contract covers the sale to Mr. Charnas of the following pictures for that respective territory: "Circumstantial Evidence," "Wall Street Mystery," "Unseen Witness," "Sacred Ruby," "The Bromley Case," "Trail of the Cigarette," "Triple Clue" and "House of Mystery," eight pictures all starring Glenn White. These were purchased for the state of Ohio. "Woman's Man," starring Romaine Fielding, "Love's Protege," starring Ora Carew; "The Law of Nature," starring David G. Fisher, these purchased for the states of Ohio and Kentucky. "The Golden Trail," with Jane Novak, Jean Hersholt and Jack Livingston, purchased for Ohio and Michigan. "Bachelor Apartments," starring Georgia Hopkins; "Bitter Fruit," starring Jane Gail; "Before the White Man Came," with an all Indian cast; "The Daughter of the Don," with an all star cast, all of which were purchased for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. "Chamber of Mystery," starring Claire Whitney and Earl Metcalf; "Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street," starring Edmund Cobb, these productions purchased for the state of Ohio.

This deal is the first big step in Mr. Charnas' plan towards the opening of feature exchanges to be allied with his short reel exchanges known as the Standard Film Service Company which already has branches in Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati.

The machinery of his organization will be immediately set in motion to facilitate the bookings of these pictures with the efficient organization he now has, backed up by the co-operative publicity that he furnishes exhibitors. Mr. Charnas is very popular with all film men and has established a reputation for fair and square dealing that is in itself sufficient explanation of his success in the past.

Paul Gordon Considers Picture Contract

Paul Gordon, starring in William A. Brady's "The Man Who Came Back," now playing over the Subway Circuit, after going on tour through the Eastern States, is considering a contract to appear in pictures following his engagement as star of the Brady production.

Ford Release is "Democracy in Education"

America through her public school systems must make democracy safe for the world, is the theme of the Ford Educational Weekly No. 3. "Democracy in Education."

Besides showing the modern means of making the world safe for democracy the picture tells of the early history of the American Pioneers.

"Democracy in Education" will be released by Fitzpatrick & McElroy on January 23rd through the Federated Film Exchange of America, Inc.

Ben Berk to Represent Alt and Howell

Ben Berk, formerly vice-president and general manager of Sammy Burns Co., has resigned from that position and arrived in New York to be the eastern representative for Alt and Howell Comedies, produced by the Union Film Co., Inc., at Sherman, Cal.

Notable Men Work on "Sunshine Harbor"

Torrey Ford of the New York Tribune has been engaged to write the titles for "Sunshine Harbor," the new Hemmer production. George Spink, composer and orchestra director is assembling and writing special music; and Francis Cugat of the art department of the Metropolitan Opera Company is designing the art titles.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

THE latest Douglas Fairbanks production released by United Artists' Corporation, "The Mark of Zorro," last week finished its run of thirty-eight days at the New Mission theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.

Some three months past the management of the theatre sought for a suitable production to reopen their play house, which, after having been redecorated and furnished, was named the Mission theatre. They viewed every production that was to be released about the time of the opening, and chose "The Mark of Zorro" as the best possible bet.

They booked the picture for a week, with the option of extending the run if business warranted it. The answer to its success is the fact that the original seven days' run was extended to a total of thirty-eight days.

Immediately after the Mission theatre decided to end the run of the picture, the management of the DeLuxe theatre contracted for the picture with the option of extending their run as long as the management desired.

First Run Bookings for "Thoughtless Women"

First run bookings in practically every city of any size in the United States are being rapidly consummated for "Thoughtless Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production, starring Alma Rubens, according to reports received at the home office of the Pioneer Film Corporation from its exchanges.

"The Devil" Opens on Broadway

George Arliss' Vehicle Is Well Received at the Strand

GEORGE ARLISS, in his screen debut in the Associated Exhibitors' production, "The Devil," broke all records for attendance at the Strand theatre, New York, at the premiere presentation of the picture, declares a statement just received from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters. From the opening of the house shortly after noon until the last performance at night, hundreds of people waited in long lines outside of the theatre and because of the crowd thousands were unable to get in, it is declared.

The picture itself was given a favorable reception at every performance, and the work of Mr. Arliss drew a liberal measure of praise from all of the newspapers.

"Mr. Arliss has broken all records for the Strand theatre on an opening day," Mr. Joseph Plunkett, the managing director is quoted as saying at the conclusion of the first day's presentation. "'The Devil' drew more people into the Strand theatre in a single day than any other production in the history of the house. As I saw the figures go higher and higher during the day, I began to think there was some peculiar elasticity about the walls of the theatre. I never did believe I could put as many people into the Strand as we did on Sunday and my only regret is that we were compelled to turn so many away."

The national opening of the picture was preceded by an extensive newspaper and publicity campaign which was inaugurated by Mr. Plunkett shortly after Mr. Moe Mark and Mr. Plunkett viewed the picture for the first time. It had not been intended to release "The Devil" for some time to come, but Mr. Mark had heard of the picture and upon seeing it urged its immediate release and guaranteed to give it a first-class presentation.

One of the finest sets used in the motion picture was brought from the studio to the theatre and is utilized for the prologue. The well-known Sergactchinko Ballet was engaged for the occasion. This troupe of dancers also appeared in the motion picture in one of the most dramatic moments of the play. In the motion picture they are shown dancing up the steps of the great ball room, slowly reaching the devil (Mr. Arliss) at the pinnacle. As he turns upon them with satanic mockery, the dancers fall back upon the stairs and writhe upon what appear to be flames. In his prologue Mr. Plunkett duplicated this scene from the motion picture. The act was beautifully lighted, running from a light shade of red in the center to a deep blue for the borders.

As the curtains were drawn aside Fernando Guarneri, the Italian baritone, was disclosed on the top step in a make-up resembling that of Mr. Arliss in the photo-play. He sang the aria from Mephistopheles, and as he concluded the number the dancers slowly emerged from a well concealed trap in the center of the stage. They squirmed and writhed up under the spell of his gestures and voice, and when the climax came they tumbled back, falling upon a glass floor under which the flame effects were arranged. With the dancers writhing apparently in air, flames broke out about them. This immediately preceded the showing of the picture on the screen.

No Slump at Metro's Studios

Five Companies Now at Work; Others to Start Soon

ACCORDING to a statement from the Metro headquarters, there is no evidence of that much discussed slump in production on any of the big stages at Metro's Hollywood studios, where five companies now are at work and plans are under way for a new star and half a dozen other special productions.

Moreover, the typewriters of a long list of famous authors are humming on plots and scenarios that will go under production early in the New Year, it is announced. Bayard Veiller's colony of well-known writers already has turned out a batch of successful offerings, and the announcement of plans for 1921 includes many more, says the statement.

A glimpse of the Metro stages shows that there is no lack of industry among this producing company's units. Viola Dana will be found romping about in the costume that accompanies her favorite role—that of a small town girl, a part she is playing in "Home Stuff," a special production written especially for her by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey. Al Kelley, who has been promoted to full directorial authority to take charge of this production, insists that this will be the little star's greatest picture.

May Allison is in the midst of a picture that offers her opportunities such as she never before has had in her screen experience, declares the Metro statement. "Big Game," by Willard Robertson and Kilbourn Gordon, is a story of the adventures of a Boston woman, who suddenly confronted with primitive life and emotions in the wilds of the Northwest, meets the situation in a manner that furnishes the surprises of this tale.

Dallas Fitzgerald, who is directing the production, has carried out numerous of his own ideas in the selection of artistic background for the story that will prove an interesting study for the veteran picture fan, it is declared.

Alice Lake is "engulfed in a sea of ice" in the filming of "The Woman Who Went Away," from John Fleming Wilson's story of the Northern wastes. "Uncharted Seas," declares the report from Metro headquarters. The story, which is being directed by Wesley Ruggles, is the gripping tale of the trial of two men—and of the dramatic decision of the woman between the two.

Mr. Wilson and George Elwood Jenks, who wrote the screen adaptation of the story, have spent many months in the ice fields pictured in the production. Moreover, there will be a series of natural settings, state Metro officials, such as never before have been reduced to the language of the camera.

Philip E. Rosen is shooting the final scenes of a spectacular production of Jack London's "The Little Lady of the Big House," retitled for screen purposes, "The Little Fool." The principal roles are being played by Milton Sills, Ora Carew, Nigel Barrie—all of whom have been starred in productions of their own. The cast also includes Marjorie Prevost, Helen Howard, Byron Munson and Ann Forrester.

Gareth Hughes will begin work at Metro's West Coast studios shortly after the opening of the new year. Neither the title of the Hughes picture nor the personnel of his organization has, as yet, been made known by Mr. Veiller. An announcement concerning his plans will be made shortly.

Scenes attending welcome of George Beban by Newark, N. J., officials at open ing of the new Branford theatre, where his picture, "One Man in a Million," was given its premier showing. Robertson-Cole is distributing the production

Joseph M. Scherck has signed a contract for the exclusive services of Herbert Brenon for an indefinite period—a contract which provides that Mr. Brenon shall supervise all the Norma Talmadge productions during the life of the contract, as well as directing himself.

Mr. Brenon's direction of "The Passion Flower," which is to be Norma Talmadge's next release as a first National attraction, was primarily responsible for the signing of the contract.

"The Passion Flower," from Jacinto Benevente's drama of Spanish life, which achieved a New York success as a play last year, will be the next release, instead of the story adapted from Andrew Soutar's novel, "On Principle." which was scheduled for February 21st. In case the production is not ready by that date, it will be given an early March release date.

Famous English Actor in "The Great Day"

When "The Great Day," one of the productions Hugh Ford made for Paramount at the London studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is shown in this country, the American public will see as the featured player one of the foremost actors of the English stage. He is none other than Arthur Bourchier, who has gained wide fame throughout the British Empire as a Shakespearean player and an interpreter of comedy roles in lighter drama.

The first appearance of Arthur Bourchier in the films was in "Henry VIII" with the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree. He was next invited—it was before the war—to go to Germany to play in a very elaborate screen version of "Macbeth."

Mr. Bourchier, as quite a young man, also appeared in "The Derby Winner" the first of the series of famous Drury Lane dramas by Raleigh and Hamilton.

Newark Honors Geo. Beban

Attends Premier of Picture at the Branford

GEORGE BEBAN'S latest production, "One Man in a Million," received its world's premier at the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., Saturday, Jan. 8. In a statement issued this week, A. M. Fabian, managing director of the theatre, and Mr. Beban himself, give credit for the exploitation campaign to Paul Gray, director of publicity and advertising for the Branford. The theatre has a seating capacity of 3500 and was packed to the doors two hours after they were opened on the first day of the engagement.

George Beban made a special trip to Newark for the opening of his picture. Without the formality of an election he was made the Mayor of Newark for the day. On his arrival at the depot he was welcomed by a Mayor's Committee of 500 of the prominent citizens of Newark and later he was whisked through the center of the city at the head of an automobile caravan of fifty automobiles followed by a crowd of five hundred people on foot. A twenty-five piece band furnished music for the march to the steps of the City Hall. Here, Mayor Charles P. Gillen temporarily relinquished his title to the visitor and conferred upon him a huge floral key.

After much speechmaking by the chairmen of the various reception committees that had been appointed and after a general handshaking and bowing before a battery of motion picture cameras Mr. Beban responded with a speech of acceptance and thanked the Mayor and the dozen or more sub-reception committees for their greeting. From the reception Mr. Beban went to the Branford theatre to see the opening performance of his picture.

The general chairman of the George Beban reception committee was Mayor Charles P. Gillen. In his work he was assisted by numerous other groups. The first and most important considering the fact that a theatrical celebrity was being welcomed was the committee representing the clergymen of Newark. Dean Arthur Dumper of the Trinity Cathedral (the largest Church in New Jersey) was the chairman of this committee. Father O'Neill of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament (the largest in Newark), Dr. Henry R. Rose, pastor of the Church of the Redeemer, and Rabbi Solomon Foster served with Dean Dumper on this committee. Several of these ministers promised to use the Beban film as the theme of their usual Sunday sermons. All of them are quoted as having endorsed the film as being the best attraction they had witnessed in a picture theatre.

Miss Elsie Greenwood, who conducts a prominent dancing and elocution school in Newark, acted as chairman of the Junior Hostess Committee. Miss Greenwood used a dozen of her prettiest girls to assist her in the presentation of the Key of the City. These girls were dressed in white robes and carried the floral key to the Mayor who made the presentation. One hundred other young women of Newark were present at the depot and the city hall.

A committee of twenty-five of the leading business men of Newark cooperated with Mayor Gillen and greeted Mr. Beban. They were present at the ceremonies which were held at the City Hall and assured the actor that they were in accord with his plans for cleaner and better pictures.

Fox Feature Well Received

Screen Version of Mark Twain's Satire Shown at Miller's Theatre

THE WILLIAM FOX production of Mark Twain's famous satire, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," has just been screened at the Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, Cal. Los Angeles reviewers are reported by Fox Films to have given the production a liberal share of praise for its grotesque effects and gorgeous costuming. One review is quoted as describing the picture to be "a mammoth spectacle with humorous trimmings."

The only radical departure from the story apparent in the film is the substitution of motorcycles for the bicycles of Twain's original. All the satirical treatment of the medieval idea that makes the book a masterpiece of humor is faithfully preserved in the filming. The hero, wearing a top hat with a long feather, an evening dress coat and a pair of tights, is the sample of the picture's effervescent humor; and when the knight of old rides forth in armor, with his trusty spear posed for action, and meets in the list an American cowboy full panoplied for war with his trusty lasso, the delight of the audience promptly got beyond all control.

"There is so much of sparkling humor in the story that it seems strange it has not found its way to the screen long before this," declares William Fox, "and enhanced as it is with the colorful presence of King Arthur's lords and ladies, it forms a combination of spectacle and wit quite unlike anything ever before filmed."

The Fox offices report that the Miller theatre played to record-breaking business throughout the engagement, which is considered sufficient indication as to whether the public is going to be interested in this adaptation for the screen of one of Mark Twain's best known stories.

Second Press-Book for Fox "Fantomas"

William Fox has put out the second exhibitors' press book on his new serial "Fantomas." The new press book contains episodes six to twelve inclusive. It is sixteen pages, one color.

PATHE announces that the Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Killer," will be released on January 30. It is an adaptation of Stewart Edward White's novel of the same name. It is described by Pathe to be a "melodrama and romance, clean, thrilling and fascinating." Howard Hickman directed the production, and he is declared to have injected a large measure of "realism in both action and characterization" into the screen version of the Stewart Edward White novel.

Frank Campeau is seen in the title role. Jack Conway is cast in the role of the hero, and Claire Adams plays the heroine. Tod Sloan, the former jockey; Frankie Lee, the child-actor; Edward Peil, Frank Hayes, Will Walling, Milton Ross, Tom Ricketts and Zack Williams are also in the cast.

To Present a Dickens Story

"Our Mutual Friend" Is Being Prepared for the Screen in America

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND," the Nordisk production of Charles Dickens' quaint familiar story, has been received at the offices of Chester Beecroft, 501 Fifth avenue, where its preparation for American presentation is now rapidly under way.

The picture is declared to have been the outstanding success of the current season in Europe, dramatic critics as well as film reviewers in all the Continental capitals having invariably referred to it as marking the greatest advance that has yet been made in European picture-making, declares its American sponsors. It is also declared that "Our Mutual Friend" has met with the same extraordinary degree of success in London, Paris, Antwerp, Berlin, Vienna, Prague and Athens, with its variously translated titles, as it did in Copenhagen, where it was produced—a striking demonstration of the universality of appeal in the works of the Great English novelist, when they are properly reproduced.

That Mr. Beecroft thinks highly of his "find" is apparent from the fact that he has arranged with Roy L. McCardell to edit and title the picture for its New York showing. Mr. McCardell is known to a wide range of newspapers and magazine readers and has contributed many of the greatest screen successes, such as "A Fool There Was," "The Diamond from the Sky," "The Gay Life," etc. More important to the present purpose, however, Mr. McCardell has long been recognized as one of the foremost authorities on Charles Dickens, his writings and research work having won for him an honorary membership and degree in the Dickens Fellowship, a society which is made up of the select men of the literary world.

GEORGE D. BAKER has signed a contract with Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin which assures them of his services for some time to come. As a result of this, five George D. Baker Productions will be produced for the S. L. organization during the year 1921. Following the completion of his latest feature, "Without Limit," which was produced under the working title "Temple Dusk," Mr. Baker is said to have received offers from the five most prominent companies in the industry to direct for them.

All of the future George D. Baker Productions will be released under the Metro banner. They will be founded upon stories by famous American authors and will be enacted by all-star casts. As in the past, Mr. Baker will write his own continuities as well as personally directing each production bearing his name.

Meighan Finishing New Paramount Release

The picture was partly filmed in and around New York, Mr. Meighan, Mr. Forman and other members of the staff journeying there from the Lasky studio in Hollywood for that purpose, and returning, after a few weeks in the metropolis, to finish the production in the Hollywood studios. While in New York many scenes were filmed at The Tombs, on the famous Bridge of Sighs and at Sing Sing prison, as the first episode of the story supposedly takes place in those locales.

To Star Florence Lawrence

Story, Direction and Cast Selection in Hands of George H. Kern

GEORGE H. KERN, general manager of the Producers Pictures Corporation, is one of the few figures in the producing field who write their own stories, select their casts, direct the productions and manage the business side of their organizations. The current production upon which Mr. Kern is at present at work is "The Unfoldment," which will serve as the stellar vehicle of Florence Lawrence in her return to the screen. Murdock MacQuarrie will assist Mr. Kern as co-director.

William Conklin, who has appeared in many screen productions and is well-known as a character man and leading player. In the forthcoming production, starring Florence Lawrence, Mr. Conklin will play a most suitable role in the part of the forceful managing editor of a great daily newspaper. The part of a newspaper reporter has been assigned by Mr. Kern to Albert Presco. Announcement is also made from the headquarters of the Producers Pictures Corporation that negotiations are at present under way with a view to securing the services of a well known Broadway juvenile actor, who will be assigned the leading male role opposite Miss Lawrence.

According to a statement issued by W. E. Keefe, manager of production for the Producers Pictures Corporation, two pictures will be made in Mexico under the auspices of that organization. Both these productions will feature Miss Lawrence in the stellar role, declared Mr. Keefe.

Pacific Film Executive Touring Key Cities

A tour of the key cities is being made by T. E. Hancock, one of the owners and organizers of the Pacific Film Company engaged in the exploitation of a number of West Coast indefinitely made pictures. Mr. Hancock is carrying samples of several different series his company is in charge of distributing and is making contracts for all territories. Pacific Film Company is now handling "The Fatal Thirty," five reels, featuring Fritzie Rideway, George Ovey Comedies, Irene Hunt two reel newspaper stories, White Cape Comedies, Jack Livingston short westerns, and other productions.

"Loot of the Night" Cast Announced

The cast has been completed for "Loot of the Night," Earle Williams' next Vitagraph feature. Elinor Fair is playing opposite Mr. Williams at the western Vitagraph studios where production of the feature has begun under the direction of David Smith.

Jack Carlisle will be seen in the part of a detective in "The Loot of the Night." Jack Mathies and Mary Huntress, each of whom played with Mr. Williams in "The Romance Promoters," also will be seen in important roles in this production. Henry Barrows has one of the chief supporting parts in the new picture. Alfred Aldridge, William McCall and Florence Hart have the other principal parts.

"Loot of the Night" is by Frederick J. Jackson, who wrote "Diamonds Adrift." David Smith is directing.

Ina Claire Pleases "Fans"

Rivoli Audience Show Much Interest in "Polly with a Past" Film

"POLLY WITH A PAST," the Metro picturization, starring Ina Claire, of David Belasco's stage success by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, began a week's engagement at the Rivoli theatre the week of January 9. The New York premier of the screen version of the Middleton-Bolton comedy presents Miss Claire in the part she created on the speaking stage.

The Metro picturization of "Polly With a Past" is regarded by Metro officials as one of the notable screen productions of the year. As such it has been accepted by the thousands of people who have passed through the door of the Rivoli since the opening. The production has aroused unusual interest at the Rivoli, declares Metro, and the personality of the star seems to have found an effective medium in the screen for reaching the hearts of the multitude.

Much credit for the success of "Polly With a Past" as screen entertainment is given to Maxwell Karger, who directed the picture. His care is seen reflected now in every phase of the story, through which the star, Miss Claire, trips with such gay insouciance as the French adventuress.

All the gay brilliance of the stage play was preserved in the adaptation by June Mathis and Arthur Zellner, and constantly amplified by Maxwell Karger, who was intent upon making "Polly With a Past" one of the finest productions of the year. A strong cast supports the star, including Ralph Graves, Marie Wainwright, Harry Benham, Frank Currier and Clifton Webb. Arthur Martinelli photographed the picture.

Enthusiastic Over the Return of Mae Marsh

Robertson-Cole reports that newspaper critics all over the country are enthusiastic over the return to the screen of Mae Marsh in its release, "The Little 'Fraid Lady." "The Little 'Fraid Lady," adapted to the screen from "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods" by Majorie Benton Cooke, and directed by John G. Adolfi, is the production in which Miss Marsh is winning new laurels. It tells the story of a girl painter who fled from the sophistication and sham of the city to the simpler, pastoral life of the Great North Woods, where her series of surprising adventures began.

"HUSH"

That Clara Kimball Young in "HUSH" her latest and smartest picture by Sada Cowan, will win millions of added admirers to her already huge following evidenced in the first of the trade criticisms as published on the reverse side of this advertisement. Tho' Equity Pictures fully realize the colorful beauty, dramatic strength and box office power of "HUSH", we prefer to allow the critics to herald its virtues broadcast. Note then what the EXHIBITORS HERALD of Chicago says of "HUSH".

Clara Kimball Young—in—
"HUSH"

(Equity Pictures)

A beautifully produced picture with a domestic entanglement theme. Should score success with every patronage and be received with great enthusiasm by the stars' devotees. Star is exceptionally beautiful, elaborately gowned, and in certain bits does what is probably the best work of her career. Strong cast affords excellent support.

Followers of Clara Kimball Young—and they are legion—will doubtless accept with uncompromising enthusiasm this latest of her features. Certainly it is as compelling a role as she has lived on the screen in the course of her career. The gorgeous gowns for which she made a special trip to New York last summer, especially for this production are displayed—a great many of them. This is a point not to be ignored in advertising. Miss Young has a fascinating beauty of person and dress which appeal strongly to the average feminine patron, and they are presented to excellent advantage in this production.

Settings are particularly ornate, one particularly that impresses with the beauty of a Maxfield Parrish picture—a scene set for a society tableau. Backgrounds in homes of wealth and their surrounding gardens are highly artistic and richly done.

"Hush" is now being booked by all Equity Franchise holders. There's one in your territory. Communicate with him today or communicate with—

Monte Carlo Interiors in Perret Pictures

For what is claimed to be the first time in the history of the screen the interior of the celebrated Monte Carlo Casino has been shown in motion pictures. Leonce Perret, the French director, secured exclusive permission to photograph the famous Casino's interior for his big special production. "The Empire of Diamonds," which Pathe is releasing.

While studio Monte Carlos have been shown in different big productions, never before has the interior of the greatest gambling establishment in the world been photographed for the screen, it is said.

Another Perret production made with an all-star French and American cast, is now nearly ready for release. It is called "A Race for Millions," and includes in the cast the French artists, Eugene Breen, and Will Bourbon, Marcya Capri, the noted Spanish beauty and the American players, Robert Elliott, Lucy Fox, Ruth Thorpe and Henry G. Sell.

The story is an original one by Louis Letang.

"The Stealers" Scoring in All Sections

"The Stealers," Robertson-Cole's super-special, directed by William Christy Cabanne, continues to please audiences in all parts of the country, declares a statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters. Exhibitors are not slow in paying tribute to its drawing power. Recently G. M. Bertling, of Piqua, Ohio, who is the proprietor of the Favorite theatre, played the picture. He has just written Robertson-Cole as follows:

"I wish to call to your attention 'The Stealers' which I am running today. I have been in the show business a long time and I have never seen or don't ever expect to see a picture again like 'The Stealers.' Many of my patrons who were here today at the matinee came out and patted me on the back and said that is the most wonderful picture that they have ever seen."

Action Galore in Buck Jones's New Vehicle

"The Big Punch," starring Buck Jones, is described by William Fox to be a melodrama "with action galore." The bad man of old frontier days is there with his gang. The dance hall and the bullet-frescoed barroom, are there. All serve their purpose in forming the swiftly moving background before which a strong man's soul struggles and eventually finds itself.

Ruth Roland Arrives in New York on Visit

Ruth Roland has arrived in New York on a visit in which she will combine the duties of a "hopping tour" with the pleasures and refreshments of a holiday. Miss Roland arrived in New York Monday, January 10th.

B'way Sees "Outside the Law"

Universal Production Runs in Four B'way Houses at One Time

"OUTSIDE THE LAW," the big Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean, received an enthusiastic reception Sunday, January 16th, at the hands of New York's photo-play goers, when it was presented simultaneously at four Broadway theatres.

This was the first time in screen history that the same picture ever was shown in four Broadway houses at the same time. The theatres were the Astor, the George M. Cohan, the Lyric and the Longacre. The novelty of such a unique presentation registered well with New Yorkers, who crowded the four theatres during the two shows, one matinee and one evening given in each house.

This arrangement was for one day only—there being legitimate shows in each of the four theatres during the week. The following Monday, "Outside the Law" opened for a week's run at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, with the expectation that its stay at that theatre would be extended. Universal's four-of-a-kind presentation was the outcome of the moving picture situation on Broadway, which prevented that company from obtaining a theatre for an indefinite run.

Reviewers, as well as the crowds which poured from the four theatres, united in singing the praises of the big underworld melodrama, which was both written and directed by Tod Browning. Never has a Universal picture achieved such instantaneous success. It is hailed as the greatest screen melodrama of its kind ever presented, judging from critical reviews of the feature. Universal added another novelty to its Broadway presentation by masking the front of each of the four theatres with canvas frames painted to represent the gray and somber walls of a prison. This weird effect created a sensation on Times Square. All day Sunday, great crowds gathered before the theatres, curiously examining the circus-like "fronts." The box office figures indicated that the startling lobby effect drew many people into the houses.

Coming on top of the effective poster campaign waged by Universal and which made a catch line out of the title "Outside the Law" the four-theatre presentation was the culmination of Universal's six weeks' exploitation to put the picture over in the New York territory. Similar campaigns are being conducted in other key cities. Universal promises the most far-reaching exploitation for "Outside the Law" that ever has been put behind a Universal production.

That the force and exciting phases of "Outside the Law" were appreciated by those who saw the picture was well attested by several colorful incidents that occurred during the screening. In almost every one of the four theatres, outcries of emotion greeted the high-lights of the terrific gang fight shown in the last reel of the feature. Women screamed as Lon Chaney was shot and toppled from a balcony in his remarkable death scene.

So keenly did the audience, typical Broadway crowds, feel the drama of the situations presented in the picture, that rounds of applause followed the twists of the plot when they worked to the advantage of the two principals, played by Priscilla Dean and Wheeler Oakman.

"Outside the Law" brought a new actor to the screen in the person of little Stanley Goethals, four years old, and a master of screen charm. The sequence of scenes in which he figured, winning "Silky Moll," played by Miss Dean, to the "straight and narrow" by his childish appeal, received great applause and much favorable comment. In the George M. Cohan theatre one woman broke into hysterical sobs at the intense heart-interest of these scenes.

In the New York newspaper reviews of the picture stress was laid upon the assertion that "Outside the Law" presents real crooks acting as real crooks would act in similar situations, not as the usual glorified crook of stage and screen.

New Background in Mayer Film

Anita Stewart Films New Vehicle on Pacific Isle

DESPITE the report that all California and its surroundings have been made known to the world through the motion picture, a brand new bit of land will make its debut to the public when Anita Stewart's latest Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, filmed under the working title of "The Tornado," is released.

It is Santa Rosa Island, and its location is given vaguely as "somewhere off the coast of Santa Barbara." It is about the size of one of Jack London's South Sea cannibal empires, and its vegetation is thoroughly tropical in nature.

Tradition holds many weird stories connected with the island, some of which sound like the ravings of a hophead and others like extracts from a Robert Louis Stevenson tale. But the most persistent story is that years ago two brothers settled on the deserted spot to raise hogs, bringing with them some very rugged exponents of the species swine. The island was then infested with poisonous snakes, and shortly after the men's taking possession, sailors from a boat which had put out from an Alaskan tramp vessel during a storm, found their lifeless bodies on the shore. As they bore no signs of violence, it was generally accepted that they died of snake bite but among old seamen the belief remains that some evil influence reigns over the island and no inducement on earth could tempt the old salts of the Pacific to spend a night on Santa Rosa.

The hogs, sworn enemies of the snake, have multiplied constantly and have rid the place of its venomous inhabitants.

As Miss Stewart's latest picture contains a boar hunt with Jamaica as the locale, Director Edwin Carewe took the star, the principals of her supporting cast and a number of extras out to the deserted isle to get realistic scenes depicting the chase.

As the players journeyed across the water to and from Santa Barbara daily, a trip which allowed them only a few hours of daylight "shooting," they cannot either verify or undermine the sailors' story about Santa Rosa's being haunted but they all declare that the deserted island radiates a distinctly "spooky" feeling.

THE following warning has been issued by the Fox Film Corporation concerning alleged infringements of its dramatic and motion-picture rights to the William Carleton poems, "Over the Hill to the Poor House" and "Over the Hill from the Poor House:"

"Notice is hereby given that Fox Film Corporation is the owner of the dramatic and motion-picture rights throughout the world of the poems Over the Hill to the Poorhouse and Over the Hill from the Poorhouse, written by Will Carleton. These rights were purchased from the estate of Will Carleton and Harper & Bros., who were the sole owners thereof.

"Any attempt to reproduce these poems or the stories on which they are based, on either the dramatic stage or the motion picture screen, will be vigorously prosecuted as an infringement of our rights and copyrights."

Duncan Company Works in Mojave Desert

A real Western atmosphere will be introduced in the later chapters of William Duncan's new Vitagraph production, "Fighting Fate," by many scenes taken in the heart of the great Mojave Desert. Duncan and Edith Johnson, his co-star, have just returned with a company of fifty players from Victorville, California, where the desert begins.

Working out from Victorville the party penetrated into the most dangerous sections of the desert. The Duncan company shipped scores of horses for the sequences required.

Frederick Shows Versatility in New Role

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is releasing its picturization of "Roads of Destiny" from the play made by Channing Pollock based upon a short story by O. Henry with the same title. The stellar role of Rose Merritt is portrayed on the screen by Pauline Frederick. She plays three different roles in the photoplay, but they are all the same person, seen in different environments and under varying circumstances.

Mrs. Lee Is Associate Editor for Goldwyn

Goldwyn announces the appointment of Mrs. Maron Frances Lee as assistant to Ralph Block, editor of the scenario and research department in New York. Her title is that of associate editor and she will assume the duties of her position immediately.

Mrs. Lee has been in the New York scenario department of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for some time and previously was assistant editor for Pathe. She has prepared continuity for that organization and for Vitagraph as well as for Goldwyn.

Novel Photographic Effects

Clever Work in Building Sets for "The Devil" Rouses Much Interest

SOME of the photographic effects produced in "The Devil" have aroused considerable discussion among professional and technical men, declares Pathe, in a statement just issued. Charles O. Seessel, the art director and interior decorator, has been approached by technical men inquiring about the methods whereby these effects have been produced. The Pathe statement, issued in connection with the queries prompted by Mr. Seesel's photographic arrangements, follows in part:

"Charles O. Seessel, art director and interior decorator, with his staff of architects and technicians, are responsible for the material beauty of the scenes, and for certain spacious interiors which have puzzled other craftsmen. So skeptical were two technical men who came on from the Coast and saw the picture after it was finished that 'Phil' Ryan, of the Associated Exhibitors, became disgusted trying to convince them that the sets referred to were built in a Fort Lee studio. 'All right,' said Phil, testily, 'if you don't believe me you can go over and see the art man himself. I suppose he can tell you how they did it. I don't know how they built them, but I saw them with my own eyes, in the studio, after they were done."

"Of course, I'll tell you," said Mr. Seessel, when he was approached. "I'm not trying to copyright my ideas. By the time someone has imitated my work on 'The Devil' I'll have gone on to something else. I can assure you that the Devil's ball room and the Elysee Art Galleries were built in the studio. These sets look much longer than the studio itself because they were built very cleverly in perspective. Here, I'll show you the plan." And Mr. Seessel pulled out an architect's plan, showing how the arches of the first set and the Corinthian columns of the second were measured and graded, and how everything else in those sets was built in proportion to those perspectives. "Then of course when the action took place it gave scaling and even greater depth to the scenes," Mr. Seessel continued. "They appear to be as spacious as the interior of the Pennsylvania Station. But it is all an illusion, based on arithmetic."

New Lytell Vehicle Bought

Edwin Milton Royle's "Peace and Quiet" Purchased for Bert Lytell

THE second Lytell-Karger production to be made and released by Metro in its Eastern studios will be "Peace and Quiet," the picturization of a novel by Edwin Milton Royle. Announcement of the purchase for Metro by Arthur Zellner of the screen rights of the Royle story is made almost simultaneously with the completion of "A Message from Mars" starring Mr. Lytell. The acquisition of "Peace and Quiet" was the result of more than two months' quest by Metro's scenario department for a suitable vehicle for Bert Lytell, declares a statement from Metro.

In "Peace and Quiet," Metro officials feel that no better proof of the versatility of Bert Lytell could be offered. The characterization, which is that of a Princeton student who becomes embroiled in a filibustering expedition to Mexico, directly follows Mr. Lytell's unique portrayal of Horace Parker, the selfish young English scientist in "A Message from Mars," which in turn succeeded his entirely different characterization in "The Misleading Lady."

Maxwell Karger, who personally directed "A Message from Mars" to be released shortly by Metro will direct "Peace and Quiet." Arthur Zellner will adapt the novel to the screen and Arthur Martinelli will photograph the production.

In addition to the acquisition of "Peace and Quiet" Metro announces the purchase of "Junk," a story by Kenneth Harris that was published recently in the Saturday Evening Post, as the third Karger-Lytell production to be made and released by Metro. In "Junk," Metro promises a vehicle of unusual appropriateness for Bert Lytell, work upon which will be commenced directly following the completion of "Peace and Quiet."

"Squandered Lives" Has Gone Over Strong

Ralph Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, has received reports from every one of that company's exchanges throughout the country indicating that "Squandered Lives," a George Clark production, the first release in its one-a-week program, has "gone over" in even bigger shape than was expected, declares a statement from the Stoll headquarters in New York.

As an example of the enthusiasm with which the picture was received by both exhibitors and motion picture public, Mr. Proctor stated that "Squandered Lives" was shown as the feature film at the State-Lake theatre, the biggest and newest amusement house in the loop district of Chicago, for one week, starting December 25.

Beautiful gowns will be one of the features of Metro's production, "The Woman Who Went Away," which will present Alice Lake in the stellar role. And in striking contrast to the settings in which Miss Lake will appear in these attractive costumes, will be the scenes of the Northwestern wilds which will also form a part of the picture's locale. For the latter scenes, seven Alaskan dogs have been imported from the snow country, and they will play an important part in the Northern settings for the production.

"The Woman Who Went Away" is an adaptation of John Fleming Wilson's "Unchartered Seas." The continuity is by George Elwood Jenks. Wesley Ruggles is the director.

English Journalist in Wm. Taylor Picture

Raymond Brathwayt, English journalist, has been added by William D. Taylor to the cast of "Sacred and Profane Love" in the role of Lord Francis Alcar, an aged and sophisticated British peer. This is the Elsie Ferguson starring vehicle based upon the Arnold Bennett stage play in which Miss Ferguson also appeared.

Mr. Brathwayt's unusual knowledge of English high society makes him an ideal choice, it is said. He came to America in 1917 as a member of the British Commission.

Interesting "Shots" in Pathe Review No. 88

If Milady wonders where a great portion of her lace comes from in these days of high import duties, her curiosity will be satisfied in the offering, "The Miracle Machines of Lace Making," showing the insides of a modern lace manufactory, in Pathe Review, No. 88, released January 30th. "Food or Fun?" is an amusing study in monkey psychology arranged by Dr. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Gardens. This is also a feature of the Pathe Review, No. 88.

THE world premiere of "Man - Woman - Marriage," Albert Kaufman's presentation of Allen Holubar's drama eternal starring Dorothy Phillips, will take place at the Regent Theatre, Paterson, New Jersey, Monday, January 24th.

The Chicago showing of the Associated First National's "Big Five" last week—"Man, Woman, Marriage" is the third of these—revealed the picture as a stupendous spectacle-drama mirroring the kaleidoscopic conflict between the sexes that has raged since the dawn of time. That showing, however, was purely a trade affair. The theatre-going public will have their first opportunity to appraise the worth of the production next Monday evening.

Jacob Fabian, president of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of New Jersey, is planning to make this premiere a memorable occasion. A number of prominent state and city officials have been invited to attend the opening as guests of the management, as well as state and city leaders of women's clubs.

Allen Holubar, the director, and Dorothy Phillips, the star of the drama, will attend the premiere at the Regent in person. The home office executives of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will also be present and a number of the eastern franchise-holders.

With the news that the three missing American aviators in the naval balloon were safe at Moose Factory, Ont., Educational Film Corporation was the only organization of any kind in the entire country that could supply pictures of the Hudson's Bay post which succored the trio, declared a statement from Educational headquarters. Panoramic pictures of the entire fur station appeared in the New York World and New York American with the big story and were dispatched to principal dailies through the country.

Every photo news agency, without exception, was compelled to rely on Educational or do without the scenes, it is declared. During the days following many other photos taken by Educational at and around Moose Factory were published.

1,260 Exhibitors Book Stoll Productions

Phenomenal success has met the efforts of the Stoll Film organization to interest the American exhibitor in their motion picture productions, declares a statement received from Stoll's headquarters in New York. According to complete reports received from General Manager Ralph Proctor at the main office 1,260 exhibitors and theatre owners, during December, signed contracts to show the pictures of the company in its one-week release schedule for 1921.

Good Cast Seen in "The Snob"

Popular Players Support Wanda Hawley in New Picture

WANDA HAWLEY is capably supported in her new production for release by Realart. The title of the new picture is "The Snob." With a view to aid the exhibitors in presenting this comedy-drama effectively Realart is preparing a large variety of exhibitor aids, according to a report from the distributing company's headquarters.

Especially prominent in the supporting cast for "The Snob," are Sylvia Ashton and Walter Hiers. Miss Ashton has what is described by Realart as "an usually fine 'nouveau riche' mother role." To Walter Hiers has been assigned the role of a college student. Mr. Hiers will be remembered for his work in "Miss Hobbs" and "Oh Lady, Lady." The other members of the cast include W. E. Lawrence, Richard Wayne, Edwin Stevens, Julia Faye, Josephine Crowell and Althea Worthley. Sam Wood directed the picture.

"The Snob" is the story of a girl who has been brought up as an insufferable prig by her socially ambitious mother. She meets a young collegian and is attracted by him. At a dance she learns that he waits on table to work his way through college,—and turns him down flat.

There's where Hiers comes in. As the intermediary between the two, the originator of plots to give "the snob" a lesson, he has one of the best fun-making opportunities in his long career. Miss Ashton, as the domineering wife and ambitious mother has a part that provides many splendid opportunities for comedy.

Song competitions, prologues and tie-ups of various descriptions form some of the exploitation aids prepared by Realart for this production.

A big dance after the football game in Wanda Hawley's "The Snob," a Realart picture

The press book, which is now ready for exhibitors, carries on the cover a striking halftone reproduction of a portrait of Wanda Hawley done in French crayon by Hal Phyfe.

Practical suggestions for putting the picture over are set forth in the next section of the press book. With a football game, college boarding house and college prom scenes "The Snob" presents a number of good exploitation angles. Among the tie-ups worked out are those with local high schools, preparatory schools, normal schools and colleges.

These include parades with take-offs on the schools; ballyhoos staged between halves of football or basketball games, and local debates on "Snobbery."

A school song competition in connection with a local institution is another idea offered. For towns where cooperation with a high school or college is impracticable a street ballyhoo is suggested. Five boys (or more) take part as rooters and parade through the streets—their cheers calling attention to themselves and "The Snob."

Lobby displays and decorations and an attractive prologue for the picture are also contained in the press material. In addition there are an unusual number of tie-ups with local merchants both in store window displays and newspaper advertisements. The combination of college atmosphere and American youth in "The Snob" furnish more than the usual number of such tie-ups, it is said.

Stoll to Build Studios Here

Executive Back from Europe with Extensive Plans

GEORGE KING, president of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, returned to New York last Tuesday on the Imperator, after a stay of more than a month in England. Although the trip was taken up largely with the perfection of plans for the enlargement and development of the company's American activities, Mr. King took occasion to bring back with him his family, which had been increased by the recent addition of a son. They will be established in a residence acquired at Bay Side, Long Island.

Mr. King went abroad for conference with the Stoll officials in London, and to give a detailed report of the friendly and enthusiastic spirit with which the introduction of the Stoll products was greeted by American exhibitors and motion picture audiences from Coast to Coast.

Following the successful debut of the Stoll motion pictures here, Mr. King stated on his return, more definite plans for the erection of a Stoll studio in America were promulgated, details of which he brought back with him. It is proposed to make the Stoll an international organization, in the same category as the Lasky-Famous Players, it is announced. Sites for the studio are being considered, and progress will be rapid, once a location is decided upon.

Mr. King also brought back with him a number of prints of the latest productions of the Stoll Company, to be shown to officials and exhibitors here previous to release in the regular one-a-week Stoll program for 1921.

The first Stoll release here was "Squandered Lives," a George Clark production of the Cosmo Hamilton story, "Duke's Son." Then came the famous Chinese atmosphere production, "Mr. Wu," with Matheson Lang, the original stage star, followed by "The Hundredth Chance," and another Clark production, "The Lure of Crooning Water."

The productions, introducing new stars of the first magnitude, in stories by famous authors, and with settings in their original locations, aroused countrywide interest, trade and lay criticism, practically without exception, being highly favorable to the new venture.

The rest of the Stoll program, called the World Famous Authors' Series, calls for productions of plays and stories by such noted writers as H. G. Wells, Stanley Weyman, Jeffery Farnol, Baroness Orczy Marie Corelli, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Sax Rohmer, A. E. W. Mason, Ethel M. Dell, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Alice and Claude Askew, F. S. Fletcher, Hamilton Gibbs, and many others.

"LOOK YOURSELF OVER"

Ethel Clayton Starts Work on "Sham"

Ethel Clayton, back again at Hollywood after a long absence, during which she made an extensive tour of Europe and later tarried in New York long enough to make one picture at the Long Island studio, has started work at the Lasky studio in her new Paramount picture, "Sham." Thomas Heffron is the director.

"Sham," from the stage success by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner, presents the star as an aristocratic girl of Knickerbocker descent who is keeping just two jumps behind her creditors. The humor and drama of this sham existence are well carried over into the film version which was written by Douglas Doty, former editor of Century magazine.

Washington Orphans See "The Love Light"

Lawrence Beatus, manager of Loew's Palace theatre, of Washington, D. C., so successfully entertained all the orphans, homeless and friendless children of that community last year by giving them free performances of Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna," and so excellent did the idea appeal to the public from an exploitation point of view, that he has decided to repeat it, and in conjunction with the Washington Times, will again entertain the children at the theatre during the week of January 24 at which time the management will have an extended run of Mary Pickford in "The Love Light."

The children will attend the theatre in the morning from 10.30 until 1 o'clock.

"Partners of the Tide" Has Been Completed

According to a letter from C. A. Willat received at the Hodkinson headquarters, he is scheduled to start East with the new Irvin V. Willat picture, "Partners of the Tide," in the very near future. C. A. Willat is associated with his brother Irvin in the production field. The picture is destined for release by W. W. Hodkinson. The production is now being edited. C. A. Willat styles this latest Irvin Willat production as "Irvin's best" and adds, "It has all the elements that a good picture needs—good sets, photography, cast and acting.

E. Kenneth Todd Leaves Universal Staff

E. Kenneth Todd, formerly a special writer in the publicity department of Universal, recently resigned to accept a position in the sporting department of the Boston Traveler. Todd was with Universal for four months and handled Universal's newspaper publicity for New York City and out-of-town papers.

Educational Blankets New England

ALTHOUGH the prevalence of the double feature policy, or the combination of vaudeville and features, has caused Boston territory to be regarded as a sort of forbidden land for short-subjects, says Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., every important circuit in that territory and a greater portion of the better independent houses has been signed up for Educational's product.

Educational points out that the greatest tribute is paid to its product by the fact that the greater portion of these contracts were made by the manager of the Boston Office and without general solicitation on the part of salesmen. These road forces are now working on the scattered houses that have not contracted for Educational pictures and the promise comes to the home office that a hundred per cent results will be reported within the next sixty days, it is declared.

Completion of this new circuit record was announced this week with the signature of contracts by the Goldstein Brothers, who operate leading theatres in Springfield, Northampton, Westfield, and Ware, Mass. This contract like all the other cities is not for a single group of pictures, but for all the comedies released by Educational, and in many cases for the entire single reel and special product.

Such bookings have been made by the two biggest operators in New England, the Olympia Theatres operating in Key Cities like Boston, Worcester, Lynn, New Bedford, Cambridge, Dorchester, Chelsea and Gloucester, and the Alfred S. Black New England theatres, including a total of more than 25 houses in Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont. In addition to merely booking these pictures, both of these circuits are now featuring the comedies, something that has established a new precedent in that section where the double feature has been a principal advertising point.

Seattle Exchange Salesmen Launch Big "First Anniversary" Campaign

SOLID bookings in one hundred per cent. of the theatres in the territory is the mark set for themselves by the salesmen of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in the Seattle, Washington, exchange as an appropriate method of celebrating First National's first anniversary during the week of February 12 to 18 inclusive. Work was begun in earnest the first week in January to make the week one of the biggest ever held on the Coast and according to the preliminary reports the office stands a chance of accomplishing close to its objective.

As an aid to the campaign the exchange office has designed a unique return post card. A figure of a small infant, attempting to apply a real match to onee candle, puts over the idea of a birthday celebration. The wording on the card is in part as follows:

"Say it with bookings and your birthday congratulations will be appreciated.

"First National's first anniversary week is destined to set a record for the total number of bookings in this territory.

"Even the few exhibitors who have not become franchise holders have caught the spirit. Expressing in the fullest sense their appreciation of what this organization has accomplished in their behalf, they are booking solidly, in many cases, for the entire week. Cancellation of other service, previously booked, is a common occurrence."

The exchange is offering thirty-eight features for bookings during the week including: "The River's End," "In Search of a Sinner," "The Fighting Shepherdess," "The Woman Gives," "The Idol Dancer," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "Peaceful Valley," "Don't Ever Marry," "The Family Honor," "Passion's Playground," "The Love Expert," "The Perfect Woman," "Yes or No," "The Branded Woman," "The Splendid Hazard," "What Women Love," "The Yellow Typhoon," "Folly of the Storm Country," "The Inferior Sex," "Go and Get It," "The Jack Knife Man," "The Notorious Miss Lisle," "The Master Mind," "Good References," "Married Life," "Twin Beds," "Nomads of the North," "Curtain," "Harriet and the Piper," "The Devil's Garden," "In the Heart of a Fool," "Dangerous Business," "Nineteen and Phyllis," "Love, Honor and Behave," "The Scoffer," "Old Dad," "Dinty," "Unseen Forces" and "In Old Kentucky."

James Clemmer Lauds "The U. P. Trail"

From James Q. Clemmer, proprietor of Clemmer's theatre and the Wintergarden in Seattle, Wash., comes the following telegram, addressed to W. W. Hodkinson:

"Zane Grey Story 'The U. P. Trail' opened to capacity business in both Wintergarden and Clemmer theatres. It certainly is most wonderful box office attraction. In spite of coldest weather existing in many seasons this attraction exceeded all expectations. Congratulations to Hodkinson on 'U. P. Trail.'"

Harry Carey Starting Work on Western

At Universal City this week, Harry Carey began work on a new western story, "Everybody for Himself," from the pen of Geo. C. Hull. The production marks the return to the Universal studios of Jack Ford, who directed Carey in some of his most emphatic successes; especially, "A Gun Fighting Gentleman" and "Marked Men." Mr. Ford is directing the Universal star in his latest story and is injecting that combination of human nature and stirring action which mark all his productions.

Harry Carey is seen as the mysterious stranger whose smile hides a fighting nature; Helen Ferguson, one of the best liked of the younger leading women, appears as the girl; Charles LeMoyne and Joe Harris, who have appeared with Carey in many of his features, provide the villainy necessary to the plot; J. Farrell MacDonald has a comedy character role as the town drunkard, and Lydia Yeamans Titus contributes an amusing role in the character of the boarding house keeper.

Strong Cast in "A Certain Rich Man"

Production is under full swing on Benj. B. Hampton's latest all-star picture, "A Certain Rich Man," photoplay of William Allen White's famous novel of American life, which is being made for Hodkinson release.

Among the members of the cast are Robert McKim as "John Barclay," Claire Adams as "Molly Culpepper," Carl Ganvoort as "Bob Hendricks," Jean Hersholt as "Adrian Brownwell" and Joseph J. Dowling as "Colonel Culpepper." Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving, famous child players, "grow up" into Gordon Dumont and Eugenie Gilbert, noted screen juveniles.

100% Hodkinson Club Is Growing Steadily

Progress is reported from the headquarters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the campaign to swell the ranks of the one-hundred per cent Hodkinson Club. The Liberty Amusement Company, after showing "The Spenders," advises: "More pictures like this and we continue one-hundred per cent Hodkinson exhibitors." During the past week the following theatres have signed up under the 100% Hodkinson plan; Arris Theatre Company, Mansfield, Ohio; La Salle theatre, South Bend, Ind.; and Orpheum theatre, Elphant, Ind.

Pioneer Planning for New Expansions

Extending its link of exchanges and broadening the field of activity along greater lines than have ever been attempted in its history, the Pioneer Film Corporation is laying the foundation for what promises to result in the biggest returns it has ever recorded, declared a statement from Pioneer's headquarters. The expansion plans are being perfected under the supervision of President A. E. Lefcourt.

Shoe-Dealers Pick Out Rothacker Pictures

Several months ago the program committee of the Retail Shoe Dealers Association set out to find "the best shoe films ever produced" to show before the Milwaukee convention which was the biggest shoe event of the year.

The films were finally selected and both of these films were Rothacker productions. One picture was "Collosius The Cobbler" a multiple-reel film, which visualizes, in detail, how the world's largest shoe manufacturer produces footwear on a large scale. The other one, "Footprints of Progress," is a picturization of the history of shoes—the evolution of footwear from the crude sandal of the caveman down to the shoe of today. This latter picture, which contains a close-up of one of the slippers believed to have been worn by Marie Antoinette on the guillotine, is now being shown to American school children, theatres being rented outright for showings.

Daisy Robinson Leads in Willat Feature

It has been decided that Daisy Robinson will play the leading role in "Partners of the Tide" rather than Betty Francisco, as was previously announced. "Partners of the Tide" is the second independent Irvin V. Willat production to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Colorful Setting for Pathe Episode

With "The House of a Thousand Veils" to supply a gorgeously colorful setting for its action, the seventh chapter of the "Velvet Fingers," measures up to the finest standards developed in Pathe serials both for thrills and pictorial effects, states Pathe. This episode, to be released January 16, finds the principal characters gathered at a resort in Chinatown, whither Lorna was spirited by Professor Robin.

New Educational Headquarters

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation of America and its subsidiary distributing organization, Educational Films Exchanges, Inc., this week moves its general executive and departmental offices to the new Penn Terminal Building at the corner of Seventh avenue and 31st street, immediately south of the Pennsylvania Station. Some 8,000 square feet of space on the twelfth floor is occupied.

Present quarters on the eighth floor of the Godfrey Building have been retained in their entirety. The production, accessory, shipping and film storage departments have been retained at that address, as well as the production room. The remainder of the space vacated by the executive departments has been given over to the New York exchange for its expansion. Complete re-arrangement of these offices has been made.

This vast addition in office space has been made necessary by the remarkable growth of Educational within the past year. Some idea of this can be gained when it is stated that there are now twenty employes of the executive departments of the home office alone for each one just a year ago. This number includes only the headquarters forces and does not take into consideration the sales and distributing forces through the United States and Canada.

Inauguration and completion of Educational's enlargement plans has occupied a space of less than a year. The first of its own exchanges began operation only on June 20, yet the first of October saw the completion of the system with twenty-eight branches in the principal distributing centers of this country and six in Canada. Along with these exchanges there have been vast increases in the sales, distribution, exploitation, supply, advertising, publicity and various other branches, and many departments representing entirely new activities.

An example of the organization's efficiency is shown by the fact that in the matter of moving offices only five hours' time was lost by any member of the force and during even that time each department was functioning on a somewhat limited basis.

"Our move," commented President E. W. Hammons, "has been forced on us because of our volume of business over our greatest expectation with the inauguration of our own distributing system. For the past few months we have been so crowded in our present quarters that we have been working under handicaps and since service has been one of the foundation stones of this organization we immediately set about to obtain space where each department could attain its utmost effectiveness. We have been delayed some time beyond the date anticipated in getting into our new offices, but I am sure that I can promise exhibitors an even increased efficiency in our chosen task of specializing in the short subjects field.

"Reports from every one of our exchanges the first of the year showed that they had all passed by a large margin the amount of business they were supposed to do by that time and that the increase continues on an upward trend. We have been compelled for the past few weeks merely on account of lack of office space, to hold back some developments which have been planned and which will immediately be put into operation. I expect our increased efficiency to be an added reason for still greater business in one and two-reel subjects during 1921 than that in our astonishing year of 1920.

No Slump at Goldwyn Studios

Completes Seven Pictures and Starts Six More

GOLDWYN directors are now putting the finishing touches on seven interesting productions, while six other pictures are either in production or about to get under way. Special effort has been made to select stories with strong, human themes, it is announced. Five of these will be Eminent Authors productions, filmed with the aid and co-operation of the author, who in every case was at the studio.

In keeping his studio forces up to the normal pace of activity, Goldwyn shows his faith in the immediate future of the motion picture industry and in the quality of the Goldwyn studio productions, many of which have recently scored unusual success.

The pictures which are now being finished are Reginald Barker's production of Katherine Newlin Burt's "Snowblind," with an all-star cast including Russell Simpson, Mary Alden, Cullen Landis and Pauline Starke; Frank Lloyd's production of "A Tale of Two Worlds," an original photoplay by Gouverneur Morris, with J. Frank Glendon, Leatrice Joy and Wallace Beery in the leading roles; "Don't Neglect Your Wife," an original photoplay by Gertrude Atherton, with Mabel Julienne Scott and Lewis S. Stone, heading an exceptional cast, directed by Wallace Worsley; "Boys Will Be Boys," an Irvin S. Cobb story starring Will Rogers, directed by Clarence Badger; "Mr. Barnes of New York," from the famous novel and play of the same name by Archibald Clavering Gunter, starring Tom Moore, directed by Victor Schertzinger; "Dangerous Curve Ahead," an original screen story by Rupert Hughes, with Helene Chadwick in the featured role, directed by E. Mason Hopper; and the twelfth of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar Comedies" featuring twelve-year-old Johnny Jones, directed by Paul Bern.

The six productions now getting under way promise to make exceptional screen entertainment, judging by the combination of authors, directors and actors. Reginald Barker's next opus will be "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' novel of the same name, for which the author is now writing the continuity. Will Rogers is in the midst of "An Unwilling Hero," a screen version of O. Henry's "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," with Clarence Badger again holding the megaphone.

Lon Chaney, who did such fine work in "The Penalty," has been engaged for "The Night Rose," an original photoplay by Leroy Scott, Eminent Author. Leatrice Joy, John Bowers and Edythe Chapman will also be in a cast which may truthfully be called all-star. Wallace Worsley will direct.

Frank Lloyd's next production will be "The Alibi," an original screen story by Charles Kenyon, well-known playwright, author of the stage play, "Kindling." House Peters and Irene Rich will have the leading roles.

Tom Moore was recently in New York taking scenes for "Made in Heaven," William Henry Hurtburt's stage play, which Victor Schertzinger is directing. Helene Chadwick, Goldwyn beauty, is playing opposite the star. Schertzinger and Moore have returned to the Coast.

"The Bridal Path," from the well-known stage play by Thompson Buchanan, will be put into film form under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. Richard Dix, well known on the speaking stage, who recently essayed the silent drama, has been engaged for the leading male role.

Big Author Helps on Script

Mary Roberts Rinehart at Goldwyn Studio; Production Units Are Busy

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART arrived at the Goldwyn studios on the Coast this week to assist in picturizing her first original scenario at present called, "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie." Rita Weiman, playwright and novelist, recently placed under contract by Goldwyn to write an original scenario, is on her way here from New York City.

The complete cast for Leroy Scott's first original scenario, "The Night Rose," which will be directed by Wallace Worsley, has just been announced, and is believed here to be one of the best ensembles that Goldwyn has ever gathered for any all-star production. Leatrice Joy, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Richard Tucker, Mary Warren, Edythe Chapman, Betty Schade, M. B. ("Lefty") Flynn, H. Milton Ross and John Cossar have been engaged for this production.

May Collins, a recruit from the New York stage, has been selected to act the principal role in "The Bridal Path," by Thompson Buchanan, which is going into production this week under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. Miss Collins played the ingenue in "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer" when that play was recently seen in New York and achieved a big hit.

Director Reginald Barker is finishing the photography on "Snowblind," Katherine Newlin Burt's new picture and has started preparations for filming "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' famous novel, which will be the next Reginald Barker production. Mr. Hughes is now at the studios writing the continuity from his novel and assisting in the editing, titling, etc., of his original scenario, "Dangerous Curve Ahead!"

Will Rogers is taking the night scenes for "An Unwilling Hero," his new stellar vehicle from an O. Henry short story. He will leave on January 15, with his director, Clarence Dadger, and a few other members of his company for New Orleans where the action of the story takes place, for the exterior scenes.

Vitagraph Feature Started

Corinne Griffith Begins Production of "The Correspondent"

"THE CORESPONDENT," a story by Heliodore Tenno, which was popular when published a year ago as a novelette, has been selected as the next play for Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star. Work on the new production already has been begun at the Brooklyn studio under the direction of Webster Campbell.

Percy Marmont, who has appeared in the leading male role in many Vitagraph productions, has been engaged to play opposite the star. He has been her leading man in several photoplays, notably "The Climbers," by the late Clyde Fitch. The remainder of the cast contains Leslie Roycroft, George Howard, Charles Cook and Jane Jennings. Fortunately much of the action of the play takes place indoors so that there will be no delay through unfavorable weather. The outdoor scenes will be made at Saugerties, up the Hudson River from New York, where Miss Griffith made most of the scenes for "The Garter Girl."

As Clara Deene, in "The Corespondent," Miss Griffith is said to have a role splendidly suited to her talents and beauty. Employed as confidential secretary to Anthony Blake, a power in railroad circles, she is in love with her employer.

Current Paramount Issues

"Inside of the Cup" and Billie Burke Vehicle Released Jan. 16th

"THE INSIDE OF THE CUP," the Cosmopolitan production which has just opened an indefinite engagement at the Criterion theatre, New York, and Billie Burke in "The Education of Elizabeth" are the Paramount features released January 16.

Winston Churchill's sensational novel, "The Inside of the Cup," has been made into a fine motion-picture drama under Albert Capellani's direction, according to the New York critics. The World called it "the finest motion picture of its type presented in New York this season." "The most gripping, the most essentially human document that has been seen on the screen in some time," said the American. "This great book makes a great film," said the Telegram. The Mail declared it was 'wholly absorbing from the first scene to the last fade-out." And the Sun: "The engagement should be a long one."

The theme, which exposes the hypocrisy of certain churchmen as well as laymen, has been bitterly criticized and consequently widely discussed wherever the book has been read. In its picturization the story loses none of its interest or appeal, and it is, therefore, likely to open wide avenues of spirited discussion in every town where it is shown.

Edward Dillon directed "The Education of Elizabeth," in which Billie Burke has the stellar role of a rough-and-ready chorus girl who is educated by the family of the rich man who proposes to marry her. It happens, however, that they do not wed, for both find love elsewhere. In the development of the comedy there are numerous laughable situations. This comedy was written by Roy Horiman, an English novelist and playwright of international fame.

The supporting cast is headed by Donald Cameron as leading man and includes Lumsden Hare, Frederick Burton, Harold Foshav Edith Shayne, Helen Dahl, Rav MacCausland and Frank Goldsmith.

Universal Serial Finished

"The Diamond Master," Which Stars Eileen Sedgwick, Ready for Release

AN eighteen-episode serial based upon "The Diamond Master," Jacques Futrelle's famous novel, and starring Eileen Sedgwick, has been completed by Universal and is now ready for release, reports Mr. Harry H. Berman, general sales manager of that organization.

It is called "The Diamond Queen," with Miss Sedgwick in the title role, her first starring vehicle in the serial field, and the most important role she has had under the Universal banner. Edward Kull, who has handled the megaphone for many Universal thrillers, was in charge of production.

"The Diamond Master" has more natural thrills," said Mr. Berman in a statement announcing the completion of the serial, "than any Universal serial ever produced. The late Jacques Futrelle took the characters of his popular story into lands and through adventures teeming with excitement. Robert F. Roden and George W. Pyper, who adapted the story for the screen, took full adventage of Futrelle's masterful action and evolved a continuity filled with colorful situations and hair-raising punches.

"Miss Sedgwick, who long has been known as one of Universal's most popular players, last was seen as a co-featured role in 'The Great Radium Mystery.' Her work in that serial prompted Universal to give her the starring role in 'The Diamond Queen.' She has more than made good her promise of ability, and has improved by far her former clever portrayals in Universal comedies and in the 'Cyclone Smith' series of westerns with Eddie Polo, as well as her work supporting Polo in his popular serial, 'The Lure of the Circus.'

"'The Diamond Queen,' schedule for release January 31, already has been exceeded in advance bookings only in one case—that of 'King of the Circus,' Eddie Polo's most recent chaptered drama. The large number of exhibitors booking 'The Diamond Queen' who also showed 'The Great Radium Mystery' well attests to the popularity which has been achieved by Miss Sedgwick, Universal's blonde serial heroine."

New Quarters for Paramount Magazine

The Paramount Magazine organization is now quartered in the Bryant Park Studios Building, 40th street and Sixth avenue, having moved from the laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Long Island City. The new quarters offer the cartoonists, Messrs. Hurd, Sullivan and Bailey, every facility.

FOX Films Corporation announces that five feature productions will be released during February. "While the Devil Laughs," starring Louise Lovely and written and directed by George William Hill, will be released on February 13th. "The Road Demon," which stars Tom Mix, and which was written and directed by Lynn F. Reynolds, will be released February 20th. For February 20th also has been scheduled "Dynamite Allen," in which George Walsh will appear in the stellar role. The story was written by Thomas F. Fallon, and the picture was directed by Dell Henderson. On February 27th, "The Blushing Bride" will be released. This picture stars Eileen Percy. The story was written and directed by Jules G. Furthman. "The Jockey," with Clyde Cook in the principal role, will be released on February 20th.

First Nat'l Salesmen Meet in New York

"Associated First National subfranchises not only make satisfied exhibitors, but they convert them into enthusiastic salesmen of subfranchises to their fellow exhibitors," was the unanimous testimony of the Empire State salesmen who convened in New York, recently for the First National New York State convention under the direction of R. H. Clark, general manager of the First National Exchange of New York.

The convention lasted three days. Before the final session, the men met in the office of Mr. Clark and organized themselves into a "sales club," with E. J. Hayes, sales manager for Buffalo, as president; Ben Levine, Greater New York sales manager, vice-president; W. T. Wilson, treasurer, and Ben Davis, secretary and editor.

Geo. Sargent to Direct Alice Calhoun

George L. Sargent, who directed Corinne Griffith in her last three Vitagraph productions, "The Broadway Bubble," "The Whisper Market" and "It Isn't Being Done This Season," among the most successful and popular of all her pictures, will direct Alice Calhoun in her next Vitagraph production, on which work was begun this week.

Dan Roche Elected Head of M. P. Press Club

Dan Roche, exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in Chicago, has been elected president of the Chicago Motion Pivture press Club. The Chicago Motion Picture Press Club is a comparatively new organization. Its membership is composed of press agents, critics, theatre publicity men and trade paper men.

Says Short Drama Is in Favor

Pathe Reports Holman Day and Santschi's Series in Demand

IN a statement just issued the assertion is made by Pathe Exchange, Inc., that indications point to a restoration of the short-length dramatic subjects. It is some time since producers put their best available star, author or director to work in the producing of dramatic themes of less than four or five reels, continues the Pathe statement. Pathe points out as a noticeable development of the trend toward short dramatic subjects the fact that within the past few months announcement has been made of a series of pictures, starring Tom Santschi, and more recently, of another series of short-length subjects written for the screen by Holman Day. "King Spruce," which starred Mitchell Lewis, "The Red Lane" and "Square Finn" are some of the photoplays written by Mr. Day which have already been presented on the screen.

The Holman Day series, the first of which Pathe will release January 30th were written around the existing manners and customs in the Maine Woods and along the Canadian border, a country this writer has sketched in many vivid tales. Their success is already manifest according to the amount of bookings thus far recorded on them at the Pathe branch offices. The fact that both the Santschi features and the Holman Day Series are receiving a hearty response from the exhibitors, declares the Pathe statement, is taken as proof that the short dramatic subject does not succeed only in isolated cases, but has its fair opportunity of success provided it offers something of feature quality.

"The Santschi pictures are to be featured for their star, who is promised wider exploitation than ever before accorded one who has served screen drama faithfully and brilliantly for a number of years," continues the Pathe statement. "The Holman Day Series presents its most potent advertising feature in the name of an author who is familiar to people all over this country.

"'Lochinvar O' the Line' is the first offering in Pathe's Holman Day Series. It is typical of the stories from this writer and has been commented upon for the expert blending of humor, melodrama and the picturesque quality of its characters and settings. Edgar Jones, the producer of the series, will appear as the main character in the play, which tells the story of a quaint woodsman whose poetic nature and understanding of men enables him to serve Cupid in a manner that seems both gallant and dramatic. His boon companon, a volume of Sir Walter Scott's poems, suggests in one favorite verse, 'Lochinvar,' the means of bringing happiness to a young pair whose hearts are separated by the line traced between Canada and the United States. For the lover is a revenue officer of the United States and the girl's father is the keeper of a Line House, the scene of much trickery with the prohibition laws of the United States."

"Beyond the Trail," which will initiate the series of Tom Santschi features, releasing January 23rd, will be followed by "The Imposter," "The Death Trap," "The Tempest," "The Desert Wolf," and "La Rue of Phantom Valley."

The Pathe exploitation department has prepared a campaign sheet for the use of exhibitors. A broadside has been designed for each of the six releases announced. It is regular newspaper size and furnishes ad layouts and publicity notes for use in connection with each picture. The paper issued with the pictures includes a stock one-sheet, with an enlarged portrait of Santschi in Western costume; a one-sheet, three-sheet and six-sheet. Other material includes eight 11 by 14 colored lobby photos and fifteen black and white photos on the entire series.

Knoblock Photoplay Begun

William DeMille Will Direct "The Lost Romance" on the Coast

"THE LOST ROMANCE" has been chosen as the title of the story written by Edward Knoblock, the British dramatist, which is to be produced as a Paramount picture by William DeMille at the Lasky studio, where Mr. Knoblock has been studying screen production methods.

The DeMille-Knoblock picture is cited by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, as the first of the series of "famous authors-famous directors" pictures which he announced last summer on his return from London where he engaged several well-known British authors to write directly for Paramount Pictures. These pictures, it was stated then by Mr. Lasky, would be produced with the author, director and continuity writer working in the closest co-operation to the end that the author's own story would be shown on the screen.

"Motion picture production was an amazing revelation to me," said Mr. Knoblock. "One or two of my stage plays had been produced as pictures, but the results were not wholly satisfactory to me, their author. Since coming to the Lasky studio I have found what Mr. Lasky told me last summer to be all too true. That is, that if an author wants his works to appear on the screen to the best advantage he should go into the studio, learn how pictures are produced, learn the limitations and requirements of screen technique and how to tell his story in terms of moving pictures. This is the ideal way for authors to have their works produced as pictures—working in co-operation with the director and a trained continuity writer. And I can see now why the more far-sighted producers, in their search for material, are turning away from stage plays and novels, and trying to get authors to write original stories. I am sure this is the only way. It is also the pleasantest way, as I have found in working with Mr. DeMille, who is an artist to his finger tips and who, I am sure, will make the very best of the story I have written."

Mr. Lasky announced that the cast of "The Lost Romance" will include Jack Holt, Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel, who are in Mr. DeMille's latest success, "Midsummer Madness," which just closed a long run at the Criterion theatre, New York.

An elaborately staged scene from "The First Born," a Haworth production starring Sessue Hayakawa, distributed by Robertson-Cole

"The First Born" at Strand

Booked for Showing in New York's and Brooklyn's Strand Theatres

"THE FIRST BORN," starring Sessue Hayakawa, will be shown at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of January 30th. The Brooklyn Strand will present this Robertson-Cole release during the week following. The managements of these houses will exploit the picture in a large way, declares the Robertson-Cole organization. The booking of the production by these two big houses in the Metropolis is considered by the Robertson-Cole officials to be testimonial to the high calibre of the production.

A large exploitation section is an important part of the press book which the distributors have just published on this production. It sets forth dozens of ways in which "The First Born" may be placed before the public.

"The First Born," Robertson-Cole believes will mark a new epoch in the picturesque career of Sessue Hayakawa. It is the first of a new series of four pictures which he is making for distribution by Robertson-Cole, each of which is designed to be much more powerful from standpoints artistic, dramatic and commercial than any of his past work. The calibre of the new productions is proved by the Broadway booking, as the Strand has a place among American theatres which does not need to be explained.

One of the exploitation plans outlined by the Robertson-Cole press book consists in a great tie-up embracing all first-born children up to the age of five years, the parents of whom will be interested through various lines of business. Another phase of exploitation which can be counted on to let the whole town know that "The First Born" is playing at a leading theatre consists in the use of toy balloons. Robertson-Cole has arranged with the largest company in the country which handles these toys to supply them at a very low rate, it is declared. For those who desire a quiet advertisement another plan is given in the R-C press book.

Big Run for "Midchannel"

Clara Kimball Young Production Stays Eight Weeks in Chicago

THE run of the fourth Clara Kimball Young production, "Mid Channel," from the pen of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, released by Equity Pictures Corporation, in Chicago, is regarded by the distributors as an unusual event in picture history in that city. Beginning with a one-week run at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago, "Midchannel" held out for four weeks at a stretch and played to capacity business throughout its successful showing. During the fourth week of its run at the Ziegfeld, it was booked simultaneously at the Castle theatre, also in the Loop district.

The last two weeks are demonstrating that the demand for Miss Young has by no means been satisfied by the long runs just mentioned, states Equity. "Midchannel" was obliged to move from the Castle theatre after a two weeks' engagement because of previous booking arrangements, and entered the Central Park theatre—one of Chicago's most exclusive first run houses.

Concluding its capacity week at that house, "Midchannel" moved to the Woodlawn theatre, another of Chicago's classic picture houses, where it is now completing a big week. Andrew Karzas, owner of the Woodlawn, may hold "Midchannel" for an additional week.

Novel Stunts for Fox Film

"BLIND WIVES," Fox Film Corporation's mighty potpourri of thrills and fashion, is, by reason of its principal locale being laid in New York City's "clearing house of feminine finery," a subject that lends itself to exceptional exploitation possibilities—possibilities, which, according to advices from the Fox offices, are being realized by wideawake showmen in a most vigorous manner.

Realizing the eternal fascination of clothes for the average woman, few of the first-run house managers of the country consider their presentation of the film complete without an elaborately staged fashion show with living models, as a proper prologue for the picture. Not a few managers have run a fashion show prologue a week in advance of the showing of the picture, and others have "parked" their living models out in the lobby as well as on the stage, declares William Fox.

Other managers report big results from the display of extravagant and sensational gowns, which they arrange to put on display in local merchant's windows, with prizes consisting chiefly of tickets to "Blind Wives"—for the creation or designer that receives the widest local approval. Generally a group of three prominent women judges decide the contest.

The title "Blind Wives," offers in itself so many possibilities in the way of inexpensive yet telling street ballyhoos that various kinds of blindfolded subjects, male and female, have been uitilized. Wives, well blindfolded and well be-bannered, have been sent out in cars, carry-alls and even on motor trucks. One enterprising New England manager went so far as to rent a whole string of cars, which he filled with fashionably dressed women blindfolded, labelled them with the name of his theatre and the date of the showing and sent them out on parade through the main streets and the suburbs, sandwich men, wearing blue goggles and groping their way slowly with canes have helped carry the message along more than one city's highways.

Such stunts, as these, coupled with unique teaser advertising, are making the presentation of "Blind Wives" not alone the advent of a great picture, but a milestone in the progress of theatrical exploitation as well, says Fox.

Frank E. Woods Promoted

Is Appointed Supervisor-in-Chief of Paramount Studio Activities

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announces that he has appointed Frank E. Woods, supervisor-in-chief of all Paramount studio activities. Mr. Woods has long been supervising director at the Lasky studio, Hollywood.

The appointment of Mr. Woods marks the success of a plan which originated with Mr. Woods himself, who, with the idea of further solidifying the Paramount producing organization, suggested to Mr. Lasky some time ago that the best results could be obtained by having somebody in a position to supervise all the non-special productions made in the Lasky studio. This plan was immediately approved by Mr. Lasky and since its beginning has proved a big success.

It worked out so successfully that the arrangement was adopted in the production of all Realart pictures, Elmer Harris, who had worked on Mr. Wood's staff and had been trained in Mr. Wood's production methods, being named supervising director of all Realart pictures made in California.

Mr. Woods was the man who also picked Thomas J. Geraghty for the post of supervising director at the new Paramount studio in Long Island City. Mr. Geraghty's appointment by Mr. Lasky was recently announced. Last week, further developing Mr. Wood's system, Mr. Lasky appointed Thompson Buchanan junior supervising director at the Lasky studio, thus giving Mr. Woods more time to devote to his increased duties as supervisor-in-chief.

Coincident with the announcement of Mr. Woods's promotion, Mr. Lasky also made public the fact that Gardner Hunting, formerly production editor at the Paramount eastern studios, had been named associate supervising director in the Long Island studio. Mr. Hunting, who, as production editor, handled the editing of some of the biggest Paramount pictures produced in the old Fifty-sixth street studio, will take over some of the work now being done by Mr. Geraghty. This is due to the fact that the new studio soon will be re-opened, and Eastern production activities will be greatly increased.

First of Frothingham Series Announced

The first of a series of four J. L. Frothingham pictures for 1921 released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will be "The Other Woman" from the novel of the same name by Nora Davis. It will be directed by Edward Sloman and photographed by Tony Gaudio. The cast includes Jerome Patrick, Jane Novak, Helen Jerome Eddy, Joseph J. Dowling, William Conklin, Aggie Herring, John Steppling and the child, Frankie Lee.

Directed by HOWARD HICKMAN

Every farmer knows what a "Killer" is. A sheepdog, natural guardian of the sheep, who has become their worst enemy; sly, tricky, murderous, cruel, implacable, killing for the love of it, and incurable.

Imagine a man like that, rich, powerful and intelligent.

Then imagine a picture, based on that theme and written by one of our greatest out-of-door writers, with its scenes laid in the Southwest.

Thrilling? Powerful?

Yes, and then some.

"THE TORRENT," a colorful melodrama, starring Eva Novak, and which is the second picture made by Stuart Paton under his new directorial contract with Universal, has just been released, it is announced by Mr. Harry M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges.

This picture is adapted from the popular magazine story, "Out of the Sunset," by George Rix, which was published in "Telling Tales." It is the story of a young woman who falls from her husband's yacht and is cast ashore upon an island in the Pacific. It is the rendezvous of a band of bootleggers, from whom she is rescued by a wandering coast patrol aviator.

"The Great Redeemer" Wins High Favor

Attesting to the appeal made to audiences by the Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Great Redeemer," a Metro release, Metro Pictures Corporation offers the following written testimonials from the Rev. M. Billmayr, pastor of St. Peter's Church in Browerville, Minn, and E. C. Robertson, owner of the Victory theatre, Fayetteville, Ark. The Rev. Bilmayr said:

"Just through with 'The Great Redeemer.' A wonderful production. Our people were just spellbound. Every movie theatre, irrespective of creed, should run that artistic picture."

Mr. Robertson said of "The Great Redeemer": "Lots of my patrons came out of my theatre tonight and told me that it was a better picture than 'The Miracle Man' ever dared to be."

Famous Primadonna in "Money Master"

Truly Shattuck, famous both in America and abroad as a primadonna, comic opera star and vaudeville artist, is now in the midst of an engagement at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, where she is portraying for the screen the role of Virginia Poucette in George Melford's production for Paramount, "The Money Master," which is an adaptation of the novel by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Miss Shattuck made her screen debut five years ago, but she declared that her present role is one of the most interesting screen parts with which she has yet been entrusted.

"Hey Rube" Called Funniest Vernon Film

After its first showing in the projection rooms this week, Educational announced that "Hey Rube," a two-reel Christie comedy, which will be released the last day of January, is the funniest creation in which Bobby Vernon has ever appeared. Helen Darling has an important part in the cast which is an unusually large one. A big array of the Follies girls appear as school children.

Two Pathe Serials Completed

"Avenging Arrow" and "Yellow Arm" Are Just Finished

TWO new Pathe serial pictures have been completed. At the Robert Brunton studios in Hollywood, all production work on "The Avenging Arrow," in which Ruth Roland will star, is finished. While the George B. Seitz studios have filmed the final scenes of "The Yellow Arm," the second serial in which Juanita Hansen will star for Pathe.

Both productions are, according to present arrangement, listed for an important place on the Pathe schedule for this year. Merely routine work remains to put these two offerings in the finished form in which they will be shown to the public. The completion of the pictures puts the producing schedule well in advance of its releasing chart, it is declared. With the increasing of the material issued with Pathe serials, including the exploitation aids and advertising campaigns, the time element has become more important than ever with that company.

"The Avenging Arrow" will be Miss Roland's eighth serial for Pathe. Her vehicle immediately preceding it, "Ruth of the Rockies" is declared to have bettered the best serial records of the past. In that picture, which finished its first run December 5, Miss Roland has played in a greater percentage of the theatres of the country than any serial before its times, declare Pathe officials, and the figures are still mounting as bookings for "Ruth of the Rockies" continue to arrive at the various Pathe branches.

In the Seitz production, "The Yellow Arm," Juanita Hansen appears with Marguerite Courtot, Warner Oland and a notable supporting company. "The Yellow Arm," the production made from a story by James Shelley Hamilton, will show Miss Hansen in the role of stage favorite whom circumstance leads into the storm-centre of a baffling and stirring mystery.

Miss Courtot, who as the co-star of George B. Seitz in three episode plays has attained widespread recognition, plays a role of importance and great acting opportunities, it is said. Mr. Oland, the premier heavy of Pathe serials, takes the part of the man who inherits the vengeance of a certain Oriental tribe and becomes the object of their plots and intrigues.

The direction of "The Yellow Arm" is by Bertram Millhauser, who directed "The Phantom Foe," her first production at Seitz studio.

In addition to these there is also in course of production for Pathe, "The Sky Ranger," which George B. Seitz is producing and directing and which will star June Caprice with Mr. Seitz. The play will be in fifteen episodes and will introduce Miss Caprice as a serial heroine, a role she is essaying for the first time during her long experience before the camera.

"The Avenging Arrow" is the third fifteen episode serial Ruth Roland has made without an interruption in her studio work. After her trip East in 1919 Miss Roland returned to the strenuous working program that carried her through the filming of 45 two-reel episodes without a let-up. Her new film is an adaptation of a novel by Arthur Preston Hankins, who published it under the title "The Honeymoon Ouest." Ben Cohen made the adaptation and the directing was done by W. S. Van Dyke under the supervision of Robert Brunton.

Fine Combination Effected

Paramount Assigns William Taylor to Direct Elsie Ferguson Vehicle

THE coupling of Elsie Ferguson as star and William D. Taylor as producer in "Sacred and Profane Love," a forthcoming Paramount special, marks the end of efforts to bring their respective talents together in production which have compassed several, according to a statement from Paramount.

Mr. Taylor, a man of English descent and well versed in the lore and traditions of the British Isles, has always been considered an ideal choice for the direction of the English plays in which Miss Ferguson has been so successful. So it was that he had no sooner returned from service as a captain in the Canadian army that he was approached with a contract to make two pictures with Miss Ferguson in England. At that time, however, picture-making conditions overseas were so unsettled that the project was abandoned.

Miss Ferguson remained in the East while Mr. Taylor went West to make a string of such exceptional productions that he was named for a special production for Paramount.

So firm was Miss Ferguson's belief in Mr. Taylor's ability to make the kind of pictures suited to her type of interpretation that on her return from a European and Oriental trip she expressed herself as delighted over his assignment to direct "Sacred and Profane Love," in which she had scored so decidedly on the stage.

Mr. Taylor has assumed the screen direction of "Sacred and Profane Love" with a full understanding of the Mid-Victorian English literary circles in which the action takes place. Long educational training on the continent, likewise, makes certain the accuracy of the Parisian scenes marking the reunion of Carlota and her first lover.

Included in the supporting cast are Conrad Nagel in the impressive role of Diaz; Thomas Holding, formerly leading man to Madame Petrova; Helen Dunbar, Winifred Greenwood, Clarissa Selwyn and Jane Keckley.

Hugh Ford Leaves for West Coast

Hugh Ford, who has just completed Ethel Clayton's newest production, "The Price of Possession," is expected to leave for the Coast Friday to join the Paramount forces at the Lasky studio.

"Temple Dusk" Completed

Sponsors Proclaim It as One of the "Big Pictures of the Year"

CAMERA work on "Temple Dusk," the forthcoming George D. Baker production for S.-L. Pictures, has just been completed at Metro's New York studios and the picture is being cut and titled preparatory to being released by Metro late in February.

"Temple Dusk" was adapted to the screen from Calvin Johnston's short story in the Saturday Evening Post. Produced under the personal direction of George D. Baker, "Temple Dusk" is regarded by its sponsors to constitute one of the big pictures of the year, and to this end neither time nor expense was spared in providing the picture with all it needed to ensure excellence.

The all-star cast, which will be seen in the picturization of Calvin Johnston's story, includes Anna Q. Nilsson, in the featured role of Ember, the girl; Robert Frazer, as David who married Ember; Charles Lane, as Palter, the aged gambler; Frank Currier, as the old minister who defies the gambler; Robert Schable, as Bunny Fish, and Thomas W. Ross, as Charley, the croupier.

The striking and unusual story of "Temple Dusk," concerned the marriage of the girl Ember to David Marlowe at a drunken party, following which Marlowe loses money in Palter's gambling establishment and forges a check. The struggles of the girl Ember to remain decent throughout her poverty provide the picture with some of its most dramatic and moving situations.

George D. Naker, made the screen adaptation from Calvin Johnston's story and Andre Barlatier photographed the production. The interiors were designed by M. P. Staulcup, Metro's art director.

Metro Uses Special Sets

Gigantic Swimming Pool and Luxurious Ranch-Home Are Employed

A GIGANTIC swimming pool—so designed as to permit daring acquatic performances—has been erected on the grounds of Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., as one of the numerous remarkable backgrounds to be seen in the forthcoming special all-star production of "What's the Matter with Marriage?"

Although Southern California boasts of thousands of luxurious artificial pools, it was necessary to build this one especially for picture purposes in order to conform to the requirements of the story, which is a screen version of Jack London's "The Little Lady of the Big House."

Ora Carew, in the role of the heroine, will drive a fiery steed to the top of a tall incline and, while still astride it, dive into the tank. Although Miss Carew is known as a daring equestrienne, it was necessary to spend several days practicing this feat before she announced that she was prepared to stage it for the camera, says a statement from the Metro headquarters.

One of the most luxurious of Southern California's far-famed ranch-homes will be seen in this production, announces the Metro statement. It was necessary to canvass the ranch country for weeks before just the proper environment for the London story could be found, it is stated. When Bayard Veiller, chief of productions, and Philip Rosen, who is directing the picture, conferred on the details of the picture, it was decided that the special lighting effects for the remarkable photography that is being sought, could be obtained only by reproducing every room of the house on the enclosed stages.

Loew Exploits Fairbanks

Novel Stunts and Attractive Sign Cards Exploit "The Mark of Zorro"

WHEN Marcus Loew decided to run the latest Douglas Fairbanks production released by United Artists for a run of seven days, instead of following his former policy of three or four days, he set his exploitation, advertising and publicity departments to work doing a variety of things that were designed to bring business into the many Loew theatres.

In many instances the managers of the houses "pulled" some unique exploitation stunts but one particularly good form of advertising that was used were attractive hand-painted sign cards which were placed in all of the lobbies of all of the theatres. These sign cards are credited with having brought much of the business to the theatres; so much so that the management reports that during the run of the picture in the Loew houses in New York, this Fairbanks production played to more than one million.

Some of the material that was used on the signs was as follows: "Oh what a thrill You'll get when you see Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mark of Zorro'—You'll see it twice!" "We believe we're going to break all records—When we play Douglas Fairbanks in 'Mark of Zorro' It's a wonder!" "'I want to see that again'—Is what you'll say after seeing Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mark of Zorro' A Screen Sensation." "Imagine Fairbanks as a bold bandit and a master swordsman—who rides alone in the dead of night. Great? We'll say so!—He's all that in 'The Mark of Zorro'—A full week in order to accommodate everyone and let you see the picture twice."

New DeMille Story Titled

"The Affairs of Anatol" Will Be Known on Screen as "Five Kisses".

"FIVE KISSES" is the title selected for Cecil B. De Mille's forthcoming production founded on Arthur Schnitzler's play, "The Affairs of Anatol." This announcement was made by the Paramount producer at the Lasky studio where he is now in the midst of production work on his adaptation of the Schnitzler play .

Brevity and fitness are the chief reasons for the selection of this title. The photoplay story as it has been developed by Cecil B. DeMille and his stellar scenario staff is adequately told by the new title and "Five Kisses" has a decided preference over "The Affairs of Anatol" in point of brevity.

The fact that the Schnitzler story has been translated into an American background with American characters is yet another reason for the change in title.

The latest addition to the cast announced by the producer is Monte Blue, the young leading man who made a success in "Everywoman," Cecil B. DeMille's "Something to Think About" and George Melfort's "The Jucklins." To him has been assigned an important role in the current production in recognition of his excellent work in a wide variety of roles. Another addition is Raymond Hatton, a character actor.

Hope Hampton Film Issued

"The Bait," Star's First Picture for Paramount, Released January 2

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S picture, "The Bait," featuring Hope Hampton, was released this week by Paramount. The combination of Mr. Tourneur's direction, the appearance of Miss Hampton and the fact that the picture is a powerful melodrama of the type in which Tourneur excels is said to make this a strong box-office attraction.

Out-and-out melodrama, a love story and a screen of mystery pervading the plot have been woven together in this picture, states Paramount. Taking its title from the cue that every pretty woman is "the devil's bait," the story presents a varied career of an innocent girl unscrupulously used as the bait for a young millionaire by a band of underworld thieves. A shooting melee in the dark is the scene that provides the opening of the picture and the mystery alike and the story is developed as the characters each explain their parts in the solution of the crime.

"The Bait" was adapted to the screen from Sidney Toler's stage success "The Tiger Lady" which had an extended run on Broadway. Hope Hampton makes her first appearance under the Paramount standard in this picture, taking the stellar role of Joan Grainger. Harry Woodward, who played in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," has the leading male role. Others in the cast include: James Gordon, Rae Ebberly, Joe Singleton, Poupee Andriot and Dan Crimmins, Jr.

John Gilbert, who was Tourneur's leading man in "The White Circle" and "Deep Waters," wrote the scenario for "The Bait" and assisted in the direction.

Mid-West Exhibs Cheerful

Express Optimistic Opinions as to Outlook for 1921's Business

THE invasion of exhibitors into Chicago following the holidays gave a good opportunity to find out what the theatre men think is in store for them during 1921. At the Paramount exchange the other day some forty or fifty exhibitors were buzzing around—and out of the entire group there was not a one who was not extremely optimistic.

Representative showmen from Chicago and surrounding towns in this territory seemed to feel that they are in for a mighty fine year. John Hammond, of the Vendome, Pickford and Phoenix theatres, South Side, Chicago, was characteristically cheerful, reporting that business has rebounded splendidly since Christmas. And to prove he's feeling prosperous, he is discussing his plans for a trip to Cuba. Lucky John! Andrew Karzas of the Woodlawn and other Chicago theatres, was equally optimistic and says the Woodlawn is going along merrily with no complaints. Charles Lamb, of Rockford, Ill., feels that the new year is going to be one of good business. Joseph Hopp, about to open his new Fort Armstrong theatre, in Rock Island, Ill., is more than cheerful. He thinks the coming year will be a big picture year.

Earl Johnson says that his Berwyn, Ill., theatre is showing a fine spurt after the holiday lull. Wm. Cadoret, of Kankakee, said that the slowing up of business during the holidays was just the normal thing to expect in the show business and is preparing for a big year which he says already has opened well. Julius Lamb, of the Shakespeare, Emmett and President, thinks the theatre that keeps abreast of the times, shows good pictures and exploits them, will make big money during 1921. Saul Optner, new manager of the Hyde Park theatre, reports fine business. And all the others, from whom these typical cases were taken, echoed the optimistic trend of thought.

Strong Cast for Hodkinson

Capable Cast in "The Other Woman" Set for Release in Month of March

THE complete cast of "The Other Woman," the J. L. Frothingham production which is to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in March, is announced as follows: Playing the dual role of "Langdon Kirven" and "John Gorham," will be seen Jerome Patrick, last seen in "The Furnace." Jane Novak, who has appeared opposite William S. Hart in some of his greatest pictures, and who was also in Marshall Neilan's production, "The River's End," will be seen as "Naomi Joyce." Helen Jerome Eddy, who will be remembered for her work in many picture successes such as "Pollyanna" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" with Mary Pickford; with Sessue Hayakawa in "The Tong Man" and in his latest production "The First Born"; and also with George Beban in his latest production "One Man In A Million," is seen as "Avery Kirven."

William Conklin handles the role of "Spencer Ellis," while Joseph J. Dowling, featured player in Hodkinson's "The Kentucky Colonel" and also seen in "The House of Whispers," "Riders of the Dawn," "The U. P. Trail," "The Spenders" and "The Breaking Point,"—all Hodkinson releases,—is cast as "Colonel Joyce." Frankie Lee, one of the most talented child players of the day, who played in "The Westerners," plays "Bobbie Kirven" while Lincoln Palmer is cast as "Charles Beattie." Kate Price, one of the real veterans of the screen, whose career dates from the old Vitagraph days is also cast in a sympathetic role.

Edward Sloman will direct, while Tony Gaudio will be responsible for the camera-work. The story was written by Norah Davis.

Praise for "The Furnace"

Letters and Wires Commending Film Received at Realart Office

COMMENDATORY letters from exhibitors who have played "The Furnace," continue to arrive at the Realart headquarters, according to a statement received from Realart Pictures Corporation. Following is the opinion of Samuel Goldstein, manager of the new Victory theatre, Holyoke, Mass., as quoted in the Realart statement:

"When I booked 'The Furnace' to open Goldstein Brothers new Victory theatre I considered it one of the best pictures available for the house," Mr. Goldstein wired Realart after showing the production. "It proved to be such by the thousands that were turned away at every performance. Let Realart make more pictures of this kind and it will be easier sailing for the exhibitor as well as the producer."

Mr. Goldstein's preference for strong productions is shared by many other exhibitors who also find "The Furnace" valuable from every point of view, declares the Realart statement. "Capacity business"; "S. R. O. sign"; "packeed house" and "beyond expectations" are some of the comments exhibitors are offering on the picture,

"Mr. Wu" Is Well Received

Is Played to Capacity Business Despite After-Holiday Engagement

REPORTS received from every part of the country at the New York offices of the Stoll Film Corporation record the interest and enthusiasm aroused by the showing of "Mr. Wu," the Chinese play recently released in the company's one-a-week schedule.

Exhibitors, the best judges of a picture's success, have been unanimous in declaring the production made a phenomenal appeal, according to Stoll officials. The day after a double holiday, in the lexicon of the "showman," is the dullest time for business. The day after a double New Year's celebration, as this year, following a whole week of festivities, is looked upon as the worst for entertainment in the year.

Yet one exhibitor—a typical case—reported that on the Monday morning following New Year's day, with "Mr. Wu" showing at his house, capacity was reached fifteen minutes after the doors were opened. He is Fred W. Falkner, his communication reading, in part:

"I am playing your feature, 'Mr. Wu,' this week at my Strand theatre, a first run, week-stand house in the city of Newark, N. J., and I must admit that when I saw the picture in a cold projection room I never anticipated it would meet with such splendid results when properly presented before an audience.

"We opened to a very large Sunday business, and yesterday, Monday, after New Year's Day and Sunday coming together, we naturally expected a very light Monday, but to our surprise we opened at 11 o'clock Monday morning and fifteen minutes later we were holding people out.

"We heard nothing but praise for the picture, and I am really delightfuly surprised myself."

"Holman Day" Release Set

Pathe to Issue One Picture Every Other Week in "Holman Day Series"

THE releasing schedule determined upon by Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the "Holman Day Series" of dramas, portraying life in the Maine woods, is to offer one picture every other week commencing January 30th.

These plays, produced by Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., and written especially for the screen by an author whose stories of the lumber men and guides of the Maine country have been celebrated for twenty-five years, are being produced in the actual locations provided in the scenarios and the casts, save for the principal roles, will present many characters born and bred in that country, states Pathe.

The first picture of the series has been completed and will be released under the title "Lochinvar of the Line." Its issue on January 30th will start the schedule of one every other week and under this arrangement the Holman Day Series will alternate with the Tom Santschi Series of outdoor features on the Pathe schedule. "Single Handed Sam" will be second of the Holman Days and "The Black Ace" is number three. The Santschi features will be released on alternate weeks commencing January 23rd. This arrangement does not merge the two series into one as each will be maintained distinctively as the Tom Santschi Series and the Holman Day Series, respectively.

"Kismet" Scores in Texas

Rialto Theatre of El Paso Reports "Kismet" Has Smashed All Records

WHAT are declared by Robertson-Cole to be typical of the results being obtained all over the country were those reported by the Rialto theatre, El Paso, Texas, on "Kismet," the super-special production, starring Otis Skinner. Past records were broken, Managing Director James C. Quinn reported, following an exploitation program which was the most extensive ever undertaken in El Paso. Mr. Quinn said in a wire to Robertson-Cole:

"In face of local business slump 'Kismet' carried us through a solid week of splendid business at increased admission prices. Even those who miss many of the high lights of the picture are bound to be deeply impressed with the splendor and bigness of it. There is just one thing necessary to stamp your theatre in large town or small indelibly in the minds of your patrons and prospects and that is intelligent showmanship. 'Kismet' supplies all other necessary ingredients. This industry owes a debt of gratitude to Mr. Skinner, Gasnier and Robertson-Cole."

Westcott Young, director of publicity at the Rialto theatre, in a letter which supplemented the wire on the engagement said: "I want to thank you for the accessory service which went with this picture. It was so complete that it made possible one of the easiest campaigns I ever handled here. I made full use of your press book, especially the special section regarding the New York Strand theatre showing. I used also the New York newspaper criticisms. Three days before Christmas, the day on which the picture opened, we sent out over one thousand letters, using your stock program. Christmas Saturday we broke the holiday record, although we ran only four showings instead of the customary six. Sunday every past record was smashed.

"We consider this remarkable, inasmuch as the Rialto is four blocks off the main street and business down here has slumped considerably. Please note that our appropriation on this picture was less than on any former pictures, and our results were better."

Balloonists in Pathe News

Expedition to Mattice Gets Views of Rescue of the Three Balloonists

FLASHING upon the picture screen the long and anxiously awaited scenes of the Navy Balloonists' return to civilization out of the frozen North is the achievement screened in Pathe News, Reel No. 5. Pathe had every possible approach covered by cameramen whose sledge parties proceeded far into the white and frigid wilderness North of the farthest railway communication. With Mattice, for his base, it was the good fortune of Cameraman K. W. Fasold of the home staff and members of his sledge party to be among the first to meet and welcome the rescued adventurers.

The screen vividly shows the scenes of this meeting amid the snows tracked ordinarily only by hunters and trappers, guides and Indian runners. You see the arctic dogs tugging at the burdened sledge with the Northbound party accompanying it on snowshoes. You see the trail stretching out toward distant Moose Factory between "interminable rows of Christmas trees," as the returning balloonists were to describe it. And presently you are thrilled at the sight of an approaching sledge with weary men straggling along behind—first, Lieutenants Kloor and Hinton, and then Farrell. They throw up their hands in greeting. Their fatigue from the unremitting toil over two hundred miles of trail from Moose Factory forgotten—for they are meeting an advance guard from the world of railways, telegraph lines and all the comforts of modern civilized life.

The two sledge parties are shown proceeding southward to Mattice at their best speed. The adventurers receive a rousing welcome when the town is reached. But they are all eagerness to start home and personally reassure their anxious families. You see them at the train—and that is the finale of the remarkable drama.

The preceding Pathe News reel, No. 4, shows interesting preliminaries. There are views of Moose Factory on St. James Bay, near where the balloonists landed. Indian runners are shown on the trail miles to the north of Cochrane meeting newsmen with the early reports of the adventurers' rescue.

Kinogram Prints Increased

Laboratories Ordered to Increase Prints in Anticipation of Demand

DECLARING that many of its plans have remained unannounced to prevent the possibility of any competitor adopting them in advance, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reported this week that advance-advices from its various branches indicated that the number of theatres showing the super Kinograms during the week of the first release, January 30, will far pass the number ordinarily set. The laboratories have already been advised to increase considerably the original print order.

Bookings already include every theatre of the Keith-U. B. O. circuit where the bi-weekly release will be made a permanent portion of the theatre. This contract does not interfere with the simultaneous showing of Kinograms in other theatres in the same cities. Included further in the advance contracts are said to be more than fifty of the very best motion picture circuits in the country. Further, it is declared that a considerable percentage of these bookings represent a replacement of some other news service.

Kinograms, as released through Educational, will immediately take over a product of the Gaumont Weekly, and thirty days later will acquire the whole material of a third leading news pictorial which cannot be announced because of pending contracts, it is stated. Educational stresses the fact that this does not represent an absorption of these two news weeklies, but the acquisition of the entire forces making them. The entire staff supplying the three services will be maintained, and the best of all their work used in the semi-weekly release.

"This wonderful advance showing," says Educational, "is not alone the result of the knowledge of the quality of the super Kinograms, but because we have placed our emphasis on the service that we will give exhibitors. We believe that with the three forces at work the super Kinograms will far surpass any similar effort, but without service the best news weekly is not dependable. The Kinograms as distributed by Educational will be, they know, and that explains a large number of the contracts."

Recent Appointments by Hodkinson

Joe Bloom, Hodkinson Supervisor, has appointed C. E. Gregg Hodkinson representative in the Des Moines territory and S. E. Marks, representative in the St. Louis territory.

S. R. KENT, general manager, Department of Distribution, has announced the following appointments in the Famous Players-Lasky sales organization:

J. P. Corbett, formerly Branch Manager at Dallas, is appointed District Manager in charge of the Dallas and Oklahoma City exchanges of Southern Enterprises, Inc.

Thomas H. Bailey is appointed Branch Manager at Oklahoma City, succeeding Mr. Wilkes.

Herbert I. Krause, formerly temporarily in charge of the Boston office, is appointed Branch Manager at Omaha, succeeding Paul J. Swift, who will take up special duties with the company.

These appointments take effect immediately.

WHATEVER may be the ultimate fate of the new enterprise known, or to be known as the Franco-American Cinema Corporation, there is no getting away from the fact that, thanks mainly to the storm of opposition which it has aroused in the French moving picture world, it has already obtained an enormous amount of free publicitv. For more than a week now its originator, Monsieur Andre Himmel, has been occupying the center of the stage with the limelight of public opinion glaringly focussed upon him and his activities on both sides of the Atlantic. The polemics in the press have been both bitter and severe while the recriminations heaped upon his head in the name of the French cinema industry have been sufficient to brand him a dozen times over as the arch-enemy of the trade.

The first intimation of the existance of the Franco-American Cinema Corporation was made known in France at an important banquet held in Paris towards the end of November, when the youthful promoter, who had just returned from New York, exploded a bomb by announcing that he had been appointed General Manager for Europe of what was to be the world's greatest moving picture society, with a capital of one hundred million dollars, under the presidency of Mr. G. J. Fleischmann. The F. A. C. C., its founder proclaimed, had been launched with good American dollars, and was destined to play a vast and important role, not only in France but throughout the entire world. Its principal aim was to develop and extend the moving picture business principally through Franco-American co-operation, and, while the whole world's trade was to benefit thereby generally, that of France was to profit in particular. In a speech which aroused the greatest enthusiasm and met with acclamations of approval, he summarized these aims briefly as follows: To combine under one vast organization the different branches of the cinema industry which are now separate and independent; to facilitate and co-ordinate and standardize the manufacture of everything pertaining to the production of a film; to establish a system of international exchange whereby every country should be assured of a market for its own output both at home and abroad; to extend the use of the moving picture so that it may become a factor in other branches of activity, such an education, science, publicity, propaganda, tourism, etc.; to establish an international congress for the purpose of determining the commercial and industrial rules and regulations governing the trade, including those referring to customs' duties and authors' rights, which, in France especially, require revision and standardization.

Such was the gist of the message which M. Himmel brought back with him from New York, where, it will be recalled, he had just previously been feted at another large banquet at the Ritz-Carlton by a notable gathering of the American moving picture trade and at which the French High Commissioner had been present. But the sequel was not long in coming. In spite of the rosy prospects which M. Himmel held out for the future of the French trade, and the great enthusiasm his projects evoked among the guests at the Paris banquet, the storm clouds began to gather. Up and down the boulevards, the Rialto of the trade, discussion grew apace and the declarations and activities of this unknown young promoter became the subject of many adverse and vitriolic comments. Cries of "bluff," "faker," "hot air," were hurled at his head, while the spectre of a colossal trust intended to monopolize the entire French trade was held up as a warning and a protest. "Combination is one thing, but combine is a horse of a very different color," cried the alarmists.

Then the press took up the cry and alleged, among other things, that the so-called M. Andre Himmel was in reality one Himmelfarb, late of Constantinople, where his father ran a small tailoring establishment. This apparently was sufficient to bring the trade officially into the fray. The French Motion Picture Syndicate called a meeting and decided to examine "impartially," as they expressed it, the declarations and activities of one Andre Himmel, alias Himmelfarb. The result was that it was charged that the said Andre Himmel had falsely represented himself in the United States as an emissary of the French government and that furthermore the letters and credentials which he had presented on that occasion were open to question, and in the case of one letter, supposed to have originated from the Ministry of Commerce, it was declared apocryphal. Having satisfied themselves on these points, the Syndicate declare their mission accomplished and retired gracefully. The next move is expected from M. Himmel, who has already sent a message from New York that full and complete explanations will be forthcoming in due course which will clear his name and confound his critics. It may, however, be safely assumed that the opposition which the Franco-American Cinema Corporation has already encountered in France will return to the charge just as soon as the new "combine" shows any sign of invading their territory and inserting what they regard as the thin end of the wedge of private monopoly.

Film Taxes Discussed

The French Moving Picture Syndicate, whose mission is to watch over and safeguard the interests of the trade in France, is at present engaged on a project which is to be submitted to parliament, aiming at certain changes and ameliorations calculated to benefit the home industry and to afford it a certain measure of protection against the foreign market. These proposals include the inclusion of the cinema in the theatrical category with a uniform tax of 6 per cent, a reduction according to length of the tax on French films and on films considered as strictly educational; the suppression of the municipal tax or in lieu of this a maximum tax of 10 per cent plus the poor tax. In order, however, to replace the loss for the budget which the acceptance of these proposals would cause, the syndicate suggest what they term "compensation taxes" in the form of increased customs' duties. In other words, it is a step nearer protection and a blow at the formidable foreign invasion of the French film trade. It is, however, unnecessary to state that in the event of such a proposal being adopted it will be the French public that will "pay the piper" because, owing to the enormous superiority of the foreign—that is, the American films over the French—the former will continue their vogue in France, even though the cost of importation is raised. French producers may protect their own interests, but they will not protect the public's pocket, which is only concerned with receiving the best in exchange for their money.

"J'accuse" Coming to U. S.

Abel Gance informs me that he has arranged with Marcus Klaw for the presentation of his film, "J'accuse," in the United States in the new year. "J'accuse," which has already obtained a remarkable success in France and England, will first be shown privately to the President at the White House, and will then open in New York some time in January. According to M. Gance, "J'accuse" has established a record for bookings in England, where it is at present showing. The receipts from bookings between May and July totalled some $200,000, surpassing even the "Birth of a Nation." Its success in America is, therefore, regarded as beyond a doubt, according to its producer. Gance, however, states that he is going to stagger even American producers with his latest picture, now nearing completion and to be known as "The Wheel." According to Ivy Close, heroine of the film, this Frenchman must be a sort of superman or a Napoleon of the film. Certainly the word "impossible" seems to find no place in his vocabulary. Anyone who in the present chaotic condition of the French transport system can succeed in getting a railroad company to place at his disposition fifty or so large locomotives and the free and unhampered use of a good stretch of their line must be gifted with something more than exceptional persuasive powers.

Miss Close told me that she will never be able to forget her visit to the United States and the many friends she had made there among all classes of the motion picture profession. She spoke with enthusiasm of American producers and their enterprising methods and added that she was looking forward to a speedy return.

The hand of the censor has fallen heavily this week on one of the most important French film groups, the Aubert Company. Some two months ago this firm presented to the public in Paris one of its greatest successes, "Li-Hang le cruel," a gripping drama of the spectacular kind, recalling vividly in many respects the powerful play, "Mr. Wu," and the equally sensational drama of Japanese morality, "The Cheat." The plot of "Li-Hang le cruel," as its title implies, is founded on the sinister cruelty of a rich and powerful Chinese towards his white wife, interpreted by May Murray, and her white lover. The author, a Frenchman, has followed the traditional lines of the majority of these dramas of Oriental morality, which differs from our Western code in that it is more intense, more tyrannical and more cruel.

The alert French censor probably overlooked the fact that the old reactionary Chinese Empire, with its antiquated morals and manners, had been recently replaced by a modern and progressive republic, at least in name. Consequently the film was passed and met with great success in France. But the still alerter Chinese Legation in Paris, whose members pride themselves on the ease with which they have absorbed Western manners and the facility with which they have broken with the traditions of their country, refused to sanction this representation of Chinese morality. A violent protest was therefore lodged with the Minister of the Interior with the result that "Li Hang le cruel" was withdrawn until further notice. The Chinese Legation, to which I applied for explanations, declared that they had taken this action because they considered the film a gross misrepresentation of Chinese customs and methods calculated to convey an utterly false impression of their countrymen. The Aubert Company, on the other hand, are making strong representations to the government against the decision of the Minister of the Interior. One peculiar feature of the situation is that, while Paris is temporarily deprived of this film, it is being shown in the provinces without let or hindrance. It will be recalled that something similar happened during the war to "The Cheat," known in France as "Forfaiture," owing to the wounded sensibilities of the Japanese government.

"Doug's" French Rival

Douglas Fairbanks, whose popularity in France has long been established, will have to look to his laurels. It is announced that the "Pathe Consortium," under which name the recently transformed Pathe Company is now known, has just signed up its "D'Artigan" for the film of "The Three Musketeers," which it intends to produce. The role of the dashing Dumas hero will be played by a young and brilliant French actor, Aime Simon-Girard. When Douglas was recently in Paris he told me that it had long been one of his greatest ambitions to interpret the role of this swaggering cavalier, whose romantic character he particularly admired. The buoyant and light-hearted Douglas saw in the devil-may-care Frenchman the very epitome of his own daring and exuberant nature, and it is not surprising that he should hanker after such a reckless and adventurous role. It is no secret that Douglas felt that he held a sort of moral copyright on this fascinating character. French psychologists, or at least a certain coterie of them, refused, however, to recognize this claim, asserting that to portray faithfully the role of the French national hero, something more than mere acrobatic prowess was required. It was generally conceded that in all that concerned vigor, action and sensational exploits the great Douglas could be relied upon to fill the bill, but when it came to grasping the finer and more subtle parts of the role—whatever that may mean—a Frenchman was the only choice. So it comes about that when he arrives in France next February to deck himself out in the gay trappings of the picturesque D'Artagan Douglas Fairbanks will find that he has a rival in the popular young actor, Aime Simon-Girard. This may not be altogether to Douglas' liking, but, in any case, the screen is not likely to lose thereby, and it will be at least interesting to compare the two versions, the one French and the other not merely American, but rather international.

Fanny Ward in France

Fanny Ward has been supplementing her film work in France by trying her hand at newspaper work. A few days ago the brilliant American actress contributed nearly a column in a Paris newspaper on the importance and position of

Honor Universal Manager

Claire Hague is Guest of Honor at Big Dinner; Canadian Drive Opened

AS a tribute to Claire Hague, general manager of the Canadian-Universal Film Company, Ltd., the Canadian arm of the Universal Company, employees in the half-a-dozen branch offices throughout Canada are staging an intensive sales-drive for the opening weeks of 1921. This period is called Hague's anniversary, and is in honor of his recent completion of ten years' service with Universal.

The Hague anniversary drive was inaugurated at a dinner given recently in the King Edward hotel, Toronto, and at which Hague was the guest of honor. Herman Stern, recently appointed district sales-manager for Canada, was the principal speaker. The dinner was attended by many prominent Canadian film men, in addition to Hague's co-workers. By courtesy of J. Shea, Jules Bernstein and N. K. Miller, entertainment was supplied to the banqueters by artists from Shea's, Loew's and Pantages' theatres.

The dinner was Mr. Stern's first official appearance before Universal's Canadian representatives, and he took occasion to outline to them Universal's plans for the Canadian territory.

"I am going to concentrate my efforts to bring about an even closer relationship between Universal exchanges and exhibitors," he announced. "As the head of the Pittsburgh branch, I found that personal relationship, and mutual confidence based upon 100 per cent. service, were great factors in building up Universal's prestige.

"In our projected work in this field, we are fortunate in having excellent backing by the newly formed exploitation department of Universal, under Mr. P. D. Cochrane. This department is meant to work with the salesman and with the exhibitor in selling Universal pictures to the public. It means honest-to-goodness co-operation and personal relationship with exhibitors."

Holiday Attractions Listed

Features for Lincoln's Birthday and Valentine Day Are Announced

IN a statement emanating from the headquarters of the Association First National Pictures, four pictures on the release list of that organization are recommended as special holiday attractions for the coming celebration of Lincoln's Birthday and St. Valentine's Day. For the Lincoln's Birthday program "Habit," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, and "The Jack-knife Man," the King Vidor production, are offered as features readily tied up with the spirit of the day itself. The subject of the freeing of the negro slaves by Lincoln and the theme of the Mildred Harris stellar vehicle, "Habit," can be used in attractive tie-ups, declares the First National statement. The theme of "The Jack-Knife Man," which is described as a human interest story embodying the creed of brotherly love, can also be readily linked with Lincoln's famous quotation, "With charity for all, and malice toward none," asserts First National.

For the program on St. Valentine's Day, Associated First National Pictures recommends "The Love Expert," starring Constance Talmadge, and "In the Heart of a Fool," the Allan Dwan production. The Toonerville Trolley series are also suggested as offering novel exploitation possibilities. The subjects of the two features are declared to be of the character that will readily tie-up with the sentimental appeal of the celebration of St. Valentine's Day. The characters appearing in the Toonerville Trolley series, the Skipper, Katrinka, etc., can be used for throw-aways, made up after the manner of the comic Valentine, with suitable verses attached.

the film industry in the United States. She explained to her French readers that the motion picture at home occupied a much higher rank than in France and quoted the example of William McAdoo, who resigned from his political work in order to devote himself to the picture game. She also reproached them, mildly, it is true, for what she termed their opposition to the attempts of Americans to produce films in France, and added that such an attitude was beyond her comprehension since millions of dollars would thereby be spent in the country and employment found for thousands of workmen. She cited the example of Sidney Chaplin, who recently came to France with the intention of spending nearly half a million francs on a film, but left in disgust and disappointment because of the obstacles he met with. The film will now be produced in California. Evidently Miss Ward is luckier than Mr. Chaplin, because she does not appear to be encountering many difficulties unless her perseverance is the explanation of her activities in France. FRANCIS J. TUCKFIELD.

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

Celebrates Anniversary of Ray Incorporation

The completion of the first year of the corporate life of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., was celebrated in Los Angeles on Friday evening, January 7th, when Mr. and Mrs. Ray were guests of the company's officers at a dinner and theatre party. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ray there were present the star's father, Charles T. Ray, who is president, and Mrs. Ray; Richard Willis, first vice-president and general manager, and Mrs. Willis; Albert A. Kidder, Jr., secretary, treasurer and assistant general manager, and Mrs. Kidder, and Gus Inglis, the second vice-president, and Mrs. Inglis.

The dinner was served at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. In the midst of the informal celebration the guests paused to send a telegraphic word of greeting to Arthur S. Kane, who presents Mr. Ray in the productions made by the star.

Girls Paint Ads for "Outside the Law'

An novel idea used by Universal to attract attention to its feature "Outside the Law," was used in New York recently, when the changing of the sign on the Mecca Building on Broadway from "To Please One Woman," to "Outside the Law" was executed by several pretty girls, attired in short skirts, smocks and tam o' shanters.

The unusual painters, and the sign they were painting attracted much attention. Various news photographers and news reel cameramen took pictures of the stunt. New York papers carried news stories of the evert.

Several exhibitors in the vicinity of New York, who have booked "Outside the Law," already have made arrangements to duplicate the stunt in front of their theatres.

Mary Minter's New Vehicle Praised

Final cutting and editing of "All Souls' Eve" have been completed for some time, and Mary Miles Minter's latest Realart picture is scheduled for early release. Realart officials who have seen the advance screening of this production are very enthusiastic in their praise, declaring that it has the calibre of a big special, and containing the best work Miss Minter has ever done.

Based on the successful stage play of the same name by Anne Crawford Flexner, "All Souls' Eve" develops the theme of a powerful love so strong that it transcends even death itself.

Pantages House Books Hodkinson Releases

A. Gugel, Hodkinson representative in New Orleans, has closed a deal with Pantages big new Louisiana theatre, New Orleans, for a full week's showing of "Pagan Love," Hugo Ballin's first independent production for Hodkinson release and a full week's showing of "The Brute Master," the J. Parker Read, Jr., production starring Hobart Bosworth.

Hodkinson Announces Releases

Lists Coming Issues Up to the End of Month of May

THE W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION has put forth a tentative release for 1921. During January the Hodkinson organization will release two comedy-dramas, "The Spenders," a Benj. B. Hampton production, and "The Truant Husband," the first independent venture of the Rockett Film Corporation. "The Spenders" is a picturization of Harry Leon Wilson's novel of the same name. "The Truant Husband" was made by the Rockett Film Corporation from Albert Payson Terhune's story which appeared in the Cosmopolitan magazine. It has been characterized by reviewers as "one of the cleverest, keenest comedies ever brought to the screen," declares W. W. Hodkinson.

In February two more releases are scheduled. First, "The Breaking Point"; then, "Partners of the Tide." "The Breaking Point" is a J. L. Frothingham production in which Bessie Barriscale is starred. In Miss Barriscale's support is seen a strong cast in which are included such popular artists as Pat O'Malley, Walter McGrail, Wilfred Lucas, Ethel Grey Terry, Joseph J. Dowling and many others. "Partners of the Tide" is Irvin Willat's second independent production for Hodkinson release. It is a sea story written by Joseph as the director of "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," is given an opportunity to handle the type of story that is popular with patrons of the screen—stories C. Lincoln, and once again Mr. Willat, who will be long remembered of the sea and its folk.

In March, Hugo Ballin's second independent production, "East Lynne," will be offered to the exhibitors as well as "The Other Woman," another J. L. Frothingham production. Much may be expected from "East Lynne" as it is said to represent Mr. Ballin's greatest work thus far, while "The Other Woman," adapted to the screen from Nora Davis' novel of the same name is a stirring mystery story to which the producer has given a fine cast. Important roles are handled by Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy and Jane Novak.

In April there will be "Keeping Up With Lizzie," another Rockett Film Corporation production made from the novel by Irving Bacheller. Incidentally this represents the first of Irving Bacheller's works to reach the screen. Another Benj. B. Hampton production, "A Certain Rich Man," from the novel by William Allen White, will also be released during this month.

In May "The Light in the Clearing," another Irving Bacheller novel, produced by the Dial Film Corporation, and directed by T. Hayes Hunter, comes to the screen, and also the first of the new Cawwood Pictures Company's productions featuring Irene Castle.

Later on in the year, other pictures are scheduled for release, among which may be mentioned "The Man of the Forest," which Ben. B. Hampton will make from Zane Grey's novel, and "The Face of the World," an Irvin V. Willat production, made from the novel by Johan Bojer, the famous international author.

The Hodkinson release list is being so arranged as to leave space for approximately six big special productions which will be selected from the independent producing field. "These productions will be chosen with the utmost care from the various pictures which are constantly offered to this company for distribution," declares W. W. Hodkinson.

Coast Critics Laud Fox Film

"Connecticut Yankee" Well Received at Pre-Release

A PRE-RELEASE run of Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the big film production that kept the William Fox production departments in a ferment of activity for several months, is now in progress at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, and the spectacle has been welcomed with a flood of commendatory reviews.

Grace Kingsley, the Los Angeles Times reviewer, has the following to say concerning the production: "Hurrah for Mark Twain and for 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court!' Then throw in a couple of hurrahs for Emmett Flynn, director, and Harry Myers, star. For, mark ye, the most brilliant comedy drama in the history of picturedom is here, and 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court' is it.

"The picture's on view at Miller's and the big audiences are fairly pulling the house down.

"'Make 'em laugh, make 'em cry, make 'em thrill,' D. W. Griffith said once; and the Yankee does all three superlatively. Its comedy has Charlie Chaplin's brilliant aliveness and great, common, human touch; it has lightning flashes of William De Mille's fine whimsy; it has moments as great as some of Griffith's own; it has touches of 'Miracle Man,' spiritual vision; and yet it is much more, for it is all Mark Twain.

"In this film Twain lives again, and, though he has gone before, has triumphed as the greatest picture story writer the world has seen. The adapter's hand, though it took some liberties—eliminating for instance, the religious satire—seems fairly inspired.

"As for the cast, that, too, seems to have been chosen with inspiration. Harry Myers is the slangy, capable, resourceful, yet chivalrous Yankee to perfection. No more appealing and soul-satisfying Sandy could have been found than Pauline Starke. William V. Mong does a superlative bit of character work as Merlin; George Siegmann is even more cleverly villainous than usual as Sir Sagramore; Charles Gordon is picture perfect and ideal as Clarence the page; Charles Clary is impressive as King Arthur; Rosemary Theby is the hard-hearted, but alluring queen to the life; and the minor parts are equally well done.

"A spectacle in which dignity, monstrous edifices and gorgeous panoply vie with a constant running comedy to keep the audience in high spirits. While the action, costumes and settings, with their unique combination of feudal customs and 1920 achievements, unite to make the ensemble one of clean, wholesome joy, unmarred by problems and illumined throughout by the master wit of the great American humorist, Mark Twain."

The reviewer of the Los Angeles Express writes:

"Retaining all the satire and subtle humor that made Mark Twain the poor of American humorists, augmented by down-to-the-minute American slang in the subtitles, embellished by sets so stupendous as to be almost bewildering, and we have William Fox's pictorial conception of Mark Twain's famous satire or royalty and aristocracy—'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court.'

"Every man and woman with American blood in his or her veins will enjoy this Fox picture. It was made especially for Yankee consumption."

The Los Angeles Record reviewer says: "Setting enthroned among the gods of laughter, Mark Twain must have heard the swelling thunder of the roaring humans at Miller's theatre last night. 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court' triumphed across the screen—a kaleidoscopic moment of rich humor, keeu satire, breath-taking adventure and touches of rare emotion."

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT PLAYERS

RUTH ROLAND, Ruth of Pathe fame, is indulging in a shopping tour mostly centered in Fifth avenue, New York, but giving the city a general survey while separated from the sunshine and roses of Hollywood.

In "A Message From Mars," Metro production in which Bert Lytell will be seen in the leading masculine role, the popular screen star will illustrate his versatility again, in the portrayal of a man steeped in selfishness, a role quite unlike anything he has previously done on the screen, and calling for an extraordinary amount of versatility and characterization. Supporting Mr. Lytell are Raye Dean, Alphonz Ethier, Maud Milton, Leonard Mudie and Gordon Ash.

Louis H. Chalif, a dancing instructor of acknowledged ability and Manhattan fame, assisted David G. Fisher in directing the dance scenes in the Fox-Fisher's production of "In the Shadow of the Dome," under the direction of Mr. Fisher.

To have stood in your own front doorway, as a little boy, and seen Jesse James, the notorious outlaw, ride by on a blooded horse, is the sort of experience to quicken the pulse of most lads, and is what is vividly remembered by the author of "Temple Dusk," the George D. Baker production for Metro, by Calvin Johnston. "Temple Dusk" was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post, and Mr. Johnston hails from the actual locale of the thrilling adventure of the James boys, having been born in Springfield, Missouri, where the James clan lived and flourished. In the hands of George D. Baker, one may expect a great deal from "Temple Dusk," and fear no disappointment.

Percy Marmont, remembered for his excellent work in the Tom Terriss production, "Dead Men Tell No Tales," in which he was co-featured with Catherine Calvert, is now playing opposite Corinne Griffith in a picture which is tentatively titled "The Correspondent," adapted from a recent "Snappy Stories" story. Mr. Marmont is favorably remembered for his work in "The Climbers," also a Vitagraph production with Miss Griffith in the stellar role. This time Mr. Marmont will be seen as a social lion, a characterization very much different from his last screen work in the Tom Terriss production. Webster Campbell will direct the picture.

May McAvoy, ingenue lead of John S. Robertson's "Sentimental Tommy," Paramount-Artcraft, whose work in the production is complete

Another player now "takes his pen in hand" and becomes a playwright, adding to his already enviable reputation as a versatile gentleman. Al Lincoln, now playing the star dual role in "Determination," is the man. A few days ago one would sum him up as college athlete, soldier and actor, but now his one-act play entitled "The Criminologist," under rehearsal, entitles him to the distinction of joining the playwright corps. George Howell will be seen in Mr. Lincoln's vaudeville offering, produced by Joseph Hart. Lincoln, besides his activities in the studios, indulges in boxing and fencing at the New York Athletic Club, daily, where he keeps in "trim" for the part.

"Without Limit," another personally directed George D. Baker production for Sawyer-Lubin, will soon be presented with a notable cast, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Schable, Thomas W. Ross, Robert Frazer, Charles Lane, Frank Currier and Kate Blancke. In "Temple Dusk," another George D. Baker production, Mr. Schable will also appear in the heavy lead. In fact, Robert Schable is one of those fortunate actors whose work recommends him for re-engagement incessantly. Soon, he will have two big releases running on Broadway, playing opposite Estelle Taylor in an important episode of "Blind Wives," and in "Paying the Piper," a George Fitzmaurice production, Mr. Schable also holds his own in an admirable way.

Personal appearance of Franklyn Farnum in Philadelphia, and in principal cities en route to the Pacific Coast, will take up the time intervening between Mr. Farnum's studio activities between his last series of pictures and the first in which he will be under the direction of Harry J. Revier.

In "Prisoners of Love," Betty Compson made her debut not only as a motion picture star, but as a producer. It also introduced her as the first actress-producer in the country.

Other stars have had their own companies, but it remained for Miss Compson to be the first to attend to every detail of the business of her producing company.

Miss Compson admits she has a natural aptitude for business and as she went to work at the age of fourteen to support herself and her widowed mother, she has had some training in money matters. But she did not rely on these qualifications only when she decided to organize her own company. She disappeared from the studios for some time and took a thorough course in a business college. This explains why Miss Compson has not been seen since she made her great success in "The Miracle Man."

Courtney Foote, distinguished stage and screen star who plays a dual role in the forthcoming Ince-Louis Vance special "The Bronze Bell," and who will shortly be seen in the leading male role in "The Passion Flower," starring Norma Talmadge, complains that his name is frequently misspelled. The end of his patience was reached recently when an unknown admirer addressed him as "Corkscrew Foote." Since Mr. Foote hails from London town, where bottled and choice liquors are not inaccessible, it annoyed him to be so rudely reminded that he is in an arid country. He also bewails the fact that someone misspelled the title of "The Bronze Bell," the picture being referred to as "The Bronze Belle"—which is quite impossible, according to the popular actor who contends that "a woman cannot be bronze, even though she may sometimes be brazen."

Leatrice Joy has been selected to play the leading feminine role in "The Night Rose," the first original screen story to be completed by Leroy Scott. It is a tale of the New York underworld upon which Mr. Scott collaborated with Arthur F. Statter in preparing the continuity for Goldwyn. Miss Joy will first finish her work in "A Tale of Two Worlds," before commencing under the direction of Wallace Worsley, who will direct "The Night Rose."

Tom Moore has taken to wearing green glasses around the studios during rehearsals. He does this, he insists, to protect his eyes against the glare of the powerful Cooper-Hewitts, the light of which has an orange tint. But there are skeptics at the Goldwyn studios, who keep referring to the fact that Mr. Moore was born in County Meath, Ireland.

Marguerite Clayton, now being seen in the Capellani feature, International, "The Inside of the Cup," at the Criterion theatre

And the other day Rupert Hughes, meeting the star as he left the set, where he had been making "Mr. Barnes of New York," took occasion to remark:

"Mr. Moore, it seems to me you are carrying your Irish prejudices too far."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

THE semi-monthly meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, held on Tuesday night, found, for the first time, Charles Miller in the chair as director. Mr. Miller was made chief executive at the last meeting, and succeeded James Vincent. A large gathering came forth to congratulate the popular new president and to sit in lodge under his direction. Mr. Miller expects to be a busy man within the next few weeks, and hesitated not in the least in telling the members that each and every one of them would be responsible for the activities and progress of the lodge in the coming year, as well as himself. "You are all busy men," said Mr. Miller, "and I, too, expect to be as busy within a very short time. But I shall not be too busy to remember that the M. P. D. A. stands for a great deal more than any of us, to date, realize and that we must all combine to the honor and glory of the profession of which we are all members. I expect to do my best to make you who have elected me glad, ultimately. For the present you may not be so glad, since I expect to find a task for each and every member of this lodge to perform and exercise my "presidential authority to see that he performs it." Incidentally, the social affairs of the M. P. D. A. may be expected to be frequent and distinctive, Mr. Miller being one in the past who has "started things" and "finished them,'. too.

Tom Terriss, director of "Tom Terriss Productions" for Vitagraph, does not wish to run in competition to any exhibitor, neighborhood or foreign, although he has arranged for the showing of favorite productions in his own home. He uses a "house equipped" projection machine and usually entertains an impormptu audience upon Sunday evenings. Recently he projected for family approval his latest productions, "Trumpet Island," "Dead Men Tell No Tales." "The Heart of Maryland" will probably be the next attraction.

Directors, too, are now among the makers of personal appearances. Harry J. Revier, who directed the much talk of serial, "The Son of Tarzan," following the success of the previous one, "The Return of Tarzan," has found, to his surprise, that he has a "fan" following. Throughout the country exhibitors have written Mr. Revier to be good enough to visit their city and make a personal appearance. That a director would take the chances so plainly evidenced by Mr. Revier's thrilling work in the latest "Tarzan" serial, has established a "hero worship." He will, therefore, en route to the Coast to make more thrilling photoplays, stop along the way to afford the motion picture going public an opportunity to see the director who made beast of the jungle "act" in the sequel serial completed by the director last November.

Bertram Millhauser, who directs productions for George B. Seitz, Pathe release, is taking a few weeks away from the megaphone, returning to his previous work, that of writing scenarios. It will be the eighth script from the pen of the writer-director, and according to Mr. Seitz, looks promising. "The Yellow Arm," a George B. Seitz production, directed by Mr. Millhauser and starring Juanita Hansen is in the last stages of preparation for release.

George Lloyd Sargent continues to direct pictures for Vitagraph and is at present building up his already well established reputation for good work, by assuming the responsibility of directing a junior star, Miss Alice Calhoun. Throughout the country, where the names of directors are not always recalled, Mr. Sargent's name, as director of "The Broadway Bubble" is immediately identified with the commendable feature.

George Melford's recently completed production, "The Faith Healer," it is said that they are expecting to see a veritably inspired performance by Milton Sills in the title role.

Frank Lloyd, director for Goldwyn, is like the man who says of course he hates to have a bad fire break out, but if it does, he wants to see it. Only Mr. Lloyd goes a step further—he wants to get pictures of it. A few days ago he had his wish. It was when the famous pier at Venice, California, burned. That is about eight miles from the Goldwyn studio at Culver City, but the fire was so intense that the flames lit the sky.

Mr. Lloyd needed some fire scenes for Gouverneur Morris' "A Tale of Two World," so Mr. Lloyd hastily left the stage where he was working and with his assistant and two cameramen, hurried to Venice. He came back with 1,000 feet of excellent film.

David M. Hartford, engaged in the making of "The Golden Snare," will be obliged to spare the valued consultation with James Oliver Curwood, whilst said Mr. Curwood goes a'fishing. Together with Ray Long and Julian Johnson, the "three huntsman" will venture upon an expedition into the frozen wastes of Northern Michigan, where they expect to spear muskelunge through the ice, and shoot at rabbits. Before starting the triangle will vow not to duplicate the balloonist wrangle, while away from electric lighted civilization.

"Good References" to Be Published as Novel

One of the very latest photoplays to be published in the form of a novel is Constance Talmadge's vehicle, "Good References." This photoplay was based on a story by E. J. Rath, being adapted for the screen by Dorothy Farnum and released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. And now W. J. Watt and Company announce that they will shortly publish "Good References" in book form.

Geo. Arliss Introduced at Pathe Luncheon

Mr. George Arliss, heralded actor of the legitimate stage, has become a full-fledged screen star, presented with all due ceremony to the trade and general press by his distinguished sponsors, Pathe. The occasion was a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, Monday, January 16, where representatives from divers publications gathered to meet the guest of honor, incidentally star of the current local attraction, "The Devil," in film-form in which he is conceded to have repeated his acknowledged success in the role upon the speaking stage.

Presented by Mr. Edward Eschmann, feature sales manager for Pathe, whose remarks must have been gratifying, indeed, even to the famed actor, Mr. Arliss himself, took the floor and in a delightful most unassuming manner made each guest feel at liberty to ask any question that might provoke an interesting description of Mr. Arliss' first experiences before the motion picture camera. He stated that it seems to him an art entirely separate from that of acting as he heretofore has applied the word, but none the less interesting nor important. He pointed out that rather than having interfered with the attendance of the public at spoken plays, the screen had increased the patronage, having brought people out of their shells who never before were on speaking terms with amusement enterprises. Thereafter, Mr. Joe Plunkett declared that Mr. Arliss had brought a few new ones out, evidently, since the attendance at the Strand theatre upon the day of his opening had broken all previous records, and that it looked like a week which would crowd the popular play house to capacity never before recorded.

Genial Joe Reddy, usually identified with Pathe functions, was unable to attend. Aside from that, the affair was a most successful occasion.

Plan for Stanley Opening

Paramount's "Forbidden Fruit" to Be Feature at Opening of Big House

THE Stanley theatre, the new $2,000,000 Mastbaum house in Philadelphia, which is soon to be opened to the public, will present as its opening attraction Cecil B. DeMille's newest Faramount special production, "Forbidden Fruit." The Stanley is unanimously conceded to be the finest amusement edifice in the Quaker City and one of the most elaborate and perfectly appointed motion picture houses in the entire country, and the selection of the DeMille picture as its opener is therefore the most pronounced tribute which could be bestowed upon any production at this time.

The decision of Jules E. Mastbaum was announced in the following night letter sent to Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, this week:

"I have just had the pleasure of witnessing the Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount masterpiece, 'Forbidden Fruit,' and am delighted to state to you that it is the unanimous opinion of the directors of the Stanley Company and myself that it is the crowning achievement of the cinema art. It is therefore gratifying to inform you we will open our magnificent $2,000,000 Stanley theatre with this production for an extended run as a fitting and appropriate testimonial to this picture, which we believe reaches the pinnacle of art in motion picture production."

"Forbidden Fruit" is from an original story and scenario by Jeanie Macpherson. The leading feminine role is played by Agnes Ayers, with Forrest Stanley in the opposite part. Prominent roles are taken by Theodore Roberts, Clarence Burton, Kathlyn Williams, Theodore Kosloff, Shannon Day, Bertram Johns and Julia Faye. Alvin Wyckoff and Karl Struss were the photographers. The costumes, said to be more elaborate than any yet seen on the screen, even in the DeMille production, were designed by Clare West; Paul Chalfin designed the settings and Theodore Kosloff staged the spectacular scenes, the whole being under the general supervision of Howard Higgins, Mr. DeMille's production manager.

A Difficult Continuity Task Well Done

Pathe presents the adaptation of Franz Molnar's play, "The Devil," to the screen as an example of perfect continuity built up on a stage production which at first sight was considered to be unqualified for ready conversion into screen form. The liberal measure of dialogue and brilliant satire found in the original stage version militated against an easy adaptation for screen purposes. "One cannot photograph dialogue, and one cannot strike a note of pessimism in the motion-picture theatre," reads the Pathe statement. "A master craftsman was needed."

Edmund Goulding was selected as the man to do the work, and, accordingly, Mr. Goulding was brought from London by Associted Exhibitors and put to the task of adapting "The Devil" to the screen. The results achieved have surpassed "his own expectations," declares the Pathe statement, and this too "without sacrificing one particle of Mr. Arliss's fine characterization of the Spirit of Evil."

Vignola Company Defies Death

Staring death in the face, and escaping by sheer luck, will, hereafter, be an easy thing for Robert G. Vignola, nationally known director to vizualize, and members of his present company to enact, collectively or individually. The reason for this sudden though perhaps disagreeable education being an accident, when a promontory upon which the director and his company were working, collapsed and slid into the sea, off the Bahama Islands, where exteriors for Mr. Vignola's Cosmopolitan-Paramount picture "Redemption Cove," were being "shot."

The accident, according to the report, occurred just outside of Nassau. The promontory, or cliff, towered fully two hundred feet and was chosen by Mr. Vigonal for some of his important scenes because it afforded the necessary thrills which he was endeavoring to secure. Consulting native fishermen, the director was assured that the cliff was safe and through an entire morning, accident was evaded. Hardly had the company resumed work, however, following a brief respite, when the ground beneath their feet began to give way and before anyone could grasp what was happening, they were falling and sliding with the loose earth into the sea. Mr. Vignola, himself an expert swimmer, rescued Seena Owen, his leading woman, and turned to assist others, but found, except for shock, there were no serious injuries, the only delay being in excavating the cameras, buried in mud, at the bottom. Others in the company who shared in the unexpected "ducking" were E. K. Lincoln, Phil Carle and Russell Mathias, assistant directors, Al Liguori, cameraman and other technical assistants.

First Nat'l Organ "The Franchise" Published

The first number of the official organ of the Associated National Pictures has just made its debut under the date of January 15th. The publication bears the title of "The Franchise." In point of general make-up, typographical style and interesting subject-matter, "The Franchise" marks a noteworthy addition to the list of organization publications already in the field.

In addition to its editorial page, "The Franchise" carries six principal departments, captioned respectively "Keeping Pace with the Leaders," "Interest Items for Your Newspaper," "Opinions of First National Attractions," "High Lights of Exploitation," "How Do You Advertise Films" and "Live News, Short Notes and Some Views." "The Franchise" is twenty pages in length and of standard trade-paper size.

Lee S. Ferguson, formerly associated with the Cincinnati office of The Billboard, later with the Motion Picture News and until recently assistant to David Selznick in the advertising and publicity department of the Selznick organization, is the editor of The Franchise.

Featuring the Future

WHILE the discussion regarding the permanency of the present "star" system, vs. its rapid decline goes merrily on, new "featured" ingenues are making appearances and in the face of the frightening situation, hesitate not for a moment in their inspired ascent.

Among these we find a new bit of femininity eager to enter into the struggle to maintain the "star system," incidentally, becoming one herself, in the tiny being known to her family. friends and admirers as Margaret Beecher.

Miss Beecher is making rapid strides towards the goal that well known stars have been led to believe is fading, little by little, and the newcomer refuses to believe that the motion picture going public will ever be robbed of seeing their favorite artists "starred." Like many famed and admired feminine players who have risen to stardom by merit of their work, alone, Miss Beecher is willing to climb. She is also desirous of bringing about her popularity in certain kinds of stories, such as simple, dramatic tales with strong human interest and stated she would rather never reach the heights than to reach via the "sex pla-" trail.

Edward Hemmer has recently produced "Sunshine Harbor," in which Miss Beecher will be seen as featured leading ingenue. Her natural qualification are encouraging, since her personality is altogether charming, her ideas and plans clear and definite.

"I have learned already that once one has mastered the tricks of technique, which one must have done before hoping for success in motion pictures, one must also be sincere in the work and to be sincere is to really love it. Of course I have learned, also, that there are many, many things necessary to success in any artistic line. One must have courage, perseverance and almost infinite patience to attain acknowledged success, but with supporting one's natural ability with untiring effort, it seems to me success is not nearly so hidden a quantity as is the popular belief."

First Impressions

By W. Somerset Maugham

AS an absolute amateur of the cinema, one who previous to arriving in Hollywood had never seen the making of a photoplay, I have been asked to present my initial impressions o fthis great motion picture industry.

I was not in Hollywood two days before I was signally impressed with the manner in which the technical side of photoplay production has run ahead o fthe stories interpreted. I found beautiful settings, marvellous lighting, camera work uncanny in its excellence, splendid direction and almost faultless acting—all wasted, in many cases, on stories lacking in truth, dramatic suspense and human interest.

Some of the writers for the screen seem to have dropped into more or less of a rut. A great success has been made, a story has scored a tremendous hit, and immediately scores of plays are produced, founded upon the same fundamental idea. This, however, is meant in no way as a criticism of film producers, for they, first of all, have realized this fault and are endeavoring to correct it. Particularly does this seem true in the case of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with whom I have just been associated. To find in their plant my old friends Edward Knoblock, Sir Gilbert Parker and Elinor Glyn emphasized the impression that new writing blood is being infused rapidly into the industry.

As for the industry as a whole, my impression is that it is tremendous beyond even my fondest dreams. The intense concentration on artistic ideals is amazing and fills one with enthusiasm. The constant endeavor toward perfection being made by thoughtful producers insures ultimate reward. Errors have been made in the past, but really sincere effort is being made toward their prevention in the future.

The possibilites of the cinema completely intrigued me during four short weeks in Hollywood and I am looking forward to my first plunge into this new and, to me, uncharted sea of dramatic expression.

Mr. Whittaker-Presented

THAT our leading scenario writers are rapidly coming into their own as authority upon subjects closely related to the production of motion pictures, and that acknowledged skill in this direction is commanding long past due recognition ,is illustrated by a recent occasion in Philadelphia, in the midst of procreative censorship.

At Temple University, there has been instituted a department, a closs for the tutoring of aspiring writers of scenarios. Here, at the request of the faculty, and the choice of those in authority, the inaugural address was delivered by Charles E. Whittaker, whose numerous worthy adaptations and original stories have won him the reputation of extreme dexterity.

The class, according to Mr. Whittaker, was most extraordinary. Not among those assembled was there a face wherein there was not a trace of earnest and determined endeavor. Not the 'student age,' but men and women of mature years, seemingly seriously intent upon their purpose." In delivering the lecture, Mr. Whittaker was provided with an opportunity to explin the author's and producer's side of the censorship question as well as to touch upon the importance of logic ,and the necessity of collaboration.

By way of illustrating some of the difficulties apt to be encountered, Mr. Whittaker pointed out "La Tosca," which, by the way, might be described as a luminous example, although among his difficult and more recent contributions, include "Kismet," "Billions" and a number of other works of acknowledged merit.

At the University Club, where Mr. Whittaker was a guest during his short stay, one interview upon another by representatives of the Philadelphia daily press monopolized his time, for not only was the assignment accepted by Mr. Whittaker to deliver the inaugural lecture of a series most unique, but the local interest doubled because of the memorial endowment. It is a permanent institution, provided by Jules Mastbaum, President of the Stanley theatres, as a tribute to his brother Stanley, whose great interest in life, in the motion picture, will be carried on by the endowment of the chair, in memorium.

Follies Girl to Head Allan Dwan Cast

Allan Dwan announces that his new "find" engaged from the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic girls, Miss Jacqueline Logan, will play the leading feminine role in his next production, "The Perfect Crime."

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"

"If you want a thrill you will find it in 'Dead Men Tell No Tales' (Washington), a cinematized version of the E. W. Hornung story of the same name. Readers of fiction know what Mr. Hornung can do. The 'Raffles' tales were by him and then this story of romance of the deep came, not as a surprise but as a fitting follow-up.

"Better screen material has rarely been prepared. The continuity is exceptionally smooth and logical, events flow evenly and with logical sequence. The suspense is admirably sustained, the cumulative force of incidents is well illustrated, the acting is unusually good, and the picturization as fine as anything seen in a long time. Catherine Calvert appears as the daughter of Santos, and a charming one she makes. George von Seyffertitz appears as Santos, and others in the cast add materially to the excellence of the offering. It is a vivid and satisfying presentation of a stirring romance of crime, but not the sort of crime that is usually associated with pictures."

GOLDWYN

Production work is starting this week on "The Bridle Path," written originally for the stage by Thomas Buchanan. E. Mason Hopper has been assigned as the director of this picture. May Collins of New York, Raymond Hatton and Stuart Holmes have been added to the cast previously named for this production.

HERE AND THERE

Lois Weber will start East this week to attend the premier showing of "What's Worth While?" The first year's output for Famous Players has now been completed by the Lois Weber forces. During her absence, the studio will be enlarged and additional features added.

The Union Film Company is making two-reel comedies featuring Alexander Alt and Helen Howell. It has contracted with Reelcraft for a series of twenty-six subjects. The first release will be made on February 12th.

On Friday of last week the studio publicity men of Los Angeles held a grand banquet at the New Ambassador Hotel.

Ben Wilson has placed Ann Little under contract for a serial production, entitled "The Blue Fox." The story was written by John Brant. Dell Henderson will direct it. The production will be released by Arrow.

Lost Balloonists Seen in International

The first news reel pictures of the return to civilization of the three Navy balloonists stranded in the Canadian Wilds, were released January 14 by the International News, in the News Reel No. 4, it is claimed by the Universal sales department, which distributes that news reel.. At the same time the reels were issued in New York City, they were forwarded by fast mail and air-mail to other parts of the country.

The pictures also include shots of the various other persons now nationally known by their participation in the lost ballon story, pictures showing the territory over which the balloon drifted, as well as an animated diagram of the entire flight.

"Edgar's Country Cousin" Is Released

"Edgar's Country Cousin" is the title of the latest addition to the "Edgar" series to be released by Goldwyn and is the story of Edgar's visit to his country cousin.

Johnny Jones as Edgar does some of the most humorous acting of his young career in this "Edgar." Edouard Trebaol gives him excellent support as his country cousin. In the cast are "Shorty" Callahan, ex-circus clown, as the hired man, and Katherine Bates as Aunt Ellen. Mason N. Litson directed.

"Should prove a big box office attraction in any theatre in any locality. There are many exploitation angles suggested in a comprehensive press book furnished by the producers.

"One of the best Vitagraph pictures in many months. Tom Terriss has plunged right into his story in the first reel and never lets up with the suspense until the last few feet of the film. The book has been faithfully followed to a marked degree.

"Catherine Calvert is a very appealing heroine and makes the most of her role. George von Seyffertitz as Santos gives a remarkable performance. Holmes E. Herbert makes Rattray the best role of his screen career. Percy Marmont, as Cole, gets all that is possible out of a fine part. Roy Applegate handles the role of Captain Harriss to advantage. Walter James is well cast as the Portuguese, and gives a good performance. Bernard Seigel and India Wakara give good performances in two supporting roles. The production is well built. It should prove a winner."

Merger?

Wild rumors afloat.

H. Abrams is coming to town.

Associated and United means together.

Tom Ince was in conference this week.

Doug Fairbanks had a conference this week.

Conferencing was enjoyed by J. Parker Reid.

Marshall Neilan missed the conference—being East.

Up to the moment we put Hokum to press on our Underwood no papers had been signed. Maybe a merger—maybe not.

Oscar Price is still in town.

Allen Holubar is still in New York.

Lon Chaney has his make-up case at Goldwyn.

Sidney Franklin continues to produce "Courage."

Charlie Ray is directing himself in "The Midnight Bell."

How does it come that Fred Warren was not out on the coast to attend a conference.

E. Mason Hopper is now making "The Bridle Path," which will be news to a good many of his friends.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran threaten to become criminals, for they are working in a film named "Bootlegging."

We are advised this week that Stroheim and Company are coming back from Monterey, Cal., where they have been working on "Foolish Wives."

Buster Keaton maintains that even actors and actresses are entitled to vacations. Whereupon a sage rises up and inquires what else do they have?

John Stahl is back on the coast and says he is going to stay out West, and have his name put on pictures known as John Stahl Productions.

The name of Al Nathan we finds signed to a letter written on a letterhead from Drascena Productions and below Al's signature is typed Supervising Director.

Rollin Sturgeon was convinced the other day that the longest sentence in the English language is also the shortest one for he was told that it consisted of the word "life."

A new Assistant Director was sent to Suite 2 in the Administration Building at Universal City to get the wind machine. Arriving there he found Charles Hertzman, chief of the Publicity Dept.

Bebee Daniels got pinched this week for allowing her car to run too fast in Orange County. The car is said to have a beautiful cut glass flower vase, make-up box n'everything, which may have something to do with its ability to get Bebee in trouble.

Louis B. Mayer gave a dinner Tuesday night to the public, fan and trade press and received no regrets. Covers were laid in the banquet room of the Alexandria and all ate heartily. After the food they feasted their vision on "The Woman in His House," and a good time was had by all, which is more favorable criticism.

Samuel Goldwyn gave a party this week, entertaining 25 guests at dinner and then showed them what he termed the greatest picture ever produced by a single artist, which is titled "The Kid." There was a lot of the hoipoli there, including Charlie Chaplin, Will Rogers, and a number of story writers, who recently were edged into our industry. A complete list would contain the names of Gertrude Atherton, Sir Gilbert Parker, Elinor Glyn, Gouverneur Morris, Rupert Hughes, Edward Knoblock, LeRoy Scott, J. G. Hawks, Abraham Lehr, Mabel Reginald Barker, and others. Normand, Elsie Ferguson,

Paramount Lists Its Features

Releases Up to September Are Named by Company

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has completed its schedule of Paramount feature releases through next August, the end of the current motion picture year. The greater proportion of these productions have already been completed and of the remainder all are either now in the making or in immediate contemplation.

In announcing the completed schedule, in which there is likely to be few if any changes, Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution, said: "This imposing list of productions, following those for January and February concerning which exhibitors already have been informed, furnishes the strongest kind of evidence of the good faith of the Paramount organization when it promised exhibitors prior to last September that they would be assured a constant supply of pictures of the highest box-office value throughout the year 1920-21."

First on the list for March is the George Melford special production, "The Faith Healer," from the novel by the late William Vaughan Moody, which Jesse L. Lasky declared, on his recent arrival in New York from the Coast, to be the equal of George Loane Tucker's production, "The Miracle Man." Also on the list for March is Hugh Ford's production of Henry Arthur Jones' "The Call of Youth," made at the London Famous Players studio; Thomas Meighan in Blair Hall's story, "The Easy Road"; the Cosmopolitan production, "Straight Is the Way," a crook story with Matt Moore in the leading role; William S. Hart in his own Western production, "O'Malley of the Mounted"; the Robert Z. Leonard special, "The Gilded Lily," starring Mae Murray; Dorothy Dalton in "The Teaser"; and the Thomas H. Ince-Joseph Vance special, "Beau Revel."

April will bring William De Mille's production of Sir James M. Barrie's play, "What Every Woman Knows"; Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "The Dollar a Year Man"; Marion Davies in the Cosmopolitan production "Buried Treasure"; John S. Robertson's special production of Sir J. M. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy"; William D. Taylor's special production of Augustus Thomas's play, "The Witching Hour"; Douglas MacLean in the Ince production, "The Home Stretch"; Wallace Reid in "The Love Special" and adaptation of Frank H. Spearman's story, "The Daughter of a Magnate"; and Hugh Ford's London-made production, "The Great Day."

In May there will be Thomas Meighan in "The Quarry"; the Cosmopolitan production, "Proxie"; George Melford's production of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master"; William S. Hart in "The Whistle"; Sidney Chaplin in his own production, "King, Queen, Joker"; Dorothy Gish in "Oh, Jo"; the Lois Weber production, "What's Worth While"; Gloria Swanson in "The Great Moment," the story Elinor Glyn wrote for her; and Elsie Ferguson in an adaptation of the Arnold Bennett play, "Sacred and Profane Love," produced by William D. Taylor.

The June list includes Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "The Traveling Salesman"; the Cosmopolitan production, "The Wild Goose"; Thomas Meighan in "Billy Kane;" the Thomas H. Ince-Louis Joseph Vance special "The Bronze Bell"; Douglas MacLean in the Ince production, "One a Minute"; Donald Crisp's London-made production, "Appearances," by Edward Knoblock; Ethel Clayton in "Sham," and William De Mille's production of an Edward Knoblock story, the title of which has not yet been definitely decided upon.

In July there will be Lois Weber's production, "Married Strangers"; Marion Davies in the Cosmoplitan production, "The Bride's Play"; Wallace Reid in "Watch My Smoke"; Dorothy Dalton in "In Men's Eyes"; the London Famous Players production, "The Mystery Road," directed by Paul Powell, who produced "Pollyanna"; Billie Burke in a picture as yet untitled; a Charles Maigne special production tentatively titled "The Lifted Veil," and Gloria Swanson in "Everything for Sale," an original story by Hector Turnbull.

For August there are scheduled the Cosmopolitan production, "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," directed by Frank Borzage, who made "Humoresque"; William S. Hart in "Traveling On" and others.

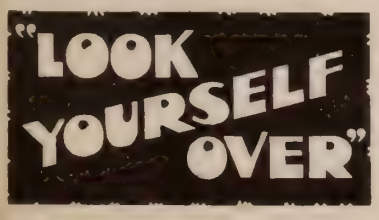
Howard Riehl, formerly with Associated Producers in Buffalo has joined the Dooley exchange sales staff, according to an announcement by John M. Sitterly, branch manager. Mr. Riehl will cover the western part of the state. Mr. Sitterly reports business booming on the new Neal Hart subjects. Olive Tell in "Woman's Business," has been booked by Mr. Sitterly for an extended presentation in the Palace theatre soon.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, is confined to his home with an attack of grippe. During his illness, the two North Main street theaires, are being managed by Art Young of the Nu-Art Pictures, who is at the Central Park each evening.

DeMille's newest production, "Forbidden Fruit," will have its world premiere in Shea's Criterion, the week of January 23, according to an announcement by Harold B. Franklin, managing director. "The Devil," also received its "world premiere" in the Criterion last week and did such big business that it was held for a second week. Buffalo is fast taking its place as a "world premiere" city. Broadway, beware!

G. E. Dickmon, Nu-Art salesman, fell while in one of the Southern Tier cities last week, injuring himself so seriously that he will be confined to his home for several weeks. Mr. Dickmon was formerly with First National.

T. R. Gardiner announces the coming to Buffalo on February 7, of Richard C. Fox, former manager of the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange, as general sales manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc.



CONNECTICUT

Joseph Healy, for the past five years manager of the Princess theatre on Riverside avenue, Bristol, Con., has resigned to enter the automobile business in that city with his brother-in-law, John Madden.

Fred G. Carney has taken over the management of Fox's theatre at New Britain, Conn. He was formerly in charge of that theatre, later serving in a similar capacity at the Lyceum theatre in that city.

George M. Fine, formerly manager and lessee of the Bradley theatre at Putnam, Conn., later lessee of a motion picture house at New London, Conn., has bought a part interest in Bowman Brothers' Blue Grass Minstrels and will be in charge of the business and financial end.

To determine whether construction throughout is in strict compliance with the building laws and under the belief that the south wall should be re-inforced, Building Inspector Benjamin R. Linicus has temporarily held up work on the new motion picture house being constructed on Bank street for the Walter T. Murphy Amusement Company of New London, Conn.

CLEVELAND

The Universal Film exchange of Cleveland was host to more than 150 northern Ohio exhibitors this week. There was "open house" at the exchange, with cigars being freely passed around. The projection room was the busiest room in the office, with films being screened constantly. There was no special reason for the gathering, other than to promote the spirit of friendliness between the exhibitors and the exchange, and to screen the newest Universal releases for the exhibitors.

Adolph Mahrer, for many years treasurer of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, died suddenly on the fifteenth of December. Mr. Mahrer was in apparently good health at the last monthly meeting of the organization and made a complete report on the financial status of the association. His death came as a distinct shock to the members.

Neighborhood motion picture theatres have registered a grievance before the Grievance Committee of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Association complaining that motion picture programs are being shown in schools for paid admissions. The King theatre, East 79th street, was particularly anxious for the League to take some action to stop the spreading of non-theatrical motion picture shows.

Leo Selznick has been named office manager of the Phil Selznick Productions Cleveland office, 318 Erie building. Alex Winter is now handling the city sales of "County Fair," "Trail's End" and "Women Men Love" all released by Phil Selznick Productions.

E. M. Frankinl, representing the American Films in Ohio reports that "Blue Moon" is going over very well in this territory. It opened to big business at the Standard theatre, Cleveland, several weeks ago, and is booked to appear at the leading first-run houses of Ohio, including the Lyceum, Canton; Dreamland, Akron; and Regent, Youngstown. "Light Women," one of the newest American films, will play its first Ohio engagement at the Strand theatre, Akron.

SAN DEIGO

Jack B. Gillis has succeeded William Stammler as house manager at the Broadway—one of the Bush theatres. E. W. S. Delacour is the new auditor for the Bush theatres, succeeding Erle V. Doherty, who has gone with James B. Mason, as manager for the California and the Dream.

Stuart Taber, editor of The Chain of Blue, the house organ of the Bush theatres, occasionally breaks into the "big league" publications, such as Life, in which his verse and dialogues are to be seen now and then.

As an added feature for a recent week the Superba management presented Miss Hazel Stallings, one of the country's foremost whistlers. She appeared at the Superba once before and proved a strong attraction.

CANADA

The City of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has adopted a film exchange by-law which will make it necessary for all exchanges of the city to be established in a fireproof structure, having approved vaults and ventilation, before October 1, 1921. The law was adopted after assurance had been secured from exchange interests that a brand new building would be available for film offices by next fall. Each film company using the new structure will be required to pay an annual tax to the municipality of $25 and the by-law provides for regular inspections of the building.

Mr. Joseph Lieberman, formerly manager of the Fox Film Corporation at Calgary, Alberta, has been appointed manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Select Pictures Corporation, Limited.

Mr. A. M. Wilbur of Winnipeg, formerly with the Vitagraph and Select in Winnipeg, has become a local distributor of theatre supplies, having accepted an agency of the Rialto company of Minneapolis.

Mr. Archie Laurie, formerly theatre supervisor with the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, has joined the sales force of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Toronto, distributor of Pathe releases.

The Canadian Aero Film Company, Limited, 39 Queen street East, Toronto, has added to its personnel by the appointment of Mr. G. A. Sampson as secretary-treasurer of the company and by the engagement of Mr. W. W. Miller as chief of the laboratory department.

The Montreal branch of the Canadian Universal Film Company has moved to Albee Building, the new and large moving picture exchange structure which is now practically completed. Mr. F. D. Leduc succeeded Mr. Phil Hazza as manager of the Montreal office of the Universal, Mr. Hazza having organized the Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited.

PORTLAND, ORE.

C. S. Jensen, senior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, has been named a member of the general committee from the Portland Rotary club of which he is a member, to help put on an entertainment February 1, funds gained thereby going to a children's hospital.

Tickets to this entertainment are all one price, $10 each. The affair will take place in the municipal auditorium which has a seating capacity of 3,500. Already more than $3,000 tickets have been sold.

A. C. Raleigh, a respectable bachelor, is making a bid for trouble, according to his married film row friends. Mr. Raleigh is the editor of Screenland, the official Jensen and Von Herberg theatre house organ. In this week's issue he plans to start what will be known as the children's page. He has obtained some exceptionally artistic photographs of local children with which he will open the page. Portland mothers will be invited to send in photos of their offspring to decorate this page for future issues.

Charles Miller who since last summer has been house superintendent of the Columbia theatre, will be assistant manager of the Rivoli theatre under John Stille, his new duties commencing at that house immediately.

Illness last week prevented C. S. Jensen from accompanying his partner, J. G. Von Herberg, East. Mr. Von Herberg is now en route to New York where he will attend an important meeting of the Associated First National Pictures directors.

"BLACK BEAUTY"

(From Exhibitor's Trade Review)

With a charming star and a splendid cast, coupled with a story so very human that few people will fail to admire it, "Black Beauty" looms large on the horizon of 1921 with promise of outliving this year and other years on the exhibitor's books. This production has splendid advertising and exploitation details, with several decades of book publication to enhance its value. Mr. and Mrs. Chester have added something of sweetness to the love story of Jessie and the Vicar's son, but the valued things in the book are retained. The horse race at the close of the picture is a thrilling climax and splendidly staged.

DETROIT

John H. Kunsky has purchased the state rights on "Isobel" or "The Trail's End" and will launch it at the Madison with a big advertising campaign.

Phil Gleichman has sold his interests in the Majestic theatre to the Majestic Operating company and will devote most of his time to the erection of a new house which goes up in the business district this spring.

The Drury Lane theatre management has adopted a first-run full week policy, starting off this week with Pauline Frederick in "A Slave of Vanity."

Detroit and Michigan exhibitors are co-operating in every respect to make Wednesday, January 26, a great Hoover day. In many of the theatres the employes have donated their salaries for the day to the fund.

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association now has a membership of 488. This is 72 per cent of the exhibitors in the state.

The safe of the Majestic theatre was robbed by yeggmen last week and $500 in change money secured.

Sid Lawrence has resigned as manager of the Ferry Field theatre, going to Newark, N. J. Will M. Elliott has succeeded him.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Jesse Jones of Houston, Texas, and John T. Jones of Dallas, Texas, will soon start the building of a new million dollar theatre on Elm street between Harwood and St. Paul streets, Dallas, Texas. The house will be the largest in the South, seating over 2,000 persons.

Other property owned by Jones Brothers on film row will be improved in the near future and a twelve-story building will soon be begun on Commerce and Prather streets to be used for a film exchange building.

The Palace theatre at Cherokee, Okla., has been closed down indefinitely for want of patronage, the management announces.

Fire in the operating room of the Dreamland theatre at Indianola, Okla., caused a bit of excitement on the opening night. No one was hurt and the damage was slight.

A $7,500 pipe organ will be installed in the opera house at Vernon, Texas, in the near future.

The Snyder Opera House was destroyed by fire at Snyder, Texas, last week. A loss of $25,000, which was not covered by insurance, was sustained.

The Best theatre at Bonham, Texas, suffered heavy loss by fire at Bonham, Texas, last week. The water did most of the damage.

Bandits held up the picture show at Picher, Okla, at 8 P. M. one evening last week. At the point of guns they forced the cashier to empty the afternoon and evening receipts into a large suitcase. They then robbed two stores and made their escape.

NEW ORLEANS

Maurice Barr, manager of the Saenger Amusement Company's New Orleans theatre, was elected commander of the Alvin Callendar post of the American Legion last week.

Motion-picture theatres violating the fire laws of the city are to be the objects of special investigation by an inspector working under the direction of the fire board. An inspector will investigate complaints and make inspections of fire hazards. Fire Commissioner Fitzpatrick asked for the appointment.

J. H. Majeau, president, and Wyndham Robertson, secretary and treasurer, have incorporated under Louisiana laws The General Theatre Supply Company with a capital of $40,000. It is to open for business February 2 at 300 Dauphine street. It will deal in motion picture machines, opera chairs, generating sets, electric lights, and will cater to churches and colleges and schools. Carroll B. Walmsley is a director of the company.

E. A. Schiller, representative of the Loew interests passed through New Orleans Tuesday enroute to Honolulu enjoying his first real vacation since he was fourteen years of ago. He is accompanied by Mrs. Schiller and will sail from San Francisco January 26. He will be absent three months.

The Saenger Amusement Company "dads" blew their employes to a swank banquet December 29, to ease the old year off. "Papa" Clarke, the toastmaster, didn't call time until 11 P. M. More than 300 persons were present, including besides the Saenger family of New Orleans, Ivy Kittredge, city attorney, President Bouden of the Whitney bank, Charles Rosen, theatrical managers, film exchange managers, and some particular buddies of the organization. The feminine loveliness would have made the Aurora Borealis jealous.

The Saenger Amusement Company gave its colored employes a Christmas dinner at the Astoria Hotel, 237 South Rampart, Wednesday night. There were sixteen members of the Saenger Company and each member was allowed to bring one member of his family.

PITTSBURGH

The Duquesne theatre which opened last November under the management of John P. Harris as a picture house, has closed its doors.

"Way Down East" is now in its fourth week at the Sam S. Shubert theatre and enjoying prosperous business.

Harry Wimsatt is the representative of the Stoll Film Corporation here.

Harry E. Reiff, Hodkinson manager, has refused an offer to tour the country with a concert company. Mr. Reiff was formerly a singer of note.

Isadore O'Brien has been added to the Pathe selling staff.

Sam Fleishman had a screen test recently and is seriously contemplating entering the movies.

Bill Graney and Mary Novak have been promoted to the posts of booker and assistant-booker of Pathe offices.

With a population of 25,000, Sharon, Pa., boasts five picture theatres, and two more are nearing completion. Claffey Brothers are erecting a theatre seating 1,800 that will house pictures and vaudeville, and Potter and Minton of Erie will open their new theatre next fall with a capacity of 2,100.

Manager Best of the Best theatre, is making extensive improvements at Albion, Pa., that will give him one of the best equipped houses in northern Penna.

Walter Silverberg, manager of the Mercer Square theatre, Greenville, Pa., contemplates a tour around the world beginning February 1. Mr. Silverberg states that when he returns to Greenville he will inaugurate many new ideas that he intends picking up abroad.

On February 1, the new Denman theatre will open at Girard, Pa., under the management of Fred Wright. This new theatre erected at a cost of $65,000, has a seating capacity of 500, a stage that is ample for any stage production and a building that will stand as a monument to Denman Thompson who was born in Girard. The policy of the new theatre is to play feature pictures and traveling attractions.

The claim that one out of every five moving picture projection machine operators in the Province of Ontario is suffering from lung trouble as a result of poor ventilation of theatre booths was laid before Hon. Walter Rollo, Ontario Minister of Labor and Health, on January 14 by a deputation representing Toronto Local 173, Moving Picture Machine Operators, in asking for legislation to compel all theatre owners to provide approved ventilation of projection rooms and to install drinking water facilities in all booths.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

All records for the Providence Opera House have been broken. This is a theatre that has always played to the legitimate at top prices. "Way Down East," the big D. W. Griffith spectacle has smashed all high marks, having played one week to $13,076.50. The record has been achieved largely through the efforts of Bert McKenzie, manager, and W. L. Malley, press representative for D. W. Griffith. The picture rounds out its fourth week Saturday night, and will go into the fifth week Monday. Providence has gone wild over the film and packed houses are the order.

At a meeting on January 16th, the Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators' Union installed the following officers: president, A. N. Decker; vice-president, M. L. Tripp;; recording secretary, Fred W. Newcomb; financial secretary and treasurer, Fred Friend; business agent, Edward J. Kenneally; Sergeant-at-arms, Ralph Fields.

The first moving picture star to visit Providence, R. I., in nearly five years, arrived on January 17, and it was none other than Bert Lytell, the Metro star, who visited the city as the guest of William J. Mahoney, manager of the Rialto and Martin R. Toohey, manager of the Emery theatres. At every visit he made at the two theatres—two to each—the play houses contained every mortal soul that could be crowded into them, and keep within the fire regulations. And there were more waiting outside to get a glimpse of their "hero." It proved that Lytell has hosts of friends in this town. Even the Hotel Dreyfus where he put up while here sold every dinner seat, so anxious were people to see him.

Palmer Slocum, well known in theatrical and motion picture circles of Cleveland fell from the sixteenth story of the unfinished Hanna building through an elevator shaft last Friday afternoon. His death was instantaneous. Mr. Slocum has been more influential in flavoring local motion picture exploitation with originality, than any other local man in the same field. He was associated alternately with The Cleveland Press, The Cleveland Plain Dealer and manager of the Grand and Priscilla theatres. Of late Mr. Slocum has been specializing in theatre advertising, and was handling the publicity work of most of the legitimate and first run motion picture theatres in Cleveland. He was thirty-six years old and married.

Loew's new Park theatre, Euclid avenue and East 101st street, opens Saturday, January 22nd. The opening attraction will be the Paramount feature "Burglar Proof," co-starring Lois Wilson and Bryant Washburn. The Park promises to be the largest and most elaborate motion picture house up to date, and universal interest has been created over the opening by the advance notices of the opening, which have been given prominent space in newspapers and bill boards for the past three months.

NEW YORK STATE

W. L. Beebe, manager of the Candor theatre in Candor, N. Y., in the Southern Tier, has leased the Lyric theatre in Deposit, N. Y. He has reopened the house, which has been closed for a time, with the best obtainable in film entertainment.

Albert A. Fenyvessy, Rochester exhibitor, starts the New Year with an offer to provide motion picture entertainment at his own expense in the homes of the sick and invalided of the city. Mr. Fenyvessy operates the Strand, Rialto and Family theatres in Rochester.

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"'Black Beauty' characterized by thrills and extravagant production."

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd."

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized."

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its 'human' theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."

Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake Is Complete in Appointments

Fire Protection, Ventilation and Lighting Have Been Given Attention

THE new Pantages theatre of Salt Lake which has just opened has cost $500,000 and the ground was broken for the foundations November 3, 1918. From the Main street entrance to the back of the stage the structure is 295 feet long. From the entrance to the lobby is 175 feet. The lobby is 35 by 48 feet and the foyer is 10 by 88. The auditorium is 95 by 88 and the stage is 30 feet deep and 88 feet wide. It is 68 feet from the orchestra pit to the dome. B. Marcus Priteca was the architect.

The projection room contains two Simplex machines and was designed by Vance Bartlett, special designer for Mr. Pantages, who resides in Seattle. There is a throw of 120 feet to the screen. There is an extra set of everything used in projection so that if anything goes wrong the current can be immediately thrown into the extra set and the pictures will not be delayed. The switchboard is so arranged that the operator cannot come in contact with any live metal parts. A special generating set is provided to furnish the current for the moving picture machines.

The fans for exhausting the foul air are located in the attic and are directly connected with individual motors. A special switchboard is provided for the control of these fans.

The stage lighting consists of several distinctive features; the footlights are so designed to effect the greatest possible projection of light onto the stage with a minimum amount of glare on the actors, and entirely hidden from view of the audience. They are constructed of heavy cast iron base with heavy sheet metal reflecting surfaces scientifically formed and shaped.

The strip lights or side lights on the stage are likewise the result of study and experimental work and are a new departure. There are sixteen floor and wall pockets which are provided for the purpose of attaching a special apparatus used with the various acts and for providing spot lights, flood lights, colored lights, etc. Two of these pockets are in the orchestra pit and two in the gallery. Additional standard plug receptacles are on each side and at the rear of the stage near the floor and near the top of the proscenium. The main auditorium lighting consists mainly of thousands of special electric lamps concealed in the ornamental plaster work of the main ceiling.

Fire alarm service is provided on both sides of the stage, in the operating booth, in the foyer, in the basement and in the main entrance. These are directed to the central fire station. The exit lights, passage lights, foyer lights, entrance lights, etc., are controlled from a separate switch panel, located in the foyer near the manager's office, and are so arranged that they cannot be turned out by the operator on the stage.

The Marquise lights and all lights on the front of the building, including the main sign, are controlled by a small push button switch located near the front entrance. The stage switchboard contains seventy-five switches and is so arranged and interconnected that any one light or any number of lights or all lights can be handled by a single operation. For instance, there is an individual switch for each circuit, for each color and an additional master for all stage lights.

There are twenty dimmers on the stage switchboard, which are for the purpose of reducing the candle power on all stage lighting and are of such capacity that the stage can be gradually increased from absolute darkness to sunlight brightness within a few seconds, yet the dimmers are so arranged that one light or all lights can be dimmed or brightened by the operation of a single handle.

A mammoth dimmer is provided to control the main auditorium lights, and is of such size as to require gears and chain to operate. A special control apparatus is provided to operate the electrical letters on either side of the stage, announcing the acts. Call buttons are provided on the stage board, so that the stage manager can instantly call any of the dressing rooms or operating room. This stage switchboard is made of two-inch marble slab, is ten feet wide and eight feet high. The cost without installation was $4,000.

There are 52,000 feet of electrical conduit, or approximately ten miles, ranging in size from one-half inch diameter to four inches diameter. The conduit is all placed in the concrete and masonry construction of the building. The greatest care and ability was necessary to locate the outlets in the rough construction so that they would be in their exact position as regards the centers of rooms, panel work, etc., when the final plastering and painting was in place. The conduit was completely installed and the plastering of the building completed before any of the wires were pulled in.

There are some 185,000 feet of wire, or approximately thirty-five miles, ranging in size from 11-64th of an inch to one and three-quarter inches in diameter. After the conduit was all in place and the plastering completed and dry so as to prevent any moisture collecting in the pipe, the wires were pulled in the conduit by means of pushing a flat steel wire through the conduit and attaching the wires thereto and pulling them in.

After the wires are pulled in they must be individually tested and tagged and then inter-connected so that the current will flow as intended. There were approximately 22,000 connections necessary to complete the circuits. There are 5,675 electric lamps in the installation, consuming approximately 280,000 watts, or 270 horse-power, per hour. There is a total of 175 horse-power in motors for the mechanical equipment, ranging in size from one-quarter to thirty horse-power.

The current is brought into the building by means of direct lines coming from the Utah Power & Light Company's central station to the main switchboard, which is located in the basement. The demand for service was so great that the distributing lines of the power company were not sufficiently large to accommodate this installation. There are three separate feeder lines or services supplying the building, namely, power service, general lighting service and emergency lighting service. The emergency service is so arranged that in case of a failure of the regular service sufficient light will be provided for the occupants to be either seated or let out of the building.

The main switchboard contains the enormous main line switches which control all of the power and light in the building, and twenty sub-feeder or branch line switches to control the various distributing panels and switchboards throughout the building.

The decorative scheme of the theatre is in the period of late Roman and early Italian renaissance. The color motif throughout is "Du Barry" gray to bring out in sharp relief the carved enrichments; the background styling in warm gray tones; the whole highlighted in gold.

The fruit and floral enrichment are brought out in natural polychrome colors. The cherubim, the great frieze, the cartouches, the capitols, the columns and other major enrichments are executed in dull Roman gold with burnished gold highlighting, with pick-in colors of dull primates for a background.

The great dome has for its features, in addition to the art glass panel, two figural groups, an allegory of the Drama and Music on a field of colored sky with four ornamental corner pieces representing a conventional idea of the tragic mask. The whole is multicolored with mosaics of colors and burnt gold encaustic.

The ceiling and walls of the rear balcony are done in tones of burnt orange and fawn gray, with conventional panel and frieze decorations. The wall panels in the auditorium proper are done in arabesques, a replica in color and design of the arabesque panels by Raphael now hanging in the Sistine chapel in the Vatican at Rome. The balcony ceiling diamond grill panels are in burnt orange, the carved ornament being in gray and gold. The curved ceiling panels are in warm gray and the conventional ornamentation.

Remodelling Adds to Glens FallsTheatre

NO effort has been spared on the part of the O. H. Stacy Amusement Company of Albany to make their most recently acquired playhouse, the Empire Theatre of Glens Falls, one of the most beautiful and up-to-date homes of high-class stage and photoplay attractions in northern New York. Approximately $45,000 was expended during the three months' recess from July to October 2, when the renovated and remodeled theatre was opened to the public under the management of Charles Greenstone, former manager of the Majestic theatre of Albany. Up until last July the Empire was conducted under the management of the Cohoes Amusement Company, of which L. A. Buettner was general manager, and John Fitzgerald, manager of the Glens Falls house.

The statement made in regard to the Empire now being one of the most beautiful playhouses in northern New York asserts itself in the harmony in which everything is arranged from the outer lobby to the rear of the back stage and from the orchestra circle to the second gallery. The institution of a large smoking room for the men in the rooms formerly occupied by the office is one of the big features of the improvement work. The room is done over to match the blue and gray color scheme of the theatre and will have one entrance from the inner lobby and one from the street.

Beautifully finished oak doors have been put in place of the iron gates in the outer lobby, with gold and black curtains draped over the plate glass door panels. Black marble casings have been placed around the floor walls, while the four walls in the lobbies are set off with gold leaf and trimming effects in gray and blue. In the inner lobby gold frames have been placed around the walls for the announcing of forthcoming attractions. The display window in the lobby of the adjoining footwear store has also been trimmed with a gold frame and finished off in gray and blue to match the hall.

Swinging from the inner lobby to the rear of the orchestra circles are large oaken portals with plate glass on the inner side and mirrors on the outer. All the windows in the hallways and smoking rooms have been curtained with gold and blue to match the lobby. The lower floor and balcony have been recarpeted to match the decorations of old ivory and blue, while the railings along the back of the balcony and orchestra circle have been covered with dark blue plush. A complete new system of wiring and an entire new steam heating system has been installed in the theatre, while around the walls of all three floors new light fixtures of a candle design have been placed. New seats have been put in the orchestra circle, while in the balcony the seats have been done over in gray.

Along with the previously mentioned innovations a new moving picture booth has been erected and two new Simplex moving picture machines installed along with a new spot lamp. An abundance of new scenery has been secured for back stage, a new floor built, entire new stage outfittings consisting of ropes and drop, new foot and border lamps, a new asbestos drop curtain of beautiful design and a new $2,000 Steinway piano has been installed. The dressing rooms have been renovated and the orchestra pit enlarged and put into excellent condition.

The Morris Kantrowitz Contracting Company of Albany was in charge of the work. John H. Cover of New York was the scenic artist, J. W. Gonyea construction engineer and Jesse J. Dennick painter and decorator.

Theatres Planned in Troy, N. Y.

Gaspare Battaglia, of Troy, N. Y., who already runs two motion picture theatres in that city, has just purchased a plot of ground and will erect another house in the near future. The new one will seat about one thousand.

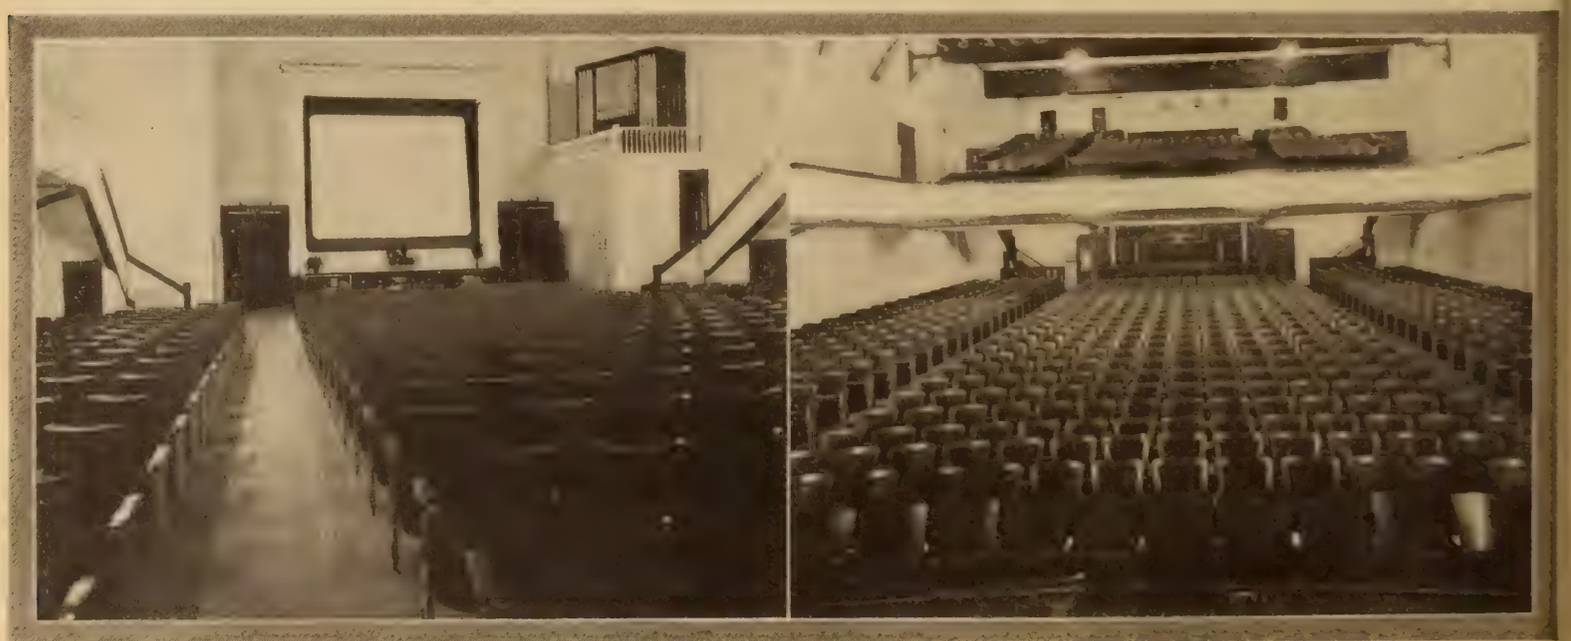
M. and J. Weinstein, of Troy, have also bought a piece of land in Fourth street, and according to report, plan to build a motion picture theatre in the spring.

New Orpheum Theatre, Akron, Ohio

THE New Orpheum theatre of Akron, which opened on October 22, is the third motion picture house in the state operating under the ownership of the Botzum Brothers. The Dreamland of Akron and the Strand of Canton also belong to the Messrs. Botzum.

The New Orpheum is one of the largest motion picture houses of Akron, and offers seating capacity for 1,500 people. Of this, one thousand seats are on the main floor, and the remaining five hundred seats are in the balcony. The balcony is particularly well built, and is so graded as to give almost perfect vision from all parts, to the screen.

The New Orpheum follows the construction of the legitimate theatres more closely than do the average picture houses. It has considerably more width than depth, wide aisles, all of which are heavily carpeted, and simple but ornate decorations.

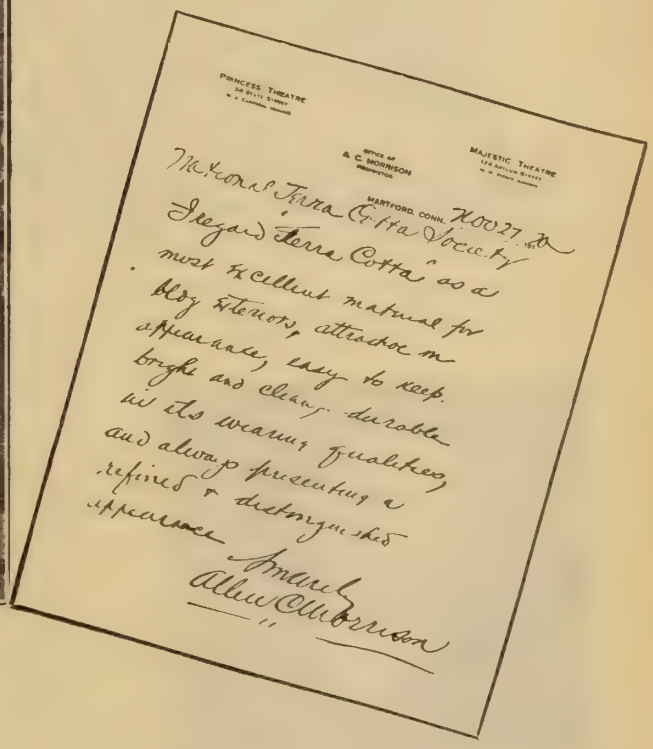


The lobby of the New Orpheum deserves special mention. It is all white marble, and except for the lobby frames, presents a formal appearance. This lobby is 40 feet long and 12 feet wide.

The opening attraction was "Once to Every Woman." However, the day before the official opening, Messrs. Botzum gave a private exhibition of his house and of the picture, "Once to Every Woman," to fourteen hundred invited guests. The accompanying photograph was taken on the night of the private showing.

The New Orpheum is one of the most modern houses in the state. All technical equipment was furnished by the Argus Company of Cleveland, including two Simplex projection machines, bead screen, and an elaborate stage setting. A fourteen-piece orchestra is one of the big features of the house, and serves as a fitting accompaniment to the high-class superfeature productions which will be shown exclusively at the New Orpheum.

Notes from San Diego



The Bush Theatres opened their latest addition to their string of motion picture houses—the Vista—at East San Diego on December 22nd, with a seating capacity of 600. The seating arrangement is somewhat unique in that it consists of benches upholstered in silver gray denim, the benches having backs and being located 36 inches apart, thus affording easy exit and ingress without disturbing seated patrons. The interior decorations of the house match the seating arrangement in color effect. The Vista uses the latest type of Argus mazda projection equipment, with a Hoffman curtain.

No attempt at gaudy or fanciful decorations has been made in the Barcli, Schenectady, N. Y., yet it is attractive and gives a sense of comfort

PRINCESS THEATRE
HARTFORD, CONN.
White Glaze Terra Cotta L. D. BAYLEY, Architect

Summed Up by a Veteran Exhibitor

Mr. Morrison writes us as a veteran exhibitor: "I regard Terra Cotta as a most excellent material for building exteriors; attractive in appearance; easy to keep bright and clean; durable in its wearing qualities; and always presenting a refined and distinguished appearance."

Although his Princess Theatre is ten years old, it doesn't look it. A wash of the Terra Cotta with soap and water occasionally is all it has cost Mr. Morrison to preserve this bright, attractive appearance.

But that's a minor virtue compared to the beauty of form and color, practically without limit, which are at your architect's command in Terra Cotta. No other facing material can offer you the same opportunity of making your house the feature theatre of your city.

We have a beautifully illustrated brochure, "The Theatre", which will be sent you on request. It is full of photographs of many of America's finest theatres, all executed in Terra Cotta. Write for it to National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Sun-Light Arc Official Returns from Europe After Studying Conditions

Believes Foreign Producers Must Apply American Methods to Bring Products Up to Standard

MR. J. JUSTICE HARMER, president of the Sun Light Arc Corporation, has recently returned from England after spending several months there and on the continent. Mr. Harmers trip was one of business, he having made the journey across to gain a first hand knowledge of motion picture studio conditions in European countries and incidentally to investigate the operation of the many Sun Light Arc installations in the studios. In the relatively short time during which he was away, Mr. Harmer inspected in detail practically all the producing centers and consequently is well qualified to speak on the subject. In an interview with the NEWS representative he talked freely of conditions as he found them and did not hesitate to give his opinions as to the cause and remedy.

J. Justice Harmer, President and General Manager, Sun Light Arc Corp.

London studios, said Mr. Harmer, are not up to the mark in the production of motion pictures. The reason is that they have not had the opportunity to ebuip themselves with American methods. When they follow present methods of American producers they will win success. He is convinced that they are extraordinarily clever from the dramatic viewpoint but their inability to use our technipue is the root of the trouble.

Mr. Harmer went on to say that he carried out several simple experiments for the benefit of British film men to prove to them that the London atmosphere was not conductive to perfect negative production. The murky air of London, while not always noticeable by the electricians, is present in sufficient quantities to impair the film. To one of the most important film executives of London, Mr. Harmer made the statement that the easiest way out of their difficulty was to "make the weather" for their studios.

When asked for information regarding the general impression he had obtained of the industry in Great Britain, Mr. Harmer went on to say that the theatres themselves were being supplied with such a poor quality of projection as compared with America that it was impossible for an experienced spectator to tell whether the fault of the screen picture lay in the film or in the projection room. For one thing, he was certain that the amount of light being used by the theatres there is much too little for good results.

During his stay abroad, Mr. Harmer was entertained by Duncan Watson the best known of the mechanical engineers of Great Britain. Mr. Watson has recently been made sole representative in Europe for the Sun Light Arc Corporation. As an illustration of the esteem in which Mr. Watson is held by his colleagues, Mr. Harmer pointed out that he had been appointed Chairman of the Greater London Electrical Commission, a body which has been formed to standardize electrical procedure in that city. At the present time London is supplied with sixty-two different kinds of current. To lessen this number is the herculean task of the Watson Commission.

Mr. Watson has the distinction of being the first Engineer to equip a British studio with up-to-date equipment. The Famous Players studio was under his general supervision as well as many of the other large ones.

One of Mr. Harmers most interesting visits was to the studio of Sir Oswald Stoll. There he was asked to address the personnel which he did gladly. The gist of his remarks are included in this article. As he himself says, he talked straight from the shoulder and his hearers seemed to be impressed with the possibilities in following American studio procedure.

"There is no reason whatsoever," says Mr. Harmer, "why English films cannot be made acceptable to the theatregoers of this country. The greatest stride they can make it to use modern equipment and modern tools. With this done the greatest difficulty will have been overcome and the quality of their product increased many fold over the present."

Duncan Watson, who has taken over the European distribution of Sun-Light Arcs. This photograph was taken just before Mr. Watson's term of office as Lord Mayor of Marlebone terminated

Business Is Good in Equipment Line

According to reports from the Fulco factory the market for projection equipment is exceedingly good. They have sold three Arc Controls for the Kedzie Annex theatre, a double arc 100 amperes G-E Compensarc to the new Wets Englewood theatre and to the Palace theatre both being Ascher houses.

Information Compiled by H. F. Barnes, Lighting Service Department

As was mentioned before, the filament of the lamp is rarely placed at the focal point of a condensing lens—since at such a point the lens would deliver parallel rays. If the lens, however, did deliver parallel rays, the projection lens would need to be the same diameter as the condenser.

The less the diameter of the lens the more accurately it can be ground and the less it will cost. If, instead of a parallel beam therefore, we can use a converging beam and allow the beam to pass through the projection lens at the smallest diameter of the beam, the size of the projection lens need not be as great as the condensers.

In order to accomplish this—converging or bringing together the light beam from the condensers—the lamp filament is placed behind the actual focal point of the combined condenser system.

Most lenses in common use with the stereopticon are a form of a convex lens; in other words, one or both surfaces are curved out.

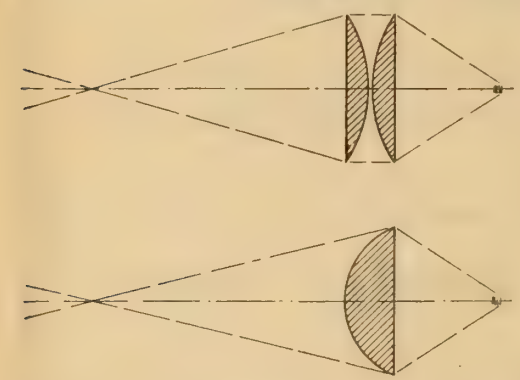

Fig. 6

Showing How It Is Possible Theoretically to Obtain the Same Bending of Light Rays Where the Curvature is Distributed between Two Lenses or Combined in a Single Lens

The amount of curvature or the thickness of the glass at the center with relation to the diameter of the lens determines to a large measure the amount that the rays will be bent. A plain window glass as was shown does not bend the rays at all, but a curved glass, such as a reading glass, may converge the rays considerably. The greater the curvature of the glass the greater the convergence of the rays, and consequently the shorter the focus. The shorter the focal length of a condenser system, the closer the lamp can be placed, and consequently more light will be picked up.

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easily understandable language.

If we had a bucket and were attempting to catch water as it came out of a hoze nozzle in a wide spray, the closer we placed the bucket to the nozzle the greater the amount of water we would obtain. The same principle holds true for a condensing lens and a lamp.

With a given diameter of lens, however, there is a minimum focus that can be practically and economically obtained.

The majority of stereopticon machines use two condensers, for two reasons: a thinner lens of a given diameter controls the light with less loss (from aberation) than a thicker one; we need a certain curvature, a certain thickness of glass, which if put in a single condenser, would make it a thick one indeed. Consequently, the curvature is distributed between two lenses.

Most lenses, unless especially ground, will not focus as accurately those rays which pass through the edges of the lens as those that pass through the center. This slight difference in focusing is known as aberration. This second lens is put in even though loss of light results from its introduction, from reflection, since the total light lost is less in most cases with two lenses than with one lens performing the same function.

Each time a ray of light passes from air to glass or from glass to air, at least 4 per cent of the ray is reflected. A ray of light then, passing through an ordinary piece of glass, suffers two reflection losses of a total of at least 8 per cent. Again—a thick lens will tend to crack from the heat.

The Projection Lens

What difference does the focal length of a lens make? Why be particular as to whether the projection lens is a 10- or 20-inch one?

The rays of light from the condenser after passing through the slide, strike the projection lens. If the projection lens were of a short focus, i.e., of a steep curvature, the rays upon passing through it would be bent through a considerable angle. The picture on the screen would thus be relatively large. If, however, the projection lens were of a long focus, i.e., of a slight curvature, the rays would not be spread apart so much, and the picture would be smaller.

Indicating Why it is Desirable to Use Two Condensers Rather than One. In the upper diagram if the filament were put at the focal point, the rays coming out (shown by the dotted lines) will be parallel. If, however, in order to pick up more light, the filament is placed ahead of the focal point, the rays coming out will diverge considerably, and only a small portion will pass through the projection lens. So, in order to overcome this, and at the same time pick up a considerable quantity of light, the filament is placed ahead of the focal point of the first lens, and a second lens is put in, to bend the rays a-a which heretofore did not strike the projection lens down to position b-b thus passing through the lens

It is possible, however, to pass these rays through the projection lens by the use of a single condenser as shown in the lower diagram. The filament is placed considerably behind the focal point, and the rays are thus made to converge and pass through the projection lens. However, in this case, the "angle of pick-up," in other words, the amount of light striking the condensers, is considerably less than where two condensers are used, and the filament placed close to the rear condenser

The shorter the focus, the larger the picture. Thus, a 10-inch lens at 40 feet, gives a picture about 11 by 12, whereas a 20-inch lens, which has a much less curvature does not bend the rays so much, and only gives a 5½ by 6 ft. picture at 40 feet.

For small hall work, a 12-in. focus lens will be most suitable.

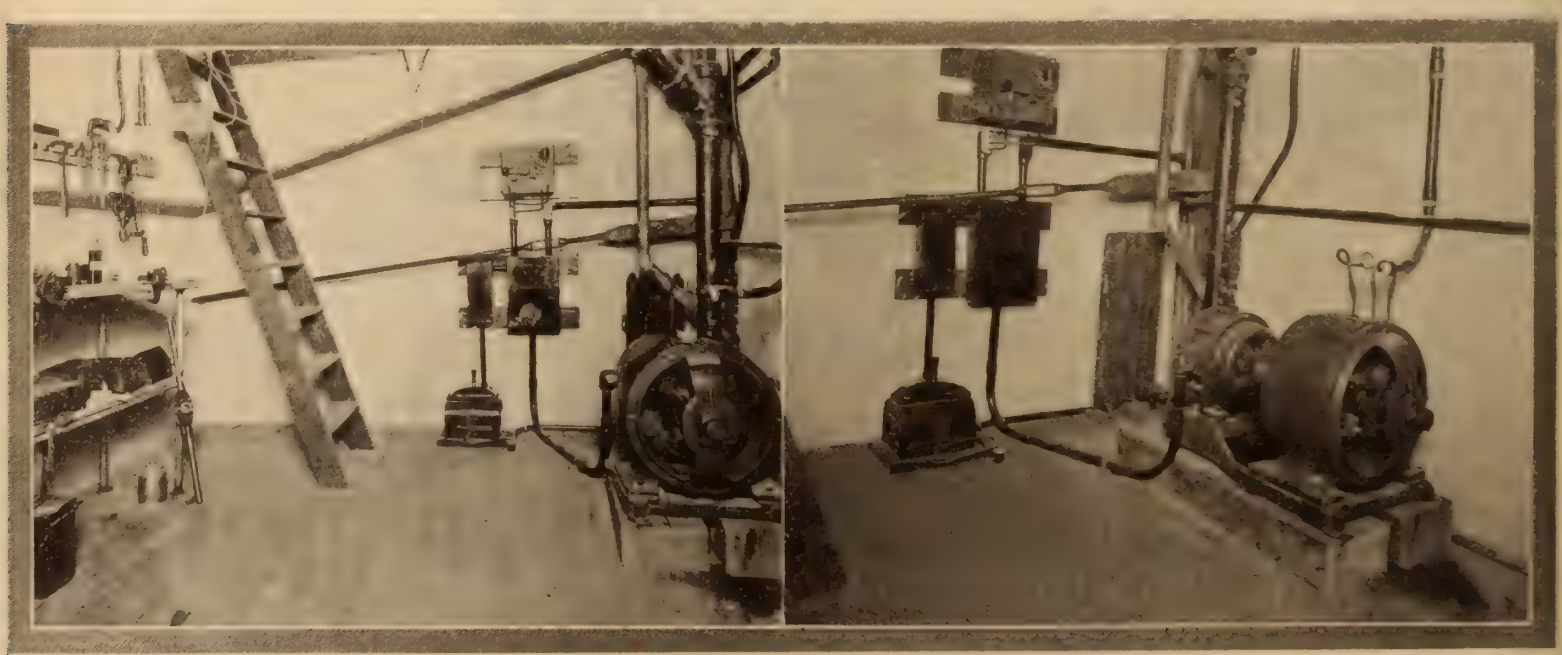
Smith Supervises Special Showings

Mr. W. C. Smith of the Nicholas Power Company might be called the "first nighter of the projection world" as during the last year very few first showings of films have taken place without having him in charge of the special battery of projectors.



When "Outside the Law" was shown a few nights back Mr. Smith was again in charge. But this time the showing was unique in that the same film was shown in four theatres in the same city at the same identical time and the eight Powers machines doing the work were installed and were supervised by Mr. Smith.

There is more than the mere motor running to these special showings. The machines often being placed in the theatre for the occasion only must conform to certain stringent fire regulations and it is necessary that the man in charge understand them or be "Inside the Law." This Mr. Smith has the ability to do.

Shall M.P.Films be Marked

The News Letter of the National Fire Protection Association carries the following notice:

The Executive Committee N. F. P. A. at its meeting January 20th, is to discuss the feasibility of inaugurating a campaign to secure the placing of distinguishing marks upon all motion picture films. Members and correspondents of the Association in the states and provinces complain that in their efforts to exclude the nitro-cellulose film from non-professional use much difficulty is experienced in identifying films of the professional width (35mm) by any other process than a fire test. An edge marking repeated at certain distances would afford ready identification. Manufacturers report a growing demand for the film on slow-burning stock, but also the importation of considerable footages of nitro-cellulose film from France, Belgium, England and other European countries.

Two views of the machine room at the Barcli. On the left is shown the stairway leading down from the trap door in the projection room. There is also an exit from the machine room to the outdoors. In addition to the G-E Compensarc and control equipment this room contains a fine assortment of tools and a working bench

Camera Laboratory | Picture Making | Studio Technique

Design Features and Operation of the Russell Camera

IN almost every industry the history of its progress might be reckoned in steps. First the idea, then the improvement of machinery to perfect the idea, then the over-improvement of the machinery while the art hastens to catch up with it, and so on and so on. There is no stopping of either the technique of an art or the mechanism making the technique possible. One is essential to the advance of the other.

It is the same way in this industry of ours. First the bright idea of a scenarioist and the brighter idea of some cameraman which makes the utilization of the idea possible. This alternate step by step upwards has placed a severe strain on the inventiveness of camera manufacturers, since the demand for films of greater latitude has caused to be sent out an insistent call for cameras of wider possibilities and of more perfect workmanship. That the genius of the workman has been equal to the task is amply proven by the number of new cinema cameras and devices that have been featured of late in the trade press.

But when the limit for the present seems to have been reached comes the announcement of the Russell Camera, a mechanism that embodies in its small size and light weight the finest of machine work, the most attractive of finishes and the smoothest of operation. It contains so many interesting features that a mere mention of them would be unsatisfying to the cameraman. They must be treated in detail.

The Russell includes so many interesting departures from current cameras that a starting place is difficult to decide on, but without much doubt the feature that will be of greatest interest is the film shifting mechanism, illustrated by A in Fig. 1.

By means of this device it is possible to focus directly on the ground glass without opening any part of the camera and without the wastage of film. A small lever on the top of the camera case at the back does the work. By turning it slightly the entire gate—with rollers and tension shoes—is swung away from its natural position taking the film with it, and in place of the gate there is placed, by the same action of the lever, an auxiliary aperture containing a ground glass. This ground glass occupies the exact position of the film and the focusing is therefore exact "to a hair." The focusing completed another slight twist of the lever backwards swings the ground glass to one side and replaces it with the gate containing the film. Fig. 1 shows the gate in normal position with the ground glass swung to one side.

Any camera to be used in studio work requires an automatic dissolving shutter with the widest latitude and sureness of operation. In the case of the Russell this feature seems to have been carried to a point that will be eminently satisfactory to the studio cameraman. In Fig. 2 B is the speed lever which sets the shutter for any one of its three speeds of dissolve. On the opposite side of the case is C in Fig. 1, is the angular setting of the shutter opening. The controlling lever which starts the dissolve in operation is at D, Fig. 2. After the proper adjustments have been made this lever D is pushed slightly forward or backward according to whether it is desired to dissolve in or out and when the operation has been completed the mechanism locks. The shutter which can be set for any angle from 170 to 0 can be operated by hand if desired.

Perhaps though there is nothing about the Russell that strikes the cameraman as being such a radical departure from existing types as the arrangement of the magazines. One of them is placed on each

THE RUSSELL CAMERA IS READY

It Represents the Newest Great Contribution to Cinematography

The Russell Camera possesses new, patented, practical features which render all present camera equipment inadequate — and therefore out of date.

Master Camera Men Need the Russell

There is only one way to lead — Get the best. In cameras it is the RUSSELL! This is a simple statement of fact which professional camera men will prove to themselves by examining this great new advance in cinematography.

Our offices are open to all interested in learning about the Russell. Call Murray Hill 4284 and arrange for a demonstration.

side of the camera casing and as this feature coupled with the general arrangement of the mechanism calls for the location of the lens a considerable distance from the front surface of the case a natural sun-shade is supplied. Of course as the focal length of the lens is decreased the divergence of the entering beam is greater, but by a careful design which takes this fact into account there is no vignetting of the light rays until lenses well below 40 millimeters are used.

Lenses are mounted in special mounts supplied with the camera. A special arrangement makes it possible to change from one lens to another in a matter of a few seconds. The lens mount will accommodate any lens up to 6" focal length, and even the latter size when in place does not protrude beyond the face of the camera.

Vignetting and double exposure devices are placed on the extreme front of the camera and when in place do not interfere with the rapid changing of lenses.

In conjunction with the ground glass feature mentioned in a preceding paragraph, the focusing of the Russell is a simple and satisfactory operation. At the back of the case is an ocular, which is pushed in nearly flush with the face when not in use. Then by means of the focussing button, E in Fig. 2, the lens is adjusted through a micrometer mounting. With the ground glass in place and the lens focused the image is seen right side up in the ocular.

But in addition to the above method of focusing, the camera man if he wishes can make use of the calibrated focusing scale on the back of the case. The scale is also of value when it is necessary to focus while operating.

For a take-up the designers of the Russell have developed a multiple dry disc clutch which will take up 400 feet either forward or backward and in solving this problem have eliminated the buckling of the film. The change from forward to reverse can be carried out instantly and the reversal made as frequently as desired. The take-ups work automatically in either direction and there is no shifting of belts or adjusting to be done. When the crank is being turned forward the clutch engages the forward take up, leaving the back spool to revolve freely. To reverse the crank is merely turned backward. This automatically throws out the forward take-up and engages the take-up on the reverse. There is no loose motion and the manipulation of the film is positive in either direction.

The film magazines themselves are constructed to take the regular 400 foot rolls direct from the film can. There is no need to remove the film from the wooden rolls and onto special rollers. When the camera is closed and locked the door catch at F in Fig. 1, automatically opens the film traps one half inch, which allows ample room for the travel of the film. When the door is opened these film traps are instantly closed.

A student of mechanics or a lover of good machine work would certainly appreciate the intermittent mechanism of the Russell. This is one of the finest pieces of design found in any motion picture camera and when in actual operation is practically noiseless. The basic principle is that of the claw, but the manner in which this well known movement has been altered—and improved—to make it suitable for the Russell is worthy of study. The movement is sturdy, perfectly balanced and supported by ball bearings. Wherever possible the gears are spiral. Full provision has been made for taking up any wear in the gear trains and shafts.

Although the normal speed of the movement is the ordinary 8-1, a distinctive feature allows the operator to shift instantly to a 1-1 or back again to normal. The crank itself is situated at the lowest center of gravity which reduces vibration. It is permanently attached to the camera and when not in use folds tightly against the camera case and locks itself.

Cinematographers have their own opinion of the proper material out of which to construct camera cases, but it appears that a new sect will spring into being with the advent of the Russell. The makers have departed from the usual and have made use of fibrous material known as Condensite. The substance which is prepared originally in a powder form is pressed into molds under enormous pressure and once the contour of the surface has become "set" there is nothing that can change it. Extremes of temperature have no effect whatsoever upon it. Besides Condensite has the advantage of light weight. The Russell Camera, complete with a 400 foot roll of film weighs slightly less than 20 pounds.

In size the camera is 9" high, 7¾" wide and 10¾" long. The combination of this relatively small size, its capacity of 400 feet, its light weight, its mechanical features and general design and the fact that when the camera is taken from its carrying case it is ready for instant cranking seem to give the instrument a premier place in cinema camera development. The Russell has been in actual operation in some of the leading studios for several years but it was only after many refinements had been carried out and its designers were certain of its excellence that it was placed on the market and made available to cinematographers.

Another Circuit Orders the Peerless Control

In order to provide the highest possible standard of projection in their theatres, the Lubliner & Trintz Enterprises of Chicago recently equipped their entire circuit of seventeen theatres with Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, manufactured by the J. E. McAuley Mfg. Co. of Chicago.

The four largest theatre circuits in Chicago are now 100% Peerless equipped, which appears to be conclusive proof of the tremendous improvement which these remarkable devices effect in the screen illumination and general projection.

SPECIAL NOTE:—Sometime during the Conference, details to be arranged, the Chicago Opera Association will hold a special rehearsal with the leading stars, as a tribute to the Motion Picture Musical Conference.

Greetings to the Convention

what music and the calibre of musicians to engage—all this will be brought out by the greatest authorities who are gracing this convention with their presence and their genius.

All that is to be said of the picture theatre's needs—what the big and the little house wants—the handicaps, the advantages, the knowledge or the lack of it—this will be brought forth by the managers themselves and those who have observed conditions.

What can be done to standardize the music, the musicians, the method of procuring the directors and their men specially trained, building libraries, getting the right kind of instruments—this will be told.

How the grand opera companies and the concert managers and the tour directors can find an ally in the picture theatres, who in turn can capitalize the other forces at work for music's development—these ideas will be set in motion.

But I want to look further at this moment than anything which even the most optimistic and enthusiastic of us can hope to see completed in this week of meetings—I want to look in the future for just a few years. We must do this, those of us who really can see further than our noses.

What we do in these several days—even if we accomplish wonders—is nothing to compare with what we set in motion. We make a centralized channel for the exchange of the big ideas of the two arts now wedded. We make a means for the united expression of the picture and musical fraternity.

What will history say of what we do? I am thinking now of some other instances in the past when men joined together for purposes similar to this. Little did they know what the future would say of them, or what the future would bring as a result of their first audacious dreams. There was a time when the theatre—I mean the house of entertainment—was not a thing of reality. And some courageous men decided that there was a place where people ought to be allowed to gather. Instead of travelling players, visiting the audiences—let the audiences visit the players. So started the theatre.

Then there was a man named Monteverde who opened the first Opera House. People laughed at the idea of such a thing. But Monteverde started the opera-houses of the world.

Is it so long since that a man built the first motion picture theatre? How long ago is it anyway that a young man took his father-in-law's backroom of the cafe and opened a picture show with music (a piano). That man was Rothafel and how long ago is it that the Rialto opened amidst the derision of the picture and musical conservatives?

No, as optimistic as I am personally for the great results of our first convention of motion picture and musical interests, I see mainly that we are making a start. I predict that in the coming year, the most revolutionary things will happen in music for the picture theatres.

Synchronized Music Exchange for Chicago

WITH the formation of the Bushmint Company, this week, Chicago has the distinction of being the first city in the world where there is a synchronized music exchange, a place where the theatre man can get complete musical scores for his pictures—the same as he can buy film, or posters or get other talent to "put the pictures over." The music exchange was started to handle the service the Synchronized Scenario Music Company has just inaugurated and controls the Northern Illinois and Indiana territory.

The Bushmint Company will be managed by Paul Bush, well known exchange and film man, and will be located at 207 South Wabash Avenue for the present.

Although the idea is entirely new, a number of the biggest theatremen in Chicago territory have endorsed it and have already signed for musical scores under the new plan as soon as the scores are ready for release. Mr. Bush's connection with the film trade has been a long one. For several years he was connected with the Pathe Company, in fact opened the first Pathe Exchange in Chicago. He then joined Samuel Goldwyn's staff and took charge of the Goldwyn St. Louis exchange. From St. Louis he went to Detroit as Universal exchange manager and later was transferred to the Kansas City office of Universal where he built up a splendid business.

Before entering the film industry he was with the American Tobacco Company and first sprang into prominence in film circles when he promoted the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures. For a time he was in charge of the Chicago Tribune's motion picture department, exploiting German War films and organized the Peerless Film Exchange Company in Chicago, which handled state right features.

From Celebrities Everywhere

Count me with you—Dorothy Phillips, star.

Anyone who can think, sees the value of your plan. I heartily subscribe to it.—Rudolph Ganz, distinguished pianist and composer.

Welcome art and artists—George Arliss.

I'm in it—Paul Althouse, leading tenor.

Add my name—Alice Gentle, leading soprano.

It's historic—Molly King.

There is something which counts—June Caprice.

I wish I might be present to say personally all that is in my mind concerning this great movement—Helen Stanley, prima donna soprano.

Anything for the good of music wins my support—Margaret Matzenauer, celebrated contralto.

Now, that's big—Frank La Forge, conductor and coach.

You have done something which in my estimation is of the greatest value to the picture theatre and musical taste—Felix Warburg, great philanthropist.

Congratulations—Charles Miller, President, M. P. Directors.

Cards of greetings came from the following stars of the screen:

Justine Johnston, Montague Love, Juanita Hansen, Claire Whitney, Frankie Mann, Corinne Griffith, Katherine Calvert, Molly King, Ruby de Remer, Hope Hampton, Martha Mansfield, Richard Bartholomes.

Other greeting cards came from:

"I am leaving Rochester on the 16th of the month for a trip south, to be gone until after the first of February so it will not be possible for me to be present at the MOTION PICTURE CONFERENCE. I have read the program and shall look forward with a great deal of interest to learning what develops at the conference. I hope that a pretty full report of the transactions will be published. The whole subject of the relation of music to motion pictures is one of great importance and I hope the conference will mark an important step in the advance of the industry—George Eastman, Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.

Magnificent effort—Richard Hageman, great conductor.

Delighted—Claude Warford, teacher of voice.

I'm with it—Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor.

So much am I for this big plan, that I shall lend my personal aid—Otto H. Kahn, America's leading art patron.

It is a very ambitious and worthy venture—Charles M. Schwab, head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

Big doings—S. Jay Kaufmann, "Round the Town."

How fine: Yes, count me in—Dixie Howell.

Special cards from Glad Forster, Alexander Lambert, Dr. Noble (Director Juilliard Foundation for Music), Dr. Rush Rhees (President University of Rochester), Vladmir Dubinsky, Henry Hadley (great conductor and composer), Erno Rapee, Bertha Kalich, Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, Dallas Musical Association, and many others.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your program, as outlined in this week's NEWS, offers a rare treat to visiting musicians, and I am looking forward to not only the entertainment side of the convention, but to the general discussion where I am sure can be found the key to the solution of many of the difficulties that beset the average picture player.

With best wishes for the success of your splendid plans, and the hope that this convention will realize even more than all you hope for it, I am,

MILDRED SMITH,
Organist Knickerbocker Theatre,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have followed your articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, for some time back, and would like to add my congratulations and appreciation for what you are doing to bring the pictures and music closer together.

When the date of the convention was first made known, I thought it would be impossible for me to attend, as we are opening a number of large houses throughout Canada. However, luck has been with me and I will be able to accept your invitation, and will probably bring my assistant, Mr. Milton Blackstone, and Dr. Harvey Bobb, who is in charge of our Organ Department.

Hoping this will be satisfactory to you and wishing you every success in bringing your ideas to a working basis, I am,

JOHN ARTHUR,
Musical Director
Famous Players,
Canadian Corporated.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Will you kindly note that besides myself, Mr. M. Mauro-Cottone, formerly chief organist of the Capitol, and Mr. H. Frommel, both members of our musical staff, will attend the conference.

EUGENE CONTE,
Plaza Theatre,
New York City.

Dear Editor:

I have your communication of January 7 in regard to your musical conference, to be held at the Astor Hotel January 24 to 26, and advise that I will have a representative at this meeting.

Wishing you much success and with kindest regards, I beg to remain,

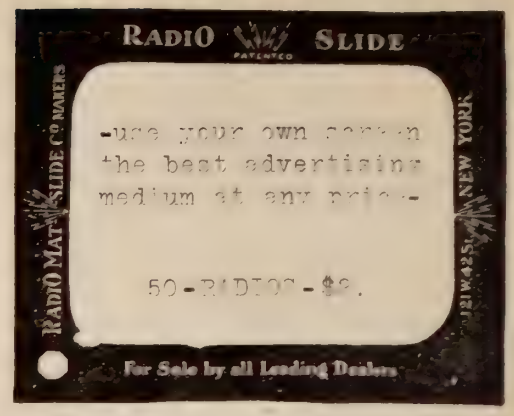
Perfect Projection Sought in Erber Theatre

JOE ERBER, pioneer showman of East St. Louis, announces that the $300,000 Erber theatre will open early in 1921. He and his partner, Mr. Cohn, are bending every effort to get the house open in January, and claim that it will be the finest appointed theatre in southern Illinois.

The policy of the house will be to show the best photoplays the market affords, with high-class vaudeville. This is in keeping with a tendency of the show business at present—to combine the two kinds of entertainment.

The seating capacity will be such that 2500 people can be accommodated comfortably, having a complete, full view of the screen and stage.



The projection equipment, furnished by the St. Louis branch of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, consists of articles that Mr. Erber and Mr. Cohn know will give satisfactory projection.

After much investigation, three Type S Simplex projection machines were ordered, equipped with Peerless Automatic Arc-Controls and Keen-o-lite lenses. Their investigation showed that many of the best houses giving perfect projection, were equipped this way, in addition to having Hertner Transverters. Two double-75 440-volt transverters were ordered to complete the ideal projection equipment.

Besides the equipment for the booth, the Exhibitors' Supply received an order for a Brenkert Spotlight, a double dissolving stereopticon, a three-battery ticket-selling machine, and a ticket chopper.

The decorative scheme in the auditorium is salmon with picked in colors and flowered basket designs on the walls, large velour draperies of blue and gold surrounds the boxes and lounges. The house is sufficiently beautiful architecturally to stand on its merits alone.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Son of Tarzan"
(National-Howells—State Rights Serial, 15 Episodes)

ANY picture which has the name Tarzan in it—whether it is the father, the son, or the ape, himself, is certain to carry a punch. An offering which contains the wealth of adventure found in Edgar Rice Burroughs' jungle tales is surely rich entertainment. "The Son of Tarzan" may be said to eclipse the previous pictures founded upon the Burroughs adventures because Harry Revier, the director, has incorporated a little more action and suspense, mystery and thrills. He has a good continuity to work with—a continuity furnished by Roy Somerville who has written, seemingly with one idea, to present the utmost in plot. The latter has contributed praiseworthy subtitles which are brief and do not give away the action.

The serial starts a trifle slowly which is excusable in planting the various characters and giving the spectator an idea of what it is about. After the prologue the action begins and never stops throughout the succeeding reels. Serials are supposed to carry action and suspense. These two ingredients are absolutely necessary to stimulate interest from one week to another. Well, "The Son of Tarzan" has an exceptionally strong dose of action, some of which is of the breath-taking or hair-raising kind. Director Revier has fashioned a "tailor-made" jungle which looks like a Burton Holmes. In other words the observer is truly transported to the heart of Africa. And the players enacting the picturesque characters are certainly put through their paces.

Thrills follow one another in rapid succession, each one, seemingly, more dangerous than its forerunner. The son of Tarzan is kidnapped in his London home and taken to the land of the ape. There he grows up and falls in love with a wild girl who is as untamable as the hero. Their escapades, their adventures keep the spectator's gaze glued to the screen. The underbrush, the thickets, the suspense derived from watching the man-eating lions who are ever ready to pounce upon their prey, the fascination of taking in these sights spell an entertainment which will satisfy everyone fortunate enough to see it. The girl playing the wild character certainly earns her money. It is apparent that Manilla Martan, the girl in question, suffered some torture. The whole company must have felt relieved when the picture was finished, so strenuous is their work. There is enough plot substance to furnish surprises and the scenery, the landscapes, the atmosphere, the animal shots, the rugged acting—these are the vital factors toward the success of this picture.

It should prove to be a good box-office magnet. The average feature catering to thrills stands no comparison. Credit should be given Harry Revier for accomplishing something which puts zest into everyday life. His players should enjoy a long vacation with full pay. The titling is presented on glass composition against black backgrounds and is highly effective. There is some commendable double exposure work. But technicalities aside, excellent though they are, it is the big value of suspense which will make spectators cling to the arms of their seats. Imagine yourself in the heart of a jungle, with danger and death lurking everywhere and you have it. "The Son of Tarzan" is a regular grown-up, "he-man," "reinforced concrete" serial. The exhibitor who books it will have packed houses.—LAURENCE REID.

(Pathe)

PATHE has revised its former release, "The Life of the Saviour," and is presenting it under the title of "Behold the Man." It depicts the life of Christ from Birth to the Ascension, the picture being taken up with the outstanding episodes of the four Gospels. The sponsors have introduced a modern story which shows a mother relating the life of the Saviour to her children before they are sent to bed. Through a series of fade-ins the action develops and interests after a fashion. The scenes and figures have been photographed in natural colors. This process emphasizes the sharp contrasts for the faces of the players are shown to be absolutely colorless.

The director has used discretion with his scenes shaping them according to the popular conception according to the Old Masters. The titles are presented in a manner which may be understood by every child. Aside from the technicalities, "Behold the Man" is a satisfying offering. But it must have a musical setting to be wholly appealing. A French cast interprets the biblical story and the performance is not entirely acceptable because the players do not appear adaptable to the parts. However, they act with dignity and poise. The modern episode is directed by Spencer G. Bennett.—Length 6 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"His Enemy's Daughter"
(Candler Pictures—State Rights)

THIS is a fairly interesting drama for a middle-classed house, with revenge as its dominating motive. Lloyd Lonergan, the author, has not given his story any absorbing incidents, to refresh his old familiar story. It moves along with a fair amount of suspense and sufficient drama to please, but not impress, the patrons of the houses where it will probably be shown.

The story starts with the betrayal of a man by his supposedly truest friend. The betrayed man, sinking to the very depths of human society, vows revenge. He ships as a sailor on a vessel owned by his false friend. The daughter of his enemy is aboard by mistake and in a shipwreck the two are cast on a small island in the West Indies. There the ruined man discovers pearls, and stays while the little girl is rescued. The story jumps fifteen years. The girl is budding into womanhood, her father is on the verge of financial ruin, and the vengeance seeker is a wealthy Cuban. Coming unrecognized to America he gets the girl in his power, but her trust in him, and the memory of her as a small child, prevents him from harming her. His betrayer he also ruins and captures, but lets his revenge take the form of giving him a good scare.

"Bungalow Troubles"
(Mack Sennett Comedy-Paramount)

THE humor which can be found in the dinner party where the neighbors are called in to help themselves has been appreciated by Mack Sennett. There is an amount of fun in the idea. As every one knows who conducts a dinner party, the neighbors never come except when they are hungry. Here are Louise Fazenda, Jimmie Finlayson and others from the Sennett lots and they provoke a deal of amusement with their dinner antics and their efforts at dancing. The comedy is not Sennett at his best. But when it gives indication of losing its high kicks he introduces a dream situation which keeps it sustained to the finish. The husband is talking in his sleep and visualizes some bathing girls of his acquaintance. The child wakes up mamma, Louise, and the usual explanations occur. She decides it is better to take a chance with her present husband than to speculate with an unknown quantity. The titling is pithy and more humorous than the incident.—Length 2 Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

Kineto Review
(Urban)

" Double Adventure "
(Pathe)

PATHE says that Charles Hutchison is the "bravest daredevil of the screen." Judging from the way this young man went through the first two episodes of his new serial "Double Adventure," they're not far from it, for he does many stunts which will make the serial loving public gasp and be amazed.

When the scenes call for it, Hutchison doesn't hesitate to equal or surpass anything that has ever been done before. And then again many of his stunts are new.

For instance, during a chase scene in which two automobiles participate, the star climbs out on the front of the rear "auto" which appears to be going at top speed, does a forward dive and grasps the emergency tire of the front auto and by superhuman strength drags himself to a sitting position.

This piece of daredeviltry is worth a hand from any audience and is only an illustration of what the fans may expect when they see Charlie Hutchison in "Double Adventure."

The story is up to date in every way and is given a splendid production. It concerns the trials and tribulations of a young reporter, Bob Cross, who is determined to land Jules Fernol and his notorious gang of crooks behind the bars for stealing Martha Steadman's inheritance.

The action is "fast and furious" in the first two episodes and shows the star in many fights and quick get-a-ways until the finish of the second episode when he is seen hanging on a hoist over treacherous water with the villains, knives in hand awaiting their chance.

W. S. Van Dyke, who directed Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack," held the reins in "Double Adventure" and has been careful in handling his actors and developing an intricate plot.

Jack Cunningham wrote the story.—FRANK LEONARD.

" Pleasure Seekers "
(Selznick)

"PLEASURE SEEKERS" is one of the best productions Elaine Hammerstein has ever done. It is a comedy-drama, gripping in its dramatic moments and amusing in its lighter scenes.

Although the story is not new, it has a number of novel twists which carry it entirely away from the "cut and dried" and land it high in amusement value. But it is Elaine Hammerstein's acting, especially in the dramatic moments, which gives added impetus to the picture. And many a wet handkerchief did she bring from the eyes of the women folks in a Broadway house when the scenes show her setting out to bring back her wayward husband whom she finds out is in the company of a woman of uncertain character.

In the lighter scenes, Frank Currier in a character role is a splendid foil for the star and reminds one of William H. Crane, especially in his methods of handling the comedy situations.

In the opening scenes the star appears in the role of a secretary to an old clergyman. When the latter dies, the girl marries the wayward son of a millionaire. The latter does not forgive his son on learning of the marriage and the young couple decide to "go to work."

The comedy situations begin when Elaine secures a position as stenographer to the irate father and convinces him that she is not of the ordinary "gum chewing, powder puff" variety.

The son, however, cannot stick to the "straight and narrow" and falls a victim to his old pals. When the wife finds that he is in the company of a "not too good woman" she sacrifices her own feelings, goes to this woman's home and brings him back. Here he is met by his father who has previously discovered Elaine's identity and in another strong moment, when the young wife accomplishing her object is about to leave, turns tragedy into comedy by declaring, "If you ever desert her again, I'll disinherit you." These words are said to soothe rather than offend and bring the story to a happy ending.

" Hides—and Go Seek "
(Educational-Hudson Bay Travel Series One Reel)

THIS is another of the Hudson Bay Travel series which should prove of decided interest to exhibitors for the reason that these films bring before the public Eskimo and Indian life in the far north, as it is lived in the service of the company.

"Hides-and Go Seek" shows the Indian method of trapping the beaver, minx, muskrat, ermine and lynx in the Athabascan country.

The Indian and his companion start in the early dawn and trudge through the snow covered wilderness until a suitable place is found to lay the traps.

After they are set, and it certainly requires some skill in the setting, the northlanders proceed to their camps, build their fires and await the coming of the morrow. When dawn arrives they proceed merrily to the traps where the preceding day's work proves a success, each trap containing one or more of the precious fur-bearing animals.

The scenes showing the laying of traps for snaring the beaver and muskrat are especially interesting because they have to be laid under the ice where the animals live during the winter.

The subtitles are clear and expressive, adding life and humor to the story.—FRANK LEONARD.

Movie Chat—40th Series
(Urban)

FROM this chat one may learn how difficult it really is to obtain the skins of seals, Alaskan seals, for (usually) the making of fur coats for the fair sex. Lives are risked in thrilling fashion, and the scenes of the frozen north where the seals are found, furnishes interesting location. Why not the fox, the kind which this chat shows come from "fox farms," where the animal is raised and his coat perfected for the express purpose of decorating the lady of expensive tastes. This part of the subject will be of great interest to sportspeople, who enjoy the thrills of fur trapping, while the second half will be of more interest to those in touch with scientific research. The habits of the cobra, the viper and other reptiles are shown, as well as the breeding of aligators and their growth into maturity. The photography in its entirety, is much above the ordinary, making the subjects doubly interesting.—LILLIAN GALE.

HERE is one of the brightest little fillers for an exhibitor's program that has come to the screen in many a day. The title exploits a youngster, but the interest of the subject is found in a fuzzy-haired Scotch terrier who because of his homely and pathetic countenance certainly inspires a friendly response. He follows the boy around in typically dog fashion, waiting for him to come from school, and joining him in some walks to the old swimmin' hole. The picture is inviting in its charming atmosphere.

One feels the call of the country, the call of the rustic stream, the quiet contentment of the farmhouse. The shots have been done in sepia —some of which are offered out of focus. There is a spell about the subject which places the spectator in an appreciative state of mind. The city dweller who is unable to show his dog a good time, feels a desire to take a week-off and travel to the country. He may even feel like going bare-footed again. This picture is such a gem that it acts as an atmospheric prelude for a heart interest feature.—Length One Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

" The Porcelain Lamp "
(Harry Levey Service Corporation)

HE Harry Levey Service Corporation have offered a five-reel subject under the title of "The Porcelain Lamp," made for the Cole Motor Company. It takes up in a fictional way the discovery of gasolene and its application as the motive power of automobiles. There is a prominent engineer who escorts his dinner friends to his studio to show them his antiques. A porcelain lamp is one of the treasures. As he relates the history of the lamp, the action discloses the discoverer of gasolene and the inventor of the lamp. He is a Frenchman named Daimler who struggled for years in finding a satisfactory liquid fuel. He dreams of success but never attains it until he accidentally uses gasolene instead of kerosene to light his porcelain lamp. Thus he discovers his liquid fuel. He invents a gasolene engine, the forerunner of the motor car of to-day.—Length 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" The Officer Cupid "
(Paramount—Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS comedy won't get a laugh. It is so "polite" that it fails to be funny. Containing practically no slapstick or burlesque, it necessarily must depend for its humor upon a good comedy idea in its story. And the idea is not there. It is simply the story of a police chief and a young patrolman, both in love with the same girl. Burglars enter the young lady's house and the patrolman and his chief both come to the rescue. There is also a fake burglar at work, employed by the ambitious young cop in order that he can make a hit with the girl.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"THE DEVIL"
(Asso.-Exhib.-Pathe)

Very Artistic With Arliss Superb in His Screen Debut

THIS production is certainly going to arouse a deal of discussion among exhibitors and screengoers as to whether it constitutes good film material. A great many will argue, that deprived of the subtleties of dialogue, it will appear unduly conventional. But since it is a play founded upon a moral and utilizing a symbol for characterization which in the shadow world seems highly effective, those who come to scoff should go away feeling well entertained. It is a picture which can appeal to the imagination. While the figure of the devil appears in the flesh in the identity of a false friend whose object is to plant seeds of distrust in the minds of his acquaintances and watch them harvest a crop of evil thoughts and deeds, it is our idea that the author intended the character to symbolize the power of evil—in other words appear invisible.

Accepting it in this light the picture takes on interest which cannot be denied. Certainly there is nothing the matter with the interpretation or production. George Arliss makes his screen debut in the part he created upon the stage and gives one of the finest portrayals even seen. He is superb as the stealthy, scheming, polished, dignified arch—enemy of righteousness. He brings to the silent drama his subtle, keen understanding. His make-up is marvelous and he is silhouetted in the foreground with splendid lighting. A toss of his cape, a gesture of his hand, a mocking smile, a lift of the eyebrow, whatever he does is the acme of grace. He is the artist to his finger tips. Whenever he is in the picture it takes on value because of his superiority to the story and the other portrayals.

The idea itself, looking at it from an analytical viewpoint simply exposes the meddler in the home. It borders on the triangle without actually entering it. Some will say that the good people must have been exceedingly stupid to countenance the devil's constant meddling. If they will look at the figure as a composite representation of false friends and gossips who are in every community though not actually identified they will get a proper interpretation of the subject. Thus a moral is observed. The picture, scene for scene, is always obvious. But that is to be expected. Doubtless it will soar over the heads of the masses. If it does they can still derive satisfaction from the wonderfully fine production and Mr. Arliss' performance. James Young has been given a free rein toward investing the picture with artistic backgrounds. His attention to details must have been a labor of enthusiasm. "The Devil" should draw them in through the star's reputation, but we are frank in stating that it seems almost too high-brow for the patron used to sharp conflicts and contrasts.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Dr. Muller ..... George Arliss
Mimi ..... Sylvia Breamer
Marie Matin ..... Lucy Cotton
Her Aunt ..... Mrs. Arliss
Paul De Vaux ..... Edmund Lowe
Georges Roben ..... Roland Bottomley

By Franz Molnar.
Scenario by Edmund Goulding.
Directed by James Young.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Devil," a screen version of the play of the same name in which George Arliss scored a most artistic success, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Mr. Arliss is also the star of the photoplay and again shows his skillful interpretation which is marked for its subtle shading, poise and dignity. A clever company which consists of such favorite players as Sylvia Breamer, Lucy Cotton and Edmund Lowe, is in support. James Young has produced the picture from a scenario by Edmund Goulding.

This offering is from the Hungarian play by Franz Molnar, which symbolizes the power of evil. The author shows his puppets being guided by a devil, whose object is to sow distrust and corruption among the minds of his acquaintances. While he uses the name of Dr. Muller, the figure might well be any "trusted" friend whose evil tongue spreads unhappiness. Right triumphs over wrong eventually. The picture is made fascinating through Mr. Arliss' masterly portrayal. Mr. Young's production is highly artistic. "The Devil" is certainly a subject which compels attention through its vital theme and the splendid performance.

PROGRAM READER

A picture of vital theme, powerful characterization, wonderfully artistic performance and production is "The Devil" which comes to the ———— theatre in the near future. This play when it appeared upon the speaking stage created a sensation since it was produced by two separate companies, one of which was headed by George Arliss, the star of the screen version. Mr. Arliss is a superb artist, a fact which will be testified to by patrons of the ————. His skill at pantomime, his artistic study, poise and dignity compel the utmost attention. He is the diabolical power of evil that may be found—in fact, is found, in every community. See "The Devil" and marvel at the star's performance. A highly artistic production.

SUGGESTIONS

Concentrate upon the name of the star in your exploitation. He is one of the most gifted actors on the stage and he brings to the screen a rare artistry. Make plain that he created a sensation in the stage version of the picture. And he offers screen patrons a genuine delight in the theatre. Make use the theme by pointing out that the Devil—the power of evil is ever abroad in every community. The gossip, the false friend, the scandal-monger—these are Powers for evil. Make use of James Young's name. He is a well known director and well known to your crowd who are "dyed-in-the-wool" fans. Play up the artistic production, but use most of your advertising in bringing forth Arliss' name. Play up that it scored a sensation when it was produced upon the stage by two separate companies at the same time.

"THE KID"
(First National)

Long Heralded Chaplin Six Reeler Lives Up to Expectations

MR. CHAPLIN'S "The Kid" lives up to expectations which is saying considerable. Perhaps no picture has ever been ushered into official being with so much to recommend it from an exhibitors standpoint. To begin with it is Mr. Chaplin's first venture into the multiple reel feature not counting "Tillie's Punctured Romance" in which he shared starring honors. Next America's foremost comedian has been absent from the screen for a long time. His public which means about everyone who goes to pictures is hungry for another comedy. Third, the existence of "The Kid" has been known to both the public and the trade for a year and during that period more publicity for it than could have been purchased for a barrel of money has just naturally accrued in the course of certain human events.

When and how this picture was going to reach the screen has been the topic of the day.

Viewed from the picture angle, with no thought of the box office values, "The Kid" is a paradox. The picture is not a Chaplin comedy. It is actually a drama, developed with a splendid lot of highly original and absolutely new incident, played in an exaggerated tempo with such skill, not only by the star, but the entire supporting cast that the result is a high class comedy.

There are few of the old Chaplin tricks made manifest in this picture, although the familiar Chaplin makeup and mannerisms are retained. Also there are few "custard pie" gags in it and a surprisingly small number of titles.

Mr. Chaplin and his principal comedy assistant, the child player, Jackie Coogan earn their laughs by legitimate methods.

In acting honors the star is entitled to scarcely less praise than his supporting cast, especially the young Mr. Coogan. There is no doubt that "The Kid" is going to receive the attention of the entire picturegoing public and if it doesnt set new box office records our judgment is badly at fault.—Length. 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

The Man ..... Carl Miller
The Woman ..... Edna Purviance
The Kid ..... Jack Coogan
The Tramp ..... Charles Chaplin
The Policeman ..... Tom Wilson

Written and directed by Charles Chaplin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The long heralded six-reel comedy "The Kid," in which Charles Chaplin is starred and which has been linked with the newspeper stories of the Chaplins' domestic troubles for the past year is to be the attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————. In "The Kid" the greatest of all screen comedians shares acting honors with a small boy by the name of Coogan and between the two more clean fun is generated than any picture that Mr. Chaplin has ever made which is proof positive that a great deal of fun is in store for the patrons of the ————.

It is said that Mr. Chaplin has entered a new field in his latest production. The "custard pie" variety of humor has been discarded along with many of the famous Chaplin tricks and "The Kid" makes its bid for popularity as a straight comedy. Of course the old Chaplin make-up, flat shoes, battered derby and ill-fitting clothing is still retained but here the old ideas end. In fact "The Kid" might have been a drama had it been developed along different lines. "The Kid" is in six reels with so many laughs crowded into it that even such great comedy pictures as his previous productions such as "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" are relegated to the rear ranks as laugh producers. Young Mr. Coogan, who is "The Kid," is the most remarkable child actor ever presented on the screen. He is entitled to a full share of honor for the picture's entertaining qualities.

PROGRAM READER

We've got it. It cost a lot of money but it is going to be worth it to us and to you. "The Kid" the first six-reeler that Charlie Chaplin has ever made and the greatest comedy ever filmed is to be the attraction at the ———— for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

For a year we have all been hearing about this picture, speculating when it was to reach the public and how good it really was. Well, in this latter connection we are willing to make a "money back" offer. If anyone thinks "The Kid" isn't the best picture that Charlie ever made, and that's going some when such fun makers as "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" are considered, we will hand him back his admission money and a bonus. "The Kid" sets a new standard in picture making and also introduces a new child player who is a wonder. Little Mr. Coogan, who is the "kid," is entitled to be co-starred with even the great Chaplin. To tell you what to expect would spoil half your fun. All we want to impress on you is that this is a picture of a million with more laughs than has ever been crowded into one film.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation possibilities of this picture are many but probably most exhibitors will get the best results from widely heralding the facts concerning what they may expect in the way of fun. Extravagant praise for the offering, calling attention to the fact that it is Chaplin's first production in a year, that it is his first six-reeler, and giving the history of it, is recommended.

CATCH LINES

The one and only Chaplin in a feature length comedy that sets a new record forever for the king of comedians.

Charlie Chaplin, plus little Jackie Coogan and a fine story is productive of six reels of unexcelled entertainment.

"ONE MAN IN A MILLION"
(Beban-Lesser-Robertson-Cole)

Character Study Is Satisfying Offering

GEORGE BEBAN hasn't been absent from the screen long enough to make people forget him. In fact that would be impossible since his famous character study of the lowly Italian is imperishable in the minds of all who have seen it whether on stage or screen. He makes his return as author and director of "One Man in a Million," a picture which conquers for its human qualities—it being rich in the elements of pathos, humor, sentiment and romance. It is indeed similar to the offerings which presented Mr. Beban some seasons ago. In fact all are cut from the same cloth. But a sample of this pattern is preferable to the overdone triangle. The author-actor hasn't incorporated the simplicity to the extent it demands. In several places he has allowed his action to be uneven with a break here and there in the continuity.

But the backbone is there—the foundation is strong since it relies upon a forceful, rugged characterization. It is not a picture crammed with drama and suspense. It rather depends upon the human note—the note of sympathy. Beban always plays the soulful Italian who is oppressed on all sides, but who is determined to smile and send the clouds away. He has introduced some interesting incident. There are scenes which are highly amusing. For example, the effort to corral the dogs and keep them from being sent to the executioner. There doesn't appear to be too much sentiment or heart stuff. Indeed the picture is absolutely dependable upon these elements. The character of the Italian is one that wins sympathy. Where Mr. Beban has erred is in incorporating too much detail. And the sequences are unable to carry it all and appear even at the same time.

At times the story impresses as being quite far-fetched. But despite Mr. Beban's earnest desire to provide the spectator with his money's worth, the picture reaches out and grips the spectator because it radiates with humanities. The star dominates the story naturally. But never does he assume the attitude of "I'm the star, give me plenty of room!" He gives a study which he has mellowed with time and experience. It is a perfect cameo. Humor and pathos are blended perfectly. Beban, Junior, cuts an interesting figure as the youngster who is adopted and nearly lost. And Helen Jerome Eddy and Irene Rich are others who complete the picture. "One Man in a Million" is a sympathetic little heart-throb which will interest with its incident and characterization.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by George Beban.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Beban makes his return to the screen after a long absence in "One Man in a Million," written and directed by the star himself. The author-actor has achieved fame in his skillful characterization of Italian roles. In fact he is called America's greatest character actor. In this picture he plays one of his beloved roles which have not been forgotten by the steady picturegoer. For playing square with his fellow-men he is rewarded with a responsible position—a position which serves him all kinds of adventure—even offering him the care of a boy, the dogs of the city and a romance.

Mr. Beban invests the part of Delchini with warmth and color and understanding. He is pathetic and humorous by turns. The star has associated himself with players who have been chosen for their adaptability to the roles. Among them are Lloyd Whitlock, Helen Jerome Eddy and Irene Rich. "One Man in a Million" offers humor, pathos, thrills, sentiment, romance and heart interest. The picture is coming to the ———— next ————.

PROGRAM READER

He was only a foreigner and didn't know how to speak English ver' well. In fact he came from the olda countree—from Italy. He knew he wasn't a much to look at, but he had a da heart. He believed that if wanna smile enough the shadows would a run away. His generosity brought him the gooda da luck. Soon he had alla da dogs in town. He fella in love and lost a his heart. It made him feel ver' bad when the 'Thorities threatened to send his a sweetheart back to de olda countree. But the sun it came through de clouds after a time and he was a happy. See George Beban in "One Man in a Million" written and directed by the star, himself. This picture marks the return of Mr. Beban after a long absence. At this theatre next ————. A rare treat.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up that George Beban comes back to the screen after a long absence to appear in a story written and directed by himself. Emphasize that he is supreme in the delineation of Italian roles—that no actor approaches him. Make emphatic that Mr. Beban has come back to the screen determined to provide patrons with human and lovable stories of happiness and romance. Use the idea of the story for a little newspaper space. You might obtain the proper atmosphere for a prologue by having a figure disguised in corduroy clothes of an Italian playing a hand-organ. Or a musical prologue, a sextet singing Neapolitan love songs or the "Sextette from Lucia. By all means get the atmosphere. Play it up as a heart interest drama with America's greatest character actor as the star.

CATCH LINES

George Beban, America's eminent character actor, comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in "One Man in a Million." Come and be royally entertained.

"PRISONERS OF LOVE"
(Released by Goldwyn)

Very Unusual and Artistic Drama

BETTY COMPSON'S first starring vehicle, long heralded and awaited with considerable expectation, is not a "Miracle Man," but it is an interesting, excellently produced drama that gives the star an ideal role and will probably fully establish her as an actress of stellar dimensions, if that has not already been fully accomplished.

"Prisoners of Love," a title which really does not have any great meaning as applied to the picture, is rather daring in theme, for it makes a plea for charity concerning human weaknesses in general and the male of the species sex indiscretions in particular, in a way that is not often attempted.

Miss Compson is presented as a girl who loves not wisely, but too well, and in so doing learns some lessons through suffering that are the means of effecting a reconciliation with her father, with whom she had become estranged because of his digression from the straight path, leads her to consent to the marriage of a sister to the unfaithful lover and finally brings her marital happiness, with Roy Stewart as a man who had himself arrived at years of discretion after having made his errors.

It is really a big idea on which this picture has been founded. Almost too big an idea and one too difficult of expression without the use of words to be properly explained. Then, too, there are several holes in the logic of the drama as it is developed. One of these slips is apt to jar with a good many people in the average audience. There doesn't seem to be sufficient reason for the heroine's becoming a mistress rather than a wife.

However, "Prisoners of Love" cannot help but be voted a better than average production. Certainly it isn't hackneyed and certainly Miss Compson delivers as a star. From a production standpoint it is most excellent. The supporting cast is very good and some exceptionally artistic lightings and camera work is in evidence.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Blanche Davis	Betty Compson
Her Father	Ralph Lewis
Her Mother	Claire McDowell
Her Sister	Clara Horton
James Randolph	Emory Johnson
His Mother	Kate Toncray
Martin Blair	Roy Stewart

Story by Catherine Henry.
Directed by Arthur Rosson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Betty Compson, the never-to-be-forgotten "Rose" of "The Miracle Man," won her standing as a star in this wonderful picture, and now her first picture in which she plays the leading role has been completed under the title of "Prisoners of Love," and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning.

"Prisoners of Love" is a picture with a daring theme, for it makes a plea for the indiscretions of men and finds charity for the unfaithfulness of lovers and husbands. It is a big story, one that will leave a lasting impression. In the role of the girl who must live to learn, who suffers much before she finds herself, Miss Compson is ideal. Her beauty and dramatic talent outrivals even that which won her instant fame in the "Miracle Man." In support of the star is a strong cast, including Roy Stewart, himself a star. The picture has been produced with great attention to detail and some of the most artistic lightings and camera work ever seen are in evidence.

PROGRAM READER

Betty Compson, the "Rose" of "The Miracle Man," in "Prisoners of Love," her first starring vehicle, is the feature picture at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The picture is a remarkable drama based on a great theme, faultlessly produced with the star in a role eminently suited to her particular talents and in which her beauty is enthralling.

With a story far above the average, a production that rivals the best of the year and a star of undenied ability, we expect "Prisoners of Love" to prove one of the real dramatic treats of the season. Those who fail to see it will be missing one of the best bets of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this picture centre your early publicity on Betty Compson so that everyone will fully understand that she is the "Rose" of "The Miracle Man." When this is accomplished give the dramatic values of the story attention. Tell your public that this is a plea for charity for men's indiscretions. Let them know enough of the story to guess at a bit of spice. Use plenty of stills of the star and in your newspaper ads give a cut of her prominent position with captions that will identify her as "Rose." Advertise the picture as one with a message.

CATCH LINES

Beautiful, brilliant and talented Betty Compson, the "Rose" of that never to be forgotten "The Miracle Man," makes her stellar debut in this drama that dares to ask charity for man's indiscretions and demonstrates that her performance as the girl crook was but a weak effort in comparison with what she can deliver.

The "Rose" of "The Miracle Man" blossomed over night into a full fledged star in a drama of power, strength and individuality supported by a cast that includes Roy Stewart, Clara Horton and others of national renown.

"SOWING THE WIND"
(Mayer-First National)

Powerful Drama, Well Produced and Acted

LOUIS B. MAYER has contributed a photoplay to make First National's "Big Five" live up to the name given them. For "Sowing the Wind," starring Anita Stewart, has real powerful drama behind it, and is very well directed by John M. Stahl. He has fearlessly plunged into an old theme and out of it made a photoplay of gripping situations which will hold any audience intense.

The star, Miss Stewart, has one of the most difficult roles of her career. It is a dramatic characterization of the heaviest variety, and she proves herself easily equal to it. In addition, the many close ups of her show off her remarkable beauty as well as any picture in which she has appeared. There is little to be desired in the way of acting from any of the cast. Especially noteworthy is the work of Myrtle Stedman and James Morrison.

The story is one based upon the theme that those who sin shall reap the punishment for their guilt. Baby Brabant, of shady reputation, a part played by Mrytle Stedman, is the mother of an innocent convent girl. This part is in the hands of Miss Stewart. The mother is seeking to keep her identity hidden from the girl. There is a powerful and appealing love story worked in with Miss Stewart and James Morrison as the principals. After well planned, intense, and forceful incidents, which bring out to the full the potential drama in the story, there is a final reconciliation and happiness.

This drama has a background of lavish and perfectly detailed production. Some of the sets are magnificent, and the photography is quite perfect in every respect.

"Sowing the Wind" is probably the best production in which Miss Stewart has ever appeared. This is partly due to her direction and partly to the well-developed story. It is a tale which preaches its lesson without in any way giving the idea that it is preachment. It is going to be a well liked and well received drama everywhere.—Length, 6 reels.—L. H. Mason.

THE CAST

Rosamond Athelstane ..... Anita Stewart
Brabazon ..... Ralph Lewis
Ned Annesley ..... James Morrison
Baby Brabant ..... Myrtle Stedman
Watkins ..... William V. Mong
Petworth ..... Josef Swickard
Cursitor ..... Ben Deely

By Sydney Grundy.
Directed by John M. Stahl.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the leading pictures of the year is coming to the ———— theatre next ————. This is one of First National's Big Five and presents Anita Stewart in the best role of her career. The offering is an adaptation of Sydney Grundy's story and has been directed by John M. Stahl. It is said to contain all the elements which go to make up a modern picture of ceaseless action. Miss Stewart, by her finished performance in her portrayal of the character of an innocent girl whose mother is a "queen" of revellers in a notorious gambling house, commands hearty sympathy.

The story takes up the obstacles an evil fate may place in the way of a human being, before happiness can result permanently. The most interesting phase of the story hinges upon the girl meeting the man of her heart and her subsequent battles to have and to hold him despite her maternal antecedent. The picture throbs with strong dramatic scenes which are capably interpreted by a cast that deserves special commendation. Ralph Lewis, Myrtle Stedman, James Morrison and William V. Mong handle roles most acceptably. "Sowing the Wind" is a photoplay which is said to be thoroughly diverting in character. It is a study in the weaknesses and virtues of mankind.

PROGRAM READER

The next attraction at the ———— theatre will be Anita Stewart in "Sowing the Wind." The ever-increasing popularity of the star and the assurance that this is one of the best starring vehicles provided for her would indicate that our patrons are due for a full measure of diversified entertainment. In "Sowing the Wind" an unusual story is unfolded—one which concerns an innocent convent girl who goes out into the world only to discover that her reputation is tainted by a notorious mother—a mother who has achieved bad notoriety. Her struggles—her romance—her effort to maintain her ideals these combine to make a story of unusual appeal. Miss Stewart is supported by a very clever company.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this photoplay carries a vital theme and is considered one of the big ones of the season, it would be well to give it a proper exploitation. Your musical setting should be highly appropriate. Have your orchestra play excerpts from Tschaikowsky or Beethoven. Spread it on attractive copy for the papers. Play it up far in advance. Bill it as one of First National's Big Five. Since this campaign has achieved wide publicity the screengoers will be familiar with it. Bill it as Anita Stewart's greatest picture. Bill it as a whirlwind of drama and the spectator will reap its delight. Use the theme for convincing arguments. Use every possible means to get a "sold out" on this picture. Exploit a follow-up campaign with the title featured in a different style every day.

CATCH LINES

See the beautiful Anita Stewart in "Sowing the Wind." A picture of tremendous appeal. A picture of strong drama and charming romance.

Her mother did not deserve her. Did her father deserve her? The interesting answer may be found in "Sowing the Wind," Anita Stewart's latest and greatest picture.

Suffering is the portion of all humanity, but eventually begets a modicum of happiness as comes to Rosamond Athelstane in "Sowing the Wind."

"HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND"
(Ince-Paramount)

Rather Hectic in Spots, But Keeps the Interest

THIS picture could be called quite a human document if the director had not attempted to exaggerate the action. It contains a novel idea, logical characterization and generates some good sound argument. But those in charge labored under the impression that they must add fuel to the fire to keep it burning when it bore all the earmarks of smouldering without any reinforcement. One bit especially makes the picture anti-climatic. It shows the friend of the husband and the charming widow he has won experiencing a violent accident when their motor is struck by a locomotive. Indeed the picture offers enough violence when the husband's life is snuffed out beneath the wheels of a huge truck. To duplicate it makes one shudder. Although the lives for the convenience of the happy ending are spared.

The idea revolves around a staunch friend of a waster whose wife has obtained a divorce. The husband has performed a good turn toward the friend in a time of misfortune and he reciprocates by going on his alimony bond. Thus when the young sport is killed, the friend takes up his financial burden. The task proves irksome, especially when he falls in love. But it is made pleasant when the woman turns out to be the widow. The picture is a happy variation of the eternal triangle and doesn't maintain its pace because it is really single-track in its romance. Thus the director feels the urge to pile on the action.

The concluding scene which shows the romancers in a hospital convalescing from their injuries is hardly compensation for the violence of the preceding shot, regardless of how perfect the execution. The introductory reels are given over to painting the gay life of the waster whose gay parties cause his wife to seek a divorce. There is a pleasant detail which shows the divorcees reconciled and a possibility is presented that they might have re-married, but for the waster's death. The picture holds the attention, however, because it is well acted by Miss Bennett and a very competent cast. The technical details are perfect.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Judith Westover ..... Enid Bennett
Billy Westover ..... Roland Lee
Princeton Hadley ..... Tom Chatterton
Clarice ..... Mae Busch
Dr. Henrietta Carter ..... Aileen Manning
Dr. Ogilvy ..... George Pierce
John Morton ..... Robert Dunbar

By Marjorie Cooke.
Scenario by R. Carol Kapieau.
Directed by Fred Niblo.
Photographed by George Barnes.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The popular and talented Enid Bennett is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest Ince-Paramount production entitled "Her Husband's Friend." This is said to be a deal for the expression of the star's charming personality. It enables her to extract a great deal of sympathy from the role and is dramatic enough to provide her with acting opportunities. "Her Husband's Friend" is directed by Fred Niblo and adapted from a story by Marjorie Cooke.

Miss Bennett's role is that of a young wife who, when she becomes a widow, is unaware that her husband's best friend had promised to care for her. Neither have met and while the young widow believes that the money she receives regularly comes from her husband's estate, the friend soon begins to squirm under the burden imposed on him. But romance enters and all ends happily. Such a story contains a great deal of adventure and considerable drama, all of which is splendidly emphasized. Miss Bennett is supported by a competent cast that includes Roland Lee, Tom Chatterton, Mae Busch and others. The picture is handsomely staged.

PROGRAM READER

She hadn't made much of a success of her marriage. Her husband was a waster who lived only to satisfy his erotic tastes. Now do you suppose that this introduction offers the usual triangle? No! A different kind of marriage story entirely. To detail it would be spoiling it for you. So you had better come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Enid Bennett, the popular and charming star, in her greatest triumph, "Her Husband's Friend." The picture is filled with chapters of real life—the kind of life that is being enacted about you every day. It is filled with genuine characters whom you will recognize maybe among your friends. Come and be entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played "Hairpins," an Enid Bennett release, your crowd certainly remember it. So the best plan would be to tell them that "Her Husband's Friend" is of the same high calibre. Tell them that it concerns a theme and characterization which are real. Tell that it offers a story which is going on in real life every day, everywhere. Tell them that it has nothing to do with the eternal triangle. The title might keep certain cautious critics away for fear that they were seeing something ancient. So stress the fact that it offers a DIFFERENT version of marriage. Treat your copy in a mysterious fashion. Don't by any means give away the plot. Keep it as a real surprise. Play it up as a domestic heart drama which rings with truth.

CATCH LINES

See charming Enid Bennett in "Her Husband's Friend." A picture of a beautiful romance and companionship.

If a husband neglects his wife, and denies her the affection she has a right to expect—what would you have her do? See "Her Husband's Friend" with Enid Benett.

"THE KILLER"
(Hampton-Pathe)

Thrilling Story Given Splendid Production

FROM a box office standpoint "The Killer" should hit the nail on the head and do satisfactory business wherever it is played. This statement is made by the writer because the picture contains about all the ingredients necessary to make it a strong fan production.

The story is from the pen of Stewart Edward White and has received excellent treatment from E. Richard Schayer, the scenarioist, and Howard Hickman, the director, the result being an even continuity and a gradual development of the many situations up to the climax. And then again the suspense is withheld in such a way that it would be impossible to guess the climax at any point in the story.

Stewart Edward White has selected a strong central character and has built his yarn around him. Although the character is of the cunning, scheming variety, and although the author makes him do many things which may be entirely revolting in the eyes of an audience, there is a certain charm about this deep-dyed villain which compels one to sit through and wait for his finish.

The picture brings the mind of the observer back to the days of the old melodrama, when the villain paid the price of his villainy—only Stewart Edward White has entirely modernized the characters and placed them in up to date settings.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PROGRAM READER

They had been partners for years and then the devil which was within him broke out and what a terrible man he proved to be. First, in a most treacherous manner he had his partner killed and then held the latter's beautiful daughter and son captives.

When the young lady refused to marry this monster, did he try to use force? No, but he did use mind work, which is said to be more weakening in its final effects, and then when a young man tried to rescue her with his followers this demon and his Mexicans put up one of the wildest fights ever witnessed upon the screen.

And it all happens in "The Killer," a Benjamin Hampton production released through Pathe which will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

If you care to see a real good picture, one that will grip and hold you and make you feel that you are witnessing something entirely out of the ordinary don't fail to see "The Killer."

The picture is splendidly produced, with its locale in Arizona.

Among the prominent players are, Claire Adams, Jack Conway, Frankie Lee, Frank Campeau, Tod Sloan, Edward Peil, Frank Hayes, Will Walling, Milton Ross, Tom Ricketts, and Zack Williams.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Killer," Benjamin B. Hampton's latest feature to be released by Pathe, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next week.

This feature contains about everything necessary to give the patrons rattling good entertainment. It has plenty of dramatic moments, suspense, romance and thrills galore and is heartily endorsed by the management of the ———— theatre as a sure-fire entertainer.

The locale is laid in Arizona, showing plenty of romantic atmosphere in the numerous exteriors in and around which plenty of action is injected. Mr. Hampton has been particularly careful in the selection of his cast for "The Killer" as the principal parts call for actors typical in their roles. Among the prominent players are Claire Adams, Jack Conway, Frankie Lee, Frank Campeau, Edward Peil, Frank Hayes, Will Walling, Milton Roos, Tom Ricketts, Zack Williams and Tod Sloan.

The latter will be remembered as one of the greatest jockies who ever rode in a saddle and it is a pleasure to see him back on a horse again and in a part that entirely suits his personality.

The story is entirely novel and is built around an Arizona rancher whose treachery overreaches anything that has appeared upon the screen in a long time.

If you want to see a real interesting picture, with plenty of life and action in every scene and one that will hold and grip you throughout—go to the ———— theatre and see "The Killer," you won't be sorry.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a rattling good feature and should give good satisfaction to your patrons. It has a good story strong in incident and dramatic moments and one that should appeal.

Play up the author, Stewart Edward White, for he is well known. Mention some of his best sellers and if you can, tie up with some book story in your town.

Be sure and run a short synopsis of the picture in your town papers and place as many stills in prominent places, as you can.

A good idea would be to order several stills of the villain and in heavy type along the border run a line something like this: "This is the man who caused all the trouble," or "This is a picture of one of the most despicable villains ever portrayed upon the screen. Come and see him act in "The Killer" at the ———— theatre on ———— of next week.

Also play up the cast, for it is a strong one.

"WHY TRUST YOUR HUSBAND?"
(Fox)

The Title Might Attract Them—That's All

IT surely was a happy thought when this picture was given the title it carries. Whoever was the inspiration of it deserves the only mark of commendation in this production. Patrons who are attracted by this title will certainly see a "take-off" on the sex stuff, but if they become analytical they will wonder why it hasn't adorned a Sennett or Sunshine comedy. Most any kind of burlesque could have been made out of the caption. And from this viewpoint it looks wasted here on this trivial and naive attempt at farce. They haven't been coming very good for Eileen Percy judging from her recent releases. Her sponsors seem to think that she is adaptable to farce, but since she hasn't been very successful in the interpretation of it she should be given romances or ingenue stories.

"Why Trust Your Husband?" is about the most inconsequential thing that she has ever had. It should have been "slapsticked" instead of being treated semi-humorously. Two married couples are involved in the plot and the action revolves around a masquerade ball. One husband says he won't be home since he is detained on business and the other is called out of town. But all four appear at the ball fairly well disguised. Now the merest tyro at theatre-going knows just what is going to happen. The wives get mixed up with the wrong husbands. And for the sake of emphasizing the comedy (?) relief, the stereotyped figures of the hen-pecked uncle and his wife are trotted out. He must play at romance with a young flapper while the spouse creates a scene.

This ball-room scene takes up the major portion of the action and is repeated in several places. Farces are hard enough to get over on the stage. When they are deprived of dialogue and incident and tempo and the pantomime is scarce, they become dismal failures on the screen. There is a great deal of running about and hiding behind masks and lifting them occasionally to see how the fun is progressing. The director must have realized how shallow the story is for he introduces a court-room scene for the conclusion. The ball room is raided and the innocent masqueraders are lugged to the bench. Explanations and tears and kisses. The cast is weak, too, for the interpretation of the picture. None of the players are adept at comedy situation. It is a picture of one scene and antique hokum. There is no continuity visible, the action jumping around at the convenience of the director.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Why Trust Your Husband?" is the title of the Fox feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Eileen Percy as the star. The star, who is noted for her beauty as well as her talent as a comedienne never has shown to better advantage than in this clever farce. She enacts the role of a young wife who is left alone by her husband on the first anniversary of their wedding, to keep a business appointment. Both are drawn to a masquerade ball under vastly different circumstances; and at the ball many complications arise that furnish the opportunity for some uproariously funny situations.

It is said that Miss Percy excels her previous performances in the manner of her interpretation. "Why Trust Your Husband?" is from the pen of George E. Marshall and Paul Cazeneuve and is an interesting tangle of matrimonial life. The masquerade ball is a rich scene and well executed by the director. The star is supported by a cast of clever comedy players—a cast that includes Harry Myers, Harry Dunkinson, Hayward Mack, Jane Miller and others. Mr. Marshall also directed.

PROGRAM READER

"Why Trust Your Husband?" a William Fox production starring the beautiful Eileen Percy, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It has been in fast and furious farce comedy that Miss Percy has gained enviable success and great popularity as one of the leading comediennes of the screen; and it will be in an original farce that she will be seen in her present engagement. The fun starts in a matrimonial mix-up. A certain husband drops an invitation to a masquerade ball and this falls into the hands of the two wives. What follows may be called hilarious comedy. It is fast and breezy, full of pep and ginger.

SUGGESTIONS

A press campaign would be the best angle to exploit this feature. If you have been meeting with any success with Eileen Percy's pictures why you shouldn't be afraid to run this one. It carries such a simple plot that detailing it might keep patrons away. So kid them along. Tell them that the picture is a snappy farce which concerns a marital mix-up. Tell that four young married people are concerned. Treat your copy in a snappy fashion. Use catch lines. You can have a lot of fun with the title, which is a "take-off" on the heavy sex stuff which has been released. Use catch lines around it. Play up the star, featuring her in stills and press stories.

"THE ROMANCE PROMOTERS"

(Vitagraph)

The Sun Shines on Earle Williams in This One

IT almost seems like a revelation to see Earle Williams in a picture which enables him to indulge in an impersonation. "The Romance Promoters" may easily be called his best assignment since "The Fortune Hunter." It is fortified with a good comedy idea, carries enough mystery and surprise to keep one interested and travels with quite a sparkle up to the concluding reel. At this point the pace has proven too fast and the plot is exposed as exceedingly harmless. There is enough incident to keep it moving, however, although most of it is far-fetched. The director has arranged his scenes with the keynote of mystery fairly well emphasized.

Most of the action has been taken against exteriors and revolves around an eccentric millionaire whose idea of a good time is to develop his daughter's romantic disposition by testing his faith in human nature. He surrounds her with a group of grasping trustees and plays "possum with them." They are under the impression that he has one foot in the grave. Than like a bolt from the blue, the star is invited to enter the arena and protect the girl. In other words he is employed to circumvent the plans of the trustees. The introductory footage seems unnecessary in the development of the story since it serves no purpose other than to plant the mystery. The action keeps such a steady pace and is packed with enough detail so that the shortcomings of the story are not made unduly evident.

To come down to brass tacks there isn't much meat to the thing. But the "in-tri-kut" plan of the eccentric father inspires curiosity as to just what constitutes his purpose. One never has time to take into account that it is all much ado about nothing because of the speed of the action. The star has suffered in the past from being allowed too much latitude in the way of posing. But "The Romance Promoters" keeps him active. There is no reason why he may not continue to have quick action—material like the present feature. There is so much play between the hero and the trustees that the father's scheme becomes apparent. The director has used effective backgrounds which are charged with good atmosphere. In support of the star is the personable Helen Ferguson. The picture, while of the program brand, is light, but pleasing entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture carrying a novel romance which intrigues the imagination is presented in "The Romance Promoters," the Vitagraph feature which comes to the ———— next ————, starring Earle Williams. It is of such an unique character that patrons are certain to be interested from inception to conclusion. The star plays the part of an agreeable young man whose love of adventure causes him to accept a position which calls for the safeguarding of a romantic girl. Her father is an eccentric millionaire, who to test mankind, palms himself off as an invalid and places the guardianship of his daughter in the hands of a group of trustees.

Events occur which causes him to lose faith in them, with the result that Todfield is employed to circumvent their machinations. The trustees believe that they can come into Lorris' fortune at his death. But Todfield King spoils their plans by his resourcefulness and romantic disposition. The picture is crammed with pleasant adventures which intrigue the imagination. There is a surprise in nearly every scene. Effective backgrounds bring out the action in an agreeable manner and the star and his assistants contribute clever performances. Prominent in the company are Helen Ferguson in the opposite role and Otis Harlan. The picture is directed in good taste by Chester Bennett.

PROGRAM READER

He was an eccentric father and conceived an unique plan toward the safeguarding of his daughter's welfare. He would place her in the hands of a group of trustees and then wait and see if his faith in mankind was destroyed. Events occur which causes him to employ a resourceful young man to offset the machinations of the trustees. How he frustrates their plans—how he wins the girl against every obstacle placed in his path—how he proves that romance can be prompted by simply making a girl fall in love is told in this charming picture of youth, love, and adventure. See "The Romantic Promoters" at this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

There is such an amount of originality about this picture that you can go into detail without giving away the plot. You can state that every romance is promoted—either by the young people in question or by an anxious parent or guardian. Play up the fact that Earle Williams is the star and that he has an offering here which should appeal to everyone. Tell that it is his best picture of the year. Tell that it is his best picture since "The Fortune Hunter." Treat your copy in a humorous fashion and ask if it is safe to leave a girl in charge of an attractive young man.

CATCH LINES

Can romance be promoted? Can a young man be interested in a project which calls for him falling in love? See Earle Williams in "The Romantic Promoters."

He was hired to take charge of a romantic girl. His job was to protect her from determined suitors. See Earle Williams in the dashing comedy, "The Romantic Promoters."

"THE FIGHTING STRANGER"

(Canyon Pictures—State Rights)

Selig Produces Another Thriller, with Franklyn Farnum

THE third of this series of five reel Westerns offered by Canyon Pictures to the independent market reaches the screen well up to the mark set by its two predecessors. Wm. E. Seling is responsible for the production, and the direction is by Webster Cullison. It is a typical Western picture with a few daredevil stunts and plenty of hard riding, a bit of mystery thrown over it all which starts it off in the manner of a "crook" story, and just a touch of romance.

Farnum has not been given the usual role of a Western hero. The story opens in a city prison, where the star, playing "Australia Joe," a criminal, is released from the penitentiary. The second thread of the story concerns a business man who has been sentenced unjustly, having been the tool of a mysterious "man higher up." "Australia Joe" continues his career of crime and there is a good chase scene after he attempts to rob a safe. Escaping, he leaves for the West, and the riding and shooting enter automatically. He and his band of bandit rob the town hall to obtain a book of land records required by the "man higher up" for his safety. A delirious companion reveals to the star the identity of the master mind and Joe, determined to punish him, interrupts his wedding to the daughter of the man whom he has unjustly sent to prison.

At the very end "Australia Joe" flashes a badge and shows himself to be, not a bandit, but a secret service man. Thus is our hero a hero after all, and the criminals are all brought to justice. It is a true surprise, but some may find difficulty in accounting for his supposed crimes when he was a guardian of the law all the time. It is logical enough, however, if they figure it out.

Drama is, of course, sacrificed somewhat to bring in all the action. It is a picture which will satisfy completely as a Western.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

"Australia Joe"	Franklyn Farnum
Madeline Ayre	Flora Hollister
Winthrop Ayre	W. A. Alleman
Bob Scarritt	Churchill Scott
"Laughing" Billy	W. A. Bartlett
Mrs. Ayre	Emma Burns
Joe Kilburn	Vester Pegg

Produced by Wm. N. Selig.
Directed by Webster Cullison.
Adapted from the novel by Wm. E. Wing.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Fighting Stranger," the Canyon production, which will be the feature picture at the ———— theatre on ———— and ————, brings back an old favorite screen actor to the patrons of the ————. He is Franklyn Farnum, who will be recalled as one of the most virile and likeable screen stars who delineate the character of the Western plainsman.

"The Fighting Stranger" is far more than a rough-and-tumble story of cowboys and Indians. It contains real drama and a surprising amount of heart interest. Its most likeable feature, however, is the stirring and unceasing action. Few, if any actors can handle a horse better than Mr. Farnum. Seemingly forgetful of all danger to himself, this daring star rides down precipices, leaps across chasms, and guides his horse across the rocky and almost impassable stretches of the plains.

In addition to the fast action, there is a gripping mystery story contained in "The Fighting Stranger." This story reached the public as a novel under the title of "Danger" by William E. Wing. Playing opposite the star is Flora Hollister, a beautiful and accomplished screen actress. The others in the cast are skilled horsemen who assist Farnum in giving the picture audiences one of the most thrilling and virile dramas that have reached the screen in many a moon.

PROGRAM READER

Thrills, romance and mystery! With these three elements as the principal ingredients of its story, with Franklyn Farnum as its star, and with a capable supporting cast, "The Fighting Stranger," which will be the feature picture at the ———— theatre on ————, is going to be one of the most popular pictures of the year among ———— patrons. This production, produced by Wm. Selig, the great creator of countless thrilling dramas of the Western plains, shows the daredevil screen star at his best. Seldom have so many thrills been compressed into one picture. Farnum, a daring horseman, is also proficient with the lasso. Lovers of action and thrills cannot afford to miss this picture.

While primarily a story of the Western plains, part of the action is laid in a large city. There is plenty of mystery in the story and the suspense never lessens for a single moment throughout the five reels.

SUGGESTIONS

You can promise your patrons both mystery and thrilling Western action in this one and they will not be disappointed. Appeal especially to the picture fan who likes hard riding, shooting and fighting. Franklyn Farnum will be well remembered by those who have seen the first or second picture of this series, or the serial "Vanishing Trails." He presents a likeable appearance and a lobby photograph of him should attract many. You can run teaser ads. in the newspapers reading—"The fighting stranger is in town. Be on the watch for him!" The fact that it is adapted from the novel by Wm. Wing will not mean very much, unless you can prove to yourself by library statistics that it has had a wide circulation in your town, which may be the case.

"SOMETHING DIFFERENT"
(Realart)

Rather Frail, But Backgrounds Save It

THE producers certainly haven't hit upon something different in theme and characterization for Constance Binney's latest release. In fact it belongs to a very ancient screen formula—one which is lugged out whenever there is a scarcity of idea. However, it has been used against a highly colorful background and moves with considerable vigor so that the obviousness is more or less eliminated. Instead of placing the figure of a young ne'er-do-well in the center of a comic opera revolution, (the natural plan), the sponsors have substituted a society girl, bored with her monotonous existence.

The story doesn't take any time in getting started. She is hardly in Central America before the hero is trotted out in the figure of a generalissimo. And so the orthodox action begins. The romantic conflict finds development in the hero teaching the girl good manners. Her proud spirit is broken when she is imprisoned in his hacienda because of her rebellious attitude and the fact that she is something of a spy. It is a romance of "give and take" with the girl taking all the abuse and insults. His seeming indifference fascinates the girl, although it is her fancy to appear greatly provoked. In due time she is released and the hero journeys to the States to renew his romance. It finishes according to Hoyle.

Miss Binney and her company have gone to proper locations—either Jacksonville or Havana. And the backgrounds certainly lend correct atmosphere. The director, appreciating the comic opera idea, has dispensed with the warfare. Which is a mark in his favor. He has paid most of his attention to the romantic phase. The spectator is offered flashes of Miss Binney registering coyness, pride, playfulness, stubborness and other feminine fancies. He is also offered a chance to see Crane Wilbur, again, in the role of a Spanish Bolshevik. This player has only a small bit, but he still remembers how to assert his personality by using his profile. Ward Crane is the hero and plays his part in a quiet, effective manner. The picture carries even continuity, the scenes being well arranged and not overburdened with padding. The production is better than the story.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a girl who longed for adventure and got it in good measure is told in "Something Different," the Realart picture which comes to the ———— next ———— week, with Constance Binney as the star. Alicia Lee, the character played by Miss Binney, is a spoiled darling. She is bored with life. She longed for "something different." So she decided to take a trip to South America and visit an old school chum who had married a wealthy planter there. And before she got her trunks fairly unpacked she found herself in the midst of a seething revolution and a prisoner besides!

What made it interesting was the fact that while she hated the brute of a general who had detained her till the rebellion was over, she couldn't help falling in love with him! All in all, things were rather complicated, but she was willing to admit that she wasn't bored. This picture permits the captivating Realart star plentiful opportunities to score her vibrant personality. There is not a dull moment in the picture which carries romance, thrills, adventure and excitement throughout its five reels. It will interest picturegoers to know that Crane Wilbur, erstwhile star, appears in a leading role and acquits himself with all his old time dash and vigor.

PROGRAM READER

The story of a girl who found life monotonous and longed for adventure—for "something different" and found it in jail is the idea of Constance Binney's latest Realart picture which comes to the ———— next ————. If you are a bit tired of problem plays and eternal triangles and divorces and matrimonial mix-ups, well, "Something Different" will offer you a change. It is something new and fresh and, above all, romantic. It is something which will entertain you with its captivating humor, its plentiful thrills, its fine romance and its flavor of adventure. You will forget the problems of the day when you see this delightful star in "Something Different." You will come away a different person.

SUGGESTIONS

You can use effective catch lines for advertising based upon the idea incorporated in the Program Reader. You can play up the star and state that she has a fitting sequel to "39 East." Also play up that Crane Wilbur returns in a good role here. He still has a following and doubtless there are many who would like to see him again. Bill it as a romantic comedy-drama with its idea based upon adventure. Play it up as a "different" picture—something away from the problem and triangle plays. You can exploit cards with your merchants for window displays—cards which read "Something Different" in waists, shoes, candies, etc. Use teasers for the papers.

CATCH LINES

He offered her freedom for a kiss. She rebelled against her imprisonment, but at least life wasn't boresome. Did she fall in love with her jailer? See "Something Different."

"HUSH"
(Garson-Equity)

Interesting Picture on a Familiar Theme

THERE cannot be a great deal of variation, naturally in the exposition of the tried and true formula—that of the woman with the past who must create unhappiness for herself by telling her husband. This is the idea behind "Hush," which serves to give Clara Kimball Young, the best dramatic effort she has had in a year. It being so familiar, the contents of the offering are easily anticipated. One knows in advance just how the sequences will develop. There are no surprises in the situations and climaxes. And for that reason "Hush" doesn't always hold the interest. Appreciating the time-worn plot the director has paid special emphasis to the elements of sympathy and pathos.

In such stories the husbands are always shown up in all their selfish, relentless attitudes. Sympathy cannot be extended them. They are invariably shown up as unduly stupid. The husband in "Hush" is no exception. The wife in a moment of weakness confesses an indiscretion of her youth without naming the man in the case. So a quarrel is precipitated into the drama which results in the wife leaving the house and living by herself. One sort of condemns the wife for putting up with such a type for so long. He sulks and pouts and makes himself generally disagreeable. In due time he realizes that his wife is genuine and sincere and forgiveness concludes the drama. The director has approached this ancient theme with intelligence. He has not stressed the triangle or painted the pathos too strongly. He even resorts to a comedy relief which gives it balance. Once in a while a title grates because of its sob sister character, but most of them are in capital style—to emphasize the action.

Of course it will strike some that if the husband asked a few questions he would discover that his suspicions are false. Such a treatment would have eliminated the necessary conflict and contrasts. The picture is handsomely staged. The interiors have seemingly been taken care of by an expert decorator with all details in good taste. The soft pedal has been used. None of the players are guilty of emotional display. This subdued interpretation makes such a drama ring more genuine than when heroics are given indulgence. There are some exotic scenes, one of which calls for praise—the representation of a tableaux. The continuity is even, the sequences building with cumulative force to the climax. Miss Young gives a capital performance as the distressed heroine and she is splendidly gowned. In fact her wardrobe will stimulate interest among feminine audiences. In the company are Kathlyn Williams in a sympathetic role, Frank Glendon, and Bertram Grassby.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of marital misunderstanding in which a wife's happiness is constantly threatened because of an indiscretion of her youth is offered in "Hush," the Equity picture starring Clara Kimball Young. This emotional actress has in the role of Vera Stanford an excellent opportunity to display her abundant talent. It is a part which exacts sympathy from the spectator because of its wealth of pathos and human interest.

The Stanfords are extremely happy until Vera is prompted to disclose her past. But her husband instead of condoning her sins takes an attitude of intolerance. He is blind to the fact that his wife loves him. He only sees the disillusionment. Vera countenances his conduct until she realizes that she is robbing herself of happiness. She will make him suffer as she has suffered by living up to his accusations. This course is sufficient to effect a reconciliation. The picture builds through scenes of dramatic strength—scenes which have real situations and climaxes. Miss Young is supported by competent players. The offering is artistically presented.

PROGRAM READER

Is it advisable to tell your husband of your past? No matter how much he may have sinned he naturally expects his better half to be above reproach. Every husband places his wife upon a pedestal and woe to domestic happiness if the pedestal crashes and breaks. This is the idea behind "Hush," the Clara Kimball Young picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a strong dramatic story which builds through scenes of cumulative interest. It is a picture which every married couple should see, and also every couple contemplating matrimony. Wives should not be blamed for innocent indiscretions of their youth. See "Hush" and see Clara Kimball Young at her emotional best.

SUGGESTIONS

Since the idea behind this picture is a favorite one in screen circles it would be well to argue its points in effective catch lines and newspaper copy. Put the issue squarely up to your patrons. Ask them if they would conduct themselves likewise. Place stress upon the fact that the subject is worthy of Miss Young's talents and that it offers her opportunities to display histrionic power as well as appear beautiful and well gowned. State that it is a highly dramatic offering on a domestic theme and one that is effectively staged. The title might come in for some live exploitation.

CATCH LINES

Must every woman who approaches the altar keep from her husband the indiscretions of her youth? Should she conduct herself with hushed lips? See "Hush."

She was honest enough to relate an indiscretion of her youth. But he wasn't manly enough to appreciate her sincerity. What resulted? See "Hush" with Clara Kimball Young.

"RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL"
(Universal)

Gladys Walton Scores in Heart Interest Story

THE elements which compose Gladys Walton's latest photoplay are sure-fire in their appeal and there is no doubt that "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," will meet with popular approval. Permit a pleasing personality like Miss Walton to appear in a vivid study of a street waif who manages to be happy despite a drunken father's abuse and then permit her to double in brass, as it were, and play the pampered daughter of the rich, and it is dollars to doughnuts that the picture will get over. J. G. Hawks has fashioned his tale after the manner of Mark Twain's "Prince and the Pauper." In other words, the girl of riches becomes the girl of poverty and vice versa.

This is a good idea for the expression of Miss Walton's talent and charm. It offers her opportunities to present vivid contrasts. The environment of the poor is shown alongside of the estate of the rich. The early footage is given up to planting the characterization, after which it swings into its action—action of a melodramatic and local color brand. The introductory scenes show the Irish lass dancing on the pavement and going after beer for her father. She wanders to the rich girl's estate and the exchange of identities takes place. Quite appealing are those scenes given up to Miss Walton taking delight in the manners and customs of society. A bath in an artistic bathroom, followed by a royal dinner, are sure-fire incidents.

If the story sags, and it does so occasionally, the director introduces melodramatic hokum and the interest is maintained. The rich girl, disguised in the other's clothes, is made the victim of a kidnapping party, but is rescued in time to give the "alley gang" a dinner party. The author conveniently eliminates the drunken father by exposing his relationship as a fraud. Thus the poor girl is destined to become rich. The picture is Gladys Walton's any way you look at it. She is maintaining the stride revealed in "Pink Tights" and knows more about impersonation than a lot of beauties masquerading as stars. The action is told against a street set or two and the interiors of the tenement and the palace. The studio atmosphere is exposed in one scene which shows the breath exhalations of the players. Such a story is far-fetched. But Mark Twain found it sure-fire and so has J. G. Hawks. "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," is vivid in characterization and carries the elements of heart interest, pathos and romance. The double exposure work is commendable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Walton, the Universal star who just exudes personality in every gesture she makes, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," a picture written by J. Hawks. Patrons of the ———— who were fortunate enough to see "Pink Tights," will be delighted to know that the star has another role which is equally as strong in entertaining possibilities. The star plays a sort of dual role. As Nora McShane she ventures into the estate of a rich girl who feels like a bird in a gilded cage.

The two girls exchange places which naturally precipitates a lively lot of action. The incident reveals the star having a charming time adopting the customs of the rich and as the latter girl venturing into Poverty Row. The true identity of the girls is established eventually and all ends happily when the poor girl is adopted into the other's family. Miss Walton is rapidly forging to the front as a very accomplished actress and she gives a delightful performance here. Others in the cast are Antrim Short and Gordon McGregor. The picture is appropriately staged.

PROGRAM READER

She lived in Poverty Row and there was another girl who looked exactly like her who lived in a gilded palace. The poor girl would like to have some of the other's pleasures and the rich girl longed to flee away from her cage. So the two girls met and had their wish. How they exchanged identities and found pleasure and excitement is told in five reels of delightful entertainment. "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" is chock full of pathos and heart interest. The star of this picture is Gladys Walton who will be remembered for her charming performance in "Risky Business" and "Pink Tights." Come to the ———— next ———— and be royally entertained by one of the most accomplished actresses on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell them that Gladys Walton is coming in a fitting successor to "Pink Tights." Tell them that it carries the same kind of sure-fire incident and action. Tell them that the picture is similar to Mark Twain's classic, "The Prince and the Pauper" although entirely different. Play up stills of the star in her different costumes. Emphasize the fact that she is rapidly forging to the front as a very accomplished actress. The title should come in for some special exploitation. You can stage a prologue in ideal harmony with the story. A prologue showing two girls who resemble one another, each dressed according to the characters of the story.

CATCH LINES

One longed to become a sparrow of the streets—a sparrow of the world outside. The other wanted to enter the gilded palace. See "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," with the charming Gladys Walton.

"HER FIRST ELOPEMENT"
(Realart)

Inconsequential and Too Vapid for Feature Length

JUST why this story appealed to the sponsors as fitting material for feature length, considering its frail idea and its single-track outline, will be the thought of more than one that sees it. While the idea and characterization are rather in harmony with Wanda Hawley's delicate beauty and charm, it strikes us that she is capable of playing other roles than that of the impressionable ingenue. The idea is all about an innocent compromise in which the victim (?) turns the tables and emerges an honorable diplomat. In developing the idea considerable padding is resorted to and the action is as mild as a church social. In fact it will impress many people as rather silly—as if time and money had been wasted on immature material.

The picture is decorated with some enchanting scenes—one of which shows a yachting background. And no expense has been spared in giving it a good production. But artistic interiors and exteriors don't make a picture entertaining even though they hide defects. A pretty ward runs away to save her cousin from being compromised. There is a counter conflict which shows a wealthy young yachtsman endeavoring to save his brother from the same "vamp's" clutches. He naturally suspects the heroine to be the gay charmer and she believes him to be a certain scapegrace. So he abducts her—takes her on his yacht for the purpose of the above-mentioned compromise. The twist of the story comes when she discloses the fact to the anxious guardians that they are married.

The picture suffers from arbitrary incident. It seems as if more could have been made from this romance. There is never any opportunity for the star and her players to portray the customary emotions. Miss Hawley is photographed from several vantage positions so that her loveliness is clearly focussed. Jerome Patrick hasn't been cautioned by the director to refrain from posing. He is caught from as many angles as a fashion plate mannikin. This story should have been compressed into three reels and made into a satire. Its weaknesses are always apparent. It is like the little girl who wants to appear grown up but can't hide her curls. The picture cannot hide its gentle action and mild incident. Feminine patrons may enjoy it, but it is no attraction for sophisticated audiences.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Her First Elopement" is said to give Wanda Hawley another of the cleverly humorous roles which she interpreted in "Miss Hobbs," "The School of Scandal" and "Her Beloved Villain." This Realart picture brings the beautiful and talented star to the ———— screen on ———— of next ————. The star is cast in the role of a spoiled and wealthy orphan, who keeps her guardian in a constant state of anxiety over her escapades and flirtations. She never gets seriously interested in love until she decides to lend a hand in her boy cousin's affair with a chorus girl.

She has never met the charmer, but is fond of her cousin enough to see him get his heart's desire. How she wins a husband and saves her relative from being "vamped" makes up this mirthful hodge-podge which is said to be ideal for Wanda Hawley. The clever young comedienne is supported by a cast that includes Jerome Patrick and Nell Craig. The picture is directed by Sam Wood from a story by Alice Duer Miller. It is a breezy tale of summer-time yachting and romance.

PROGRAM READER

She was pretty and very wealthy. Apparently every man in the world wanted to marry her. Life became a terrible bore until one day a man just up and kidnapped her. As a matter of fact he thought she was a "would-be vampire"—who had been trying to compromise his brother—but that only added spice to the situation. "Out all night with a man! On board his yacht, too. How shocking! But they fooled them all. How? Well, that forms the fun of "Her First Elopement," the Realart picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Wanda Hawley as the star. The leading man is Jerome Patrick. This picture is a delightful comedy—just the thing for Miss Hawley's captivating personality.

SUGGESTIONS

Inasmuch as this is light and fluffy it would be best to use the soft pedal in your exploitation scheme. You can go after the flapper set. Doubtless the star has established quite a following among the buds. Simply bill it as a clever hodge-podge which carries a captivating romance. You might exploit Miss Hawley's previous pictures, being careful to state that this keeps to the same high average. Describe its charming scenery. Play up that Miss Hawley will chase the blues away in her role of the gay charmer. Play up that she wears some stunning frocks. This will interest the feminine patrons. Play up the author if you think she is read in your community. Treat all your copy lightly.

CATCH LINES

He thought he would disillusion his kid brother by compromising the girl who was after the youngster's money. But he succeeded in compromising the wrong girl! See Wanda Hawley in the delightful comedy romance, "Her First Elopement."

Well Produced Domestic Drama That Will Please

EXCEPT for the fact that the continuity is rather episodic, the story covering a period of some twenty years, this can be labeled a better than average drama, very logically developed and produced without regard to expense.

The plot has to do with the lives of the Wyndham-Grahame families typifying America's mushroom aristocracy with a rather unusually logical domestic drama story developed with good incident and carrying suspense and interest.

The story begins with a juvenile prologue enacted by a talented cast of children and then jumps to the time they have grown up.

Dorothy Dickson is the spoiled daughter of wealthy parents. Rod La Roque is a wild oat sowing son of a captain of industry. The girl flirts with a poor architect who is employed by her father. The son falls in love with a nice little actress. Business and social expediency demand, however, that like wed like, and a marriage for convenience is consummated. The jilted actress and the rejected architect console each other so well that they finally marry. The Wyndham-Grahames lose their money. The chap who has been a rotter develops a streak of real manhood, goes to work for the architect, and finally the butterfly wife is reconciled to life in a cottage.

Miss Dickson is a perfect type for the society trained Barbara Wyndham, while Mr. La Roque proves a convincing Larry Grahame. Alma Tell makes "Marcia Marillo" a sympathetic character. Reginald Denny is the architect. George Fawcett contributes considerable comedy as the elder Grahame.

The picture has been lavishly staged. It has big sets, beautiful clothes, pretty exteriors and extra good photography. The various roles are very evenly divided and each one is splendidly interpreted. There are several unusual twists in the development of the story that help to maintain interest. The titles used are of the best both in style of writing and in the information they contain. The direction is up to Mr. Fitzmaurice's usual high standard. All in all it is a picture that should find favor with any audience that doesn't insist on too much action.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the best photoplays of the season will be offered at the ———— theatre next ———— when the George Fitzmaurice production, "Paying the Piper," is shown. The feature has a solid theme which, coupled with the dramatic treatment of the story, makes its appeal to almost any audience irresistible. The story deals with the idle rich and the chief character is Barbara Wyndham, portrayed with charm and artistry by Dorothy Dickson, who makes her screen debut in this picture.

Dorothy is married to an idle rich young man, but there is little love in the union until their wealth is swept by a crash in Wall Street. Then both are regenerated in a series of interesting happenings which are calculated to thrill the spectator. The author, Ouida Bergere, has woven a story replete with human and dramatic situations. She shows that money cannot buy the happiness of the most desired things of life. Miss Dickson is supported by a cast that includes Robert Schable, Alma Tell, Reginald Denny and Rod La Roque.

PROGRAM READER

An absorbing story of how a frivolous, money-mad girl, blind to the finer things of life, is regenerated through a baby she finds in the park is told in the George Fitzmaurice production, "Paying the Piper," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is the sort of story that will interest all classes, because it deals with the real basic things of life. There are numerous thrills in hte development of this highly interesting theme. "Paying the Piper" is considered George Fitzmaurice's greatest production, even surpassing "On With the Dance." The picture serves to introduce Dorothy Dickson to screen audiences. She is supported by an excellent cast that includes George Fawcett, Rod La Roque, Robert Schable and others.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a corking title which should be exploited here for all it is worth. You can detail part of the plot which is a most iteresting one and stimulate interest by pointed teasers and catch lines in the papers. Play up the name of Fitzmaurice. Your crowd should remember his "On With the Dance" and "The Right to Love." Play it up as a great human interest play on a vital theme—a theme which is startling in its realism. Feature Dorothy Dickson and tell of her gowns. Play up that she is asknowledged to be one of the best dressed women identified with the stage. You can doubtless obtain cuts from your nearest exchange. Use an appropriate musical prologue.

CATCH LINES

On one side was the glare, the glitter, the white lights and jazz. The other, the challenge and inspiriation and simple hearts and love. Which conquered? See "Paying the Piper."

"THE TAVERN KNIGHT"
(Stoll-Pathe)

This One Will Hardly Interest the Majority

THE Stoll pictures have been hitting a pretty high average since their introduction on the market—high enough in fact to make a less-than-average production quite noticeable. "The Tavern Knight" can be labeled "costume" which should not be anything against it provided it carried a vital theme and outstanding figures or episodes of history. This it doesn't contain and the general public may look upon it with indifference. It offers an adventurous story of a swash-buckling hero in the days of Cromwell and his Puritanical uprising.

This part of English history doesn't offer any outstanding figure of romance which would appeal to picturegoers. Cromwell was not a figure that inspired sympathy. Since he only remains in the background one cannot condemn this "costume" on that account. One cannot condemn it on any ground since there is earnest effort behind it. But swashbuckling heroes have been used before without much success, even when they haven't had any historical background. This picture simply takes up an adventurous conflict between an expert swordsman and a couple of roysterers who have deprived him of his family and inheritance. Six reels is a trifle too much for the expression of the story which is obvious to a degree and which is told a great deal through the captions. There is a representation of a battle between the forces of Charles the First and Cromwell, but it is so insignificant that it offers no action and thrill. It might inspire ridicule. One could easily say that the total extras engaged numbered ninety or thereabouts.

The rest of the picture is devoted to making substance of duels with swords. For a story which has to do with life in the open considerable footage is given up to interiors. Time and place are traveled over by introducing a subtitle. There is an effort to incorporate a romance which is so out of place that it never appeals. The picture is marked by good atmosphere. A castle, a moat, picturesque bridges, and English country life are excellently represented. The acting is of a mediocre calibre, the character of the youth being badly overplayed by Laurence Anderson. Most of the cast suffer from poor lighting. "The Tavern Knight" doesn't take one into the land of make-believe. It has undoubtedly suffered from excess footage with the scissors applied too strenuously to make it compact with action and incident.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of the "days of old, when knights were bold" is offered in "The Tavern Knight," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a romantic adventure of the days of Cromwell's uprising against Charles, King of England and tells a tale of a swashbuckling hero, who has been deprived of his inheritance and his family. "The Tavern Knight," as he is called, casts his fortunes with the King and manages to hold Cromwell's forces at bay through his swordmanship.

He is captured, however, along with his son whom he doesn't recognize. They make their escape and the Knight returns to his ancestral estate. He is forced to fight for his property but succeeds, though he spares the life of his enemy on the condition that the latter inform him of his son's whereabouts. The Knight makes his escape to France but the son is killed. But romance having entered the swordsman's life acts as compensation for the loss of his boy. The picture is punctuated with scenes which depict adventurous action. The backgrounds provide excellent atmosphere. A well-balanced cast of romantic players offer an acceptable interpretation.

PROGRAM READER

You have all read of Cromwell and his adventurous life. You have thrilled at the days of old when knights were bold, when adventure and romance crowned the lives of the people of England. Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and live over again the thrills of the stirring days of English history —the conflict between Cromwell and Charles the First. "The Tavern Knight" is a picture which will make your pulse beat faster. It will bring romance to you and the call of adventure. It is a picture of a time when a man's life was measured by his ability to defend himself by a good, strong sword. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

You had better not tell your patrons that this is a costume picture unless you are sure of them. While there is a general antipathy against the costume subject, if it is well done this antagonism should not be felt. Tell them that "The Tavern Knight" is a colorful romance of the adventurous days of Merrie England. Play up the atmosphere. Stage a prologue in harmony with the theme. You might exploit a group of dancers attired in period costumes dancing around a maypole. Have your orchestra play English Morris dances. Bill it as an adventurous romance of the days when knights were bold.

CATCH LINES

A picture of adventure and romance is coming in "The Tavern Knight." At the ———— next ————. Don't miss it.

Claims One Lens Stereo Effect

been a slight variation of clear vision."

"The foregoing, alone then, would seem to contradict and disprove the statement: 'A single human eye does not possess stereoscopic vision.' But, there are many additional scientific truths to substantiate the fact, that such a supposition is a fallacy."

"The second claim in the statement is: 'That stereoscopy attained in human vision is due to the optical arrangement of the eyes; being set apart they focus upon an object from different angles.' This is also a scientific untruth, for it is now known that each eye has a separate function; that depth perception—stereoscopic vision—is not mainly the function of the combined eyes."

"How we see, what things we see most quickly, and how our eyes are deceived, have been the subjects of painstaking research. All for the purpose of helping to explain the functions of sight in man; which scientists admit has been a great puzzle. Students of optics, have hitherto believed that man preceives depth in solid objects because he see it with two eyes, and that it would appear perfectly flat if seen with one eye only. It has been scientifically proven, that in stereoscopic vision—in which we see an object in relief—the fusion of separate images is not essential; a single eye can obtain the stereoscopic vision."

"Stereoscopic phtography, likewise, has been the subject for considerable thought and experimentation. And, naturally, its study developed many puzzling problems, as did the study of the human eye. But, as in the latter case, I believe much of the puzzle has been solved and the unknown made clear to the investigators."

"My single lense process, I am convinced, is the simplest and most practical method of obtaining stereoscopic results. Particularly so, with respect to motion pictures. But, please do not misunderstand me to claim that the binocular or two-lense process will not give perfect stereoscopic results. I know that it will, for I originally worked along those lines myself; resulting in my single lense discoveries. I have merely endeavored to demonstrate that stereoscopic vision exists in a single eye and that stereoscopic photography is obtainable with the use of a single lense only; that stereoscopy exists, to a certain extent, in all photographs so made."

"No, my discoveries were not the result of accident, for I have been working out the problem for several years—on and off. In my younger days I was employed by a manufacturer of optical lenses and instruments and, here, also became interested in photography. This knowledge came in handy when I first produced motion pictures—in the early days, existing cameramen might be counted on the fingers of your hands—for I was obliged to turn the crank myself. So, you see, I was not without a smattering of the basic knowledge essential to conduct my investigations and experiments."

"The binocular method requires specially made productions and special two-lense projection. This will limit the use of such stereoscopic motion pictures to a great extent; the principal obstacle natural color photography has had to contend with. Compare the progress made in the last six years as between ordinary motion pictures and those in natural colors. My single lense process has no such limitations, for it projects the ordinary motion picture by means of the standard projectors in use; with perfect stereoscopic results."

"The 'Spectra' in the name I have given my process—Stereo-Spectra-Scopy—is there because I also obtain certain color effects with my method. Color value exists in all positive motion picture prints, to a certain extent, not visible to the eye as now projected; but which I can make visible with my process, although not comparable with natural color pictures which have been shown on the screen. I have had some success with ordinary negative, in multiplying the color values so that a positice therefrom gives me greater color value than otherwise. But, I am almost convinced, to obtain true natural color, I will have to resort to special photography."

We can now appreciate that Charles V. Henkel's supposed activity in the industry for the past year has been only seemingly so. If he has accomplished what he claims—and there is no reason to doubt it a fact, for he appears to have a broad familiarity with the subject—his success can readily be accounted for. He inherited inventive ability. His father was the inventor of the carving-machine and other wood-working machinery, the basic inventions for the modern tools used in that industry. His mother gave to the world's breakfast table the coffee-percolator.

Mechanically inclined himself, C. V. Henkel has been granted and applied for over fifty patents to his own inventions. He is the originator of the loose-leaf system of bookkeeping and invented scores of binders and filing devices for that purpose; also, many other time and labor-saving office devices and systems. He designed, built and marketed the first hornless phonograph now in common use; the "truetone" talking-machine; "Eureka" record-cabinet and other kindred devices.

One of the first professional public accountants to practice in the United States, he thus acquired a vast experience and intimate personal knowledge of the details of divers businesses: Manufacturing, Mercantile, Insurance and Banking. His analytical mind aided him in devising original manufacturing cost-systems and his varied experience proved of value in his practice of efficiency expert and business doctor.

Identified, in the minds of many, with the business department of the motion picture industry, it is, nevertheless, a fact that he has spent over seventy-five per cent of his time in the actual production of pictures. A pioneer director, cameraman and the author of hundreds of produced scenarios, he is also practical in the processing and marketing of the film.

As an independent producer, he experienced all the trials and tribulations of the very early days and with the Sales Co. His intimate knowledge of patents and patent laws saved the independent producers from annihilation by the Patents Co.; responsible, to a great extent, for the present day advancement of the industry. It was his knowledge of the celebrated secret disclaimer facts, that invalidated the Edison camera patent, killing the infringement bugaboo and opening wide the doors to present day producers.

Identified with the exploitation of Dante's Inferno and other of the first big special features, he was one of the pioneers of the State Right idea. And, subsequently, personally produced feature films for that market.

As early as 1908, he visioned the present day prominence of motion pictures. Attempting to form a company to build a chain of large seating capacity theatres for exclusive motion picture purposes, he wrote a prospectus in which he predicted practically all that exists in the exhibition of photoplays today: Large picture houses; entire evening program of pictures; multiple reel productions; admissions upwards of a dollar; patronized by the best class of people.

In 1910 he formed the Sage Securities Syndicate, for the purpose of acquiring and amalgamating the independent producing companies than existing. The patent bugaboo created obstacles, but the effort resulted in the birth of the Universal and Mutual companies. An official of the former company, he supplied the foreign film release to that program. Resigning and disposing of his stock in that corporation, he again became an independent producer.

Subsequently, Mr. Henkel was manager of productions and also scenario editor at Universal City, resigning to become director general for David Horsley Productions. Realizing the great value of the screen to arouse patriotism, he left California when we entered the war and convinced the Government of the importance of motion picture propaganda. He producer "The Eagle's Eye,' the story by the Chief of the U. S. Secret Service—the first step in motion picture propaganda— inspiring other productions which helped the cause.

C. V. Henkel, we learned, has always been opposed to the star system—to his financial disadvantage. Believes that Shakespeare is right—properly cast, artistically acted and intelligently directed—the story is the only thing. That he created enemies years ago by insisting productions should be finally edited and titled by fresh and unprejudiced minds. Thinks common-sense admission charges should prevail to encourage the fans—the very foundation of success in all amusement enterprises. Predicts future distribution will supply complete picture program upon a box-office percentage: and that distributors will cease to produce; and that independent producers will supply the demand upon a merit basis.

Another mystery has been solved through compiling this sketch of the activities of Charles V. Henkel. It has been wondered what the "V" stood for. We should say that his middle-name is "Versatile."

The Significance of Trade Marks

THE RITCHEY trade mark owes its great value to the fact that it has appeared, year after year, upon motion picture posters of unquestioned merit, strength, and power. That mark is of inestimable value to us simply because our posters are of inestimable value to the exhibitor, for a trade mark owes its worth directly to the worth of the product upon which it is stamped. This applies to all well known marks, whether upon silver, hats, or automobiles. That fact results in protecting the purchaser who lacks an expert knowledge of the article he wishes to buy. Such a purchaser, if he wants the best, buys something upon which is imprinted a trade mark reputably known from one end of the country to the other. His protection lies entirely in the unblemished reputation back of that mark. The RITCHEY reputation is squarely back of the RITCHEY trade mark. Every effort of every expert in the RITCHEY organization is also back of it, —and those efforts give it a constantly increasing value. It appears upon work so consistently distinctive and superior that the most inexpert purchaser of advertising matter in the motion picture industry can be sure of procuring the finest poster possible to execute by simply ordering,—Posters with the RITCHEY trade mark.

The Biggest Day in Rivoli History by $587—

And More Turned Away Than Ever Before!

That was on Sunday, January 23rd, when "Forbidden Fruit" opened in New York. The theatre that housed "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque," "Why Change Your Wife?" "Male and Female" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was too small for Cecil B. DeMille's masterpiece!

The New York World said:

"As a gorgeous and lavishly prepared film, it cannot be equalled by anything seen here in the past. Moreover, it is a most absorbing story.

"Even the harem scenes in 'Kismet' fade into insignificance when compared with the Cinderella scenes.

"Hugo Riesenfeld said that when he can find good enough pictures he hopes to transform the Rivoli into a long run house. Here, it would seem, is his opportunity. The mind and hand of a genius combined in making it."

Look Here!

Educational promised to have its own distribution in every key center within one year. That promise was made good in seven months. There are thirty-six Educational Exchanges operating today.

The New York Times did not feel it was indulging in superlatives when it called our "The Race of the Age" "an epoch-marking event in the motion picture industry."

Right now — exhibitors are selecting from six distinct types of Educational Comedies, each of which is the best of its kind.

Educational didn't have to promise the best scenics and travel pictures—its product in this short subject field has long been without rivals.

Educational now also releases the best News Weekly ever offered nationally to exhibitors. This news service started January 30th, enabling every exhibitor in America to make complete programs from Educational product—with the sole exception of features.

"I stand on the shoulders of Shakespeare"

Says Bernard Shaw, England's foremost dramatist of today

AND if we may presume to transfer the shavian image, Goldwyn of today stands on the shoulders of its Earthbound, its Madame X and The Penalty.

TO start things off, we announce: Betty Compson in Prisoners of Love, Reginald Barker's production, Godless Men, Tom Moore in Hold Your Horses, Frank Lloyd's A Voice in the Dark, Reginald Barker's Bunty Pulls the Strings, Pauline Frederick in Roads of Destiny (remember Madame X), Will Rogers in Guile of Women, Vivian Martin in The Song of the Soul (Kendall-Chambers), Mabel Normand in What Happened to Rosa, Frank Lloyd's The Great Lover, Will Rogers in Irvin Cobb's famous yarn Boys Will Be Boys, Jack Pickford in Just Out of College, and a big all star production from the great stage success The Concert.

Records Topple, Both at New York's Strand and Buffalo's Criterion

Tremendous crowds and enthusiastic audiences at both theatres prove that "The Devil" is one of the very great pictures of all time.

"LASCA" gave this striking young star her chance—that golden romance of the old Rio Grande, made still more wondrous by Norman Dawn's exquisite camera-work. Then came "The Adorable Savage," with South Sea island backgrounds like some famous painting. And now—a still more gorgeous, still more appealing love-drama of hot-hearted youth, flaming and blazing with the color and passion of outraged Spanish blood—"THE FIRE CAT"—a spectacular production whose catastrophic ending marks Norman Dawn as the real screen-find of 1921. Only Universal, with its tremendous resources in playing talent and equipment, can so surely produce a winning director-player combination and give it to you at Weekly Feature prices. And keep on giving it to you fifty-two weeks in the year.

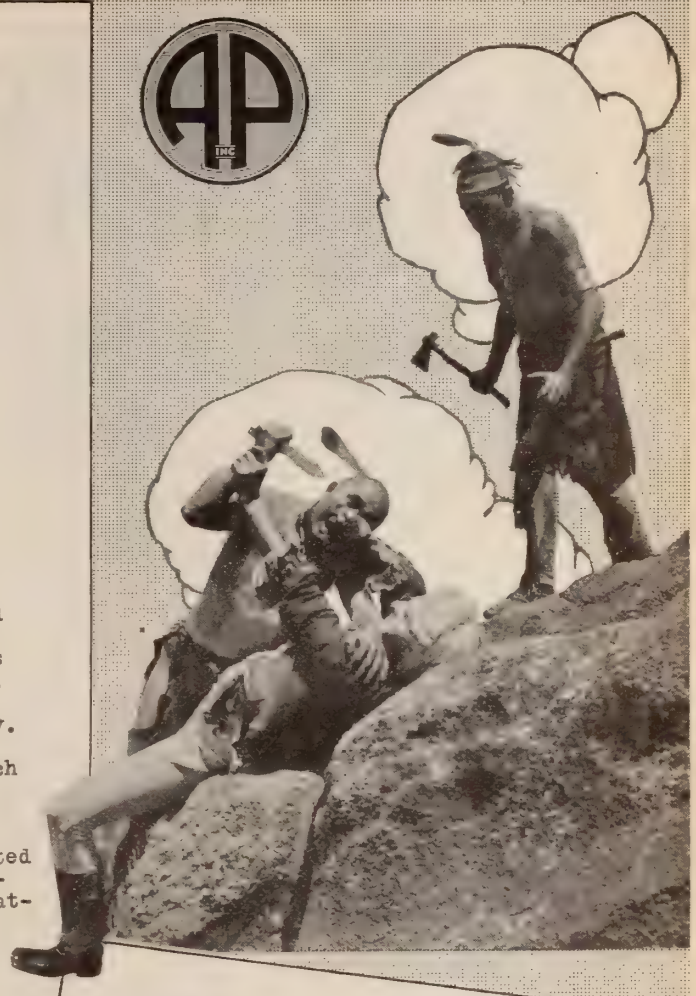
Dear Mr. Johnston:

Again it is our pleasure to commend to the exhibitors and the general public an Associated Producers' production -- "The Last of the Mohicans", which exceeded in box office receipts any picture previously shown in the Gifts Theatre.

It is indeed gratifying to have an Associated Producers' production, ("The Forbidden Thing"), break all previous records, both for attendance and receipts last week and then to have you exceed your own record. This new record made under unfavorable weather conditions, is in our judgment, making exhibition history.



This clearly demonstrates to us a theory which we have always held -- that good pictures mean good times and poor pictures the reverse.

May we not extend through you to the Associated Producers in general and Mr. Maurice Tourneur in particular our hearty congratulations upon this, your greatest achievement?

Very truly yours

Dear Mr. Crank:

My Secretary has informed me of your enquiry, regarding my enjoyment at the production of your newest film play "The Last of the Mohicans", which I had the pleasure of witnessing a few nights ago at the Strand Theatre.

I believe there are hardly any of us, particularly of the present generation, who has not read or at least heard of the famous classic of James Fenimore Cooper.

It is rarely my privilege in the rush of public and private duties to attend an exhibition of this sort, but I assure you that I took the keenest enjoyment in the picturized version of this work, and that I consider it a real treat.

Mr. Tourneur, the producer, deserves great credit for bringing this wonderful story to us in its newest form, and I am sure that any one who sees the picture, will consider it an hour well spent.

Very sincerely yours,

40 EXHIBITORS HERALD January 22, 1921

"Sowing the Wind" Strong Drama

Mayer Production Starring Anita Stewart and Directed by John M. Stahl Featured by Powerful Situations and Fine Characterizations

IN THE Louis B Mayer production of "Sowing The Wind" there comes to the screen a splendidly produced and excellently enacted drama of compelling strength. John M Stahl, the director, has built into this picture a thoroughly convincing story of striking intensity. It is a tale of passion's retributions which carries with it a singularly significant preachment and drives home unswervingly a moral that many pulpits aim for but do not hit so effectively

The production throughout is in keeping with the established Louis B. Mayer standards of rich and elaborate investiture and a cast of great competence. Miss Anita Stewart is called upon to enact a role of heavy dramatic exactions and she succeeds in registering almost the entire gamu[t] of emotions in a manner of such c[er]tainty that her work in "Sowing the Wind" probably touches the uppermost point of the dramatic attainments of her career In various close views she is exceedingly beautiful In the big dramatic moments—and there are many of them—she effects a sincerity of characterization that will yield to her a very great sympathy

Mr Stahl has accomplished in "Sowing the Wind" a masterful dramatization of a difficult theme He has woven into the picture a story that grips the sympathy of the spectator and frequently quickens the heartbeats in effectively registered scenes of unusual dramatic intensity "Sowing the Wind" as a drama of its type ranks very high It is suggestive of a wealth of exploitat[ion] and has [illegible] just [illegible]

ginal form In its translation to pictures nothing of its power has been lost Of considerable importance is the fact that many situations of pornant strength involving conflicts of sexes have been carefully and judiciously handled

The story, long familiar upon the speaking stage, relates the tale of he who shall sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind, that with every outraging of the social code a retribution shall be visited upon the guilty. Miss Steadman plays the errant mother and Miss Stewart the daughter who upon leaving a convent school learns of the life into which the mother has lapsed The code of double morals finds expression in the advice of the guardian of the daughter's suitor, the girl having become an actress is pointed to as a man's plaything The innate decency [of] the young man eventually rides [down] bad advice and the story [ends] the happiness of the girl [and] itor assured and with the [villain] tolled out to the guilty

—M. J. Q.

From love's first kiss to hell's abyss!

The love triumph of an outcast's daughter!

See it to see drama overwhelming in force!

It hits the heart like a hurricane!

He sowed the wind for his son, and his daughter reaped the whirlwind!

Of a woman, by a man, for men and women!

"SOWING THE WIND" sweeps into screen greatness!

Not just drama in the last act; but every moment a moment you'll feel!

All Showmanship

It is only simple justice to congratulate Charles Chaplin on his four-fold role of producer, star, director and scenario writer and to assure the film world that "The Kid" is entitled to a place at the head of the Grade A Chaplin releases.

"The Kid," long expected, is worth every second of the waiting. The Charles Chaplin six-reel feature will receive a rousing welcome from public and exhibitors.

Will Live Forever

"The Kid" is worth waiting for.

It is Chaplin's best picture.

It will live when other pictures have died. Its pathos is universal in its appeal; its humor is classic.

We think that he is a humanitarian. He understands the hearts of the irresponsibles, the children and the willing failures of the world. Even the broadest humor of "The Kid" is touched by the whimsical and the pathetic.

Chaplin's co-star is little Jack Coogan, the most delightful child on the screen. Jack is a miniature Chaplin. Some very fine acting also is done by Edna Purviance, who beats the emotional actresses at their own game.

—Morning Telegraph.

Will Set New Records

Chaplin's "The Kid" lives up to expectations which is saying considerable. Perhaps no picture has ever been ushered into official being with so much to recommend it from an exhibitor's standpoint.

It is actually a drama, developed with a splendid lot of highly original and absolutely new incidents, played in an exaggerated tempo with such skill, not only by the star, but the entire supporting cast that the result is a high class comedy.

Mr. Chaplin and his principal comedy assistant, the child player, Jackie Coogan, earn their laughs by legitimate methods.

There is no doubt that "The Kid" is going to receive the attention of the entire picture-going public and if it doesn't set new box-office records our judgment is badly at fault.

—Motion Picture News.

Chaplin's Greatest

"The Kid" leaves little room for argument; there will be few if any who will not regard it as one of the greatest box office attractions since the commencement of pictures. It is that type of picture that can return again and again.

"The Kid is an extraordinary medley of pathos and humor, accomplishing in no uncertain manner an amount of strength and heart interest that is seldom seen. It is unlike anything that has ever previously been done. It fits under no known classification. It stands alone. Unless all indications fail, this Chaplin feature will be a sensational box office attraction, winning and holding the public's favor for many a year.

Jackie Coogan, that delightful youngster, registers so convincingly that many will acclaim him the real star of the play. The little fellow's scenes are certainly surefire. Of considerable pictorial importance is Miss Edna Purviance who is exceedingly beautiful. It is probably the finest work of her career.

The public will in turn laugh and weep and as the final is flashed on the screen they will regret that the picture is ended—which to our mind is just about the acid test of a great picture.

Chaplin returns to the screen in his greatest picture, great as a comedy and great as a drama. In it he is a master of dramatic as well as comedy situations.

A Knockout

"The Kid" is a knockout.

That's all. This tells the story in a nutshell.

If you don't get this—it's your own funeral. Because it's all THERE anywhere you look at it.

The story is there with a wallop. A synopsis cannot begin to do justice to the innumerable bits of real humor, of real comedy, that, interspersed as they are, contribute to making this one of the greatest pictures you ever had a chance to book.

Little Jackie Coogan is "The Kid." A newcomer with a real personality, he is immense. Edna Purviance has a mighty good part, and Charlie—well, he is the same old irresistible laugh maker that he has always been.

VOL. XXIII FEBRUARY 5, 1921 No. VII

How Is Business?

PERHAPS the best answer to the oft heard question:—how is the exhibitor doing?—is given in a general report we have just received from Ohio.

The report is typical, we believe, of the entire country, excepting, of course, those towns and sections hit hard by industrial depression or a severe drop in commodity prices, like cotton for instance.

Exhibitors who are selecting their pictures, fighting hard for the better picture—and getting it, who then advertise it for all it will stand, and for the longest run it will stand, are doing well.

The exhibitor who is running any old picture and letting the poster advertise it is up against it now—to the point of desperation. He slipped along fairly well in very prosperous times. Today his lackadaisical showmanship won't stand the test.

It is also interesting to note, in the report, that some exhibitors of the latter class awakened at the eleventh hour, put the balance of their financial resources into better pictures, better music, better advertising, and found their feet again.

So the answer for the exhibitor today is: Harder work,—eternal vigilance, first in picking the picture, secondly in putting it over. The public must be attracted, as never before—not merely allowed to walk in.

And there's an interesting lesson here for the rest of the industry, too.

It is this: Easy money times are misleading. They will tolerate anything. The bad goes along with the good. Economic wrongs are permitted. But let even a slight pinch come and the truth comes to the surface.

The truth is that what the public wants is selected pictures. Therefore the exhibitors want selected pictures. And what the industry at large wants is some system which makes selected pictures possible and profitable and which doesn't encourage a volume of humdrum and unprofitable pictures.

In other words we want—we hesitate to resurrect this old and well worn phrase, but it rises constantly like Banquos' ghost—we want, as much as ever and, we believe, more than ever—fewer pictures, better pictures, and longer runs.

The Exhibitor Never Fails

THERE is every indication that the industry will make a most creditable showing in connection with its quota of the Hoover fund for the starving children of Central Europe.

Exhibitors who have borne the brunt of the effort—not an easy or simple one, these days—deserve the thanks of all of us for one of the most worthy campaigns the screen has ever undertaken.

We can't help remarking that the large contributions made by wealthy individuals last year to the Reform movements in order to evade government taxes might have been made for the saving of human life. The picture theatre is now doing this charity with one hand and fighting the well financed Reform with the other.

The Music Conference

TO those who believe in the future of the photoplay palace as the community center of the two arts—screen and music—this week's Music-Picture Conference at the Hotel Astor gave many encouraging signs.

It must be admitted that MOTION PICTURE NEWS did not embark on the promotion of this conference without some misgivings. There are warnings aplenty in the skies for the man or the organization "ahead of the times." To be able to say that success has crowned our efforts is to express only mildly our gratification and our gratitude to those who have made this cheerful result possible. In particular does this appreciation extend to those whose informative and interesting addresses went so far to add to the intrinsic value of the sessions.

To exhibitors in every part of the country the Music Conference carries a vital message. The orchestra leaders in picture theatres are no longer merely outsiders "hired" to play in a picture house. They are at once pioneers and students in a new art; sincere, earnest, striving heartily to contribute something new to the Fifth Estate. The manufacturer of musical instruments, organs, etc., is not merly "selling" the picture theatre; he is, by research and experiment, by counsel and warning, carrying on—and carrying forward.

That is the big lesson of the conference as it struck us, and we know its far-reaching effects during the coming year will impress exhibitors. And this means plain John Smith with his three hundred seat house as well as the magnate with the three thousand cushion palace.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Blackton and Staff Sail for England Feb. 3

J. Stuart Blackton, pioneer American photoplay producer, will sail for England on the Aquitania next Thursday, February 3rd, to open studios in London and make photoplays for international distribution.

Commodore Blackton's departure has been delayed several weeks for the completion of business arrangements in this country, including the distribution plans for his features, the closing of his American organization, and the sale of his residence and other real estate and his art collection.

With Commodore Blackton will go his family. He will also be accompanied by Felix Orman and Almon C. Whiting, who are to act as literary director and art director of the Blackton productions respectively, and several members of his Brooklyn Studio technical staff. A residence for the Blacktons has been leased in London.

The Blackton organization will be known as the Blackton Productions, Ltd., and the offices will comprise a floor in the Bush Building, Aldwych, Strand, which have already been opened by Chester A. Clegg, an American, for some time resident in London who is to be business manager of the new international producing company.

The London studios of Commodore Blackton will be large and complete. Much of the electric equipment from the Blackton studios in Brooklyn was shipped to London two weeks ago, and much other equipment has been manufactured specially for work in England after plans and devices designed by Commodore Blackton.

Idaho Exhibitors Seeking Improved Parcel Post

Following a discussion at the regular meeting of the Idaho Theatre Managers' Association, held at Boise on January 12, 13 and 14, a resolution was adopted in which the Post Office authorities were asked to improve and systematize the shipping of film by parcel post. A copy of the resolution was sent to Postmaster General Burleson together with a letter explaining that it was now necessary to ship films by express with a consequent added expense upon exchanges, because of the poor parcel post service.

Edward S. Moffat, advertising manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was married Saturday, January 22, at the Church of the Transfiguration in New York City. The bride was Emma Kellogg Pierce, daughter of Mr. Carlton B. Pierce of Cranford, N. J. Universal presented the bride and groom with a handsome chest of silver. The married couple will reside at Forest Hills, L. I.

Ballance Succeeds Kent

H. G. Ballance, general sales manager of Famous Players Lasky Corp.

S. R. KENT, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced Monday the appointment of H. G. Ballance to the position of general sales manager, the post which Mr. Kent himself recently relinquished when he became head of the corporation's distributing activities. The appointment takes effect immediately, Mr. Ballance coming to his new duties from Boston, where he has been District Manager in charge of the Boston and New Haven Exchanges.

The record of Mr. Ballance reads not unlike that of Mr. Kent and others of the prominent younger executives of the industry. He entered the motion picture field some seven or eight years ago as an exhibitor in San Diego, Cal. He later opened a State Rights exchange in Denver, which he conducted for two years, when he joined the Metro organization as Branch Manager at Los Angeles. In July, 1918, Mr. Ballance joined the Paramount organization, in charge of the Los Angeles Exchange.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Ballance, Mr. Kent paid a high tribute to the executive ability of his successor. "He is constructive to the highest degree," said Mr. Kent, "and is one of those men who always seem to have time to assist in developing those people directly associated with him."

8th Annual Saenger Banquet in New Orleans

Fabacher's Rathskeller, in New Orleans, was the scene of the eighth annual banquet of the New Orleans contingent of the Saenger Amusement Company on December 29th. More than 300 persons attended. A neatly gotten up little booklet containing the menu and short sketch of officials served as a souvenir of the occasion.

Capital Film Co. Moves

The Capital Film Company, Inc., of Chicago, announces that it has moved its general offices to the Hartford Building at Dearborn and Madison streets.

Testimonial Dinner Given Sydney R. Kent

An impromptu testimonial dinner was given in honor of Sidney R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on Monday evening, January 24, in New York, by a number of the members of the Paramount distribution organization who have been in close business association with him.

Beside Mr. Kent those present were Assistant Treasurer Emil E. Shauer, H. G. Ballance, General Sales Manager; Frank V. Chamberlin, General Service Manager; H. M. Lewis and John W. Hicks, Assistant Sales Managers; George W. Weeks, General Manager, Canadian Exchanges; Fred F. Creswell, Field Sales Supervisor; Melville Shauer, Accessory Sales Manager; W. E. Smith, District Manager, Philadelphia; H. H. Buxbaum, Branch Manager, New York Exchange; Lester Rosenthal, Branch Manager, Washington Exchange; John D. Clark, Branch Manager, Philadelphia Exchange; Jerome Beatty, Director of Publicity and Advertising; Claud Saunders, Exploitation Manager, and Oscar A. Morgan, Editor of Paramount "Pep."

California Organization Names Business Manager

At the meeting of the Allied Amusement Industries of California, held on January 14, the board of directors appointed Honorable Charles A. Nelson as the business representative of the organization. Mr. Nelson is and has been for the past three terms a member of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco and is a former member of the State Legislature.

The success of the Allied Amusement Industries is due to the work they have been doing in protecting the amusement interests of California, safeguarding the theatrical interests against adverse city and state legislation, such as Sunday closing, censorship and various other movements of the reform elements, and that they have found it necessary to have special representatives as a business manager to give the undivided attention required to combat these so-called reforms.

William S. Hart Aids in Hoover Fund Drive

According to a statement from the headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, William S. Hart, the Paramount star, has donated to the cause of the European Relief Council 290 autographed copies of his well-known book, "Pinto Ben." The distribution of these books has been entrusted to the Paramount exchanges, ten copies going to each one of the exchange-offices. The money derived from the sale of these books will be devoted entirely to the Hoover Fund. Exchange managers will sell the volumes direct or auction them off, according to whichever way they believe most revenue will be realized.

Motion-Picture Musical Conference Opens in New York

THE first national conference of motion-picture and musical interests opened at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Monday of this week at 10 a. m. Dr. Charles D. Isaacson, musical editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, presided as chairman of the meeting. Although a prelude to the conference was held on Sunday evening at De Witt Clinton Hall in the form of a New York Globe Concert dedicated to the Motion Picture Conference, the formal opening of the national conference did not take place until Monday morning at the Astor. The conference has proved to be the most successful project launched to date to bring representatives of the various departments of the motion picture industry and allied musical interests on a common meeting-ground, and judging from the thorough way in which the business of the conference has been carried forward and the earnest spirit manifest at the sessions, results of a wide-spread and permanent character are to be realized. The analyses of the picture programs by Director S. L. Rothafel at the Capitol Theatre on Monday afternoon and by Director Hugo Reisenfeld at the Rialto Theatre on Tuesday afternoon were highly interesting features of the conference's schedule.

While the business transacted and the addresses delivered at the various sessions will be set forth in detail in the special musical edition to be dated February 19th, a summary of the conference at the present time is in order in view of the wide-spread interest that the first national motion-picture music conference has aroused. In opening the conference on Monday morning, Chairman Charles D. Isaacson pointed out the purpose of the conference and the need for joint discussion and consultation between the representatives of the motion-picture industry and those of the allied musical interests, so that both arts may come to a knowledge of their mutual needs and thus work together.

Following Mr. Isaacson's address, a motion submitted by John C. Breil was adopted to the effect that the musical institutions of the country be urged to establish departments in the musical schools in which musicians will be trained in matters necessary to combine music and motion-pictures. On the other hand, John C. Freund and Ernest R. Voigt in the course of their addresses pointed out the need for the exhibitors to demonstrate to the musical institutions of the country that motion-picture instruction is necessary in their schools.

A committee of motion-picture men and musicians was formed to carry forward the recommendations that the conference would make in the course of its sessions.

Following addresses by Ernest Lutz of the Marcus Loew Enterprises and M. Winkler of Belwin, Inc., on the subject of music cues and scores, a resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee of musicians and men, cognizant with the publishing business, to arrange for standardized index of themes for motion-picture theatres.

Mr. Rosenthal, representing the American Society of Authors and Composers, announced that he had come to the conference for the express purpose of saying that his society will continue the rate of ten cents per seat for any number of years desired, the same to be specified in writing. S. M. Berg of the Exhibitor's Herald, followed Mr. Rosenthal on the floor and discussed some of the differences at present prevailing between members of the motion-picture industry and the American Society of Authors and Composers. He concluded by saying:

"Mr. Rosenthal, you made a remark that in the past two weeks you have some new members, but if I may take the present status, I will tell you that we have better music that is non-taxable than you have in your entire society."

At Tuesday morning's session, an interesting paper on "The Spread of Music in the Motion Picture Theatre," prepared by C. M. Tremaine, director of National Music Advance Bureau, was read. Leonard Liebling, editor of Musical Courier, addressed the gathering on the subject: "What the Motion-Picture Can Get from Musical Art and Vice Versa." He emphasized in particular the assimilation of the business men of America into the fold of music lovers and the part the motion-picture plays in winning over the male population to an appreciation of good music.

An exhibitor's angle on the musical phase of the motion-picture program was given by William Brandt of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Brandt told the members of the conference that the exhibitors are progressing faster than the musicians and that difficulty is being experienced, especially in the small neighborhood houses, in securing qualified musicians. He expressed the hope that the conference would be able to do something to remedy this trouble and took the occasion "to congratulate the NEWS upon the happy idea in calling this conference."

"The Motion-Picture Impresario" was the topic of an address by Hugo Riesenfeld. Joseph Weber, president of the National Federation of Musicians, touched upon the union phase of the musician's relation to the theatre-owner and predicted that within a short time the supply of musicians for picture houses would be fully adequate to the demand. "The musician is out of step," said Mr. Weber, "but give them a little time and there will be more organists and musicians in the market than the theatres can use." Following Mr. Weber's address, a discussion took place led by S. M. Berg of the Exhibitors Herald.

Albert Parker, the director, gave a brief talk on the relation of music to the work of the motion-picture director. Mr. Parker said that the usefulness of music in getting across certain effects is being realized more and more by picture directors.

On Tuesday afternoon, members of the conference adjourned to the Rialto and engaged in a discussion of the musical program. Hugo Riesnfeld led in the discussion. A visit to the projection room followed. Here the library and system of indexing themes was explained in detail.

At 4 p. m., a "Round Table" discussion took place at the Astor at which representatives of some of the leading producing organizations sat in.

The opening address at the Wednesday morning conference was delivered by Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer, general chairman of the Federation of Women's Clubs in the United States. Mrs. Oberndorfer took for her subject "What Two Million Club Women Have to Say to the Picture

Censor and Blue Sunday Questions Continue to Agitate Industry

Fight on in the City of Chicago; Rigid Bill Presented in Indiana

ACTIVITIES, pro and con, in the censor and Sunday opening question, continue to agitate the industry. Indiana joins the ranks of belligerent states, a rigid censor bill having been introduced in the legislature there. The City Council of Chicago is in the midst of a censor war; Wisconsin exhibitors are preparing for the fight, and Nebraska showmen are busy combatting the bill which is now before their legislature.

Fight in Chicago Council

Efforts of Chicago's Motion Picture Commission to amend the present censorship ordinance to put into the hands of three appointed censors the destiny of the work of thousands of producers, has started a bitter battle in the council

"No permit," reads the drastic part of the proposed ordinance, "shall be granted for the showing of any picture or series of pictures that is immoral, or obscene, sacreligious, unpatriotic, or holds up to scorn or ridicule any nation, or the people thereof, or portrays riotous, disorderly, or unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or debase the public morals."

Under the ordinance, the censors would have the power to determine whether pictures came within any of the above headings. With it, they would have the power to censor posters advertising the films in question. And all this demand is based upon the declaration that children are led to commit crimes by seeing pictures depicting shootings, and are led into immorality because social affairs are treated lightly.

"Are we," asked Ald. C. E. Eaton, a member of the judiciary committee, which conducted an extensive hearing on the subject in the council chamber, "to have our pictures made for us on the theory that the standard of morality for an adult is the standard for a 10-year-old child?"

Adoption of the drastic ordinance would work a terrible hardship, not only on producers and exhibitors of their films in Chicago, but throughout the territory served by Chicago.

And the backers of the ordinance declare that every effort is to be made to get state legislation along the same lines at Springfield this year, and one of the advocates, Rev. W. S. Fleming, a Baptist preacher, declared many of them even "favored another amendment to the Constitution governing the interstate handling and censoring of pictures."

Another hearing on the proposed ordinance is to be held Feb. 3, when producers and exhibitors and others will be given a chance to talk. There is no question but that a desperate effort is going to be made to drive the ordinance through the council, and it will require a hard battle to kill it.

Rigid Bill in Indiana

A censorship bill more drastic in its provisions than any the industry has ever heard of, has been introduced in the Senate of the Indiana State Legislature, now in session in Indianapolis. President G. G. Schmidt, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, following the introduction of the bill on January 24th, called the leaders together to discuss means of combating the measure, which, from all present indications, is backed by a strong lobby and has some prospects of becoming a law unless the legislators are brought to see its un-American character.

The bill in brief, provides that a State motion picture commission with censorship powers, be organized. The commission would be composed of three members, the chairman to receive $3,000 annually and each of the others, $2,500. It is provided that the Commission may appoint advisory commissioners and deputy commissioners and may fix their salaries.

Every film, excepting news weeklies or scientific subjects, before being displayed anywhere in the State, would have to be viewed by the commission and a license issued for its display. The license fee would be two dollars per 1,000 feet and one dollar per 1,000 feet for duplicates. Every film, the bill says, shall be licensed, unless it is found to be "immoral, inhuman, or indecent, or unless it shows a bull fight or a prize fight." Judgment as to its morality is to be left to the commission, who may alter the film as they see fit.

Introduction of the bill stirred the photoplay men of the State into vigorous activity, following a period of "marking time" apparently to await action by the other side.

The exhibitor organization is now endeavoring to discover how strong a lobby is behind the bill, as it is known that some of the professional reformers of the State have been talking in favor of such a measure. The exhibitors are planning to enlist the support of exchangemen and there is some talk of appealing to producers also.

There is one organization which the exhibitors are counting on for help in the fight. This is the Indiana Photoplay Endorsers, of Indianapolis, composed of a group of society women who have been fighting for cleaner photoplays for several months. The women do not censor films and they say they do not favor censorship because they feel it is an abridgement of the right of free speech. They merely give the public their opinion of a picture and let the public do as they wish. The exhibitors have been cooperating with this body and now expect to have its support in return. Some of the "Endorsers" are the wives of influential men.

All Quiet in New York

Up to the present time, there has been no open move on the part of the New York Civic League, or any similar organization of so-called reformers, toward the introduction of any bill in the New York State legislature seeking a more strict censorship, or a repeal of the present Sunday law which permits the cities themselves to settle the question as to whether or not their houses shall be open on that day.

Senators and assemblymen are almost unanimous in saying that they do not expect, and many also adding that they do not want any bills introduced along censorship or Sunday repeal lines. The broad statement of the State Mayors Confer-

New York Incorporations Total Half a Million

NEARLY a half million dollars is represented in the capitalization of companies launched this week in the motion picture business of New York, through the filing of papers with the Secretary of State's office. These companies, numbering twelve, with their directors and amount of capital stock, are as follows: Literary Digest Films Enterprise, $100,000, Wilfred J. Funk, William Neisel, George A. Dame, New York City; the Elkwood Amusement Company, Model Amusement Co. and Elarem Theatre Company, each capitalized at $10,000, and having as directors Louis Markowitz, Simon Lazarus and Samuel Rochefsky; Ward Film Distributing Corporation, $2,500, E. F. Harmsen, Phillip Gentille, Isador Ward, Buffalo.

New York Federated Exchange, $25,000, Abel C. Thomas, Avrom M. Jacobs, Garold S. Bareford, New York City; Harry Reichenbach, Inc., $5,000, Harry S. and William Hechheimer, R. Workman, New York; the Publicity Foundation, Inc., $105,000, Howard W. Bible, Elmore Leffingwell, Joseph A. Durkin, New York; Cincinnati Grand Opera House Corporation, $50,000, Clarance W. Hobbs, Lyndhurst, N. J., Florence M. Poast, Joseph P. Bickerton, jr., New York; Bergol Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Max Goldberg, B. H. Cantor, Morris Bayer, New York; Middletown Theatre Company, $100,000, Walter V. Donovan, Joseph Quittner, Carl Pack, New York; Imperial Productions, Inc., $20,000, F. W. Dennis, C. J. Keck, New York; Thomas E. Kane, Nyack; Steuben Theatre Co., Inc., $75,000, Fred Gerber, James J. Kelly, Claude V. Stowell, Corning, N. Y.

ence, made public a week or so ago, is taken as evidence of the sentiment which exists in every city in New York State on the question of Sunday movies. This Conference is a powerful organization, sweeping in its investigations, and its recommendations to the legislature have always borne great weight. Naturally enough, when it made its report as showing that the cities were satisfied with existing conditions in their motion picture houses, the legislators took this as being about the last word.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announces that it will supply all who request it with a copy of the New York State Sunday Motion Picture Option Bill. Exhibitors, as well as civic organizations, and legislators, have been seeking this information, states this organization.

Censor Hearing in So. Carolina

A large number of motion picture producers are expected to attend the hearing before the education committee of the South Carolina Senate at Columbia, S. C., during the week of January 24, when the bill for a state moving picture censorship will be discussed. This bill providing for the creation of a South Carolina moving picture board of review, is meeting with much opposition from theater men of the state and it is expected that a bitter fight will be waged at the hearings. The bill was introduced by Representative Harris of Spartanburg in the House and by Senator Robers of Spartanburg in the Senate.

The bill has already been reported back to the Senate favorably, but the education committee of the House still has it under consideration. The bill would create a board of three members, appointed by the governor, the chairman to receive a salary of $3,000, the other members $2,500 each, all to be citizens of this state. The bill also provides that a tax of five cents per annum against each seat in a theatre shall be imposed on the motion picture theatres.

There would also be a tax of two dollars on each reel of film examined, films issued by religious, charitable or educational organizations to be exempted. All films in the state would be reviewed before they could be exhibited. Violation of the law would be considered a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for from ten to thirty days, or by fine of from ten to one hundred dollars. A second offense would make the offending exhibitor subject to revocation of license.

Nebraska Exhibitors Busy

The Nebraska and Iowa Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with headquarters at Omaha, are making a strong fight against the censor bill which is now pending in their legislature. In addition to the main bill, there is a proposed measure in the Senate, which is to be a memorial to the Congress of the United States, asking for federal jurisdiction in the matter of motion picture censorship.

Every theatre in Nebraska is in possession of protest petitions and it is expected that half a million names will be brought before the legislature. The organization is also putting in a great deal of work in other ways, and has the backing of the only city welfare board of any size in the state.

Wisconsin Preparing

The special Mid-Winter convention of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, held at Milwaukee on January 26th and 27th, was called for the purpose of making a concentrated fight against Blue Law propaganda. Among the ideas used by this organization to put across their anti-Blue Law campaign, was a blotter on which censorship is ridiculed and which advertised the convention to the exhibitor and public. Full reports of the activities of the Mid-Winter Convention have not as yet been received, but it is expected that a definite line of action will be decided upon.

N. Y. Women Take Action

The Women's Division of the Republican Organization in the 13th Assembly District, N. Y. C., at a meeting held on Tuesday, January 18th, adopted the following resolution:

"RESOLVED: That the members of the Women's Division, Republican Organization, 13th Assembly District, New York City, are unanimously in favor of the exhibition of motion picture theatres on Sunday, and be it

"FURTHER RESOLVED: That copies of this resolution, which was unanimously carried at the meeting on Tuesday, January 18, 1921, be immediately forwarded to the Legislature now in session at Albany."

The meeting was addressed by Charles C. Pettijohn, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the National Association, who explained the industry's attitude toward censorship and Sunday closing as well as other legislative matters. So far as known, this is the first women's political organization to have taken such decided action on the question of Sunday opening.

Late News from the Coast

HANNIBAL N. CLERMONT committed suicide on Sunday morning by shooting himself through the head with a revolver. He was president of the Clermont Photoplays Co., which was organized around the contract of Lloyd and John Carleton with Selznick for a series of eight pictures, until January 1st, when he was deposed by stockholders, who elected C. P. Blythe president. Clermont was for many years with the Burroughs Adding Machine Co. as special representative. He was thirty-five years of age and leaves a wife and son, aged thirteen.

Walter S. Ranz, manager of the local United Artist exchange since its opening, has been appointed Coast and Mountain States special representative by Hiram Abrams. The territory includes exchanges on the Coast, Salt Lake City, and Denver.

Associated and United Artists people continue daily conferences on merger. "If all attorneys were drowned, details could be worked out in an hour," said one of those interested. Mr. Abrams left for the East Saturday after wiring that the merger was off. A United Artist attache states that a plan to distribute the product of producers other than the original four is being made now and it may result in some of Associated Products withdrawing to distribute with United Artists. Mr. O'Brien, attorney for United Artists, left for the East Thursday.

Special Pictures Corporation is to reorganize and enlarge, increasing its capital from $250,000 to $1,000,000. Louis R. Thompson, president and general manager, and H. J. Roberts, sales manager, since the company's organization, have resigned. Frank C. Collier, a local attorney, has been elected president; A. N. Rosenbaum, secretary and treasurer; and C. C. Craig, gneral manager. Mr. Thompson has been placed in charge of a new department opened for the buying and disposing of features and short subjects made by independent producers. E. H. Silcock, who has been traveling sales representative, has been appointed sales manager.

All film organizations represented at Sacramento are to combat the censorship legislation which has been introduced in the California legislature. The newspapers are working with the film interests to kill the proposed measure.

Motion Picture Conference Opens in New York

Industry," and her address was followed with the greatest of interest by those present. Mrs. Winifred Stoner, editor of "Forecast," followed Mrs. Oberndorfer on the floor and spoke on the topic of "Women and Motion Picture Music." Among the other addresses delivered at Wednesday morning's session were the following: "Acoustics," by Harry M. Prince, architect of Dallas, Texas; "How the Organist Can Be Most Useful to the Picture Theatre," by Richard Henry Warren, Chatham, Mass.; "Scenics and Music," by Francis Mangan; and "American Opera and Motion Pictures," by J. Van Broekhoven.

At noon the members of the conference adjourned to the Café Boulevard, where a luncheon was tendered them by Hyman S. Kraft, president of the New York Concert League.

In the afternoon, an exhibition of musical interpretation was given at the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn. The orchestra rendered Verdi's "Aida," with Alois Reiser conducting. An explanation of the screen text was given in detail by Edward L. Hyman, the Strand manager.

Later the same afternoon "Round Table" discussions took place at the Astor, in which representatives of the leading music publishers and manufacturers of instruments and musical devices took part.

"Hoover Day" Is Transformed into "Hoover Week" by Industry

Enthusiasm Continues Unabated in All Sections, According to Reports

THAT the response to Herbert Hoover's call to the motion-picture industry to raise $2,500,000 for the European Relief Council, has been a most enthusiastic one is especially manifest in the fact that instead of concentrating their efforts on January 26, known officially throughout the industry as "Hoover Day," film men have really gone Mr. Hoover one better and have dedicated the entire week, beginning January 23 to the work of raising relief funds for the children of the stricken countries of Europe. From all sections of the country, correspondents of the NEWS have reported intense enthusiasm, and from present reports at hand it is difficult to tell what section, if any, has led the others in the nation-wide film campaign for the Hoover Fund. The reports from the headquarters of the European Relief Council, Motion Picture Committee, in New York, and a recently issued statement from the executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America speak of the same enthusiastic spirit with which the film interests in various parts of the country have responded during the present week to the summons of Mr. Hoover for assistance.

Providence, R. I., to Front

In the East, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Providence, R. I., "deserves a niche of their own" for the extraordinary efforts shown, says a report from the M. P. T. O. of A. Last Sunday, January 23rd, they raised $10,432. The press of Providence devotes no little space to this achievement, which is declared to be record breaking. Edward M. Fay, State Committee Chairman for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, under whose auspices the Moving Picture Day for the Fund was held, has issued a statement expressing his appreciation to the public for the hearty reception accorded the theatre owners' endeavor and that of their organizations to lend impetus to the Children's Fund. The films shown were donated by the exchanges and the operators, musicians and other employees gave their services free. In this way every cent contributed found its way into the Fund.

Buffalo Plans Big Drive

Buffalo exhibitors and exchange men held an enthusiastic meeting in the Hotel Iroquois, Friday, January 21, to forward plans to put over the local Hoover Relief fund campaign. It was decided to give the entire proceeds of the matinee shows on January 29 to the fund. There will also be silent soliciting in the lobbies of the theatres. The exchange men will donate pictures for these matinee shows. Henry W. Kahn, Metro; J. E. Kimberly, Vitagraph; John Sitterly, Dooley; Bob Murphy, Pioneer and Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres were appointed members of a committee to call on exhibitors who are not members of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association and get them to co-operate in the drive for the Hoover fund. At Shea's Hippodrome the week of January 23 Managing Director Harold B. Franklin reproduced the Hoover fund poster for his stage setting. Michael Shea of the Shea Amusement Company, is Buffalo chairman of the fund.

Maryland on the Job

Under the joint management of C. E. Whitehurst and Thos. D. Goldberg, the exhibitors of Maryland are making rapid progress in collections for the Hoover Fund. Mr. Goldberg says that in a general way the plans of the New York exhibitors have been followed. He hopes to be able to realize $100,000 on the sale of tickets at 25 cents each, good for any matinee performance from January 29th until April 1st. Tickets have been sent to all the lodges and organizations in the state of Maryland with a request that they dispose of same. On February 5th, a special benefit will be given in Baltimore of "Way Down East" for the benefit of the Fund.

Arkansas Reports Progress

Excellent reports also are coming in from Arkansas where the Motion Picture Theatre Owners are hustling day and night to make the Drive a record success. In Ft. Smith, for instance, the five theatres have given an absolute free show from 2 to 6 p. m. with numerous contribution boxes at the doors. The operators, musicians and all employes donated their wages to the fund. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas have also had the benefit of enthusiastic assistance from the press. Mr. C. A. Lick of the New Theatre, Ft. Smith, is the president of the Arkansas Motion Picture Theatre Owners.

Indiana Exhibitors Active

From Indianapolis, Ind., comes word that district meetings of photoplay house managers and owners were held at Marion, Ft. Wayne, South Bend and Gary last week in the interest of the special shows to be given on the morning of January 29 throughout Indiana to raise funds for the Herbet Hoover European relief movement. E. H. Bingham, Indiana director of the campaign, and G. G. Schmidt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana attended the meetings, which were held on different afternoons and outlined the plans. They reported splendid response.

New York Has Week of It

In New York, speakers for the Hoover fund made appearance at each performance at the Capitol Theatre beginning Sunday January 23rd. In other centers, picture houses give special performances on the day most convenient to them. The two biggest days in the industry campaign to save the children, however, were Wednesday, January 26th and Saturday, January 29th.

25% Receipts from N. J.

In New Jersey under the leadership of Louis F. Blumenthal the regional chairman, the theatres are giving 25% of their total receipts on Saturday, January 29th, to the Hoover Fund.

Draws on Community Fund

Cleveland, Ohio, is in a peculiar position regarding the Hoover Fund, for which the motion picture theatres have been asked to contribute their share. Cleveland raises a charity fund once each year. It is called the Community Fund. Each citizen gives his quota to that fund annually. But he gives it with understanding that he is not to be asked for further donations during the year. The Community Fund is apportioned out to the various charities in proportion to their needs. Now, along comes the Hoover committee and asks for funds. Cleveland has given its help to the needy with the distinct understanding that no further demands shall be made. And so, in order to keep faith with the citizens of Cleveland, as well as to uphold the honor of the City of Cleveland, Sam Bullock, secretary of the Northern Ohio Exhibitors' Association, and chairman of the Northern Ohio Hoover Movie Committee has arranged with Secretary and Treasurer Bender of the Cleveland Community Fund, whereby $300,000 of the Community Fund be applied to the Hoover Fund, representing the motion picture interests of Cleveland. So there shall be no activity in Cleveland on January 26th, but the surrounding towns are buzzing with plans to raise their quota.

Michigan in Too

From Detroit comes word that six hundred and fifty-nine theatres in Michigan will give special performances Saturday, Jan. 29, at 10 a. m. in benefit of the Hoover Relief Fund to aid the starving children of Eastern and Central Europe.

Throughout the state the fund is receiving practically 100 per cent support from the moving picture houses. In towns where Sunday blue laws are in force special petitions have been sent in to secure permission to have a special performance for the Hoover Fund Sunday afternoon, Jan. 30. Every community of from 600 to 30,000 population will have one child's performance at least.

Massachusetts Doing Well

In Massachusetts R. G. Larsen, Regional Chairman, designated Saturday, January 29th, as picture day in their drive, although a large number of theatres in Boston and other localities devoted the entire week of the 23rd to take collections at each performance. Mr. Larsen reports to the Motion Picture headquarters that several cities and towns in New England have arranged with the local authorities for Sunday performances, receipts for which will go to the European Relief Council.

The Northwest Reports

In the Northwest the campaign really began on Saturday, January 22nd, when all picture theatres in Seattle made collections for the Hoover Fund. In a wire to C. C. Pettijohn of the Motion Picture Division, James Q. Clemmer, regional chairman for Seattle, said the drive in that city concluded with a midnight matinee at the Coleseum Theatre with a $2.00 admission charge, and that on Wednesday morning, January 26th, a public auction was held for tickets and reserve seats for the midnight performance. All the Seattle picture houses ran slides and the "Invisible Guest" trailer during the entire week of January 23rd. "On Wednesday," said Mr. Clemmer in his wire, "speakers were in all the theatres in Seattle and receptacles for collections were in each lobby. Many stars contributed personal belongings which were scheduled to be auctioned at the midnight show on January 29th. Street singers also helped 'whoop it up' for the cause."

Proclamation in the South

In Louisiana a special proclamation was issued by Governor John M. Parker, requesting a generous public response to the campaign to save the starving children and calling attention to the fact that the motion picture interests are devoting their time and energy to the cause. Wesley Barry, Marshall Neilan's juvenile star, arrived in New Orleans on January 25th and took a prominent part in the drive for the Hoover film fund in that city.

In the Philadelphia territory Jules Mastbaum is trying hard to lead the country in gathering funds through the picture theatres. S. A. Lynch in the South is also active.

Parade in Minneapolis

In the Minneapolis territory under the able leadership of Theodore L. Hays, General Manager of Finkelstein & Ruben, ledge cards were distributed through the audience in every big theatre in Minneapolis on Wednesday. A mammoth parade was staged by the vaudeville and legitimate theatres. Four bands comprising more than 400 musicians volunteered for this parade. The Minneapolis plan included the closing of their film exchanges between 11:30 and 2 p. m. on that day so that the employes could join the parade. Tickets for the Saturday benefit performance in the Minneapolis theatres were sold by 550 women, included among whom were some of the most prominent in the city. Mr. Hays says that in his entire experience as a showman, he has never seen a more whole-hearted enthusiastic response to a request of this character.

John Kunsky Plans Children's Matinees

JOHN H. KUNSKY, a prominent Detroit exhibitor, is planning to inaugurate morning matinees in his theatres solely for children. Co-operating with Mr. Kunsky in this project, which is now in process of formation, is the National Board of Review, a number of women's clubs and the local Parent-Teachers' Organization.

George W. Trendle, attorney and general manager for Mr. Kunsky, says:

"Mr. Kunsky's idea in starting a movement of this kind, not only in Detroit but throughout the country as well, is not only to provide the children with plays of special appeal, but also to do away, if possible, with the custom of children attending the motion picture theatre during those regular hours the theatre is open for the presentation of the customary attractions.

"The motion picture theatre is not a place where children's entertainment is found. It does not, in the main, cater any more to the requirements of the young than does the dramatic theatre housing the spoken drama and musical comedy nor the vaudeville theatre.

"The picture theatre is a commercial institution the same as the other classes of theatres named and it puts forth its appeal to the adult theatre-goer, who furnishes it with its support.

"However, for the purpose of furnishing the form of motion picture entertainment that would appeal to the child and for the purpose of offering the wonderful advantage of the motion picture as an educational feature, we are going ahead with our plans steadily, and we confidently believe that the result will appeal to all the social and educational interests of Detroit."

Charles Mason Joins Bankers and Merchants Co.

Charles Mason, who will be the manager of the Orpheum theatre, Fort Wayne, Indiana, has been appointed assistant general manager of the Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, of Indianapolis, according to a recent announcement by A. F. Brontlinger, general manager of that company. Thomas H. Moore, of Fort Wayne, will succeed Mr. Mason as manager of the Orpheum.

Censor Movement Starts in Buffalo, N. Y.

There is a movement on foot in Buffalo for city censorship. It is understood that a citizens' committee has been appointed and a tentative ordinance drawn up. This ordinance has been mailed to theatre managers, it is said, for the purpose of getting helpful suggestions. The ordinance provides for the appointment by the mayor of a commission of three members one of whom shall be a woman, the mayor's nominations being subject to approval by the city council. It is also planned to have a film inspector. The ordinance would prohibit the public exhibition of any picture unless a permit for the same has been issued by the board and a fee of $1 per 1,000 feet of film is prescribed.

Local exhibitors had not received the ordinance the first part of the week. They are prepared, however, to strongly fight the censorship movement as soon as it appears in definite form. Some of the more prominent exhibitors have already voiced their views of the censorship proposition in the daily press. Those behind the censorship plan declare that while most of the exhibitors present nothing objectionable on their screens, some have been less careful, and that in the absence of state censorship, action by the city is necessary. Buffalo may be the battleground soon for a big offensive on the censorship question.

Missouri Exhibitors Hold Active Convention in St. Louis

City Executives Promise Aid in Combatting Censorship Legislation

THE proposed Sunday closing laws, the bills on state censorship of production, existing systems of taxation of films, seats, and admissions, and advance remittances on contracts were the principal matters of discussion and protest at the second semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, which was held at the Hotel Statler in St. Louis, January 20-21. More than 50 members of the association were in attendance to a large number of film exchange managers and representatives from St. Louis and Kansas City.

Mayor Henry W. Kiel, of St. Louis, through his secretary, William Findley, who welcomed the delegates to this city at the opening session of the convention, pledged his hearty support of the movement opposed to the enactment of the proposed Blue Sunday laws which are now pending in the Missouri State Legislature. He also expressed sincere disapproval of the contemplated state censorship bills which were introduced into the House of Representatives at Jefferson City, Mo., on January 19, the day before the convention opened. These bills were offered by state representatives at the request of Rev. Howard Billman, secretary of the Committee of Fifty of St. Louis, which is composed of clergymen, churchmen and Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. workers.

The censorship bill would prohibit the showing of any film view or stereoptician in the state not approved by the board and would instruct it to "approve only such which do not tend to debase or corrupt the morals." It would provide for a projection room at St. Louis and would give the board three officers, two inspectors, two operators, and two "patchers." Fees of $2 per 200 lineal feet and a similar sum for each additional 1,000 feet would be imposed.

Mayor Kiel's secretary declared that the support of the city of St. Louis would be directed against the proposed laws and that there has never been a cleaner or more productive industry in America than the existing motion picture enterprises. "The Mayor wishes me to inform you," he stated, "that he will go to the bat and offer you his efforts personally to obliterate the designs of a class of religious fanatics who are striking at the very heart of American liberty. If these fanatics believe that they are improving the morals of the public by banishing our Sunday amusements and sending the people to church, they are grossly mistaken. Such deprivement will only tend to increase the temptations for evil."

Similar offers of support were received by Lawrence Goldman, counsel for the association, from the Mayors of St. Joseph, Mo., and Sedalia, Mo. Mayor Elliot Marshall of St. Joseph also declared that he would give his personal services to prevent Sunday-closing legislation.

The support of these three city executives has formed a sound foundation in the fight, and delegates to the convention unanimously expressed the opinion that the possibility of the bills passing had been decreased to a minimum.

Resolutions denouncing the state censorship and Sunday closing bills were passed.

Strenuous protest was registered by the delegates against the system of deposits of contracts, and the following resolution was accepted: "Whereas, the film exchanges throughout the state have continued their efforts to exact from the exhibitor a deposit upon each and every contract signed for the lease of Motion picture productions, and

"Whereas, and deposits or advance remittances that have been made or are being made are not protected by any security offered or given by those receiving said deposits, be it therefore

"Resolved, that the Legislative Committee be instructed to draw up and secure the enactment of a bill whereby all deposits or advance payments made upon contracts for the renting or leasing of motion picture productions, will be properly secured in such a way as said committee shall deem most effective.

The assembly condemned the practice of motion picture exchanges of leasing or lending films to churches, societies, and schools throughout Missouri.

Upon unanimous approval the following resolution was also adopted: "Be it Resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri are hereby opposed to producers of films using our screens for advertising purposes by using insert or camouflage advertising in their productions." Considerable discussion was afforded this question and the motion picture owners expressed their hope that film productions would cleanse themselves of the commercial aspect of concealed advertising.

Among the notables attending the sessions of the convention were Marcus Loew, W. W. Hodkinson, Col. Fred Levy of Memphis; Julian Saenger and E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans.

Mr. Loew addressed the delegates with a denunciation of the proposed Sunday blue laws and declared that it was the great menace which in time might quench the entire industry. Mr. Hodkinson spoke on the advantages gained by individual corporations handling distribution instead of the practice of working both production and distribution by one concern.

At the banquet given the delegates on the first night of the convention, James N. McKelvey, Director of Public Safety and Building Commissioner of St. Louis, declared that the motion picture theatres in this city had done more for the general growth of St. Louis than any other enterprise. "There are no better class of men in business today than those we find in the motion picture exhibition game in St. Louis," he said.

The convention was terminated with a "Motion Picture Ball," the proceeds of which were turned over to the Hoover Campaign for starving European children. More than 2,500 persons attended.

Among the delegates who attended the conventions were: Charles T. Sears, Brookfield; H. L. Pruett, Centralia; O. W. McCutcheon, Charleston; H. E. Miller, Festus; J. R. Pratt, Fulton; L. B. Womack, Houston; Billy Mueller, Jefferson City; Ben Levy, Joplin; William Parsons, Joplin; F. L. Newman, A. M. Eisner, Lawrence E. Goldman, W. D. Scoville, A. Josephson, Thomas Hennebery, Kansas City; D. Michael, Mrs. S. N. Kennedy, Kirksville; Sears Jones, Marshall; J. E. Hayes, Moberly; E. E. Trunnell, Novinger; E. C. Mercer, Perryville; Martin Operle, St. Genevieve; Bert Howard, Joplin; Jack Truitt, Sedalia; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield; T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg; J. F. Reese, Wellsville; and the following from St. Louis: Charles Skouras, F. M. Hoelzer, Robert Mitsitk, J. P. Mehan, W. H. Field, Samuel Pasternak, Spiros Skouras, George Skouras, L. C. Hale, Charles Goldman, F. R. Spiros, John Carzin, M. E. Reickman, Joseph Mogler, J. P. Wagner, Fred Wehrenberg, J. J. Walsh, M. J. Nash, W. O. Reeves, Joseph Kodnick, Steve Karman, Charles A. Kaebfill, John Gentry, and Sigeloff Brothers.

Some of the exchange representatives were: Sid Baker, First National; Sam Fox, Selznick; Charles Werner, United; Barney Rosenthal, Universal; Joseph Desberger, Robertson-Cole; William A. Shalit, United Artists; Charles Raymond, Paramount; Barney Fegan, president St. Louis Film Board of Trade, and Ray Weinbrenner, Independent, of St. Louis and Ralph Simmons, Hodkinson; E. Richards, Richards-Flynn; Joseph Gilday; and Earl Kraemer, Select, of Kansas City.

The next semi-annual convention will be held in Kansas City in June.

"The Producer and the Exhibitor"

As W. W. Hodkinson Pictured them to the St. Louis Convention

The full text of Mr. Hodkinson's speech at the Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri reads as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, Gentlemen:

I AM here to address you on the relationship of the producer, distributor and exhibitors in this business. I want to discuss with you this important subject rather than to deliver any set speech prepared for the purpose of influencing you in favor of any productions which I may have made. As a matter of fact I do not produce any motion pictures. I notice on your badge and on the little program before me the slogan "An injury to one is the concern of all." I wonder to what extent that is meant—I wonder if you mean it in your relationship to each other or your relationship to the business generally. I wish to say that that slogan applies to the business generally and suggests the course of what I have to say to you today. We might compare the picture business as a whole to a man's body. And we might compare the exhibitor to the hands. And the comparison is applicable in more than one way because the exhibitors are the hands that take the revenue from the public to support the whole institution. You gentlemen are gathered together here with your local problems foremost and yet the hands are related to the rest of the body, and if there is something wrong with the heart, with the brain, with the lungs, with the liver of this business, in time the business will die or become unfit, and you gentlemen will suffer though you may not recognize the symptoms of disease at their earliest appearance. Now I came from New York where the big business organizations which dominate this industry are centered, and I want to give you my impressions of the general conditions which influence you now and will influence you in the future—rather than to put over any argument of my own. I want to clear up any points of uncertainty in your mind as to what you can best do to function for the good of the whole body, because a selfish viewpoint which only regards the local things, will not be the best viewpoint in the future. What I would first like to make clear to you is that I am not a manufacturer of motion pictures and never have been. I am discussing this subject today with you from the standpoint of the exhibitor who has gravitated into the center of things, with the endeavor to solve some of the problems which I could see before me and which kept me from staying in the exhibition field. Let us consider what a producer is and let us consider what a distributor is and what their relationship is to you. A producer, as I think of a producer is one who manufactures pictures or who assumes the risk, the complete burden of production cost of a motion picture before it has demonstrated its value. The distributor is an agency which carries that product to the exhibitor. As a matter of fact nearly all of the distribution systems in this country today are merely adjuncts of the producer. The control and the power is in this artery of distribution which connects up with the distributor and the producer. The producer today controls the channels of distribution. The producer is very desirous of controlling this channel of distribution because he then is sure that his product will be handled—will be sold. Without questioning the motive of the producers in control of distribution channels today, I say that it is impossible, it is my belief it is impossible, for anybody to manufacture enough pictures in this present market to completely support a distribution system, provided we confine ourselves to those pictures that have sufficient quality to satisfy the public to which you gentlemen are catering. As you know, we have some fifteen or more distribution systems. Not because there is room, not because there is not a great deal of waste. There is an over production of pictures today and a lot of unfit pictures are thrown on the market. This condition that keeps the producers from putting their product through a lesser number of channels and cutting down their product to the amount that they can do efficiently and well. In other words—I have said for some years past and repeat to you here today—that producer-control of the channels of distribution is fatal to the progress and advancement of this business and any system of producer-control will result in all sorts of excesses in economic waste and losses. When the producer is no longer able through his distribution channels to pass on this waste and these losses to the exhibitors, he is forced into reorganizing and readjusting his business. The motion picture business is not something that can be handled as you would handle shoes or clothing. We all recognize the unusual angles to it. We do not know the value of a picture until it has had a chance to be tried out before the public. Any man will find his time fully occupied with a big job with making one picture at a time; to do this it takes genius and ability; consequently when that man assumes to have enough product which keeps a machine of distribution running full blast all the year round we see that his system is wrong,—that it must fail; that such a system has resulted and is bound to result again in making such a producer buy all sorts of things at all sorts of prices in order to support his product without ever hearing or finding out whether the market is likely to buy and support his product. The producers first buy these things, incur this expense—collect from the exhibitors, and the question whether the exhibitor can collect from the public is not considered. I think this condition that I am stating to you is generally familiar to you. You are familiar with the fact that there are more pictures turned out than can be exhibited by the first run theatres in St. Louis and every other center. Some exhibitors are noting this today and taking advantage of the situation. They say: "I will take one out of every five of the best pictures this concern makes." Gentlemen this concern from whom you take one out of every five of their pictures cannot stay in business under the conditions that are shaping up. These producers have problems ahead of them, because if they do not get a complete distribution for their product they cannot keep making that product. You on the other hand who are depending on this surplus of product to let you take your choice, and you think it is going to continue are mistaken. Such a condition will not help you. It is only the wonderful growth of the business and the willingness of the public to pay more and more and more money that has let this uneconomic unsound condition go on. We all know of producing concerns who make a lot of inferior pictures that do not bring their money back but who stay in business because occasionally they hit a big success, some sensation. That is skating on very thin ice. It is necessary, if this business is to go on, that different plans for the mutual supporting of each other be worked out between the exhibitors and the producer. The organization which I represent is an effort to encourage individuals to produce pictures and to distribute these products through our organization, which is a common channel open to all meritorious productions. This type of organization has been designed by me out of my knowledge of conditions and because of my belief that I cannot print an arbitrary stamp of value depending entirely upon my personal view and judgment on films and then expect my selling organization to put these films over on the exhibitor. If I thought that could be done continuously and was good business policy, probably I would have done it. As it is, I believe that every concern in the business of distributing pictures today must now or later reorganize and readjust and limit the number of their pictures to the really meritorious ones, thus avoiding the waste caused by unproductive pictures. In this way the waste caused by an excess of channels of distribution will be done away with, not to mention the waste from the surplus products which are only partly digested as well as the waste of paying an extravagant price for stories, stars, plays, etc. You gentlemen with your local organization are incapable of meeting this situation unless you first realize what it is that you have to meet. After that you must organize and shape your affairs in such a way as to coordinate and cooperate with other such organizations from the exhibitor's angle, and you must also cooperate with such organizations from the producer's angle as are designed to deal with you on a just basis.

Two conditions now concern the industry which are going to give it a lot of trouble. I will tell you what they are, and possibly they are the reason for you being gathered here. One is retrenchment in production. That is due to bankers and others with money at stake in these large producing organizations which had their own distributing forces; these men are becoming concerned over general business conditions. That is going to slow up the amount of product that is available to you gentlemen, and that is something that you will have to contend with in the future—there will be less product. There is no doubt about that. Another condition is the amount of propaganda that is being circulated in the public press against motion pictures, favoring regulations, censorship, police control, Sunday closing, etc. Unless a great deal more intelligence is displayed in the meeting and opposing of this condition than there was any evidence of at the time I left New York, the effects of that are going to be very drastic and very far-reaching. There is a general attitude on the part of the motion picture business to seem incapable of contending

Hampton's Article, "Too Much Sex Stuff," Rouses Great Interest

M. P. T. O. of A. Objecting, Warns Picture Should not be Pillorie

THE article by Benjamin B. Hampton, entitled "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies," published in the February number of Pictorial Review, has aroused wide-spread interest both within the industry and without. In a supplementary statement just issued, Mr. Hampton explains the purpose he had in mind in writing upon this subject for Pictorial Review. "We must show the public that censorship is wrong," says Mr. Hampton, "and that the industry will correct the abuses to conform to public taste and approval."

In a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, objection is expressed to Mr. Hampton's campaign in Pictorial Review on the grounds that excerpts from Mr. Hampton's article are being used in the daily press "for no other purpose than putting the motion-picture in the pillory." The statement affirms the stand of the M. P. T. O. of A. as being actively in sympathy "with any honest and constructive movement for remedying admitted evils within the industry."

The supplementary statement from Benjamin B. Hampton follows:

"My article, 'Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies,' published in the February number of Pictorial Review was carefully planned to benefit all departments of the picture business.

"There is strong movement in all parts of the country for censorship and Sunday closing. Legislative lobbies can do nothing to stop or deflect moral force of public opinion through direct appeal to the public. We must show public that the censorship is wrong and that industry will correct the abuses to conform to public taste and approval. Sooner or later public opinion rules this country; it does not always move wisely, nearly always moves emotionally, and often silently.

"The great silent vote, as the politicians call it or the family trade as we term it, is drifting steadily into an attitude hostile to sex and crook pictures. Vigorously narrow reformers are taking advantage of the situation and are demanding censorship and Blue Sunday legislation.

"The picture industry must get public opinion on its side. The picture industry cannot win public opinion until it cleanses its record of sex pictures. No individual exhibitor can make the fight; the exhibitors must have the intelligent co-operation of the public. The exhibitors cannot get this co-operation until the public becomes educated to the truth, and the truth is that the overwhelming majority of producers and exhibitors are clean, decent men who want to operate clean, decent businesses.

¶ See page 1136 if you are interested in what music can mean to your house.

"The wine and beer interests of this country were warned for years that unless they divorced themselves from the hard liquor interests they would be ruined. To my knowledge, at least one great brewer started a movement to bring about a separation of wine and beer from whiskey, but this man was discharged from his task by talk of injuring the industry. The failure of his associates to listen to his advice, put the brewer out of business.

"We men, with fortunes invested in the business cannot make progress under censorship and Blue Sunday laws. Our one and only hope is to face conditions frankly and courageously and to clean house and to win public support."

Following is the statement issued from the headquarters of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America:

"The Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America are in active sympathy with any honest and constructive movement for remedying admitted evils within the industry. They most emphatically disapprove all sensational and spectacular newspaper crusades against motion pictures under the guise of attacks on objectionable pictures.

"The exhibitors object to the campaign started by Mr. Benjamin B. Hampton in the Pictorial Review. These articles and excerpts from them are used in the daily press of the country for no other purpose than putting the motion picture in the pillory."

The following letter was sent by Sidney S. Cohen to Mr. Benjamin B. Hampton which puts the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners on record in this matter:

"Your article in Pictorial Review of February claims that the exhibitor (retailer) dominates the producer (wholesaler). Your conclusion is that the theatre owner is responsible for the kind of pictures he exhibits to the public. Surely, this is not logic. Aside from this lack of logic, the facts speak very loudly against your theory.

"You must know that the exhibitor h a very limited choice in his pictures, if does not want to put a lot of them on t shelf and run his business at a loss. Mo pictures are never seen by exhibitors un run at their theatres. They are sold the exhibitor six months or longer in a vance of the actual showing.

"Now as to the exploitation of the pi ture, you must know that the manufa turers through their publicity exploitati bureaus, so-called, furnish to the exhibit the most risque and often the most ridi ulous plans for advertising and explo ing the picture. If the exhibitor were n restrained by his common sense and if were to take literally the tons of print advice that are hurled on him through t publicity mills of the producers, he wou be in constant conflict with the penal la and spend much of his time either in j or arranging for his bail.

"The exaggerated sex appeal as a s against the common decency of the Ame can people, must be laid at the door of t producer. Taking your own method reasoning, it is quite evident that the pr ducers have misjudged the tastes and c mands of the public, otherwise why wou there be this universal outcry against t low pitched appeal of the motion pictu and against the exaggeration and degrad tion of sex.

"We cannot understand how you f to remember that the motion picture ma ufacturer is the man who makes the p tures and, after having made them, c luges the exhibitor with plans of exploi tion. The exhibitor is the man who sho the picture, and I can assure you fr my own experience that time and ti again we had to cut pictures rather severely in order to insure our good star ing with our audiences.

"You seem to forget that we exhibit have absolutely nothing whatever to with the titles selected for objectiona pictures and, as you know, some of th titles are more objectionable than the p tures themselves.

"The fact that your plan of campai against sex movies is linked up with large advertising campaign in the press tacking motion pictures more or less discriminately, is not going to help cause which you profess to espouse. will merely furnish ammunition to paid moralists and professional reforme You are absolutely alienating the mot picture theatre owners without whose c structive co-operation a genuinely use change in conditions cannot be acc plished. Nothing can be gained by p ting the motion picture in the pillory."

"Please the House"

"And a Little Less Consideration to Packing the House Will Help All Around," Says this Exhibitor

GENTLEMEN:

The information contained herein is sent you for publication in your valuable trade paper if you see fit to use same.

A law has just been passed in our little city which prohibits children under the age of sixteen years from attending picture shows at night unless accompanied by their parents or guardian (said guardian to be over twenty-one years of age). The promoters of this law advanced several reasons to the city fathers why it should be passed. We did not fight its passage, believing in the old adage, that the public is always right. What we did do, however, was to ask the city attorney to at least consider a few suggestions we had to offer regarding the framing of the proposed law. We requested that the parents, or guardian, and not the theatre owner should be held responsible for any violation of this law,—our responsibility ending with a challenge as to the correct age of the child. If he stated he was over sixteen years of age, we could sell him (or her) an adult ticket. The parent or guardian of children under sixteen years of age are obliged to purchase the children's tickets and accompany them into the theatre. These children are then allowed to sit down front, where they have always sat, at children's price. If the truant officer steps in and finds a child there under misrepresentation, he brings the parents into court and they are fined. We intend to fully live up to our part of the law and if we are in doubt as to a child's age, we will refuse to sell him (or her) a ticket.

We have now inaugurated a new plan which we believe will offset the loss which would be otherwise sustained by the enactment of this new law. We are giving a children's special matinee twice a week. This consists of a single reel comedy, a scenic or educational reel and closing with a two-reel comedy. This means no extra film expense as we show them at night anyway, and yet it gives the children an hour's wholesome entertainment. The schools have agreed to let the children out ten minutes earlier on these days so they may be in plenty of time for the matinee, which starts at 4 P. M. Our hearty cooperation with the citizens in this matter appears to have pleased the parents, the school teacher and the entire clergy of Flagstaff. We are more than pleased on our part because the matinees are a financial success and we enjoy the satisfaction which comes to all who make an honest effort to do the proper thing.

If the editor will permit us a few more words, we would suggest that it might be good policy on the part of both producer and exhibitor to read the writing on the wall in regard to the present state of affairs in the picture business. It takes no prophet to see the moving picture game, as a commercial enterprise, completely ruined within the next two years unless there is a drastic change in the pictures, and the method of their exploitation. Now, don't condemn the stand we are taking until you have read our arguments. It is a recognized fact that the religious papers of all denominations throughout the country today are up in arms against sex pictures, of which so many are being offered to the public at present, and gentlemen, their loud protests are being heard and given attention, not alone by the church-goer, but by the parents, the teachers and others who profess no religious affiliations whatsoever. It is no exaggeration to state that the majority of the public today (we say majority, because we firmly believe the decent people are still far in the majority of our citizenship) are demanding Federal censorship, and it can be further stated that unless the grade, style and character of pictures change for the better in the immediate future, no organization of exhibitors, producers or other influence will stop censorship, and if we once get Federal censorship,—look out. Don't shout "they can't do it." They will do it. Look at the prohibition law. The majority of pictures today—in both large and small productions—instead of containing good, wholesome entertainment—qualities absolutely necessary if we expect permanent support of the decent people—are filled with "effects," extravaganzas and lewdness. Why the producers, with their investments of millions, allow the directors to produce screen plays filled with suggestive situations, near nude females and rotten sub-titles; why they allow such sex titles, and above all, why they allow such glaring posters to adorn the public billboards, is beyond the understanding of many.

In conclusion, let us suggest that we give a little less consideration to packing the house and more consideration to pleasing the house. We will be ahead in the long run. The truly respectable class of trade is the best paying in any line of business. If we are to exist it will be only the showmen who decide as a matter of good policy, if for no other reason, to run only clean, wholesome pictures. It can be done and money can be made by so doing.

Sincerely,

J. J. COSTIGAN,
Owner and Manager,
Orpheum Theatre.

Buxbaum Heads F.I.L.M. Hoover Day Committee

Harry H. Buxbaum, manager of Famous Players-Lasky New York branch exchange, has been appointed by President I. E. Chadwick, of the F. I. L. M. Club, chairman of a special committee to book and supply the programs for the Hoover Day special matinees on Saturday morning, January 29, in co-operation with Chairman Rothapfel's Committee on Motion Picture Exhibitors, who are planning to add several hundred thousand dollars to this fund for starving children of Europe by donating the receipts of these special matinees.

Associated on this committee will be: Louis Rosenbleuh of Fox Film Corp., Arthur Abeles, Metro Pictures Corp.; R. H. Clark, First National of N. Y.; Samuel Eckman, Goldwyn Distributing Corp.; Samuel Sierler, Commonwealth Film Corp., and I. M. Chadwick, ex-officio member.

This committee will have the task of collecting the material for this special program and distributing it to practically all the motion picture theatres in the New York territory.

F. L. Newman Entertains Theatre Employes

An interesting entertainment and banquet was tendered the employes of the Newman, New Royal, and New 12th Street theatres of Kansas City, by Frank L. Newman, president and general manager, on January 3rd. Over 190 white employes of the three theatres were given a party that started at 11:30, immediately following the last show at the theatres and lasted until slightly past 5 o'clock in the morning.

In addition to the banquet, a novel entertainment was presented by a number of employes. During the serving of the meal, the Admiral Sims Sextette, which is appearing this week at the Newman, entertained with a program of jazz selections. Following this came the original portion of the program, which was arranged by an entertainment consisting of N. DeRubertis, J. H. Menn, L. F. Fohrstein and Perry Johnson.

Milton H. Field, managing director of the Newman theatres, acted as ring master.

New Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia Opens

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, announces the opening of the new Stanley theatre on Nineteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, Pa. The opening performance was held on Friday evening, January 18.

with this propaganda which is being turned against our business, and which is supported undoubtedly by the reformers and agitators who make a living by spreading it. There has been no evidence that our industry is going to combat that sanely. They merely say to the Press Department, "Our business is all right. It is fine. Leave us alone." Now, that is not the way to combat that. The first thing the motion picture business has got to do is to take stock, the organizations in New York must take stock, and if there are any points in connection with our business that offend the public and give the reformers an excuse on which to attack us and denounce us—gentlemen, we must clean that situation up. If there are such points, I will not go into a discussion of what is right and what is wrong. I merely say instead of denouncing the reformers and expecting them to leave us alone—they are not going to do it. The motion picture industry must first take stock, get its house in order, and then intelligently combat this "reform" movement, or it is going to sweep over this country and result in so much censorship, Sunday closing, etc., that it will not be possible for anybody to make pictures for you because that person will not know whether that picture will be shown in every community, or in enough communities to make an investment profitable. In the New York Times two weeks ago there were three different attacks on motion pictures centered in this one direction. One was an attack from foreign playwrights. They have an ax to grind, 'tis true, but a lot of people who will read this stuff do not know that they have an ax to grind. One was an attack from a college professor in New York City, who honestly believes there are lots of pictures being shown which are not suitable for the average family that go to the motion picture theatre. He, probably, is sincere and has no ax to grind. Another of these attacks was a statement by the Chief of Police in Chicago that he was going to widen police powers and not let any picture which depicted crime in any form be shown in Chicago. This is very serious, gentlemen, because within a few days the Chief of Police of Newark who wants a little publicity is going to do the same thing. And across my desk came a big article from a publication in Brooklyn commending this move. If the motion picture industry is not so organized that it can intelligently from the head in New York combat movements like that of the Chief of Police in Chicago to put us on a basis with legalized vice, there is something wrong with this industry, something that makes it an unsafe business to be in. I have mentioned these three articles. I have seen hundreds of straws which show which way the wind is blowing; the executives in charge in New York must get their heads together and quit "kidding" themselves. First they must make sure that they have clean and legitimate goods, that nobody has a complaint against the picture, and then combat this thing, or it will give this industry a great deal of trouble within the next year or two. The attitude of turning it over to the press and ridiculing it was the position the breweries took about five years ago, and you know what happened to their business. Another condition which can give you equal concern is that the picture business is facing a general readjustment and reshaping on account of its past sins, its past waste. Let me illustrate. You gentlemen receive a picture with some unknown players, but it is a good picture and you display this picture; and one of these personalities, actor or actress in this picture becomes popular as a result of your exploitation and the general excellence of the picture. Under the proper system of cooperation the increasing popularity of that personality, whether it is a star or not, would be used to increase your earnings and increase the earnings of the actors, and the benefit should be divided generally. Under the present system, although you furnish the machinery that has done more to popularize that personality than anything else—it is merely an excuse to shoot your rentals up. The harm is that somebody gets hold of a lot of money they never had before and feels free to spend it any way because they got it that way. Our business has been going on that way for years. The bank elements that are perhaps not as good showmen, but realize more the necessity of not making these uneconomic moves, continuing these wastes, are getting more and more in a position to control at some future time these big organizations. There is every evidence that they will endeavor to regulate this system and pay what a thing is worth and no more. It has only been the wonderful nature of the business whereby it could pass on everything to the public that has made a lot of concerns successful in this business. Let any condition of general readjustment — retrenchment—come about in this country, such as we have started, no doubt, and almost without exception it means reorganization of the business of the producers who are supplying you with pictures today. The question is, Have you adequate plans for meeting these conditions, or do you think because you have had a surplus of pictures that this will continue?

Now as I said when I first started to speak, I would like to remove some confusion that I think is in your minds relative to my organization. My organization is not an organization that is producing pictures and competing for stars and story and material. We know where such a course would inevitably lead. My organization is a mechanism for selecting from any source pictures that are worthy of presentation, and if the picture should not be worthy of presentation our judgment is wrong, the producer of these pictures goes into the discard and we take on other producers. Our organization is designed to select pictures just exactly as the exhibitor selects them for his theatre, with the idea of getting the best pictures regardless of the source. Our organization is designed as a mechanism to go into the market and get individual producers or to take individual producers who are now handling their own distribution and who may be required to reduce their output so they cannot support a distribution machine; we are free to handle, and contemplate handling some products of that sort during the readjustment of the business, which will sooner or later cut down the number of National Distribution Systems to perhaps 25 per cent of what they are today. I wish I knew of some general plan whereby exhibitors and producers could work together, but when a producer has committed himself to a condition to make enough pictures to start a distributing machine, nothing will satisfy him short of a connection insuring him a profit on all his pictures. That is a condition which I, if I were an exhibitor, would not care to face because, at present, there are many million dollars' worth of securities issued against producing values in New York today with the elements, the directors, the stars, and others, who made these values away in other camps producing pictures in competition with the organizations they have left. I do not know whether you get the significance of that, gentlemen; it is something I think about a great deal, and I have no way of knowing how much of the significance of that statement you really grasp. I would like very much to have you query me on what you have in mind and see if I cannot adjust my talk and my knowledge of general conditions so that it may help you, or guide you, or benefit you in some way locally. As you realize, I am looking at the complete picture all the while and doing the only thing that seems to me feasible—that is forming a machine which is free to do business with either producer or exhibitor. By putting each producer on his merit we will burn out all the politics and waste from our producer. I know that a selective system of that sort will make an improvement in quality which will cause the exhibitor to deal with us whether he realizes why we are doing this or not. If I have success in getting the exhibitor to see that I have built an instrument out of fourteen years' experience, looking at it from his angle, to give him the kind of pictures he needs under conditions favorable to him, I would like to accomplish that. But we are not depending on that, we are able and willing to grow gradually by delivering a product which proves the superiority of the selective principle on which we are working. What this business needs today, gentlemen, is some architects, it needs some plans, it needs some intelligence. There are plenty of theatres, there are plenty of technical people, there are plenty of distribution systems, plenty of studios. Get the business adjusted so "an injury to one is the concern of all," that is what the business needs. It is not accomplished now, it is only going to be accomplished perfectly through economic pressure. The producer in control of the machinery by which he gives you pictures has built that machinery by a lot of waste which somebody has got to pay for. Now he will coordinate with you and cooperate with you if you will get under his waste and take him at his valuation—and you will not do that if you can help yourself. If, on the other hand, you are depending on the producers, as you are—and those that you only partially support go out of business because you only partially support them, then, gentlemen, you take it from me the producer and distributor will make you underwrite every risk, waste and all, if they take your theatre. That is what you are facing. The question is, what are you going to do about it? I do not believe you are going to get any place by any method which is not fair to the producer, if you are successful in taking over the distribution channels yourself. I find that where exhibitors in a community or in a city tie up all the houses they are just as unfair toward the producer as the producer is to them. It is a case of each taking all he can when he can. As I see the industry today, they have lots of material in the yard and are trying to build a building, but we have no plans, we have no specifications, we have no men on this job working on the respective parts of the job under adequate control and direction."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

"The Kid" continues its record-breaking run at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Randolph theatre, its box office receipts on the second Sunday of the run exceeding those of the first Sunday by five hundred dollars. The first Sunday's admissions, as heretofore announced in these columns, were fifty per cent over any previous Sunday's business done at the Randolph. The enormous increase in business was made possible by the fact that "The Kid" takes fifty-five minutes to screen and an additional performance starting at midnight was given in order to accommodate the crowds, the usual rule of the house being to start the last performance at eleven o'clock P. M.

"Beasts At Bay," the first of the fifteen Mary Pickford, all star cast, reissues, to be released in this territory by Lee Herz, was booked into the Casino on Madison street last week and had a very successful run. The second of these pictures goes into the Casino next week and releases in the outside are to start immediately. Sam Reiger is back again with Mr. Herz's sales staff and will cover Chicago territory.

J. Minarch has purchased the Liberty theatre on Fullerton avenue and has taken over the operation of this house. Mr. Minarch is a newcomer in the film field but has many friends who wish him well in his new venture and predict he will be equally successful as a moving picture exhibitor as he was a dry goods merchant.

Sir Greiver of Russel-Greiver-Russell, is absent from his desk and will continue to be absent for probably a period of three weeks. During this time he is covering eastern territory with a grip full of Lester Cuneo films disposing of the rights on Cuneo's pictures, "The Ranger and the Law" and "Lone Hand Wilson."

Frank Zambreno, of the Unity Photoplays Company, has purchased the rights for his territory on "The Ranger and the Law," Lester Cuneo's latest production.

Clarence Phillips, widely known to the Chicago motion picture industry and who has been associated with Ike Von Ronkel for the past two years, has been appointed sales manager for Gollos Enterprises, Incorporated. He is a brother of Harry Phillips of Robertson-Cole's organization.

Ascher Brothers are expanding and changing around their offices on the seventeenth floor of the Consumers Building to afford better accommodation for their growing staff.

A goodly turnout of members of the Chicago Motion Picture Press Club greeted Watterson R. Rothacker, at its meeting, January 21, at the Hotel Stratford. Chairman Daniel Roche presided and to fill existing vacancies Irving Mack was unanimously elected Secretary of the Club, and Ralph T. Kettering, Treasurer. Harry Rice was made Chairman of the entertainment committee, with power to make arrangements for speakers and other entertainment. After the luncheon was disposed of and the business of the meeting settled, Mr. Rothacker in an impromptu address outlined a plan by which the Club could become a valuable adjunct to the industry. Mr. Rothacker suggested that the Club throw its strength into the present local censorship fight and offer the National Association Motion Picture Industry every assistance in its national campaign. He then outlined a plan by which the Club could "boost" the industry in its publicity and counteract much of the adverse criticism that is leveled at individuals and companies in the field. Mr. Rothacker was tendered a vote of thanks at the conclusion of his remarks. The next meeting of the Club will be held February 4th.

Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Industrial Division recently went to Battle Creek, Michigan, in connection with a practical picture. S. J. Stoughton made a flying trip to Milwaukee to confer with W. E. Hamilton, who represents the Rothacker Industrial Division in Wisconsin. Ray Aitken of the Industrial Director Staff was on the sick list a week.

Co-operating with Dr. John Dill Robertson, Commissioner of Health, of the City of Chicago, Ascher Brothers examined all employees of their Chicago Circuit for smallpox.

Dr. Harry Heiss, Medical Director of Ascher Brothers' Circuit, examined over one thousand (1,000) employees of the Circuit last week, and those, who had not been vaccinated within the last seven years or could not show a presentable scar were re-vaccinated. Over ten percent of the employees were vaccinated.

This step is taken to safeguard the patrons as well as the employees of the Ascher Brothers' theatres which number twenty-two in Chicago alone.

Automobile drivers will hope that every boy between the ages of six and sixteen, and also their parents, see the Ford Educational Weekly No. 5, "Hurry Slowly," which is a safety first warning.

The film preaches the motto of hurry slowly and think about what you are doing. It shows some of the horrible examples of carelessness. It warns children against playing ball in the street; drawing their wagons in the road; running headfirst into the street without thinking of the machines coming in all directions; standing in the road and asking automobile drivers for a ride; holding on to the sides of machines to be pulled along on their roller skates; and stealing a ride on the extra tire.

The children are urged to be more cautious in their play. The film shows how dangerous it is to take risks like walking the beams of structures high in the air, playing near excavations, or pointing a gun at a playmate even if it is not loaded.

"Hurry Slowly" is a film which will make everyone who sees it stop and think, be they child or grown-up. It is a valuable addition to the safety first campaign.

"Hurry Slowly" will be released February 7th through the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.

M. J. Mintz, sales manager of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company, Chicago, has closed up state rights with Theatre Service Company of Kansas City, Missouri for Kansas and Western Missouri; with H. A. Kuyler of Denver for New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Utah, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, according to word just received from Mr. Mintz.

He is now on a tour covering the entire Western section of the United States for the purpose of disposing of territory on the new Synchronized Service.

He reports that exhibitors, wherever he has visited, have taken up the new music service very enthusiastically and are eager to book it.

Harry Sherman stopped off in Chicago for a day on his way to the Coast where he will get busy pushing production on some of the pictures he plans to distribute later.

Hunt Stromberg, chief of Thomas H. Ince publicity department, with headquarters in Los Angeles, was in Chicago last week in connection with an exploitation campaign for "Lying Lips."

Si Griever of Russell-Griever-Russell, is making a trip to eastern and southern exchange centers in the interests of Lester Cuneo series of five-reel westerns and on completion of the present trip will make the principal western cities.

C. H. Fulton, president of Fulco Sales Company, spent last week in Peoria, Ill., supervising the installation of projection equipment in Ascher's Palace theatre which opened Thursday, January 6th.

Jack Graumon, who has made a splendid record as manager for Metro's Chicago exchange during the past two years, has resigned and L. A. Rosselle has been appointed in his place. Mr. Graumon has been connected with Metro for the past four years, having been in charge of their Milwaukee office before coming to Chicago. He has not announced his plans for the future, but, in any event, will be in active touch with the film industry as he is interested with Saxe Brothers, of Milwaukee, in the Alcazar, Rose and Boston theatres which were taken over Sunday by them. Mr. Rosselle resigned as sales manager of Robertson-Cole's Chicago exchange to take his new position and is a popular and well known member of the industry in this territory, having been connected with the World Film Corporation for a number of years before going with Robertson-Cole.

Ascher Brothers are more than pleased with the business being done at their New Palace theatre in Peoria which was opened on January 6th and with the theatre which was erected by William E. Hull at a cost of more than a half million dollars. In appreciation of the beautiful house he provided for them, Ascher Brothers, through Nathan Ascher, presented Mr. Hull with a watch and a platinum chain set in pearls.

"Affairs of Anatol" Is Retained as Title

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced yesterday that "The Affairs of Anatol" would be retained as the title of the mammoth super-star production which Cecil B. DeMille is producing at Hollywood from Arthur Schnitzler's famous play.

Mr. Lasky had formerly consented reluctantly to "Five Kisses," but he decided to leave the verdict to exhibitors and fans themselves. A circular letter was sent to 2,000 exhibitors throghout the country. They were asked which title they liked best—"The Affairs of Anatol" or "Five Kisses." Not only that, but they were requested to ask their patrons.

Of the 2,000 exhibitors circularized, 1,397 answered the letter. As between "The Affairs of Anatol" and "Five Kisses," 1,010 votes for the retention of the original title. Most of those who voted for the Schnitzler title are exhibitors in the bigger cities

Of the 263,191 picture patrons who voted, the tabulation of ballots showed that 161,016 preferred "The Affairs of Anatol."

The Motion Picture Theatre

Community House of the Future

By Charles D. Isaacson

Editor, "Our Family Music" Page, N. Y. Globe
Author, "Face to Face With Great Musicians"

IN the interim between the coming and the going of the long-waited Conference of Musicians and Picture Men, I should like to indulge myself in a discussion which I had hoped to run in this department several months back. . . . It has been postponed by necessity of other pressing matters, that I was afraid it would never run.

If I seem to get away from the strict subject of music for the moment, I know that my readers will understand that I have not forgotten my job; that all through what I say here is the realization that musical appreciation will come out of a development of this viewpoint. It isn't always necessary to talk music, music, music, to turn the minds of my readers to think upon such matters as these. In fact, I have discovered in word-of-mouth contact with certain exhibitors, that what I am saying in the following lines has cleared their minds and made them wide-open to all the musical suggestions of the best thinkers.

The right of a free people is expression. If they don't want to talk, intelligence and culture have not awakened in their souls; if they can't talk, the surrounding conditions are opposed. When a man expresses himself, necessarily it must be to others—those who speak to themselves alone are insane or are reputed to have money in the bank. Expression suggests conversation, discussion—getting together, meeting with others.

The very idea of a republic means the united expression of an entire people. Anything other than the united expression of a nation is the outpouring of monarchy or anarchy.

The Republic of the United States arose out of a desire of the citizens of the colonies to be more than just payers of taxes. So they met together and said what they wanted to do about it.

In the course of time, the original plan of the Republic has been slightly overlooked. A few statesmen, otherwise known as politicians, have very kindly relieved the people of the necessity of bothering with the affairs of government. The plain, every-day families have been rather glad of the opportunity of minding their own business and forgetting about the general weal. But when the general weal is left to itself or to a few zealous protectors of the general weal who have not forgotten their own several private interests, something goes wrong. With the indisposition of the public health, individual success starts to topple. So the man on the street begins to wonder about it. Then in the course of a few minutes or days, or years, the notion dawns upon him: something is awry with the general weal and that in itself is affecting his own business. He thinks he had better investigate.

Now it isn't as easy to start a teaparty as it was in 1775. Then there was only King George. Today there are an infinite number of scoundrels, beside whom King George was a philanthropist. What is the poor fellow to do? He has an objection to make. He wants to express himself. Where is he going to do it? At home, in the bosom of his family? Among his friends? Is he left the privilege of writing to the newspapers and signing his name "Pro bono publico?" Shall he get up on the street corners? Will he cast his vote with decision and wait for results with derision?

He is uncertain about it all. He has no plan of action—no scheme of scheming. The prices of food have shot sky-high, the struggle between money-power and labor-strength is growing more threatening; the cries of weakened nations and starving foreigners sound faintly through the news headings. Meantime, as always happens when normal-minded folk become befuddled, abnormal mentalities and perverted personalities put their heads together. Radicals and anti-everythings call their meetings—back-cellar meetings, gatherings behind locked doors and in darkened dens.

I say that it is about time that somebody called the town meetings. Great idea. Summon the people together in the different communities and let them all have it out? Let the people do as they did in 1775. Let them weigh arguments pro and con as they did in the early days of 1600. The town meeting is the solution of the national problem.

The Republic of the United States was born in a town meeting. It was sent on its course and steered through the early days by the town meetings; and it looks pretty clearly as though the nation is returning to find itself, in these uncertain days—in the town meeting. What more certain proof of the tendency of the times in this direction is there, than the growth of that sentiment in the community choruses? For the purpose of letting off steam through song, some twelve million persons are reported to have gathered in various places under community chorus leaders, this past year. At the community sings, everybody rubs elbows with everybody else, and all the mouths are open wide to let out sounds more or less melodious. With the escaping melodies, the grouches, blues, dumps, radicalism all go too. The community chorus movement is a proof of the truth of the idea—town meetings are wanted. But a community chorus only serves a social purpose, it makes no claims to political or educational ideals—that may come later. But now, we must have town meetings. Yes, a great idea. Call the town meetings, everywhere.

But who will do it? And how will it be done? We are not like we were in the good old days. We spread over considerable territory, and we are not to be summoned by the town herald. Even if some powerful, wealthy organization should undertake the renaissance of town meetings, would the people respond? Would they give up their evenings or Sunday afternoons, to become mixed up with some suspicious-looking undertaking which would seem to have some flavor of commercialism or politics hidden away somewhere surly?

Well, then, listen to the suggestion. The ground is somewhat cultivated. There are in daily session the embryonic forerunners of some eighteen thousand town meetings.

I point to the movie theatre as the logical, practical and psychological successor of the meeting house of 1775. At first blush, I realize that the suggestion may seem somewhat idealistic and slightly impractical. But after the keenest analysis of the conditions existing in America and in the theatres, it is the humble opinion of the writer, that properly developed, this seed of a thought may be sown to the salvation of these states.

Whether you wish it or not, the work of the theatres in developing taste and opinion, is going on right now. They didn't wait to be given the word. Every last foot of film issued from the studios of the producers has been doing good or bad. I told you in a previous article how much good even the worst picture has done, in waking up provincials, in stirring imaginations, in rousing ambitions. It's all been more or less haphazard. But the hand of God has been guiding the seeming uncaptained ship, for the theatres have unquestionably been the headquarters for the finest sort of patriotic endeavors. It is rather late to tell how the messages against pacifism, against the enemy within the gate, against the antagonists of the national program, were flashed across the continent on the screen.

But something more definite, something more specific and direct is coming through the legion of the movie theatres. The haphazard processes are to give place to a very orderly method of procedure. This is my dream, this is my prophecy based on all that is to be seen. The exhibitor in the movie theatre has a big job. He is being elected into something more than a mere money-maker and a distributor of en-

To the Reader:

AS I write the present installment, we are two days before the coming of the participants in the first National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Interests. I discover at the Hotel Astor where the meetings will be held that an amazing number of reservations have been made and that many are already in town.

I am in the position of the fellow who is hanging by a thread over a precipice, waiting for the hero to rescue me. . . . I mean to say, that the managing editor is telling me that I must get my copy in for the present issue, or I'll be out entirely. And I can't say anything which will help the convention (because when this is printed, the folks will be on their way back home). Nor can I say anything about what happened, because nothing has happened yet. We're at what the soldiers on the other side used to call the Zero Hour—waiting for the order to go over the top!

May I extend to the entire reading public of the News the cordial thanks for the wonderful letters, telegrams, telephone messages of good cheer in this plan for better motion picture music?

HUNDREDS ARE ANXIOUSLY WAITING FOR THE NEWS OF THE CONVENTION. They want to know what takes place, then to read the speeches and the accounts of the special exhibits, etc.

If I rushed through the matter, in newspaper style, I could get it all in the next issue of News—that dated February 12th—and in the mails on February 5th. But this would not enable The News staff to do the job well.

Therefore in commemoration of the First National Musical-Picture Conference, a special Musical Supplement will be issued with the News of February 19th (out February 12th—closes February 8th). This Musical Supplement will contain the full news, speeches, pictures, etc., and will carry the Convention to all the readers of the Motion Picture News. It will be a momento for all time. Watch for it.

rtainment. He is being made the nestor of is community, of his neighborhood. He is the onductor of his "family's welfare." He is left he privilege of selecting the right kind of pic- ure or the wrong kind. He may use his dis- retion and pick a demoralizing story or one hich raises the standard of taste. He has it ithin his power to educate, refine, develop, etter his crowds. Or he may cater to the lower stes and deprave and undermine the tendency f the times which is that of education and ider culture. The right kind of an exhibitor the propagandist of good literature, of fine art, f good drama, of splendid music. The right ind of theatre manager is the best friend of uthors, artists, book and magazine publishers. he film, when it is rightly understood is dis- overed to be the sparking flint which later ames into an eagerness to read, to study, to ravel, to expand spiritually and mentally. By he use of his sense of discretion and by the xercise of his powers of elimination and selec- on, the theatre man virtually controls the men- al attitudes on all private and public opinions f his patrons.

Is the exhibitor equipped for his big job? Vill he be willing to accept his new position? Or is he so closely attracted to the immediate ollar that he will laugh to scorn such a pro- osal as this?

First of all, I have faith in the exhibitors of he United States. They have been maligned, hey have been called by every nasty name.

They have been termed illiterate and scaven- er. We saw that the trade naturally drew to t adventurous types, that the theatre manager enerally saw easier money in the theatre field. Theatre men are mainly showmen. They are aturally interested in the magic mystery of the ox-office. If tickets don't sell, the manager is ut, nobody else. But if the manager of a the- tre can be given that point of view which will in him to a more liberal faith in the buyers f entertainment, he will be ready to assume his ew responsibilities. He needs to be shown that he people as such, are not the depraved seekers fter sensation which they have been painted. These exhibitors have been misled. They go y what they believe and not by what they hope or—give them a notion that good pictures are anted more than cheap sensational pictures, nd they will answer the call.

These eighteen thousand exhibitors are calm- ing down. They are settling into that state where they are no longer frenzied showmen. They are business men with a regular trade. They are building up a standing patronage. The transients are no longer the livelihood of the great majority of theatres. Neighborhood the- atres in the true sense of the name, are the leaders. People go to the theatre they can always depend upon as having a good show. This is the trend of the times. So that there is a peculiar check on the exhibitor who is so close to the immediate dollar that he sees noth- ing of the ideals of his calling. If a theatre manager has no vision, he will find himself without a following. The people never stick to a liar and a fraud. You find the same principles in the magazine field. Why has Collier's, Sat- urday Evening Post, Leslie's such a wide cir- culation, and why has the little, cheap, nasty sheet of perverted immoralities a little handful of fluctuating circulation? If the exhibitor is not up to his job, his following will soon desert him. But most of the theatre managers are calming down into serious merchants, who know their places and so plan their activities for all time—not only this week's showings. They realize that they may disappoint their public once, twice—but they cannot do it all the time.

But all that I have said so far has to do with an impassive audience. A town meeting is a place where people speak up. If the movie the- atres are the logical successors of the meet- ing houses of 1775, then there must be planned a method of speech. The right of a people is expression. The audience cannot sit still and be preached at, and talked at, and given pictures for a silent answer.

My prophecy: That the movie theatres are to be the open forum of the public who con- gregate for their screen entertainment. That the people seek a means of expression is proven by the twelve million persons who gathered to let off steam in community sings. That it is becoming a vital necessity that people speak their minds, is evidenced by the growing demand for public forums. As an answer to the vile propaganda of the cellar and back-cafe meet- ings, there must be offered an above-board, out- in-the-sun opportunity to speak. The mutter- ings of unrest can only be stilled when the free- dom of speech is urged upon all.

Mintz With Synchronized Music Corporation

Announcement is made that M. J. Mintz has been made General Sales Manager of the Synchronized Music Company of Chicago. He was formerly sales manager of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation and is one of the best known figures in Chicago filmdom.

Such well-known musicians as Carl Eduardo, leader of the New York Strand orchestra, James C. Bradford, seven years director of music at the Broadway theatre, and Joseph C. Briel are on the staff of Synchronized.

Symphonic Film Now

It is announced that the Cosmopolitan Pic- tures Corporation are now issuing a Symphonic Film, "The Brides Play," in which Marion Davies is to star. This is a new era—where the music is considered at the very moment of the time of the taking of the picture—where the music oftentimes changes and alters the work of the company—that the screen and orchestra may the better blend. George Spink is the com- poser.

This brings to mind that a company is making a film called "The Soul of the Violin" where it is said that the screen is secondary to the music—that is, where the music is played with the accompaniment of the screen. Phillip Van Loan is author and director.

For each of the principal characters in the story he composed a theme and then arranged all of the themes together with other neces- sary music in symphonic form. To the organ— which in many theatres showing moving pic- tures is the only instrument used—is given a part equally prominent with that of the or- chestra. The themes were written and played "on the set at the time the scenes were taken," then assembled and cut in cooperation with Mr. Terwilliger, thus insuring perfect synchroniza- tion of the scenes and themes.

In this symphony the themes do not "flash back" every time the player to whom the theme belongs appears on the screen, but—in this man- ner: Whichever character dominates a scene at any given time, his or her theme simultaneously dominates the score.

To aid motion picture organists the Boston Music Company has carefully classified its cata- log according to screen moods and scenes, which ought to be a great help in the selection of proper music to accurately interpret photoplays. This Picture Players' Handy Music Guide, as it is called, will be sent to anyone on request. The list, which represents in most convenient form a number of pieces suitable for use with any of the situations often depicted in screen drama, is further evidence of the serious inter- est which the Boston Music Company takes in film music.

The New Music Forum

I have a Marr & Colton five-stop pipe organ in my theatre and am having considerable trouble in finding an organist. We are in a small town of 15,000 popula- tion and while we have several pipe organs in the differ- ent churches, we have no musicians that are available for theatre work.

Can you put me in touch with a good artist, man or woman?

Eastern Theatre,
Ironton, Ohio.

We are giving you publicity in this week's SOUTHERN PICTURE NEWS regarding the Music Conference planned for January 24th-26th in New York City and want to assure you that we are ready to do our part in this territory among the exhibitors.

NAT L. ROYSTER,
Southern Picture News,
Atlanta, Ga.

I wish to ask you on behalf of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League if it would be possible for you or your music department to furnish us with a complete list of music publishers and composers that charge a tax on music and also a list of publishers and com- posers that are tax free.

Very truly yours,
RIALTO THEATRE,
Dayton, Ohio.

The contents of your letter gave me great pleasure and satisfaction. The movement to bring good music into the moving picture theatres is certainly very laudable and ought to be supported by all connected with the two arts.

Kindly send me a sample copy of your paper and oblige,

D. J. EHRICHT,
N. Tonawanda, N. Y.

I received your letter of December 21st and several articles which appeared in the NEWS. I have not been too busy to read these for I have taken them home with me, but I really have been so busy that I have neglected from time to time to answer your letter. As you know, I am very deeply interested in music, artistic as well as commercial. I am also in- terested in motion pictures as an educational medium as well as a means of entertainment. The two make an excellent combination. I think you have a big field for your imaginative mind. I hope something big will come out of the convention planned for Jan. 24.

It would seem to me that possibly at some future time a combination Music Show and Motion Picture Show would make a very strong proposition if projected at the right time of the year and in the right place. I am always glad to hear from you and to learn what you are doing.

Kindest regards,
CHAS H. GREEN,
105 West 40th St., N. Y. C.

Dear Mr. I:

I have been greatly interested in the announcement of the forthcoming musical conference to be held next month under the auspices of your journal.

I am in charge of the musical arrangements for over 40 first-class picture theatres in the British Isles. I regret it is not possible for me to attend the confer- ence as I should like, but I should be glad if you could arrange to forward me any press reports of the conference. If you could spare the time to do this for me, I should be greatly in your debt.

Needless to say, I am always glad to read your splendid articles. I wish some people thought along those lines on this side. I am with you every time, but at present I seem to be "hoeing a lonely furrow."

With best wishes for the success of the scheme,
BASIL CAMERON, Musical Director,
Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd.,
109 Piccadilly, London.

Gentlemen:

The writer would like to send the Orchestra Leader, Mr. Allen Kissinger, to New York to attend the MO-

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

GOLDWYN

The Girl with the Jazz Heart—
Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses. (Middle West.)

The Highest Bidder—
Only an average picture and played to very poor business here for a week. (Middle West.)

Guile of Women—
Big entertaining values in this picture. Took my house by storm. Large box office attraction. (West.)

Bunty Pulls the String—
Dandy little story to this one. Pleased my patrons and kept me packing 'em in. Almost a record-breaker. (West.)

Earthbound—
Had big business with this one. Brought large receipts. (West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Midsummer Madness—
It took well for the entire week. Audience seemed to like it. (East.)

Fine picture playing to good business. (East.)

Good show—opened to moderate business. (Middle West.)

The Charm School—
We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture. (Middle West.)

Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business. (West.)

Conrad in Quest of His Youth—
Big business. Meighan one of the most popular screen stars. Our patrons like him and like the kind of pictures he appears in. (Middle West.)

To Please One Woman—
Fairly entertaining picture and average box office value. (West.)

Heliotrope—
Excellent. The patrons of this theatre filled the house at each performance every day for the entire week. (East.)

The Jucklins—
Good picture, pulling fairly well. (East.)

The Life of the Party—
Fair picture, fair business. Some thought it great but it is a question whether or not the public wants Arbuckle in long features. (East.)

Idols of Clay—

The Passionate Pilgrim—
Paramount seems to have fallen down here this season in its big releases. This picture did only an average gross. (Middle West.)

Brewster's Millions—
Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dangerous Business—
Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying. (Middle West.)

A good picture and brought more than usual business. (West.)

My Lady's Latch Key—
I liked the picture very much, and so did everybody who spoke to me about it as they left the theatre. Had one of the biggest Sunday's of the year. In fact was a close second to the record-breaking opening. (Middle West.)

The Great Adventure—
Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted. (Middle West.)

Nomads of the North—
This went over big and seemed to please everyone who saw it. Has large entertaining values. (West.)

Yes or No—
Brought full houses all week, and consequently large box office receipts. (East.)

Love, Honor and Behave—
Only average picture and brought poor returns. (West.)

FOX

While New York Sleeps—
Going over very big. First morning it opened had to turn them away at eleven o'clock, the first show having gone on at nine-thirty. (East.)

The Scuttlers—
Fully up to the average as to Farnum productions. Pleased our audiences.. Business good considering general conditions. (Middle West.)

The Iron Rider—
A William Russel picture of more than average value and the box office results were pleasant. (Middle West.)

Blind Wives—
Fairly good both as to pleasing the audiences and box office returns. (West.)

Drag Harlan—
Great picture, well liked. Went over big. (West.)

METRO

The Bait—
Not a good picture and business was way off. Our patrons didn't know the star. (Middle West.)

Fair picture to fair business. (East.)

The Lure of Youth—
This picture not up to average. The plot is weak. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Light—
The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed. (East.)

The Love Flower—
A very entertaining picture, well presented, but faulty in detail. Played to above average business. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Palace of Darkened Windows—
An oriental feature with plenty of thrills. Just an average production. (Middle West.)

The U. P. Trail—
Good production which brought good business. (West.)

One of the displays for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" used by Miller's theatre, Los Angeles

PATHE

When We Were Twenty-One—
Just as fine as the play of th same name. Delightfully acted, an charmingly directed. H. B. Wa ner in a role that just fits hi (Mid. West.)

Her Unwilling Husband—
Satisfactory picture both as a entertainment and as a box offic attraction. Average good busines (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—
Not a record breaker but playe to above average business. Please averagely well. (Middle West.)

Pleased tremendous crowds wh call it a great performance in ever respect. Such pictures as this in sure the steady growth of motio pictures. (Mid. West.)

REALART

Oh, Lady, Lady—

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—
This one went over good an brought more than the average busi ness. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Last of the Mohicans—
One of the best pictures seen here in many months. Wonderful scenery and enough action to please everybody. This is the type of picture that appeals to young and old. It went especially big with the school children.

SELZNICK

The Greatest Love—
An excellent picture which Vera Gordon's name helped to put over to excellent business for one week. Did so well we are holding it over for second week's run. (Middle West.)

EQUITY

Hush—
Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Fickle Women—
Butler is a wonder in "Fickle Women"—great picture, the box office returns were not very large. (West.)

Rothafel Originates Fin Specialty Act

ONE of the Capitol theatre specialty numbers this week is staged under the title of "Favorites of Yesterday," being an elaborated presentation of the old time charades, with music an added feature.

The drapes part showing a figure in a chair attired in dressing gown and seated before a fireplace. A dull red spot brings the figure and the props into view of the audience and leaves the rest of the stage dark. Miner Roberts, playing the role of the person in the chair, reads an original poem by Martha Wilchinsky, as follows:

"Songs are born to live for a day
And then to the Past are banished away,
While new loves and new songs are put to the test,
But the soft hand of Time makes old things the best.
"Then let us turn back down the road of the years,
To melodies mixed with laughter and tears
And just for a moment let Memory play
A tune or two of Yesterday."

Following the recital of the poem, artists attired in old time costumes appear from the wings, each brought into view of the audience in the same manner as described above. Caroline Cali renders a favorite old song. Alexander Oumansky and Mlle. Cambarelli give an old fashioned dance and James Parker Combs presents a solo.

The transparency drop is hung in one A back drop, which is invisible from the front, is used.

Hyman Has Novelty Prologue for "Mohicans"

When the picture adaptation of Jame Fenimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans" had its introduction to the public in Brooklyn at the Brooklyn Stran theatre, several of the most artistic shot in the film were used to make a founda tion for a novelty which was put on dur ing the action of this feature.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyma called the novelty "The Prologue Colo niale." One of the shots in the film re veals a Colonial interior set, such a on as a frontiersman would have found in home in Cooper's time. When the fil reached this shot a drop of scrim fell ove the screen and the curtains parted to sho a beautiful colonial stage setting in sof light with a colonial family grouped be fore a fireplace. There was the buxon colonial madame with her harp, the spin et, etc. Lewis Rhodes, tenor, in knicker bocker and velvet doublet, to say nothin of buckled slipper and powdered hai sang "Cellina, My Own." Then two o the colonial period, in all the garb of tha time, tripped onto the stage and dance "The Pavlowa Gavotte." This minuet a fair was interpreted by Mlle. Sylvia an George Eastman, dancers well known a the Brooklyn Strand.

The novelty only interrupted the fil a few minutes and gave in flesh and bloo a picture that Cooper painted in hi book and which had been reproduced upo the screen.

Perry's "Kismet" Prologue

New Lyric Theatre Sets New Exploitation and Presentation Record for Minneapolis

WHAT was without question the most elaborate prologue ever conceived for a photoplay offered at a Minneapolis theatre was prepared by Manager Charles C. Perry of the New Lyric theatre for his presentation of Otis Skinner in "Kismet."

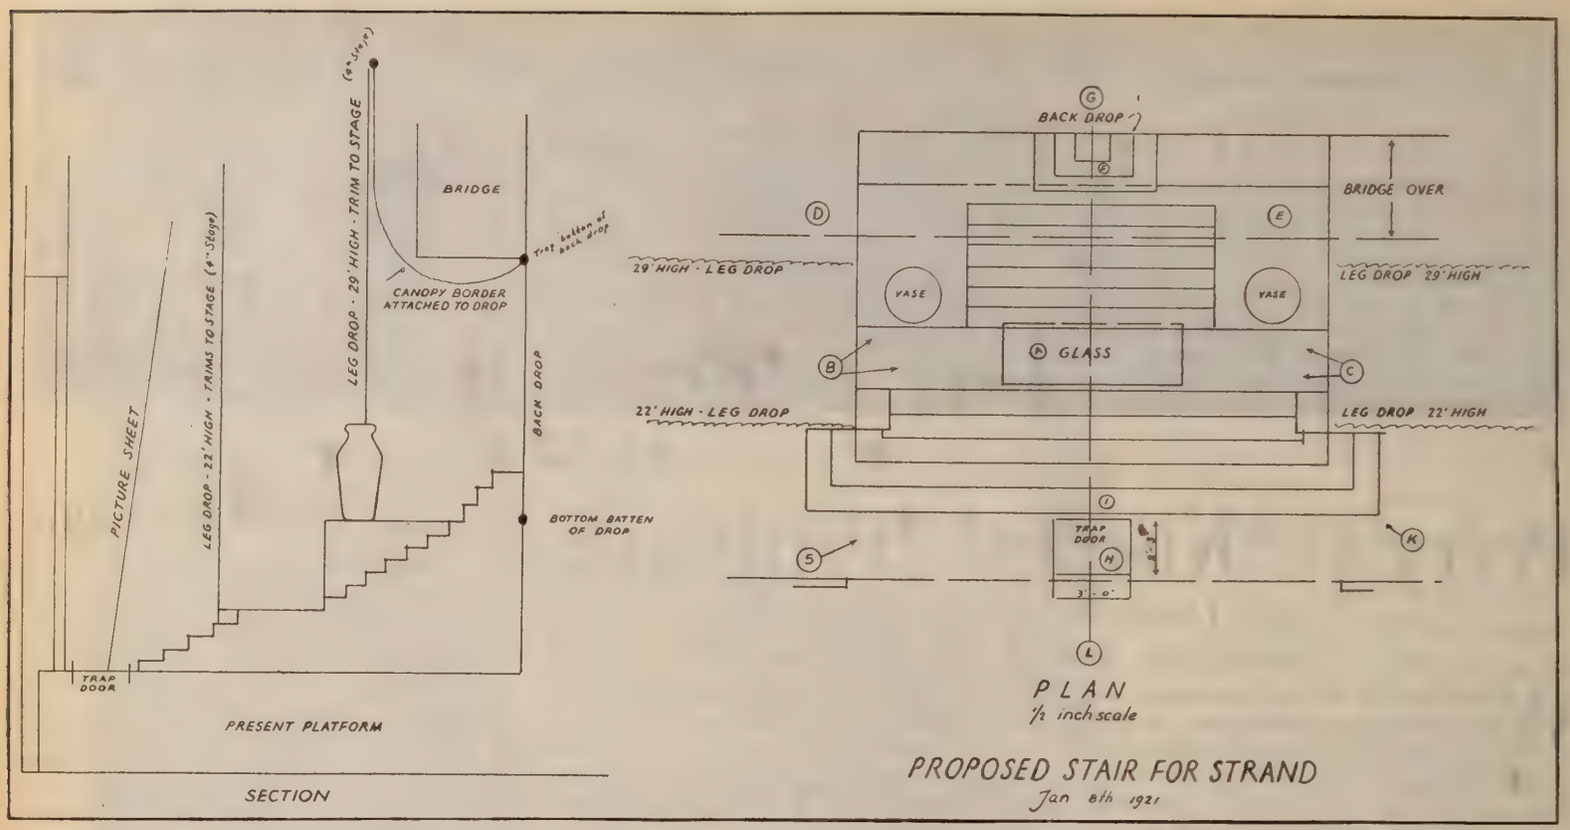
As one entered the New Lyric for the showing of "Kismet" nine oriental tapestries valued at $5,200 and loaned by a local rug company and five original oil paintings valued at over $35,000 greeted the eye. Above the second entrance door was hung an original oil painting entitled "The Gates of Damascus," 5 feet deep by 24 feet wide. At the door a ticket taker dressed as an oriental peasant with veil and the half dozen Lyric pages garbed as peasants attracted the attention. Inside the foyer several more oriental rugs valued at over $5,000, several small oil paintings and oriental lamps loaned by Minneapolis merchants were visible and the aroma of oriental incense could be detected.

Following the rendition of "Hymn to the Sun" (Rimsky-Korsakoff) by the augmented orchestra, the asbestos raised while blue foot lights were turned on the audience, killing the vision of the stage while dancers took their places before the back stage drop and setting. At a certain cue these blue lights reversed and played their rays upon the setting and gradually turned yellow, pink and amber while the dancers, Marjorie Leet and a ballet of ten shapely girls clad in typical harem garb, slowly arose from their couches and began an especially arranged cycle of dances to strains of "Dance Orientale" (Lubomirsky) and "Dance of the Egyptian Maidens" (Harry Rowe Shelby).

Gayly and with increasing tempo the dancers whirled and stepped until they reach the state of apparent exhaustion when they fell prostrate to the floor while the orchestral accompaniment died away and the lights faded out as the picture sheet was lowered and the picture flashed on amid the flood of fading varicolored lights.

Mr. Perry's stage setting was conceived by him and executed by his scenic staff, Robert Westerman and Frederick Gibson. In front of the drops and stage pieces Mr. Perry placed four 12 foot inverted grey bell pedestal lamps of dark blue. In the center of the enclosure, Miss Leet rested on a Turkish divan braced by varicolored oriental pillows. The divan was draped with runners of oriental tapestry and ribbons and before the couch three hand maidens awaited the commands of their mistress. At each end of the divan stood two slave girls bearing large peacock feathered fans and in the foreground resting on rugs and low couches were four harem girls. All of these girls wore typical harem costumes of rich and bright colored silk and satin.

"Prisoners of Love" Prologue Described



For the initial screening on any stage of Betty Compson's first starring vehicle, "Prisoners of Love," the manager of the California theatre, Los Angeles, staged a "Song Review Between Mr. 1861 and Miss 1921" during the course of which many of the most popular songs between those dates were sung, especial stress being laid upon the romantic and sentimental love songs.

An elaborate stage setting was constructed for the review. The left half of the set represented a room furnished in the mode of 1861 with old-fashioned portraits on the wall, a whatnot with shells and figurines on its shelves, a heavily upholstered chair and a stand of the period. On the wall hung a large oil painting of a man (Mr. 1861) wearing the black stock, the flowered waistcoat and other garments of the period.

The right half of the set represented a very modern room, with chair and stand of the modern sort, a telephone on the stand. By the chair stood a floor lamp. The wall, decorated in the modern fashion, was bare of all pictures except an oil painting of a debutante dressed in the height of 1921 fashion (Miss 1921).

Plunkett's Presentation of "The Devil"

Atmospheric Stage Specialty Presented Last Week at New York Strand

SINCE motion picture presentation requires lively imagination for its conceit and a trained sense of dramatic values for its execution, it is much like motion picture production, or any other creative work. And since creative works knows no geometry, slide rule or precise mechanical device, the regulated processes of which produce a predetermined effect, not every motion picture or theatre setting is the equal of the finest achievements to which these arts have attained upon occasion.

The "occasional" therefore always receives its tribute of praise and widespread discussion. Thus MOTION PICTURE NEWS presents this description, with detailed specifications that may aid other theatre men to reproduce the prologue, of a rare and illuminating example of photoplay presentation recently accomplished in New York, when the Strand Theatre offered George Arliss in "The Devil."

The prologue designed and directed by Joseph Plunkett, Managing Director of the Strand in New York, earned its right to the term "rare" by the telling artistry of its blending of color and action, the close association existing between it and the photoplay it introduced and its striking emotional appeal. It was illuminating as an illustration of the value of the art of "presentation." It created an illusion at once impressive in its immediate effects and effective in inducing a mental attitude on the part of the spectator that insured the picture of an audience receptive to its mood and responsive to its emotional appeal.

The program was opened with the overture from Boito's "Mefistofele." Then the curtains parted and revealed a setting of arresting color effects. The set was a staircase leading up to a small platform or pedestal against an arched doorway in the back drop. The staircase was of twelve steps, which were broken in the middle by a deep platform. This was flanked by block pedestals supporting huge urns, the only articles of furniture in the set. From the middle platform a baritone soloist, garbed in satin knickerbockers in simulation of Mr. Arliss in a scene in the picture, rendered the aria from "Mefistofele."

As the song proceeded a green light from overhead flashed upon the trap door in the center of the stage, near the footlights. Then, one by one the dangers in the Sergastchinko Ballet made their way upon the stage and danced. As the singer's aria came to a close, he slowly made his way up the stairs and took his position on the pedestal against the door of the back drop. Red lights flashed from underfoot and he was enveloped in a red glare. The music suddenly changed to a Bacchanal and the ballet changed from the slow, rythmic interpretive dance to a scene of unrestrained revelry. The dancers crept up the stairs toward the Devil, who, with a commanding gesture, waved them away. At this motion the dancers fell back prostrate on the middle platform. The red lights under the transparency in the platform flooded them with the same color as surrounded the Devil, and finally a flame effect light, set near the footlights, was reflected on them, giving the tableau the effect of being consumed in flames.

The feature of the setting was the lighting. The entire set was painted in vivid red, blue, yellow, green, orange and brown. The colors were daubed on so as to produce a dazzle effect, no set design being followed in applying the colors. The dancers wore costumes of a sateen material also in the vivid colors of the setting. These costumes were designed after the ones worn by the dancers in the ball room scene in "The Devil."

Capitol Presenting Prologue for Moore Feature

S. L. ROTHAFEL is staging a novelty prologue for "Hold Your Horses," playing this week at the New York Capitol theatre.

With a stage setting representing a street, a "whitewing" is disclosed when the drapes part. He is furnished with the two wheeled street cleaner's wagon and a broom and attired in the white overalls and white cap of the profession. To music by the orchestra, Leon Leonidow the "whitewing" does some eccentric dance steps in which the broom figures. Later he is joined by Doris Niles, another of the Capitol ballet corps, who represents the "Beatrice" of the picture, being dressed in riding costume.

The two give more eccentric dances. The backing used for the number is plain white muslin and the performers are back lighted so that their figures are in silhouette. The titles of the picture are screened at first on the white back curtain and later on the front drapes while the picture curtain is being lowered.

Newspaper, Merchant and Exhibitor Co-operate in Los Angeles

Through a co-operative advertising plan participated in by the Los Angeles Express, B. H. Dyas & Co., a large hardware firm, Tally's theatre and King Vidor, "The Jack-knife Man" has received the benefit of a publicity campaign which was wider in its appeal than any ever staged in that particular section of the Pacific Coast.

The Los Angeles Express utilized the contest as a circulation builder. The hardware firm offered a special line of jack-knives as prizes to every boy obtaining one three-months subscription to the paper, and ten special knives to the ten boys turning in the largest number of subscriptions during the life of the contest. Tally's theatre offered a free pass for every month's subscription turned in, each month of every subscription to be rewarded by an additional pass.

King Vidor's part in the contest was the end designed to make an especial appeal to parents to get their boys interested in the contest. He offered, after the contest was closed, to arrange a date when all contestants could come to Vidor Village and there a film would be taken and the parents of the boys each receive a print of the strip carrying views of their son in action. The Express featured this portion of the contest.

How Darley Makes Use of Cut-Outs

The lobby of the Savoy theater, Atlanta, is small, and it isn't easy to put up a special lobby. But Manager N. V. Darley made the most of it the other day when he was playing "In Search of a Sinner."

A cut-out of Miss Talmadge had been made from a six-sheet and mounted. It is the pose in which the girl in the picture determined to shock the Purity League, stands with one hand on her hip, the other outstretched and resting on a tall cane. The cane had been removed from the hand in the cut-out and a bunch of narrow red satin ribbons had been substituted. These ribbons held tiny red devils, in various sizes and attitudes, some of them dangling in the air, some crouched on the floor at the "proud beauty's" feet.

As one passed the theater, one had an impression of a tall, stunning girl gowned in black, with a huge black hat, and dangling from her slim fingers half a dozen or so red, red devils, dancing at the ends of narrow satin ribbons.

The lobby was decorated with Christmas greens, forming an effective background for the business-getting cut-out which made a distinct hit with everybody concerned.

A and B lights were reflected on the urns on either side of the staircase. They were set one above the other and colored the urns an orange at the top, blue center and red base.

(E) One 500 Watt lamp, blue.

(F) One 500 Watt lamp, blue. Set under glass in platform.

(G) Four 500 Watt lamps, blue. Set against back wall and shooting through doorway.

(H) One 500 Watt lamp, green. Overhead and focussed on trap door.

(J) One 500 Watt lamp, blue.

(K) One 500 Watt lamp, blue.

In theatres not provided with stage space sufficient for a set as large as the one shown in diagram, a modified arrangement producing the same general effect is possible by making the set of six instead of twelve stairs. The lights at the foot of the steps and set under a glass in the platform may be placed just above the stage level. The action of the prologue in this case need not be altered, but may proceed from this point and duplicate that outlined in the above description.

Schaefer Invents Novelty Exploitation

W. G. Shaefer, manager of the Vaudette Theatre, West Point, Ga., brought several new ideas into play when he devised in his latest exploitation a campaign to put over "Don't Ever Marry."

About ten days before the picture was scheduled to open, Mr. Shaefer used such slides as:

"Said Myra to Joe: 'Take it from a widow who knows. Don't Ever Marry.'"

"Jim straightway went and did; and The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rocks the world. Every Quija board in town is talking it—"Don't Ever Marry."

Three days before the picture opened, five hundred post cards carrying sentences similar to those quoted in the foregoing were mailed to a list of what Mr. Shaefer calls "prospective brides and grooms," the young people in town ranging in ages from sixteen to twenty-five years.

The campaign brought Mr. Shaefer the biggest business he had enjoyed in two years.

Honorable Lost Key Stunt Unlocks Dubuque Wallets

The ancient but honorable lost key stunt was revived to the tune of considerable publicity and a full house recently in Dubuque, Ia., by F. L. McNamee, manager of the Majestic theatre, Dubuque, Ia.

"The Devil's Pass Key" was booked to play the Majestic, so McNamee arranged with the management to distribute dozens of old keys attached to small red tags, bearing the inscription: "Front Door Key—Majestic Theatre."

Ads then were inserted in the local papers announcing that the front door key of the Majestic had been lost and that the finder, upon returning it, would receive a pass to "The Devil's Pass Key." This ad was varied for several days prior to the play date. The newspaper thought that the stunt was so good that a news story was printed explaining it.

The keys came pouring into the box-office and the attendant mouth to mouth advertising did much to increase the success of the picture's run in Dubuque.

Rosenthal Gathers in Free Publicity on "Earthbound"

How an ingenious and enterprising manager can obtain a lot of free publicity for his showing of "Earthbound" has been demonstrated by M. Rosenthal, manager of the Allen theatre, St. Catharines, Ontario, Canada.

Knowing that he could not land in his local daily with anything that the city editor could by any possibility recognize as publicity material, Mr. Rosenthal suggested to a man in his city who likes to see his name in print that he send to the newspaper his views on spiritualism (linking up with a phase of the subject matter of "Earthbound," though not mentioning the picture) as he wanted a consensus of opinion on that subject.

Of course, the newspaper printed the man's letter. A follow-up letter was then sent in by Mr. Rosenthal, signed with the name of one of the theatre employes; it refuted all the statements contained in the original letter. A friendly physician was then called upon. He wrote a letter disagreeing with the theatre employe's opinion. Then a clergyman was wheedled into contradicting the physician's attitude towards the unseen world. Then when public feeling had been worked up to quite an extent, Mr. Rosenthal capitalized on all this writing of letters to the newspaper with a house announcement stating that "Earthbound," coming to the Allen theatre, held the answer to the all-absorbing question. .

The exploitation was indirect, but nevertheless effective, as the large attendance at the showings of the photoplay testified.

Fine Campaign for "Dinty"

Ralph Lieber, Manager of Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Gives Barry Picture Effective and Original Exploitation

AS an instance of a thoroughgoing exploitation campaign which comprised almost all of the devices generally used individually for the promotion of any one feature attraction, is the intense drive made by the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, to exploit "Dinty."

Three weeks before the playing date Manager Ralph Lieber started his campaign with a number of teaser notices refering to "Dinty" and his freckles.

Following that was another ad, illustrated with a small picture of Wesley Barry, and announcing the playing dates of the picture.

Two weeks before the showing Mr. Lieber arranged with a local heat and light company to send out ten thousand heralds along with their monthly bills.

Sixty-five thousand pictures of Wesley Barry, ten by six inches, on which was a printed announcement of the showing of the picture and the dates, were distributed through one of the Indianapolis newspapers by the residential route carriers. The newspaper co-operated in this way in courtesy to a special showing which the Circle gave to the news carriers previous to the first public showing of the picture. In addition, the news carriers planted a number of pictures of Wesley Barry in down-town show windows.

One of the most effective window displays put over during the run was accomplished through arrangements made with one of the music houses, located in the heart of the business district. A miniature stage set from one of the scenes from "Dinty" was reproduced. The major part of this scene consisted of the use of cut-outs showing Dinty and his three pals giving a show for "Dinty's" invalid mother.

The stage was about five by three feet in dimensions. At night a 60-Watt Hylo bulb was used, and the dimming and bringing up of the light attracted considerable attention.

In addition to the foregoing, the Circle maintained its consistently large newspaper display space. This, together with the big appeal made by the other exploitation methods brought many few faces into the Circle lobby. And that's quite a feat. Because it is a well grounded fact that almost everybody in Indianapolis has at some time or other attended the Circle.

Hausmann Gets Unusual Editorial Cooperation

A bit of exploitation that tended toward the extraordinary results enjoyed during the showing of "The Devil's Angel," at the Hippodrome in Pottsville, Pa., was the display secured in the largest department store of that town of one of Helen Gardner's gowns in their window. Miss Gardner is the star of the production and made a personal appearance in connection with the showing. In addition to the orthodox billing Manager Charles Hausmann then prevailed upon the publisher of Pottsville's leading paper to introduce Miss Gardner at each performance. This gave his show the endorsement not only of the paper, but in view of the fact that this publisher is a part of the social elect, it gave the stamp of approval of that class, with the result that Miss Gardner during her stay in Pottsville was the guest at the best homes and many social affairs were given in her honor.

The display of Miss Gardners' gown in the leading department store was considered a great achievement in view of the fact that this store in its entire history has never lent its windows to any outside advertising. After the gown was placed on display a card was secured describing the dress and calling attention to the fact that it was insured for $2,500 by one of the local insurance men.

Metzgar Uses Ballyhoo for "Peaceful Valley"

A young man dressed in a tattered pair of overalls, a pair of gum boots, a tattered straw hat which in itself was enough to attract wide attention at this time of year with snow on the ground, carrying a cat in one arm and a pitch fork over his shoulder, was the method used by E. Metzger, manager of the Strand Theatre, Creston, Iowa, to put over "Peaceful Valley." Appropriate cards which the man handed out invited recipients to see "Peaceful Valley" at the Strand.

A Bagdad Burro at Buffalo

WHEN Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, one of Buffalo's largest neighborhood theatres, put on Otis Skinner in "Kismet" he put over an exploitation stunt that had the whole town talking.

In viewing scenes in Bagdad Arthur saw that one of the popular animals used in that ancient city was the burro. Of course, Bagdad is far from Buffalo, but the Victoria manager figured that one of the beasts of burden ought to be in Buffalo. He began a thorough search of the city that ended with a burro, located in a fashionable part of the city.

Arrangements were immediately made to procure the apology for a horse, and a week in advance of the presentation Mr. Skinner sent the animal down town in back of a 15-foot towline. The towline had the burro on one end and a man dressed in a costume of old Bagdad on the other. On the burro's back were strapped two mammoth bags, and on the sides of the bags were suspended two large canvas signs announcing the showing of "Kismet" at the Victoria.

So far all went well. But when the burro got into the swirl of Buffalo's downtown traffic that stubborn beast immediately got tired, acquired an itch under the harness, walked on its hind legs, brayed, yelled, and, as a climax, broke away from the faithful sheik "leading" him, and, throwing his clutch into high, made a mad dash out one of the big avenues leading off Main street. In the mad dash, however, the Victoria "Kismet" signs stuck and waved their message to the crowds that lined the street sides to see the "dash for freedom."

Of course, a burro can't get away with that kind of stuff long even in Buffalo, and in due time was captured and rereturned to his disgusted leader in the downtown section. Resuming his march his niblets also resumed his braying, balking, and at times deliberately sat right down in Main street, and it was only with the assistance of traffic cops galore and automobile and trolley sirens in numbers never heard of that the brute was kept on the march.

The third day out the "Kismet" booster decided to sit right down in the middle of the street car tracks in the heart of the downtown section. There is no ordinance against this on the city records, but it is not being done, not even by burros. Traffic, of course, came to a standstill, and it is recorded that no less than six traffic cops were required to throw the four-footed exploitationist from the track into the gutter. The while the signs on the burro's side proclaimed to the laughing throngs that "Kismet' was coming to the Victoria.

The burro was written up by the newspapers, cursed by the traffic cops, enthusiastically received by passersby and applauded by Manager Skinner, who could not have procured so much attention with a brass band.

In addition to the burro, Mr. Skinner put over several excellent displays in large store windows in the neighborhood of the theatre, put on a striking lobby display showing scenes from the picture and turned the Victoria stage into a Bagdadian harem. Fifteen thousand cards were given out by the man leading the burro—that is, when he was not chasing the burro.

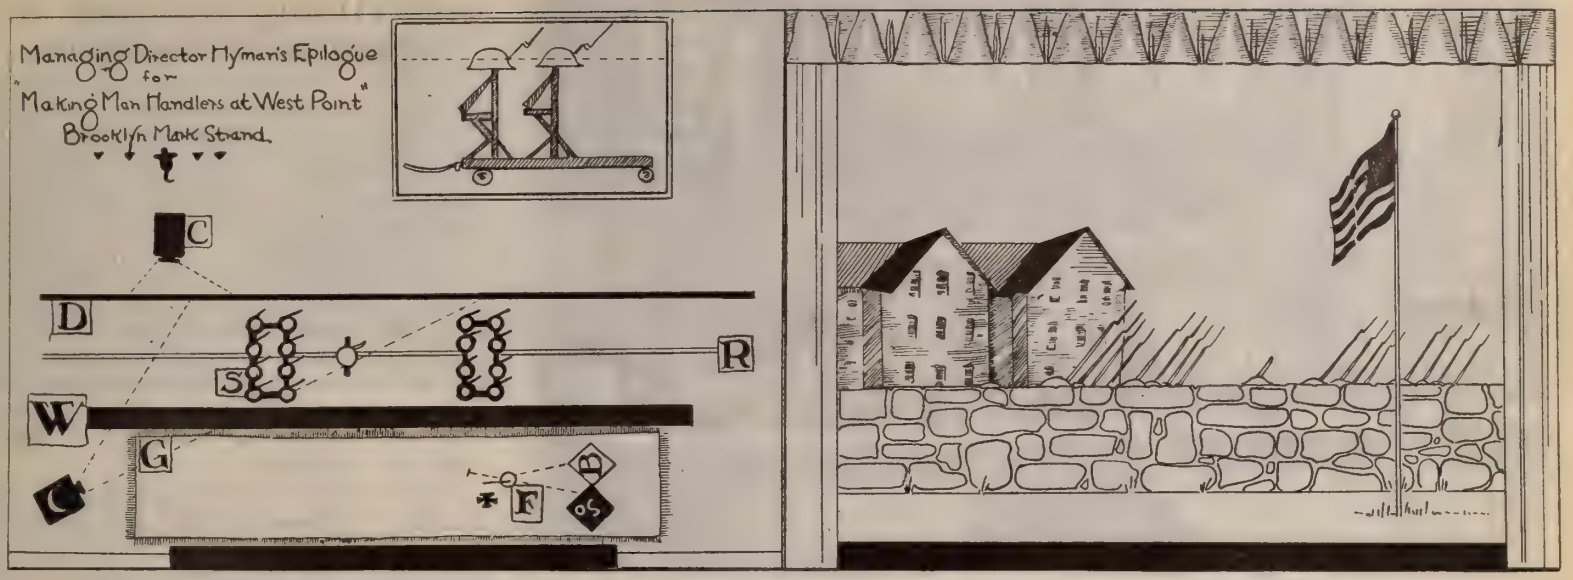
Saengers' Use Local Talent to Enhance Presentation

Audiences at the Strand theatre, New Orleans, this week were given a touch of musical comedy in the presentation of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway."

Maurice Barr, manager of the theatres of the Saenger Amusement Company, arranged a prologue in which he engaged a local talent to sing "So Long Mary," the musical theme song which runs through George M. Cohan's stage production.



A back drop gave the effect of a train preparing to leave a small-town station, the counter part of the station in which "Mary" tears up her legacy to marry the man she loves. On the rear platform of the train stood a woman, while a quartette of men, with arms outstretched sang "So Long Mary," with the woman poining in the chorus.

Benn Ties-Up with National Advertising

A way of making use of national advertising is being tried out by Marcus A. Benn, owner of several motion-picture houses in Philadelphia. For the Benn theatre, one of the Benn string, the manager has a contract for six billboards in prominent locations. The expense of changing posters every few days proved to be more than Mr. Benn could see in business returns, so he has hit on a scheme to make permanent use of the signs. The Benn theatre plays Paramount pictures exclusively, so the billboard stands have been painted as will best be explained by an inspection of the accompanying cut. Mr. Benn regards his signs as pure exploitation, a tie-up with the Saturday Evening Post advertising that Famous Players-Lasky is doing and expects good returns on his investment.

Epilogue for "Manhandlers at West Point"

Specialty Number Staged by Edward L. Hyman, Manager Brooklyn Strand Theatre

THROUGH the efforts of Managing Director Hyman's artist, THE NEWS is again enabled to publish a complete working script for the presentation of a military epilogue.

Mr. Hyman used it as a big finale for Grantland Rice's sport editorial, "Making Manhandlers At West Point," when that short subject was playing at the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn.

Instead of opening up with a prologue on this reel, which shows "Louies" in the making at the War College, Hyman wisely decided to end the film with a smashing musicale presentation.

The film was so arranged by Mr. Hyman so that the last shot showed America's future generals in dress parade. The curtains closed for a second, and then parted revealing the campus grounds of a cantonment. In the foreground was a high stone wall and the background held a barracks building painted on a sky drop. Leftstage was a flagpole, but the scene is very dimly lit, representing dusk, and at the opening it is necessary that the flag on the pole remain invisible.

The lights in the windows of the barracks are burning brightly, when a trio, from offstage sing four old time American barrack songs: "Good-night Ladies," "Upidee," "Boola, Boola," and "One Grasshopper."

With the ending of "One Grasshopper," comes the military bugle passage for "all lights out." The lights go out, and the Strand's first cornetist, dressed in the grey and whitte parade uniform of the West Pointer, with his cockaded hat perched forward in the most approved military manner, enters from leftstage to a snare drum accompaniment. Standing at regulation distance from the flagpole, with his cornet resting against his hip, at an angle, the cornetist waits for the "Retreat Gun," which is sounded from offstage, and then raises his bugle to his lips to play "Retreat." At this point, all the lights should be down, and the overhead spot, and electric fan simultaneously turned on the flag.

This explains the diagram displayed on this page:

G

GREEN GRASS RUG.—This was spread from fly to fly, and from the footlights to the setwell.

F

W

WALL.—This is a set wall, and should stand about five feet, six inches. Helmets and bayonets are just visible over the top of the wall.

S

SOLDIERS.—Property man can rent the helmets, and guns, and put the thing together in about an hour and a half. Or if you are near a good theatrical property man you can easily rent one. This is one of the oldest theatrical devices in the country, and most supply houses have about a half dozen of them. These soldiers move across the stage, behind the stone wall, just as the signal for "lights out" is sounded. You can bring them across with a muffled drum effect.

D

DROP.—This is a sky drop with barracks painted on the rightstage end of the sheet. Barracks windows should be transparent.

R

ROPE used by stage crew to pull soldiers across the stage. Soldiers are mounted on rollers.

C

CALCIUM (Backstage).—This is played on the transparent windows of the drop, and goes off when the cue for lights out is sounded. Use lemon colored slide.

CALCIUM (Leftstage fly).—In tense blue. Wide aperture flooding set. This is slowly irised throughout.

OS

B

BLOWER.—This goes on when the juice is turned on the overhead spot. Big electric fan will do the trick fine.

FOOTLIGHTS.—These are in blue, and like the first calcium keep coming down until they are almost out at the finale.

Reisenfeld Has Prologue for "Forbidden Fruit"

UNDER the title of "Love Is the Best of All," Hugo Reisenfeld's new school of opera and ensemble is rendering a pleasing specialty number at the New York Rivoli theatre this week.

In a stage setting representing a cabaret, Grace Foster and the Rivoli mixed quartette and Vera Myers and Paul Oscard, Rivoli dancers, give a song number and dance selections.

The song is Victor Herbert's composition of the above title, while the dance is an original creation designed to fit the melody. Small tables with individual lights are arranged restaurant fashion about the three walls of the set. The players are attired in evening dress. The number serves as a prologue for the Rivoli feature picture "Forbidden Fruit."

Minneapolis Theatre's "Held by the Enemy" Presentation

Although no prologue was used "Held by the Eenemy" was presented in a very attractive manner by Manager C. P. Murphy at the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, last week.

A special stage setting, with a back drop showing an old Southern plantation on the Mississippi River, was used for the overture, "Melodies of the North and South in 1865." During the overture a steamboat passed slowly down the river. Beautiful lighting effects were obtained.

The ushers and doormen were attractively attired in costumes of the Civil War period and caused much favorable comment. The lobby dressing was very simple, consisting of a few artistically draped Federal and Confederate flags, and shields decorated with wreaths.

Canadian Theatre Effects Beneficial Tie-Up

An interesting and effective tie-up between the Allen Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, and the Calgary Daily Herald, was a "What Women Love" contest in the newspaper on the occasion of the presentation of Annette Kellerman's feature of that title at the Allen during the week of January 10. Ten store advertisements were published on the contest page, which also carried a theatre display. In each of the store ads appeared a section of Annette Kellerman's figure and these were to be pieced together by the participants in the test. Twenty-five double passes, good at any performance at the theatre, were given to those who patched the pieces together most neatly and accurately. The assembled pictures were to be sent to the "contest editor" of the Herald before a stated time and not to the theatre, thus assuring the general public.

Describing Another of Grauman's Prologues

Another of Sid Grauman's famous prologues, recently presented at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, is described in the following text and the cut appearing below. The prologue was titled "Sweet Singers of the Street" and is partially self explanatory.

A section of the slums—a rubbish can, two idle newsboys, a background of pawnshop and second-hand clothes dealer; a dingy grocery, and in a bit of a sheltered spot between two buildings a blind woman and a young girl with a violin. Cup in hand the woman sat, waiting for gifts while the girl played.

A solid citizen hurries by, pauses, listens a moment and a coin clinks into the cup. The girl plays. A fat, ruddy, rotund policeman, club in hand, saunters by and almost out of sight, turns and contributes and listens to the music. So do the newsboys, with late editions under their arms. The woman sings, and the girl plays.

A worker, empty pail in hand, passes, pauses, and then leans his bulk against the rubbish can, entranced by the sweet strains.

Then the strains of Salvation Army music are heard. The army filed onto the stage, with bass drum, cornet and the usual music making instruments.

And they play "Onward Christian Soldiers," taking the audience back to the days of long, long Sundays and longer sermons.

After the bit the policeman returns, having gone to ring in his box, and he and the workingman and another idler make up a trio of as fine singers as Los Angeles had heard in many moons.

The littlest newsboy, in rags, sang old Irish and other melodies, then his companion did a travesty on the shimmy that proved one of the star offerings of the program.

Dolls for Lobby Display

Steve Willetts of Liberty Theatre, Astoria, Oregon, Decorates for Showing of "Twin Beds"

No one knows where Manager Willetts got the "props" for his lobby display, but they may have been purloined from his kiddies' Christmas stock, or possibly just purchased. They consisted principally of the furnishings of a miniature bedroom with—of course—twin beds.

In the Liberty Theatre entry way he set up a tiny room, open on the side toward the street, with the two tiny beds, pictures on the walls, a little rug on the floor, a diminutive night-stand between the two beds, and even a little night lamp burning upon it. This dainty scene he peopled with two Kewpie dolls, dressed in the latest fad de nuit.

In one bed was tucked the unknown intruder, but a tiny lock of his hair showing, while the little lady doll was posed in mid-flight between the two beds, exclaiming, "Hubby I'm cold."

The lobby got the crowds. More, it got a laugh. Folks stopped to look and then to laugh. The very laughter engendered by the display gave the character to the picture to the townsfolk who had not seen it, and who perhaps had not read the newspaper advertising. The whole thing linked the film up with laughter, made it known among movie-goers as a laugh-maker.

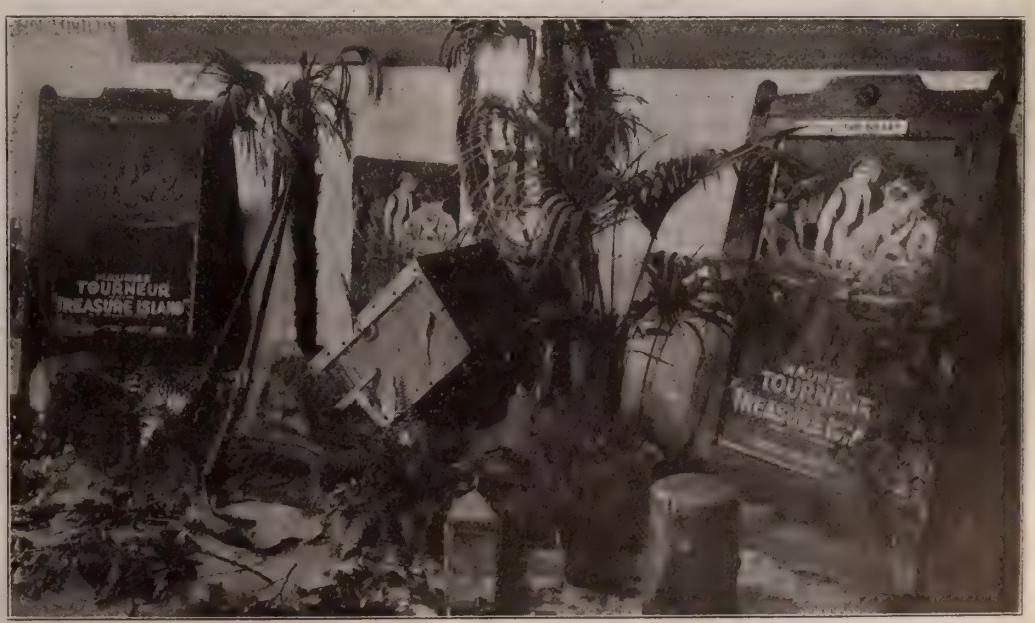
The more strategic part of Manager Willetts exploitation took into consideration some of the folk in the city, but as every place of this size has them the idea may well be passed along.

In a town of from one family to 25,000 there are always some characters who are widely known because of their vociferous laughter. People will go places to hear these men laugh. People will go where these men have laughed. They are the very laugh-arbiters of the city.

Willetts knew this, and knew his men, and saw that they were at the first exhibition of the picture. He didn't give them passes, for this was a study in psychology and passes might have marred the effectiveness of the plot. He simply told them that he had a winner billed for that week, one which would appeal to them. He advised their seeing the first performance. They did.

The laughter of those men, came billowing out of the doors of the theatre. People outside heard it and came in to see what it was about, if for no other reason. Other people, laughing already at the picture, were convulsed at the explosions of the two master laughters.

The immediate results of the laughter-fest were not all which accrued, Manager Willetts reports. Throughout the whole run of the picture people were talking about the prize laughers and many an extra dollar was coaxed into the Liberty box office as a result of the stunt.



Missouri Theatre Presents Fine New Year Novelty

The accompanying cuts show three views of the presentation offered during Christmas Week by Manager William Goldman of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis.

Nineteen Twenty, characterized by an old stooping man with a rusty scythe, first made his appearance and asked leave of the world to permit him to review the events of his regime.

As he pronounces each event, which began with Winter Time, St. Patrick's Day, Spring Time, Fourth of July and went all the way through to Thanksgiving and Christmas, a young feminine dancer attired in proper costume made her appearance and interpreted her character with dance.

An ensemble dance followed the entrance of the last single dancer. Then 1921 with a large tuba in his hands came from behind the scenes and drove the past "events" and old 1920 off the wings of the stage, while the orchestra engaged in its conception of New Year's jazz and noise. When the last note was struck an electric sign, suddenly flashed a "Happy New Year" to the audience.

Grauman Borrows Page from Medicine Show History

The feature act he called "A Study in Pose and Color," and that's exactly what it is. A beautifully formed girl stands on a raised dias on the stage. By means of beautifully colored slides she apparently dons one costume after another, from the furs of the far north to the riotously colored garments of the Orient.

One blended harmoniously into another, similar to the "fade ins" of a picture. Under the magic of the slides she became an Indian maid, a girl of old Egypt, or wearing chiefly a leopard skin and a dazzling smile. Then she was a shepardess, with her charges in the background, or a devout miss about to enter a church, while the chimes were softly playing.

The prologue gave the audience a glimpse of Old Mexico. A quartette of Castillian maids sang "La Paloma," and this was followed by graceful Spanish dancers, to the accompaniment of castanets, and a cabellero sang "On the Road to Mandalay."

It was a vivid, colorful scene, and an added touch of realism was given by the presence of a Mexican mother and her youngster who sat stolidly watching the dancing and listening to the singing.

"Miracle Man" Draws Another Story

Regardless of how old it is, a motion picture is always a good subject for exploitation, as was exemplified when Oscar Kantner, exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in Indiana, staged a campaign for "The Miracle Man" at the Dream Theatre, Jeffersonville, Ind. The exploitation was notable not only for its pulling power on a picture admittedly past its youth, but also for the exhibitor's alertness in adapting to his own uses exploitation suggestions on this picture offered by the Motion Picture News.

Heralds, folders, throwaways and teasers inculcating ideas used by other exhibitors were incorporated in the exploitation for the small town run. One of the novel features adopted was the use of the coat lapel tag with the simple slogan: "The Miracle Man is Coming."

Nesbitt Inaugurates "Linwood Chatter" Column

Earle S. Nesbitt, a live wire out at Tarkio, Mo., has recently inaugurated a new departure in advertising that suggests itself as within the reach of most any manager who can and will write the kind of stuff that Mr. Nesbitt does. The plan referred to is a column in one of the local papers under the title of "Linwood Chatter," in which semi-editorial reading matter of worth-while nature is presented to Tarkio citizens. Mr. Nesbitt recently ran an article on "Censorship and 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me,'" an approaching attraction at the Linwood, in which he refused to allow a self-appointed (alleged) censor to judge the film on the ground that "censorship in this case simply amounted to the doubting of either my intelligence or morality—maybe both" and placed the censorship in the hands of his audience by means of a slip to be used by the patrons.

It is a good idea and one that holds all kinds of possibilities that are denied even the cleverest advertising man if he is forced to stick solely to display space with his messages to the public.

Grand Rapids Theatre and Newspaper Cooperate

The manager of the Isis Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., gave a free Saturday morning screening, "The North Wind's Malice," as an exploitation stunt and reaped a rich harvest in attendance throughout the week's showing.

He arranged with the Grand Rapids Herald to publish coupons in its columns entitling every person who cut out the coupon and presented it at the Isis box office to a free admission to the special morning performance.

Second Alt and Howell Comedy Arrives

The second two-reel comedy featuring Alexander Alt and Helen Howell has been received by the general office of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, and word has been received that the third and fourth pictures of the series are now in the process of production at the Alt and Howell studio in Sherman, California, under the direction of Al Martin.

The Alt and Howell comedies are the latest to be added to the exclusive short subject program of Reelcraft and will be ready for general distribution on February 12 through the Reelcraft and allied independent exchanges.

Several Arrow Press Books Ready

Arrow's Advertising Department announces the completion of press books on several features, which are now ready for the exhibitors. Press books on "Luxury," the second special production starring Rubye De Remer, "The Man Who Trifled," a Dramafilms production with an all-star cast, and "The Tame Cat," an Arrow special, also a Dramafilms production, have been completed and will be off the press this week.

Thirteen Kineto Subjects

Urban Issues List of Single Reelers for National Release

CHARLES URBAN, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., announces this week the first thirteen subjects of the Kineto Review which will be released nationally through the National Exchanges, Inc.

Each subject treated in the Kineto Review is handled in one-reel lengths; each subject being complete within itself.

The first thirteen subjects are as follows:

"Liquid Gold of Texas," a fascinating study of the oil industry down there, with much pictorial evidence as to why such a bumper crop of millionaires was developed; "Down in Dixie," a charming trip in the rejuvenated "Sunny South" of America; "The Emerald Isle," a beautiful reel showing a restless land of a restless people; "Panama," a "survey" of the ancient city leper colony, railway and the great canal; "Vegetarians," interesting studies of animals subsisting entirely on vegetation; "Thrills," some of the things in sports and everyday life which make the heart palpitate; "Morocco, the Mysterious"; "Hunting the Sea Wolf," many devices and methods employed in the destruction of submarines have been permitted to be published by the government officials for the first time; "Trip of the U. S. S. Idaho," to Brazil when Dr. Epitacio Pessoa, the president-elect, was on board; "Water-Babies," a refreshing view of creatures which take kindly to the water; "Beauty Spots," some of nature's finest creations in the United States and Canada; "The Naturalist's Paradise," some fascinating naturalist's studies photographed by Maurice Ricker on the Barados-Antigua expedition for the University of Iowa; "The Holy City," a magnificent reel with the titles all from the Bible.

W. Nowell Heads Company

To Make Super-Features Based on Arsene Lupin or "Raffles" Stories

WORD has been received from Hollywood that Wedgwood Nowell is to enter the production field with four superfeatures yearly to be founded upon either the internationally famous "Arsene Lupin" stories by Maurice LeBlanc or the celebrated "Raffles" stories by E. W. Hornung.

By virtue of an agreement entered into with Joseph Menchen, Jr., of the Celebrated Authors Society of New York and the Société des Films Menchen of Paris, Nowell has acquired production rights to eighteen "Arsene Lupin" stories and twenty "Raffles" stories as material from which to select his forthcoming productions, it is announced.

Los Angeles capitalists are reported as being interested in the Nowell productions, and it is announced that each and every feature shall be produced with a wealth of scenic investiture and careful attention to detail never before offered exhibitors in this class of attraction.

Wedgwood Nowell is to be featured as "Lupin" or "Raffles," as the case may be, it being the intention of the producing organization to utilize mainly the Arsene Lupin stories, with possibly an occasional Raffles offering.

"There is nothing whatever of the 'serial' idea included in my plans," said Mr. Nowell. "Each story is a separate and distinct super-feature to be founded upon one or the other of the novels. Of course, Arsene Lupin himself is to be found in each of Leblanc's stories, but the circumstances, conditions and supporting characters vary with every story plot.

"I believe that the day of the 'international' picture is here. The feature made for a world market. Maurice Leblanc works exist in seventeen languages and dialects and E. W. Hornung's in four or five. Therefore, I feel certain that my screen characterizations of Lupin and Raffles will find a ready-made market of admirers of these two fictional heroes in all corners of the earth."

Saniel Leaves S. & S. Film, of Pittsburgh

"Midchannel" Gets Big Reception in South

According to a report received by Equity Pictures from Less Goldberg, head of the Big Feature Rights, of Louisville, "Midchannel," the Clara Kimball Young feature, is making an excellent record in Kentucky and Tennessee.

Equity also states that Miss Young is receiving a large amount of unsolicited press publicity in the South. Along the flattering statements made by newspaper critics is that the picturization of "Midchannel" is superior to the play.

"Dangerous Love" Press Sheet Ready

An artistic press sheet has just been made for "Dangerous Love" the five-reel thriller which is being offered the Independent Market by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, and which was adapted from the novel "Ben Warman" by Charles E. Winter and directed by Charles E. Barlett from a screen version by Hal Hoadley.

This feature is a picture of thrilling action, of love and sentiment, of hate and jealousy, and portrayed in that section of the country where a man's strength is tested to the utmost.

Hunter Under Way on New Production

T. Hayes Hunter is now in the second week of production on his adaptation of Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing."

The entire cast has been filled, among whom are Clara Horton, Eugenie Besserer, Eddie Sutherland, Geo. Hackathorne and Frank Leigh. It will be a Hodkinson release.

Warns Against False Reports

Robt. Priest, of Film Market, Encourages Independents

ALL authorities in the motion picture industry are far from being convinced that it is in a precarious condition. There are many who regard what is termed "the present situation" in the industry as but a passing condition, which was to have been expected in the readjustment naturally following the great war.

Robert W. Priest, the president of The Film Market, is one of those who take an optimistic view of the future. In expressing his opinion of the situation he first emphasizes the fact that independent motion picture producers should not be deterred from following their plans for productions by the manifestly false reports that are being circulated regarding hard times in the industry.

"Any depression in the motion picture business at this time," said Mr. Priest, "is exaggerated in its importance and is the result of wilful and malicious misrepresentation, ignorance or selfish aggravation of a natural readjustment of abnormal conditions.

"Motion picture theatres everywhere are doing good business and consequent require good pictures to supply their demands. Film rentals unquestionably are now cheaper, because exhibitors, for the first time, find it possible to fill their needs without submitting to oppression and dictation. State Rights buyers are directly responsible for this position of the exhibitor.

"The wonderful prosperity of the past three years served to promote an unusually large number of good, as well as mediocre, pictures, all of which could not possibly be absorbed by the regular distributors, and so it was that the State Rights buyer or independent exchangeman came into his own. Excess of production in motion pictures creates the same result as excess of production in any other business—the less desirable product necessarily becomes a drug on the market.

"Shrewd picture men sense this condition and curtail their own production and also float propaganda to discourage competition, even of the so-called second rate production which 'gets by' on a cheap rental. If their ruse is successful the other fellow curtails his production activities, or discontinues altogether, and leaves the field clear to the man who floats discouraging propaganda.

"Fortunately for the big fellows, but unfortunately for the others, under these conditions the "mental scare" registers and the result is that the independent producers stop planning ahead.

"Not so with Famous Players-Lasky, First National or any of the big fellows who are in a position where they can get daily reports from all parts of the country and thereby keep in close touch with the real situation. Their sagacious managements note that any growing shortage of good pictures create a stronger demand for their own product and they quietly plan ahead and map out campaigns that will serve to swing everything their own way when the right moment arrives. Independent producers will do well to take a leaf out of the big man's book. A good picture will always go.

"When the shortage becomes acute as a result of the present well boosted scare, film rentals will again go up; and with film rentals rising and profits increasing common and preferred stock will jump in price by leaps and bounds and Wall Street will be happy.

"Where great financiers are concerned and profits begin to suffer, there is generally a reason for any 'unusual condition' and the ultimate result in practically every instance is the elimination of independent competition. Either the independent is frightened out and seeks new fields of endeavor or he is bought out or absorbed by the more financially substantial.

"Competition in the film renting business is keen and has been for several months past. The State Rights distributor was never more prosperous than he is today.

"Everything the State Rights buyer has, or can get, is anxiously booked by the exhibitor, regardless of geographical location. Recent conditions of production have proved effective in bringing down film rentals to the exhibitor and a source of great profit and encouragement for State Rights buyers and independent producers. They, strange as it may seem, operate at a much smaller expense than the big producers and distributors are operating.

"My advice to independent producers is to get busy and make good pictures. Their chance of recognition was never better. If they neglect this opportunity and nurse a situation which has been unquestionably magnified and enlarged upon for its effect upon them, they will be doing only what it is hoped and expected they will do.

"I propose to immediately start a production for the State Rights market with Miss Lottie Kendall, at the head of her own company to make four, and possibly six pictures.

I have also just acquired the rights to a strong dramatic feature written by Robert McLaughlin. February 1, I am releasing Rex Beach's wonderful success of a few years ago, "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

"Also, at the present moment Tom Bret is editing and writing the titles for the first three of a series of twelve two-reel comedies starring Jimmy Callahan, which I shall release on the State Rights market as soon as Mr. Bret can finish his work on them."

Levey Films Story of Molasses Industry

A title has been selected for the educational feature showing the molasses industry which is being produced by the Harry Levey Service Corporation. Officially it will be known as "What Could Be Sweeter?"

Jane Fuller, winner of the Cleveland Beauty Test held last August by a moving picture concern has one of the leading roles in this picture, as has Mrs. Ida Bailey Allen, the home economic expert who for many years ran the housewife's forum in a leading woman's magazine.

Mrs. Allen will herself prepare on the screen many dishes containing molasses as an ingredient and also prepare some recipes for dainty molasses appetizers.

F.M.Sanford of Western Star in New York

F. M. Sanford, of the Western Star Productions, of Los Angeles, has just arrived in New York. He has come East in connection with his company's series of five-reel Westerns, which feature William Fairbanks.

While en route Mr. Sanford closed the State of Wisconsin to the Wisconsin Film Co., of Milwaukee, and Indiana to Carl Harthill, of Chicago. This makes practically a 100 per cent sale on these Westerns, announces Mr. Sanford.

Bernard Durning Heads Macauley Cast

C. R. Macauley Photoplays, Inc., announces the early release of "Diane of Star Hollow." It contains the same cast as "When Bearcat Went Dry," headed by Bernard Durning with the addition of Evelyn Greeley, it is announced.

It is said to be replete with action, suspense and thrills combined with a beautiful love story.

Fine Arts City Is Improved

MURRAY W. GARSSON, president of the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation, who recently announced that negotiations had been completed to turn Camp Joseph R. Johnston at Jacksonville, Fla., into a gigantic motion picture city, has just returned from the southeastern metropolis, and reports that Fine Arts City has passed the prospective stage and that actual work has commenced in carrying out his plans to make the former camp the most complete motion picture city in the world.

One of the distinct features of Fine Arts City will be its large menagerie which will be maintained for the use of the many companies contracting for studio space. The animals available to these companies are the property of two of the largest circus combinations in the world and anything from an elephant to a porcupine can be had on a minute's notice. Included in the menagerie are lions, tigers, giraffes, buffalos, wolves, bears, elephants, monkeys, gorillas, chimpanzees, foxes, leopards, zebras, cobras, boa-constrictors, armadillos, in fact almost every known species of the animal and reptile kingdoms, any or all of which can be had by the day or week, the same as a producer would get any other kind of prop.

Other features of Fine Arts City will be a disappearing lake, one of the most unique inventions to be applied to the modern art of the motion picture, and entirely different from anything ever before attempted. It has the combined usefulness of providing locations for nautical stunts, sea battles, yacht races, aquatic sports and hydroplane maneuvers, and by its mechanism it can be made into a sunken garden with pergolas, statuary and hanging walls, much like the hanging gardens of ancient Babylon.

Mr. Garsson in speaking of Fine Arts City said, "We are going to have the most complete and up-to-date plant of its kind in the world, and every accommodation and convenience that a producer may need will be found within the gates of our city.

"A part of our seven hundred acre tract will be set aside for a beautiful bungalow colony, where the people and players connected with the different producing companies engaging studio space with us may live not only comfortably, but luxuriously and exclusively.

"Branch stores dealing in all the necessities of life will be established within the limits of Fine Arts City by the merchants of Jacksonville. There will be grocery, delicatessen, drug, furniture, cigar, candy and housefurnishing stores on the ground. Then there will be a hospital, motion picture and vaudeville theatre, gymnasium and swimming pool—in fact everything to make Fine Arts City the most delightful spot in the country for motion picture workers.

"The Rotary Club of Jacksonville is highly enthusiastic over our establishment and have come forth with assurances that they will lend my company and the producing companies with us every co-operation that is possible for them to extend.

"Unlike Los Angeles, where reports have been current for some time past that the local furniture dealers charge the producers exorbitant prices at every turn, the Jacksonville Furniture Men's Association have gone on record that they will not only welcome producers coming to Fine Arts City but they will lend them every possible aid to facilitate production at a minimum cost by working with them and not against them.

"To this end, there will be a warehouse on the grounds that will be fully supplied with every conceivable kind of furniture, embracing all the period styles from the days of ancient Rome to the present day.

"My plans are already under construction and I hope to have Fine Arts City completed and ready for occupancy by the various companies that have signified their intention to make Jacksonville their producing headquarters, within the next two months."

"Parish Priest" Well Received by Buyers

State right buyers are receiving "The Parish Priest," which Herman J. Garfield is releasing on the independent market, with great enthusiasm, according to reports received from Mr. Garfield. "The Parish Priest" is Dan Scully's famous stage success. William Desmond has the leading role in the screen version.

Ten hours after his decision to state right the production Mr. Garfield states, one of the territories was sold and paid for in cash. Other important deals are now pending and are expuected to be closed shortly.

C. B. Price, of Price Films Inc., had a special trade showing of his latest state right offering "Your Daughter—and Mine" in Chicago, during his recent trip to that city. The picture was exhibited not only for the Chicago exchange managers, but also the other western state right buyers in the centres surrounding the Windy City.

This showing was merely an advance heralding of the release of the picture which will be made shortly after the first of the year. It is an adaptation of the Stanley Houghton play "Hindle Wakes."

In the exploitation of "Your Daughter—and Mine," C. B. Price will carry his campaign directly into the territory of the different franchise purchasers of this picture.

Many "Hush" Bookings on Coast

All Star Features Report Big Business on Young Picture

ADVICES received this week from the office of the All Star Feature Distributors, headed by Sol Lesser and Louis Hyman, general manager, confirm Equity's claims that Clara Kimball Young is maintaining her lead in popularity with exhibitors and motion-picture fans in the Far West. With every successive release of the Equity star the superiority of Clara Kimball Young in the states of California, Arizona and Nevada is established more firmly than ever, they state. Every record achieved by the All Star Exchange has been beaten since its release of the new series of Young pictures, beginning with "Hush," Equity asserts.

An itemized report of the bookings on the new group of Young releases reveals the unusual fact that every theatre and circuit of note in the three states mentioned has signed for the entire Young series for runs ranging from one week upwards. This amount of business has never been achieved by the All Star Feature Distributors on any previous production, it is said. It elevates the box office merit of Clara Kimball Young to first rank and is a prophecy of unrivalled prosperity for Exhibitors. What makes this victory of Clara Kimball Young still more impressive, states Equity, is the inclusion of a non-cancellable clause in the five-picture contract signed by this exchange with their exhibitors.

Only the leading theatres can here be listed as proof of the unanimity of Miss Young's popularity. The Rialto and Symphony theatres of San Francisco and Los Angeles have booked "Hush" for a two-week run apiece; the American, Oakland, Goddard's Sacramento, the Liberty, San Jose; the Liberty, Fresno; the T & D, Stockton; the Strand, Bakersfield; the Court, Berkeley; the Prince, San Diego; the Alpine, Pasadena; the Tivoli, Santa Barbara, are among those who have booked the Young pictures, beginning with "Hush" for a full week's run, with an optional second week arrangement.

No town has been left out in contracting for "Hush" and the succeeding releases of the Equity star. A 100 per cent representation was secured in the theatres of Monterey, Carson City, Eureka, Phoenix, Globe, Tucson, Yuma and Prescott. Many of the small towns of Arizona and Nevada have billed few costly productions outside of the Young pictures. The advent of a picture of the prestige of "Hush" and the unexcelled dominance of Clara Kimball Young in the Western belt have induced them to give this screen favorite a series booking, states Equity.

"Another factor that explains the record number of first runs on 'Hush' in Sol Lesser's territory," says Equity, "is the standard of presentation maintained by Western showmen. The great number of first run theatres of lavish dimensions that abound on the Coast has made it necessary to book only the finer productions. As this grade of pictures is comparatively scarce, exhibitors have lengthened the runs on first-class releases, such as 'Hush' and the forthcoming Young series."

THE fifth of the new series of Hallroom comedies is to be called "In Again, Out Again," according to reports from C. B. C. Film Sales. A print of this has just been received from the West Coast and is now being edited and titled at the C. B. C. New York office.

Three recent sales of this series of comedies, C. B. C. reports, are the result of the record-breaking week at the Strand in New York, where "A Dog Gone Mix-Up," fourth of the series, was shown. These sales are listed elsewhere in this week's issue of The News.

C. B. C. FILM SALES CORP., 1600 Broadway, New York City

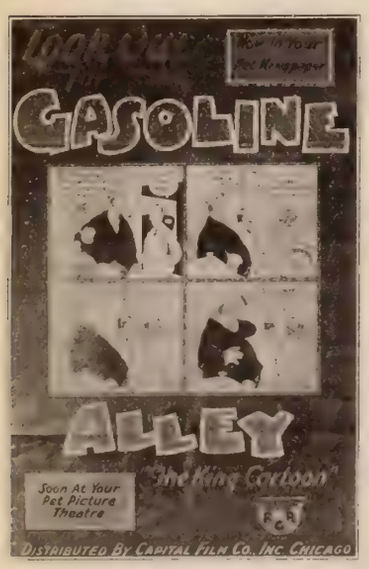
Key Holding Issue Statement

THERE has been some mystery about the meaning of announcements recently sent out by Life to the effect that that magazine is soon to make its screen debut under the guidance of the Key Holding Corporation. The mystery has now been partially dispelled by the official statement that the latter organization is not composed of Wall Street impressarios seeking fame and fortune in the picture world, but of men who have for some years been identified with the film and popular amusement business.

The filming and presentation of Life under the direction of Ashley Miller will, it is claimed, be a revelation to filmdom. Just how this is being done is the still unsolved part of the mystery.

Harry J. Shepard, who is the president of the corporation, is also associated with the Charles Urban Film Industries, and for the past three years was general manager of W. H. Productions Co. Mr. Shepard is known in film land as a builder of successes. He created the exploitation campaign that made "Mickey" a household name and that gave the film industry a new idea in exploitation and distribution of big films.

Ashley Miller, the vice-president and director of production, is known as one of our pioneer megaphone wielders. He has made features for Edison, Pathe, Famous, Vitagraph and Community during the past twelve years, and, having originated a few stunts that are now common property, may be counted upon to actually deliver the "something new" that is promised.



Arthur Bergh, the treasurer of the Key Holding Corporation, is the Director of Recording of the Emerson Phonograph Company and was for six years the director of the municipal concerts for the City of New York, a position which followed long engagements at the Metropolitan Opera House and with the New York Symphony. He is, therefore, not only a successful business man, but an artist whose judgment as to the public taste is of direct value in this new field.

Mr. Shepard has already inaugurated an exploitation campaign which is said to be unique and far-reaching in its effects. The tie-up with Life is thorough and is the basis of a worldwide publicity that is to be of direct and positive help to the exhibitor in making "The Good Things of Life" a veritable one-reel feature.

The following are a few of the outstanding American artists and authors who will contribute weekly to "The Good Things of Life": Charles Dana Gibson, James Montgomery Flagg, Thomas L. Masson, Oliver Herford, Carolyn Wells, Wallace Irwin, Walt Mason, George Ade, Irvin S. Cobb, Don Marquis, Meredith Micholson, Dr. Frank Crane, Maxfield Parrish, Raleigh Enright, Eliot Keen, Coles Phillips Frieh, Montague Glass, Gluyas Williams and others to be announced from time to time.

Both Life and the Key Holding Corporation feel that this alliance is not only destined to give the picture fan a new joy in life, but also to provide the exhibitor with remarkably exploited feature in his program.

Well Known Film Men to Screen Material of Life Magazine

A one-sheet being sent to all garages, showrooms and salesrooms in an experimental exploitation campaign on Frank King's "Gasoline Alley," Russell-Griever-Russell's new cartoons

To Exploit King Cartoon

Russell-Griever-Russell Plan Direct-to-the-Public Ad Campaign

A DIRECT to the public publicity and exploitation campaign that will be of real benefit to the exhibitor, as well as the state right buyers, is being put over by Russell-Greiver & Russell's publicity department to focus attention on the coming of "Gasoline Alley," the series of animated cartoons soon to be released, founded on Frank King's widely syndicated cartoons which are appearing in the neighborhood of sixty papers scattered throughout the country.

One of the angles of the campaign is the sending of a carefully designed one-sheet to all garages, auto supply dealers and show rooms in the city of Chicago where it will brighten the walls and spread the "Gasoline Alley" tidings to all who see it without being too evidently a piece of propaganda. This is more or less in the nature of a test campaign and if it is as successful, as indicated by results to date, will be carried out in all key cities where the independent buyer takes over the territorial rights to "Gasoline Alley."

Another exploitation proposition is the formation of the "Gasoline Alley Club" in Chicago, for which Frank King has designed a lapel button, which is furnished upon request to motorists. Membership in the club carries no responsibility with it except to be a little more careful in the handling of automobiles and be a regular fellow to other motorists with whom the drivers come in contact. Mr. King is sending out letters to all papers syndicating his "Gasoline Alley" cartoons, requesting the automobile editor to call the attention of car users in his vicinity to the club and this is meeting with excellent response.

The first "Gasoline Alley" release is rapidly approaching readiness for the screen.

Billy West in New Comedy

"Conquering Hero" is Fourth of Series to Be Released by Joan

STATE-RIGHT exchangemen and exhibitors as a whole will be interested in the announcement of the release by the Joan Film Sales Co. of Billy West's fourth two-reel comedy—"The Conquering Hero." As the title suggests, this two-reeler exhibits the Joan comedian in the mock role of the gallant hero. "The Conquering Hero" is directed by Reginald Parker and supported by Fred Lancaster in the heavy role and Ethelyn Gibson as the pretty and persecuted heroine It is claimed to be West's funniest film-farce yet released.

"The Conquering Hero" follows the lead of Billy West's former comedies "Sweethearts," "Service Stripes" and "He's in Again" by striking a laugh with the first "crack out of the box." The opening scene reveals our versatile hero disguised as part of the surrounding shrubbery. As such his presence is unknown to his rival, who stands nearby gloating over a photograph of the "girl in the case." By a feat of sleight-of-hand, our hidden hero substitutes his rival's photograph for another. The victim of the felony goes innocently forth to meet the fair maiden. As the hour for proposal arrives, he draws the photograph out of his pocket and delivers a passionate rhapsody over her beauty and charm. The zealous lover then proceeds to flash the photograph before her eyes when the horrible mistake dawns upon him, and he finds himself raving over a picture of a hideous old maid.

An extra amount of prints of "The Conquering Hero" have been ordered by Joan to meet the demand of exhibitors and exchangemen. Judging by the number of inquiries for the fourth West comedy that are awaiting attention, the record of bookings on the West series will mount still higher now that "The Conquering Hero" is ready for exhibition.

HARRY J. SHEPARD has just become associated with the Kineto Company of America, Inc., as director of distribution.

For the past three years Mr. Shepard has been general manager of the W. H. Productions Co., and previous to that was associated with a number of film corporations. He has held executive positions in many phases of motion picture management.

The contract recently executed between Kineto and the National Exchanges, Inc., whereby the Kineto Review will be handled nationally by the National Exchanges, Inc., was handled for Kineto by Mr Shepard.

Rex Beach Re-Editing "The Ne'er-Do-Well"

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., announces that Rex Beach is personally re-editing and writing new titles for the reissue of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and is putting some of the punch of the original story into the photoplay version.

More interest is being manifested in the reissue of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" by state rights buyers than was shown in "The Spoilers" when it was recently reissued by The Film Market, states Mr. Priest.

W. F. Kelley Postpones Sunrise Sales Trip

Because of business pressure in connection with the special feature, "In the Days of Saint Patrick," now playing to capacity crowds at the Lexington theatre, Winfield F. Kelley, general manager, has again postponed his Western trip for the states right sale of the Peggy Hyland production, "The Price of Silence," which Sunrise Pictures is releasing. The possibilities are that another man will be sent in Mr. Kelley's stead, who in addition to his many New York duties, is selling a single reel special, "Ireland Today," on a states right basis.

S. Rubenstein, New York Exchange manager for Sunrise, is arranging bookings at the present time. A release date will be set probably within a week.

New Business Through Billy West Series

Information received this week at the home office, states Joan Film Sales Co. indicates that the buyers of the Joan Billy West comedies, which include twelve in the series of two-reelers, are running up a record total of bookings on the West comics, and that also their number of bookings on all their other product is increasing proportionately as a result. It appears, from advices received from most of the buyers of these fun-frolics, that the Billy West comedies are serving them as a wedge with which they are introducing their remaining subjects to exhibitors whom they have never "landed" before.

1921 Series "Hallroom Boy Comedies" (C. B. C. Film Sales) to Major Film Exchange, of Boston, for New England states.

"Keep to the Right" (Equity Pictures) to First National of Minneapolis for Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

"She Played and Paid" (Joan Film Sales) to First National of Minneapolis, for Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" (The Film Market, Inc.) to Benj. Friedman, of Friedman Film Corp., for Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, and the peninsula of Michigan.

A scene from the fifth of the new 1921 series of Hallroom Boy comedies, "In Again, Out Again," which are released on the state right market by C. B. C. Film Sales

THE ROCKETT FILM CORPORATION have announced as a new addition to their organization, Mr. Will Ritchey, formerly supervising director of the Morosco and Famous Players Studios and later continuity writer and continuity editor for the Famous Players-Lasky Company.

Mr. Ritchey is now engaged on the continuity of "Keeping Up With Lizzie," the second Irving Bacheller story to be brought to the screen. (The first Bacheller story, "The Light in the Clearing," is well under way on the Dial Film Company lot, with T. Hayes Hunter wielding the megaphone.)

Schlank Series for Arrow

Twenty-Four Comedies and Eight Features for Release This Year

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that he is about to sign important contracts with Morris R. Schlank, of the Morris R. Schlank Productions for several series of pictures to be made during the year. Among the list of pictures to be produced by Mr. Schlank are twenty-four two reel comedies to consist of two series of twelve pictures each. These comedies will feature two well-known comedy stars and will be of the highest type.

In addition to the twenty-four two reel comedies Mr. Schlank will make eight feature productions. These features will be specially made for the Arrow Film Corporation and will consist of two series of four features each, starring two well-known stars. The first of these features productions will be delivered to the Arrow about March 15th and there will be one feature delivered each month thereafter.

In discussing this contract Mr. Schlank said "I believe that this is one of the most important deals that I have ever entered into. I have secured two well-known Broadway female stars to feature in my productions. I have purchased while in New York from prominent authors a number of stories that are specially adapted to the histrionic ability of these stars. The first of my feature productions will be ready for the market about March 15th and I expect to deliver one a month thereafter. I have recently built a new studio in Hollywood that will take care of at least six companies all working at the same time. I intend to keep this studio busy constantly making productions exclusively for the Arrow and I anticipate big things for 1921."

7 Westart Pictures Ready

Company, Formed Six Months Ago, Has Western Features Completed

A NEW producing organization, which entered the field six months ago, makes their first public announcement this week and heralds the fact that they have completed seven productions. The company is Westart Productions, Inc., and they have specialized on high class five-reel Westerns. Their first two releases, now ready for showing, are "The Cowboy Ace" and "The Killer."

The editing has been done by Elmer J. McGovern, who has performed similar service for many productions, such as "Mickey." One character in the pictures stands out. He is Al Hart, a man with years of experience as a portrayer of Western roles. Jack Mower is the lead.

Roger S. Mitchell, who has offices in New York City, is sales manager of the corporation and is now prepared to screen his releases for state rights buyers.

"There is a demand among exhibitors for the kind of pictures we are making," said Mr. Mitchell, "and we have endeavored to turn out productions that are 'Westerns' in every sense of the word—good enough for any program in the world."

Guinan Picture in March

Kremer Names "I Am the Woman" As First Production of Series

ALTHOUGH it has been generally announced that "The Girl Sheriff" would be the first of the Texas Guinan series of eight five-reel Western dramas to be released by the Victor Kremer Company a change was made at the last minute with the result that "I Am the Woman" will replace it as the first offering of that popular star under her present management.

This picture is from the pen of Tex O'Reilly. The story is a gripping one, and, while of about the same dramatic value as the rest of the series, still does not call for the great number of locations demanded by "The Girl Sheriff," and as a result, so that there will be no delay in releasing the first of the series, which should be about March 1st, Mr. Kremer decided upon the substitution.

The scenes in "The Girl Sheriff" are more varied and require considerable construction work of a nature that calls for time, and, with the present labor situation on the Facific Coast, it was thought inadvisable to take a chance of there being any disappointment.

The latter picture will, however, follow "I Am The Woman," and from then on thee pictures will be released at the rate of one every two weeks, so that the series of eight will have been completed and on the market inside of the next four months.

"The demand for the Guinan pictures has by far surpassed my most sanguine hopes," says Mr. Kremer, "and if they meet with the same reception from the public as they have from the many state right buyers and exhibitors in general it is probable that a second series will follow."

Community Theatres Book Arrow Feature

H. Hirsch, manager of the Lightning Photoplay Service of New England, announces that he has just booked the Indian feature, "Before the White Man Came," an Arrow picture, to the Community theatres of New England. Mr. Hirsch has received a commendatory letter from the Community general office praising this picture.

F. P. Chicago Executive Resigns

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is to lose one of its most popular and successful executives and the motion picture industry one of its oldest members in Harris P. Wolfberg, district manager of Paramount, with headquarters in Chicago, who announces his early departure not only from Famous Players but also from the film business. The announcement came as a doubly big surprise because it had been freely reported that Wolfberg was slated to be appointed general sales manager of Paramount to succeed S. R. Kent, who was recently elevated to general manager.

Mr. Wolfberg, as soon as his successor is named by Famous Players, will become vice-president and general sales manager of the Lake and Export Coal Company, one of the largest mining and exporting companies in the world.

New Baker Production

Sawyer and Lubin announce the completion of a new George D. Baker Production who has been devoting the last months to the production of this unique story by Calvin Johnston. The picture has been produced by Mr. Baker under the working title of "Temple Dusk," and like all Baker productions, it was scenarioized, cast, cut and titled by Mr. Baker personally.

The cast which interpreted the Saturday Evening Post story include Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Frazer in the principal roles, supported by Frank Currier, Charles Lane, Kate Blanche, Tony Ross, Robert Schable.

Salient Announces Additions to Staff

An announcement is made by President Goosmann of the Salient Films, Inc., that Director Davis has closed a contract with Paul H. Allen, cinematographer, and Jack W. Brown, associate director, for the first ten pictures to be produced by Salient.

Mr. Allen has for the past year been working on production under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith, during which time he shot sceines on "The Idol Dancer," "The Love Flower" and "Way Down East." Mr. Brown is one of the old timers in the motion picture business, having been connected with it in many capacities for the past twelve years.

The Victor Studio has been engaged for the first production and work on construction of the sets has already been started and it is expected that actual shooting will begin early next week.

Report Foreign Sales

Bech Van Siclen and Co., Inc., announce the sale for Japan of "Inn of the Blue Moon" and "Street of Seven Stars." "The Man Who Won" has been sold for India, Ceylon and Burmah.

State Rights to Dominate

Canyon Pictures Executives Forecast Radical Change in Industry

THE next six months will see a complete change in the complexion of the entire film industry is the forecast offered by Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg, the directing heads of the Canyon Pictures Corporation.

According to these gentlemen who have for years been keen observers of the picture industry, the independents will completely dominate the field, because men of artistic ability and other men with business training and experience are not going to allow a few officials in the larger corporations to dictate as to what the policies and activities of scores of directors and executives are to be.

"Until the big Wall Street interests of the industry control every theatre and place of exhibition in the country," states Mr. Goldstein, "they will have an expensive fight upon their hands. Men who helped build the big companies have been frozen out in order to make way for other newcomers who represent money. These men who find themselves out are men who know from years of experience every angle of picture making and exploitation.

"They will become independents because there is nothing else for them to do. The so-called 'cleaning up' of the staffs of large organizations has forced many of the best known film men to shift for themselves. Although the names of these men are for the moment not featured in the headlines of the trade papers, they are waiting. Within a few months, money conditions will be more favorable, countless new organizations will spring up. The methods and ideas of these new companies will be based upon the policy of fair and open competition.

Many of the most efficient directors this country has ever produced have been blacklisted for some reason or another by the people who have held the reins of power. These men represent the best production brains available and must of necessity turn independent or find other fields of endeavor.

"Independent production such as the series of pictures which the Canyon Pictures Corporation is offering with Franklyn Farnum as the star show that the picture men of the country are anxious to encourage every attempt on the part of the independents to make honest and worth while productions.

"Within a few months the fight will be on, and the Canyon Pictures Corporation will be found in the front ranks doing their share of protecting the interests of the independents against the frantic efforts of the trust concerns."

Reelcraft's First Birthday

Independent Company Starts Second Year of Existence in February

THE Reelcraft Pictures Corporation will celebrate its first birthday, and starts into the second year of existence in February. To mark the beginning of its second year in a fitting manner, it is rumored, news of an important nature concerning the coming year will be made to the trade, will be announced.

The first year witnessed the perfecting and systematizing of the consolidated companies into a single corporation, also the expansion of the distributing organization which placed branch offices in Cleveland and Kansas City in addition to the other cities maintaining Reelcraft offices.

For the Short Subject program of Reelcraft, many additions were made. The business of the company during the first year was all that had been expected, surpassing in gross amount the predictions made by the officials a year ago, and warranting the payment of the regular quarterly dividend on the Class "A" stock on January 15th, announced the company.

For the second year, President R. C. Croper has in consideration a plan for expansion that will extend to the production and distributing end as well. Several new producing units will be formed, and the releases of several independent producers will be marketed by Reelcraft.

A. E. Lefcourt, president of the Pioneer, announces year's plans on page 1185

Dell Henderson to Direct Jack Hoxie

An announcement is made by the Arrow Film Corporation that Dell Henderson has been signed to direct the third Jack Hoxie feature, work on which will be started at once. The title of this production will be "Dead or Alive," and Ben Wilson, the producer, stated that it is expected to be the best of the series produced up to date.

Southwest Strong for "Invisible Ray"

Oscar Oldknow, head of the Southern States Film Co. of Dallas, Texas, announced to Joan Film Sales Co. that there is a comparative scarcity of serials in the Southwestern territory. The make-up of the motion picture public is of the adventurous variety, he states, and they devour death-defying serials wholesale.

About one hour after his arrival in New York, Mr. Oldknow made his exit from the Joan offices with the contract for the distribution of the Joan serial, "The Invisible Ray," starring Jack Sherrill and Ruth Clifford in his possession. Mr. Oldknow is convinced of a substantial demand and a prosperous business on the serial in the States of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

C.B.C. Has New Western Ready for Release

"A Daughter of the Law," fifth of the "Star Ranch Westerns," has just been edited and titled, and is ready for release. This is one of the series of two-reel Western features which are being offered by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, to the independent market. The series is comprised of twenty-six two-reel features, released at the rate of one every two weeks.

Prints of "A Daughter of the Law" have just been received at the C. B. C. offices at No. 1600 Broadway, it is said.

"A Daughter of the Law," like the preceding pictures of this series, featuring Grace Cunard. With its locale in the midst of the Tennessee hills, it is said to provide Miss Cunard ample opportunity for a display of her talents in Western drama.

More Records Broken by Jans Feature

The following is a quotation from a letter received by Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., from Ben Fitzer of Syracuse, regarding "Madonnas and Men":

"Please be advised that "Madonnas and Men" opened at the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, Sunday, January 9th, and played to such tremendous crowds that we turned away at least 6,000 the opening day and turned them away from then on. We beat every existing record and this record in my opinion is going to stand unless they advance their admission price beyond those which we played to, as we played to capacity and standing room for a solid week. Mr. Cornell has booked 'Madonnas and Men' for a return engagement."

Boston Producers Make "A Thousand Faces"

The Metropolitan Pictures Corporation, a Boston company, announces that plans for the filming of "A Thousand Faces," a novel by Dr. George W. Galvin, have been completed.

Private estates will be used in filming the exteriors, and the Witchcraft Studio for the interiors. Carl Morgan is managing director of the new company.

Prizma Prologue for "Isobel" Sold

The Prizma Prologue for George H. Davis' feature, "Isobel or the Trail's End," has been sold for Western Missouri and Kansas, through the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York. It is announced by Joe Brandt, president of the latter corporation, that the Standard Film Exchange of Kansas City is to handle the Prologue for this territory, in addition to handling the feature itself. The latter purchase was announced some time ago.

This sale marks the second sale to Standard by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. this week, the Kansas City Exchange having also arranged to handle the new 1921 series of Hallroom Boys Comedies for its territory.

Missouri Exchange Enlarges Activities

The Standard Film Co., of St. Louis, has been purchased by the Independent Film Co., of Missouri, a $50,000 Missouri corporation, headed by F. J. Fegan, who for the past four years has been president of the Standard Film Co. Identified with the company are also J. E. Callahan, and J. Ray Weinbrenner.

The policy of the Independent Film Company of Missouri will be to bring into the independent market a coterie of young men whose objects will be to purchase independent productions of the better class.

It is expected that in the near future an office will be opened in Kansas City, Missouri, with the object of the company to buy for Missouri, Kansas and Southern Illinois.

Moranti Resumes Production of Comedies

Milburn Moranti resumed the production of his series of one reel comedies under the direction of Tom Gibson this week. Moranti Comedies are already being shown in over a thousand theatres, with whom contracts were made by the Special Pictures Corporation, and whose distribution is now handled through the Federated Exchanges, Incorporated.

Helen Williams, Moranti's former ingenue lead has been re-engaged to support the comedy star. The company will work at the Balboa studios temporarily in Long Beach, California.

Popular Players Seen in "That Something"

"That Something," a story written by W. W. Woodbridge which received wide circulation as a book and which was later adapted to the screen by the Hermann Film Corporation and which has been purchased by the Celebrated Players' Film Corporation, includes in its cast Charles Meredith, Margery Wilson, Nigel de Brullier, John Hooper, Carl Ullman, Gordon Griffith, John Cossar, James Farley, Eugene Drake and Helen Wright. The picture was made under the personal supervision of E. P. Hermann.

Miss Ostriche in Features

Star is Signed to Make 10 Five-Reel Pictures by Salient Films

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at the offices of the Salient Films, Inc., that a contract had been closed for the services of Miss Muriel Ostriche, who will be starred in ten five-reel features to be produced by Salient during 1921. Miss Ostriche, one of the best known of the younger stars of the screen, is just completing a series of comedies which have met with marked success on the independent market and her return to features was brought about as the result of an investigation made by officers of the Salient at the time they were organizing. It was found, so President Goosman stated, that not only the independent exchangemen but the exhibitors throughout the United States expressed a strong desire to see her return to the field in which she first endeared herself to the motion picture fans.

While still very young, Miss Ostriche has had a long and varied experience on the screen having first appeared under the Biograph banner, making her debut as a child actress. She rapidly advanced to leading parts and then achieved stardom with the World Film after having been with the Eclaire, Vitagraph, Thanhauser and other well known producing companies. The contract with Salient was negotiated by Mrs. Garnette Sabin, under whose management Miss Ostriche made a series of two reel comedies for the Arrow Film Corporation.

C. B. C. Comedy on Bd'way

Joe Brandt Sees Proof of Future of Short Stuff in Strand Booking

THE inclusion last week on the Strand theatre program, of New York, one of Broadway's largest film palaces, of a Hallroom Boys Comedy marks, according to Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, a new milestone in the history of independent production, and one which independent exchange men and exhibitors would do well to consider.

"Audiences at the Strand received this picture well," says Mr. Brandt. "They laughed at the comic parts, Ohed and Ahed at its thrills, and applauded the entire picture. And yet, to them, naturally it meant nothing more nor less than an entertaining comedy."

To the exchangeman, the exhibitor, and especially to the independent producer of short comedies and of "short stuff" in general, however, this should, says Mr. Brandt, carry a message of the utmost importance. That message is this—that short comedies, independently produced, are in demand, and that they can find a place in the most exclusive market.

"On Sunday," says Mr. Brandt, "when the Strand inaugurates its new bill, it was announced that all house records had been shattered—that more people than ever before in the history of the theatre attended every performance. 'A Dog-Gone Mix-Up,' a Hallroom Boys Comedy, was the comedy used. What does this mean? That from the pick of all the comedies for the week, Hallroom Boys comedies were selected for a record-breaking week.

"This, of course, is of importance to us, in that it is a boost for our Hallroom Boys comedies, which are produced and released by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. But it has a much wider significance than this personal application would seem to imply—for it means that the independently produced comedy in general has a large field and answers a very definite demand."

Cullison to Direct Hart

Well Known Director is Added to Staff of Independent Films

WEBSTER CULLISON has been signed on a long term contract to direct the popular Neal Hart. Mr. Cullison's reputation as an outdoor director can be summed up by recalling his many successes in the past ten years, while directing such stars as Antonio Moreno, Jack Hoxie, May Allison, Franklyn Farnum and Helen Ware. It will also be recalled that Mr. Cullison spent two years behind the megaphone with Metro, and a year with Colonel Selig.

Mr. Eckels, the president of Independent Films Association, in making this announcement, says: "I consider this a very fortunate connection. While there has never been any complaint against Neal Hart directing his own pictures, I have always felt that it was too much of a responsibility to load on the shoulders of one man. Mr. Hart has directed Hell's Oasis, Skyfire and Danger Valley, three productions that have done much to increase his popularity as a big league star. It is our endeavor to increase his popularity by improving, if possible, his productions.

Mr. Cullison is an artist and a man of keen intellect. He knows drama and he knows western characters. With his ten years' experience as a director, Neal Hart Productions should be second to none in the industry. Within the next two weeks the Neal Hart publicity scoop will probably be known and will explain our most important reason for endeavoring to improve the Pinnacle Productions. Mr. Cullison is now at work on "Totem Law."

Gordon Standing Seen in Sherman Pictures

Gordon H. Standing, who recently forsook the screen, temporarily, to play a leading part in a J. M. Barrie playlet, "Half an Hour," will be seen in prominent roles in the first two releases of the Sherman Productions Corporation, "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139."

Standing, who is a member of the Standing family of actors, is at his very best in both of these Sherman releases, the first of which was directed by Charles A. Logue, and the second by B. A. Rolfe.

Just prior to his engagement in the Barrie playlet Standing completed work on "The Foreigner," the Ralph Connor story, which First National will release during February.

Four Producing Units for Clark-Cornelius

According to an announcement from the Clark-Cornelius Corporation that organization will market during the coming year the product of four producing units. All of these pictures will be handled on the state right plan.

"That the independent field is settling down to more definite and substantial lines is being evidenced more every day," said S. J. Pollo, general manager. Our company intends to lay-out its plans for the coming year so that the market can know what it might expect from us."

During the past few months the Clark-Cornelius Corporation has been marketing the productions of the Climax Film Corporation "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face" as well as the Lejaren Hiller picture "The Devil's Angel" starring Helen Gardner.

New Kipling Westerns Meet With Success

The first pictures of the new Kipling series of Westerners, "The Midnight Riders" and "Outlawed" are proving to be big successes, announces that company. Bill Patton and Carlyn Wagner are featured in the series and they furnish thrills and death-defying sensations. Kipling announces "The Battlin' Kid" in preparation. Release date will be announced soon.

New Exchange Formed in Utica, N. Y.

A new exchange to serve exhibitors of Northern New York has been incorporated under the name of The Great Northway Film Corp., with a capital of $300,000. John J. Bradley is president of the new exchange and Fred A. Vall secretary. The offices of the Great Northway are at 156 Genesee street, Utica, N. Y.

British Exporter Coming to New York

John H. Taylor, managing director of Screen Art, Ltd., of London, film exporters and importers, is due to arrive in New York this month. Screen Art is the English representative of several independent producers.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Ray Realizes Ambition in His New Role

When Arthur S. Kane presents Charles Ray in "The Old Swimmin' Hole" the star's fourth personally-produced feature, to be released by First National, February 14th, Mr. Ray will be satisfying an ambition which he has nursed ever since he became a head-liner in motion pictures. He has long wanted to put the Hoosier bard's best-loved work on the screen, not only because he considers it particularly suited to his own personality but because Riley is his favorite poet.

Beatrice Dominguez to Go to Mexico City

Beatrice Dominguez, portrayer of Spanish roles in a number of Universal productions, when she goes to Mexico City shortly to appear in person in the cinema theatres of that metropolis. The occasion will be the showing in Mexico City of "The Fire Cat," Edith Roberts' latest Universal feature—a story of the Peruvian Andes—in which Miss Dominguez plays an important role.

Constance Binney Has Begun New Subject

Constance Binney has begun work on her new Realart picture, "The Magic Cup," adapted from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon. It is being directed by John S. Robertson, who also directed Miss Binney in "Erstwhile Susan" and "39 East." Others in the supporting cast are Vincent Coleman, Blanche Craig, William H. Strauss, Charles Mussett, J. H. Eileen Percy Seen in a Farce Comedy

Third Part of "Double Adventure" Out Feb. 6

Charles Hutchison lives up to expectations in "Hearts of Stone," the third episode of his new picture "Double Adventure." There are scenes of spirited action and a generous number of daring stunts displayed in the two reels of the latest episode, which Pathe will release February 6.

Beban a Success in South

Reception in Newark is Duplicated at Atlanta, Ga., Showing

CONTINUING its triumphant course which began at Newark, N. J., where George Beban, author, director and star, was highly honored by city officials and influential citizens, "One Man in a Million," the super-production which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole, met like honors in Atlanta last week.

Word which was sent to Robertson-Cole by the exhibitor who put on the second showing in America is that "One Man in a Million" pleased its Southern audiences quite as well as the large ones which assembled to see it in Newark.

The Atlanta Women's Club taking cognizance of the fact that "One Man in a Million" is a direct effort at better and cleaner pictures, appointed a committee which attended a special preview of "One Man in a Million."

"One Man in a Million" played at the Howard theatre, a leading Atlanta house. This theatre arranged for an extensive program of exploitation which was set going more than a week before the engagement of the Beban picture began. "One Man in a Million" adapts itself most readily to exploitation of all sorts as its story relates to a group of interesting everyday folks.

Animals, including a number of dogs and an educated parrot, also are leading actors in this epic of human sympathy. There are a number of children as actors, including George Beban, Jr., who has a leading role.

The picture, a six-reeler, is a monument to the years of theatrical experience of Mr. Beban. He wrote the story, produced and directed the production and is playing the leading role. To have done all these things successfully is a remarkable achievement and establishes a record in the cinema world.

New York Critics Like "Prisoners of Love"

Starting with one of the largest Sunday attendances that has been recorded at the Capitol theatre in a long while, Betty Compson, in her first starring vehicle, "Prisoners of Love," continued to draw large crowds throughout last week, in spite of the extreme cold wave that appreciably lessened patronage at all New York theatres. The enthusiastic reception accorded Miss Compson at the Capitol, following the ovation with which the first showing of "Prisoners of Love" was greeted in Los Angeles, leaves no doubt about the public's readiness to welcome this gifted young actress as a star at the head of her own company, states the Goldwyn Company.

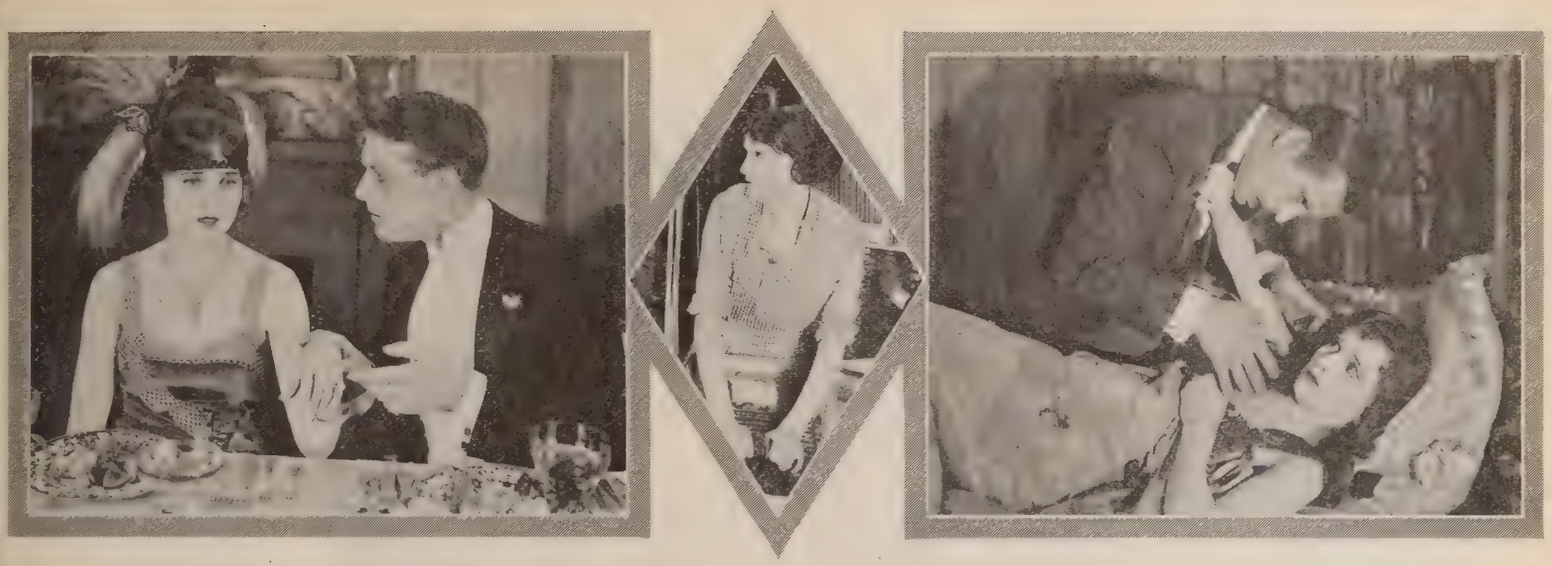
THAT Jesse L. Lasky is to pursue in "Experience," George V. Hobart's spectacle play which is to be produced for Paramount by George Fitzmaurice, the same policy of super-star casts which he has already inaugurated in Hollywood is evidenced by his announcement recently that Richard Barthelmess, who has played the leading roles in many of D. W. Griffith's pictures, including "Way Down East," will be seen in "Experience" in the leading role of Youth.

Announcement of other well-known players who will make up a remarkable cast for this picture are to be made shortly.

It is expected that Mr. Fitzmaurice, who recently returned from a vacation in Europe, will begin work on "Experience" immediately at the new Famous Players-Lasky studio in Long Island City. The continuity is being written by Waldemar Young, who is working in close co-operation with the author, George V. Hobart.

Press Book Ready for "Truant Husband"

W. W. Hodkinson announces a campaign book for its release, "The Truant Husband," the first picture made by Rockett Film Corporation for Hodkinson issue. The press book is declared by Hodkinson officials to be one of the most practical ever issued by the Hodkinson organization.



Dana Back From Trip

F. B. Dana, sales manager of the Arrow, has just returned from another one of his short trips, bringing back with him contracts for three different series of pictures, including the Jack Hoxie five-reel Westerns, the Ruby de Remer features and "The Desert Scorpion."

All of these features will be released by the Lightning Photoplays Service, Inc. of New England, of which Henry Hirsch is manager.

Direction of Hunter Is Lauded

J. J. CURTIS, vice-president of the Bobbs-Merrill Company, is at present sojourning in California, and much of his time is spent on the lot watching T. Hayes Hunter at work on "The Light in the Clearing." This production is based on Irving Bacheller's novel of the same title, and as the Bobbs-Merrill Company is the publisher of Mr. Bacheller's literary works, Mr. Curtis is following the production of "The Light in the Clearing" with greatest interest. Besides the Bacheller novel, other works published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company have already found their way to the screen. The most notable of these have been the novels of Zane Grey, James Oliver Curwood and Jack London.

Mr. Bacheller has hitherto stood with the anti-cinema literary element, says a statement from the Dial Film Company, but finally yielding to the advice of W. W. Hodkinson and Mr. Curtis, the prominent author consented to the producing of his well-known story for the screen. The work of filming "The Light in the Clearing" is going forward successfully under the auspices of the Dial Film Company, with T. Hayes Hunter wielding the megaphone. The picture when completed will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. After viewing Mr. Hunter's work, J. J. Curtis made the following statement:

"If Mr. Hunter were the author himself he could not have put more enthusiasm behind the production. Not one of the many great situations have been overlooked in the continuity, and I am for once and for all convinced that the shadow sheet is able to convey more clearly and forcibly the story than is the printed page."

Leonard with Geo. Perry

George Perry, vice-president and general manager of the Perry Plays, Incorporated, has just signed Robert Z. Leonard to direct his first production starting January 10th. This production is to be one of four special productions made this year by Mr. Perry.

England Welcomes "Kismet"

ALL England is ringing with the praise of "Kismet," according to word which has been received by Robertson-Cole, producers and distributors of this super-special production, whih stars Otis Skinner.

Prints of "Kismet" were rushed to England soon after the American premier. Sir William Jury, who controls the British rights to the picture, on the afternoon of December 20th in London gave a showing to which were invited every English motion picture authority of consequence, besides a number of the most prominent exhibitors in England.

Cables to American newspapers, news letters from correspondents and other means of communication have brought to America during the last few weeks most flattering reports on the manner in which "Kismet" is being received. It remained for all the English trade papers to print their reports, which have now been received by Robertson-Cole, before the full force of the "Kismet" popularity wave was felt.

"The greatest spectacular story which the United States has yet produced," as the London Daily Mail called "Kismet," pretty well sums up the estimates of the picture made by most of the English journals. The British premier of "Kismet" was an event carefully planned and carried out in a most elaborate manner.

Sir William Jury, who rarely gives a trade showing outside of his private theatre was so convinced that "Kismet" was the biggest film of the year, received from America that he engaged the Alhambra theatre, London, for Monday afternoon, December 20th. The trade show was preceded by a luncheon at the Trocadero Banquet Hall attended by the lay and trade press and about 200 important exhibitors in the United Kingdom.

The theatre was filled to its capacity by members of the trade specially invited and the doors were not opened to the public. A special orchestra of 32 pieces gave an appropriate musical setting to the picture which was enthusiastically received. The London Times on the following day referred to "Kismet" as "one of the notable achievements of the film year."

Due to the fact that the English market can only absorb a fraction of the films produced, at present there is usually a delay of 12 to 16 months following the trade show before the release date of the film is reached. It is said that in fixing February 1st, 1921, as the release date of "Kismet" Sir William has defied this custom and exhibitors are paying rentals for "Kismet" exceeding all previous records in addition to paying rentals for the programme which must be shelved to allow the showing of "Kismet" at this time.

Under the heading "A Notable American Film" the London Times said:

"Mr. Skinner's Hajj is a fine performance and the picture is one of the notable achievements of the film year. Mr. Skinner has the additional advantage of being supported by a finely balanced cast."

The Bioscope, a trade journal, commented: "An exceedingly clever performance by Otis Skinner, elaborate settings, and beautiful photography are the leading features of this massive screen version of Edward Knoblock's well-known play, directed by L. Gasnier. Otis Skinner gives a remarkable study of the genial and expansive Hajj.

"The film has been staged on a very ambitious scale and includes numerous settings of the utmost magnitude and beauty. The interior of the Caliph's palace, with its shimmering, polished floor and its colonnade of slender marble pillars is a truly magnificent example of modern scene construction as is the bathing pool setting. For the exteriors many solid-looking buildings were specially erected. The costumes and appointments are lavish and striking. As an imaginative impression of an Oriental wonder city, the staging of the production is exceedingly effective and beautiful."

Other trade papers and the daily press were equally enthusiastic.

Critics Applaud "The Devil"

THE debut in motion pictures of George Arliss, in the Associated Exhibitors' production, "The Devil," which had its American premiere at the Strand, New York, assumed the nature of a triumph, judging by the comments of the Metropolitan newspaper critics.

Alan Dale, of the New York American, who manifests no particularly keen favoritism for the screen, contributed his share to the Arliss triumph. In the New York American of January 17th, Mr. Dale said, in part:

"Mr. Arliss gave precisely the same capable performance that he contributed to the stage twelve years ago. He was the sinister, Mephistophelian, quite recklessly sardonic, and mutinously devilish person. I can assure you that Arliss was every whit as admirable in the picture as he was on the stage. In the finale, when truth, of course, conquers, and the devil goes up, the actor was at his best. It was striking personal performance, in no wise different from that seen in the theatre twelve years ago."

"Mr. Arliss's characterization of the archfiend in that last moment is so striking and realistic that the spectator can scarcely refrain from a momentary chilling quiver. 'The Devil' in its screen version is already breaking records at the Strand, which Sunday registered the largest attendance in its history. It is well worth seeing. Mr. Arliss is supported by Sylvia Breamer, Lucy Cotton, Mrs. Arliss, Edmund Lowe and Roland Bottomley."

Will Exploit "The Killer"

Pathe to Make Unusual Efforts in Advertising Benj. Hampton Picture

BELIEVING the new Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Killer," from the pen of Stewart Edward White, to be a photoplay of unusual merit, Pathe is declared to have planned more than ordinary advertising aids for the benefit of exhibitors in exploiting this Hampton feature which will be released January 30th. Accordingly, the Pathe Exchange publicity, exploitation and art departments have combined forces to such a degree that a live-wire showman, in either big city or small town, will find every possible "stunt" supplied to enable him to put over the production in a big and meritorious manner, announce Pathe officials.

There are many angles why the Pathe officials believe they are justified in calling "The Killer" a "big" production. Firstly, it is from the novel of the same name by Stewart Edward White, the writer, whose name is synonymous with the West. Mr. White's "The Westerners" and "The Leopard Woman" have established him as a writer for the screen as well as the book stores. Secondly, the feature was produced under the supervision of Benjamin B. Hampton, who is now a recognized specialist in melodrama. He has made "The Killer" a photoplay which surpasses "The Money Changers," and other recent offerings from his studios, in dramatic tensity and thrills, along with a touch of comedy, and a delightful love story, it is stated.

The picture presents a strong cast which Howard Hickman has manipulated skillfully. Frank Campeau, the suave villain known both on stage and screen, is seen in the title role, and Claire Adams makes the heroine a living character. Jack Conway, who has directed a number of Hampton features, abandoned the megaphone to play the masculine lead opposite Miss Adams.

Aeroplane Exploits Picture

Drops Throwaways for "Passion Fruit" While Circling Stadium

THE thousands who crowded into the Tournament Field at Pasadena, California, on New Year's day to see the annual Western football classic, were given an additiontal thrill this year when from a circling airplane throwaways advertising Doraldina in "Passion Fruit" came fluttering down upon them.

This striking advertising stunt was engineered by T. L. Tally, of Tally's theatre, where the Metro picturization of a romance of the tropical isles was scheduled to be shown. Realizing the drawing power of this picture, Mr. Tally determined to go the limit in exploiting it in such a manner that the public would be convinced that he had a picture it could not afford to miss, declare Metro officials.

He procured an aeroplane and had painted on it in large letters "Doraldina Playing in Passion Fruit at Tally's This Week." The aeroplane flew over the city of Los Angeles and the surrounding country at an altitude low enough to give the inhabitants a chance to read the printed announcement and then circled the big tournament field and the section around it, teeming with the thousands on their way to the game or trying to get a glimpse of the field from points of vantage.

From the machine 25,000 throwaways were distributed which on one side contained advertising of Doraldina and "Passion Fruit" and on the other an announcement of Otis Skinner in "Kismet," which follows "Passion Fruit" at Tally's.

"Passion Fruit" was adapted for the screen from the original story by Carey Wilson by Edward Lowe, Jr. It was directed by John E. Ince and photographed by Rudolph Bergquist. John Hughes was responsible for the art interiors and effects.

Phillips' Picture Going Big

Reports from Exhibitors Indicate "Once to Every Woman" Is Big Hit

IN a statement just received from the headquarters of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, "Once to Every Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips, is declared to be scoring heavily in all sections of the country. "It has broken record after record, reports indicate, and has been re-booked for many theatres in which it has already been shown," declare officials of the Universal Company.

"I have never handled a picture that the exhibitors exploited so consistently," said Mr. H. M. Berman, Universal sales manager, recently discussing the surprising popularity of "Once to Every Woman." "By far, the majority of showings have been accompanied by a singer, used with the picture as was done in the New York presentation. This stunt has been a hit everywhere. It goes far to clinch the heart-appeal which makes the picture lasting. In the New York territory the singer who appeared at the Astor Hotel for our initial presentation, is still accompanying the film at the large theatres in and near the city.

"I have just received a letter from Mr. Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C., who exhibited 'Once to Every Woman' in his Rialto theatre. He wrote the following commendation:

"'It gives me pleasure to praise and recommend your special picture "Once to Every Woman," which highly pleased our audience all last week.

Universal Launches Production of Stories by Prominent Authors

Works of Best-Known Writers in America to Be Filmed During Year

UNIVERSAL announces that it has embarked upon a period which will go down in its history as an era of "better stories" and in which the big film company will go to unusual lengths to obtain the works of the best possible writers for its stars and directors. Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, in a recent statement indicating Universal's plan for 1921 in the story line, laid stress upon the policy which now actuates the Universal scenario department, "that no writer is too big for Universal and no story too good."

Universal is producing or projecting pictures by a list of prominent authors, which includes many of the best known writers in America. Among them are F. Hopkinson Smith, Augustus Thomas, Booth Tarkington, Edna Ferber, the late Jacques Futrelle, Courtney Ryley Cooper, Clara Louise Burnham, Max Brand, Marjorie Benton Cooke, Izola Forester and Mann Page, Edwina Levin, Helen Christine Bennett, George Rix, Philip V. Mighels, James E. Hungerford, Wadsworth Camp, and such noted photo-dramatists as Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger.

"We plan to make the coming season a criterion in the production of great pictures, adapted from the work of great writers," said Mr. Cochrane. "The past few months have seen as unprecedented activity in Universal's scenario department, headed by John C. Brownell, who, with an enlarged staff, has obtained for our company the screen rights of more popular plays, novels and stories than at any other period in our history.

"Some of these stories were immediately put into production. With a full realization that photoplay patrons are becoming more critical in their taste and have grown to appreciate a good story properly told through the medium of the screen, Universal determined to lose no time in supplying this demand. Our production schedule for the opening months of 1921 looks like a list of 'Who's Who in Literature.'

"Tod Browning, who wrote and directed 'Outside the Law,' the latest Priscilla Dean feature, now is busy selecting an all-star cast for the screen adaption of Edna Ferber's remarkable novel 'Fanny Herself.' This will be one of the biggest pictures of the coming year, and Universal is sparing no pains to assure it a sumptuous production.

"In the meantime, Priscilla Dean, under the direction of Stuart Paton, one of the veteran directors in the moving picture field, has started work on a photodramatization of Edwina Levin's great novel of stage life, 'False Colors.' This, we expect to be the master piece of Miss Dean's screen career. In portraying the subtle characterizations of the dual role drawn by Miss Levin in her powerful story, the star will be called upon to exert her utmost screen talent. Both Paton and Miss Dean have had long experience in the theatre and are well fitted to transfer to the screen the unusual back-stage atmosphere of Miss Levin's novel.

One of the tense bits of melodrama of "Outside the Law," Universal's new Jewel production in which Priscilla Dean is starred

"Not only has the Scenario Department in the home office been increased; the scenario staff at Universal City has been considerably augmented, within the last few weeks, by the addition of such experts as William Lord Wright, John W. Gray, George Plimpton and George Morgan.

"Mr. Carl Laemmle, the head of Universal, soon will be in California to take personal supervision of the coming 'production wave' at our West Coast studios. I will join him there early in February to assist in the supervision of Universal's drive for 100% pictures."

In addition to the two big Universal-Jewel productions now being made from the novels by Edna Ferber and Edwina Levin, Universal also has acquired the screen rights to "The Open Shutters," the popular novel from the pen of Clara Louise Burnham. This story now is being put into continuity form and will be used as the next starring vehicle for Edith Roberts.

The next picture to be made by Harry Carey, Universal's popular western star, will be an adaptation of Courtney Ryley Cooper's story "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," which recently attracted great attention when it appeared in the Red Book. Cooper is regarded today as one of the best writers of virile stories. His rugged characters are those of the country and customs that Harry Carey likes to portray and in which setting he has won fame as a screen star.

Universal also promises the early screening of "The Flirt," Booth Tarkington's widely read novel. No star has been selected for this picture, says Mr. Brownell, Universal scenario chief, but continuity writers at the coast are busy on its screen adaption and a director soon will be assigned for its production.

F. Hopkinson Smith will be represented on the Universal schedule by his engaging tale of the mountains, "A Kentucky Cinderella," in which Gladys Walton soon is to be starred. Rights also have been bought for "The Truant," a stirring tale soon to be published in The Delineator, and which was written by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, whose most recent work, "The Dangerous Inheritance," now is gaining them added popularity as co-writers. Frank Mayo has been cast for "The Truant." It will be put into production as soon as it can be put into continuity form.

Two other promising stories recently bought by Universal are "The Black Cap" by Wadsworth Camp, noted for his out-of-doors stories, and "Patches" from the pen of James E. Hungerford. "The Black Cap," will be produced as the next starring vehicle for Eva Novak, Universal's newest star. "Patches" is being put into continuity for "Breezy" Eason, the youngster whose work in "Pink Tights," in "Two Kinds of Love," and in several Harry Carey features, won him a place in the hearts of screen patrons. In "Patches" young Eason will be directed by his father, Reaves Eason, Sr., maker of many Universal successes.

Among current Universal releases are several pictures adapted from stories familiar to almost every reader of current literature. "Out of the Sunset," Geoge Rix' melodramatic story published in "Telling Tales," was screened at Universal City by Stuart Paton with Eva Novak in the featured role. It is called "The Torrent and ranks with the best photo-melodramas.

Max Brand's stirring tale "Tiger" has been made into a picture with Frank Mayo playing the role of the fighting millionaire. It is called "Tiger True" and has just been released. "The Diamond Master" the celebrated adventure and mystery story by the late Jacques Futrelle, was used by Universal as the basis for its most recent serial, "The Diamond Queen," featuring Eileen Sedgwick. It is just being released.

Among the popular stories nearing completion at Universal City or being prepared for early release as Universal screen features is "The Mad Marriage," taken from Marjorie Benton Cooke's widely read novel, "Cinderella Jane." Carmel Myers plays the leading role. Another is "Society Secrets," an adaptation of Helen Christine Bennett's humorous story, "It's Never Too Late To Mend." There also is a new story by Philip V. Mighels, called "If Only Jim," in which Harry Carey is the star.

Most heralded of all, however, is the screen adaptation of "Colorado," the famous stage melodrama by Augustus Thomas, one of the leading American dramatists. It was one of the celebrated "state" plays of several years ago, among which were "Alabama," "Arizona," "In Missouri," and others. "Colorado" has been screened by Reaves Eason, with Frank Mayo as the star. It is understood that all the romantic flavor of the popular melodrama has been retained in the screen version, plus the opportunity of putting the story in its proper mountain settings, thus giving it the atmosphere that could only be approximated on the stage.

The Universal scenario department reports that it is considering a score of the best stories of the past few months. The list of those selected for production as Universal pictures will be announced as soon as possible.

"Virgin of Stamboul" Scores in Paris

"The Virgin of Stamboul," starring Priscilla Dean, and produced last season by Tod Browning from H. H. Van Loan's stirring tale of the near East, is taking Paris by storm, reports Universal's export department, which has just received word of the French premier of the popular Universal-Jewel production. "The Virgin of Stamboul" is being released in France by Pathe.

Mayer and Stahl Laud Rothacker's Work

To both Louis B. Mayer and John M. Stahl, Watterson R. Rothacker replied that he would be in California shortly to thank them personally for these letters:

From Mr. Mayer:

"You might be interested in knowing that as a result of the run of 'The Woman in His House' in Washington, where it played to packed houses for three weeks, I have received a number of comments on the exquisite beauty of the picture. A goodly share of this praise belongs to you for your part in the finishing of the production."

From Mr. Stahl:

"I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere appreciation of the whole hearted courtesy extended to me during my several visits to your establishment. I may add that this courtesy was surpassed only by the wonderful work you did on my production 'The Woman in His House. Please accept my thanks and congratulations."

"Woman in His House" Shown on Coast

"The Woman in His House," the initial John M. Stahl production for Louis B. Mayer, which will be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was given its Pacific Coast premiere showing in the ball room of the Alexandria hotel, Los Angeles, January 11. The room was filled with a list of invited guests which included Judge Ben Meyer, Jurde Works, Mrs. Millbank, Mrs. Horace Seeley, Rabbi Isadore Myers, Mrs. Elinor Glynn, Bernal Feagan, B. H. Dyas, Motley H. Flint, Mrs. Hancock Banning, Chief Prendergast, S. Nordlinger and J. W. Lewis, as well as various other prominent members of the clergy, judiciary, society and body politic. The picture, which features Mildred Harris, was favorably received.

Present "Man, Woman, Marriage"

DESPITE the zero weather that settled down over Paterson, N. J., for forty-eight hours, "Man-Woman-Marriage" opened to a capacity matinee Monday afternoon, January 24th, announces First National, and duplicated it straight through the evening. When the theatre closed its door shortly before midnight, the receipts had run well into four figures, and Jacob Fabian, Abraham M. Fabian and Mr. Dooley, manager of the theatre, were receiving the congratulations of their friends.

From a balcony loge, Dorothy Phillips and Allen Holubar, star and director of the third of First National's "Big Five," watched the picture and the house during the entire evening. Around them, in the other loges, sat more than twenty of the prominent women of Paterson, members of the Woman's Club, who attended the performance as the personal guests of Miss Phillips.

At the close of the evening, there was an impromptu reception in Mr. Dooley's office on the balcony floor of the theatre, and there Miss Phillips received her guests and discussed with them the various phases of the production which were nearest their hearts. Congratulations flowed freely, and Miss Phillips and Mr. Holubar were both warmly complimented, not only on their own efforts, but on the spirit and lesson of the entire production, in both its modern and historical phases.

The record made by "Man-Woman-Marriage," at the Regent Theatre, is all the more noteworthy because the preliminary announcement of it to the people of Paterson was carried out without any ballyhoo or outdoor exploitation of any kind. In fact, until Tuesday morning of the week of the run, the only paper to be found on the billboards of the city were "teaser" posters announcing the coming of "the greatest picture ever produced.". Not until the second day of the booking were the first sheets of the celebrated Bracker posters available for use.

Liberal use was made of newspaper advertising on the Saturday and Sunday preceding the opening. Colored reproductions of the Bracker designs were placed advantageously in store windows in the business sections of the city, and hundreds of tack cards were "sniped" into every possible location. These, with the personal invitations sent by Miss Phillips to Paterson's clubwomen, the Mayor of the City, Frank Van Noort, Chief of Police John M. Tracey, Assemblymen John J. Roegner, Frederick J. Tattersall, W. W. Evans, Henry G. Hershfield, and Lester F. Maloney, and Senator Albin Smith, comprised the total of exploitation used in connection with the premiere, declares First National.

Vanity Fair Comedy is "Oh Promise Me"

"Oh Promise Me" is the title of a new Vanity Fair Girl comedy produced by the Rolin Film Company and for release on Pathe's schedule for the week of February 6. France, Italy, Spain, Holland and the Argentine all receive pulchritudinous representation by members of the beauty ensemble selected by Producer Hal Roach to enact the amusing tale of a sailorman whose plunge into the matrimonial sea is attended by storm and uproar.

Eddie Boland, the chief comedian, appears as the ship's officer, a man of many voyages and as many love affairs.

Brinkerhoff Cartoons for Ray Picture

R. M. Brinkerhoff, the cartoonist, has contributed two lobby cards for the advertising of "The Old Swimmin' Hole," starring Charles Ray, which have created considerable comment at the offices of First National Exhibitors Circuit, where they are on exhibition. The designs are especially attractive, but the fact that surrounding the centre figures are numerous others which tell the story of an average day in the life of a country boy by means of pages torn from the boy's diary, illustrated with outline pictures, makes the cards a departure in lobby advertising helps.

Six Goldwyn Pictures for Poli Circuit

Another important contract for six of the most popular Goldwyn releases was closed last week with the Poli circuit for houses in New England and Pennsylvania.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN resumed his place in the production field of the motion picture industry, this week, by taking exclusive control of his magnificent studios at DeLongpre and LaBrea avenues, Hollywood.

A full working organization, including many of the persons who for numerous years have been identified with the great comedian, began activities in preparation for the immediate resumption of production.

All but a few of the executive positions in the Chaplin organization have been filled and the players who will support the star in his screen efforts during the coming year are fast being assembled.

Chaplin expects to be active before the camera by the latter part of the week. He has already prepared his story, which is an original one of his own conception but the title will not be made public until the production is well underway. The picture will be of the light comedy sort and of the two reel length and will be one of three to be turned over to Associated First National. Within the next five months Chaplin will aim to produce three two-reel subjects, this being the required number to terminate his contract with Associated First National.

First Nat'l to Enlarge Philadelphia Office

Pressure of new business has made it imperative to increase the size of the Philadelphia headquarters of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and a contract for the enlargement of the present quarters of the exchange has been awarded. Work has been begun and the work is to be finished as speedily as possible. The additional space will be gained by the building back of the second and third floors of the building at No. 1339 Vine street, and will give the exchange two additional rooms, each 16 by 40 feet.

Chas. Hutchison Recovering Rapidly

Owing to the results being accomplished by New York specialists in treating the contracted tendons of his right arm, Charles Hutchison, Fathe stunt star whose new serial, 'Double Adventure," was released January 23, has called off his projected trip to Florida, where he proposed to go through physical exercises to strengthen the arm that was broken in a fall at the Brunton studios while performing before the camera.

Max Linder Comedy Offered

"7 Years Bad Luck" is Presented by Robertson-Cole

IN offering for early distribution the super-special production, "Seven Years Bad Luck," with Max Linder, Robertson-Cole feels that it is giving the trade the greatest comedy attraction of the decade. Careful estimates of Mr. Linder's work in "Seven Years Bad Luck" indicate that the end of his lapse, which was devoted to war service, brings him back far more talented than ever.

"Seven Years Bad Luck" was directed and written by Mr. Linder, who also enacts the leading role. The broad scope of story, support, atmosphere and artistic and humorous effects reveals that no time, effort or money were spared in making a picture which will give the exhibitor a distinctive release, it is claimed.

Many angles of appeal make "Seven Years Bad Luck" the most notable picture from an exploitation standpoint that has recently been released, Robertson-Cole assert. The central theme of the picture shows a man striving to escape from the jinx which has been laid upon him by a broken glass. Naturally this gives opportunity for a large play upon all sorts of superstitions. This is a human angle which has been worked out in diversified form in the large advertising campaign which Robertson-Cole is publishing on the Linder picture.

Max Linder, who is being starred in the Robertson-Cole comedy, "Seven Years Bad Luck"

Freak scenes and extraordinary incidents abound in the picture. These are all taken advantage of in the exploitation which has been mapped out by Robertson-Cole for the use of exhibitors who play "Seven Years Bad Luck." Included in the atmosphere of the picture are scenes laid in a large zoological garden in a big railroad station, on board train, in a jail, a courtroom, a swimming pool and many other interesting places. These unusual backgrounds give opportunity for a long series of humorous incidents in which Mr. Linder and the large company which plays with him are concerned.

Mr. Linder has a role of a man who comes in from the sort of evening which even prohibition officials admit still to be possible. Getting up next morning, he discovers that his servants have broken a large mirror. Through a remarkable train of incidents, the character played by Linder is made to break a second mirror, thereby putting himself in line for "seven years bad luck." Max leaves home to try to shake off this spell. Wherever he goes it clings to him, and through its complications he has opportunity to do the best comedy work of his career.

"Seven Years Bad Luck" not only tells a funny story, but has an excellent cast as well, is the claim. All of the actors and actresses appearing in support of Mr. Linder are well known and have, at various times, appeared prominently in pictures of note. Included are Thelma Percy, Alta Allen, Betty Peterson, Lola Gonzales, Harry Mann, Chance Ward, Ralph McCullough, Hugh Zaxon, Cap Anderson, F. B. Crayne and Pudgy, the dog.

In giving "Seven Years Bad Luck" to the trade Robertson-Cole is convinced that it is releasing a picture which will furnish every exhibitor who plays it a maximum return for his rental. Humor is one of the most wanted qualities in pictures and in this presentation it is presented in lavish quantity.

With the proper exploitation the distributing company is sure "Seven Years Bad Luck" will go over one hundred per cent everywhere it is shown, and prove one of the truly satisfactory attractions of the year.

Educational Makes New Offer

To Release Single-Reel Scenics and Travelogue Pictures

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., is placing at the disposal of exhibitors this month and for the future a number of single-reel scenic and travel-pictures which will be released under the heading of "Miscellaneous." These will not be long series of pictures, but the chief aim will be to afford variety as well as quality in the product so that some single reeler to fit every program will always be available.

Because of the fact that attention was recently directed to the Hudson's Bay territory by the lost naval balloonists especial interest is being shown in the four single-reels that constitute the Hudson's Bay Travel Series. These pictures were taken by an Educational camera expedition which had the assistance of the entire Hudson's Bay organization, this being the first time that a motion picture photographer had covered any considerable portion of the vast territory.

Months were occupied in this trip and some 20,000 feet of film made, it is declared, showing every activity of this great organization and every post owned by the company, even to those located where few whites have ever been. The first of this series is "A Tale of the Fur North," which shows intimately the life of the Eskimo people, from birth, through courtship and marriage to old age. It is said to be the first time that such a picture has been offered. The second of the series is "Hides and Go Seek," and shows trapping by Indians around various Hudson's Bay posts.

Other pictures which are promised by Educational as notable single reel offerings belong to the "World Wanderings" series. These were taken by a French photographer who is said to have achieved remarkable photographic results. The first of these pictures, "The Quaint Isle of Marken," is reported to have been shown at an unusually large number of houses, in many cases with special stage settings. "In Dutch," released late in January, is said to offer unusually pleasing views in Holland, and presenting opportunities for Dutch dances and special music.

Contributing further to the variety of these single reels are the pictures made by the New York State Conservation Commission. Few people probably know that this state has immense preserves and that its activities in the control and care of forests and game is greater than that of any other state in the nation. "Wilderness Friends" is the first of these pictures, and others will follow at reasonable intervals.

Following its policy of purchasing outright unusual material, Educational has in its vaults nearly a hundred of these single reels, and these are being carefully edited and titled so as to make them stand out on any program. These releases are, of course, in addition to the Bruce Scenic Beautiful and the Chester-Outings, the two standard series.

Educational states that the release of these miscellaneous subjects is sure to contribute greatly to the popularity of the single reel with patrons, and it is largely for this reason that it is placing the high quality in the pictures and making them available to exhibitors without the necessity of signing contracts for long series.

Universal in Force at Washington, D. C.

Two Universal favorites held the boards at Tom Moore's Washington, D. C., theatres during the same week recently, it is reported from Universal's Washington office. At Moore's Rialto, "Once to Every Woman" was shown to crowded houses during the entire week. At Moore's Garden theatre, Harry Carey was starred in 'Hearts Up," his most recent western.

Universal Feature Released

Gladys Walton Starred in "Rich Girl, Poor Girl"; Harris Director

"RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL," the five-reel feature just released by Universal with Gladys Walton in the starring role, is said by Universal executives to be one of the best pictures ever offered to exhibitors by that company.

Miss Walton, a new-comer featured screen players, does by far the best work of her short picture experience in "Rich Girl, Poor Girl, declares a statement from Universal. Her first important role with Universal was with Lyons and Moran in "La La Lucille." She next received an important role in "The Secret Gift." Her work was so good in these two features that she was co-starred with Jack Perrin in "Pink Tights." Universal starred her in "Risky Business," which has been a decided hit, and then in her current release, "Rich Girl, Poor Girl."

Harry B. Harris directed the picture. He also is a newcomer among moving picture head-liners, having handled the megaphone for only a few pictures. He formerly was an assistant director. In "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" he has proved that he knows how to put human nature on the screen, declares the Universal statement.

Outstanding among the good qualities of its direction, "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" contains one of the best double-exposure photography seen in many days. Miss Walton is called upon to portray a dual role,—two characters that frequently have to be seen together. This has been accomplished in an adroit way which disarms critical comment.

Fox Opens Chicago Offices

New Headquarters to Meet Demand of Increased Business in Chicago

JANUARY 11TH marked the official opening of the new William Fox building at 910-914 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. No time was lost in any elaborate housewarming ceremonies, declares a statement from Fox's New York headquarters; the first day of its career was observed by an eight-hour working day on the part of officials and subordinates.

Built to comply with the new Chicago ordinance bearing on the exchanges and film headquarters, the building is also constructed for the peculiar needs of the Fox concern. It has offices for the executives, reception, billing, contract and Fox News departments. With the exception of the projection room, which is on the second floor in the rear, all offices and storerooms are on the street level, so that a minimum of time and effort are consumed in handling the volume of prints and advertising matter that are sent out over the district.

The building covers an area 55 x165 feet, is fireproof throughout, and is more luxuriously furnished than film men five years ago would have dreamed possible for any moving picture business office. The projection room will seat 60 persons.

The erection and occupation of the new building come at a time when the Chicago office of Fox celebrates the period of its greatest prosperity. A little over two years ago it had only 20 employees. Today it has over 70; and this increase in number indicates only a measure of the increase in receipts, for better office facilities now permit more business to be handled per employee than when the branch functioned in a suite of rented offices totally unfitted in comparison with the new building to meet the demands of the company.

A Big Cast in Lesser Film

Jackie Coogan Surrounded by Popular Players for "Peck's Bad Boy"

WORD comes from Irving Lesser, producer of "Peck's Bad Boy," which stars Jackie Coogan, of Charlie Chaplin "The Kid" fame, that an entire reorganization has taken place with regard to the Peck production.

The recent and serious accident which befell Jackie Coogan some weeks ago, and which necessitated Mr. Lesser to suspend activities on production for a number of weeks, and incidentally which caused a loss of no little means financially, instead of dampening his spirits, had the opposite effect.

As soon as word reached Lesser that Jackie Coogan would recover and would be able to soon resume his work before the camera, the producer arranged whereby Louis E. Loeb, who had been associated with Al Lichtman of Famous Players for a period of over five years, became general production manager. Both Lesser and Loeb made immediate plans for a much more artistic and elaborate production of the Peck film than had previously been contemplated.

Through the courtesy of Famous Players-Lasky, Sam Wood was obtained to complete the production. Mr. Wood is responsible for most of the recent Wallace Reid specials.

Mr. Wood and Mr. Lesser made arrangements whereby the services of Doris May were secured. Miss May will appear as Jackie's "big sis." Wheeler Oakman will have the leading male portrayal and important characterization will be in the hands of Raymond Hatton as the village grocer, and James Corrigan as Old Man Peck. Lillian Leighton will assume the role of Ma Peck, while others in the cast include Charles Hatton and Gloria Woods. With an assemblage of well known screen artists such as above mentioned, it is safe to say that Jackie Coogan will be supported by an all-star cast.

Arrangements have been made whereby a goodly portion of the Robert Brunton studios in Hollywood will be taken over and here, with every possible facility for comfort and speedy production, the remaining scenes for the Peck story will be filmed.

"Peck's Bad Boy" will be in full five-reel feature comedy form and, according to Director Sam Wood, will be chuck full of rural laughs, gags, situations and atmosphere throughout its entirety.

Irving Lesser will take full charge of all distribution matters pertaining to the finished product, which should be ready for the cutting room within several weeks' time.

Kinograms In Big Demand

Many First-Run Theatres Booking Educational News Weekly Service

ACCORDING to preliminary reports received by Educational Exchanges, Inc., the indications are that during the week of January 30th, which will see the first release of super-Kinograms, the news reel will be played by more first run theatres than have ever booked any similar product, declares a statement from Educational's headquarters.

Not only have the principal great chains of theatres which are using other Educational product asked for these pictures, but in practically every city they have also been booked in competing houses, it is declared. For instance, on Broadway it is promised that the news reels will be seen in at least five principal theatres, and an equal record is expected in other cities.

An announcement from Educational says that the reports already received have caused the order for prints for the first issue to be doubled over the original estimates. However, the laboratory facilities are so extensive that a vast footage can be turned out without delay in a single shipment. In fact, salesmen have been instructed to emphasize in their talk to exhibitors the facilities of the super-Kinograms and the fact that they will be given the same sort of specialized service with these films as they have been getting with one and two reel pictures from that organization.

Reports from the field forces of Kinograms are said to convey other assurances of an unusual product. At the start the news reel will represent the work of the forces now producing Kinograms and Gaumont Weekly, and thirty days later the force making a third weekly at the present time will be added. The three entire staffs will be maintained and Education promises that the reels to be sent out twice a week will represent the best product of all three forces, and that it will afford the same selective qualities that are now obtained by those houses subscribing for several different news reels and then doing their own editing.

Trailer Available for "Truant Husband"

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has issued a trailer for the exhibitor's use previous to the release of "The Truant Husband." It consists of a series of scenes from the production introducing the various characters and each scene is described in a little rhymed couplet.

ANZIA YEZIERSKA is the latest famous author to join the ranks of the Goldwyn company. Her book "Hungry Hearts" is to be made into a picture and Miss Yezierska left last week for the company's studio in Culver City, California, to cooperate with the continuity writer and the director in making the screen version. It is especially desired to keep the essence of "Hungry Hearts" and it is part of the credo of the Goldwyn company that the author shall have a voice in all decisions as to his story.

Miss Yezierska will be at the Goldwyn studio for a number of weeks. As she left immediately after the signing of the contract, the continuity writer, the director and the cast had not been chosen. The selections will be made as soon after she reaches the studio as possible.

Carmel Myers, Universal star, whose latest starring vehicle is to be "The Mad Marriage"

Ruth Roland Extends Stay in New York

As the end of the second week of her intended two weeks' visit in New York draws near. Ruth Roland, who traveled across the continent after completing another Pathe serial, "The Avenging Arrow," decided to play an extended engagement in the vicinity of the Broadway shows, Fifth Avenue shops and the Pathe Home Offices. The serial celebrity found that the time she had allotted herself for the combined vacation and shopping tour in New York was not sufficient.

Many First-Runs for Single-Reelers

Educational reports that a number of its exchanges have exhausted the first run bookings for the single reel Vanity and Gayety Comedies which have been on the market a little more than six weeks. Detroit has booked all of these two brands for solid week runs at the Drury Lane in that city.

To Launch "Metro Week" Soon

FEBRUARY 27 to March 5 will be Metro week throughout the country. Metro expects that at least 7,000 exhibitors of the United States and Canada will during that period show only attractions released through its organization.

The inauguration of this week will be preceded by a nation-wide advertising campaign in prominent newspapers reaching every community, and the publicity drive will continue throughout, it is declared. Free distribution of posters and of slides will accompany the wholesale purchase of newspaper display space in order to fully suport the exhibitor during this special period, says a statement from Metro headquarters.

"Metro week, while not undertaken without the most thorough preparation, has been brought about," Metro officials assert, "by the evidence of a spontaneous desire on the part of exhibitors to inaugurate such an institution, rather than by an arbitrary decision on the part of the company to conduct a national drive at a given time.

"Most recent instances of exhibitors' taking the initiative in setting aside a week for Metro pictures only were those of the Rialto theatre, in Providence, R. I., and several of the foremost screen theatres in Atlanta, Ga. The experience of R. J. McLean,

A scene from "The Off-Shore Pirate," a forthcoming Metro production starring Viola Dana of the Palace, Washington, O., of having not one empty seat during his long run of Metro photoplays; the appearance on Broadway of 'The Great Redeemer' and of Bert Lytell's latest, 'The Price of Redemption' and of Buster Keaton's comedy, 'One Week," simultaneously for seven days, are but a representative few of the examples tending to prove the desire for Metro pictures is confined to no locality, but that in every community, whether large or small, east or west, people want to see Metro stars for long runs.

"Such cases of demand suggested the idea of Metro week, and once in mind the company has been preparing to drive it over to an unparalleled success.

"A special staff has been assigned to work out fully an advertising campaign to be launched nationally, and which will give powerful, money-getting publicity to every one of the big productions Metro has distributed in the last eighteen months. The campaign will be got under way well before the advent of Metro week, in plenty of time to stir up the interest of the nation in what promises to be the most momentous period of motion picture exhibition it has ever passed through.

"None of the expense of this advertising attack will fall on the exhibitor. Metro will shoulder the entire burden of financing it, and will further co-operate with the individual showmen by issuing them free of charge all posters for billboard display during Metro Week. Slides, too, will be distributed on the same basis."

Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, described the situation by saying:

"All the exhibitor has to do, practically, is give his operator the films. We'll do the advertising, plaster his town with paper and furnish the slide for his screen—in a word, fill his house. The showman has only to give directions to his projection operator and cashier, and then make out a deposit slip for his bank."

Hodkinson Releases Booking

IN a series of statements just issued from the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, recent bookings of current Hodkinson releases by exhibitors in various parts of the country are announced. In most cases the productions have been engaged for a week's run.

Frank Cassil, Hodkinson Northwest supervisor, reports the closing of a contract with Jensen and Von Herberg for a full week's showing of "The U. P. Trail" and "The Brute Master" for their Portland theatre.

"The U. P. Trail" is a Benj. B. Hampton production, made from Zane Grey's highly popular novel, while "The Brute Master," a J. Parker Read, Jr. production, starring Hobart Bosworth and featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, is a stirring story of Southern seas.

From W. O. Edmunds, Hodkinson representative in San Francisco, comes an announcement to the effect that C. W. Midgeley has contracted for "The U. P. Trail" for a seven-day showing at the Oakland theatre, Oakland, California.

"The U. P. Trail" is a Benj. B. Hampton production, made from Zane Grey's popular novel. It has proven one of the greatest box-office successes of the current season, declares W. W. Hodkinson, and it is confidently predicted that Mr. Midgley will be more than pleased with the results achieved with this production.

From H. H. Hurn, Cincinnati Hodkinson representative, comes an announcement to the effect that Ike Libsen booked "Love Madness" for a seven-day showing at his Family theatre in Cincinnati. Mr. Libsen is reputed to be a wise showman and recognized the pulling power of this truly great production. It has been said by Hodkinson officials that never has Louise Glaum had a vehicle better suited to her talents than has been provided for her in this J. Parker Read, Jr., production.

"The Spenders" has been booked by Feiber and Shea for their Colonial theatre, Akron, Ohio. This is the recently released Benj. B. Hampton comedy, made from Harry Leon Wilson's novel, which is creating such a furor wherever shown, according to W. W. Hodkinson. It is a fast moving story

It is a fast-moving story, with the locale shifting from West to East. In the cast are included such popular players as Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Niles Welch and Joseph J. Dowling.

James P. Dunlevy of the Strand theatre, Akron, Ohio, has booked through Herbert J. Ochs, Hodkinson representative of Cleveland, Ohio, "Down Home," for a four-day showing.

"Down Home" is Irvin V. Willat's first independent production for Hodkinson release, and is said to have been built with great skill and craftsmanship. It has been proven one of the most highly successful of the recent Hodkinson releases, according to Hodkinson officials.

Educational Sales Mgr. Visiting Exhibitors

In line with the policy of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., keeping in close touch with exhibitors themselves in order that the home office may have the fullest information as to their needs, Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, this week started on the second of his series of short trips. Louisville will be the immediate objective and after this the Cleveland and Cincinnati branches will be visited.

The above is the first of two special lobby frame cards, drawn by Brinkerhoff, for the use of the exhibitors in exploiting "The Old Swimmin' Hole," the next Ray-First National attraction

Nick Carters Well Liked

Enthusiastic Reports From All Pioneer Exchanges on Series

ENTHUSIASTIC reports concerning the Nick Carter series of fifteen two-reel detective features are being received at the home office of Pioneer Film Corporation from its exchanges throughout the country. Recognized by live exhibitors as an unusually strong box-office attraction, containing all the elements that assure public satisfaction, the series is being booked heavily, and some new sales records for two reelers will undoubtedly be made, confidently report the exchange managers.

"Probably no two-reel productions within recent months have attracted much widespread comment and attention from exhibitors at the Nick Carters," said Vice-President and General Manager M. H. Hoffman. "Short in length and of sufficient strength to fit any program in any theatre, regardless of the character of its clientele, this series is considered an ideal booking bet. Each of the two-reelers is complete in itself, a keen, absorbing detective drama, played by a splendid cast, starring Tom Carrigan, and containing as much marrow as the best five-reeler, and more than the average."

Consistent with the importance of this series, the Pioneer Film Corporation has put forth extra efforts toward their exploitation. A special Nick Carter exploitation bureau as an adjunct of the regular publicity and advertising department has been created to handle Nick Carter exploitation exclusively. This bureau will co-operate with exhibitors in every possible way, either directly or through the medium of the exchange managers, or both, as is necessary.

Vice-President and General Manager M. H. Hoffman desires to call particular attention to this special bureau, and to ask exhibitors to make use of it. A full line of exploitation accessories such as lithographs in the usual sizes and colors, lobby displays, heralds, throw-aways, press books, etc., can be obtained at all Pioneer exchanges.

Field Force Hard at Work

Hodkinson's Salesmen Are Out in Earnest to Make 1921 Banner Year

"NINETEEN TWENTY-ONE looks like a show-down in the motion picture industry and the Hodkinson field organization is geared up to place their company in the very front position in the distributing field," declares a statement just issued.

"Each and every one of the men are out to sell the 'Hodkinson Idea,' and are meeting with very great success," declares the statement.

"Leading the league is Norman Moray, New York representative, who reports one hundred theatres in his territory that use and have used every Hodkinson release.

"P. N. Brinch, sales manager of the organization, has worked out a new plan for the coming year by which the sales representatives and the men in the field will know from week to week of the progress they are making and the men are so thoroughly imbued with the idea that 1921 must be a banner year for Hodkinson that they are attacking their work with the same determination and magnificent spirit which was displayed during November, 1920—Hodkinson month."

To Screen Ibanez Special

Preview for Metro Officials; a Print Also Sent Abroad to Ibanez

REX INGRAM, director, and June Mathis, adapter of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the million-dollar screen production of the Ibanez novel that Metro recently finished at its Hollywood studios in California, left Los Angeles Wednesday for New York, bringing with them the original print of the picture for a special preview before Metro officials prior to its presentation in the Astor theatre at Broadway and Forty-fifth street, February 20.

Although the picture is completed Mr. Ingram and Miss Mathis desired to be present at the special private showing of "The Four Horsemen," in order to make any changes that might be suggested in the cutting and titling of the mammoth production, should any be deemed advisable by Metro officials.

Following the preview of the picture it will take possession of the Astor theatre on February 20th, and commence an indefinite run. Both Mr. Ingram and Miss Mathis will remain East long enough to be present at the beginning of the picture's engagement in one of the largest of the Broadway theatres.

Metro will dispatch by special messenger on the first available Atlantic liner a print of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" to the author of this internationally famous novel, by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, who is now sojourning at Nice, in southern France.

Harry Bedker, of Metro's New York exchange, will take personal charge of the print, traveling by way of London, where he will meet Harry J. Cohen, foreign manager for Metro. It is expected that the print will be held in the British capital long enough for exhibition before Sir William Jury, managing director of Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., exclusive distributors throughout Great Britain of Metro Productions.

Following the brief halt in London for the special showing Mr. Cohen and Mr. Bedker will proceed immediately to the Continent for delivery of the print of "The Four Horsemen" to Senor Ibanez.

Alice Hollister Plays Lead

Appears Opposite James Kirkwood in Geo. Melford's "Money Master"

ALICE HOLLISTER, charming screen leading woman and one of the few veteran actresses who wasn't won over from the stage, but made her professional debut before the camera, played her first scene as Carmen Dolores, in George Melford's production of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master," on Monday, January 10th. This is the leading feminine role, Miss Hollister playing opposite James Kirkwood.

This marks Miss Hollister's first appearance in a Paramount picture and she expressed herself as delighted with the opportunity to work under Mr. Melford's direction. "I knew Mr. Melford at the old Kalem studio years ago," she remarked, "and have often wished that I might play in one of his productions so when they asked me to play this role, I was more than pleased."

Miss Hollister made her first screen appearance about eight years ago in a picture directed by Sidney Olcott for Kalem. She had gone South to visit with her husband who was at that time a cameraman for the Kalem Company, and Mr. Olcott, who was then casting a new picture, saw in her the very type he wanted for a certain part. He offered her the role and she accepted. She proved to possess remarkable talent and thus realized her ambition of a lifetime to become an actress. She spent six years in stock with the Kalem company, and one of her most notable roles was the part of Mary Magdalene in "From the Manger to the Cross," a film depicting the life of the Christ. The picture was filmed in the Holy Land.

Miss Hollister has now been in the Western film capital for over a year, and during that time she has played many important roles in screen productions. She will be recalled for her splendid work in "Milestones," "The Great Lover" and "A Voice in the Dark."

Metro Announces Three Changes in Titles

CHANGES in titles of three pictures which are scheduled for early release, are announced by Metro Pictures Corporation. The three feature films from stories by famous authors were made at the company's West Coast studios at Hollywood, Calif., and were photographed under different titles.

The famous noved by Jack London, "The Little Lady of the Big House," which was screened under the working title of "What's the Matter With Marriage?" will be produced under the shorter designation of "The Little Fool."

Don Byrne's original story, "Sorrentina," in which Viola Dana is starred, will be presented to picure-goers under the caption of "Puppets of Fate." The widely read story of Ben Ames Williams, "More Stately Mansions," which appeared in magazine form and was screened under the working title of "Are Wives to Blame?" will be released as "Extravagance."

Ina Claire Applauded by Rivoli Audience

Metro reports that "Polly with a Past" has been accorded an unusual reception at the Rivoli, New York, where it has just been given a week's run. Ina Claire, the star, attended the performance one evening during the week, and upon being recognized by a number of spectators among the audience was hailed to the stage for a short impromptu stage. Hugo Riesenfeld introduced the Metro star, who was given a cordial reception upon her appearance.

"At the Rivoli theatre this week the famous comedy, 'Polly with a Past,' is every bit as delightful and amusing as it was on the spoken stage under David Belasco's magic hand.

"Miss Claire is Polly on the screen as she was Polly on the stage—pretty Polly she is, vivacious and lively and laugh-provoking."

The New York Herald's critic remarked:

"'Ina Claire—you might think her name fit for a drink—smiles her way to the hearts of all at the Rivoli. in 'Polly with a Past' she does a French wink quite discreet, but still rather frivolly. In her debut Miss Claire may be said to be 'there.'"

Excellent Cast Seen in Arbuckle Production

Louis M. Goodstadt, casting director at the Lasky studio, is enthusiastic over the roster of players chosen for Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle's new Paramount picture, "Crazy to Marry." Here is the cast:

Vita Presents "Black Beauty"

"BLACK BEAUTY," Vitagraph's special production based on the story by Anna Sewell, had its first performance in any theatre last Sunday night at the Capitol theatre, Hartford, Conn. The world's premier of the wonderful story of a horse, with the added human story written by Lillian and George Randolph Chester, with Jean Paige as the star, was a success, according to a statement received from Vitagraph.

The theatre was crowded to capacity at both performances, it is declared. The Connecticut State laws provide that Sunday evening performances may not begin before seven o'clock P. M., and must end by ten o'clock P. M. The late arrivals who could not gain an entrance to the first performance remained patiently in the spacious lobby for the second showing of the picture. Mr. and Mrs. Chester were present in person, Mr. Chester making a brief address before the showing of the picture at which he explained to the interested audiences just how the difficulties were overcome in adapting the story of "Black Beauty," a narrative told in the first person by a horse, to the screen.

"'Black Beauty' is a splendid example of the efforts of Vitagraph to produce better pictures," Mr. Chester told the audiences. "It is a great step forward in the right direction. The picture is clean and wholesome, and it is also good entertainment. If you like 'Black Beauty' simply because you know the story and because there is nothing in it to offend man, woman or child, then we have at least failed in our purpose. If you like the picture for these reasons and because it is also good entertainment—exceptionally good entertainment—then we have accomplished what we set out to do and will be encouraged to continue along the same lines in making better pictures."

Scene from "Black Beauty," a special feature being produced by Vitagraph from the famous novel by the same name

An unusual feature of the engagement of "Black Beauty" in Hartford was the new class of patrons it attracted to the theatre, declares the Vitagraph statement. Beginning early Sunday morning there was a succession of telephone calls, lasting all day, asking questions, the answers to which would have been familiar to any regular follower of motion pictures. Requests were made for reserved seats; inquiries as to the time of performance and the prices; whether young children would be admitted if accompanied by governesses instead of parents; whether there were boxes in the theatre and a hundred and one other questions which indicated that the theatre was acquiring an additional and desirable clientele.

Something of this unusual interest in "Black Beauty" as indicated by the hundreds of telephone calls undoubtedly was due to the efforts of Manager Clancey to reach the children of the city through them, their parents, through the medium of the schools. A week before the engagement every school teacher and principal in Hartford, to the number of nearly 800, briefly describing the special production of "Black Beauty" and calling attention to the fact that the picture would be shown at 4:45 o'clock in the afternoon each day, except Sunday, the picture closing shortly after six o'clock, thus enabling school children to see the production without in any way interfering with their school duties and studies. The gist of the latter was told to the pupils and brought the desired results, it is stated.

Current Paramount Releases

JANUARY 23 was the general release date for William DeMille's production, "Midsummer Madness," which recently closed an engagement of five weeks at the Criterion Theatre, New York, and the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Rookie's Return," starring Douglas MacLean. Both are released on the Paramount schedule.

"Midsummer Madness," adapted by Olga Printzlau from the novel by Cosmo Hamilton, was hailed by the critics of the trade press and the New York newspapers on the occasion of its initial presentation for its technical perfection. In story, dramatic construction, photography and lighting and direction, it stands on a high plane, according to the reviewers, and has earned new laurels for William DeMille.

Four characters dominate the story, and for these roles four players of talent were chosen. They are Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, Jack Holt, and Conrad Nagel, and each of them is said to have been ideally cast. In roles of lesser importance, are Betty Francisco, Claire McDowell, Charlotte Jackson, Charles Ogle, Ethel Wales, Lillian Leighton and George Kuwa.

The theme is not a new one, but it is the manner of its treatment by the author scenarist and director that has raised it, Paramount says, far above the evel of the commonplace. To Bob Meredith life means the pursuit of his profession. To Julian Osborne, his best friend, it means romance—the woman yet unwon. Fate, feeding upon the neglect of Margaret Meredith by her husband, brings about the inevitable. Opportunity courts indiscretion—a moment of madness; the unseen witness; the Neighborhood Gossip—and four lives face grim tragedy. But reason dictates reconciliation, and with it comes new happiness born of a better understanding. Guy Wilky was the cameraman, and his photography is said to be flawless.

Douglas MacLean, with Doris May, comes before his legion of admirers again in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Rookie's Return," a rollicking comedy declared to be a fitting successor to "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," "What's Your Husband Doing," and "Mary's Ankle.' Jack Nelson was the director and Bert Cann the cameraman.

The story was written by Archer McMackin and tells of the return of a war veteran to wrestle with the problem of adjusting himself to the humdrum existence of civilian life. However, he finds that post-war conditions are not as devoid of action and excitement as he had thought, and his fighting blood, roused by a household of rebellious servants, a rival for the hand of the young lady of his choice, an adopted father and other things supply him with as much excitement as did ever the treacherous Hun.

Doris May is again seen as the delightful sweetheart.

Introducing Harold Goodwin, talented juvenile who has appeared in numerous important screen roles as a new Fox star. His first picture will be "Oliver Twist, Jr."

Harold Goodwin Made a Star

Wm. Fox Announces He Will Be Starred in Fox Releases

IN a statement just issued from the William Fox Film Corporation's headquarters, announcement is made that Harold Goodwin has been elevated to the stardom and will be seen during the present year in the stellar parts of William Fox releases. In the statement just issued a sketch of the young star's career is given as follows:

"Young Goodwin has attained success after going through the hard school of experience, despite his youth. While he has supported several of the more prominent stars in leading roles, he started, like most others who have climbed to prominence in the picture world, by playing small parts when he was ten years old.

"Directors soon saw the boy had talent, and from his first role at the age of ten up until the present time he has played with Shirley Mason, Mary Pickford, Mary Miles Minter, Lila Lee, Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Gish, Mary Allen, Vivian Martin and Bessie Love.

"He also played rough parts with Tom Mix, Harry Carey and William Hart, as well as roles with Jack Commy, Wallace Reid in early Griffith productions, and several pictures with Thomas Ince. In fact, Goodwin has run the gamut of motion picture roles, but it remained for William Fox to see star stuff in the lad and obtain his signature to a contract for exclusive service.

"Goodwin was born in Peoria, Ill., eighteen years ago. He is six feet one inch in height and weighs 140 pounds, with a slender, boyish figure. It is the intention of Mr. Fox to show him as the sort of a boy mothers like to see. He is a wholesome chap, and his pictures will carry a lesson and do good work, while losing none of the typical Fox entertainment.

"In the matter of personality, Harold Goodwin strikes one as a typical American boy—straightforword, absolutely without affectation, modest, and even a bit shy at times. For his first work as an extra, when he was ten years old, he tells with delight that he received fifty cents.

"'I was just about crazy,' he says. 'I thought it was a fortune.'

"That was with Carlyle Blackwell, and Goodwin says he could not understand how they could pay him so much money for just walking on in a scene. But he determined to earn more fifty-cent pieces, and in a little while was playing small parts. That was the beginning of his upward climb.

"At thirteen he was playing in 'Old Heidelberg' with Wallace Reid and Dorothy Gish for D. W. Griffith. At sixteen he had the lead with Shirley Mason in "The Winning Girl" for Lasky.

"For the last two years his climb has been steady, until he has reached the pinnacle and is now a full-fledged star. His ambition in life, he says, has always been to get as high as he could and to get the best there is out of everything. This means professionally as well as in the personal aim. Seemingly Goodwin is a high-minded youth who has hitched his wagon to a star.

"So early this year the motion-picture public who have learned to admire Goodwin in leading roles will have an opportunity to judge just what kind of star he will make.

"'A good one,' says all his friends, who have no intention of perpetrating a pun.

"The new star's first picture is now being made at the William Fox Hollywood studio under the title 'Oliver Twist, Jr.,' Millard Webb is directing.

Senator Lauds Universal Film

UNUSUAL commendation for a moving picture has just been received by Universal from the chairman of the committee of public health and national quarantine of the United States Senate. The picture in question is "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the adventure film accurately portraying the experiences of two Universal cameramen in the South Seas.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" recently was booked for a week at the Leader theatre, Washington, D. C. Senator Joseph Irwin France, of Maryland, the chairman of the aforenamed Senate Committee, heard about the picture, but was too late to catch it at the Leader.

Word of the Senator's interest reached Jules Levy, manager of Universal's Washington office, who immediately arranged a special showing of the film for the benefit of the Senate committeeman.

"For many years I have been deeply interested in the study of aboriginal peoples," Senator France is quoted as saying, "and particularly in the inhabitants of the great undeveloped continent of Africa. It is because of my interest in this subject that I was particularly pleased to know that this wonderful picture is now being offered to large and enthusiastic audiences throughout the United States.

"Not only is this picture most delightful from a romantic and artistic point of view, but it also has a high educational value from the fact that it shows the customs, dress, dances, and habits of the primitive peoples of New Guinea.

"I feel that as a result of the wide publicity given this picture the people of the United States will secure valuable information concerning the uncivilized portions of the world. This is an important work, for ultimately America must become the leader in advancing and improving the conditions among the backward peoples."

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" consists of seven reels actually filmed in Siam and along the cannibal coast of New Guinea. It shows a Siamese tiger hunt with startling climaxes, and gives a spirited and thrilling film history of the adventures of the two explorer-cameramen, Edward Laemmle and William F. Alder, among the New Guinea head-hunters.

The picture is enjoying unusual success throughout the United States, being considered the greatest novelty of the past screen year. With a plot consisting only of the chronological adventures of the two Universal men, the picture contains so much unusual scenery, savage types, customs and rituals, it stands by itself as a film combining the educational, the unusual and the sensational.

New Betty Compson Release Soon

THE release of Betty Compson's first starring venture in a production made by herself, "Prisoners of Love," which has attracted such widespread attention in the two or three cities in which it has been shown, will be followed in a few weeks' time by the release of the second Betty Compson Production. All of the pictures made by the young actress-producer are distributed by Goldwyn.

Miss Compson's second starring vehicle has been adapted from a popular story by Perley Poore Sheehan, published under the title of "Reincarnation."

It is promised that the cast in support of Miss Compson in the second photoplay will equal in excellence that of "Prisoners of Love." Among those who will be seen in her support are Emory Johnson, one of her two leading men in "Prisoners of Love," Gerald Pring, recently seen in Goldwyn's "Milestones," and Macey Harlan, one of the best actors of villains' roles on the speaking stage.

Miss Compson has the role of an actress in a cheap vaudeville company touring Egypt. A mystic of that country recognizes in her the reincarnation of a former queen of that nation who was involved in a drama that still had an act to run. That last act forms the culmination of the little actress's story. It takes place in and around a lost tomb in the desert, the solution of the tale involving an American and his wife, an Englishman and an Egyptian statesman.

Fox Special Adheres to Twain Tale Closely

The pre-release showing Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," playing to crowded houses at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles—where it has entered on a long run—shows, according to advices from the West Coast headquarters, careful staging with rigid adherence to the original story.

The scenes of King Arthur's court and the scenes in the wicked Queen Morgan Le Fay's castle received, says William Fox, painstaking treatment. King Arthur's castle used up 100,000 feet of lumber and 700,000 feet of plaster board, making one of the largest paper and wood sets ever constructed.

Bookings for "The Tavern Knight" Heavy

Advance bookings on "The Tavern Knight," the Stoll Film Corporation of America's costume play production, according to reports received at the New York office by Ralph Proctor, general manager, show that the old tradition against the costume play is on the wane.

More than thirteen hundred theatres throughout the country will show "The Tavern Knight," which will be released on January 30th. It is the fifth of the Stoll company's releases in its one-a-week schedule for 1921. The other releases were "Squandered Lives" and "The Lure of Crooning Water," both George Clark Productions, "Mr. Wu," with Matheson Lang and "The Hundredth Chance."

Whittier, Cal., Given a "Midnight Sun"

Whittier, the "Quaker City of the West," was startled one night recently when a Metro company headed by Viola Dana arrived in town to "shoot" some night scenes for "Home Stuff." The cause of the consternation on the part of the townsfolk was the great portable lighting equipment recently constructed for the Metro studios. The illuminating plant was quietly brought into the town, and when the current was turned on for the filming of the scenes around the Whittier railroad station the flood of light transformed the quaint spot into a veritable "land of midnight sun," declares a statement from the Metro headquarters.

Gareth Hughes Returns to Coast Studios

Gareth Hughes just has returned to Metro's Hollywood studios after a two months' stay in New York, where he appeared as the featured player in Famous Players production of "Sentimental Tommy." He was permitted to enact the role by special agreement between the two producing companies.

Exhibitors Preview "The Kid"

A TRADE showing of Charles Chaplin's six-reel comedy special, "The Kid," was given at the Strand theatre, New York, on Friday morning, January 21. A large number of exhibitors from the city and surrounding districts were on hand at the invitation of Associated First National Pictures to view the production. The keen anticipation of the film men present to see Chaplin in his new First National release was strongly evidenced in the impatience that became manifest on the part of the audience when R. H. Clarke, manager of First National's New York exchange, gave signs of lengthening his introductory address. Mr. Clarke, who was just launching into an explanation of rentals as they affected the picture, was clapped down by the spectators, and he good-naturedly retired when it became apparent that those present were anxious to see the picture without further delay.

To say that the audience of exhibitors enjoyed the picture is putting it mildly. More than once the action on the screen brought forth undiluted expressions of merriment and approval on the part of the auidence, and when the crowd passed through the exits at the close of the showing, the general sentiment seemed to prevail that in "The Kid" Chaplin and his "kid" ally, Jackie Coogan, are due to register strongly with the public everywhere that the picture is shown.

In a statement just issued in connection with the Strand trade showing, First National has the following to say:

"Whether planned or not, the release of Charlie Chaplin's 'The Kid,' First National's six-reeler of joy, just at this time is destined to have a far-reaching influence on the whole motion picture industry," declares a statement from First National's headquarters. "It is the greatest foe to depression talk that has yet appeared and has been the basis of more optimistic talk from exhibitors in territories where it has been shown than any single happening in the trade since calamity-howlers first claimed to smell an impending slump.

"The gathering in Chicago where the Chaplin film was first shown to exhibitors may not be as good an example of the effect the picture has upon exhibitors themselves as the trade showing at the Strand theatre in New York, for the Chicago gathering was made up only of the biggest men in the industry and none of them are given to talking depression. Nevertheless the cheering effect the picture had upon those who saw it in Chicago was noticeable. It started them laughing and put them in good humor. They could see nothing but clean-up business with the picture and there was optimism galore.

"In the showing of the picture to the public the same remarkable gloom dissipation is apparent. It opened at the Randolph theatre in Chicago on the coldest day that city has yet experienced. There was an icy gale blowing, of the kind only Lake Michigan can furnish, which made walking almost impossible. Somehow or other, however, the psychological effect of the picture had been transmitted to the Chicago public, for here is the report on the opening day as telegraphed to the First National home offices by Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, owners of the theatre:

"Chaplin in 'The Kid' opened yesterday to greatest business in history of Randolph theatre. Showing is doubly remarkable as day was one of coldest this winter, and heavy gale of cold wind made walking almost impossible. Chaplin and 'The Kid' were hugely enjoyable. The press went wild with praise."

Realart's February Releases

THREE productions are announced for February release by Realart under its star franchise. These pictures are "All Souls' Eve," with Mary Miles Minter; Wanda Hawley in "The Snob," and "Out of the Chorus," featuring Alice Brady.

"All Souls' Eve," adapted from the successful play by Anne Crawford Flexner, is regarded by Realart officials as Miss Minter's greatest picture, and worthy from all angles to be rated as a special production. The scenario is by Elmer Harris, co-author of "So Long Letty" and "Canary Cottage," and a scenarist of recognized ability. Chester Franklin, who directed, was also responsible for "You Never Can Tell," a Realart production in which Bebe Daniels made a decided hit.

Supporting Miss Minter in this picture is a carefully selected cast. Jack Holt, one of the most popular leading men of the screen, plays the part of Roger Heath; Carmen Phillips, known for her work in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" and other pictures, is seen as Olivia Larkin; Mickey Moore, a child actor of unusual talent, portrays the role of little Peter Heath, while Clarence Geldart is said to be exceptionally cast as Dr. Sandy McAllister. Fannie Midgely and Lottie Williams also have important roles in the picture.

"The Snob," a brisk comedy of American life and youth, has a specially chosen cast in support of Wanda Hawley. Furnishing fun and laughs are Sylvia Ashton and Walter Hiers, two of the screen's fattest and jolliest players. Edwin Stevens, who starred in "The Devil," on the speaking stage, has a role in "The Snob' that adds much to the humor of the picture. Others in the cast are William Lawrence, a screen actor of experience and growing popularity; Julia Faye, Josephine Crowell, Richard Wayne and Althea Worthley.

"Out of the Chorus," scheduled for late-January release, has been made a February picture. It is adapted from an original story by the well-known writers, Harry Chandlee and William D. Laub.

Love and sacrifice play prominent parts in the theme of "Out of the Chorus." Florence Maddis (Alice Brady), a member of the Winter Palace Review, marries Ross Van Beekman, son of an aristocratic New York family. His relatives are not proud of the alliance and do their utmost to cause a separation. Although she proves to be sweet and modest and seems born to her position, they plot against her happiness. Their efforts are partially rewarded when Ross returns home and finds traces of an unwelcome caller. But here the plans of the Van Beekmans miscarry. There is a murder—and Ross is held. Despite his suspicions and accusations, Florence remains true and stays with her husband all through the trial when things are blackest. Finally an unexpected bit of testimony is offered and the young wife sees her husband vindicated. He in turns learns to know her better.

Projection Room Showing Aid Hoover Fund

The Hoover drive for the relief of starving European children, in which the motion picture industry is actively interested at present, is receiving an added forward thrust through a new plan for assistance conceived by Pioneer Film Corporation. This new plan is causing many sound American dollars to roll into the coffers of the Hoover Council and will continue to do so until the end of the drive.

Pioneer's office staff, from the chief executive down to the office boy, consists of rabid movie fans who throng the projection room every time a new production is shown. Mr. Bellman, New York exchange manager, conceived the idea of charging admission and sending the gross receipts to the Hoover committee. The admission charge is fixed at fifty cents and the present outlook is that the total amount raised will reach a substantial sum before the end of the drive.

"Under Cuban Skies" Is New Holmes Scenic

Cuba has always been a land of legend and romance and tropical loveliness; her cities Spanish in architecture and daily life, her people Spanish in tongue. The Spanish-American War made this lovely island more or less familiar to many red-blooded Americans. Today it is the Mecca for those who love horse-racing and the good things that are bought in a bottle. Mr. Holmes cannot furnish the contents of the bottle, but he visualizes for his audience the lovely land where it flows freely.

"Nonsense" Plays Standard for Week

For the first time in its history the Standard theatre, Broadway and 90th street, New York, is running a two-reel comedy for an entire week. The picture is "Nonsense," a Mermaid released through Educational Exchanges and featuring Jimmie Adams.

B. K. Bimberg, proprietor of the Standard, personally selected "Nonsense" as the only other motion picture on the same bill with "Passion." "Nonsense" scored an unusual hit during its first showing at the Strand several weeks ago.

Artistic Posters Prepared

Bracker Drawings as Basis for Paper on "Man, Woman, Marriage"

M. LEONE BRACKER, the poster artist, has completed the set of seven original drawings for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which will be used as the basis of all the posters and a special lobby display on "Man, Woman, Marriage," the Allen Holubar great spectacle starring Dorothy Phillips. The enthusiasm with which the noted creator went at the preparation of these, his first venture into the motion picture advertising field—has been amply shown in the finished productions which have been pronounced the most appealing ever prepared for the advertising of a cinema production.

The artist was given free rein in the preparation of the drawings. He made a special trip to California to visit the Holubar studio while the sets and the cast of the picture were still intact. He went through the continuity of the production and picking out nearly fifty different situations which were adaptable to vivid poster work, and in the studio these scenes were re-acted while over 1,000 still photographs were taken of them. While the stills were being taken the artist made sketches of the principals and completed his drawing from the material thus gained.

The drawings as completed by Mr. Bracker are entitled "The Dance of Folly," "She Taught Them to Pray for Their Father," "I'd Love to Wear it Always," "Cup to Cup and Lip to Lip," "When Man Fought Woman," "Just You and I" and "A Fool There Was."

For the purpose of the posters the first two have been used as the basis for one-sheets, the next two for three-sheets, the next two for six-sheets and "A Fool There Was" as a twenty-four sheet.

A unique display which has been made possible through the posters is a series of facsimile artist's proofs of each of the drawings, prepared as nearly uniform size as possible, each one framed and provided with easels for the purpose of lobby displays.

In addition to the advertising based upon the poster twenty-four 11 by 14 lobby cards, illustrating scenes in the production not touched upon by Mr. Bracker have been prepared. With the other advertising acessories of the usual sort which are also ready "Man, Woman, Marriage" goes to the exhibitor with the strongest and most artistic advertising aids that have ever been accorded a motion picture production.

"The Devil" Breaks Record

Two-Day Mark Shattered at Criterion Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y.

OPENING at the Criterion theatre in Buffalo on only four days' notice The Associated Exhibitors' Production, "The Devil" came within a few admissions of breaking all house records on the opening day and on the succeeding day broke the house record for two days by a handsome margin, announces Pathe. The picture played to tremendous business throughout the first week and was held over for a second week, Pathe officials declare. "The Devil" created a sensation in Buffalo and received splendid notices from the Buffalo papers.

"The Devil" is said to be the first picture not a Paramount picture to be played in the Buffalo house since Paramount acquired an interest in the theatre. It was brought to the Criterion through the showmanship of Harold B. Franklin, general manager of the Shea Amusement Company, who saw the production at a private showing in New York City and immediately secured it for his house. Mr. Franklin is also the managing director of Shea's Hippodrome and of several other houses under the Shea management. The Hippodrome is committed to a twice-a-week change policy and the Criterion, which has been utilized by Paramount for longer runs, was selected for the Arliss picture.

Art of Mask Making in Pathe Review

An outstanding feature of the Pathe Review reel, No. 89, which is scheduled for release for February 6, is the subject of mask-making. W. T. Benda has been projected into the limelight in the world of art by his revival of the ancient stage-mask. In Pathe Review, the entire process of mask-making as carried on by Mr. Benda is shown from beginning to end under close range of the camera. Hy Mayer presents his latest Travelaugh under the title, "In the Land of Fancy." In this subject he satirizes the ideals of the poet towards nature and her beauties. "Wig-Wag Dollars" is a study in slow-motion of the language of New York City's famous curb market.

Lytell Not to Produce "Peace and Quiet"

Contrary to a previous statement, the next Karger-Lytell production to be made by Metro, starring Bert Lytell and directed by Maxwell Karger, will be Lloyd Osborne's story, "The Man Who." This announcement follows that pertaining to "Peace and Quiet," which it was originally planned was to have been made on the Mexican border.

It was thus decided to postpone the picturization of "Peace and Quiet," by Edwin Milton Royal, which Metro has just purchased for production on the screen, until May, and meanwhile to make "The Man Who," which is in all ways suited to Eastern production.

New Capitol Comedy is "Home Brewed Youth"

The search for eternal youth, which has kept each generation busy with experiments that have ended in comedy and disillusion, is the subject of the latest Capitol comedy, "Home Brewed Youth," now being released through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

George Bunny is seen in the role of assistant to a professional type of chemist who believes he has brewed a liquid that will restore youth to the aged.

Clear Plant in 57 Seconds

Fire-Drill at Rothacker's Plant Demonstrates Company's Efficiency

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER held the watch on a recent fire drill at the Chicago Rothacker laboratory—and the plant was cleared of workers in fifty-seven seconds.

Not only did the workers get out in that short length of time, but also thousands feet of First National releases went with them.

When the fire gong clangs forth its warning each worker has a specific portion of film to "save." The Chicago laboratory is so arranged that, of the workers on the second floor, the negative cutters will be the first to reach the first floor front exit, and with the cutters go all negatives on which they were working. Of first floor workers, the girls in the printing room are first to reach the rear exit, and these girls clear the plant of negative rolls which are being printed.

The "salvage" duty is so distributed that no worker carries out no more film than he can pick up quickly and carry easily. In the assembling room each girl grabs up the positive rolls they were assembling into reels. The inspectors, who are men, pass from the projection rooms carrying reels under each arm. In the drying room there are enough workers to carry out all film that has been removed from the drying drums.

A tour of the Rothacker laboratory after a fire drill would reveal that virtually every foot of film not on racks goes out of the plant along with the workers.

Of course, when a negative is not being worked on it is kept in the exterior vault in the Rothacker "backyard" which engineers say is the last word in film storage safety.

Wesley Barry Aids Hoover

New Orleans Extends Reception to Marshall Neilan's Juvenile Star

WESLEY BARRY, the freckle faced star of "Dinty" and a featured player in other Marshall Neilan productions, injected a punch into the Hoover Drive in New Orleans on January 25th that has made certain that the Louisiana district in the Motion Picture Theatre Division is certain of going over the top. The Saenger Amusement Company, who made arrangements with Mr. Neilan for the visit of the diminutive star to the southern city, had made arrangements for his reception and entertainment that resulted in the entire city assuming a holiday appearance and spirit for the four special days of the drive, according to a statement from the Associated First National Pictures.

Twenty-five thousand school kiddies from the surrounding country were brought into New Orleans to be a part of the reception committee to the young star. Outside of the reception on the first day there was nothing planned in connection with the drive by beginning on the 26th, the theatre men of the southern metropolis went into the matter in earnest, and Mr. Neilan's juvenile was the attraction upon which the whole drive hinged.

Mrs. Barry accompanied her son on the trip which started from Los Angeles on January 23rd. The start was made a feature in the Los Angeles Hoover drive by the fact that Mayor Snyder of the California city sent a message of congratulations and wishes for the greatest success of the drive in New Orleans to Mayor McShane of the latter city via young Barry. The message was given to the young star, amid appropriate ceremonies on the lot at Neilan studios and the director carried the star on the first log of his journey in a "pony" blimp which has become practically a part of the studio equipment.

Various civic associations of New Orleans have planned special events to make the visit of the youthful star to the city a memorable one. The racing association has appointed one of the days of the visit to be known as Marshall Neilan Day and the main event on the card is the Wesley Barry handicap.

Mrs. Perry Is Author of Talmadge Story

Joseph M. Schenck recently purchased a story for Norma Talmadge entitled "A Modern Diana," which was signed by the nom de plume of Carol Stone. There has been considerable curiosity as to the identity of Carol Stone, and it now turns out that she is none other than Stella C. S. Perry, author of "Palmetto," one of the most popular of the 1920 novels published by Frederick T. Stokes.

"Back to the Farm" to Film "Home Stuff"

Viola Dana has gone "back to the farm." For the next month she will spend all her time at the picturesque old Magnolia farm near Whittier, California — the Quaker city of the West—working on "Home Stuff," her newest Metro starring picture, written especially for her by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston. The production is under direction of Albert J. Kelley.

Unique Appeal in "Snob"

Ma's Objection to Pa's Smoking, Basis of Humorous Comic Drama

Wanda Hawley, starring in "The Snob," a Realart picture

"A PICTURE that will win the sympathy and approval of every married smoker who sees it"—such, according to Director Sam Wood, is the appeal of "The Snob," Wanda Hawley's latest Realart production.

The story introduces Edwin Stevens, once a sheepherder, now an accidental oil millionaire, who has married a woman who insists that his use of the "makins" is a distinct sign of social degeneracy. All through the picture the nagged husband is seen surreptitiously fingering the muslin sack and papers—only to hide them at his wife's approach.

In the end, however, he assumes the family reins, sees that his daughter, the reformed snob, is safely married, and defies his better half by defiantly rolling a cigarette as the play's climax.

"And why not?" asks Sam Wood, who directed the picture. "I'll leave it to any married man if smoking isn't the bone of most family contentions. Get the upper hand there and 99 44-100 percent of your troubles are over. Edwin Stevens will have the sympathy and congratulations of every married smoker in the audiences which see this new Hawley production."

The ever-present cigarette is not the only interesting feature in this comedy drama, presented by Realart, take it from those who have seen it. A capable cast interprets this story of snobbery and college life. William Lawrence and Walter Hiers are convincing collegians while Edwin Stevens and Sylvia Ashton appear as the father and mother of the snob. Jula Faye is also in the cast.

To Produce "Peace and Quiet" on Border

In preparation for the forthcoming Lytell-Karger production, "Peace and Quiet," which will constitute the second Bert Lytell picture for Metro under Maxwell Karger's direction, Mr. Karger, Mr. Lytell and Arthur Zellner left New York on last Monday for Atlantic City, where they will spend a week perfecting the details of the next Bert Lytell vehicle to follow "A Message from Mars."

Following the conference at Atlantic City, Mr. Karger and Mr. Lytell, accompanied by the principal members of the cast as well as an entire staff of workmen and electricians, will entrain for the Mexican border, where most of the action of "Peace and Quiet" takes place.

WILLIAM DEMILLE, producer of the Paramount special, "Midsummer Madness," is convinced that the development of the motion picture from now on depends upon the development of a screen literature itself—stories conceived, executed and told from the screen.

"That is why," said Mr. DeMille in elaborating on the above premise, "men like Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Avery Hopwood, W. Somerset Maugham and Cosmo Hamilton, who aided me in adapting 'Midsummer Madness' from his book, 'His Friend and His Wife,' are coming into the work. They have seen that there is something worth studying—a new form of expression—a new art being born.

"Many of the people who write for the screen don't know anything about writing—they are not authors—they are 'hacks,' or authors who have allowed themselves to become 'hacks.'

"Most real authors don't know anything about the screen. When the average author comes in he comes rather as a condescension. But the real authors who are coming in today are willing to be convinced that there is something they don't know."

Clevelanders Flock to See Johnny Hines

Reports from Cleveland this week where Johnny Hines is making personal appearances in the Loew theatres and other principal houses are that he is drawing crowds that test the capacities of the theatres. The Torchy Comedies, released through Educational, have proven especially popular in the Cleveland territory where they have reached almost a hundred per cent. bookings, it is declared.

Following a week spent in that section, Hines will go to Cincinnati, where he will appear at the Lisbon and other principal theatres, devoting a portion of the week to apearing in Dayton, Akron, Hamilton and several other cities. The third week of his tour will be in the Pittsburgh territory and then he will return to New York to complete the tenth of the comedies made from the stories by Sewell Ford.

Airplane Thrills Seen in International

International News No. 6, just released by Universal, shows 'Jersey" Ringle, Locklear's successor as a sky-dare-devil, performing stunts in an aeroplane high over Chattanooga, Tenn.

The pictures were filmed by John A. Bockhurst. Bockhurst set up his tripod in a sister ship to the one Ringle used for his stunts, and filmed the remarkable series of "shots" from a distance which seems to have imperilled the occupants of the two machines at all times.

Madge Stuart and Eille Norwood are the featured players in "The Tavern Knight," a Stoll picture. Two scenes from it are shown above

Stoll Head Outlines Program

Announces Plans for Immediate Expansion of Firm

GEORGE KING, president of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, who returned a few days ago from a month's business trip to England, brought back with him impressions of the greatest optimism for the future of the motion-picture industry, both in this country and abroad. Mr. King gave some of the details of the corporation's immediate plans for expansion and development.

A few outstanding phases of this impressive program, Mr. King said, are:

1. The recent opening of the new Stoll studio at Cricklewood, England, by far the largest and best equipped place of its kind abroad.

2. The presence of large companies in Northern Italy, Southern France and Algiers, Africa, in addition to many companies in England, all now working on authentic locations in filming the Eminent Authors' Series.

3. Plans under way to establish a Stoll studio in this country and bring companies here to make pictures.

Mr. King said that the Stoll officials abroad were more than pleased with the enthusiastic reception accorded by American exhibitor, motion-picture patrons and critics, to the five Stoll films thus far released in the United States, in the one-a-week schedule of the company. The praise of the trade reviewers, and the general appreciation of the new faces among the stars, the natural acting and the real settings in England and on the Continent, he states, had encouraged the Stoll officials to attempt even greater things.

It is in this determination to bring picturesque colorful spots of the world really before the American public, as the settings for productions by world-renowned authors, that the Stoll companies are now scattered over two continents, he said.

Included in the stories which are being "shot" or on which work has been completed are "Four Feathers," by A. E. W. Mason; "The Amateur Gentleman," by Jeffrey Farnol; "Kipps," by H. G. Wells; "A Gentleman of France," by Stanley Weyman; "False Evidence," by E. Phillips Oppenheim, and "The Yellow Claw," by Sax Rohmer.

Among the other authors represented in the series to be released to the American public are: Alice and Claude Askew, Baroness Orczy, Marie Corelli, Ethel M. Dell, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Robert Hichens and E. Temple Thurston.

Two Ass'd Exhibitors' Issues

Pathe to Release José Feature and "The Devil" in Feb.

THE assignment of two productions from Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for release in February directs attention to the Pathe feature schedule for that month as the most noteworthy presented in some time. The pictures which Pathe will offer during this period are "The Devil," starring George Arliss in his successful stage role, and the Edward Jose special production, "What Women Will Do."

With its achievements at the pre-release presentation at the Strand theatre, New York, to establish it as a commercial and artistic success, and one assured of its proper place among the recent events of the screen, "The Devil" is to be offered for general release on February 6th.

The issue of "The Devil" early in February makes it apparent that screen precedent for 1921 will be set early in the year, and at a plane that is notably higher than in the past. While Broadway may not set the theatrical and motion picture standards for the rest of the country, it is a fact that the overwhelming success of "The Devil" there during the week of January 16th, is a reliable index of what may be expected of the new offering from Associated Exhibitors when it is shown generally, Pathe states.

In the endeavor to select a worthy mate for the Arliss vehicle on the Pathe feature card for the month, an excellent opportunity was presented in the mystery melodrama which Edward Jose is declared to have filmed on a lavish scale with an all-star cast that includes Anna Q. Nilsson, Earl Metcalfe, Allan Forrest, George Majeroni, Riley Hatch and Jane Jennings. The release date for this feature has been set for February 27th.

"What Women Will Do" is a melodramatic romance written by Charles A. Logue. Among the stars who have appeared in plays written by Mr. Logue are Ethel Barrymore, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Emily Stevens, Geraldine Farrar, Mae Murray, Gloria Swanson, Emmy Wehlen, Tom Moore and many other favorites of the screen.

In the filming of the Logue drama, Mr. Jose is said to have given of his best efforts as a producer and director. Evidence of the careful attention the director gave to all details of his work for Associated Exhibitors is revealed in the choice of a cast.

With a picture of the proved success of "The Devil" and another held in such high esteem as "What Women Will Do" to initiate their offerings for 1921, Associated Exhibitors are confident of setting a standard for the year which should go a long way toward inspiring the future efforts of that organization to the finest accomplishments.

"The First Born" at Strand

Booked for January 30, It Will Be Elaborately Staged by Plunkett

"THE FIRST BORN," starring Sessue Hayakawa, which is having its premier showing at the Strand theatre, New York City, during the week of January 30, is the first of a new series of super-special productions which Hayakawa is making for Robertson-Cole. Each is being given an investment of money, time and effort calculated to make it a maximum attraction. Those who have been privileged to preview "The First Born" say it rises fully to this standard.

The new Sessue Hayakawa picture will be put on by Joseph Plunkett, managing-director of the Strand theatre with an elaborate campaign of exploitation, so that its opening will be comparable to that of "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole super-special, which was shown recently at the same theatre.

All the rich Oriental atmosphere and the human appeal of "The First Born" will be utilized in the advertising and exploitation, so that its New York showing may not only commend it to the public but exemplify to exhibitors all over the country what can be done with the picture from the showman's angle, states Robertson-Cole.

The picture is adapted from the stage play of the same name which was written and acted by Francis Powers. The difficulties of depicting, in California, the scenes in the quaint fishing villages along the shores of the Hoang-Hio river in China, were surmounted through patience and perseverance, it is stated. The scenes reproducing San Francisco's Chinatown as it appeared before devastated by the historic earthquake, called for much research work and a big outlay of money, but the settings are declared to be perfect. Colin Campbell directed "The First Born."

Supporting Hayakawa are several well-known screen actors and actresses. Helen Jerome Eddy plays the woman lead opposite Hayakawa; Marie Pavis has an important role; Wilson Hummel is strong in a character portrayal.

Geo. Patullo to Write for Paramount

GEORGE PATULLO, noted short story writer and contributor of special articles to Saturday Evening Post, has signed a contract with Paramount to collaborate with Walter Woods in the writing of the scenario of a new feature comedy for Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle. The comedy will be an adaptation of "Gasoline Gus" and "Drycheck Charlie, two recent Patullo Saturday Evening Post stories.

Besides being one of the most successful of present-day short story writers, Mr. Patullo is famed for his war articles in the Post, including "A.W.O.L," "Horrors of Moonlight" and a news beat on the exploits of Sergeant York.

"Life" on Paramount List

Will Release William A. Brady's Screen Melodrama During July

ADOLPH ZUKOR announced last week the purchase by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of William A. Brady's recently completed spectacular screen melodrama, "Life," and that it would be a July Faramount release.

"Life" was directed by Travers Vale and is an adaptation of the famous melodrama of that name which scored a big success when produced several years ago in New York at the Manhattan Opera House. Acclaimed at that time as the biggest melodrama ever produced on the New York stage, "Life" enjoyed a run of more than six months there and was later seen on tour in the principal cities of the country. Written by Thompson Buchanan and Mr. Brady, the story of "Life" is one that lends itself admirably to the medium of the screen, declare Paramount officials. Its theme is one of contemporary life in New York —a thrilling tale of love, romance, crime and adventure.

To interpret "Life" on the screen Mr. Brady engaged a strong all-star cast. Leonard Cooksey, who plays the inquisitorial chief of detectives, recently came into his own on the stage through his performance opposite Mary Nash in that star's new play, "Thy Name Is Woman," at the Playhouse. Naldi, who in "Life" is said to prove a most fascinating screen siren, had a leading role in the cast of "Opportunity," the Owen Davis melodrama which Mr. Brady presented at the Forty-Eighth Street theatre. She will be remembered for her fine performance in support of John Barrymore in the Paramount screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Rod LaRocque, who plays a debonair and polished doer of dark deeds in "Life," returned to the stage this season in a prominent role in support of Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," which is now on tour after a successful engagement at the Playhouse. He has won a wide following in motion pictures and may now be seen in the current George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount, "Paying the Piper." Effingham Pinto, as "Dago Mike," plays the same role in "Life" that he created in the Brady melodrama at the Manhattan Opera House.

Press Book Is Now Ready

Robertson-Cole Prepares Elaborate Selling Aid on "First Born"

The press book which Robertson-Cole has just published on this release is one of the most beautiful of its series. "The First Born" is the initial Hayakawa picture in a series of four which are to be of greater artistic, dramatic and emotional power than any previously made.

The inside of the front cover is devoted to the posters which are based on striking scenes from the production. It tells a story of China and the Chinatown of old San Francisco, before the earthquake.

In a selling talk A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, calls attention to the fact that until this time Sessue Hayakawa has been making consistent pictures at the rate of one every six weeks. Now he enters upon a regime of only four pictures a year, all of which will be bigger and better than any made in the past, and will be completely up to the Robertson-Cole super-special standard.

First Nat'l Releases at Carnegie Hall

"THE KID," Charlie Chaplin's six-reel special and "Passion," starring Pola Negri, two of the Big Five Group of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., attracted an audience which crowded Carnegie Hall on January 21, to a special showing of the two features for the benefit of a working fund for the Children's Department of the National Board of Review on Motion Pictures. S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Capital theatre, staged the presentation of the two productions.

"Passion" was presented in the same manner as at the Capitol theatre. Erno Rappe led an orchestra of twenty-seven pieces through the musical score which was prepared especially for the presentation at the Capitol. Following "Passion," Michio Ito, the noted Japanese dancer, gave a series of interpretations of modern continental music. The pipe organ in the hall furnished the musical accompaniment for "The Kid" under the guidance of the organist at the Capitol theatre.

Seattle Exhibitors Aid Hoover Fund Drive

Seattle exhibitors combined upon a special effort to make the driving for funds to aid the starving children of Europe a big success in their territory and gave a special midnight performance for the benefit of the fund. Jensen and Von Herberg, holders of the Associated First National franchise for the territory, and owners of a chain of theatres, donated their houses, orchestras and other services for the success of the venture. One of the features of the midnight performance was the auctioning of autographed footwear of the Talmadge sisters.

Four Pioneer Releases in Feb.

Special Productions to Make Red Letter Month for Company

FEBRUARY is indicated as a red letter month on the calendar of the Pioneer Film Corporation, when, it is announced, four special productions are scheduled for general release through all Pioneer exchanges.

This announcement carries particular significance for exhibitors because these four releases are considered by A. E. Lefcourt, president of Pioneer, and his associates, and have been acclaimed by trade and newspaper critics as productions of merit and box-office value.

"We feel keen gratification at being able to offer to discriminating exhibitors such an unusually strong program as we have scheduled for release in February," said Mr. Lefcourt. "Here are four attractions of undeniable atistic fineness and popular appeal, such productions as contain every possible virtue that insures success at the box-office and sends patrons away satisfied. This is in direct accord with our avowed policy, born of a sincere desire to distribute only such pictures as in our experience will make money for exhibitors."

One of the February releases, though possibly not the first, is "The Barbarian," starring Monroe Salisbury, supported by Jane Novak. The story is an adaptation by E. P. Heath from Theodore Seixus Solomens' novel. Any Pioneer exchange, according to Mr. Lefcourt, will be only too glad to screen this picture for any exhibitor.

The Nick Carter series of fifteen two-reel features is another release. These features are adapted from the world-famed detective stories, which, according to the publisher's statement, have been read by over 30,000,000 people. Tom Carrigan is the featured player. A splendid cast supports him. These are the stories which were recently credited by Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart and Arthur B. Reeve, author of the Craig Kennedy stories, as having supplied the inspiration through which these two famous authors have written some of their best mystery tales. Heavy advance bookings are already reported from every Pioneer exchange as exhibitors are finding this series a particularly desirable subject. A full line of striking lithographs and lobby displays have been gotten up for this series.

After a long absence from the screen, Violet Mersereau returns in Robert Ames Bennett's famous story, "Finders Keepers." Miss Mersereau co-stars with Edmund Cobb, supported by a fine cast of players. Otis B. Thayer is responsible for the direction.

Henrik Ibsen's famous masterpiece, "A Man There Was," is the fourth production scheduled for February release by Pioneer. Victor Seastrom is the star. For the present the Pioneer Film Corporation will confine the release of this picture to New York only. B. S. Moss, head of the great theatrical circuit bearing his name, booked this feature for two weeks' run recently at his Broadway theatre.

Following closely on the heels of the February program will come "the aristocrat of serials," in fifteen episodes, "The Mystery Mind." Arthur B. Reeve, who wrote "The Exploits of Elaine," wrote the story, together with John W. Grey. Heading the cast is J. Robert Pauline, who is supported by Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer and Peggy Shanor.

General Manager and Vice-President M. H. Hoffman is enthusiastic about Pioneer's future. He has just returned from a tour of inspection of several of Pioneer's exchanges, bringing back with him the most satisfactory reports.

"February looms up as a banner month for us," said Mr. Hoffman. "With such a formidable array of productions to offer exhibitors there is every reason to believe that we shall set new sales records. Our exchange managers and their sales forces are keyed up to a high pitch of enthusiasm. They feel as the home office feels, that we have the goods, and when an organization has that spirit there is nothing to stop it from achieving worth while results."

Four Goldwyn's Soon Ready

Popular Stars in Pictures to Be Released in Near Future

"DON'T NEGLECT YOUR WIFE," Gertrude Atherton's first original screen story, is one of the four Goldwyn pictures that will soon be released. It is a dramatic story of domestic relations in early San Francisco days which reaches its conclusion in New York's notorious "Five Points" section. It was directed by Wallace Worsley, the man who wielded the megaphone on "The Penalty." In the notable cast are Mabel Julienne Scott, Lewis S. Stone, Charles Clary, R. D. MacLean, Arthur Hoyt, Kate Lester, Darrell Foss and others.

Will Rogers' new stellar vehicle, "Boys Will Be Boys," based upon the dramatization of Irvin S. Cobb's short story of the same title, is another one. It is said to give the cowboy star an opportunity for the richest comedy acting that has fallen to his lot since becoming a motion picture actor. Clarence Badger directed. Supporting the star are Irene Rich, Nick Cogley, Sidney Ainsworth, Ed Kimball, father of Clara Kimball Young, who plays the part of Judge Priest, Cobb's most famous character, Mae Hopkins, C. E. Mason and Cordelia Callahan.

Tom Moore's new Goldwyn starring vehicle is a picturization of the novel, "Mr. Barnes of New York," written by Archibald Clavering Gunter. The novel had a resounding success which was duplicated in dramatic form. The star, as Mr. Barnes, has a role different from any in which he has hitherto been seen, and the picture itself is quite different. As a genial New Yorker, Moore finds himself catapulted into a Corsican vendetta which forever threatens to turn into tragedy, but the Tom Moore nonchalant humor averts the tears with a gale of laughter. The photoplay was directed by Victor Schertzinger, who was responsible for the screen version of "The Concert." In the cast with Mr. Moore are beautiful Naomi Childers, Anna Lehr. Sidney Ainsworth, Otto Hoffman and others.

Betty Compson, who took a foremost rank among screen stars and motion picture producers with "Prisoners of Love," recently released through Goldwyn, proving her wisdom in starring herself in her own productions after her tremendous success in "The Miracle Man," is also on the list. Her second starring production, to be released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is a film version of Perley Poore Sheehan's popular story of "Reincarnation." The photography, titling and editing of the picture have been completed by Miss Compson, but she has not yet selected its screen title. Chief in Miss Compson's support in her second starring venture are Emory Johnson, one of her two leading men in "Prisoners of Love," and Macey Harlan, one of the leading interpreters of villains' roles on the speaking stage. Arthur Rosson directed under Miss Compson's personal supervision.

FOR NEWSPAPER USE—FOR THEATER PROGRAM

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

JOHN EMERSON, president of the Actors' Equity Association, producer, author, playwhight, actor and Mason, has also become a member of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and was initiated at the last meeting of the New York Lodge. At the same time Charles Maigne, who directs famous pictures for Famous Players, and Joseph Richmond, particularly well known on the Pacific coast, were made full-fledged members. It was a busy night for the recently inaugurated Director, Charles Miller, who was elected to the office of chief executive at the previous meeting. He established a rather lively precedent for himself in holding the large attendance until a late hour. The new members, it was said, survived the "hazing" with splendid stage presence.

Mused William D. Taylor, Paramount producer-director, "I wonder if the reformers who want to inflict Sunday blue laws on America ever heard of Liberty Bonds?" Then, in the characteristic Taylor way, switched quickly to another subject by saying: "More than one bachelor drew a sigh of relief when midnight closed on the last day of Leap Year. What chance had the poor male-man? Half our literature shows how tragic marriage sometimes is, for instance my own production, 'The Furnace,' and the other half, exemplified in 'Sacred and Profane Love,' shows the tragedy of not being married. It's a hard life!"

Tom Terriss is busily engaged cutting "The Heart of Maryland," which, he stated, he found impossible to "break." Seriously speaking, the director of the Tom Terriss productions, "Dead Men Tell No Tales" and many other celebrated Vitagraph offerings, states that he feels safe in promising a production which will live up to all that is expected of the story, made famous by Mrs. Leslie Carter upon the legitimate stage.

Herbert Brenon, recently signed to direct pictures starring Norma Talmadge, is still engaged upon the completion of "The Passion Flower." This promises to be among the "knock outs" of the year, and with Mr. Brenon at the megaphone, Miss Talmadge as star and a cast including some names of note, why not?

Paul Gordon, who will forsake the legitimate stage for the screen

Opposite Miss Talmadge there will be Courtney Foote, distinguished stage and screen actor who recently finished playing the lead in "The Bronze Bell," a forthcoming Thomas H. Ince production. In this, Mr. Foote played a dual role, now an Indian Prince, and then an adventurous American. Mr. Foote's career includes many Paramount-Artcraft releases, which have earned him an enviable reputation as a successful screen actor.

Between the star and Mr. Foote, who, but Eulalie Jensen, in the role of Raimunda, the mother, and deceived wife, originated by Nance O'Neil. In this part Miss O'Neil reached the zenith of her splendid ability. It was a rather risky thing, therefore, to find the woman to portray the part satisfactorily upon the screen. But Miss Jensen not only filled the bill, but is said to have surpassed herself in the role. Just previous to the engagement, Miss Jensen had completed one of the leading roles in "The Shadow of the Dome," under the direction of David G. Fischer, and looking back over her career, it is readily understood why she was selected for Miss O'Neil's part, in preference to the many others under consideration.

Then, along comes Bobby Agnew, who has already completed work with Miss Talmadge in "The Passion Flower," and has been reengaged for the leading juvenile role in "The Sign on the Door." The care in Director Herbert Brenon's selection of the cast will no doubt reflect his painstaking efforts to make "The Passion Flower" live up to all that is expected of it.

H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and "Vive la France," wrote the story of "The Great Redeemer." The screen adaptation was made by Jack Gilbert and Jules Furthman. Clarence Brown directed, under the personal supervision of Maurice Tourneur.

Edward H. Griffith, one of our young but clever and capable directors, has recently completed two First National productions, "Scrambled Wives," starring Margurette Clarke, and "If Women Only Knew." Mr. Griffith is also responsible for such successes as "The Vice of Fools" with Alice Joyce and Robert Gordon, "Bob's Candidate" and "The Garter Girl," with Corinne Griffith (Vitagraph).

Under the direction of Hugh Ford, a complete short subject was made in less than one day, following a scenario from the pen of Charles E. Whittaker, which was written and ready for delivery after receiving the assignment in the evening, to have said script ready the next morning. It is said to be the shortest scenario ever written, with seven scenes, yet it tells its story with straight conviction and leaves nothing wanting. The picture in question is the one that is being shown broadcast, appealing for help for the starving children of Europe, and was written at the request of the Motion Picture Sub-Committee of the European Relief Fund. Both director and author are to be congratulated upon this original bit of straight from the shoulder screen talk, which is entitled "The Invisible Guest."

ABOUT PLAYERS

JAMES HARRISON, after having crossed the path 'twixt New York and Hollywood fourteen times, states that he thinks New York is a pretty good place to be, even in winter, and that if the going keeps going as good as it has been, he expects to remain east. Mr. Harrison was cast for the juvenile lead in the Chet Withey production starring Constance Talmadge, made under the title of "The Man from Toronto," but which will be known upon release as "Lessons in Love." And right upon that, he was retained for Miss Talmadge's next picture, "Wedding Bells," which makes four pictures for the popular young Harrison, under the preferred direction of Chet Withey.

William B. Davidson, well-known leading man, has recently completed the lead opposite Elaine Hammerstein in "The Girl from Nowhere," in "Poor, Dear Margaret Kirby" and in the all-star production, "You Can't Kill Love." Mr. Davidson, whose habit of observing closely the ways and means of anything with which he may come in contact, has been paying especial attention to the art of direction.

Karla Schram, whose work in "The Son of Tarzan," has been the subject of many exclamations, and who also appeared in the previous "Tarzan" picture (Goldwyn), "The Revenge of Tarzan," will next be seen, if the rumor is founded, as the star of a photoplay adapted from a story by James Oliver Curwood. In the eighteenth episode serial, "The Son of Tarzan," Miss Schram wears forty-nine different costumes. It is said that she is possessed of a natural, artistic taste in the selection of becoming apparel, and, besides being an accomplished musician, speaks three different languages. Miss Schram, it may be recalled, was seen in the heralded D. W. Griffith production of "Broken Blossoms," and previous to that, appeared upon the legitimate stage.

Helen Ferguson has been engaged to play leading opposite Harry Carey in "Everybody for Himself." In this production Miss Ferguson has again been given an opportunity to portray a breezy out-of-door girl, which she did so well in "The Challenge of the Law," "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" and "Just Pals," her last release featuring Buck Jones.

Camera-Man Acclaims Arliss

In the recently marketed photoplay "The Devil," the cinematographer, Harry Fischbeck enjoyed what he states was among the most satisfactory engagements of his career. He attributes this in the main, to the unique distinction of being the first camera-man to photograph George Arliss.

"It was the first time," said Mr. Fischbeck, in the annals of my camera work that I have photographed a star who was being photographed, also, for the first time. It was a new and interesting experience. Many stars and players dread a "new camera man" and sometimes one feels, despite the fact that without a trained man at the camera, there would be no picture, that he is particular importance. In the case of Mr. Arliss, however, the camera-man was paid flattering cognizance. The star's first picture experience, yet he realized, fully the importance of good photography and acted, with thoughtful consideration, upon every suggestion. He made a camera-man feel like a most important personage, with the result that said camera-man made every effort to photograph the great artist to extreme advantage. Some of the photography in "The Devil" is the most difficult ever encountered in my experience—for instance photographing the interior of a four-walls-and-ceiling "set," where many important scenes were shot. Finding a way to follow out art director Charles Seessel's masterpiece constructions, giving him the desired effects, and with added care in photographing the screen newcomer, increased by daily encounter, my knowledge of motion picture photography.

"Speaking of stars, however, who work with the camera man (always to his or her own advantage) I must admit "The Devil" went 50-50 all the way.

Peekskill News Carries Stars' Greetings

The Peekskill Evening News of Peekskill, New York, appreciating the hold that motion picture stars have on the hearts of the public, recently devoted two-thirds of a page to holiday greetings from Metro's picture stars. The paper in addition to publishing the prose and poetry greetings of the actors of the silent drama used cuts of the stars with each of the greetings.

In the Metro gallery which the paper displayed were greetings and pictures of Nazimova, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, May Allison, Viola Dana, Ina Claire, Jewel Carmen, Buster Keaton and Frank Elliott.

Reverses—And Revier

"WHEN a director of motion pictures has been engaged in the direction of feature photoplays, often do we hear him remark—'I would not want to go back to making serials.' In my own opinion, it does not mean 'going back' necessarily, and in my own case, decidedly the reverse."

The foregoing was voiced by Harry J. Revier, director, whose serial "The Son of Tarzan," is surpassing, in success, any of Mr. Revier's previous efforts. The goal of the director is usually one which he does not believe is reached until he has been engaged and has successfully directed a "feature." Thereafter, as Mr. Revier points out, said director speaks of "going back" to making serials.

A reverse situation of interest hinges hereupon. Not until "The Son of Tarzan" has Harry Revier ever made a serial. And to him, rather than looking upon making the lengthy episodical film, as a retreat, it is considered by the director of many features as a marked advance, for, as he declared, it required many times the amount of patience, regard for detail and personal effort than is usually experienced in the making of a six reel subject. Therefore, when he accepted "The Son of Tarzan," knowing well it was a colossal task, it was with a spirt of determination of proving a contention he had long held fast, that in making a serial, if it were made with the same care, precision and pains bestowed upon shorter film forms of entertainment, the serial would take its right and proper place. It was with characteristic tenacity, therefore, that Mr. Revier set forth to "make good to himself" and win the desired position for a serial. He set himself the task of making a serial which would be booked in first run houses, where serials had never before been a part of the attraction, and not only that, he expected to make one that would demand, by its superiority, exploitation, by the exhibitor over the "feature attraction." Then, said some one, "It can't be done," which only determined the director, the more. He would reverse the statement and prove it. And it has come to pass. "The Son of Tarzan" has actually been and is being exploited in many cities over and above the "feature," and it is being and has been run in houses where never before have episodes of a serial figured in the exhibitor's offering.

The first three episodes of Mr. Revier's first serial, created an intense demand for the following ones. The insistent demand of exhibitors echoed through the channels of distribution, ultimately floating along to the director and urging "speed," at any cost. Calmly, the director, set about reversing things, again. He had his mind made up that he would not turn out any one of the many episodes with less care than given the first three, if, because of "speed," an episode was made to suffer in quality. Each must hold its own with the previous, and if possible, each was to be a bit stronger. The serial, finally complete, awarded him the satisfaction of knowing that the final episodes were as strong, throughout, as the proverbial first three.

Harry Revier, in addition to his ability to direct, is perhaps one of the most expert camera-men in the motion picture industry. Many times, in exciting and tense moments he has been known to take the camera himself, and withal, being also, one of the most expert "cutters," Mr. Revier maintains that "The Son of Tarzan" has proven that a director does not "go back," to making serials, but sometimes scores over and above any previous work he may have done upon the delivery of a feature, of only five, six or at best, seven reels.

Serious Play by Comic Scribe

FROM writing comedies to adapting a serious play is the step Elmer Harris takes as scenarist of "All Souls Eve," Mary Miles Minter's latest screen vehicle for Realart. The original play by Anne Crawford Flexner.

Mr. Harris' name has been identified with such comedies as "So Long Letty" and "Canary Cottage" for the speaking stage; the Realart comedies "Miss Hobbs" and "Ducks and Drakes," and the fact that he is the adaptor of this play of a serious trend is proof of his versatility.

"I think the fact that I once wrote seriously has helped me greatly in constructing comedies," said Mr. Harris. For the most successful comedy-writers are those who know the serious side of life, who know just how far they can go in "kidding" a person or situation without causing offense. Some

Robert G. Vignola Company Returns

After spending three weeks shooting exterior scenes for the next Robert G. Vignola Cosmopolitan-Paramount special, "Redemption Cove," the director and his company have returned to New York.

"There is little of interest to say regarding the trip," said Mr. Vignola. "Nothing out of the ordinary everyday happenings occurred. We met no titled or important personages, we weren't lost at sea in a storm, we weren't wrecked on a deserted shore, nor attacked by pirates and robbed of our jewels which we didn't take along. In fact, it was a quiet, uneventful trip. Mostly work. We did get some gratifying results."

"Was there no truth in the report that you and your company were almost killed or seriously injured when a cliff collapsed, as circulated?" Mr. Vignola was questioned.

"Oh, well, what's an unexpected ducking or two among friends? The weather was so hot that all of us except Mr. Lincoln and Miss Owen worked in our bathing suits, and a dip more or less didn't matter."

Mr. Vignola, whose "World and His Wife" attracted nation-wide attention, and who is among the best directors in the industry, has been a director under Cosmopolitan banner more than a year, and has turned out the kind of work expected of him, throughout.

of the greatest comedians have been men of extreme seriousness. Moliere, it will be recalled, had a life far removed from the delightful frivolity of his plays.

"Doing All Souls Eve," therefore, was just a return to a previous metier. And it was a much enjoyed change. The background for the story is an old Irish legend that on "All Souls Eve" the spirits of the departed return to aid and comfort their loved ones.

The filming of the production required more than two months, the double and triple and even quadruple exposures calling for particular skill, patience and a big financial outlay. Miss Minter plays three distinct parts in the picture—a mother, the spirit of the mother and a little Irish nursemaid. The various character delineations are said to offer her the best acting opportunities she has ever had.

Jack Holt appears opposite Miss Minter as Roger Heath. Other well-known players in the cast are Carmen Phillips, Mickey Moore, Clarence Geldart, Fannie Midgely and Lottie Williams.

About the Players

During the current month once again William H. Tooker, who has earned his reputation as among the screen's best character leading men, will be seen in two hopeful pictures, one, "World's Apart," starring Eugene O'Brien, and another Selznick production.

Although his roles have been most varied during his notable career on the stage and screen, Mr. Tooker frankly admits that his part in the forthcoming production differs from any in which he has ever appeared, and that he is keenly interested in the reception his characterization will receive from picture play goers, who know him best in benign and kindly roles. More actors like William H. Tooker would add a generous bit to the bigger, better pictures movement.

Pauline Starke, whose screen career has made rapid advancement under such direction as Maurice Tourneur and Allan Dwan, is upon her first engagement in the East, playing an important role in "Salvation Nell," a Whitman Bennett production, under the direction of Kenneth Webb.

Two huge Alaskan "huskies" will face the camera for the first time in the Metro special production of "The Woman Who Went Away," in which Alice Lake is starring. The dogs recently have been brought from Nome to Hollywood by Alexander Hall, a globe trotter, and for a number of years a prospector in the Far North. Mr. Hall was a Y. M. C. A. worker in Siberia during the war. The two animals will act as leaders for the dog team, which has been secured for many scenes of this picture.

Carlyle Blackwell is said to be negotiating for a reconciliation, whereby he will return to his old friend, the screen.

Paul Gordon, now playing the starring role in William A. Brady's production of Jules Eckert Goodman's melodrama, "The Man Who Came Back," will enter the silent drama for the first time following the completion of his engagement, having had several offers from well known motion picture producing concerns.

Mr. Gordon graduated from Yale University. It was while he was playing with the Yale Dramatic Club that Daniel Frohman saw one of his performances and advised him to "take to the stage." Accordingly Mr. Gordon, following his graduation, went to Paris where he studied under some of the most noted actors of France, and later was awarded an engagement at the Theatre Francais. Returned to America, he was given a part in "Moloch," later cast for a part in "The Man Who Came Back" and Mr. Brady thereafter starred him in the company on the Eastern tour.

Charles Ray Productions recently celebrated the first birthday, the popular star declaring that it hardly seemed a year since he hung out his own shingle and began making film stories after his own heart. Charlie will soon be seen in a heart-warming adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "The Old Swimmin' Hole." He promises the biggest surprise of his career in the method in which this picture is to be presented on the screen. And not only does he promise to give his audiences a new treat, but he actually expects to thrill the critics into making some high-brow observations on screen technique. Fancy thrilling a motion picture reviewer! It's a large order, Mr. Ray.

In "The Price of Possession," starring Ethel Clayton, shortly to be released (Paramount) Rockliffe Fellows, one of the screen's most successful leading men, will again be seen opposite the delightful star. This production offers Fellows the golden opportunity of exploiting his versatility. First, as the scoundrelly husband, then as the lover, Fellows proves his ability to portray two distinctly different kinds of men in a most artistic manner.

May Allison has discarded fashionable gowns, silk stockings and pretty shoes for a short time, and is now wearing a fur coat, woolen stockings and heavy shoes while working in "Big Game," her new starring picture, which Dallas M. Fitzgerald is directing.

Zeffie Tillbury has been cast for an important character role. Miss Tillbury also played with Miss Allison in "The Marriage of William Ashe," the blonde star's next forthcoming Metro release. Sidney D'Albrook has been cast for the part of the French guide. He also played in the Metro production of "The Mutiny of the Elsinor," which was recently released.

Title Writer Delivers Scenario

Known to the entire motion picture industry as a writer of general "titles," Katherine Hilliker prepared a welcome for her first screen story. Realart Pictures Corporation has made the purchase of Mrs. Hilliker's compilation, which has been marketed in the name of "He Took in Washing." It will serve as the next starring vehicle for Constance Binney. In addition to writing the "script," Mrs. Hilliker will also be responsible for the titles.

Perhaps better known for her comedy vein, Mrs. Hilliker, it will be interesting to learn, is due credit for the illuminating titles that contributed so largely to the sensational success of "Passion," and there have been one or two other semi-seriousness touched with the Hilliker pen. She earned her fame, at first, by the entertaining quality added to the Chester scenics, into which she injected a rare humor. "Titled by Katherine Hilliker" has become a regularly appearing feature—a forerunner guarantee to an audience that at least the titles will be good.

There is a deal of credit due one of the fair sex who holds her own, and gradually builds her reputation for delivering commendable work, such as in the case of Mrs. Hilliker.

Special Service on

Priscilla Dean in "Outside the Law"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the picture and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

"OUTSIDE THE LAW" is a crook melodrama written and directed by Tod Browning. The story concerns principally a double fight, that ranges from mental to physical, to obtain possession of stolen jewelry. A master crook attempting to get the property from two other crooks, and the police to recover the jewels and arrest the criminals. It is a story of action and incident, of life in the underworld with its locale in San Francisco's Chinatown, of fist and gun fights, of intrigue and counterplots. Back of the actual drama is a theme that is to be summed up in "and a little child shall lead them." The ending is happy. The development of the plot is logical. The incident provided in the individual scenes is interesting and at times extremely thrilling. The picture has suspense, a good love interest, a fine cast and has been carefully produced. It compares favorably with the best melodramatic pictures of all time and resembles somewhat both in its style of construction and the characters that are presented in it, "Hell Morgan's Girl," a well remembered picture of some five years ago.

"Outside the Law" presents opportunities for exploitation that are many and varied. From the title to the type of story, and from the cast to the theme, there is something that can be written and done that will make its appeal to the public. The press book which the producer is putting out on the picture contains many original ideas in this connection, all of which can be recommended.

This service section is written after seeing the picture and viewing it as if the writer was again an exhibitor who had purchased the feature and screened it before beginning his exploitation campaign. The campaign outlined is a personal view and the suggestions made are intended to be of service to the average exhibitor who will play this picture. It begins with the belief that "Outside the Law" is so good a feature with so much audience appeal that it should be billed as a production in extravagant ways and with extreme care taken that no single bit of exploitation should be attempted that would tend to cheapen the public's opinion of the production before they come into the theatre. In other words, "jazz exploitation," and "ballyhoo" stunts are out of place with the feature. We would not recommend even lobby displays and certainly nothing like street parades, contests, or any publicity that would have a tendency to invite more attention to the exploitation than to the picture.

Our campaign for "Outside the Law" would be confined very largely to the newspapers. It would begin well in advance of the actual playing dates with the announcement of the forthcoming attraction, in words that expressed enthusiasm and elation at the booking. It would carry the idea that the picture was to be considered something well out of the ordinary as a production and would at first only mention the fact that Miss Dean and the other players, all of whom are known to the fans, were appearing in it, the idea being to impress the public that the picture was bigger than star or cast.

In these announcements we would give some idea of the theme (innate love of the female for a child) mention the Chinaman role as a disciple of Confucius, infer that the production has cost a lot of money, which it did, and perhaps compare it with such pictures as "Hell Morgan's Girl," "The Miracle Man" and other features of melodramatic tinge that have proven popular in your city.

With the fan fully informed as to the attraction, we would begin selling the story and the four principal characters of the picture, "Silky Moll Madden, Black Mike Silva, Dapper Bill Ballard, and "Joe Wang." We would hammer home the fact that these are unusual characters. We would quote from the titles or from printed sayings of Confucius and link "Joe Wang" up to the famous Chinese historical character. "Silky Moll" we would describe in captions under a cut of Miss Dean, using sentences that would fire the imagination of the reader. We would try to do what Director Browning has accomplished in the first part of the picture, establish sympathy for "Silky Moll" and make the fact that she is a crook excusable. With "Dapper Bill" much the same line of procedure is to be recommended. We would tell how "Dapper Bill," a crook born and bred, was converted to a desire to go straight through his love for a girl, not a pure innocent child grown to womanhood under the protecting roof of respectable parents, but a criminal because of environment and who finally awakened the dormant natural instincts of womanhood in her, that led to their redemption.

"Black Mike Silva" we would paint in the blackest of colors. We would label him as a villian of deepest dye, making comparisons with his recent previous roles such as in "Nomads of the North," "The Penalty," etc. We would describe some of his pictorial crimes in detail.

For selling talk for our ads we would take the theme, the incidents in connection with the child role, and the fight in the last reel as a basis. Describe the fight so that the scene would be visualized by every reader, especially in mediums that will reach a majority of males. Likewise your advertising concerning the child and the theme should be directed toward feminine readers.

For illustrations we would select scene stills that show some of the action of the picture but which also retain the personal element. Some of the scenes shown in the accompanying cuts will be found suitable. The size and style of the display advertising recommended will depend on the amount of space usually purchased and the amount of extravagance in praise usually affected. If your personal endorsement has not been overworked this method can be effectively employed.

For exhibitors who do sometimes more than bid for business through the newspapers, the special showing stunt should prove effective. The police force is naturally the best bet on this picture. Arrange for a print for this special engagement some day before the regular dates, to be shown to an invited audience of police officials and officers, newspaper men, and such other important local personages as you figure would be apt to call the picture good or better than that. Free newspaper space and endorsement of the production by the various individuals in the audience is of course the purpose of the special showing.

For lobby decorations (not a display in the common accepted term) we would suggest the use of cut-outs of Miss Dean, Wheeler Oakman, Lon Chaney and Mr. Warren, with caption cards that would fit the various characters that these players portray. Especially effective would be quotations from Confucius in this connection.

"Outside the Law" is a picture that lends opportunity for an effective prologue and a picture where the proper sort of a prologue will be of value in putting the feature over.

We offer a suggestion in an adaptation of that part of the stage comedy, "The Yellow Jacket," that pertains to the role of "The Chorus" and his "Property Man," and also might extend to the use of the stage setting and orchestra of this play.

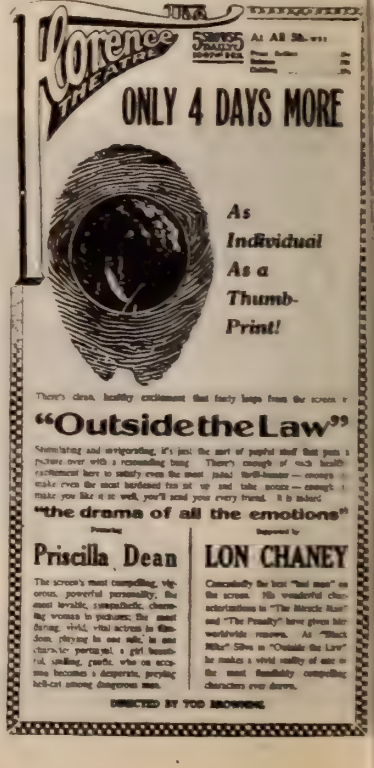
Before screening the main title of the picture send an actor made up as an educated Chinaman, costumed in Oriental attire, out to follow out the general plan of the role of "The Chorus" in the above mentioned play, that is, to introduce the characters of the play and to make some general observations concerning the plot, its theme, etc. He will be preceded by a stage Chinaman in ordinary "laundry chink" attire, with two huge brass cymbals. This will be in imitation of the "Property Man" of "The Yellow Jacket." With a bored expression the "property man" will walk up and down in front of the drapes banging the cymbals and as he ducks back on the stage he is to give the instruments one resounding crash. (See someone familiar with "The Yellow Jacket" is your stage director is not informed.) Your "The Chorus" makes his appearance immediately after the "property man's" exit. His manner should be suave in an Oriental way, conveying the idea that he considers himself superior to the audience. There are three different ideas that might be carried out for the "speech." The "Chorus" could introduce the principal characters, giving a short resume of each role in a way that would get the sympathy for "Silky Moll," "Dapper Bill," "Chang Lo," "Silent Madden," and create an opposite atmosphere for "Black Mike."

An elaboration of this plan would be to put up a special plea for "Chang Lo," reciting how this disciple of Confucius, who had always advocated that right would triumph over wrong, was finally driven to take the law, not only of his adopted country, but also of his God, into his own hands and kill "Black Mike."

"Chang Lo's" prayers to his God for forgiveness after the deed, with a description of the rite, could be described. This would probably add to an audience's understanding of how "Black Mike" is killed, the action and titles of the picture leaving the information somewhat in doubt.



The third angle suggested for copying "The Yellow Jacket" idea is to provide a stage setting similar to the one used in presenting "The Yellow Jacket," which in turn was a reproduction of the Chinese theatre in San Francisco, presenting the original composition used as incidental music on the stage by musicians made up as Chinamen, playing on the Chinese instruments, as was done in the play with an explanation by the "Chorus" as to what the set represents. It might be well also to give a little history of a Chinese theatre's customs. If this latter plan is followed out it will be necessary to obtain the original music, written for "The Yellow Jacket," by William Furman.

The Chinese musical instrumen would also have to be secured, a though they might be "faked," bo in sound and in form.

For those who are unfamili with the setting used for "The Ye low Jacket," same is describ briefly. The set is boxed with openings, either doors or windo at right or left. "OUTSIDE THE LAW"

A Variety of Aids to Exploit Production

OFFICIALS of the Exploitation Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company assert that "Outside the Law," the new big Priscilla Dean picture, is backed by more publicity and exploitation aids, in the way of posters, cards, novelties, slides, heralds, post cards, press material, scene and ad cuts, and cuts and instructions for special exploitation stunts, than any Universal picture ever released.

Especial attention was paid to an elaborate series of posters, including a set of teaser posters. By special arrangement with the Morgan Lithograph Company, of Cleveland, a special artist, installed in the Universal office, New York City, conferred with Mr. P. D. Cochrane, head of the Exploitation Department, and facilitated the selection of striking poster effects.

The result was two forceful twenty-four sheets, one for roof-top locations and one for side-walk locations, both in five colors; two six-sheets depicting powerful scenes in the picture; three three-sheets of great drawing power, and three one and a half-sheets besides a striking teaser one-sheet bearing the best photograph available of Priscilla Dean, with the teaser caption "Catch This Woman. She's 'Outside the Law.'"

This teaser line was planned for extensive use. The same photograph and catch lines were used in various ways—for window cards, for stickers, for teaser post-cards, and in a variety of newspaper ads.

A large series of twenty-four sheet teaser posters, in block letters, black and red, were also made for exhibitors who wish to duplicate the mysterious anti-Blue Law campaign put over by Universal in the New York and other territories. Taking advantage of the Blue Law propaganda, these posters, in three stands, first confront the public with admonitions such as: "Do You Dance On Sunday, You Are Outside the Law."

As in New York City, persons seeing these twenty-four sheets will likely connect them with Blue Law propaganda. After a week or so of speculation on the part of the public, the second stand posters can be put up. They read somewhat as follows:

"Do Not Be Misled By Malicious Propaganda—
You Are Not Outside the Law—
If You Dance on Sunday."

The third stand, to be used a week or so later, carries a twenty-four sheet announcement of the picture in the same block lettering. This stand can be followed by one of the colored twenty-four sheets, thus completing a smashing and effective poster campaign.

Equally as much care was devoted by Universal to the selection of lobby display photographs, according to representatives of that company. Both the black and white 8x10's and the colored 11x14's, contain a combination effect—a gripping scene from the photo-drama and a characteristic pose of Miss Dean. The Photo Repro Company of Long Island, which won the contract for the "Outside the Law" lobby display cards, was on the point of moving its plant when the order was received from Universal. All thought of moving was given up until the "Outside the Law" cards were completed, so determined was Mr. Alvin Mayer, head of the photographic reproduction company, that the cards should strike a new note in lobby display photography. All the lobby display, including gelatins, newspaper stills, etc., used by Universal on "Outside the Law," were furnished by the Photo Repro Company.

Other lobby display material includes three Kassel Oil paintings, 40 by 60 inches, one an enlarged portrait of Priscilla Dean, said to be the best likeness ever made of that star, and the other two, reproductions from striking scenes in the thrilling underworld picture. These full color photographic enlargements, made by the Kassel Studios, formed a conspicuous part of the lobby displays in the four New York theatres at Universal's quadruple premier for the new Dean picture. Together with the 22 by 28 hand-colored Photo Repro photos, the oil paintings are being made available to all exhibitors, through the local branches of the Universal sales force, it is assured by H. M. Berman, sales manager.

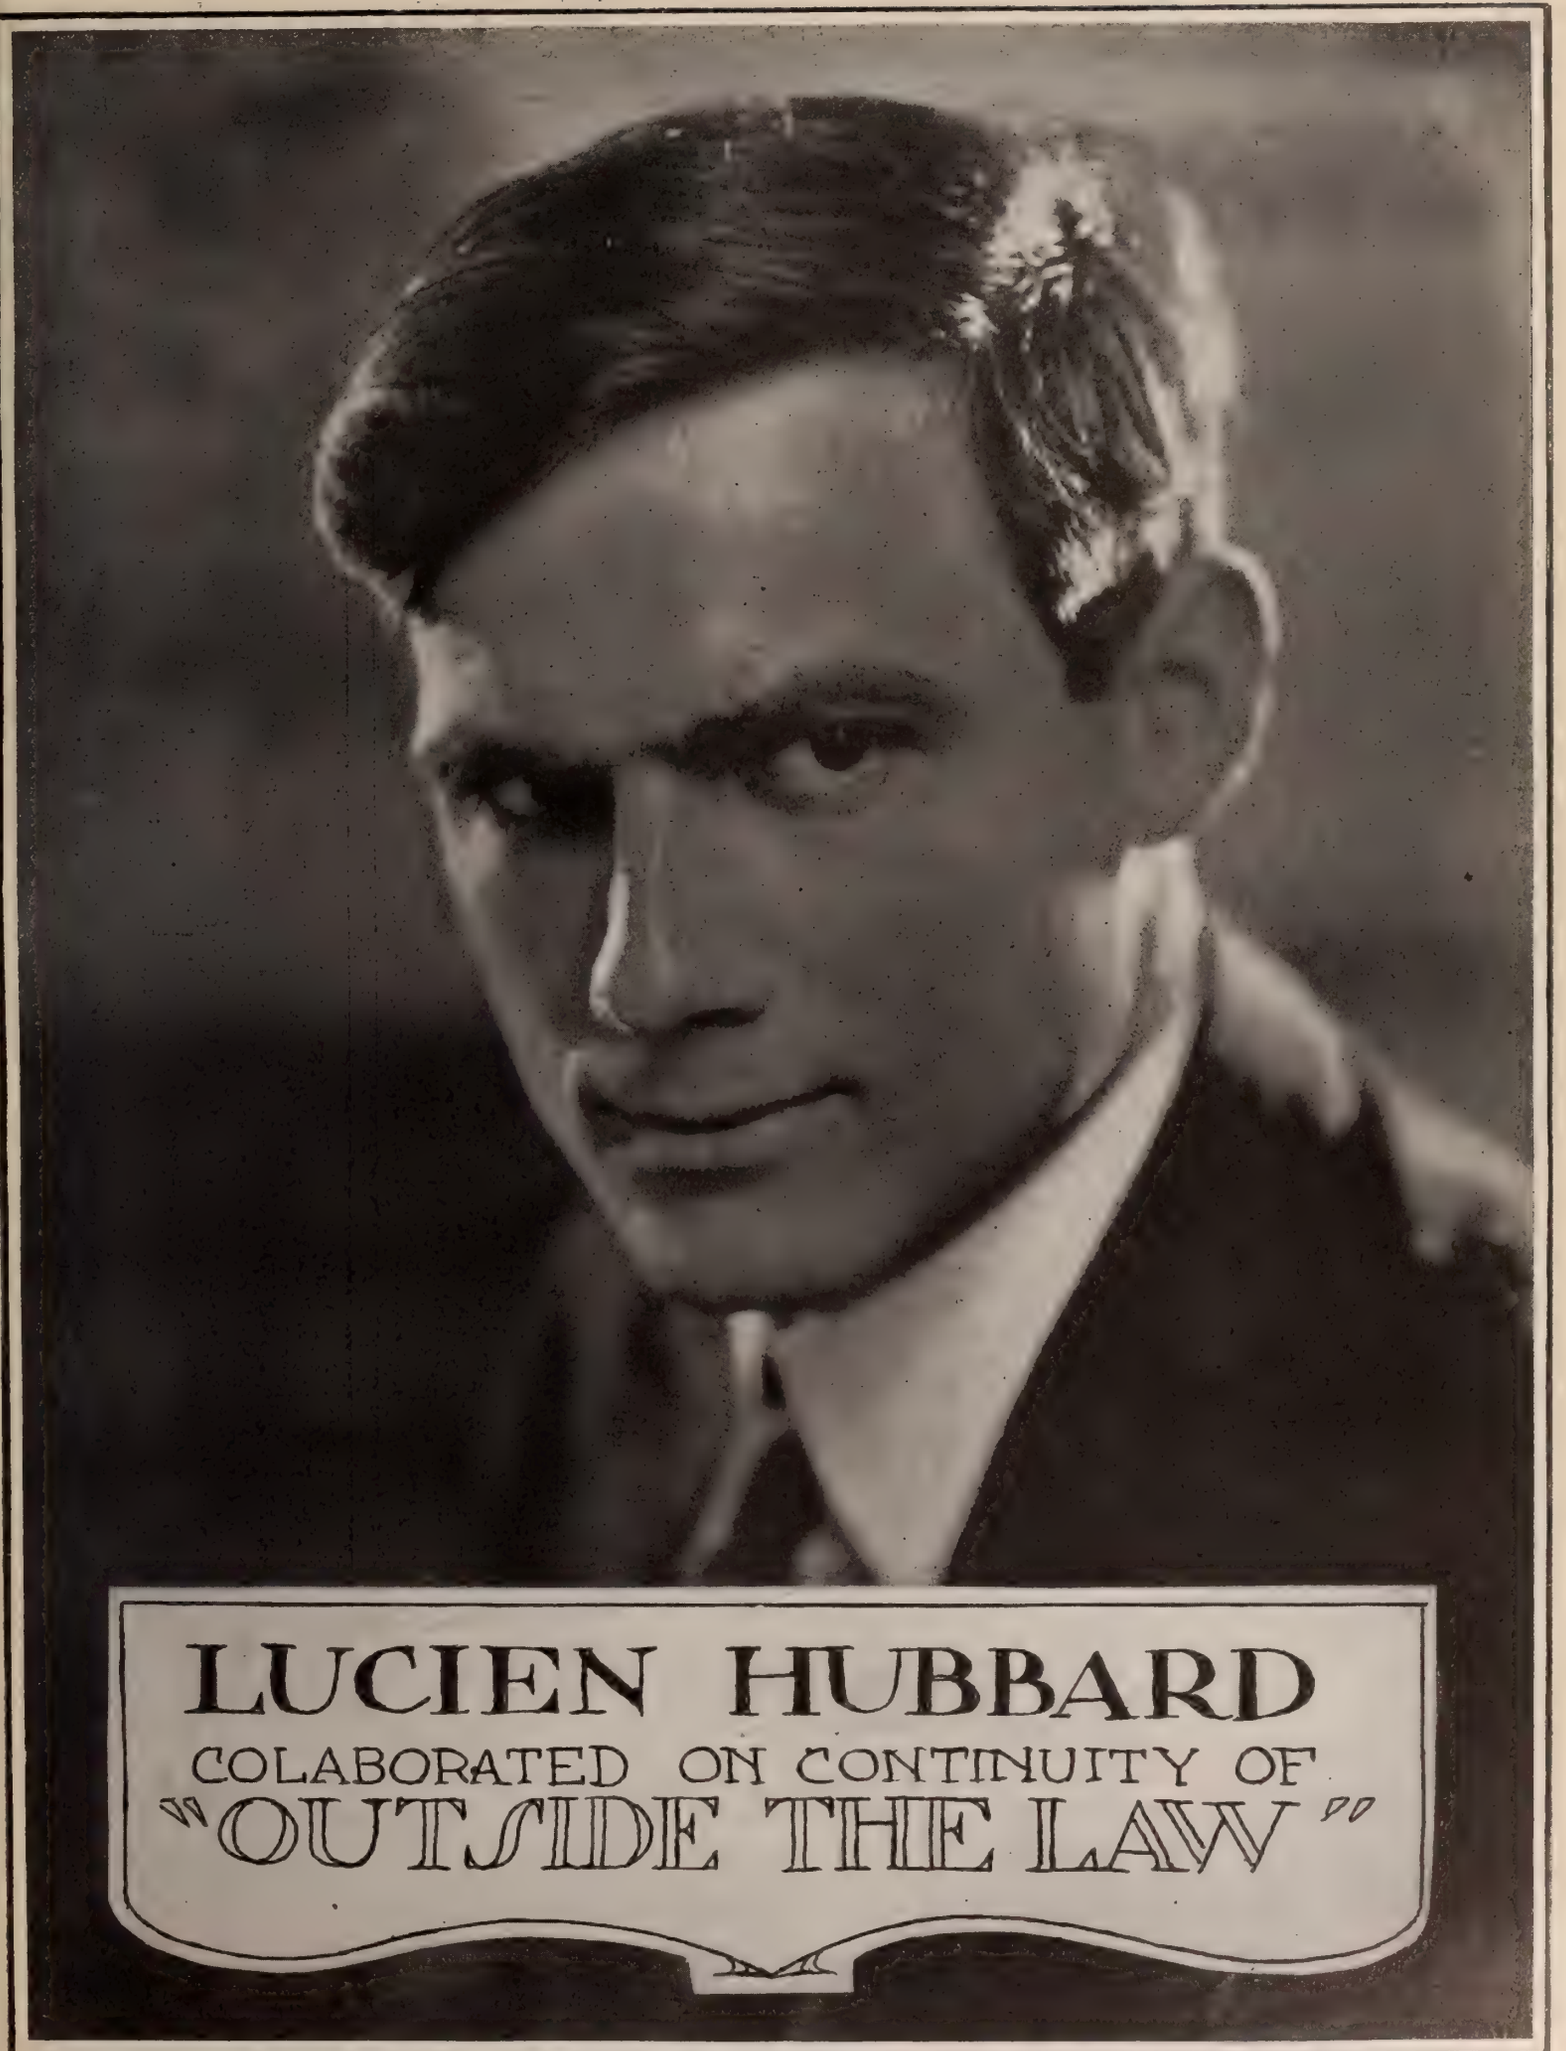
Following the lines of its teaser campaign, which Universal has developed to a greater extent for this picture than ever used heretofore in the moving picture world, a series of teaser slides in colors is being prepared by the Excelsior Slide Company. The series consists of four slides, the first three being teasers and the fourth being the give-a-way slide. They will be available to exhibitors within a few days, the slide company announces.

The prepared newspaper ads include half-page, quarter-page, and smaller layouts, and are being distributed in out and mat form to all Universal exchanges, together with cuts and mats of a series of teaser ads of varying sizes, including a material for six days' campaign of one-column teasers.

In addition to the prepared ads Universal announces that it has prepared an unusual number of portrait, scene and exploitation cuts—more in fact than ever was made for any other Universal picture. They range from a thumb nail out to three column portrait and scene cuts. The Raisbeck Electrotype Company of New York now is turning out electros and mats for these cuts and already has made them available to exhibitors in every territory.

In the line of exploitation cuts, Universal has taken a long forward step with "Outside the Law." Not only does the elaborate Campaign and Press Book outline simple and effective stunts and exploitation methods of great promise to the exhibitor, but also supplies him with the cuts or mats with which to work many of the stunts.

Among these are several "finger print" cuts to be used for guessing competitions or "mystery" and "crook" ads and stories. One shows Priscilla Dean's face in the middle of an enlarged thumb-print, as it would appear figuratively to the eye of a detective recognizing her thumb-print through a magnifying glass. A reproduction of Miss Dean's exact thumb-print is included in the exploitation material, for the benefit of exhibitors who wish to arouse interest in the search for patrons with similar thumb-prints.



A novel out showing four different expressions of Priscilla Dean's eyes also has been prepared for guessing stunts. This same idea is applicable to an exhibitor who wants to use teaser ads with Miss Dean's eyes or mouth for guessing competition. Line cuts of her eyes and separate line cuts of her mouth have been made for one-column layouts.

One of the ideas promulgated by the Universal Exploitation Department, and which was successfully used in Los Angeles, at the premier of the picture, outlines the making of traffic signs bearing the slogan:

"If You Park Your Car Here You ARE OUTSIDE THE LAW."

In Los Angeles, half-sheet posters were printed with this caption, and pasted on fire-plugs and at other places where parking was prohibited by law.

The teaser post-cards prepared for the picture's exploitation offer a fruitful opportunity for an exhibitor to stir up his public concerning "Outside the Law." There are six different styles, all bearing striking scenes in white on black, and some bearing, in addition, a hand-writing message from Priscilla Dean.

LUCIEN HUBBARD
COLABORATED ON CONTINUITY OF
"OUTSIDE THE LAW"

Browning's Calibre Shown in His Choice of Aides

Pen Pictures of the Man Who Made "Outside the Law" and His Co-Workers in the Melodramatic Hit

Tod Browning

THE thrill "Outside the Law" is giving the West is the result of its startling parallel to recent crime happenings in which the gangsters of San Francisco's Chinatown have figured. The actual punishment "outside the law" of three gangsters by lynching preluded the picture's release by about three weeks. Tod Browning conceived his story nearly a year before that.

Not that three men were lynched to make a good publicity story. Not that Tod Browning foresaw a year ago that 'Frisco criminals would receive punishment not sanctioned by statute book. This thing points simply to Browning's knowledge of the criminal of the West, the result of long study of the type in his underworld haunts.

Tod Browning, a master of melodrama, conceived the story of an arch-fiend of the gangs to whom legal death would be inadequate punishment. A young woman, daughter of the disposed king of Chinatown, incurs his enmity and a fierce and shrewd conflict ensues between the crime fiend and those who would protect the girl. Running like a thread of gold through a squalid tapestry is the gentle philosophy of an old Chinese who finally is impelled to take into his own hands the dealing of punishment to the sinister figure of the drama. The story of "Outside the Law" is not of so much import at this time as is the story of the man who wrote it, who directed it, who edited and launched its first presentation upon the screen.

If not the youngest, Tod Browning is one of the youngest directors of special productions in the game. Although only in his thirties, his weekly salary figures causes the comptometer operator at Universal City to stray into columns seldom touched on Universal salary lists.

Tod Browning was born in Louisville, Kentucky.

He was a boy jockey there. He joined a medicine show, and graduated to vaudeville and burlesque. Charlie Murray invited him to the studio to watch him work, then offered him a part. That was in 1912. Browning was an actor in Biograph comedies of the now almost legendary days when to be chased along the Palisades by Keystone cops and fall into the Hudson River was the acme of humor.

When D. W. Griffith joined Mutual he gave Tod Browning a year's contract and took him to Hollywood with him. At the end of the year Browning had set his mind on being a director, and approached Frank E. Woods, production manger for Fine Arts.

"I don't see why you shouldn't make a director," said Mr. Woods. "There's only one way to find out, though," and handed him the script for a one-reel drama. Mary Alden was featured and the picture was named "The Lucky Transfer." The title applied to young Browning as well as to the film, for he was permanently assigned to direct Majestic two-reelers.

Lucien Hubbard

LUCIEN HUBBARD, who collaborated on the continuity of "Outside the Law," is a firm believer in the superiority for picture purposes of the story written originally for the screen over the play or novel.

"Given equal thought and preparation," he says, "it is evident that a story written expressly for the pictures will be more effective than one designed for another medium, and then trimmed or altered to fit. In 'Outside the Law' we had this advantage, for so experienced a director as Mr. Browning naturally thinks in terms of pictures. There was no excess verbiage to dispose of, no flowery description of mental processes that could not be translated to the screen."

Hubbard, as scenario editor of Universal, passes on hundreds of stories weekly, and wherever possible gives the preference to originals. But he is insistent that they shall show the same thoughtful preparation, the same attention to characterization and soundness of motives as the average published work.

Hubbard came to Universal a year ago from Vitagraph. Unlike many editors, he is a proficient continuity writer himself and has contibuted several scripts to Universal while continuing his duties as head of the scenario department.

Newspaper work engaged Hubbard's attention before he entered the motion picture field. He was a reporter and editor of newspapers in New York, Cincinnati, Chicago and New Orleans, ending his newspaper career as city editor of the New York Tribune.

Lon Chaney

LON CHANEY, who is called the "Wizard" of the screen because of his ability to portray unusual and weird characters, has one of the most forceful of his long screen career in "Outside the Law," the new Universal-Jewel production, starring Priscilla Dean. Chaney plays the part of "Black Mike" Silva, the desperate and unscrupulous gangster, whose machinations precipitate the principals of the story into a maze of underworld intrigue and gang feuds.

Chaney also plays another role in this picture—that of Ah Wing, a Chinese servant. This part was a small one and Chaney took it to demonstrate his ability at making up. Seeing Ah Wing and Black Mike together, no one could guess that the two characters were being played by the same man. Chaney's Ah Wing is said to be the best Chinese impersonation ever done for the screen.

Prior to "Outside the Law" Chaney's best roles had been that of the legless underworld chief in "The Penalty" and that of The Frog in "The Miracle Man." It was as The Frog that Chaney became nationally popular as a screen villain in "The Penalty," which made Chaney the featured player, was exceptionally difficult. Chaney had to enact the entire story with his legs strapped to his body so that he looked like a legless cripple.

The first work done by Chaney for moving pictures was at Universal City, where he did "extra" parts for several months, first in comedies and later in "heavy" roles. He later supported many popular Universal stars, including Dorothy Phillips, in "Paid in Advance." "Outside the Law" is not the first picture in which he has appeared with Priscilla Dean. He was in the cast of "The Wicked Darling."

The role of Black Mike was written especially for Chaney by Tod Browning, the author-director, who is a personal friend of the noted character actor.

E. Alwyn Warren

THE exceptional twofold ability of E. Alwyn Warren is most strikingly shown in Tod Browning's production of "Outside the Law" for Universal. For this picture Mr. Warren has not only given his ability as an actor in a most remarkable characterization, but he has also proven his rare ability as a make-up artist in transforming pleasant, youthful likeness to that of an aged bewhiskered Chinese philosopher.

It is fortunate for Warren that a cast is stated in the film, for were it not for this it would be impossible for any one to recognice him from the picture, even though the beard he wears covers but a small portion of his chin.

Not one in a hundred will realize that the part of Chung-Low is played by an American, through who's veins course the blue blood of the South, for Warren is a son of Richmond, Virginia.

When but fifteen years old Warren used his first make-up and made his first appearance on the stage, and since that time he has played in every class of house where amusement is purveyed—everything from a honky-tonk to comic opera or Shakespeare, and the long list of engagements even includes medicine shows, circuses, repertoire and burlesque.

For the screen Warren has specialized in character roles and will be remembered as the Italian in "Mother of Mine," the Italian in "The Man Who Dared," a Fox subject, and the Turk in Tod Browning's "Virgin of Stamboul." In addition to the Chinese part he plays in "Outside the Law," Warren will shortly be seen in a similar role for the Goldwyn production being made by Frank Lloyd and titled "The Tale of Two Worlds."

Leo McCarey

SELDOM has any young man in the motion picture industry has such a rapid rise as Leo McCarey, who was first assistant to Mr. Browning in the production of "Outside the Law."

Less than a year and a half ago he came on the Universal lot with a modest, unassuming manner and a lot of ambition and ability to learn. "My success," to quote Mr. McCarey, "is due almost entirely to my good fortune in being associated with Tod Browning in at least two of his big productions, 'The Virgin of Stamboul' and 'Outside the Law.'

"After the completion of the last named picture Mr. Browning made it possible for me to direct a five-reel program picture with Miss Eva Novak. This has been done under the supervision of Mr. Browning, but Mr. McCarey we understand has done some very good work in the handling of his first subject, and it is rumored on the Rialto that the lad got away with a fine start. The name of this picture is 'It's Never Too Late.'"

William E. Fildew

MUCH credit for the success of "Outside the Law" is due Mr. William E. Fildew, who photographed the picture for Tod Browning. He is a veteran in his line of work, having spent several years at the Fine Arts Studio, under D. W. Griffith.

He has also photographed many features for Biograph, Kinemacolor, Metro, Goldwyn and Universal. For the past two years he has photographed nothing but features for Universal, the last two of which are "The Virgin of Stamboul" and "Outside the Law."

Mr. Fildew is one of the foremost members of the American Society of Cinematographers, having been one of the charter members, and used his influences to bring about the formation of this important organization.

SUN-LIGHT ARC

The directors who are testifying to this statement are those who are most enthusiastic over their profession.

Just as directing is more than casting, so the harnessing of such a tremendous force as light is greater by far than the grinding of film.

In those screen successes that are netting thousands upon thousands of dollars in profits, "seeing it in the mind's eye as it will look on the screen" has been the determining factor.

And the biggest element has been and always will be—CORRECT LIGHTING.

January 10,1921.

Mr.J.Justice Harmer,
Sun-Light Arc Co.,Inc.,
218 W.48th Street,
New York City.

Dear Mr.Harmer:

In the making of "Outside the Law" the performance was one hundred percent plus,for in every particular the Sun-Light Arc served most successfully. Many scenes used for this film would have been impossible were it not for your lights. We would have had to confine our shots to short ones. All of the long night shots we secured by your lights. In making the Chinatown night scenes, we flooded the streets and rooms with no difficulty and secured panorama scenes of city and other effects impossible without your lamps.

Besides aiding us in the making of the picture Sun-Light Arcs were economical for by their use the number of electricians needed was greatly reduced. This statement can only point out the great advantages of your lamp, but my production will prove the correctness of every assertion made here.

Sincerely yours,

Tod Browning

Quadruple Premier in New York City

"OUTSIDE THE LAW," the Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean, has been booked over the entire U. B. O. circuit in New York City, comprising twenty-six first class theatres. The opening run of the feature in New York was at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, near Times Square, where the picture drew large crowds during the week of January 16. This run was preceded by the unique premier arranged by Universal, whereby "Outside the Law" appeared simultaneously in the Lyric, the Astor, the Longacre and the George M. Cohan theatres, New York City, for one day only—Sunday, January 16.

Following the New York quadruple premier, the next big presentation of the film was made at the Park theatre, Boston, where it opened January 24 to a morning crowd that bought out the house before eleven o'clock. An elaborate exploitation campaign was carried on in Boston during the week preceding this opening, directed by Harry Reichenbach.

The New York opening was preceded by a six weeks' exploitation campaign based upon teaser twenty-four sheets or "mystery" posters, playing upon the title "Outside the Law" in a tie-up with the anti-Blue law agitation—the posters being worded "Do You Motor on Sunday? You are Outside the Law," and with similar phrases.

The quadruple premier itself a novelty in filmdom, as no picture ever before was shown in four leading theatres at the same time, was accompanied by forceful exploitation in the form of startling "fronts" and lobby displays for the four theatres Although engaged only for one day, Universal constructed "prison" fronts for the theatres, masking the theatre entrances with canvas painted to resemble the walls of a prison. The effect on Broadway was striking and did much to crowd the theatres.

The first public showing of "Outside the Law" was in Los Angeles, at the Superba theatre. The picture is now in its fifth week at that house. From the first it proved immensely popular with the picture-goers of that city. The opening show was made notable by the presence of the star, Priscilla Dean, and of the picture's author-director, Tod Browning. This run is unprecedented in the history of that theatre since it showed "The Heart of Humanity," Universal's great war picture.

Two other important first run houses which obtained "Outside the Law," for early runs are the Palace theatre in Buffalo, and the Kinema theatre, in Salt Lake City. In Buffalo the Universal-Jewel melodrama played to capacity business during the first week and to crowded houses during the second. The week's run in Salt Lake City was a criterion for house records.

Lon Chaney, supporting Priscilla Dean in "Outside the Law," the Universal Jewel special feature

The picture also is scheduled for early openings in Seattle, Montreal, and many other key cities. In all parts of the country the local exhibitors are being aided in their exploitation by the national exploitation drive being waged by Universal in the interests of the new Universal-Jewel.

The quadruple premier in New York was a feat performed by Universal only at great labor, as well as being a novelty for New Yorkers. It was as gigantic a task as ever confronted an amusement concern. It looms as one of the outstanding events of the screen year.

Legitimate theatrical shows are running in the four theatres used by Universal, which mean that none of the houses was equipped to show pictures, and furthermore, that no work could be done towards transforming them into picture houses until after the close of the Saturday night performances, on the evening preceding Universal's Sunday showings.

Promptly at ten o'clock, Saturday night, trucks loaded with signs, sectional projection booths and other equipment, rolled in front of the four theatres, with special permits from the Police Department to park in the theatre district during the after-theatre traffic peak. Squads of men immediately went to work transforming the fronts of the four theatres with the "prison wall" canvasses.

As a result the novel lobby displays caught the eyes of the throngs that packed Broadway after theatre time, and added much to the advertising of the next day's openings.

As soon as the theatres were cleared, mechanicians set to work taking out seats and erecting projection booths, curtains, screens and other necessary adjuncts to a picture show.

It was long after daylight before the projection machines were ready for operation. Hardly had the electricians and mechanicians left when the musicians assembled for rehearsal. The orchestras for all four houses were assembled in the George M. Cohan theatre and rehearsed as a unit under James C. Bradford, who had arranged the musical setting for the picture.

Everything was not in readiness until a few minutes before the box offices opened shortly after noon, Sunday. The crowded houses during the matinee and evening performances attested to the drawing power of picture and exploitation.

"How about actors?" he asked. "Oh, just use Mr. Griffith's stock company," they told him. So when D. W. wasn't using the Gish sisters Tod was. One week he'd have Henry Walthall and the next week Elmo Lincoln. Blanche Sweet, Miriam Cooper, Seena Owen, and the other now-famous members of Mr. Griffith's company appeared in the pictures he made during the next four years.

Meanwhile Tod Browning was promoted to direct four- and five-reel features, and when he left in 1917 to join Metro's forces he directed Mabel Taliaferro and Edith Story in three pictures apiece. One of the Story pictures was "The Legion of Death," one of the first war pictures.

In May, 1918, he went to Universal City and directed Edith Roberts in "The Deciding Kiss" and "Set Free." The latter was his own original story, a drama of gypsy life. From then on in his work Tod Browning worked actively with the scenarist on his pictures, modeling the story as he himself saw its possibilities.

He directed Mary MacLaren in "The Unpainted Woman," "The Petal on the Current," and "The Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie."

There was a clever little leading woman with wicked eyebrows and a tantalizing pout on the lot at that time. William E. Wing and Tod Browning wrote a story for her and Browning directed it. It was titled 'The Brazen Beauty," and when it was released the girl who played the name part was made a star. She was Priscilla Dean.

Under Tod Browning's megaphone tuition Miss Dean starred in "The Wicked Darling" and "The Exquisite Thief."

Then H. H. Van Loan came along with a story idea that at Browning's suggestion was developed into "The Virgin of Stamboul." Tod Browning produced this on almost an unheard of scale and Universal released it as a Jewel production.

Browning had spoken to Carl Laemmle of his idea for a story of the underworld, to be treated from an unusual angle, and when the Universal president saw "The Virgin of Stamboul" he instructed the director to go ahead with his idea.

Browning spent several months at his home preparing his story and in June he started production on "Outside the Law." Priscilla Dean was assigned the stellar role, and Lon Chaney, wheeler Oakman, E. A. Warren headed the cast.

Four blocks of San Francisco's Chinatown was reproduced at Universal City at a cost of $90,000 and a series of elaborately designed and constructed interiors were used.

Six rooms of a brick building that was to be wrecked in a gang fight were constructed of two-by-four studding, covered with lathing, plaster and with a brick wall facing just as though it were a regular building. Each wall was built as a separate unit so that it could be lifted bodily or rolled aside at the camera's convenience. The picture was fifteen weeks in production. The cutting and titling required ten weeks more, while the better part of a year was consumed from the time the story was begun till its release.

After viewing the picture on a special trip to the West Carle Laemmle decided that it would be Universal's first release for 1921. However, a pre-release showing was arranged at the Superba theatre in Los Angeles for Christmas week, and Tod Browning personally superintended the presentation.

Browning's Christmas present to Carl Laemmle was the completion of "Outside the Law." Mr. Laemmle's Christmas present to Browning was the assignment to him of Edna Ferber's story, "Fanny Herself," which Universal recently purchased.

Tod Browning's original intention had been to visit New York in search of his own screen material. but he abandoned this plan because of the serious illness of his wife. and will instead produce "Fanny Herself," with an all-star cast, as the first 1921 Tod Browning production.

Credit Due Sun-Light Arc, Says Browning

THE Sun-Light Arc Corporation has added another plume to its bonnet in the remarkable lighting effect secured through its active co-operation in the Universal super-melodrama, "Outside the Law," starring Priscilla Dean and directed by Tod Browning. While the Sun-Light Arc has been playing a prominent part in the production of big specials for quite awhile and has proved a valuable aid to many of the biggest producers in the industry both in the studio and at night on exterior locations, its part in the production of "Outside the Law" is declared to be one of its most important achievements up to the present.

In a letter recently received by J. Justice Harmer, of the Sun-Light Arc Co., Tod Browning pays high tribute to the serviceable character of Sun-Light Arc. Mr. Browning says in connection with the filming of "Outside the Law that it would have been impossible to take many of the scenes without Sun-Light Arc.

The Photo Repro Company, formerly located at Broadway and 51st Street, has moved this week to its new location in Long Island City, where it will occupy spacious quarters in the Queens Subway Building.

In enlarging his plant to double its former capacity and with the installation of new machinery in the Long Island City plant, Alvin Mayer, of Photo Repro, states that his concern will be in a position to turn out twice as much work each day as formerly, and in addition make lantern slides, all kinds of lobby displays and other advertising accessories.

Vernon and Burns Seen in a New Christie

"Back From The Front," a two-reel Christie comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon with Neal Burns and released through Educational Exchanges, occupies an important position on the bill at the Rialto theatre this week. It is described as an "after the war" picture, and it tells the adventures of a youth who has been in the air service but who never got off the ground, but who is induced to take the place of an American "ace" at a home party. Things become very complicated when his host introduces him to an aeroplane that he has just purchased.

Merges 17 Theatrical Companies

FURTHER details of the recently incorporated $3,000,000 corporation announced exclusively in Motion Picture News, known as the West Coast Theatre Company, were given out in Los Angeles prior to the departure of Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers to Chicago to attend the Association's First National meeting.

The company, according to the statement, will take over seventeen individual theatrical corporations, including thirty theatres, four film exchanges, real estate holdings, leases for theatres under construction, and contracts and plans for houses to be built shortly. In short this corporation will merge all the interests of Gore Brothers, Sol Lesser, Adolph Ramish with the following institutions: Kinema, Alhambra, Burbank, Optic, Regent, Lyceum, Liberty, Casino, Grand, and La Tosca, and Rosebud and New Central theatres in Los Angeles. The Windsor, Apollo and Hollywood theatres in Hollywood. The Neptune and Auditorium theatres in Venice, the La Petite in Ocean Park, Capital theatre in Redondo, the Belvidere and American theatres in Pomona, the Sunshine theatre at Taft, First National Exchange of Los Angeles, All Star Features Distributors, Equity Pictures and Educational Film Corporation Exchange of Los Angeles.

This company will also operate the New Ambassador theatre in Los Angeles, the New Appolo in Hollywood, the Neighborhood House to be built in March in Los Angeles, and a 1,500 seat house being built at Anaheim.

Praise for Story and Star

New York Critics Speak Well of Realart's "Something Different"

"SOMETHING DIFFERENT," Constance Binney's latest Realart picture, met with a generally favorable reception from New York newspaper critics, when it was shown at the Rialto theatre during the week of January 15.

"Here is a play," says the American's critics, "in which the story is the thing, and a very good story it is with Constance Binney as a wholesome, attractive heroine. The dainty grace of the star, the beauty of the pictures and the interest in the plot make the production undeniably charming.

"After Miss Binney, Lucy Fox is most pleasing to watch as the school chum. Ward Crane as Don Mariano, the head of the federal army, gave a restrained, artistic performance. Crane Wilbur made a convincing revolutionist.

"Pretty little Constance Binney, with her air of mingled innocence and coquetry, is the star at the Rialto theatre this week," comments the Evening Telegram's photoplay critic. "She is appearing in 'Something Different,' and the photographic play is worthy of its name.

"It is a refreshing, light and well-knit little photoplay, in which the beautiful young dancer has another chance to show that she can be beautiful as a grown-up as well as an ingenue—and that she can act. Besides, it is a story of a South American republic to which the bored young American girl goes for a visit. And whenever any such situation arises in fiction there is enough excitement to undo the bored feelings not only of the star, but the audiences. And this picture runs true to form. It is full of thrills and has a charming love story."

English Beauty Scoring in "Torchy" Comedies"

In the United States less than six months and established as a screen favorite is the record of Dorothy Mackaill, English beauty, who is appearing in the Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford, and starring Johnny Hines and released through Educational.

Miss Mackaill first appeared in "Torchy's Millions" and is seen in "Torchy Mixes In," the current release. She has an important part in "Torchy's Night Hood," which will be shown in February. It is a rather striking fact that though Miss Mackaill spent her whole life in England, she was selected as a distinct type of the American girl, for these pictures.

Although she is not yet eighteen Miss Mackaill has the distinction of having apeared in motion pictures in three countries, England, France and here. She is a dancer of distinction, and after appearing in the "Joy Belle" revue at the London Hippodrome, she came here and is a member of the Ziegfeld Midnight Follies."

New York F.I.L.M Club Notes

Climax Film Corporation was elected to membership at the last meeting. Mr. F. Goldfarb will represent this exchange.

Mr. Nat Beier succeeds Mr. Henry Siegel on the membership committee.

Mr. Levenson of Universal Film Mfg. Company, attended the meeting as a guest of Mr. Charles Rosensweig.

President Chadwick urged all to co-operate with Mr. Buxbaum's committee in making Hoover Week successful. Personal pledges of members will exceed $3,000, it is stated.

Masterpiece Film Corporation tendered their resignation from the club. It was accepted with regrets.

Fay Tincher Will Tour Picture Theatres

With her appearance during the week of January 24, at the Jones, Linick and Shaeffer theatres in Chicago, Fay Tincher, featured player in two-reel Christie Comedies released through Educational Exchanges, began a personal appearance tour which will occupy the next two months.

Miss Tincher's appearance is under the management of Wm. S. Bastar, a prominent Chicago film man who was able to arrange with the Christie Film Company for her absence for sixty days from the studios.

"Fantomas" Winning Favor Everywhere

William Fox reports that the new twenty-episode serial, "Fantomas," is being given an "enthusiastic reception" everywhere. The serial is based on the detective stories written by Marcel Allain and Fierre Souvestre. In its reception the Fox officials see a public approval of the "real old-time melodrama."

HERE AND THERE

Producers' Pictures Corporation has leased space in Hollywood studios for the filming of George Kearn's story, 'The Unfoldment," starring Florence Lawrence. The continuity is by Reed Heustis and James Caldwell. The direction is by Murdock McQuarrie.

Announcement is shortly to be made of a producing company to film a series of detective stories adopted from the Arsene Lupin stories by Maurice LeBlanc, and the Raffles stories by E. W. Hornung, all of which will star Wedgewood Nowell. Rights for eighteen of LeBlanc's and twenty of the Raffles stories were recently secured by Nowell while in New York where he entered into an agreement with Joseph Menchen, Jr., of the Celebrated Authors' Society. It is estimated that the agreement covers stories worth $750,000.

Nowell, it will be remembered, was featured in the LeBlanc story, "No. 813," recently released by Robertson-Cole.

Our sympathy goes out to Wally Reid, who was held down to Five Kisses in that much spoken of all-star production by C. B. deMille, regarding one Anatol.

Glass eaters were much in evidence on Rollin Sturgeon's set, for especially made windows of a taffy composition were used when burglars leaped through the glass.

Bill Keffe calls to our attention a grave danger confronting the fourth industry, for if the goat gland and plastic operations continue there will be no character people left.

Lyons and Moran are living the probable life of the future for they are putting on a blue Sunday satire comedy and being true artists they know they must live the part to successfully film it.

We heard of a girl who had been dubbed "the great unwashed," because the cameraman found it difficult to make pictures of her because of the shadow below the hair. Yes, you might say on her neck.

Various reports from the East are to the effect that our leading industry is paralyzed, which is a term that might have been applied years and years ago before the Eighteenth Amendment became effective.

Antonio Moreno had a four weeks' vacation and all of that time tried to make up his mind that he wanted to go to Mexico City, but he did not, and now the vacation period is past and he has got to go to work again.

Studio publicity men are going to organize, but they assuredly state there will be nothing in the by-laws regarding the scale of wages or hours, for fear the scale could not be made high enough or the hours few enough.

Robert McKimm's claim that a man must live his part does not hold good these days some actors claim, who have been assigned to playing breakers of the Volstead Act, abandoning husbands, or committing similar crimes.

Tod Browning was ordered off Universal City grounds three times in one day by an over-zealous watchman, who thought Tod was a bootlegger. The watchman has since been making apologies on three shifts a day—morning, noon and night.

Albert and Mrs. Ray (formerly Roxana McGowan) are the parents of a son, named Charlie Albert Ray. There was so much excitement in the household that Hokum's representative was unable to learn who was the Godfather, so we must make a rash guess that it must be no other than Charles Ray, the First National star.

Mary Roberts Rinehart claims to be the Goldwyn Goat, for every time they want to spring a publicity stunt they figure out some hazardous adventure for her. Records show she has been asked to do everything from making a pie to bathing in the surf at Coronado (in a natty suit), or aeroplaning from our well known seaport to New York.

Joe Jackson at Goldwyn is the only publicity man we know of who twenty-four sheets the work of his department. Every item or picture that comes from publications to the Department is posted on a twenty-four sheet board built in the Cafe, and really it is remarkable the number of people who read this small print from one end to the other.

Bebee Daniels was pinched the other day and goes before Judge Cox, who always gives a jail sentence if the demon was going more than fifty miles. The Daniels car was tripping along at fifty-six, so we may expect the fair one to be singing, "I'd Rather Be on the Outside." Arrangements are now being made for teas to be served in the afternoon in the Orange County Jail.

Sam Taylor, 3rd, entered the world and picturedom on January 25. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Taylor, Jr. Proud papa is a former Vitagraph continuity writer and is now "gag man" with the Harold Lloyd forces in these parts.

"The Hick" Is Semon's Newest Comedy

Larry Semon is finishing up the final scenes of "The Hick" at the Los Angeles studios of Vitagraph, and the picture will be in New York within a fortnight.

Over enthusiasm nearly cost Semon his picture career and for the past two weeks he has lain on his back unable to work. He wrenched his spine in a scene, and coupled with that injury, he was threatened with pneumonia because of over-exposure in a water scene.

George Walsh Stars in "Dynamite Allen"

Fox headquarters announce the title of the next George Walsh release as "Dynamite Allen," work upon which has just been completed. The story has its locale in the coal mining districts of Pennsylvania. The story is said to lack nothing in the way of action. Scenes involving the flooding of the mine are declared to be realistic and awe-inspiring in the extreme.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 9, 1920.

"Clever twists make interesting crook story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased." "Story little impossible but business was big. Some fine double exposures in this and picture one of his best." "An entertaining feature which drew well." "Great in story and in production. Wally Reid always has good following and great stories. Went over big." "Better than average business." "An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done." "Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and 'Always Audacious' pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week." "Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run." "Drew large crowds and met with the favor of home-going audiences." "A good production having entertaining story. Box-office receipts good." "A very good picture to average business two days."

ARE ALL MEN ALIKE? (METRO) MAY ALLISON ..... NOV. 6
"Rather inconsequential for feature length."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair business with a picture that was hard to tell what it was about."

BAIT, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) HOPE HAMPTON ..... JAN. 15
"Rather hectic but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS ..... DEC. 11
"Mediocre picture on a hackneyed theme."—M. P. News.

BEGGAR IN PURPLE, A (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

"Novel story given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One theatre considered it such a success that it held it over for a second week." "Splendid production which was well liked by my patrons. Sure-fire box-office attraction." "Very good picture playing to good business. Held for second week." "Undoubtedly one of the best and most successful pictures of the year. Played to exceptionally big business for seven days." "Interesting picture and well put on which appealed to both men and women patrons. Did more than average business for a week." "Doing good business second week. Everyone agrees it's the kind of picture to hold the attention spellbound." "One of the best pictures of the year. Went big all week." "A good picture and box-office attraction which has been held for a second week at the highest class theatre in the city." "With the aid of exploitation, including a prologue, this picture went over big and brought good business." "Held over for a two weeks' run, and did big business throughout. Critics pronounce it one of the best of the year." "Went very well. Two days of extra big business."

BEWARE OF THE BRIDE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY ..... OCT. 30
"This would look better as a two-reel slapstick."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Favorably received and good program picture. Average business three days."

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE ..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.

BLACKMAIL (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... OCT. 16
"Viola Dana gives color to familiar story."—M. P. News.

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE ..... JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from famous classic."—M. P. News.

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.

BODY AND SOUL (METRO) ALICE LAKE ..... OCT. 23
"Story of dual personality fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BRANDING IRON, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Story of primitive passions is rather overdone."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture. Fair box-office results." "Brought a normal business, something unusual for pre-Christmas days." "One of the best hits of the year." One week to big business."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH ..... NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BRUTE MASTER, THE (HODKINSON) HOBART BOSWORTH .... NOV. 6
"Hobart Bosworth scores in vigorous story of the sea."—M. P. News.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.

CHALLENGE OF THE LAW, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL .... OCT. 23
"Russell at his best; a real entertaining drama."—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID ..... JAN. 8
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.

CITY SPARROW, A (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON ..... DEC. 4
"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape." "Two days to average business."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... DEC. 25
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.

CURTAIN (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD ..... OCT. 16
"Lifelike story suffers from mechanical development."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to exceptional business. Katherine McDonald appears to be growing more popular." "Katherine MacDonald gave entire satisfaction. Picture well produced. Splendid supporting cast. Business very good." "It's by far the best acting Katherine MacDonald has ever done. People liked it well enough to fill two houses for a week simultaneously. Good entertainment." "Averagely pleasing story. Poor ending. Star's work shows improvement." "Very pleasing audience picture to good business. Miss MacDonald's best picture. Story at least for her rational and she is livening up considerably." "Good picture. Did excellent business every day of its engagement." "A fairly good picture which drew well. Katherine MacDonald is very good to look at, but is rather cold."

DANGEROUS BUSINESS (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE ..... DEC. 11
"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST .... NOV. 13
"Vivid, 'punchy' story; production excellent."—M. P. News.

PICTURE — BRAND — STAR — RELEASED — PLAN BOOK

DEVIL, THE (ASSO.-EXHIB.-PATHE) GEORGE ARLISS.....JAN. 29
"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.

DEVIL TO PAY, THE (BRUNTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Strong mystery story carries interest."—M. P. News.

DEVIL'S GARDEN, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE .....NOV. 6
"Rather grewsome story, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment.—"Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business." "Its too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused."

DICE OF DESTINY (HAMPTON-PATHE) H. B. WARNER.....DEC. 11
"H. B. Warner puts 'punch' into strong dramatic story."—M. P. News.

"Melodrama and Sentiment put this one over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wesley Barry in this picture is proving a worthy attraction and causing favorable comment." "Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind." "Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic." "Good picture. Splendid vacation attraction. Big and little folks all like Wesley Barry." "Personally, think this is better than 'Go and Get It,' but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it." "Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house record." "This is a fine picture and brought good business for me." "Played to increasing business each day. Wonderful kid picture."

DISCARDED WOMAN, THE (HALLMARK) SPECIAL CAST.....JULY 10
"Hectic melodrama with familiar stock situations."—M. P. News.

DOWN HOME (WILLART-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 6
"Some interesting moments in this rustic story."—M. N. News.

DRAG HARLAN (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....NOV. 6
"If they like Farnum, it's a good bet."—M. P. News.

313 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST) .....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

EYES OF THE HEART (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....NOV. 13
"Mary Miles Minter scores in story of pathos and sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture, well acted. Mary Miles Minter has her own personal following, but aside from them, the picture did not have much of an appeal." "Ordinary picture. Poor business three days." "Not as good as some of her previous pictures, but Miss Minter is always pleasing." "Two days to big and average business."

FACE AT YOUR WINDOW, THE (WILLIAM FOX) SPECIAL CAST .....NOV. 13
"Propaganda picture developed along orthodox lines."—M. P. News.

FATAL HOUR, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Crude melodrama makes mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FELIX O'DAY (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) H. B. WARNER.....SEPT. 18
"A good production from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture to average business one day."

FIREBRAND TREVISON (FOX) BUCK JONES.....JULY 31
"Buck Jones practically duplicates his last picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some of the others. Average business two days."

FIXED BY GEORGE (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN.....NOV. 6
"Lyons and Moran produce successful farce."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent. Very funny and pleases the patrons who enjoy high class comedy." "A rather poor picture to poor business two days." "Good—one day to extra big business."

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH .....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good."

"Very obvious, but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Light, pleasing little comedy. They came because they liked Wanda—and they did not register a kick. Box-office just fair." "This sure did go over big and the picture deserved it, for it is interesting and entertaining." "Fair picture with only average box-office receipts." "Better than 'Miss Hobbs.' Miss Hawley is likable in this sort of a story. Big to average business two days."

FORBIDDEN THING, THE (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS).....NOV. 27
"Vivid and vital story rich in spiritual quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business." "A fine production. People stood in line all week to see this picture. Big success." "Well acted and produced but rather long-drawn out; exploitation put it over to big business."

FORBIDDEN VALLEY (BLACKTON-PATHE) MAY MCAVOY-BRUCE GORDON.....OCT. 16
"An exciting story concerning a Kentucky feud."—M. P. News.

PICTURE — BRAND — STAR — RELEASED — PLAN BOOK

FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) BILLIE BURKE .....JAN. 8
"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays."

FRONTIER OF THE STARS, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....JAN. 22
"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.

FURNACE, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Talky picture has little appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures I have seen. It has strength and purpose and is wonderfully portrayed by excellent cast. Exceptionally good business." "An absolute sensation. A knockout. Had S. R. O. sign up from opening day till finish of week. One of the best picture I've ever seen." "Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business." "Very big production. Business better than average." "The plot of the picture is good but the details are not well worked out. It is fair. Average receipts."

GILDED DREAM, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....OCT. 23
"Commonplace story developed along traditional lines."—M. P. News.

GIRL IN THE WEB, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET .....JULY 31
"A splendid production from all angles."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"A good story. It drew well. Two days to average business." "Fair. Don't think Blanche Sweet belongs in these silly namby-pamby roles. She is one of the best emotional actresses on the screen—but wasted in drivel like this. Box-office only fair."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY .....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week."

GOOD-BAD WIFE, THE (VERA McCORD PRODS.-FILM BOOKING OFFICE) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 30
"Good production given rather illogical story."—M. P. News.

GOOD REFERENCES (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....OCT. 16
"Stars popularity may get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought crowded houses as do all Talmadge pictures, either Constance or Norma." "Above the ordinary Constance Talmadge productions, and was well patronized." "Pleases star's followers. Opened to excellent business." "There is never any question whether we will have a full house on Miss Talmadge's pictures. This one proved no exception. Everyone satisfied. Big business two days to extra big business one day."

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 22
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A poor picture. Average box-office reecipts." 'Fine picture with some very excellent acting and interesting story. Played to better than average business for week."

HALF A CHANCE (JESSE D. HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST).OCT. 30
"Well acted and directed, but development suffers."—M. P. News.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....OCT. 30
"Favorite formula given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regarded this as just a fair picture and drew average houses." "The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business." "This picture pleased. Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card."

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.

HELIOTROPE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST .....DEC. 4
"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run." "Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses, which were pretty well crowded." "Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out." "An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week." "One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 29
"Inconsequential and too vapid for feature length."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 29
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.

HER BELOVED VILLAIN (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....DEC. 18
"French farce adaptation that falls short in American requirements."—M.P. News.
Exhbitor Comment—"A good picture to average business three days."

HER UNWILLING HUSBAND (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET .....NOV. 27
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

HONEYMOON RANCH (BERT LUBIN-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 22
"Old time western full of real cowboys and has action galore."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to standing room. Strong posters pulled in crowds. Allene Ray pleasing as star. Picture very well received. Best Western shown here for long time. Patrons asked for others like it. Full of action and suspense and the kind that draws crowds back to see more of the same kind."

HONOR BOUND (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO ..... NOV. 13
"Frank Mayo has good material in this one."

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ... JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG ..... JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.

IDOLS OF CLAY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MAE MURRAY .... NOV. 27
"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew 13,000 paid admissions the day it opened. A wonderful drawing card." "Opening week equalled 'On with the Dance.' Held for second week. Picture makes 'em talk." "Went over big. Certainly a sure fire production, both as to entertainment and box office value." "Big business second week. Thrilling. Gorgeous sets and sensational title are big attractions." "A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business." "Opened up extra big and continued so during week run." "This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title." "Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week." "Picture is quite fair. Good business during run." "Went over very well and held over for two days to big business."

INSIDE OF THE CUP, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 22
"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.

IN THE HEART OF A FOOL (DWAN-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 22
"Very good entertainment in this complicated story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good audience picture. Its many leading love themes are apt to be confusing but it opened very big." "Good productions, which brought the crowds." "A rather complicated theme which kept up the suspense until the end. However, a bit too melodramatic in spots." "A very good picture that seemed to please the majority of our patrons. Big business two days."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal." "This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days." "Very good story. The picture follows the original narrative well and it drew the 'better class' audiences."

JAILBIRD, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN ..... OCT. 9
"Rather obvious, but fairly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also." "Disappointing after seeing '23½ Hours Leave.' Fair business." "Very bad for the star and weak story. Business was poor." "Picture started big, slumped, and then ended big. But on the whole it's a lemon." "A usual Doug. MacLean and Doris May production which did the business. Both of these actors have been very popular in this city since appearing in '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES ..... NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good. Played it one day to big business."

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN ..... JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.

KISMET (ROBERTSON-COLE) OTIS SKINNER ..... NOV. 6
"Otis Skinner gives superb performance in lavish production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advanced prices." "Opened fine and improved daily. Wonderful acting on part of Otis Skinner. Marvelous sets." "Wonderful picture. Consistently large attendance. A masterpiece, according to general talk around town." "Broke all attendance records. The kind of picture that points to big things in 1921 picturedom. A remarkable production in every way." "Wonderful picture. Brought great box office reports." "Extra good to extra big business two days."

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week." "Opened to great business. Assured of great success. Don't miss this one."

LEOPARD WOMAN, THE (ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS) ..... OCT. 16
"Melodramatic romance adapted from adventure story."—M. P. News.

"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy."

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH .. DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LITTLE GREY MOUSE, THE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY ..... NOV. 13
"New star's first picture mildly interesting."—M. P. News.

"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three consensus days." "Good picture, good puller."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD ..... JAN. 22
"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.

LOVE'S FLAME (FIDELITY PICTURES CO.) THOS. J. CARRIGAN-VIVIENNE OSBORNE ..... OCT. 18
"Story has distinctive appeal."—M. P. News.

LURE OF CROONING WATER, THE (STOLL-PATHE) IVY DUKE-GUY NEWELL ..... JAN. 15
"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 22
"Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.

MAD LOVE (VICTOR KREMER PRODUCTION) LINA CAVALIERI ..... NOV. 6
"Average production stars Cavalieri."—M. P. News.

MADAME PEACOCK (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... OCT. 16
"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity."

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD ..... JAN. 22
"Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.

"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big box-office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture." "Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked." "Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." "This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Wil hold over for another week.'" "Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

MARRIAGE PIT, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO ..... OCT. 16
"Interesting story of big business and feminine pride."—M. P News.

MIDSUMMER MADNESS (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 18
"Perfectly constructed picture stamps De Mille as master director."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid production. Great business. Held for second week on demand."

MISLEADING LADY, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL ..... JAN. 1
"Stage adaptation is fairly successful as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The production was not much above average, but the audience seemed to like it."

MODERN SALOME, A (HOPE HAMPTON-METRO) HOPE HAMPTON (FEB. 1) ..... JAN. 31
"Satisfied from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture which did big business for three days." "My patrons did not like this one at all." "This is a very poor offering, and we had dull business during run."

MONEY-CHANGERS, THE (BENJ. B. HAMPTON-PATHE) ..... NOV. 6
"Hectic melodrama may draw in the neighborhood houses."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—consistently satisfactory business all week." "Went over in fine shape. Corking good story with plenty of action, and it scored nicely."

MR. WU (STOLL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA) LANG-M'CARTHY ..... JAN. 1
"Unique and strongly dramatic from plot angle."—M. P. News.

NEW YORK IDEA, THE (REALART) ALICE BRADY ..... DEC. 18
"Stage success not so good as a picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The very best picture Miss Brady has made on the Realart program. Ran a two-reel Harold Lloyd comedy with this one and we had a program that was hard to beat. Drew usual Sunday and Monday crowds; big to average business."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY ..... JAN. 8
"Ray scores again with pleasing study of small town life."—M. P. News.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE, THE (REX BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 30
"Probably the best Beach picture yet produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not much. Did fair business." "Good picture of the cold Northwest which did excellent business for two weeks, having been held over a second week on account of the large crowds it drew the first seven days." "A very good picture, to very good business considering the fact that it is the week before Christmas." "This is the sort of picture they seem to like. Went over big three days."

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE ..... NOV. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard, although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box-office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

OH, LADY, LADY (REALART) BEBE DANIELS ..... JAN. 1
"Rather light but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture. Bebe Daniels has become very popular here in her short career as a star. This picture has lost nothing; it is transition to the movies." "Good picture to average business." "Great. Bebe certainly has a great following here, and this picture went over 100% better than her first. Believe she is going to be one of the biggest drawing cards among stellar-folk." "Good picture and business was very good during run."

OLD FASHIONED BOY, AN (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY ..... NOV. 13
"Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard." "Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business." "Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and whirls like he was crazy. Only fair business." "Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual." "A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)" "One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it." "An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box-office attraction, howeve." "Audience greatly enjoyed star in this picture ,which attracted overflow business during holidays." "Not up to the usual Ray picture and after opening business dwindled."

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN (HOLUBAR-UNIVERSAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS ..... OCT. 16
"Absorbing story well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dorothy Phillips does some of the best work of her career in this picture, which is interesting and handsomely produced. Did splendid business at this theatre." "Just completed second and very successful week. I make a practice of one week runs, or even three days, but this picture played to two weeks' capacity business." "A poor attraction, very little to redeem it. Business far below normal." "Established a new record for our box office and received more favorable comments than any picture ever played." "Capacity business all the week. Picture pleased all." "Broke all records. Turned them away Sunday." "Ran this picture a week and never at any time have had anything more pleasing or which made more friends." "Record business for the week. One of the few pictures that we really could give the public to combat the opening of a big new house in opposition." "Story and star met with great applause which is excellent evidence of their satisfaction." "This is one of the finest pictures I have shown this year."

ONE MAN IN A MILLION (BEBAN-LESSER-ROBERTSON-COLE) GEORGE BEBAN ..... JAN. 29
"Character study is satisfying offering."—M. P. News.

OUTSIDE THE LAW (UNIVERSAL) PRISCILLA DEAN ..... JAN. 22
"Best straight melodrama in many a day."—M. P. News.

PAGAN LOVE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 4
"Magazine story developed into mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

PASSION (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"German picture is spectacular; wonderfully acted."—M. P. News.

PASSIONATE PILGRIM, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Better than average picture from well known novel."—M. P. News.

PASSION'S PLAYGROUND (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD ..... OCT. 16
"An artificial story holds it back."—M. P. News.

PAYING THE PIPER (FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORP.) DOROTHY DICKSON ..... JAN. 29
"Well produced domestic drama that will please."—M. P. News.

"Humorous incident, rustic settings and Charles Ray—enough."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Registered a big hit. A real Ray triumph. Audiences applaud enthusiastically." "Very good week. Ray always sure of big business. This considered much better than '45 Minutes from Broadway.'" "Charles Ray in any story is enough to pack this house. In 'Peaceful Valley' he is cast in a role that his admirers want to see him in. The picture attracted capacity houses for a seven-day run." "Did very well. Picture entertaining and box-office results good." "A pleasing feature which took well in my theatre. As to box-office value it is a pretty good bet." "An improvement over "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," but not his best by any means. Usual business."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1) ..... JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

"Great vehicle for Lon Chaney, but falls short in many ways."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture, although some women were shocked at the idea of Lon Chaney with legs cut off." "Very good. Chaney's work is wonderful. Average business four days." "Wonderful story and very fine acting on Chaney's part. Good business." "A great picture. It went over exceedingly well. Was well liked, and brought big box-office returns."

PINK TIGHTS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON ..... SEPT. 25
"Slight story, but entertaining incident, in circus picture." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Turned them away at night." "The boiled down opinions on this picture is 'Old Stuff.'"

PLUNGER, THE (FOX) GEORGE WALSH ..... NOV. 20
"Story of frenzied finance makes ordinary picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a surprise. First time Walsh has been tried out for a week here. Even in the week before Christmas it drew."

POLLY WITH A PAST (METRO) INA CLAIRE ..... DEC. 18
"Ina Claire's rare artistry makes her a welcome screen figure."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair. The picture is entertaining but lacks pep."

PRAIRIE TRAILS (FOX) TOM MIX ..... JAN. 1
"Trivial story, senseless action and a few good thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regular Mix picture. Well liked. Big crowds, mostly men." "A fine picture which brought more than usual business."

PRISONERS OF LOVE (RELEASED BY GOLDWYN) BETTY COMPSON ..... JAN. 29
"Very unusual and artistic drama."—M. P. News.

RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON ..... JAN. 29
"Gladys Walton scores in heart interest story."—M. P. News

RISKY BUSINESS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON ..... DEC. 4
"Good combination makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

ROGUES AND ROMANCE (PATHE) SEITZ-CAPRICE-COURTOT .. JAN. 1
"Good production given thrilling story."—M. P. News.

ROMANCE PROMOTERS, THE (VITAGRAPH) EARLE WILLIAMS . JAN. 29
"The sun shines on Earle Williams in this one."—M. P. News.

ROMANTIC ADVENTURES (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY DALTON .. JAN. 22
"This one looks like a vehicle."—M. P. News.

ROOKIE'S RETURN, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MACLEAN-MAY ..... JAN. 8
"Quite frail but fairly pleasing."—M. P. News.

SAGE HEN, THE (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ... ... JAN. 22
"A well-produced dramatic story of the west."—M. P. News.

SCUTTLERS, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM ..... DEC. 25
"Farnum has a 'He-Man' role in story of the sea."—M. P. News.

SHE PLAYED AND PAID (JOAN FILM SALES) FANNIE WARD .. NOV. 27
"Fannie Ward's acting the redeeming feature here."—M. P. News.

SHOCKING NIGHT, A (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN ..... JAN. 15
"Not substantial enough for five reels."—M. P. News.

SILVER LINING, THE (METRO) JEWEL CARMEN ..... JAN. 15
"Interesting crook play brings Jewel Carmen back to the screen."—M. P. News.

SINS OF ROSANNE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON ..... OCT. 23
"Very little appeal in this wildly fantastic story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good business. Satisfactory to people willing to accept story as just movie. Rather good drawing qualities. Many liked it."

SLAVE OF VANITY, A (ROBERTSON-COLE) PAULINE FREDERICK ..... OCT. 30
"Big from a production and acting standpoint."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good business. The picture satisfied a critical audience." "Fair picture, business very good."

"Butler's third is well produced and thoroughly interested."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"David Butler's popularity growing with each picture. There was nothing spectacular about this—but it was a clean little picture, well received."

SO LONG LETTY (CHRISTIE-ROBERTSON-COLE) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 30
"Famous stage success intelligently adapted to screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Street car scene where bathing girls disrobe should be cut out by all exhibitors that run it, as it has some bad morals."

SOMEONE IN THE HOUSE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Interesting crook story, well directed and acted."—M. P. News.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT (REALART) CONSTANCE BINNEY .... JAN. 29
"Rather frail but backgrounds save it."—M. P. News.

"Impressive moments in this artistic production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent production in every way." "A great picture and drew like house afire." "Now here is a picture. Typical De Mille cast, direction and all. Not as enjoyable throughout, of course, as 'Why Change Your Wife,' but finely built for contrast of action and suspense. Big business carried over another week." "Drew very good houses to excellent business during fourth week of its run. Crowds continued." "Picture so good business grows. Held for a third week." "This picture is entertaining and sure did go over extra big. House crowded every performance." "Holding for second week in a one-week house which tells the story."

SONG OF THE SOUL, THE (MESSMORE KENDALL-GOLDWYN) VIVIAN MARTIN.....OCT. 23
"Fine basic plot, but lacks action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a great picture but Vivian Martin's charm and cleverness put it over. Played to good business for a week."

SOWING THE WIND (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....JAN. 29
"Powerful drama, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.

SPENDERS, THE (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Quite interesting picture made from best seller."—M. P. News.

SQUANDERED LIVES (STOLL FILM COMPANY OF AMERICA)..JAN. 1
"Viewed from all angles, rather a notable film"—M. P. News.

STAR ROVER, THE (SHURTLEFF-METRO) COURTNEY FOOTTHELMA PERCY .....NOV. 27
"Artistic production, but disappointing for a London story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. The plot is well put together and the details are worked out well."

SWEET LAVENDER (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....OCT. 16
"Ideal vehicle for star, though it lacks substance."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew well all week. Audiences like the plot." "One of the greatest surprises of the season. Considered the poorest picture this star has ever played in—yet it did capacity business."

TAVERN KNIGHT, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"This one will hardly interest the majority."—M. P. News.

"Sure fire western with star in the kind of role that made him famous."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Certainly a fine picture and a sure-fire box-office attraction. Picture seemed to please and went fine all week." "Best Bill had done to date." "An average picture which went over big. Hart great favorite here." "Best picture Hart's made in a long while. Marks his return to the sort he does best and that people want. Fine business."

TEXAN, THE (FOX) TOM MIX.....NOV. 27
"Average entertainment in this Mix offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Tom Mix still popular. Picture pleases though not as good as other recent ones. We boosted a Clyde Cook comedy to help business."

THAT GIRL MONTANA (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET..JAN. 8
"Star dominates pleasing production."—M. P. News.

THIEF, THE (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....DEC. 11
Fairly interesting, with Pearl White scoring a hit."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Thoroughly pleased audiences, with result that picture got good box-office play. Pearl White feature our audiences liked."

"Arbitrary plot and coincidence hinder the values here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture. Virile. Interesting. Steady business all week in spite of proximity to Christmas." "A great picture but poor business on account of the holiday season."

TIGER TRUE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....Jan. 22
"Rather crude but carries a punch."—M. P. News.

TIGER'S CUB (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....OCT. 16
"Pearl White makes thoroughly interesting Alaskan picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is the second Pearl White feature. It failed to draw, so a Harold Lloyd comedy was added to the program." "Very entertaining picture and went well with my patrons." "Just fair; hardly up to Fox standard. Average business one day."

TO PLEASE ONE WOMAN (LOIS WEBER PRODUCTIONS-PARAMOUNT .....JAN. 1
"Falls rather short for a Lois Weber production."—M. P. News.

"Spectacular melodrama is rich in action and thrills"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine picture, pleasing and entertaining. Drew more than usual business." "Very fine picture. Spectacular and exciting. Did exceptional business first week of showing, with indications for a big second week. Broke house records second Sunday." "Good business. Pictures liked, especially the comedy parts in the beginning. The ending slightly changed, which gives it more credence." "A nice picture that generally satisfied. Fairly good houses all week." "Pleased big audiences." "Splendid picture, full of thrills and box box-office attraction. Broke house record during two weeks' run." "Good picture; good story; splendid acting and excellent production."

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS, THE (WHITMAN BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 25
"Orthodox but careful production of well-known play."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to good business. Audience seemed delighted with it." "Drew very strongly at the box office and my people liked the picture."

"Famous stage success scores a hit on the screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Audiences laughed long and heartily. Seemed to give entire satisfaction." "Spicy advertising helped to keep the ticket sellers busy." "Excellent polite comedy. Nothing risque in it, but always spicy. Splendid week's business." "One of the best comedies I have played in a long time. Went over great. Box-office receipts entirely satisfactory for week's run." "Carter de Haven at his best, but many did not like it. Poor business due to holidays." "Another stage farce gone wrong. A good program picture. Business about average." "An excellent attraction that proved a remarkable drawing card for three days. Kept our crowds laughing from title to close-up." Big business three days."

"The title might attract them—that's all."—M. P. News.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....OCT. 18
"A real success from every angle."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is very pleasing, box-office receipts about average." "A very pleasing little picture; star has made a place for herself and this picture suits her to a 'T'." "Bebe Daniels shows that she is a real actress. She had a good production and drew well." "Business poor on account of weather. The best and most entertaining picture we have had in months."

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"Humoresque" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"One of the biggest attractions here this year, and drawing big crowds during its two weeks' run."

"The Figure Head" (Selznick)—"Star popular here but picture did not draw an unusual crowd. Played to fair business for a week. Much better than this star's other releases so far. Think he's good, but must have excellent direction and careful stories."

"The Yellow Typhoon" (First National)—"Has very interesting story. Went over big. Good money getter." "A poor picture and was knocked hard by the critics but apparently continued to draw well."

"The Restless Sex" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Is a very fine picture with interesting story and lavish production. Broke house records for attendance during its three weeks' run."

"For the Soul of Rafael" (Equity)—"An average production—some good settings but rather usual in situations. It appeared to draw well."

"Humoresque" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Hangs up a three-week record and packs them in on the last night of 21-day run." "Fourth week held up to good business. Patrons eagerly crowd the house to see it."

"Rio Grande" (Pathe)—"All star cast means no star cast. Too tame." "Average business one day."

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" (Universal)—"My patrons did not like this one. Played it four days to extra big, big, average and poor business."

"Dangerous Trails" (State Rights)—"This production had plenty of action and as a result did extra big business for two days."

"The Best of Luck" (Metro)—"A fine picture, good front. Don't see why I did such poor business. Poor business for three days."

"Why Change Your Wife" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Extra good. Did extra big and big business for two days."

"The Beauty Market" (First National)—"Played this feature on the program with 'The Valley of Tomorrow' starring William Russell (American) to extra big and average business for two days."

"Sex" (Hodkinson)—"Good. Played it two days to extra big and big business."

"In Search of a Sinner" (First National)—"Played this attraction two days with serial 'The Vanishing Trail' to good business first day and average second."

"Footlights and Shadows" (Selznick)—"Fair picture-notoriety of the star helped to bring them in. No kick on this production."

The Unseen Force behind Your Quality Presentation →

MOTIOGRAPH DeLUXE—truly behind quality presentation because its inherent quality, built into it by our twenty-three years of manufacturing motion picture projectors, insures projection that does not approach perfection, but is perfection!

Perfect projection is rock-steadiness, crystal-clarity, sharp definition, all combined with dependability. The MOTIOGRAPH DeLUXE embodies all these points with long-life and ease of operation. Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake Is Complete in Appointments

Fire Protection, Ventilation and Lighting Have Been Given Attention

The foyer proper and the mezzanine foyer promenade are in the same color motif as the main auditorium, enriched with a ceiling panel of figural allegory representing Music and three wall panels representing the modern stage. The corridor ceiling panels are highly ornamental. The friezes and relief work are done in statuary bronze effect, burnished gold and strong primary colors. The walls of the corridor are done in old Caen stone, with set-in panels of mosaics in time-weathered colors.

The outside lobby panels are done in elaborate design of mosaic, with cornice and frieze in dull gold. The ladies' retiring room is done in rose and pearl gray and gold. It is ornamented in natural floral patterns. The gentlemen's smoking room is done in various shades of leather brown and ornamented with designs symbolical of My Lady Nicotine.

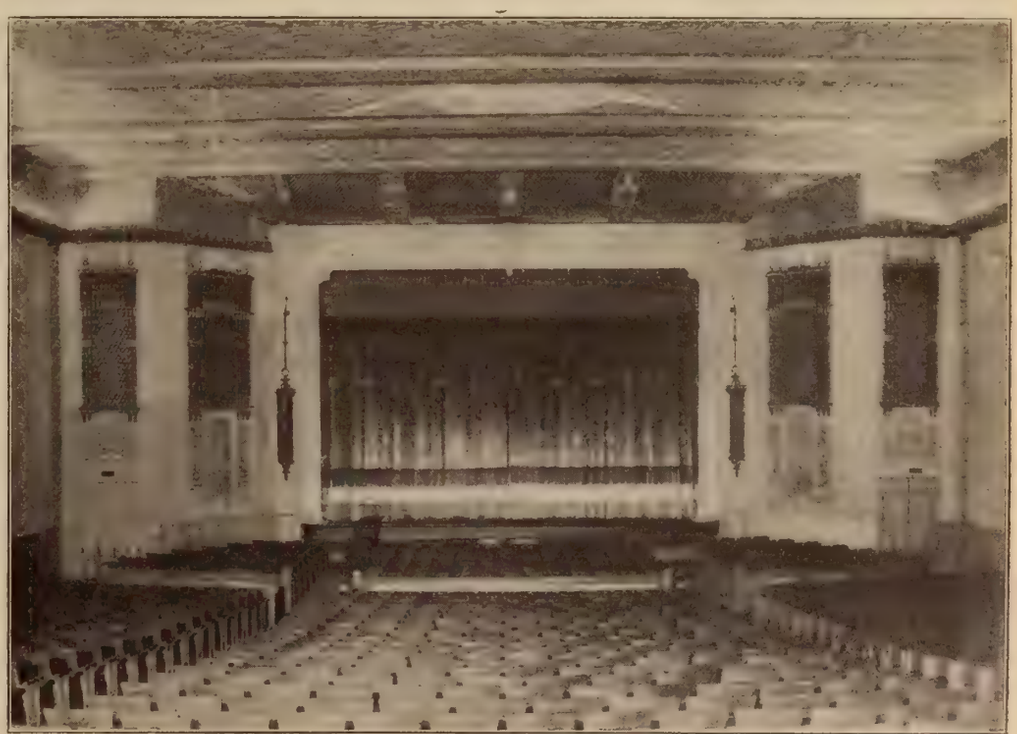
The decorations are by the Bell Decorating Company with headquarters in Seattle. The opening of the Salt Lake house will mark the eleventh new house they have decorated for Mr. Pantages in the last six years.

The box office is made almost entirely of Alaskan marble. This is one of the newest and certainly the most impressive of gray marbles known to the world today. It comes from somewhere east of Seward, in the vicinity of Cook's Inlet, where an early voyager tried to find a new passage to cross the continents. It lies near the line of the Alaska railroad that will soon connect the heart of that great territory with the pulsing Pacific.

It has a rich, bluish-white background for radiating streaks of gray, but more than all, it has life. To a student of marble who knows the history of the stone it speaks volumes. Around the walls are rich panels of this same marble, while under your feet there is a great star pattern, done in white marble from Columbia, Cal., and brown marble from Tennessee. There is also a beautiful marble base to the box office, done in a rare product from Lake Champlain. Above is a triumph of plastic molding, a small dome brilliantly lighted. The whole is an artistically conceived surprise party for the greater appeals to the love of the beautiful found in the interior of the house.

The long entrance arcade is paved in California and Tennessee marble. On either side is a striking baseboard of the Alaska gray, blending with plastic molding on walls and ceiling, and occasional niches illumined by lights of extraordinary workmanship. The Alaska marble in its soft gray follows around the entire lobby at the baseboard and dominates the color scheme by reason of its generous use on the grand winding passageways ascending on either side with massive balustrades of Alaskan marble wonderfully carved.

This description of the Pantages Theatre is so complete in its details that we are glad to give it full space in the Equipment Section. The theatre itself represents one of the finest examples of well-equipped houses that have appeared in the NEWS.



One-half of the entire capacity of the house is on the first floor, with no post in sight. Eight hundred go into the balconies and 300 in the boxes and loges. In making the arrangements for the balconies all possible gross weights were figured for the supporting trusses and were then multiplied by five. There is no possible chance for a breakdown, short of a cataclysm, and by special careful arrangement the house can be emptied in three and a half minutes. It can be filled and emptied in seven minutes.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle, built by the Mormon pioneers, is said by architects to have the best acoustics of any building in the United States. The builders of the new Pantages theatre undoubtedly took lessons from the Tabernacle, as they have done in building other theatres of the Pantages line. In this great new playhouse the base floor has been laid in a great curve or imperfect ellipse, as one might consider a section of an egg shell cut through the longest way. Another section of the shell might be said to represent the great dome over 100 feet above, bending over with its great expanse of art glass, its imposingly beautiful dome and its myriads of brilliant lights.

In harmony with this arrangement, the sides of the big auditorium are slightly curved along vertical lines and the balcony, represented by the mezzanine floor and the two sections of the upper floor, carry out the scheme of curvature. This has been found productive of almost perfect results in other theatres by the same builders and has been carried out in Salt Lake with the elimination of such imperfections as experience has shown to exist.

The stage and dressing rooms and all parts of the house where there might be any danger of fire are protected with an automatic sprinkler system supplied through a six-inch water main running from Main street under the building to a point underneath the stage, where it is distributed throughout the building. The theatre is also equipped with an independent fire system consisting of 800 feet of hose distributed into eight units supplied through an independent four-inch high-pressure supply main, with two units in the auditorium, two units in the bal-

Heating and Ventilating Systems Used by Picture Theatres on the West Coast

The Last of a Series of Articles on Equipment by Charles Butte of the Beeco Firm

THE physical comfort of the patrons in any theatre depends to a great extent on the proper ventilatng and heating system. The construction of many theatres does not permit of the most efficient heating and ventilating system, namely the individual mushroom system using the basement or the sub-space as the plenum chamber.

Many of the auditorium floors are built directly on the ground and other means must be devised to furnish proper ventilation and proper heating. If it were possible to merely throw a mass of heated air out into the auditorium without considering the fact that the balcony atmosphere would be considerably hotter than the auditorium floor, the heating system would be a simple matter to design.

In many installations on the Coast heating ducts are provided on each side of the proscenium arch forming part of the ornamental grill built around the arch. Underground ducts are installed prior to the completion of the auditorium floor to carry the heated air back to the foyer and to the rear portion of the auditorium. In several cases vitreous pipe was used for these underground ducts, but in recent installations a concrete duct was built at the time of pouring the concrete form work of the structure.

The location of the wall and floor radiators in the rear portion of the auditorium and foyer are so located to give the best distributing results. The relation of the radiators in reference to the passageways in the foyer and the foyer doors is taken into consideration when locating the radiators referred to. The heating and ventilation of the balcony requires more care than any other portion of the auditorium, particularly in theatres where smoking is permitted in the balcony. Several installations using the mushroom in the balcony floor only have proven very successful and in several installations where it was impossible to install the systhem therein, the scheme of ventilation was reversed, namely the air was blown in instead of exhausted from the balcony ceiling. It was found that this method provided advantageous insofar as it kept the air of the balcony in motion and did not suck out all of the heated air from the auditorium. No appreciable draught was caused by this system and no complaint has been heard from in regard to any patron feeling cold air blown in from the ceiling above the balcony floor.

The movement of the atmosphere particularly where smoking is permitted, can be readily seen when the operating room is in use and it makes an interesting study to watch the atmospheric changes that occur by this system. In the interior cities where we have warm summers, air washers are provided with the heating and ventilating system to cool the air during the summer months. In the extreme dry cold season these air washers are at times used to humidify the heated air before blowing into the auditorium. The mechanical equipment of the heating and ventilating system should be of the type that will not create draughts nor should the velocity of the discharged atmosphere cause any immediate changes at the point of the radiators. Slow speed, large volume fans should be used.

The speed of the motors driving the fans should be variable and the type of motor and controlling apparatus should be provided to obtain these results. While it has been found in a number of installations, particularly in San Francisco where no extreme variations in temperature exist, that the fans can be operated efficony, two units on the stage and two units in the corridor under stage near the dressing rooms.

Although the building is as nearly fireproof as it is possible to construct it, Mr. Pantages spared no pains or expense in making it doubly protected against any emergency in case of fire.

The house is heated by steam, derived from a twenty-inch main running through the basement of the theatre from the Utah Power & Light Company's power plant, and is then distributed through different units of Vento heaters, which heat the air drawn into the house through an air shaft near the top of the building, the air being drawn through the first unit of heaters, then through an air washer, then through the second unit of heaters and then drawn through the large fan, then blown into the plenum chamber, distributing the warm air through mushroom ventilators located at proper points underneath seats and in the auditorium and balcony.

The corridor is heated by the air being blown through a third unit of heaters and distributed at different points through wall registers. The main fan, which is motor driven, is the largest ever installed in any theatre in the western country and has a capacity of delivering 60,000 cubic feet of pure washed air every minute throughout all parts of the theatre.

The foul air is exhausted from all parts of the theatre through three units of exhaust fans, which are installed in the pent house on the roof of the theatre. Unit No. 1 exhausts the foul air from the theatre proper, Unit No. 2 from the toilet and smoking rooms and unit No. 3 from the dressing, toilet and shower rooms, etc. It is possible to change the air in the theatre every minute.

The temperature of the house is regulated and controlled by the Johnson automatic temperature control, which automatically shuts the steam off from the different units of the Vento heaters, making it possible to keep the theatre at the proper temperature in all kinds of weather. The air washer is equipped so that ice can be used in the summer months for cooling and washing the air with pure ice water, so as to keep the house at the proper temperature in all seasons of the year. The house is equipped with the latest up-to-date vacuum cleaning system for cleaning all parts of the theatre.

ciently at a certain speed, however, in other locations where the temperature varies considerably, the speed of the fans is varied during the various seasons to give proper results. The type of motor that should be used in connection with the ventilating system depends in many cases on the conditions existing. While the direct current motor is the type that can be most easily arranged for variable speeds, it can not be always used as direct current is not always available in the location of the theatre. Single-phase variable-speed motors of the brush shifting type have been used with considerable success. Single-phase motors with the variable grid type controllers have also proven successful and it is only the conditions existing in each particular installation that would determine which type to use. Variable-speed two-phase and three-phase motors have been used in several cases, but the close regulation obtainable on direct current motors or on single-phase motors cannot be obtainable as accurately as with the types mentioned before. The location of the fans and motors should receive careful consideration to avoid any noise reaching the auditorium. The fan should not be located directly under the stage, as the vibrations are carried out to the audience through the proscenium arch. Preferably the fan should be located in the concrete room built under the side of the stage floor. The auxiliary fans located in the balcony should be provided with substantial foundations to prevent the carrying of vibrations through the balcony ceiling structure.

The method of heating the air in many installations where steam is available consists of banks of steam coils or radiators. Where steam is not available and oil burning boiler equipment is generally provided and hot water or low pressure steam is used for heating the air blown through these coils by the fresh air ventilating fan. Oil burners are universally used for these purposes as they require minimum attention and give maximum results. The foul air exhaust fan generally exhausts through grills provided under the balcony and in the auditorium ceiling. In several installations what is known as half-way exhausts have been tried out placing the exhaust grills midway between the line of the balcony and the auditorium ceiling. No definite result that could be of any particular benefit has been obtained by the installation of these half-way exhaust outlets. The amount of fresh air that should be discharged by the heating and ventilating system depends to a great extent upon the character of the structure and not entirely upon the seating capacity thereof. No set rule can be made to fit all conditions, but on a comparative basis, approximately twenty thousand cubic feet per minute should be provided for a house seating three thousand people. These figures cannot be taken as a definite factor, but each case must be determined in relation to the conditions existing therein.

Many of the smaller theatres are heating by means of gas radiators, a system that should be avoided wherever possible. Where these gas radiators must be used, ventilation should be provided for each radiator to take off the carbon monoxide gas that is emitted from the gas flame. The heating of the air should be done by radiation and not by direct gas heating. Many types of gas radiators are on the market that will give fairly good results for small auditoriums. The conditions noted by the patrons where the gas radiator is used should indicate that this method of heating should be avoided. Sleepiness and discomfort in breathing are some of the indications of the vitiated condition in the auditorium atmosphere.

New Theatre in Philadelphia

THE Carman theatre, which opened on Thanksgiving Day, is Philadelphia's latest moving picture house. Built of brick, and covering a large area, it is an attractive one story building of pleasing design, with a fine exterior and an up-to-date lobby, decorated with framed star photographs, plants, and so forth, the ticket booth being in the center.

The theatre is quite modern, not only in appearance, but in appointments. It is open on all four sides, with windows the entire length of two of these, behind attractive lattice work. A modern heating system keeps it warm, and the presence of the many windows insures the necessary amount of fresh air.

The Carman doesn't aim at pretentiousness. It is a neighborhood house, situated in Tioga, near the mill district, and it has been built with a view to giving first-class first-run pictures at moderate prices, with every possible convenience for its patrons, including attractive lounging and retiring rooms on the mezzanine floor for both ladies and gentlemen.

It has a Wurlitzer Organ and the newest type Simplex projection machines. The lighting is especially good. It is all indirect, and when the concealed side lights are turned on the effect is a slow flooding of the place with light, similar to the effect of sunrise. They tone down again to moonlight, making a most attractive feature. During the showing of the pictures side lights, pretty shaded, provide plenty of chance for visitors to find places without stumbling.

The color scheme of the new house is buff and blue. Admission prices range from ten and fifteen cents for the afternoon performance to fifteen and twenty at night, including the tax.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Incandescent Lamp for Stereopticon Service

Information Compiled by H. F. Barnes, Lighting Service Department

A Mazda lamp emits light in practically all directions, therefore as much light is given off away from the condensing lenses as toward them. If a mirror were placed back of the lamp to redirect these rays, at least 50 per cent would be added to the screen illumination.

The mirror chosen is a spherical one. A sounding board, for example, is often placed in an auditorium behind the speaker, and serves to redirect the sound in that direction toward the audience. The mirror is the sounding board for light rays, and serves the same purpose. If we had taken a hollow glass ball, silvered it on the outside so that the silvering reflected

Showing What the Spherical Mirror Really Is—a Section of a Hollow Glass Ball Silvered on the Outside with the Silvering Reflecting toward the Center of the Ball. Thus, if a filament is placed in the center, all light striking the mirrored surface will be reflected directly back upon the center towards the inside of the ball, and then cut off a section of the ball, the section cut off would be our spherical mirror.

The mirror is placed a distance to the rear of the filament corresponding to its radius; its diameter must be sufficient to cover the light angle subtended by the condenser; making the mirror larger than this will put no more light on the screen.

This angle, oftentimes called the "useful angle" of light, is that between lines drawn from the filament to the edges of the condenser. The mirror must reflect light back through this angle. When it reflects light back through a greater angle, the light does not strike the condenser. Consequently, it is of no use.

The Light Source

The brilliancy of a picture in all projection depends largely upon the brilliancy of the light source. By brilliancy we mean the candle-power per unit area. If we had a candle flame 1-in. square, giving off one candle-power, and also a piece of incandescent tungsten 1-in. square giving off 2500 candle-power, we would say that the tungsten was 2500 times as brilliant as the candle.

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easily understandable language.

The effectiveness of a Mazda light source then depends upon two things—the concentration of the filament, so as to approximate a solid light source, and the brilliancy of the wire.

Lamp Construction

The majority of stereopticon type lamps were formerly enclosed in round or globular bulbs, the size of the bulb being roughly dependent on the wattage. Thus a 100-watt lamp is enclosed in a G-25 bulb, while a 1000-watt lamp may be enclosed in a G-48. If hard glass is used, the bulb size may be decreased. The glass must, of course, provide sufficient radiating surface.

"Smiling Joe" Hornstein and "Hustling Bill" Kunzmann shaking hands over Joe's order for carbons, the largest single order Bill has ever received.

Again, the bulb must be large enough to provide for blackening. When a filament is heated, and especially so at high temperatures, a vapor is given off, which, upon coming into contact with the relatively cooler surface of the glass, condenses as a black deposit. This deposit must take place high enough to insure its non-interference with the light rays.

This deterioration of the filament, the usual blackening of the bulb, is taken into account in the rating of the lamp. Stereopticon lamps are rated, therefore, to give not less than 80 per cent of their original candle-power at the end of one hundred hours.

In all projection, as explained before, one necessary feature of the lamp is a concentrated light source. The more light, i.e., the more wire we can crowd into a small area, the more efficient will the light source be. Obviously, attempting to bend or kink a straight piece of wire into a small space, would not prove satisfactory, so the wire was made into a coil. Actually, in the factory, the tungsten wire is wound on a thick piece of steel wire or "mandrel," as it is termed, and after the coil has been made into a sufficient length the mandrel is taken out. It is much the same process as winding a piece of string around your finger. Thus by coiling a long piece of wire, we are able to concentrate the light into a small area.

A 400-watt, 110-volt Mazdo stereopticon lamp, for instance, has a filament which if stretched out is almost 29 inches in length; when coiled, the coil of wire occupies a length of practically 3 inches. It is then bent into sections approximately ⅜ inch long; and the filament arranged on a circumference of a small circle, the coils being practically parallel to each other.

This particular construction is known as C-5. When the filament is mounted in the bulb, the light center length (abbreviated L.C.L.) must be carefully determined. L.C.L. is the perpendicular distance from botton of base to center of filament.

The projection room of the Rivoli has the following equipment: Three 6B type "E" Power's with all the latest improvements, three Peerless Arc Controls and one spot light. The machines are equipped with Power's film footage indicators and Power's speed indicators. Ammeters and speed indicating units are mounted on panels between the machines. Additional Power's speed indicators were ordered by the Wilson Amusement Company for use in the manager's office and by the orchestra leader.

It is interesting to note that the owners of the Rivoli are following the custom of other progressive managers by equipping their theatre with speed indicators. The Branford recently opened in Newark have three of the Power's indicators in the projection room, one for the manager, one for the orchestra leader and one for the organist. This willingness of owners to be liberal in the matter of getting the latest and most complete equipment for the projection room is one of the things that helps to make better projectionists. As the public becomes more critical the managers become more exacting and the projectionists become more skillful. It is obvious, however, that the manager who gets new and up-to-date equipment is going to make his projectionists take more interest in their work and the results will be better for all concerned. Chief Projectionist Haggard and Mr. Guy Wonders of the Rivoli in securing the very latest equipment will undoubtedly find that the public of Baltimore appreciate the liberal and progressive shown by the Wilson Amusement Company.

Working Plans of Projection Room of New Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

Showing Location of Machines, Switchboard and Other Equipment Besides Wiring Layout

ON page 1228 there will be found a set of plans for the projection room of the recently opened Rivoli theatre at Baltimore. These plans, which were prepared expressly for the NEWS by Mr. Herbert Griffin, Technical Engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, represent one of the finest pieces of projection engineering that has been brought to our attention in many months, and for that reason the projectionists who look forward to the time when they will be placed in charge of a better room than they now occupy should clip this page and keep it for reference.

The entire projection layout occupies a space 29 feet in length and 10½ feet in depth, with a ceiling nearly 11 feet high. In this space there had to be accommodated three projection machines, a spotlight and a motor generator set. A study of the plans will indicate best just how this was arranged by Mr. Griffin, so that a sufficient amount of room was allowed in all directions.

Looking first at the top plan, it will be seen that this is the "Floor and Ceiling Layout," showing principally the simple electric light wiring and the position of the ventilating fans. The outlet boxes in the floor are also shown. At the upper right-hand corner are the steps leading to the projection room from the balcony.

The second plan from the top of page 1228 gives the front wall plan with machine and observation ports and the Powers' speed indicators in place. The wires leading from the indicators to the manager's office and organ console can be seen at the right. At the left is the rheostat and rewind room with its separate porthole.

Then comes the third drawing, which shows the conduit layout from motor generator to switchboard, and from there to the separate machines. Beside each conduit is stated the size and number of conductors to be run in it. This plan also shows clearly the adequateness of the ventilation system. There is a 16-in. exhaust fan in both the motor generator room and the rewind room, and an 18-in. fan near the center of the projection machine room.

Finally at the bottom of the page is the detailed sketch of the front wall layout, with the sizes of the ports and distance between them.

The Equipment Department of the NEWS is glad to publish this series of drawings in the hope that the engineering features presented will be appreciated by the architectural fraternity specializing on theatres, and that through their use the standard of theatre projection rooms will be raised.

Questions and Answers

37. Only what kind of articles are permissible in a booth?

Only such articles as are necessary for immediate use should be permitted in the booth. Care should be taken that all films not in actual use be kept in fireproof cans.

38. Only what kind of wiring is permitted in a booth?

Only asbestos covered wire is permissible in a booth.

39. Only what kind of fuses are permissible in a booth?

Link fuses.

40. In case current is cut off at the plant, what is the first thing to do immediately? Why?

Open all incoming switches so that when current comes on again all motors, control devices, etc., will be in correct position.

41. Give detailed accounts of how electrical contacts in booths should be kept at all times.

Electrical contacts should be maintained in an A1 condition, bright, free from rust, rigid and protected insofar as possible.

42. What is the best prevention of fire?

Carefullness every minute of the day.

43. What metals are 100% efficient as current conductors?

All metals offer some resistance to the flow of electric current; silver and copper, however, offer the least resistance, and of these copper is the material usually used.

44. When the temperature of metal rises, what effect does that have on its resistance?

The resistance of all materials except carbon increases with a rise in temperature.

45. When does resistance increase? (a) When decrease?

Increase with rise in temperature, except in the case of carbon. Decrease with fall of temperature, except in the case of carbon.

46. What kind of insulation is not permissible in a booth?

Rubber insulation.

WHAT COULD WE DO WITHOUT YOU? NOT MUCH!

J. M. BLANCHARD,
Strand Theatre,
Sunbury, Pa.

E. W. Hammons,
Educational Film Co.,
New York City.

As I am greatly interested in the coming Musical Conference which is to take place at the Hotel Astor in New York City on January 24th-26th, under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, I am interested to know if an argument is to be put forward for the betterment of musical accompaniment for scenic and scientific subjects, which I believe the Educational Film Co. excels in. I make this inquiry but for one reason and that is because I have always maintained that the scenic subject if properly handled as to pprogram space, music cueing and advertising, is the whole beauty of the diversified program of the leading motion picture theatres, and it is my candid belief that all other theatres, other than the first-run houses, can be made to feature these scenic and scientific subjects to their advantage if it is brought forcibly to their attention at the coming conference.

I am in charge of the staging of the performances at both of Phil Gleichman's theatres, namely the Broadway-Strand and the Majestic, and I think your local manager, Mr. Starr, can tell you that the scenic subject receives as much attention on our programs as the feature, in many instances an entire prologue or epilogue has been built up around these subjects with music that is matchless, until our patrons come now to see the performances and not the feature alone as was the case in the past and as the engagements at the Broadway-Strand are extended to from two to four weeks, it speaks for itself as to the general make-up of the program in which the short subject plays an important part.

In conclusion can only say that I hope this is a matter that many fine points will be advanced in favor of, at this coming conference, and I have in mind some things that will be very helpful to some exhibitors who do not give the picture of Educational value the place which rightfully belongs to it upon the program of the present day.

Extending to you the season's greetings, I am,
BROADWAY-STRAND THEATRE,
Francis A. Mangan.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Apparently the conference is going to be one of the most interesting conventions I have ever heard of; I hope it will be entirely successful from your viewpoint. If every speaker will do his best to help the general cause, and refrain from advertising himself, I am confident it will be a magnificent achievement, the credit for which must all go to you.

The subject of THE AMERICAN ORGANIST is all too big to be dealt with by me in a brief address; in your own interests I feel it my duty to ask you to substitute M. M. Hansford in my place. He knows the picture end of it far better than I, and he would be able to fill a brief space on your program with much better satisfaction to the viewpoint you must maintain. In fact, I am so utterly at sea as to what limitations of interpretations to drive at, that I could only be a disappointment to you. Perhaps after I've gone through this first conference and observed the drift, I'd be able to do your bidding the next time, if there ever is a next.

To me the subject divides itself into these phases, each of which must ultimately be faced:

1. The organist must have a good organ, which he has never yet been given in the theatre.
2. He himself must be recruited not from the theatre-pianist type, but from the church-organist type, and what a revolution he must undergo!
3. He must learn the business by experience, and be given ample time to so learn it.
4. He must use organ music or piano music, or in every case legitimate transcriptions, and not attempt to follow present cue-sheets with their mass of publishing-house hash.
5. He must have at least one full day off each week.
6. Unless he is to experiment at the expense of the public's ears, he must have a projection room where he can prereview the picture and arrange his program.

And with every one of these phases we reach a hundred difficulties. I would be too serious and not practical enough, to fittingly occupy a place on your program; so I suggest Mr. Hansford, who is practical and who would do credit to both you and your program.

I shall attend all sessions of the conference and do it justice in subsequent publicity; and I hope there will be some addresses which you will allow us to print, giving the NEWS and the CONFERENCE due credit.

Perhaps in some of the informal discussions I might find a phase of some subject here and there which I would like to speak on for a minute or two, but I would only do the conference harm by attempting to write an address now without any adequate idea of what that address should cover. Might I suggest also that you consider the advisability of asking Robert Berentsen, New Atlantic theatre, Brooklyn, to make a few remarks on the subject? I believe he could interest your managers with some ideas that would be practical and worth while listening to. And I think he would be a capable speaker. The moving picture end of it is all too new to me; it is like trying to talk about the world and all that is therein.

With cordial regards,
SCOT BUHRMAN,
Editor "American Organist,"
New York City.

Pennsylvania Censor Board Installs Simplex

A most noteworthy achievement recorded by Lewis M. Swaab, Philadelphia distributor for Simplex Projectors, is indicated in a recent factory report which includes the installation of 6 Simplex Projectors in the reviewing rooms of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors. This board, due to its activities, has long ago gained a national reputation, and the keen interest shown by its members not only in film subjects, but in projection matters, makes its determination to standardize on the one type of projector much more noteworthy.

The Board of Censors was created in 1914, thru a legislative act, but owing to the lack of appropriation, did not start functioning until June of the same year, when one motion picture equipment comprised the projection apparatus upon which all censored films were reviewed. From time to time, new machines were added as the volume of reviews increased, until there were 6 picture machines installed in the projection room, with the machine representation fairly equally divided among the limited number of machine manufacturers.

The many advantages to be gained thru standardization of projection equipment, however, was frequently called to the attention of the Board by Mr. Swaab, who is a well-known pioneer film and supply man, and acting upon his advice, the Board issued an order for three Simplex Projectors late in November, that finally resulted in Simplexizing this most important projection room which now boasts of a battery of 6 Simplex Machines.

As an indication of the importance of high-grade projection, together with a substantial, well-built machine that will stand up under continual high-speed that is demanded in this type of work, it is quite in order to remark that the example thus established by the Pennsylvania Board will be followed in a great many cases by similar Boards throughout the country, and at the present writing, most elaborate plans are being made by the Massachusetts Board of Public Safety which is not only contemplating the equipment of a high-grade projection room for censorship purposes, but a most comprehensive installation of projection and electrical equipment upon which to examine prospective projectionists as well.

The projection maintained at the Pennsylvania Censorship Board is under the direction of Mr. Samuel Johnson, an active and progressive type of modern projectionist, who is high in his praises for the Simplex qualities that enable this particular type of projector to stand up indefinitely under the exacting duties which censorship reviewings call for.

Lucas Moves Into Larger Quarters

According to reports the Lucas Supply Co. has taken over two more floors in the building where they have been located, adding about 7,500 feet of floor space. The main office has been decorated and new lighting effects installed.

The special departments consist of the following:

Repair and assembling department, in which there is every tool and appliance for repairing and rebuilding motion picture apparatus; printing department, in which all of the enormous amount of literature is printed, and where the Lucas catalogue was also made.

There will be a theatre constructed on the second floor of the building, in which the Southern exhibitors will have the opportunity of seeing the latest projection apparatus and appliance in actual use.

This model theatre will also have a front and lobby decoration and equipped with the latest designed frames.

On the third floor of the building is where the Hakilu cement is manufactured; a research department for experimenting and inventing new ideas for the improvement of theatres and projection of same, painting and enameling department, carpenter shop completely fitted for the manufacture of lobby display frames and a chemical laboratory.

Supply Firm Formed in Birmingham

The Queen Feature Service of Birmingham, Alabama, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 with A. M. Graham, president and general manager; Eugene M. Smith, vice-president, and Mr. W. S. Bell, secretary and treasurer.

The company carries a complete line of theatre equipment, and is prepared to furnish everything that is used in a theatre from the front door to the screen. They are also distributing an independent film service, and are in the market for first-class state right productions, either short subjects or features.

New Neighborhood House in Philadelphia

MESSRS. FINEMAN, SELTZER & FINEMAN are to be congratulated on the beautiful new Amber Theatre in the Kensington District, Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Seltzer, the efficient manager, is making an earnest effort to give the people of this district the finest in pictures and music.

One of the main attractions in this beautiful new theatre is the three manual Concert organ built by the Marr & Colton Company, Inc., Warsaw, N. Y. The main organ is located on the stage directly in back of the screen with a sounding board from the organ chamber to the proscenium arch, which directs the tone direct to the center of the stage instead of allowing it to go up into the flies and be entirely lost in volume and quality. The Echo organ is in the rear of the theatre and is located in such a way that it gives a beautiful effect.

The installation required considerable study on the part of the organ builders and the results accomplished are very satisfactory. Besides the regular organ stops the instrument contains Harp, Celesta, Glockenspiel and Cathedral Chimes. In fact every tonal family to be found in the orchestra is represented.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Reckless Wives"

HERE we have a drama of smart society with the country home of one of the idle rich and its beautiful lawns and grounds as the setting in which is portrayed the tragic consequences of a reckless wife's selfish infatuation for a young artist. The story is well told on the screen and holds the interest throughout, with several really tense situations which are well developed and a finish which will please those who want to see virtue triumphant and the conventional happy ending.

Mrs. Corbin, played by Myra Murray, wife of a millionaire, emotional and unhappy in her married life, idle and seeking excitement and diversion, becomes interested in George Cameron (Leslie Austen) a rising young artist who becomes a victim of her charms, ignoring the love of a sweet little girl in the home of whose parents he had been brought up. Florence Corbin, sister of Mrs. Bobette Corbin, also loves the young artist and when an ugly scandal develops from the flirtation of Mrs. Corbin and Cameron, the younger girl is used by Mrs. Corbin to hush the affair up and is driven to commit suicide when she learns the truth. Cameron suffers a nervous breakdown as a result and is nursed back to health by the "little girl" whom he has known since childhood and realizes that she is the one he loves and that his affair with Mrs. Cameron had been only a temporary infatuation.

Myra Murray is excellent as the reckless wife and Leslie Austin, who by the way is well known on the speaking stage, gives a fine portrayal of the young artist. Out of doors scenes are very beautiful and the interiors are adequate. The picture will appeal to lovers of society melodrama.—L. H. MASON.

"The Elements of the Automobile"

WHAT is characterized as a step in seven league boots is offered in the field of visual education by the Bray picture, "The Elements of the Automobile." J. F. Leventhal of the Bray forces takes up the visual analysis of every mechanical feature of the automobile through a series of animated mechanical pictures. The offering is the result of two years' work.

This picture is indorsed by the U. S. Motor Transport Corps and may be called a direct outgrowth of the visual education pictures made during the war. Such a course is really intensive training for the student who is able to concentrate and visualize and thus absorb quickly what text-books would not be able to impart except after months of studious application. The picture is made on the order of a serial which is to say that its reels overlap one another. The simplest technical language accompanies each pictorial explanation of the different elements which start with the front wheels and axle and detail the development of the auto through to the finished product.

Each element is dwelt upon with careful emphasis so that the "raw" amateur is able to absorb the knowledge. The wheels, axles, propeller shafts, transmission, differential, engine, carburetor, ignition and other elements are thoroughly visualized in a manner that can be caught by a child.

The exhibitor who books this feature can perform a real service. Every person who owns or drives a motor car should see it; every person who contemplates buying one should also see it. The exhibitor can link up with schools, the Y. M. C. A., and other educational bodies. The educational possibilities of the screen are just beginning to be realized. Indeed the silversheet may supplant the textbook in another generation. Length, 11 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

Kineto Review, No. 16

(Urban)

THE title of this subject running more than 950 feet, is indicative. It is "Beauty Spots," referring to some of the "garden spots of the earth," found, in this film, in divers places. It starts with "Magnolia-on-the-Ashley" at Charleston, South Carolina, where the gardens shown have been famed for beauty since 1671, and visited by tourists. An aged darkey overseer is paid the compliment of having devoted his life to the charming estate, with gratifying results, of which he is justly proud. Other interesting spots of beauty are shown, including one called "The Fisherman's Paradise," in Digby County, Nova Scotia, and "Apple Blossom Time" in that country is more beautiful, seemingly, than in any other, resembling "Cherry Blossom Time," in Japan. The scenes are enticing and are particularly well adapted to run ahead of a feature where the location touches upon the land of Arcady.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Driftin' Kid"

(Two-Reel Western-Universal)

ED (HOOT) GIBSON had a restless disposition in "The Driftin' Kid," a fairly interesting two-reeler which presents him at odds with his ranch job and anxious to drift along. Hoot has his arms sprawled along a fence rail and wearing a woebegone expression as the picture opens. This is not the "he-man" western that one expects from this native son, yet it offers a likely story which the star makes interesting in his own original way. He climbs into the "'democrat" to meet the owner of the XL ranch who is expected with her niece. The "driftin'" part of the title comes in because Hoot believes that the girl likes the dude of the ranch in preference to him. At the "shindig" that night the action starts. He thwarts the villain and is about to drift when the girl makes it evident that she loves him. This is an average picture which is sort of weak in "punch" scenes. Hoot, however, adds the necessary color.—LAURENCE REID.

"Screen Snapshots"—No. 17

THERE is enough variety in the latest "Screen Snapshots" to please every type of picture fan. Popular leading men, character actors and a galaxy of feminine stars, to say nothing of the actors' wives are presented as they look over the auto races from the grandstand in Los Angeles. One spies Herbert Rawlinson thoroughly interested. And Charles Ray, Frank Keenan and Missus, H. B. Warner and Better Half, Sessue Hayakawa and camera, Bryant Washburn, Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, Douglas MacLean, Director Lloyd Ingraham, Tom Mix, Earle Williams and Wife. They all have their eyes on the races and the camera at the same time. It must be chilly in the grandstand, because all of them are attired in overcoats. A close-up is offered of Charlie Chaplin's former studio which is taken over by Carter De Haven. S. L. Rothafel comes in for a little exploitation. Director Jack White shows an effort at realism by "shooting" a scene of a burning hotel with the guests rescued in the nick of time. Will Rogers? Yes, he comes in for a quaint shot or two—spinning the lariat and feeding the "inner man." The reel closes with Mae Murray displaying some of her million-dollar wardrobe.—Length one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Quaint Kuala Lumpur"

(Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue)

THIS travelogue takes the audience to a modernized Far Eastern city. Kuala Lumpur is in the Malay Peninsula. Luckily an animated map in the beginning of the reel shows its exact location. There are not many unusual scenic shots in the picture, most of the views being of the city itself, with its banks and public buildings. The natives, with their quaint dress, add a picturesque touch. The titles are metrical.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT"
(De Mille-Paramount)

De Mille Scores Another Ten Strike; A Great Audience Picture

SCORE another for Cecil B. De Mille! The producer of "Midsummer Madness" eclipses that technically perfect picture in the way he has handled his theme and characterization. That he is an expert technician is proven in the manner he can take an old idea and by stressing its pathos, emphasizing its human interest, indulging in by-play and incorporating clever incident, make it look like something absolutely new. Jeanie MacPherson has given him a modern version of the Cinderella tale—one fraught with tense drama and human touches—one which reveals an age-old problem in an up-to-date way and he has made it throb with action and suspense.

The picture might be called theatrical because the characters are so Cinderella like in their sketching, but De Mille pulls a chord here and there which has dramatic meaning and the spectator is truly caught in the embrace. The title is a sop thrown at the box-office window and has nothing to do with the theme. Yet it is a magnet. Once inside the patron will forget that it is totally irrelevant. In our opinion the picture will outdraw "Midsummer Madness" because it is based upon an idea that ever interests. Besides it is straight legitimate, drama except for a fantastic interlude which reproduces the ancient Cinderella tale. This portion of the picture doesn't advance the action, in fact retards it. It could have been dispensed with entirely. This is the only criticism we have to make of this exceptional feature.

The story, otherwise, builds evenly and surely, giving forth its vital situations and soaring to a melodramatic climax which is tense with suspense. De Mille will surprise the spectator, too. One might guess that the worthless husband will be caught by a policeman, but his elimination is saved until the conclusion and then it is brought about in a totally unexpected way. He and his partner in crime shake dice for their ill-gotten wealth and the former is killed. His body is thrust into a box couch and the blood drops give away the crime. The idea revolves around the right of a poor, distressed wife to seek happiness for a brief time by playing Cinderella. A subtitle brings out the force of the argument when it says "there is the protection of law against the big wounds of matrimony, but none for the scratches. Yet a human can die from a pin prick." The picture is wonderfully staged. Lavish are the scenes in which the pretty seamstress doubles as a society girl. The drab settings of the squalid home are first rate, too. The acting is in capable hands. Agnes Ayres makes an attractive and sympathetic figure of the heroine who would be Cinderella, although she might have expressed more pathos in the husband and wife scenes. De Mille has done better by the other players. Kathlyn Williams, Theodore Roberts, Forrest Stanley, Clarence Burton and Theodore Kosloff are perfectly cast. The latter as a crooked butler gives an exceptional study in pantomime. The picture is certain of packed houses.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture which is said to exert a powerful appeal in its exposition of married life is "Forbidden Fruit," the Cecil B. De Mille production that comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with an all-star cast including such popular players as Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Kathlyn Williams and Forrest Stanley. The story rises to dramatic heights in the depiction of the sufferings of a young wife, who, married to a shiftless scoundrel, ultimately finds happiness in the love of a real man.

Jeanie MacPherson, the author, and Mr. De Mille have shown that the marriage laws are detrimental to those who suffer. While a wife can escape through big wounds, the small injuries do not give her the right to have freedom, although a human being can die from a pin-prick. The sponsors have built their subject around the small injuries. The picture develops through scenes of strong dramatic power, scenes which are replete with pathos and thrills. It is elaborately staged and the feminine principals wear striking gowns. The production is in every sense a feast for the eye. It is said to be a dramatic triumph since it shows the clash of wealth with property, duty with love, and honor with desire.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre will be deeply interested in the announcement that Manager ———— has been so fortunate as to book the latest Cecil B. De Mille production, "Forbidden Fruit," for an engagement beginning next ————. Mr. De Mille has produced this picture with an all-star cast, on a scale so sumptuous that it eclipses all his other motion pictures. The production deals with a great problem of married life—a conflict between love and duty and convention—and it is solved in a way we believe will prove to be to your satisfaction. An all-star cast that includes Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Kathlyn Williams and Forrest Stanley renders perfect support.

CATCH LINES

Come and see Cecil B. De Mille's masterpiece, "Forbidden Fruit," a tremendous drama of love and matrimony. Beautifully staged and acted by an all-star cast.

"THE MOUNTAIN WOMAN"
(Fox)

An Excellent Pearl White Vehicle

IN "The Mountain Woman," Fox seems to have found the kind of story which has the possibilities of making Pearl White as popular in features as she was in serials. For this picture has interest, and suspense as far as the romance goes; some of the best exteriors as a background for the action that we have ever seen; and is well directed.

But it has something more than all this—it has a character which Miss White fits—well, like she fitted the persecuted heroine of the serial. It is a vehicle that will leave in the memory of an audience an excellent impression of the star and give them perfect satisfaction as an interesting photodrama. First of all, there is a locale with an audience appeal—the Kentucky mountains. Wherever the scenes were taken, they are perfect. Exterior follows exterior of sturdy timberlands, precipitous crags, stony creeks and deep wooded mountain trails. Then there is the action. First the lumbering scenes, and the bringing of the logs-raft down the river; then a burning hotel and a thrilling escape; an attempted hold-up; some gunplay, and the star left bound and gagged in a deserted mine shaft. And in the final reel, although the climax has been passed and the thread of romance is being developed, there is a granary set on fire and another thrill for good measure.

The star is cast as a daughter of a lumberman, who has been brought up as a boy. Her father is wounded by a moonshine-soaked mountaineer and she herself takes the lograft downstream. Receiving payment, she is attacked on her return, and finally saved by her friends. She goes back to her mountain home in safety to find her father is dead. One expects to have the picture end here. But the girl must have a husband, and there are three to choose from. So, while the story momentarily drops in interest, it quickly picks up, and moves on with a bit of comedy relief brought in by the mountain Romeo who laconically exclaims that "he aims to wed with that girl." The final action of the burning granary is forced but makes a good ending.

The cast is good. Miss White has the only female role. Her satellites are Corlis Giles, John Webb Dillon and Richard Travers. J. Thornton Baston is the villain. The title writer deserves credit for hitting off the mountaineer dialect without overdoing it. Director Giblyn has put over the atmosphere of the Kentucky hills in a very clever fashion.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Few stars have attained more fame in picturedom than Pearl White, the former star of many serials, who is now being featured in five-reel productions and who has the leading role in "The Mountain Woman," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This picture is an adaptation of the popular novel by Charles Neville Buck, "The Pagan of the Hills."

Charles Giblyn, director of this picture, took his entire company into the heart of the Cumberland mountains in Kentucky to film the scenes in the exact location in which the story is laid. The picture is filled with exciting moments as the life of the hardy mountaineers is depicted on the screen. Its characters are all types of the picturesque, quaint lumbermen of the hills who have endeared themselves to the hearts of all who have visited that section.

Miss White is given the role of a daughter of a lumberman, and is known throughout the countryside as "the girl in pants." Apt and ready with revolver and fist to protect herself, she is far from "the clinging vine type of girl. But at the end one persistent suitor, who has been wooing her with fear in his heart, breaks through her rough exterior and finds that she is truly feminine after all.

Supporting the star is a capable cast among whom are John Webb Dillon, Corliss Giles, Richard C. Travers, George Barnum and Warren Richmond.

PROGRAM READER

Another Pearl White feature will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. It is entitled "The Mountain Woman" and it is a drama adapted from the novel by Charles Neville Buck, "The Pagan of the Hills," the scenes of which are laid in the Cumberland range in Kentucky. Director Charles Giblyn and his company journeyed into the heart of the mountains to take this picture and as a result some of the finest scenery ever filmed is presented on the screen.

The star, who, before she entered into feature production, was the best liked and best known of all serial stars, has been allowed to impress her delightful personality to the full extent in "The Mountain Woman." She plays the role of a sturdy girl of the timberlands,, who has been brought up by her father practically as a boy. Ready with revolver and fist, her many suitors come to have a wholesome fear of her, and carry on their wooing with the greatest care and respect. Besides the romance there are some excellent thrills in this production. It is the kind of a picture which will give the greatest number the greatest amount of pleasure.

CATCH LINES

Pearl White, famous throughout filmdom, in a picture laid in the Cumberland mountains of Kentucky—a land of big men, big timber and brave women.

"BREWSTER'S MILLIONS"
(Paramount)

What the Public Has Been Waiting for From Fatty

IT has taken Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle quite a time to strike his real stride in five-reel features. Even "The Life of the Party" will be forced to relegate itself to the rear, though one must admit that the rotund star found it a happy medium for his style. "Brewster's Millions" is like Fatty's old time two-reel high jinks except it is elaborated. This adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's popular novel and Winchell Smith's play fits the star to a dot. Though it has been made before as a Lasky feature, those in charge have realized that much more could have been made from the original picturization. Walter Woods, the scenarist, and Joseph Henebery, the director, have simply brought into play the fact that Arbuckle must have hokum and a lot of it. They have supplied it.

There is a lot of incident which doesn't appear in the book or in the play. They have treated it almost as outrageous burlesque. But make no mistake it will draw like a house a-fire. Those who have seen it will pass it along by word of mouth exploitation. They will tell others that Fatty Arbuckle is there, two hundred pounds ringside, with rings on his fingers and bells on his toes. Where Monte Brewster is forced in the novel to spend a million in a year to inherit a more generous grandfather's five million, in the picture the ante is raised. He has to get rid of two million to inherit ten million. Henebery certainly keeps the star busy. A grand piece of hokum is the stunt which shows the spendthrift getting trimmed by the barber to the tune of a jazz orchestra. The chair is lugged into the private office accompanied by a retinue of shavers, manicurists and boot-blacks.

Fatty has a terrible time in getting rid of his fortune. Wherever he places his money it seems to turn over immense sums for him. So that when the time limit is nearly up he finds himself richer than when he started. The laughs are sure; the humor is always certain, as in the case when he turns the hose on his guests so he may be able to buy them new clothes. Finally he charters a steamship and there is a great time on board for the reckless millionaire and his gay crowd. It is a great time also for the spectator. Give Arbuckle such pieces as "Brewster's Millions" and there won't be any question of his drawing power. The picture is slap-stick in several places. But it is so rich in humor, so spontaneous in action, so snappy and bright and up-to-date that no one will mind it whether it follows the book or not. The patron will be too busy laughing. The exhibitor is certain to say after the audience has departed—"a good time was enjoyed by all."—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Brewster's Millions," which has been read by thousands of readers and which is considered one of the most popular novels ever penned by George Barr McCutcheon, has been adapted to the screen and serves as a feature for Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle. The rotund star will appear in the production at the ———— theatre next ————— with a cast that includes Betty Ross Clark, Charles Ogle, Marion Skinner and a host of others. The story has served the stage also, but impartial critics declare the screen version excels it as a medium of humor.

The story is one of pure comedy romance—one that sparkles with a number of incidents that appear in neither the novel or the play. This enhances the comedy value. The idea concerns a young man whose career is the bone of contention between two wealthy grandfathers, one an aristocrat, who believes he should not have to work, and the other a self-made man who wants him to work for the salary. In other words one grandfather will give him five millions if he spends the other grandfather's millions in a year. Joseph Henebery directed the feature—sufficient guarantee of its excellence. This director staged a number of Douglas Fairbanks' pictures.

PROGRAM READER

The most delightful comedy of the season is guaranteed in "Brewster's Millions," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————— with Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle as the star. This is an adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's popular book which has been read by thousands and which met with great success upon the stage. The picture was presented as a Lasky feature many years ago, but never has it been so delightfully presented as in this new screen version with Fatty as "Monty" Brewster, the young millionaire who had to spend a wad of money in a year or forfeit his income. A screamingly funny picture. A sure hit. And Fatty in his best part to date. Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

He had two grandfathers. One was stingy. He wanted to give Monty a mere million; the other wanted to give him five million. See "Brewster's Millions."

"MAMMA'S AFFAIR"
(First National)

Constance Talmadge Has Serious Moments Here; Picture Fairly Interesting

THOSE patrons who have been following Constance Talmadge's screen adventures the past season or two are in for a surprise when they see this vibrant and vital star in "Mamma's Affair," an adaptation of the stage play of the same name. They will notice that she is cast for a part which permits her to indulge in serious moments. Surely a different assignment to say the least. The play has its compensation in giving her a new role to interpret, but her forte still lies in the direction of serio-comic portrayals. "Mamma's Affair" achieved quite a reputation for being a Harvard prize play, and to win this coveted place, it must be technically perfect and possess entertaining ingredients.

The author hit upon an original idea, by exploiting the malady of "nerves" which the feminine sex finds fashionable. Her principal character is a hypochondriac who resorts to "nerves" on the slightest occasion in order to give expression to her selfish impulses. It is really single-track in development and doesn't carry enough action and incident to make a thoroughly entertaining picture. The dialogue of the play is sadly missed despite the fact that Anita Loos has incorporated her distinctive subtitles. But there is an awful lot of standing or walking about from one room to another. And the situations are developed in an even key which become a trifle monotonous as the idea progresses. The big role of the play—that of mother—still occupies the chief place in the screen version. Which, of course, makes the star play "second fiddle" to Effie Shannon.

The latter appeared in the stage play and scored a genuine hit. And she portrays the part here with considerable finesse. The character is unduly selfish in her attitude toward her daughter. Every time that the latter thinks of acting independently, mother has an attack of nerves. But finally the daughter sees through her mother's false pretense when the doctor arrives. The stage play emphasized the daughter's case of "nerves" from attending her mother so faithfully. This bit has been somewhat neglected here. The daughter recovers too rapidly under the doctor's care. It is a one idea picture told almost entirely against interiors and it may get upon people's nerves, through its lack of variety. However, it offers something new to the screen, is well adapted and capably acted by a cast that includes three of the original players—Effie Shannon, George Le Guere and Katherine Kaelred. The romance is a healthy factor toward making it appreciated. Regardless of its novelty, the play is not high class film material. However, the star and her company will doubtless get it over.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picturization of Rachel Barton Butler's prize play, "Mamma's Affair," which scored a big hit on the New York stage last season, has been made with Constance Talmadge as the star, and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This sparkling play has lost none of its vital theme and characterization—its charm and wit—its original incident in the screen translation. Indeed it makes a most attractive picture for the expression of Miss Talmadge's vivid personality. The star appears as the daughter of a hypochondriac—a woman whose nerves bring trouble to everyone who comes in contact with her. Even the daughter sacrifices her happiness to quiet her mother until she, herself, suffers an attack from neurasthenia.

With the coming of the doctor, the girl recovers rapidly although she suffers from a fatal heart attack when she falls in love with him. Fatal in the sense that she gives it to him for future protection. And the mother is taught a much needed lesson in real womanhood. The picture permits the star to appear in a vital role—one which is quite a departure from the serio-comic figures of previous features. It abounds in sentiment and heart interest and is well acted. John Emerson and Anita Loos have moulded it into a most entertaining offering.

PROGRAM READER

She couldn't imagine her daughter away from her. In her selfish devotion she couldn't bear to have the girl out of her sight. And when the latter talked of marriage the mother promptly had a case of "nerves." She relied upon her nerves to rescue her at every occasion. But in taking care of her the daughter also developed a case of nerves. See "Mamma's Affair," the Constance Talmadge picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a picturization of Rachel Barton Butler's prize play which scored a hit on the New York stage last season. It offers the star opportunities to display her abundant charm and talent.

SUGGESTIONS

The fact that this was a Harvard prize play should be exploited. Also bring out that it makes splendid material for Constance Talmadge. Tell that it is an original idea that is offered here. You might bring out the importance of "nerves" in the fast pace of the day. Tell that this picture offers an interesting study of a woman who allowed her nerves to get the best of her. Play it up as a romantic comedy-drama with a new idea. The fact that John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for the direction and adaptation should not be overlooked in the exploitation. Play it up in a teaser campaign emphasizing the idea.

"THE BREAKING POINT"
(Frothingham-Hodkinson)

More Than a Vehicle—A Well-Sustained Marital Drama

BESSIE BARRISCALE is the star of this production, but she is not the one and only highlight. The picture is more than a mere vehicle in which the star emotes and looks beautiful. It has good drama, especially well worked out. Basically it is not new material, being triangular in theme, with a greatly abused wife for the heroine, and a loose-living husband as the leading man. A quarrel over the child brings about the climax.

Its development, however, is unorthodox inasmuch as the only sympathetic male character disappears in the early reels and never returns. From then on it is well-developed and interesting incident dealing with marital difficulties. H. H. Van Loan, who adopted the story which is by Mary Lerner, deserves the credit here. The suspense rises insistently, the climax is not forced, and the characterization of the unfaithful husband and his cynical society mother are drawn with deft, and appreciable touches. The theme—that there is an eventual limit to a woman's forbearance—is never forgotten, but never stated broadly after the main foreword. The bugaboo of continuity writers—the spreading of the story over several years, is cleverly done.

Walter McGrail really outshines the star, and his work here seems to be the result of a careful study of the character. He plays the wealthy bachelor to whom the pursuit of woman is pleasure, but the possession, boredom. He marries, wearies of his wife and is about to go off with another woman and his six year old daughter, when the "breaking point" is reached. The wife has suffered in silence, but when the future of her child is threatened, she rises and kills her husband. And the unusual ending of a husbandless and loverless heroine is presented. This is unusual, but it will be appreciated far more, we believe, than to have the first lover, played by Pat O'Malley, emerge from the grave to comfort her.

Miss Barriscale is attractive, but is not solely responsible for this pleasant bit of entertainment. Paul Scardon, the director, Eugenia Besserer, "the mother"; Ethel Grey Terry, "the other woman"; the title-writer, and especially McGrail and Van Loan, deserve to share the honors.—Length, 5788 feet.—Matthew A. Taylor.

From the story, "The Living Child," by Mary Lerner.
Adapted by H. H. Van Loan.
Directed by Paul Scardon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale, one of the best known and most beautiful of picture stars, is featured in "The Breaking Point," a modern society drama which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Barriscale has never had a better role than as Ruth Marshall, a girl who marries a wealthy society man whom she soon learns is the type to whom pursuing is more attractive than possessing. "The Breaking Point" is solid, interesting drama, adapted to the screen by H. H. Van Loan, one of the best known of present day screen writers.

The picture takes its name from the fact that there is in every woman a limit to her patience and endurance. As the string of the violin can be drawn only so tight, so can the soul of a woman be tried only to a certain degree. And Richard Janeway tortured the soul of his wife until she was whipped into action—and action of the most dreadful and fearless kind.

Playing opposite Miss Barriscale is Walter McGrail, as gifted a leading man as there is in filmdom. Others in the cast are Pat O'Malley, Ethel Grey Terry and Joseph J. Dowling.

PROGRAM READER

The violinist, tuning his delicate instrument, must use care. For the sensitive strings, turned a shade too high, will snap beneath the pressure. So, too, with a woman's heart. Patience, forbearance and self-sacrifice are her dominating characteristics, but there is a limit beyond which she will stand no more suffering.

It is upon this theme that "The Breaking Point," the feature production at the ———— on ———— is based. This picture is a stirring, gripping society drama and is of the highest type of screen play. The star is Bessie Barriscale, who has won many admirers among the patrons of the ———— theatre by her work in past productions which have been shown in this theatre. In the cast are Walter McGrail, Ethel Grey Terry, Pat O'Malley, and Joseph J. Dowling, all screen players of the highest calibre. The story is by Mary Lerner and it was adapted to the screen by H. H. Van Loan.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides the star you have several players in this cast who will be remembered. There is Joseph J. Dowling, of "Miracle Man" fame; Pat O'Malley, of "Go and Get It"; Walter McGrail, a well known leading man, and Ethel Grey Terry. Of course the star is the best known. Promise them a real interesting society drama, and not merely a vehicle for Miss Barriscale. Also there is H. H. Van Loan, author of "Virgin of Stamboul," "The Great Redeemer" and many other scripts, who wrote the screen version of this picture.

CATCH LINES

A new and gripping drama with Bessie Barriscale in the leading role, supported by a capable cast, including Joseph Dowling, Walter McGrail, and Pat O'Malley.

Her husband wanted to bring up the child "as a good sport."

"WEST OF THE RIO GRANDE"
(Bert Lubin-State Rights)

Real Western Incident and Good Hokum Here

WHEN a picture doesn't carry much of a story, the only course left for the director is to fortify it with snappy action and good incident so that its plot shortcomings will not become noticeable. Take "West of the Rio Grande" for example. Robin H. Townley, the director, has incorporated a requisite amount of sure-fire incident, some of which may be labeled hokum. But even this much abused word has its place in providing entertainment when it is used within reason. While there is a skeleton of a plot which has to do with the exodus of the cattlemen of Texas who realize that the agriculturists have come to stay, the interest is maintained through the sure-fire touches.

It is seldom that one sees real cattle in a Western made on the Hollywood lots. In "West of the Rio Grande" the spectator will probably be amazed to see some real Texas short horns and a reproduction of a genuine round-up. It is said that the players come from the Lone Star state, which is believable after watching their skillful impersonations. They don't get the drop on their opponents by shouting "Hands Up!" but by placing their hands on the holsters of the others, thus enabling them to appear at ease. These little points may go unobserved. But real Westerners will spot them in a jiffy. There is a mirthful moment when one of the cowboys attempts to rope a chicken. This stunt has never been done before. The director who uses hokum or incident must keep it original in this day of competition. A bit of play with a pitcher of buttermilk and a rodeo show help along the action.

Of course it is to be expected that a Western will be equipped with plenty of hard riding and quick shooting. These highlights are much in evidence here. A romance also has its inning. This element is also emphasized in a humorous manner. The titles are in the vernacular of the country, breezy and full of vigor. And the director has caught a couple of scenes which resemble etchings. "West of the Rio Grande" is good entertainment, although its story is conspicuous by its absence. The mere fact that it shows real cattle (a shot not taken from a news strip) is something in its favor. The lighting could be better.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"West of the Rio Grande," a photoplay of the Big Bend country presenting a story of the conflict between the rustlers and the settlers, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. "Tex" O'Reilly, the author, and Robin H. Townley, the director, have produced a picture which is authentic since they have been brought up in the saddle and know Texas from actual experience. It is said by impartial critics to contain a rich amount of action, original incident and genuine backgrounds. Mr. Townley has taken the author's story and kept it moving from the start. Prominent in the cast are Allene Ray, who has achieved fame as the winner of a beauty contest, and Harry McLaughlin, Sam White, John Hagin, Marguerite Davis and Chas. Holleman.

The story revolves around the efforts of Tom Norton, a Texas Ranger, to capture the rustlers who are making life unpleasant for the settlers. There is great animosity against the settlers since it means the exodus of the cattle-men. The romance finds expression when Eileen Nawn, a New York girl, falls in love with the Ranger. The picture is well balanced with humor, too. A rodeo show, the roping of chickens and other incidents are said to give the picture a great deal of its appeal.

PROGRAM READER

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "West of the Rio Grande," a picture of cowboys and rustlers—a picture of the Big Bend country where it is the fashion to shoot straight and quickly. The story presents real happenings. There is a rodeo show, some humorous attempts to lasso a chicken, and fast riding and quick shooting. The picture is written by "Tex" O'Reilly, a Texas native son, and directed by Robin H. Townley. In the cast are the attractive and talented Allene Ray, a Texas girl, who won a position on the stage through being the winner of a beauty contest; Harry McLaughlin, who has achieved fame as being one of the most daring aviators; and Sam White, the ex-outlaw. This is a picture of real Texans, staged in Texas. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

The title is a winner here and should be exploited for its full value. You can stage a prologue, showing a setting in harmony with the Big Bend country. Have some figure attired in western regalia recite some western verse. Or if he is talented with the lariat, have him execute some tricks with it. You might have him recite "Lasca." Tell that the leading lady, Allene Ray, is the winner of a beauty contest in a fan magazine and that she achieved her place through her ability to win the highest honors. Play up that the author and director are responsible for the fine picture, "Honeymoon Ranch." Play it up as an entertaining Western which carries good romance and humor. Use stills of Miss Ray.

CATCH LINES

See "West of the Rio Grande," a picture of Texas—a picture of the plains—a picture of the feud between cowboys and rustlers. A picture straight from the Rio Grande.

"THE FLAME"
(Stoll Film-Pathe)

A Good Production With Foreign Setting

"THE FLAME" taken as a whole is a mighty fine English production. From the opening scenes up to the last close-up it reminds us of the type of production Charles Frohman used to import for his elite audiences.

It has a splendid and exceptionally conscientious cast, good direction and a wealth of fine exterior and interior settings.

But the story is so "Englishy" that it is a question in the writer's mind whether, outside of the larger houses, the picture will interest.

It is excellently written, has a very even continuity, plenty of incident and dramatic moments and a strong love story, but then again it concerns the lords and ladies of England and a few from the other continental countries with no relief from beginning to end.

To an elite audience this sort of picture should have its appeal, but it is doubtful whether audiences in the smaller towns will care for this sort of entertainment.

In the latter production one thing stands out rather prominent—the lighting of the scenes. In many of the interiors and a few of the exteriors the lighting is rather faulty, for the faces of the actors are not brought out against the background. And then again when the actors are brought up close to the camera, the backgrounds appear blurred for the reason that the lights do not play on the scenes from the right angles.

Although these faults may be a drawback to the production's entertaining value the picture has many attributes which should carry it through as an average program attraction.

The story relates the trials and tribulations of two youngsters, who being rescued from the gutters by their uncle Sir Charles Saumarez and educated by the latter, drift apart and in the general whirl of affairs engage in many strong dramatic moments.—Frank Leonard.

PROGRAM READER

He and his little sister were rescued from the gutters and were brought up by their uncle, Sir Charles Saumarez.

With the years, the young girl grew in charm and sweetness and the boy—into a first-class snob and even looked down upon his sister, his companion of a poverty-filled youth. And then something happened.

See "The Flame," which will be shown at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a Stoll Film production and it is said to be one of the best pictures released by that corporation.

The story, which is taken from the novel of the same name by Olive Wadsley, is filled with incident, dramatic moments and love interest—has a good cast and is excellently directed.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Flame," said to be one of the best pictures produced by the Stoll Film Corporation, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

The production has about all the ingredients necessary to make it one of the biggest attractions the Stoll company has released under the Pathe banner.

It is filled with incident and dramatic moments, a strong love interest story being interwoven in such a way that interest is aroused and held from the opening scenes up to the last close-up.

Rescued from a life in the gutters, Fane Saumarez and his little sister Antonia, known as Toni, were adopted by their uncle, Sir Charles Saumarez and his childless wife, Lady Henrietta.

Lady Henrietta vented all her bitterness on Toni, her wrath being heightened by the fact that Sir Charles had taken to the girl from the very start. So Sir Charles undertook the education of Toni, his wife consenting to look after Fane.

With the years Toni grew in charm and sweetness, Fane on the other hand, mimicking his benefactress, growing into a first-class prig and even looking down upon his sister. In the years to come the young woman falls in love with Lord Robert Wycke, the development of which is said to be one of the best love stories ever told.

SUGGESTIONS

If your patrons care for English plays, book this one for it is a splendid type of this sort of production.

However, if they become bored with continental stories, go light on it as to promises in your advertising.

Pictures of this kind appear to have more appealing value to the studious mind but with plenty of exploitation in the right direction the picture should attract and appeal in its own way.

CATCH LINES

He and his little sister were just street waifs. And then fate brought them into another world. Were they happy? See "The Flame" at the ———— theatre. It will certainly interest you.

"HOLD YOUR HORSES"
(Goldwyn)

Comedy Titles and Good Incident Make This Fine Entertainment

TITLES that have never been excelled either in originality or appropriateness, most of them earning wholesome laughs, a splendid lot of highly entertaining incident in the early reels, likewise of a comedy turn and a good theme are responsible for this averaging up as a praiseworthy offering in spite of the fact that the last reel or so is just ordinary and very episodic in story.

Also it may be questionable whether this was a good Tom Moore vehicle, first from the fact that Mr. Moore won his way to stardom through the portrayal of juvenile roles, entirely removed in type from the one he plays in "Hold Your Horses," and next because his is far from being the burly "Harp" that the part calls for.

Admitting that the star is good as "Canavan," an actor proof part by the way, there still remains the question of whether or not his personal admirers will accept him as the "greenhorn" street sweeper and later as a political boss with ideals usually allotted to "heavies" or relish the fact that he is a "second hand" husband married to a woman who is pretty much of a snob.

However, those who do not take their pictures or their favorite players too seriously should find real entertainment in "Hold Your Horses" and perhaps the Moore fans will have no regrets at seeing their dapper Tom playing the role of a roughneck once in a while.

The story of "Hold Your Horses" has to do largely with the evolution of one "Daniel Canavan" from a New York "whitewing" to a political boss through the authority that handling a red flag where dynamite was being used gave him.

Technically the picture is extra good. The production has been developed along farce comedy lines, and it is only when it deals seriously with the story proper that interest lags.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Daniel Canavan	Tom Moore
Honora Canavan	Sylvia Ashton
Beatrice Newness	Naomi Childers
Rodman Cadbury	Bertram Grassby
Jim James	Mortimer E. Stinson
Horace Slayton	Sydney Ainsworth

Adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story by Rupert Hughes. Directed by E. Mason Hopper.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Popular Tom Moore in his latest Goldwyn feature picture, "Hold Your Horses," an adaptation of Rupert Hughes' famous Saturday Evening Post story, "Canavan," is the major attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

Mr. Moore is presented as a New York "white wing" who becomes a powerful political bass through the confidence in himself that the job of handling the red flag where dynamite was being used, gave him. The story has been developed along comedy lines and there are many laughs to be had from the humorous incident and clever titles provided. In support of Mr. Moore is a strong cast of fine types, among whom is Naomi Childers, Sylvia Ashton and Sidney Ainsworth. The picture was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

To those who enjoy the picture that has plenty of comedy, original development and an unhackneyed story possessed of a real theme, "Hold Your Horses" is to be recommended. Mr. Moore has a role eminently suited to him and plays it extremely well.

PROGRAM READER

"Hold Your Horses," an adaptation of Rupert Hughes' famous Saturday Evening Post story entitled "Canavan," with popular Tom Moore in the leading role will be the feature picture at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The story of "Hold Your Horses" is an extremely humorous picture recital of how one "Daniel Canavan" a greenhorn Irishman, who at the beginning of the yarn was a New York "white wing," became the great political boss and married the proud "Beatrice Newness," whose horses had walked on him when he was sweeping the streets.

A strong supporting cast, among whom are such well known players as Naomi Childers, Sylvia Ashton and Sydney Ainsworth, has been secured.

From a production standpoint "Hold Your Horses" ranks high. It has fine clothes, nice sets, good scenic exteriors and some very fine photography and lightings.

Mr. Hughes' story has been developed along farce comedy lines and those who like to laugh are especially invited to see it. "Hold Your Horses" is ranked as the best picture Mr. Moore has produced this year.

SUGGESTIONS

Your newspaper advertising should make much of the fact that this is a famous Saturday Evening Post story and play up the comedy angle. A play for Irish patronage is justifiable. Irish societies if properly approached will no doubt lend support. The street cleaning department is a good place to look for tie-ups. For a prologue number look in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau this week for a description of one being presented by S. L. Rothafel at the Capitol theatre for the current The prologue is so simple that any exhibitor who has a stage can present it.

CATCH LINES

Here is a story of a "red flag" that doesn't have a Bolsheviki in it. In fact, it is as Irish as Paddy's pig.

A humorous yarn of a New York "greenhorn white wing" who got his start in the world through waving a red flag that warned passersby that dynamite was to be exploded. Tom Moore is "Canavan," the flag waver.

More laughs than a dog has fleas. A story about a young Irishman who went up in the world with a red flag as the inspiration.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE FILM CENTRES

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

OGDEN, UTAH

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Neen Farrell of Logan, Utah, and Wade Fitzgerald Hamilton of Los Angeles. Mr. Hamilton, who is an organist in the Utah theatre, recently met Miss Farrell when she appeared as a soprano soloist in the Utah. A party was given to the young couple at the theatre, following the announcement.

Joseph Campbell, who recently acquired the Utah theatre of A. J. Fyhn, has incorporated the Utah Theatre Company with $25,000 capital. The stock is held by Mr. Campbell and the members of his family. Mr. Campbell plans some extensive improvements in the early spring.

Some "regular" cowboys and buckeroos, who were in the city last week with prize cattle from Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and Nevada ranches, applauded Tom Mix for some of the stunts he pulled off in the late picture, "The Texan," which manager H. W. Perry of the Ogden theatre offered as a special livestock attraction.

Manager H. E. Skinner of the Alhambra theatre, one of the picture palaces of the West which Ogden is fortunate in having, has artists at work painting a large curtain for the theatre. It is expected the picture will be completed within two weeks.

Three B. F. Steck houses, as the Lyceum, Cozy and Rex theatres are called, as they are under the management of B. F. Steck, have enjoyed very prosperous runs during the past three months.

DETROIT

J. C. Ritter, of the Rialto theatre, announces that construction on his New Rovola theatre, at Cadillac boulevard and East Forest, begins at once.

The new Strand theatre and arcade at Lansing, being built by W. S. Butterfield, is to open on March 17. The house will seat 2,000 and represents an investment, with the stores and office building, of close to $600,000.

George Weeks, Canadian manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky, had a slight operation in a Detroit hospital last week. It was successful and he has returned to Toronto.

Many Detroit motion picture theatres in the residential districts are introducing vaudeville for one or two nights each week. Detroit was very hard hit by the industrial slump and the theatres felt it but the automobile factories are beginning to open and things are assuming a more normal condition.

G. S. Goldwater, city fire marshal, has begun a campaign to force managers of the smaller theatres to engage firemen as required by law. Every theatre must have a house fireman in uniform.

In Michigan the Detroit Free Press film edition, will be combined with the Educational Film company's new Kinogram weekly.

MINNEAPOLIS

Minneapolis' colony of film men were considerably surprised by some startling changes in managers for Goldwyn and Vitagraph exchanges here the past week. Robert Cotton, one of the most popular exchange men in this territory, and who has managed the Goldwyn exchange for the past six months, has been appointed manager of Vitagraph, to succeed E. S. Holmes, who has been manager of that exchange since 1917. Mr. Holmes is president of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade.

Mr. Cotton is succeeded as manager of Goldwyn, by Newt Davis, another well known Minneapolis Film man.

Mr. Holmes' resignation was very much of a surprise locally. He first entered the motion picture field as an exhibitor at Long Beach, Calif. Later, after purchasing a theatre at Los Angeles, Mr. Holmes entered the distributing field as a member of the Los Angeles Mutual Branch. After a year with Triangle, he joined with Vitagraph. He was with Vitagraph only six weeks when he was made manager of the New Orleans Vitagraph ranch. Mr. Holmes has been an active member of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade and was only recently elected its president. Upon his resignation from that body he was elected an honorary member.

Robert Cotton, the new Vitagraph manager, began his career in the film business as manager of the World exchange in Detroit. Remaining there for two years, he was so successful that he was called to New York by the World officials and was then made manager of the Minneapolis World office. Later he went to Des Moines, Iowa, as manager for Pathe and resigned that office to become manager of the Goldwyn exchange here.

INDIANAPOLIS

The city fire prevention bureau has started its annual crusade against the illegal storage of films. An inspector has filed affidavits against one of the smaller movie houses and the officials at one of the interurban freight stations, alleging that films were stored in a dangerous way. At the interurban station the inspector said he found a clerk using a box of old film for a footstool.

The Tokio at South Bend was incorporated last week by George J. Breinig, Ada M. Breinig and Lester L. Busch with $20,000 capital.

The Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays of Indianapolis, the unofficial body which views films and makes monthly reports upon their suitability from a family standpoint, and upon whose recommendations and with whom some of the neighborhood house managers have co-operated at times, incorporated last week with directors as follows: Mrs. Theodore Wagner, Mrs. Curtis Hodges, Mrs. C. L. Davidson, Mrs. Fred Pettijohn, Mrs. Davis Ross, Mrs. Roy Potts, Mrs. M. E. Robbins, Mrs. O. C. Lukenbill, Mrs. C. B. Jackson, Mrs. J. M. Dailey, Mrs. W. H. Geisel and Mrs. Harry Tutewiler.

Manager R. H. Winn of the Grand at Washington, Ind., averted a panic in his house on Thursday evening, Jan. 20, when the roof over the stage caught fire, by instructing the orchestra to play its loudest jazz numbers. The performance went on, the orchestra jazzed its jazziest and the patrons enjoyed the show in blissful ignorance that firemen were chopping a hole in the roof to extinguish the blaze in the attic and that hundreds of people out in the street were looking on.

CANADA

Recent visitors in Vancouver, B. C., were Gaston Glass of "Humoresque" fame and Miss Edith Stirling, who is also coming to the front as a moving picture star. Mr. Glass arrived in Vancouver from Banff, Alebrta, where he completed scenes for "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" a few weeks ago. Miss Stirling went to Vancouver from Los Angeles to search for locations for a forthcoming release to be placed on the market by the Republic Film Corporation through Select. After surveying locations in British Columbia, Miss Stirling proceeded to Banff where the needed scenes will proably be shot.

Louis Jacobs of New York, special representative of the Universal Film Company, has covered practically the whole of Canada during the past four or five weeks, having called on the branches of the Canadian Universal in each of the six key cities of the Dominion from Halifax to Vancouver. He also paid visits to a number of exhibitors in prominent cities from Coast to Coast. Mr. Jacobs announced that he found business generally very good with both exchanges and exhibitors.

Another strong appeal for support on the part of Canadians for British moving pictures was made at Toronto on January 20 by Miss Joan Arnoldi of Toronto, National President of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, in an address before the Ontario Chapter of the organization.

Miss Arnoldi declared that 96 per cent of the films shown in the Dominion last year were of American origin and four per cent had been imported from Great Britain. She admired the Americans for the progress that they had made with moving pictures, she said, and the films had become effective national propaganda in the teaching of ideals.

The Good Films Association of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has apparently been on the job, judging by a recent report of the organization in which various moving picture features are endorsed as being worthy productions. Fourteen features are recommended, these being pictures which are being presented in Winnipeg theatres or are booked for presentation in the near future. Pictures are recommended to the general public on the basis of general desirability and no reference is made, in the published announcement, to any picture not endorsed nor is any picture condemned as "unfit." The purpose of the association is to guide theatre-goers with regard to support for what are considered substantial and worthwhile pictures. Incidentally, the Winnipeg association is classed as a prospective branch of the proposed Dominion-wide organization.

The Good Films Association was organized in Winnipeg several months ago and it comprises a numer of prominent local people who are not generally regarded as "moral uplifters" in the usual sense.

The Empress theatre, a well-known moving picture theatre of Prince Albert, Sask., was destroyed by fire in the early morning hours of Thursday, January 20, from an unknown cause. The loss is estimated at $90,000. Insurance to the amount of $45,000 was carried.

George Ganetakos, general manager of the Independent Amusement, Limited, Montreal, operating the Strand, Regent and Moulin Rouge theatres, was one of the speakers at the charter meeting of the Kingston, Ontario, Kiwanis Club on Saturday evening, January 22. Mr. Ganetakos was one of the representatives of the Montreal Kiwanis Club at the big gathering and spoke on the "Value of Kiwanis Ideals." At the request of the chairman of the meeting, he gave a portion of his address in the Greek language.

Following the opening of a brand new Allen theatre in Kingston, Ontario, in January, Mr. Harry Pomeroy of Ottawa, a prominent theatre manager of the Famous-Players Canadian Corporation, which is a rival organization, has been placed in charge of the Strand theatre, Kingston. As a result of this appointment, considerable interest attaches to the strong competition for public favor between the two local houses. Both theatres are making a specialty of music, in addition to featuring special film productions, each house having an orchestra of nine pieces.

Mr. Harold Hitchison, formerly with the Regent and Strand theatres, Toronto, which are also under the direction of the Famous-Players Canadian Corporation, has been made manager of the Ottawa Strand. It is understood, however, that Mr. Pomeroy will return to Ottawa within a few months to be the manager of the new Capital theatre which the corporation is building there.

OKLAHOMA CITY

The Southern Enterprises announces the following important changes in the personnel of its film exchange department at Dallas, Texas:

Jack Corbett, former branch manager, has gone to the district manager's chair governing Paramount activities in Dallas and Oklahoma City. He will make his headquarters at Dallas. This will enable L. L. Dent to divide his attention with First National, Realart and the investigations of various other propositions.

Tom H. Bailey has been transferred to Oklahoma City where he takes charge of the Paramount office.

O. L. Wilkes of Oklahoma City is transferred to the Dallas, Texas, office as office manager.

L. E. Harrington is the new executive with the Enterprises. He was formerly with the Fox office at Dallas.

The new Vitagraph home in Okalhoma City is completed at a cost of $25,000. It was built as an addition to a building which houses several film exchanges and located on South Hudson street outside of the fire limit district.

Tucker Brothers' Road Picture Shows, which have been exploited successfully in Oklahoma and Arkansas for the past several months, will be circuited into Texas and traverse these entire three states. Their road plan is somewhat of a new idea. It has been worked out on a single-picture basis before, but so far as known, never on such a large scale as what might be termed a road show circuit. Dates will be booked for a number of weeks and played consecutively. Booking agents will go ahead and blaze the trail and the circuit stands for an indefinite period. A new show follows along each week piloted by a road show manager. All shows are played on a percentage basis; advertising and publicity aids are furnished by the company.

The new shows now starting over the states are "The Unfortunate Sex," "The Woman Above Approach" and "The House Without Children." Six different circuits will be operated by February 1. Upwards of 15 shows are now en tour.

H. Silverberg announces a new theatre to be built at Houston, Texas, in the near future.

Mrs. Alice Wooton, proprietor of the Imp theatre at Benton, Ark., has leased the Palace theatre at that place.

Corporation charter of the Dixie Film Company of Oklahoma City, Okla., has been granted to B. H. Anderson, W. H. Hollman and Walter Benson, all of Oklahoma City; capital stock is $5,000.

The new movie theatre on West Main street, Oklahoma City, now generally known as the Cooper theatre, has been named the Criterion.

C. C. McCollister, one of the leading and most popular managers in the Southwest, has been appointed general manager of the Criterion.

It is expected that the New Criterion, which cost nearly one million dollars, and conceded to be the finest moving picture house in the entire West, will be opened for business within the next two months.

C. S. (Sharmon) Timlin, has purchased the Princess motion picture theatre at Dublin, Texas.

The Crystal theatre at Gonzales, Texas, was burglarized last week, and a small amount of money taken. As usual, there is no clew to the identity of the thieves.

L. B. Mace of the Universal Film Co., of Oklahoma City, has leased the Lyric theatre at Watonga, Okla.

R. H. Clemmons, manager of the Palace theatre at Marshall, Texas, gave an informal dinner last week to his employes and a few personal friends.

The Royal theatre was opened at Fayetteville, Ark., last week. The Royal will show all picture at a uniform price, ten and twenty cents the year around. Mr. Budd, the manager, stated.

PITTSBURGH

The Family theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has been turned over to Mr. Opachersky, who also owns the Capitol theatre, Wylie avenue. This theatre has been regarded as a failure since its opening about six years ago, so all eyes are turned to the man that made good at the Capitol theatre.

All records for any motion picture in this town are being broken by "Way Down East" at the Sam S. Shubert theatre. It is reported that the management intends to hold this attraction over for a twenty-week showing.

The Penn Film Co., of which Matthew Teplits is the manager, have purchased the entire output of the Aywon Film Corporation of New York city, which includes the Harry Carey series, Mary Pickfords, Success Westerns, Helen Holmes series and the following features: "Woman of Mystery," "When Dr. Quackel Did Hide" and "The Evolution of Man."

Bill Harkins is now the owner and manager of the Old Reliable theatre in Millvale. Harkins was until recently manager of the Temple theatre, down town.

The Western Penna Amusement Company now controls the following theatres: Regent and Grand theatres, Beaver Falls; Grant theatre, Mill vale, and Main theatre, Sharpsburg; also the Avenue theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. The New Braddock theatre of Braddock will be ready to open about Feb. 15, 1921. Theatres are also contemplated in the Oakland section of Pittsburgh and in York, Pa. Mr. Hyman Goldberg is the general manager of this chain.

Harris Silverberg, formerly with Fox, has been added to the sales force of the Goldwyn local office, so with Messrs. Schulgold, Goldstein and Cohen it will give Manager Nate Barach a quartet of efficient film peddlers to be equaled by none.

Phil Messina, formerly of Sharon, is now manager of the Grand theatre, Corry, Pa. Joe Shamburg, the former owner, has decided to retire for a while. It may possibly be for a trip to Bermuda or Cuba, but not very probably.

The Rowland & Clark Interests have purchased a site for a new theatre in East Liberty, at 5804-10 Penn avenue, bteween Beatty and Euclid avenues. The lot is 60x200 and was bought for $85,000. They have also purchased a site for a theatre in McKeesport from the Peoples Savings & Trust Co. This lot is 60x136 and was sold for $152,300. The exact date when building operations are to begin is not available, but it will be very likely as soon as building material will permit.

The Steel City Amusement Co. have purchased a site for a new theatre to be built on Centre avenue. This lot is 60x266 and was bought for $28,000. Building operations will begin as soon as possible.

The All Nations' Arcade Building, a two-story structure at Nineteenth and Carson streets, is to be remodelled by its owner, George Columbus, Jr., into a moving picture theatre at a cost of $86,000.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Oregon composers will be featured in a series of Sunday concerts at the Majestic theatre, according to Cecil Teague, master organist of the Majestic, in announcing his programme for a recent Sunday.

"Egyptian Impressions," by Bainbridge Crist, son of Mrs. Maley Crist, herself an acomplished musician of Portland, were played by Teague. These "Impressions" are said to be of a vivid oriental nature and are growing in popularity throughout the country. Two songs of the waltz-ballad type: "Song of My Dreams" and "Come Back and Drive the Clouds Away," written by Mrs. Virginia Nash and Miss Catherine Bernard, respectively, were also included in the programme.

F. W. Teufel, manager of the People's is designing a new front for his house. He plans to spring it on the coming booking, "Money Changers."

The People's lobby has always presented a curious problem to theatre managers as the house is located between Washington street, one of the principal traffic arteries of the city, and a section of Alder street which is unusually quiet. There has been a tendency to concentrate lobby displays on the Washington street side of the house which some persons have thought interfered with the balance of the lobby as a whole. Manager Teufel believes the influence of a well constructed lobby so important in getting persons who come near the theatre actually into the house that he is making elaborate alteration plans.

The appearance of pussy willows in foyer floral displays has started the minds of Portland theatre managers on the subject of new spring uniforms. The Peoples theatre ushers are the first to actually blossom out in new garb but the management of the Star theatre has announced a new set of uniforms for next week.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

Ralph Moseley has been appointed floor manager at Shea's Hippodrome by Harold B. Franklin. This is Mr. Moseley's first venture in the theatrical business.

Paul Tobias, manager of the Tioga theatre, Owego, N. Y., has gone to the mountains for his health. It is understood that the Comerford interests of Scranton, Pa., are dickering for the house.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, who is official camera man for the Buffalo Shrine, got some excellent views of the big ball in Elmwood Music hall. Special lights were installed for the purpose.

T. J. Connors, assistant general manager of Metro will come to Buffalo from the home office to take charge of the local exchange during the absence abroad of Henry W. Kahn, branch manager. Mr. Kahn sails from New York aboard the Ryndam, February 12 for Holland.

J. M. MacMeekin, special representative for Realart is in charge of the Buffalo office of this company for several weeks during the absence at Mt. Clemens of Harry E. Lotz who has been forced to take the rest cure. Realart franchises have been signed by the Wintergarden, Jamestown; Park, Silver Creek; Oliver, North Tonawanda and the Cozy Corner, Buffalo. Mary Miles Minter will soon appear at the Palace in her new Realart vehicle "All Soul's Eve."

A. W. Goff, assistant general sales manager of Vitagraph and J. S. Hebrew, division manager, spent the first part of the week of January 24 at the Buffalo office with local manager J. E. Kimberly. Word comes from Toronto that "Bill" Allen is meeting with great success in the new Canadian territory.

H. L. Levvy and George A. Langan have been added to the Robertson-Cole exchange sales force. Mr. Langan comes to Buffalo from the Pittsburg office. He is a former exhibitor, having operated the Langan theatre in Syracuse several years ago. Mr. Langan will represent the company in the Syracuse district. All prints and records have arrived at the Buffalo office from the Albany exchange, which has been discontinued.

Homer Howard is now acting as special representative for Universal in the Buffalo and Albany districts. A. S. Rose of New York has joined the local Universal office and will assist J. Kaufman in the Syracuse district.

Hugh Rennie, First National manager in Buffalo, reports that the Fillmore, Palace and Sylvia theatres have signed up for the franchise. Mr. Rennie also announces that Shea's Hippodrome has booked "Passion" and that Harold B. Franklin is planning an elaborate presentation of this production. In Syracuse Edgar Weill of the Strand is putting on a big exploitation campaign on this subject.

Stanley Hand, who represents the Hodkinson company in western New York and who has his office in the Pathe building, screened "Pagan Love" for local exhibitors and guests Friday evening, January 21 and the picture received a fine reception. Mr. Hand is putting all his efforts on signing up first-run houses in the key cities of the territory 100 per cent for the entire year. The company is set for the coming twelve months, productions have been decided upon until January 1, 1922.

John Sitterly, manager of the Dooley exchange, reports that all office records are being broken by the new series of Neal Hart productions, which have been placed in most of the key cities.

Fred M. Zimmerman celebrated "Nu-Art Week" January 24 to 29 by putting "Mid-Channel," the Clara Kimball Young production, in first run houses in all the cities of the territory. Among the houses that presented this subject were Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Savoy, Syracuse; Avon, Utica and Cataract, Niagara Falls. "Hush," the new Young release, has been booked by Managing Director Harold B. Franklin for Shea's Hippodrome. The Prizma subjects are going like wildfire, "On the Trek," the newest release of this company, having been sigued to accompany "Kismet," for a two-week run at the Loew Star theatre in Rochester.

C. A. Taylor has resigned as general manager of the Gardiner exchange in Buffalo and has opened an office at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, where he is handling "Ireland in Revolt," for Greater New York, New England and New Jersey. J. S. Parmelee, formerly with Nu-Art in Buffalo, is in charge of the New York office. E. F. Callahan is in charge of the New England office in Piedmont street, Boston. The picture has been placed at the Broadway and George M. Cohan theatres in New York and the Bowdoin Square theatre, Boston. Fred Lantry and Joe Lee, both formerly with Paramount, have been engaged by Mr. Taylor as salesmen.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Anderson Enterprises, Inc., of Anderson, S. C., have been chartered with a capital stock of $10,000. The company will operate motion picture theatres. W. A. Bramlett and W. C. Cothran, both of Greenville, S. C., are the incorporators.

L. T. Lester, owner of four motion picture houses at Columbia, S. C., has been appointed regional director of motion picture industries for the European relief council. Mr. Lester's four theatres and Manager Gallagher's Imperial theatre at Columbia will offer special children's plays on January 29 in order to assist in giving publicity to the European children's needs.

Exhibition of motion pictures showing the life and needs of the Methodist institutions of learning in North Carolina will feature eight meetings to be held in that state from February 7 to 14 inclusive. Scenes have been completed showing college life in every detail, it is announced, and these will be shown at Asheville, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Greensboro, Durham, Raleigh, New Bern and Wilmington. Prominent North Carolina film men cooperated with those in charge of the campaign.

James T. Ladd has completed a handsome motion picture theatre at Cheraw, S. C., and the house played to splendid audiences during the opening week. Otis Ladd is manager of the theatre. The theatre is considered one of the handsomest in the state, being of finest quality brick, with white trimmings. The theatre seats five hundred people comfortably and has dressing rooms, steam heat, rear exits and offices in the sections not needed for theatre purposes. More than $40,000 was expended in the construction of the theatre.

The City Federation of Women's Clubs of Charleston, S. C., has appealed to the Exchange Film Managers' Association for cleaner pictures. A circular containing constructive criticism has been sent to the association in which is pointed out the theory that the popularity of motion pictures is threatened at the present time by the suggestiveness of some of the films exhibited in the city of Charleston recently. It is said that the federation has the support of motion picture exhibitors of the city and that the appeal of the federation was made upon the advice of Albert Sottile, president of the Pastime Amusement Company of Charleston.

With an enlarged and remodeled building the Bijou theatre reopened at Spartanburg, S. C., on January 24th after having been closed for several months. The theatre will be operated by Southern Enterprises, Inc., and thousands of dollars has been spent in converting the building into a modern motion picture house. New dressing rooms have been installed and a new steam heating system has been inaugurated. The building has been lengthened by forty feet and the seating capacity of the theatre appreciably enlarged. The stage has been moved some thirty feet farther from the entrance. New scenery and more modern lighting effects have been installed under the supervision of Manager C. L. Henry. The Rex, the Strand, the Rialto and the Bijou all are playing to crowded houses despite the business depression.

CLEVELAND

Eugene P. Ochs has resigned from the sales force of the Cleveland office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to become assistant manager to S. Barrett McCormick at the New Ambassador theatre about to open in Los Angeles.

"Behold My Wife," Paramount feature, set a standard hard to beat last week in East Liverpool, Ohio, when it broke the record of the Diamond theare for any individual day, as well as for the whole week's run. "Behold My Wife" was booked for a three days' engagement at the Diamond theatre. But business was still going so well at the end of the third day that Manager H. Goldstein held it over for full seven days. Goldstein did some neat advertising in connection with the run. Beside going in for extensive and large newspaper ads. he preceded the opening of the picture with a series of teaser ads. These teaser ads. were extracts from titles and subtitles of the picture. They were spicy enough to excite interest, and stopped short just where the interest was keenest.

H. E. Elder, manager of the Cleveland exchange for Famous Players-Lasky suffered an injured arm last week, as the result of a fall on a slippery pavement.

SAN DIEGO

Kent G. Bush, of the Bush theatres, is a member of the San Diego Club and at the weekly luncheon recently he gave a pre-view of "Red Foam," the Ralph Ince picturization of William H. Hamby's story, which appeared a few months ago in the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Hamby is a resident of this city and was guest of honor at the luncheon. He is also a member of the Ad Club. A theatre party was given by Mr. Hamby Monday night at the Superba theatre, where the picture was shown for a week, at which local writers, many of national reputation, were guests.

Edwin Slocum, formerly house manager at the California and Dream theatres, has gone to Los Angeles as assistant house manager at the Superba.

Manager Hill, of the Pickwick, brought out on the streets an old-time "sandwich-man" as an advertising stunt in his publicity for "It Pays to Advertise," featuring Bryant Washburn.

Dominates the Field

Ready Soon

¶ The capable executives who comprise the membership of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers some time ago requested that the trade publications supply an A. B. C. audit.

¶ The audit of Motion Picture News circulation has been completed. The proofs have been O. K.'d for official printing.

¶ The figures tell a convincing story; it is natural to conclude that they will also see a concrete response in the space-buying policy of A. M. P. A. members during the coming year.

¶ An audit speaks louder than words.

The Trade Mark as a Guarantee

THE RITCHEY trade mark is an emblem. An emblem stands for something. The RITCHEY trade mark stands for a reputation long established when the motion picture industry was still in its infancy. It stands for a motion picture poster so surely conceived and designed, so filled with artistic power, so potent with advertising content, that it is second to none made anywhere in the world. It stands for an organization as finished in its every unit, —as harmonious in its working,—as strong in its leadership as in any business corporation in existence. The RITCHEY trade mark symbolizes a poster that has been consistently and constantly in the lead during the development of poster art in America. It is as significant as the Gorham stamp on silver or the Stetson mark in hats, for the RITCHEY name is now indissolubly connected with the greatest motion picture posters produced in the world.

Because of these things a highly technical knowledge of posters is not needed by any one who wishes to procure the finest attainable poster. It is only necessary for such a person to order posters that bear the RITCHEY trade mark.

"The Inside of the Cup"

A Cosmopolitan Production

"THE Inside of the Cup" has already beaten "Humoresque" in attendance. At the Criterion, New York, it has played to four capacity houses every day—for four weeks.

The reception given this picture in New York indicates that it will sweep the country, as one of the biggest box-office attractions ever made.

"Brewster's Millions"

From the novel by George Barr McCutcheon and the play by Winchell Smith.

Scenario by Walter Woods. Directed by Joseph Henabery.

WHEN a play can be such a great success as was "Brewster's Millions" on the stage, you can be sure it will be greater on the screen.

The stage production couldn't have "Fatty," the world's funniest man, in the leading comedy role.

The stage production couldn't show you the hundred hilarious ways that Monte tried to spend his millions—

it couldn't show you Monte at the age of two, and five, scenes which in the picture are among the funniest things ever imagined—

it couldn't show you the spectacular race track scenes, the shipwreck, the grand ball where Monte turns the hose on his guests — the dozens of other screaming situations.

The picture has all these, and more. Can you imagine how funny it is? No! You've got to see it!

Hero of Romance

ONE of the biggest scenes in "COLORADO" is the flood in the mine. Such things are hard to stage. They require real genius in direction—experience in the technical end—unlimited resources in equipment. But Universal has all of these and has them to a greater extent than any other concern in the business. That's why you can show, in addition to Universal's incomparable Jewels, Short Subjects and Serials—"52 Good Pictures a Year—and No Worry."

Among these "52 Good Pictures" you'll often find what is really a Special. But you'll get that Special at Weekly Feature Rates—which is somewhat better than booking only Specials at a Special's special price.

ON top of its unprecedented record of thirty big scoops in 1920, International News comes across again this early in 1921 with a walloping big exclusive. Mermaid Comedies are not one star comedies.

Mermaid Comedies are all star comedies—organization comedies—built up on the personalities of comedians like

Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton and
"Jimmie" Adams

It is the versatility of Director JACK WHITE, however, which has made Mermaid Comedies such a "sure fire" box office success. Though Mermaid Comedies are rough-and-tumble comedies, they are not of the slap-stick variety. They are best defined as ridiculous situation comedies which never insult the intelligence of an audience with pie throwing or similar childishness.

Director Jack White's unique art is that of being able to bring out his story by manufacturing comic situations which are genuinely humorous.

"HOLY SMOKE" is a roaring comedy of thrilling human interest. Good old fashioned melodrama and farce at their best.

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE"

PICTURE OFFERS RICH ENTERTAINMENT IN EVERY DEPARTMENT

It has been some time since Charles Rann Kennedy's spiritual drama "The Servant in the House" gripped its spectators upon the stage. Those who have seen it in the original version are sure to find in the picturization a work of tremendous import—a subject which maintains its vitality, its forceful message and its powerful characterization, despite the absence of the human voice. For the idea behind it is rich in entertainment values. Rest assured of that. Those who have never seen the original will marvel over a production which carries such a vital theme and will leave the theatre with deep impression.

It is a perfect adaptation and while it may reveal certain unimportant details which might have been left out for the sake of compression, still the spiritual quality is so strong, the story so vividly told, the interpretation so splendidly real that criticism seems like pernicious fault finding. "The Servant in the House" carries a message which never becomes propaganda because the truth in Kennedy's theme is subtly interwoven with the dramatic contents. He indicts the modern church for its commercial taint, working his message out in the form of symbols. And it cuts deep and will make people think.

A DRAMA OF SINCERITY SKILFULLY ADAPTED FROM THE FAMOUS PLAY

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

An intensive idea-play, "The Servant in the House"—the author has been guilty of no preachment; rather he makes an appeal big with meaning in terms of the drama. "The Servant in the House" is produced for screen presentation by H. O. Davis, and its sincerity is beyond question. The action is admirably portrayed, especially that of penetrating the source of corruption. Director Hugh Ryan Conway has displayed a high quality of skill in evolving such an amount of artistic appeal. The entire cast is splendidly typed. The production in general is big with significance at this time.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The day of the spiritual picture and of pictures with the spiritual touch seems to be here. "The Servant in the House" is positively one of the greatest dramas ever conceived along such lines, and in its transfer to the screen it becomes one of the greatest of picture entertainments—an entertainment with a gripping theme back of it.

In fact there is no doubt about the entertaining power of this picture. It remains merely for the exhibitor to handle this to the best advantage. It is understood that the Federated Film exchanges of America are to play this as a road show in some quarters while they will also release it through their own exchanges with the option that they control the method of actual distribution. But if it comes within reach you certainly ought to grab it. It is something far out of the ordinary and something in the way of entertainment that will really send the crowds out feeling better.

First to conceive the idea of securing active aid of eminent novelists, Goldwyn has followed a big idea to its fullest development

WATCH for Rupert Hughes' Dangerous Curve Ahead, (a deft comedy drama of domestic felicity), Gouverneur Morris' A Tale of Two Worlds (a colorful and powerful Oriental play by the author of The Penalty), Gertrude Atherton's Don't Neglect Your Wife (a box-office title if there ever was one!)

THESE are not adaptations from novels—they are original stories by the author, produced by a competent director under the watchful eye of the author. They represent the story ideal that Goldwyn established and is living up to. This point will be best illustrated by results on your attendance records.

FILM FUN, A MONTHLY REEL OF LAUGHS

Why FILM FUN Has Grown—

——It is the unofficial organ of the humor of the movies. Film fun is FILM FUN'S specialty. No other motion-picture magazine is quite like it.

——It gives its readers the news of the movie world, but not because somebody's press agent said it was news. Most of that stuff goes in the basket. FILM FUN has its own slant.

——It prints pictures of screen folks and screen plays, screen stunts and tricks of the movie trade, but not in a commonplace way. It does the unexpected.

——It specializes, not in long articles signed by Stars (which Stars didn't write), but in "short stuff" written by those who don't take their movies too seriously.

——It offers a fine course in supplementary reading to all who like the movies, whether they're in the business or in the audience. Sometimes it makes fun of very high-salaried, important persons. More often, it uses them to make fun.

——Frankly, its purpose is to amuse, and more and more people, over 100,000 monthly, are getting their money's worth of amusement out of it. Advertisers find it pays, too. There is real response from readers who buy a magazine because they want it.

"The Branded Soul"

From the famous novel
"THE IRON STAIR"
By RITA

A melodrama strange as life itself.
Depicting in vivid flashes the agony of a man's soul, of the single passion which moved him--the love of a girl--and of the crime he committed in its name.

But the girl knew, and the man came to know at last that nothing but the great atonement would wipe out the stain.

No question that Small Town Idol is Mack Sennetts greatest picture stop our gross business week ending tonight thirteen thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars stop this seems unbelievable taking into consideration that Mission theatre has only eight hundred eighty seats regards

Harry David

Managing Director Mission Theatre

And here are reasons why:

Florence Lawrence, Los Angeles Examiner: "A Small Town Idol is an instant success. Mack Sennett has eliminated entirely the proverbial slapstick and has evoked one of the most amusing films of his career."

Guy Price, Los Angeles Evening Herald: "Hardly an angle of melodramatic art escapes unscathed. Melodrama, farce, polite comedy, comedy-drama, revue, spectacle and plot are all there. It is Sennett's first big personal production since 'Mickey.' "

Edwin Schallert, Los Angeles Times: "Ben Turpin, valiant knight of careless eyes, corners all laurels. You have to be hard-hearted indeed not to succumb to the heroic charms of Ben in 'A Small Town Idol'."

May Markson, Los Angeles Record: "'A Small Town Idol' created much mirth at the Mission Theatre. Mack Sennett is perhaps the only director who can make an audience sit through so many reels of frivolity and make them feel that the picture is too short. He has accomplished this in 'A Small Town Idol.'"

"Sennett's biggest personal production since 'Mickey'."

WORLD DISTRIBUTORS — EXPLOITATION SECTION

"RECKLESS WIVES" INDEPENDENT FILMS ASSOCIATION'S LATEST

Critics Unanimous in Praise

In securing the distribution of "RECKLESS WIVES" the Independent Films Association feels that it has acquired a production made to order for the independent market. There is one thing certain and that is that it gives the Independent

JANE THOMAS

Films Association an opportunity to demonstrate the meaning of "exploitation hitherto unapproached."

"RECKLESS WIVES" is unquestionably blessed with one of the strongest titles ever given a picture. Beyond all question of doubt, it will attract the crowds to your box-office. More important, however, the production will stand up with any, assuring the exhibitor that his public will be pleased and entertained.

I. F. A. have spread themselves in the preparation of press books and exploitation material. Harry Rice, former director of publicity and exploitation of Universal Film Mfg. Company, who has many exploitation successes to his credit, is going to take personal charge of the exploitation of "RECKLESS WIVES" in the principal cities of the United States.

EXHIBITOR COMPLAINS ON NEAL HART'S "DANGER VALLEY"

Ralph W. Crocker, Proprietor, Star Theatre, Elgin, Ill., Pays Main Office Visit

"I want to see Eddy Eckels," roars an unannounced visitor to the I. F. A. offices.

"Mr. Eckels is out of town," he was told, with a "Will anyone else do?"

"Well, I've got a kick, and I want to talk to anyone that'll listen to it."

Whereupon, Mr. Ralph W. Crocker was introduced to Independent Films Association's sales manager, H. E. Belford.

"Frankly," said Mr. Crocker, "I have done a big business on Neal Hart's 'HELL'S OASIS' and also on 'SKYFIRE,' but regardless of that I feel that I lost money, due to the fact that there were many things in both of these pictures that pleased my patrons so much, that had I known of ahead of time, I could have cashed in on. Then along comes 'DANGER VALLEY,' with the wonderful Death Valley stuff. The action and thrills all taken in the "hell hole" of America, all in this picture, and for some reason or other, I didn't know it until my patrons told me."

Mr. Belford, after assuring himself that after all, Mr. Crocker was really not displeased at the Hart productions, only over the fact that proper advertising material had not been supplied him, presented him with copies of the elaborate press books gotten out on all Neal Hart productions.

"NEVER SAW IT BEFORE." "The exchange I do business with has never sent me a copy of Neal Hart press books. Believe me, had they done so, I would be several hundred dollars ahead."

"GREAT STUFF!"

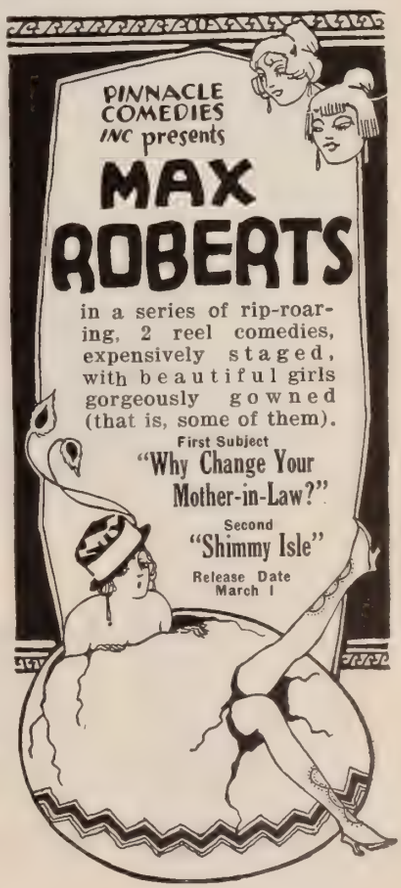
"THAT'S THE KIND OF STUFF EXHIBITORS WANT!"

"GIVE US MORE HELP IN PUTTING OUR PICTURES OVER!"

were a few of the things Mr. Crocker said, after congratulating I. F. A. and departing.

Note to Exchangemen

All exchanges doing business with the Independent Films Association know that we go to a great deal of expense preparing press books with unlimited advertising and exploitation material.



Please, please, and again please see that they get into the hands of your customers. As a matter of fact, see that these press books get into the hands of every exhibitor. They will not only get you business, but keep it for you.

The above story is absolutely correct, and as near word for word as space will permit. Help us give EXPLOITATION HITHERTO UNAPPROACHED.

LESLIE AUSTEN AND JANE THOMAS IN "RECKLESS WIVES"

Leslie Austen, of Broadway fame, playing the role of George Cameron, the young artist, does very meritorious work in his busy time catering to the many "RECKLESS WIVES" seeking his favor. Jane Thomas likewise adds new laurels to her already successful career. Her work will be remembered in Rex Beach's "The North Wind's Malice." "RECKLESS WIVES" will be released simultaneously throughout the United States, on or about March 1. An extensive trade paper campaign is to be inaugurated at that time. Inquiries are coming in every day from practically every territory. The big demand for this production assures I. F. A. of being able to place a simultaneous release date.

IN CLASS BY ITSELF

"Film enthusiasts searching for something new in drama with a powerful appeal will find it in this picture. The scenes of tenderness and beauty are finely dealt with. Unquestionably in a class by itself and one of the best features of the winter. The dramatic strength and beauty is masterly."—Minneapolis Daily News.

WORTH SEEING TWICE

"No more sweeping or powerful exemplification of the divine force of mother love has ever been penned—and certainly never screened. Developed with consummate skill and directed with rare and touching emotions. It is worth seeing twice. Motion Picture News

VOL. XXIII FEBRUARY 12, 1921 No. VII

The Root of the Trouble

WHATEVER outcry exists today against motion pictures—an outcry which always jumps to the utterly false conclusion of censorship—is due, not to pictures, but to their sensational, suggestive, even salacious advertising.

Pictures are clean. They are ambitiously clean.

No individual today who knows pictures, their development, their future and whose mind is unbiased can honestly claim otherwise.

But within the past few months a new force has arisen.

It is the exploitation angle.

It doesn't mean harm but it is harmful. It is a wild hysterical effort to get the money, without reckoning the cost. It is opportunism personified, blind selfishness.

In brief, through titles, posters and newspaper advertising, we are telling the public that pictures are bad when positively they are not.

We give herewith an editorial from the Indianapolis News. What it says is being ratified editorially by the most conservative newspapers in the country. And it reflects the soundest public thought. It is public sentiment.

"Hurtful Film Advertising"

"The exhibitors of motion pictures as well as the producers are to blame for the present movement in Indiana and elsewhere to regulate the industry. Everything against which the current agitation protests is set forth and emphasized in the advertising that the theater owners themselves write or sponsor. If a picture has in it a suggestive or questionable scene that scene is twisted from its context and held before the public in blazing headlines. Films innocuous, or nearly so, are made to appear sensational and salacious. The cheap sex bait is utilized in the grossest and most tawdry fashion. Respectable newspapers can and do regulate to an extent the advertising they print; they cannot change its spirit. Neither the public nor the film industry has any protection against the sort of advertising in uncensored newspapers or shown on billboards. Such "publicity" is often suggestive and hurtful. Fortunately not all of the exhibitors are culpable, and to them these remarks do not apply, but there are those who are habitual offenders against good taste and good sense.

The quick, cheap profits earned by such methods may in the end prove costly. A fundamentally decent public will eventually revolt. The turn is already coming, as the picture interests have reason to know, and foolishly sensational publicity is hurrying its progress. The films and the theaters generally need a cleaning up and if those most directly interested do not do it themselves the cleansing will be done with more painful effect from the outside."

There is nothing more to be said, except that much of the advertising in question originates right here in New York.

We put the situation before the National Association, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and each executive in the business.

Where the Church Stands

THE Church is not behind, not in sympathy with, the Blue Sunday law.

On the contrary the far-sighted clergyman everywhere realizes that so drastic a law will put back the Church several centuries.

We are speaking of the Church in a broad way. But the statement is none the less emphatic and we appeal to the exhibitor to accept the statement as a solid fact and to proceed accordingly.

Let him approach his local churches—and it is always best for him to make the first move—in this spirit. If he encounters narrowness he must try patiently to inform where ignorance exists. If he is still unsuccessful in his effort to explain that the Church and the motion picture can and must work together then he may be sure that public opinion will back him and not the antagonistic church.

Tell the Public the Truth

WE hope that exhibitors will make full use of the material offered on the following page in their "direct-to-the-public" censorship campaign. The material has been written, not so much with the idea of combating censorship, as with the hope of educating the public. It is a patent fact that the lay mind does not really understand censorship. And it is equally obvious that the quickest and most direct method of driving home that understanding is through the screen. We will supply more "anti" texts next week and occasionally thereafter.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Against Censorship

THE real front line trench in the battle against censorship is the motion picture theatre itself. The fight would be half won if the public mind only realized to the fullest the meaning of censorship.

To the ordinary person censorship merely means "some sort of control."

This does not sound dangerous to the average movie fan. It has something of an appeal. What the public does not realize is that censorship is "pre-publicity dictatorship." This is not "control" reflecting the public mind. Instead, it means that before the great body of public opinion has had an opportunity to see, to judge, and to express its own views, a small and select body of censors has said, "Thou Shalt Not."

"Control"—as applied to industries—is a word not distasteful to American ears; "Thou Shalt Not" is a commandment that fires liberty-loving blood. "Verboten" is Prussian. Enough said.

With a view towards aiding the exhibitor in even the smallest community to conduct his own anti-censorship fight, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has prepared the material on this and the following page. The slide texts offer an opportunity to reach the public through the most direct method—the screen. The longer material may find a place in the theatre's printed program or the local newspaper.

For Slides

"Movie censorship opens the door to political graft. And the public—as always—PAYS THE BILL."

"Do you need a committee to tell you what pictures you shall see and what YOU SHALL NOT SEE? That's censorship."

"Ours is a government of free speech and free press," said the famous Mayor Gaynor of New York in vetoing a film censorship bill.

"Rushed by cranks South Carolina's legislature passed a censorship bill unanimously. Then they investigated. And then—CENSORSHIP WAS TURNED DOWN UNANIMOUSLY."

"A picture theatre can't succeed without YOUR SUPPORT. Who would be more anxious to please you, the theatre, dependent on you, or the salaried censor board grafting on YOU?"

"A picture theatre not run on clean lines will inevitably fail. YOU—the home folks right in this audience—will do the job a blamed sight quicker than any censor board. How about it?"

"Censorship does not mean 'control' of the film business. It means a salaried board DICTATING what you shall see and shall not see. Do you need DICTATION?"

A Suggestion

How about using every press sheet and plan book that leaves a manufacturer's office as a weapon in the fight against censorship?

We know that the advertising men and publicity staffs would welcome the opportunity to roll up their sleeves and provide the exhibitors with material for use in slides and programs. Also snappy slogans that could be used as footnotes in theatre advertising.

Exhibitors will welcome the material and it will add new value to the press sheets. What producer takes first place on the line?

"Censorship of movies would be followed by censorship of newspapers. That's as sure as fate. For reformers must keep on agitating to hold jobs."

"Russia leads the world in SPIES and CENSORS. Is America to follow in Russia's footsteps?"

When did Americans begin to need nurses and guardians to pick their entertainment for them? That's what movie censorship means.

Censorship causes so much red-tape, political graft, and dissatisfaction among patrons in some sections that a few manufacturers advocate keeping ALL NEW PICTURES out of such territories.

For Programs

THE late William J. Gaynor, Mayor of New York, and one of the famous jurists of the country, when vetoing a proposal for motion picture censorship, declared: "Ours is a government of free speech and free press. That is the cornerstone of free government."

A few years later an Aldermanic committee in New York, turning down another attempt at censorship, quoted this declaration and followed with a statement which rings clear to every American:

"Your Committee believes that the safe way is to stick to a government of law and not of men acting in the capacity of censors or monitors, or under whatever other title its autocratic character may be disguised. The Constitution and the law should be effective weapons in the righteous pursuit of crime, and it will be a sorry day when they are set aside and we go back to a resoldering of the fetters in the shape of censorship."

The Committee then went on to point out one by one the various ordinances already on the statute books providing an effective check on the unscrupulous producer or theatre manager if properly invoked. These same laws, police powers, and licensing restrictions exist in every State and community.

THE motion picture industry and the picture theatre have no differences of opinion with the clergy and with sincere reformers that cannot be settled by open-hearted, frank discussion and cooperation. The industry's battle against censorship is not a fight against clean pictures; it is a struggle against red tape, tax burdens that must be passed on to the public, political graft, and AUTOCRACY. The millions of dollars invested in motion pictures cannot be made safe—not to mention hopes of profits—without public support. AND THE PUBLIC WILL NOT SUPPORT THAT WHICH IS NOT CLEAN. So this theatre—in common with every branch of the industry—expresses a desire to COOPERATE at all times with any sincere critic.

How much better whole-hearted teamwork will eventually work out than the liberty-endangering step of creating a salaried, politically controlled censor board, which, mind you, not only tells theatres and producers what they shall do or not do, but which in reality dictates to the public—to YOU.

In a country already over-burdened with taxes, reformers of every breed and description—most of them well-paid—are proposing all sorts of new tax-creating schemes, from the regulation of infants' dress in China to blue laws and movie censorship.

Someone has to pay the bills. That "someone" is always the public—and you don't dodge your share. Whether a manufactured article be a bar of soap or a motion picture, if taxes and handicaps are loaded on it as it passes from factory to consumer, the latter gentleman is going to pay the freight.

No industry and no individual objects to taxes that go towards the support of legitimate government functions. But no liberty-loving American relishes the thought of taxes taking money out of his pocket to pay salaries to a few politically-appointed censors and their cohorts of aides for the purpose of telling him what he shall see on the screen and what he shall not see.

The average American thinks he is capable of undertaking that responsibility himself and for his own family. And without the expense.

Proposed Ohio Censor Bill Would Sound Death Knell of Pictures

Screen Could Not Depict Crime of Any Sort; Blue Laws in Canada

WHILE the news from South Carolina tells of the death of the proposed censorship measure in that state, an account of which is published on another page of this issue, reports from Ohio and Canada on Blue Law and stricter censorship activities are of a less cheerful nature. A most drastic measure is now pending in the Ohio legislature, and Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been given a taste of Blue Laws as a result of the interference by the Lord's Day Alliance with the custom of holding picture performances in the local theatres on Sundays under religious auspices, and the censor board of that same province has threatened a more drastic supervision of pictures which depict hold-up scenes, burglaries, " and other forms of crime."

The Proposed Ohio Bill

Censorship and Blue Sunday appear to be about to engulf the motion picture industry in Ohio. There can be few motion picture theatres at all in Ohio, if the emergency bill recently introduced in the legislature by Mr. Coy passes the houses and receives the signature of Governor Harry L. Davis. The bill, labeled House Bill No. 14, if approved, will provide for the showing of no pictures in the state of Ohio in which there appears a murder, a robbery, a hold-up, a theft or any act made criminal by the laws of Ohio.

This is not all. Failure on the part of a censor to condemn a picture which reveals a murder, a burglary, a hold-up, a theft or any act made criminal by the laws of Ohio will cost Mr. Censor his job. The bill introduced by Mr. Coy is very explicit as to the kind of pictures that are to be shown on the screen. But it fails to tell what kind of pictures shall be shown. Mr. McCoy does not tell where plots shall come from, where everything is good and there is no evil. Mr. McCoy also fails to tell what he wants done with the great literary monuments of the ages, in which there appear descriptions of murders, burglaries, hold-ups, thefts and acts that do not accord with the laws of the state.

House Bill No. 14 deals a death blow to melodrama. There can be no more picture like " Daddy Long Legs " because it is illegal to show mistreatment of children. " Dinty " and its successors will have to be relegated to the rubbish heap, because the law will not permit a man to tie a woman to a table while an axe swings dangerously near her throat. Even " The Miracle Man " would have to be withdrawn, because gambling scenes are shown. According to House Bill No. 14 educational films dealing with biblical subjects could not be shown in Ohio. The crucifixion surely is not in conformity with the law.

This is about the most pernicious bill that has ever been introduced into the Ohio legislature. Its excuse is the crime wave now sweeping over the state. Ohio has had censorship for many years. Other states have not. There is no perceptible lessening of crime in Ohio because censorship exists, than there is in the sections where they never heard of censorship.

The Ohio Screen League is active in combating this bill and others of its like that are coming to the surface, and hopes soon to be in a position to issue an assuring proclamation to the exhibitors of Ohio.

National Association Reports Two Victories

News that the motion picture industry had scored two decisive victories was received at the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry this week. The Tennessee Legislature had voted almost unanimously not to take any action on the Sunday Blue Laws or motion picture censorship. This welcome news was quickly followed by advices from Columbia, S. C., to the effect that the Senate Educational Committee after voting unanimously a week ago for censorship had reversed its decision and voted unanimously against censorship of motion pictures after a hearing at which Alva Lumpkin represented the state exhibitors and Jack S. Connolly, of the National Association, had addressed the committee.

The committee voted to accept the plans as approved a year ago by the New York State Conference of Mayors, which gives to each city or town authority to regulate the theatres and the films exhibited.

Blue Law in Winnipeg

A deputation representing the Lord's Day Alliance waited upon Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba, on January 21, to protest against the Sunday concerts. This was followed by an announcement by T. A. D. Bevington, Provincial censor, that Sunday shows had been prohibited by Mr. Brown. In turn, Hon. T. C. Norris, Premier of Manitoba, denied that an Order-in-Council had been passed by the Provincial Government to restrict or prohibit Sunday amusements. Nevertheless, the Sunday film shows were not held on January 23 because exhibitors were notified that their theatre licenses would be cancelled if the performances were held.

The people of Wininpeg have seen an unusual development in a protest to the Provincial Treasurer by two clergymen against the Sunday closing order. These clergymen are Rev. George Salton and Rev. William Hay who have been holding Sunday " meetings " in the Allen and Furby Theatres respectively. Moving pictures have been featured at these meetings which have been held regularly for many months. The ruling, according to Mr. Bevington, is that no meetings on Sundays are to be tolerated at which films are screened.

Chicago Organizing for Fight

A series of conferences held in Chicago during the week closing Jan. 29 resulted in every effort being made to have the industry present a united front before the committee in an effort to kill off the ordinance which would undoubtedly wreak immense damage upon the business in Chicago and surrounding territory and make the entering wedge for similar enactment at Springfield for the entire state.

The seriousness of the situation in Chicago is based upon the fact that especially organized church interests are being used, either knowingly or unknowingly, in the interest of the ordinance which would place in the hands of three persons the question whether or not a picture was sacriligious, whether it ridiculed any nation or its people, and whether it might debauch public morals.

Members of the city council have given assurance that the ordinance will not be passed at once, and that there is no chance of its coming to a vote until after the aldermanic elections on Feb. 22. The aldermen do not care to be on record one way or the other until after the election, because of the influence of the church campaign that has been led by T. D. Hurley, chairman of the commission which drew up the proposed ordinance.

Meanwhile warnings have been sounded in many quarters that as soon as his Chicago case is disposed of the reformers are going to move on Springfield and endeavor to get state legislation there almost if not quite as drastic as that they are demanding in Chicago.

Clergy Join in Fight

Many of the prominent clergymen of the country, especially those of the Episcopal Church, are soundly opposed to any attempt at Blue Sunday legislation, according to reports which have reached the home offices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from franchise holders in various parts of the country. Two notable expressions of opinion were made at the Ninety-third Annual Council of the Episcopal Diocese of Kentucky recently in session at Louisville.

The Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, Bishop of the Diocese, declared that he would join a revolution against such laws

Censorship Defeated in South Carolina

Unanimous Opinion of Committee Kills Measure; Picture Men at Hearing

SOUTH CAROLINA has fired the first successful broadside into the camp of those who seek to muzzle the freedom of the screen by drastic state censorship. By an unanimous vote the Senate Committee on Education of the South Carolina Legislature reported unfavorably on the bill introduced by Senator Rogers of Spartanburg, which provided for the creation of a board of motion picture censors in the state. This action, which kills the measure, was taken four days after the same committee had reported favorably upon the bill.

Only the prompt action of exhibitors and exchange managers in conjunction with representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry prevented the Rogers bill from being brought up in the State Senate, it is said. They asked for a rehearing at which the arguments against state censorship proved so convincing that the committee reversed its previous action and voted to draft a bill to amend the Penal Code and have each town and city in the state punish any exhibitor who shows an objectionable film.

The committee was unanimous in the opinion that a censorship board for the state was impractical, but was also practically unanimous in the opinion that some steps should be taken to prevent the exhibition of such films that lend a degrading influence especially for the younger folk.

Sentiment expressed by members of the committee and by the motion picture representatives was to have a law enacted that would subject to fine or imprisonment any theatre manager showing an indecent, immoral or cruel film. The committee may also incorporate a license provision whereby the license of any theatre may be revoked at any time upon sufficient evidence that the motion picture house has exhibited a picture of an immoral, indecent or cruel nature. A sub-committee was appointed, composed of Senators Hart, McColl and Rogers.

The committee held an open hearing for nearly two hours, listening to representatives of the producers, distributors and exhibitors and to members of the committee. Alva M. Lumpkin, representing motion picture theatre owners, and others, speaking for the picture interests went into a frank discussion of the censorship idea.

Jack S. Connolly, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, spoke in behalf of the producers. He outlined just what other states were doing towards regulating the motion picture business and suggested that the penal code of the state be amended so as to prohibit the showing of any objectionable picture. Mr. Connolly submitted the recommendations of the New York State Conference of Mayors.

Among the motion picture men who participated in the debate were Fred Kent, of the Southern Enterprises, Inc.; Gerald Gallagher, manager of the Imperial theatre; L. T. Lester, George G. Warner, and O. P. O'Dowd.

Blue Law Offensive Starts in Wisconsin

Three Film Organizations Unite as Reform Propaganda Floods Press

BELLEAU WOODS and the Argonne will have nothing on Wisconsin when the film men of that state start their organized warfare against censorship, Sunday closing and other fanatic legislation, according to reports from that state.

The press has been flooded with propaganda and publicity matter of the Wisconsin blue law advocates, but outside of an occasional editorial or two sponsored by up-to-date editors there has been little come-back on the part of the film men.

In Milwaukee a committee composed of Rev. David James Burrell, Reformed Church; Rev. Parks Cadman, D.D., Congregational Church; Rev. Canon Wm. Sheafe, D.D., LL.D., Episcopal Church; Rev. Charles L. Goddell, Methodist Church; Rev. J. B. Remensnyder, D.D., Lutheran Church, and Rev. Robert Watson, D.D., Presbyterian Church, has been directing a state-wide campaign for Sunday closing. This committee charges that the motion picture interests have a large financial profit at stake and are, therefore, doing everything in their power to break down the Christian Sabbath. They claim that the film men are subsidizing billboards and that the columns of the daily press are reeking with misinformation and misinterpretation in regard to the question.

While in the larger cities, including Milwaukee, little progress has been made in favor of Sunday closing, the blue faction has succeeded in swinging public sentiment in an alarming number of smaller communities.

On top of all this agitation reports are received almost daily concerning various freak laws that are being enacted in local communities. In Superior, Wisconsin, the Douglas County Women's Council has petitioned the city commissioners to abolish serial motion pictures and to enforce the curfew ordinance. According to Commissioner A. D. S. Gillett, the recommendation of the women's organization will receive favorable action.

In Madison, the state capital, the corridors of the state building are thronged daily with persons trying to shackle the motion picture industry. Laws governing every phase of the film business are being prepared for presentation, some of them even as riders on apparently innocent legislation.

Realizing that concerted action is absolutely necessary if the censorship and blue law jingoes are to be eradicated, the three most prominent film organizations in the badger state have joined hands. A joint committee representing the Screen Club of Milwaukee, composed of Milwaukee's large down-town exhibitors, together with the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, which includes the Milwaukee outskirt houses and about 150 state theatres, and the F. I. L. M. Club, has been selected under the chairmanship of Louis Nahin of Milwaukee.

Many of the exhibitors and exchange men feel confident that if the people of Wisconsin understand the full import of the blue laws public sentiment will prevent the enforcement of the existing drastic laws and may even result in their repeal. While these exhibitors believe that it is important to keep an eye on the legislature, they think it is more important to mold public opinion by the truthful presentation of the actual facts in the case. These same film men are in favor of placing paid advertisements in as many newspapers throughout the state as will completely cover the territory.

Many Wisconsin citizens who have interests in the motion picture industry have made contributions for the waging of the fight. The Milwaukee Exhibitors' Club on January 29 staged a movie ball in the Milwaukee Auditorium. The proceeds of the ball are to be used in the blue law offensive, according to those in charge.

Drastic Measures Await Action by Indiana Legislature

Bills Providing for Censor Board and Film Commission in Committee

ANOTHER bill to provide censorship of films exhibited in Indiana was submitted to the state legislature at Indianapolis last week when Senator Alfred G. Hogston of Marion introduced a measure for the establishment of a censorship board. The exhibitors were already confronted with Senator Steele's drastic measure for the establishment of a state moving picture commission.

The state exhibitors showed increased activity when the senate revealed, in a measure, the way it feels about "blue laws" by coming within one vote of passing a law which would make unlawful the holding of any athletic or sporting event to which admission is charged on Memorial Day. This bill was aimed at the annual 500-mile sweepstakes race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, which attracts more than 100,000 people from all over the globe on Memorial Day. The Motor Speedway is owned and backed by some powerful interests and there was considerable surprise expressed when the senate came near passing the measure, known as the "Blue Memorial Day" bill.

The two censorship bills are in committee. They will not be printed and given out for general circulation until one or both of them are reported out of committee. Hence few of the exhibitors know what the full provisions of the bill are. The correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is enabled exclusively to present an analysis of both measures taken directly from the original drafts.

Both bills are drastic enough to cause all film people and friends of the industry, as well as many patrons of the screen who stop to think in any but a superficial way upon the subject, to object to their passage. The Hogston measure is a stiff one but it is not half so full of "teeth" as the Steele measure. The Hogston bill is not considered as having much chance of coming to a vote, but the Steele bill is likely to pop out into the open for a real fight on the floors of both houses.

The Hogston bill creates a "board of censors of motion picture films, which board shall consist of the Treasurer of the State, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction and the Lieutenant-Governor." The Lieutenant-Governor would serve ex-officio as secretary of the board. Additional salary is provided for the Lieutenant-Governor but not for the other members. The board is given power to employ necessary assistants and pay its expenses out of the general fund.

Section three reads: "It shall be the duty of the said Board of Censors to examine and censor as herein provided, all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the State of Indiana. Such films shall be submitted to the said board before they shall be delivered to the exhibitor. The said board shall charge a fee of one dollar ($1.00) for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet; for any reel of film exceeding one thousand (1,000) lineal feet the sum of two dollars ($2.00) shall be charged. All moneys so received shall be paid each week into the State Treasury to the credit of the General Revenue Fund."

This section brings the exchange men into the battle because it would make them responsible for the payment of the license fee, since it is provided the film shall be inspected before delivery to the exhibitor.

"Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of said board of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board," reads section four. "They shall be stamped and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words, 'Approved by the Indiana Board of Censors,' and the number of the film."

The board is given the right to work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status in other states "as a Censor Congress," and the action of such Congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board and all films passed, approved, stamped and numbered by such Congress, when the fees therefor have been paid to the Indiana Board, shall be considered approved by such board," says section five, giving promise of alliance of the Indiana board with a national censorship later.

The bill provides that censorship shall begin within ninety days after the act takes effect. Violation of the law would be punishable with a fine of from $50 to $500 and imprisonment in a county jail or on the Indiana State Farm for not more than one year.

Persons dissatisfied with the orders of the censors would be given the right to appeal to either the circuit or superior courts of Marion County, which is the county in which Indianapolis is located.

The fact that the Hogston bill gives the lieutenant governor something to do will cause its death, state senators say, since the lieutenant governor does not want the job at all.

The Steele bill provides that three salaried commissioners to be appointed by the governor shall compose the State Motion Picture Commission, and adds:

"No person shall be appointed commissioner who, directly or indirectly, has any pecuniary interest in the exhibition of moving pictures, or in any film exchange or corporation, in furnishing or manufacturing of motion picture films or the advertising of the same."

The commissioners would hold office for four years, the chairman receiving $3,000 and the other members $2,500 annual salaries. Necessary employes, assistants and advisors may be named.

Section four provides that the commissioners may engage in activities involving an expense of not exceeding $50,000 per year, "unless the fees collected by the commission exceed said amount." In other words, film men point out, the industry must hand over $50,000 or more per year to have itself "judged."

The censorship powers of the commission are described in section five as follows: "That the commission shall license every film submitted to it and intended for exhibition in the State of Indiana, unless it finds that such film is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, that it depicts a bull fight, or a prize fight, or is of such character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morale of children or adults, or incite to crime. The Commission may license any film, subject to such excisions, amplifications or alterations as the Commission may direct and require to be made upon satisfactory proof to the Commission that such ordered excisions, amplifications or alterations have

News to Publish Articles on European Conditions

JOE STERNBERG, who has departed for Europe to study at close range motion picture trade conditions abroad, will write a series of articles for the Motion Picture News which are expected to be of great value to the American producer and distributor and exhibitor, who will be able to recognize the relative advantages or disadvantages of European methods. Mr. Sternberg's investigations will bear upon the details of European production system, and the possible bearing of their work on the American market. This series will be written especially for the Motion Picture News.

Mr. Sternberg has been with the World Film Corporation for four years, most of which time he had charge of all camera and laboratory work and edited or aided in editing 52 five-reel features a year. He has edited features for William A. Brady, Famous Players, World Film, Mayflower, Goldwyn and numerous independent concerns.

He has been associate director and edited most of Goldwyn's features recently made in the East, and has collaborated with or assisted well-known directors and producers.

Wm. Brady on Tour of Large Cities in Picture Interests

Vital Problems to be Discussed by the National Association Chief

WILLIAM A. BRADY, President of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has started upon a tour of great importance to the picture interests—a tour which will take him to most of the principal cities east of the Mississippi River and probably to several western states. In fact his itinerary may carry him all the way to the coast.

President Brady, who has guided the affairs of the National Association for the past five years, will confer during his tour with leading exhibitors, their state organizations, exchange men and others identified with the picture industry in the key cities, as well as with the legislators in several of the states where legislation affecting the industry is pending.

One important object of his trip, according to a statement from the headquarters of National Association of Motion Picture Industry, is to get in closer touch with the various factors in the picture industry throughout the country and to establish a more intimate contact between them and the organization which he heads.

"It is Mr. Brady's purpose to awaken, if possible, in the minds of each picture man he meets a keener sense of responsibility to the destinies of the motion picture industry as a whole, and to open their eyes to the necessity for unity of purpose and concentrated action in the future development and growth of the industry," declares the National Association's statement. "In making the trip he has laid aside his own personal business to devote the next few weeks entirely to the cause of helping the picture industry. Arrangements for meetings of exhibitors, exchange men and others identified with the picture industry are being made in several big cities in anticipation of his arrival."

The present itinerary of President Brady's trip calls for his appearance in Chicago on Thursday and Friday, February 3rd and 4th. He left New York on the Twentieth Century, Wednesday, February 2nd. His headquarters in Chicago will be the Blackstone Hotel. He will be met there by Martin J. Quigley, publisher of the Exhibitors Herald and Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, who will act as a steering committee during his stay in that city.

From Chicago President Brady's schedule takes him to Milwaukee where he is to spend Saturday, February 5th. Arrangements for his reception and for meetings of the exhibitors, exchange men and others are under the direction of Robert A. Hess, secretary of the F. I. L. M. Association of Milwaukee, and Joseph Rhodes, president of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association. It is probable that Mr. Brady will be asked to go to Madison, the state capital, to confer with the legislative leaders in regard to legislation affecting the film industry.

Two days will be spent by the Association's leader in the Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. His itinerary calls for his appearance there on Monday and Tuesday, February 7th and 8th. Under the direction of Benjamin Friedman, president of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade and President Steffes of the United Theatrical Protective League, plans have been made for several important meetings in both cities. His presence has also been requested at the state house in St. Paul on February 8th to appear at a meeting on the Minnesota censorship bill.

After the Twin City stop the itinerary has not been definitely decided upon. He will decide later whether he will go direct to Idaho and Nebraska or will first swing into Missouri and Oklahoma, but he intends visiting each of these four cities. In the last three named states censorship measures are pending and in Sioux City, Iowa, a drastic local censorship ordinance has been started on its way to passage.

In St. Louis, Mr. Brady will confer on the Missouri censorship bill with S. J. Baker, president of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, and Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Exhibitors Association.

Sunday closing as well as a censorship legislation is pending in Oklahoma and anxious to discuss personally with Mr. Brady ways and means of successfully championing the rights of the industry. In Oklahoma City, which will be one of the centers visited, he will confer with Thomas H. Boland, who, by appointment of Gabriel L. Hess, chairman of the National Association's Censorship Committee, is representing the Association in combatting the hostile legislation. Mr. Brady has the co-operation of the Oklahoma City Film Board and the Oklahoma Theatre Managers Association, and it is proposed to have mass meetings called by both these organizations to greet him.

Denver and possibly the coast may be reached before the Association's president returns to New York but this will not be decided until later. Among the cities stopped enroute, however, will be Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. In all these centers there will be gatherings of men who are vitally interested in the future and present of the motion picture industry and who wish to hear the views of the industry's leader on the question of the moment.

Preliminary to his start for the middle west, Mr. Brady has already visited several nearby cities for the purpose of getting into closer and more intimate touch with the picture men. Together with Gabriel L. Hess and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, he visited Washington, D. C., on January 24th and attended a conference of exhibitors called by H. M. Crandall.

On January 28th Mr. Brady conferred in Philadelphia with Jules Mastbaum and his associates. Also at Atlantic City many exhibitors and others identified with the industry discussed with him plans for a unified front in facing the industry's problems.

Famous Players-Lasky Re-Opens Long Island Studio

WITH the resumption this week of production activities in the Long Island studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, announced several changes in the personnel of the studio staff.

Victor H. Clark has been made general manager of the studio. Robert T. Kane, formerly head of the Brunton Film Company, has been made production manager. L. H. Rich, who has been connected with legitimate stage production for many years, is Mr. Kane's assistant. William Smart has been made stage manager, and Clayton Davis is casting director.

Thomas Geraghty and Gardner Hunting are supervising directors, dividing between them the work of supervision of all productions made in the Eastern studios. Gaillard Thomas, who has been Mr. Geraghty's assistant, has been made head of the titling department.

Robert M. Haas remains as the art director for Paramount pictures made in the Eastern studios.

Court of Appeals Rejects "Babe" Ruth Petition

A telegram from Albany, N. Y., advises that the Court of Appeals has denied "Babe" Ruth permission to be heard in his attempt to prevent the Educational Films, Inc., from showing pictures of him in the act of knocking out his famous home run. Ruth sought an injunction against the distributing corporation which was denied by a New York Supreme Court Justice and affirmed by the Appellate Division, First Department. His application to take an appeal to the highest court was denied today with costs and disbursements.

Late News From the Coast

THE Gore brothers and Sol Lesser will open their Ambassador theatre on February 5, with "Passion." S. Barrett McCormack is managing director of the Ambassador. At matinees the orchestra will sell for seventy-five cents and divans for one dollar. In the evening the prices will be one dollar and a dollar and a half. All seats are reserved plus war tax.

D. J. Chatkins, secretary of Federated Film Exchanges, and Marion Kohn announce that the Federated convention delegates will leave Thursday, February 3, from Chicago, in two special Pullmans. They will arrive in 'Frisco on Monday and go to Byron Springs on Tuesday, on a special train, remaining until Friday, February 11. They will then leave for Los Angeles via automobile over the Coast road, and will arrive Monday, February 14, making their headquarters at the Alexander Hotel, where they will remain three days. Forty exchange men are expected.

O. L. Sellers has gone to New York to accept the position of production manager for a new company now being formed by Harry Aitkens.

Albert Smith and George Randolph Chester will arrive on the Coast on February 8. Chester is to produce "The Son of Wallingford," a seven-reel Vitagraph special.

Last Saturday was William Duncan Day at Phoenix, Arizona, when Duncan at the invitation of Governor Thomas Campbell, of Arizona, was the guest of the State. He led the Hoover Fund Parade, and spoke at seven theatres. The admissions, taken in for the Hoover Fund, totalled $10,000.

Gore-Lesser West Coast Theatres, Inc., have acquired the California, Bakersfield, Hippodrome, and Pastime theatres at Bakersfield from the Charles Brogg estate. The deal is said to involve $200,000 and increases the number of theatres under this control to forty.

Allied Amusement Ass'n Headed by Schaefer

Important changes in the policy of the Allied Amusement Association of Chicago are predicted, following the announcement, just made, of the re-election of Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, to the presidency of the organization, to fill the unexpired term of Maurice A. Choynski.

Choynski recently opened another theatre on the north side, and it is understood that he gave as his reason for resigning that his business demanded too much attention to permit him to devotte the proper time to the association.

It is declared that the election of Schaefer probably will result in the Theatre Managers' Association and the Showman's League realigning themselves with the association.

Thus strengthened, the association, it seems certain, will be in much better position to combat such attempted legislation as the proposed censorship ordinances in Chicago.

Al Christie Coming East

Al Christie, comedy film producer, who has not left Los Angeles for more than four years, will leave at the end of this week for a tour which will eventually land him in New York about a week or ten days later. Mr. Christie intends making a few stops in the South, at New Orleans and at possibly one or two other cities, visiting friends before joining his brother, C. H. Christie, who is now in the East.

Jacksonville. Messrs. Carter and Klutho here. Representatives of Chamber of Commerce. Enthusiastic and determined as ever to make Jacksonville a big producing centre. And they're right!

Independent Films' Ass'n Has Griffith Studios

Eddy Eckels, who recently arrived in Hollywood from Chicago, to take charge of all production there of pictures releasing through Independent Films Association, announces that the Association has taken over the Griffith Studios and that four producing units already are working there. Pinnacle Productions, starring Neal Hart, and Pinnacle Comedies, featuring Max Roberts, Arthur Henry Gooden Productions, and Tattenham Special Added Attractions, now being united under one banner for co-operative production.

This is the first time in the film history that an association of independent producers has been effective, whereby the units will work on the co-operative plan, according to Mr. Eckels.

Utica Theatres and Press in Midst of Controversy

Some of the motion picture theatres in Utica, N. Y., are at odds with the newspapers of that city, the trouble starting when the Utica Press published a resume of conditions in Utica as the result of Sunday movies for one year. It is claimed by the paper that pictures of the wrong type have been shown by some of the theatres.

The motion picture proprietors retaliated by withdrawing their advertising from the Press. The Press then published another story, telling why the advertising had been withdrawn, and as a result the entire city is now watching the controversy. One theatre, it is said, has resumed its advertising, and has annouced that it will no longer be open on Sundays.

National Association Has New Office in Washington

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., announces through its representative, Jack S. Connolly, that its Washington Bureau is now located at 820 Albee Building, in the Capital City.

Hoover Drive Reaps Success

EARLY reports from various sections of the country indicate that the film campaign for the Hoover Relief Fund, conducted during the week of January 30th and setting aside Wednesday, January 26th and Saturday, January 29th as days of special effort in behalf of the Relief Fund, has proved to be a great success financially.

Detroit Gives Matinees

The theatres of Detroit, Mich., held special morning matinees for children on Saturday, January 29th, to assist in the film campaign for the Hoover Relief Fund. The receipts of the performances were handed over to Hoover committee. A 100% representation of the Detroit motion-picture theatres was effected for the matinee drive. Advertisements acquainting the public with the matinee performances were carried in all of the Detroit dailies on Thursday and Friday, January 27th and 28th. Many Michigan theatres also contributed, while on last Wednesday night, collections were taken in the audiences after talks by Four Minute men.

Los Angeles Reports

Ten downtown theatres of Los Angeles have donated their entire receipts taken in between the hours of ten and twelve on Wednesday morning, January 26th, to the Hoover Fund. The total reached more than twenty-five hundred dollars. The suburban theatres adopted the same plan on Saturday morning, January 29th. Receipts have not as yet been fully counted.

A benefit performance has been arranged by Famous Players-Lasky and Sid Grauman to take place at the Ambassador Hotel on February 2nd to aid the Hoover Relief Fund. The Paramount release "The Inside of the Cup" will be shown. Lasky stars are scheduled to give acts. A dancing program is also being arranged. Seats are being sold at five dollars apiece and boxes at one hundred dollars.

Shows in Frisco Feb. 3

In connection with plans to raise money for the starving children of Europe as asked by Herbert Hoover of the motion picture industry, the San Francisco exchange men have met with the mayors of Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley and arranged for the attendance of school children and a large body of citizens on February 3, which is designated in those cities as "Relief Day" at special performances in all the theatres. All of the San Francisco theatres have lined up for this program.

Big Quota from Buffalo

Almost $6,000 was collected in the theatres of Buffalo, Thursday night, January 27, for the Hoover fund for starving children and as much more was realized at the special matinees given in all the houses Saturday, January 29. Buffalo film men jumped into the local campaign with both feet, and the result is one to be proud of. Michael Shea of the Shea Amusement company is chairman of the Buffalo committee. Four teams were appointed at a meeting of the exhibitors and exchangemen to collect the receipts of the special matinees. Four Minute Men spoke in all the local houses during the week, and soliciting was permitted in the lobbies for this fund only.

Tampa, Fla., Contributes

Four Minute speakers told the audiences of five of Tampa's, (Fla.) leading theatres, of the awful conditions in Europe, and asked them to help in the great work. A collection was then taken up, with the following results.

The Strand went over the top with a gross of $114.32. The Victory came in with $103, and the Bonita added $23.16 to the fund. All three of these houses are operated by the Strand Amusement Co., Mr. C. D. Cooley, manager.

At the Alcazar, $28.22 was given by the audience and the Grand added $22.87 to the total. Both of these houses are operated by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Mr. Kane being the local manager.

St. Louis Exhibitors Will Aid Relief Fund

Members of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade and managers of several local picture theatres at a special meeting January 8th, discussed plans for giving benefit shows January 26 to raise $100,000 to be given to the fund for child relief in Central Europe.

The meeting was called following the receipt of a letter from Herbert Hoover, director of the nation-wide campaign for the funds, asking aid from the motion picture theatres. It is expected that all the St. Louis houses will give benefit performances and all exhibitors within a radius of 150 miles will be asked to turn over the receipts from their theatres for one day for the benefit of the starving children.

It was decided to send invitations to all theatre owners in towns near St. Louis to attend a meeting to be held here next week to further discuss plans for the benefit. A committee on arrangements was appointed, composed of Barney Rosenthal, Sidney Baker, Barney Fegon, F. Fox and G. E. Aker.

Lynch Becomes Director of Georgia Bank

S. A. Lynch, head of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., motion picture theatre operators, has been elected to the directorate of the Trust Company of Georgia, one of the largest banking institutions of Atlanta. Mr. Lynch is a resident of Asheville, N. C., but spends much of his time in the Georgia capital.

Theatres in Five Cities Affected by Car Strike

A street car strike in Albany, Cohoe Watervliet, Rensselaer and Troy, startin last Saturday, over a difference of wage is raising havoc with the motion pictur theatres in the five cities, resulting in most perceptible falling off in attendanc A jitney service relieved the situatio somewhat, although no doubt hundreds regular patrons remained at home rath than to pay the 10 and 15 cents bein charged for the jitneys. Troy was parti ularly hard hit owing to the fact that hu dreds flock there from Albany each Su day night by trolley to attend the motio picture theatres, the Albany houses bein closed on Sunday.

Charlie Chaplin Denies Goldwyn Rumors

CHARLES CHAPLIN has wired Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, that the recent rumors heard in the industry that he was to become associated with Goldwyn, are absolutely false. He requested that an unqualified denial of them be issued.

The facts of the matter are that Mr. Abrams only returned from the West Coast where conferences were held between the heads of United Artists and three of the producing stars, and Mr. Abrams states that Charlie is hard at work getting things in readiness for the producing of his big features for United Artists.

Exchange Managers and Exhibitors Convene at Washington

Virginia, Maryland and District Exhibs Also Hold Separate Session

A CONVENTION of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the States of Virginia and Maryland and of the District of Columbia was held at Washington, D. C., on January 26th and 27th at the Hotel Washington. The convention organized by the exchange managers had for its object the meeting of the exchange managers and exhibitors and the discussion of problems in which both divisions were interested. While the main convention headquarters was established at the Hotel Washington, the Virginia exhibitors conducted a separate convention at the Hotel Harrington on the mornings of January 26th and 27th and assembled with the other state bodies and exchange-men in the afternoon sessions at the Hotel Washington.

George Fuller, president of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, presided at the Hotel Washington meetings. On Wednesday evening, January 26th, the members of the convention attended a performance at the Gayety Theatre. On Thursday evening, January 27th, a grand banquet was tendered to the visiting exhibitors at the Hotel Washington, and at eleven o'clock the members assembled at Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre to witness a showing of Charlie Chaplin's six-reel comedy, "The Kid."

The entertainment committee of the Exchange Managers' Association which arranged for the convention consisted of Chairman Abe Dressner, president of the Washington Theatre Supply Company, and local distributor of the Nicholas Power Company; Stanley B. Lust, vice-president of the Exchange Managers' Association; W. A. Mack, S. A. Galanty, Jules Levy, W. L. White and Paul Krieger. In conjunction with the convention a special demonstration of the new 6 B type E Powers Projector was given at the Washington Theatre Supply Company's offices in the Mather Building under the auspices of Edward DeHart, sales-manager of the Nicholas Power Company.

The following statement issued during the week from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America covers the business of the convention of exhibitors of Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia at the Hotel Harrington on January 26th and 27th:

"Mr. A. Brylawsky, vice-president of the organization of the District of Columbia, was elected temporary chairman and immediately gave way to Mr. Jake Wells of Norfolk, Va., who assumed the permanent chairmanship of the convention.

"Mr. Wells made a brief address reviewing the former efforts of the exhibitors in a national way and paying a strong tribute to their final success in forming a national exhibitors organization under the leadership of Sydney S. Cohen.

"After Mr. Wells' introductory address, Mrs. Lodge Stevens who is interested in the question of relief for the Near East, was allowed to address the convention briefly, urging upon the exhibitors cooperation in the work which she was promoting. After she was through, the matter was referred to the respective secretaries of the three organizations.

"A resolution to the effect that the convention approves of the aims and purposes of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and that each of the units represented affiliate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was passed unanimously.

"Chairman Wells then introduced Mr. Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Mr. Cohen said: 'The motion picture theatre owners of the country have now convinced themselves that organization is the insurance for the protection of their investments in this business. We are organized not for profit but for protection. We have for the first time in history of the motion picture a powerful, virile national organization consisting at this time of thirty-eight states, none of which has a representation of less than 50% and most of which have a representation ranging between 75% and 95%.'"

"Outlining the program of the Organization Mr. Cohen said that they would first of all address themselves to the effect of abolishing or modifying the 5% film rental tax, the Music Tax and Sunday Legislation. He gave a report of the meeting of the Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on December 14th in New York with representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

"Mr. Cohen was followed by Mr. Julian Brylawsky who launched into a strong attack on Mr. William A. Brady and the National Association because of speeches made by Mr. Brady to the exhibitors of Baltimore and Washington a few days previous. Mr. Brylawsky said Mr. Brady is using Bolshevik methods to disrupt our organization. Evidently, he and his employers are afraid of us and are trying to discredit our organization and our leaders. They found out in New York that the organization stands 100% back of its leaders, which makes them all the more afraid.

"Mr. H. B. Varner spoke in the same vein accusing Mr. Brady and his cohorts of trying to influence some exhibitors with his pretended friendship. He said they were more interested in creating dissension in exhibitor organizations than in co-operating with them or in Sunday opening or Censorship, a statement which was greeted with sustained applause."

Mr. Thomas Goldberg, vice-president of the Maryland Exhibitors Association, described in the same vein a meeting of the Baltimore exhibitors on Tuesday, January 25th, called at the request of Mr. William A. Brady. The M. P. T. O. of A. statement continues as follows:

"Mr. Crandall of Washington delivered an address and dwelt particularly on the evils of the distributors and manufacturers furnishing films to churches and schools and the development of the so-called 'Non-Theatrical Departments' which were being used in competition with exhibitors and which would eventually result in severe losses to the exhibitors.

"On the evening of the 27th, a get-together meeting was held at the Hotel Washington in the Beautiful Hall of Nations Room, which was attended by every exchange man in the territory and by the exhibitors as well. The exhibitors were the guests of the exchange men. Lieut. Anderson acted as the toastmaster. A very fine repast was served. An excellent vaudeville program arranged by Mr. Julian Brylawsky was offered to the guests. Among the speakers at the banquet were Sydney S. Cohen, Harry M. Crandall, Jake Wells, Congressman Burdick of Rhode Island, S. I. Berman, H. B. Varner and others."

Kane to Act for J. Stuart Blackton in America

AFFILIATIONS have been established between J. Stuart Blackton, the prominent producer, and Arthur S. Kane, president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. By virtue of this new association, the Kane organization, it is announced, will represent J. Stuart Blackton on this side of the Atlantic and will supervise the distribution of the Blackton productions in America.

The announcement of the Kane-Blackton tie-up was made by Mr. Blackton in Chicago this week. He returned to New York on Tuesday and sailed for England on Thursday aboard the Aquitania, accompanied by his family and the members of his staff. The Blackton studio in London will be opened shortly after his arrival there, and the production of the first picture, featuring Lady Diana Manners recently engaged by Mr. Blackton under contract, will be started early in the spring.

Public Library Willing to Cooperate

THE following letter has been received from the director of the New York Public Library in regard to co-operation of those seeking information concerning the motion picture industry:

"The New York Public Library has frequently been asked what it can do for the motion picture industry, and the receipt of a letter from California asking about our relations with this important industry leads me to venture to outline our position through the columns of the Motion Picture News.

"We have always said, in answer to the question, that we were glad to help the motion picture industry to the limit of our resources, just as we are glad to help seekers for information connected with any other industry. The Library, however, cannot give more than a reasonable amount of time in service, nor can it spend from its general funds more than a reasonable amount of money for books and material to be used on behalf of the industry.

"That great possibilities for the industry lie in a research collection of books and other printed mater made for the particular needs of motion picture producers is obvious. If the producers will provide funds for the creation and administration of such a collection the Library will gladly undertake its development.

"The tendency to-day is undoubtedly towards building up special libraries in various forms of industry. Sometimes it is best to have these libraries separated from the public library, but in the case of the motion picture industry, which draws on so many fields of life and thought, it seems to us better to have the special library connected with a large general library which can supplement the special collection."

A.M.P.A. Is Addressed on Shortage of Paper

That the threatening timber famine and the question of nationwide reforestation are matters of vital importance to the motion picture industry was the substance of the theme presented by Hugh P. Baker, secretary of the American Paper and Pulp Association before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the weekly meeting at the Cafe Boulevard on January 27.

Asserting that many of the problems of the trade paper, the publicity and advertising departments and the industry as a whole are dependent upon a solution of the paper situation which, in turn, is linked up with the threatened depletion of forests, Mr. Baker declared that aggressive methods were necessary to meet the crisis.

Speaking in his official capacity he presented figures to uphold his contentions.

"Next to food and clothing," he contended. "paper plays the largest part in your industry. There are from six to seven million tons of paper consumed in this country annually; but today we are facing a shortage of paper producing timber.

"In ten years, at the present rate, the available supply of southern pine will be depleted, and in forty or fifty years we shall have seen the last of the forests in Washington and Oregon.

"There are thousands of acres of land idle in the state that should be used for reforestation instead of standing idle; and instead of sending out of the state for our timber we ought to take active measures to produce it right here. The situation is confined not only to New York state, but is typical of every state where practically half the broken area is lying idle and could be used to recreate the timber supply of the country.

Mr. Baker asserted that Japan had an eye on the vast forests of Siberia and would, if it were successful in obtaining these lumber tracts, be able to dominate the paper market of the world.

He urged support for some remedial measure before Congress. The measure he specifically advocated is the Snell bill, which has been indorsed by the American Paper and Pulp Association, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, the United States Chamber of Commerce and other influential organizations for the conservation and recreation of forest supplies.

Civic Theatre Incorporated in New York

Our Civic theatre, Inc., was incorporated during the past week in the secretary of state's office at Albany, N. Y., with a capitalization of $300,000, the theatre to show motion pictures. The directors for the first year are Dr. A. L. Cardozo, Robert Buchanan, Jr., and Edgar N. Zorn, all of Richmond Hill. Bareford, Martha V. Knoedler.
any time for cause shown."

Agreement Reached in St. Louis Theatre Wrangle

Harry Koplar, who last March delivered possession of nineteen motion picture theatres in St. Louis which he controlled to the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and thereafter became a party to eight different lawsuits over payment for the theatres, said recently that he had received a substantial payment on the houses and had come to an amicable agreement concerning ultimate full payment. The suits have been dismissed.

The purchase price announced at the time of the deal was $1,350,000, Koplar's personal equity being more than $500,000. The sum represented the net accumulation of Koplar in the motion picture business here, which he entered ten years ago with a 5-cent show.

The theatres which he delivered to the Famous Players Corporation were the Kings, Pershing, Shenandoah, Juniata, Grand-Florrissant, Lindell, Arco, Royal, Cherokee, Gravois, Novelty, Maffiitt, Lowell, Rex, Russell, Compton and St. Louis.

Settlement is understood to be along the lines of the original agreement as interpreted by Koplar. The transfer was chiefly leaseholds and included fee to only a few theatre buildings.

Linick and Schaefer Get Three Chicago Houses

Announcement last week by Jones, Linick & Schaefer would acquire three more motion picture theatres in the loop in Chicago, was followed this week by the official announcement that they had purchased the three houses recently sold by Harry Meir, of the Hotel Morrison, to the Saxe interests in Milwaukee. No announcement was made as to the consideration involved.

Following the sale by Meir, a number of Chicago interests are declared to have been interested in obtaining control of the theatres, which are Boston, Alcazar, and the Rose. all near Madison and Clark streets, practically the heart of the loop.

It is announced also that Jones, Linick & Schaefer are to take even still another loop theatre within a week or so.

been made. If the Commission shall not license any film for any of the above reasons, it shall furnish to the applicant a written report clearly setting forth the reasons for its refusal and a description of each rejected part of any film not disapproved in toto, and upon the applicant filing, in the office in which application for license is filed, a statement under oath by the owner or lessee of said film, that the part or parts described have been eliminated from the film and all copies thereof, a license shall be issued forthwith. But any license obtained upon false or misleading affidavits or application shall be wholly void ab initio.

Hampton Replies to Sydney Cohen and Wilbur F. Crafts

For Solid Front Against Censorship; Protests Misuse of His Article

THE controversy, which started with the publication by Pictorial Review of Benjamin B. Hampton's article, "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies," took fresh strides this week. The Motion Picture News, in the issue of February 5th, published a letter from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to Mr. Hampton, in which Mr. Cohen objects to the stand that exhibitors are responsible for the showing of pictures with a salacious sex appeal.

In answer to this, Mr. Hampton has written the following letter to Mr. Cohen:

"Dear Mr. Cohen:

"Many thanks for your esteemed favor of January 22nd. I am gratified you agree with me that unclean, salacious sex pictures are a grave menace to the industry. It is regrettable you should defend the exhibitors by placing the responsibility for sex stuff on the producers.

"The big point I am trying to drive home in my magazine article is this: motion picture producers and exhibitors are servants of the public. The entire responsibility rests on the public; if the public wants sex pictures they must have them, and they will have them. If the public does not want sex pictures they will not get them. The theatres and producers will respond promptly to the demands of the public. I deal extensively with this point in a long telegram to Wilbur F. Crafts, copy of which is attached hereto.

"The second big point is this: the motion picture art and industry is a factor of incalculable value in American life. Sincere, intelligent reformers, animated by high motives, not animated by desire merely for notoriety will work earnestly to strengthen, broaden and deepen the power of motion picture theatres. They will do this solely for common good, and for the benefit of mankind. Again I refer to my telegram to Mr. Crafts.

"The motion pictures are restricted and harrassed by censorship, by constant threats of extended censorship, by constant threats of Blue Sunday laws, and by the nagging attacks of ill-advised reformers and reform organizations everywhere.

"It is my belief that a large section of the public is growing hostile toward pictures because of sex stuff poured on the screen. This section of the public will be led into supporting destructive attacks of narrow-minded reformers, unless the picture industry conducts a campaign of education. I insist most emphatically that it is an error for this great industry to permit itself to be placed on the defensive. We have nothing to apologize for. There is no reason why we should slink around in secret and try to be covert and subtle in our actions. We are public servants. We are ready and willing to use our producing facilities to make none but clean pictures, and our theatres are willing to exhibit none but clean pictures, if and when the public tells us they want this class of product. No new laws are needed. No attacks from reformers are needed. All that is needed is intelligent and earnest expression of opinion from theatre patrons to theatre owners.

"Let us lay aside, at least temporarily, all the small internal disagreements. Let us forget the petty incidents of trading between producers, distributor and exhibitor. Let us present a united front to the elements that are laboring to obtain legislation that will cripple us or ruin us. Let us say boldly and frankly to the public:

"'We are custodians of the greatest, finest and most inspiring form of entertainment ever devised for all the people. We have given you beautiful theatres, thousands of beautiful theatres, and the best musical presentations ever known in the history of the world. We give you great pictures and productions made by artists at costs running into huge sums. All these splendid things we supply to all the people at prices so low that the poor man and his family can enjoy them equally with the rich man. This is democracy—a practical, definite working out of principles that brought the American nation into existence. We give you the arts of story-telling, drama, interior decoration, costuming, pictorial composition, architecture and music. We give them to you so that all the people are benefitted, entertained, inspired and educated. We are entitled to your good will. We deserve your earnest support. You owe it to us to fight for us. If there are errors in our affairs, let us counsel together, not at long range, nor through the medium of reform associations but man to man, and fact to face. We are at our theatres daily. We urge you to talk to us when you come to our theatres, or we will be glad to meet you in any gathering where all of us can discuss our mutual problems and find a basis upon which we can build a solid, permanent friendship.'

"Yours very truly,

BENJ. B. HAMPTON."

¶Watch for It.

The telegram to the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the International Reform Bureau, of which Mr. Hampton makes mention in his letter to Mr. Cohen, calls the reformer to task for his recent interview published in the New York World. Mr. Hampton states that in the interview he is quoted to prove that censorship of the screen is necessary. He accuses Rev. Craft of using part of the published article in the Pictorial Review, and omitting other portions, thus presenting an unfair and incorrect statement of the producer's position. "If this is the case," the telegram reads, "you are guilty of a very grave error, and I am confident you will move promptly to make reparation."

"I have the courage," states Mr. Hampton, "to frankly and openly attack the errors in the motion picture situation and I have also placed responsibility of these errors precisely where it belongs—that is, on the shoulders of the public."

Continuing his explanation of his stand to Rev. Crafts, Mr. Hampton states that he believes censorship is not only un-American, but that it is so inefficient that it is ridiculous. He states that it is a matter of record that unclean sex pictures have virtually come into existence since state censorship laws became a fad. The type of motion picture producer who wants to make sex pictures long ago learned how to disguise his product or to so conduct his political or religious relations that he is able to cause his plays to pass the censors, states Mr. Hampton.

"I cannot believe," he writes, "that the object of your crusades is to kill motion pictures. Educators and thoughtful people universally agree that motion pictures are a great new force that is needed by society. Human beings must be entertained, and certainly no form of entertainment has ever reached so many people as pictures. This great power ought to be encouraged." Continuing, Mr. Hampton claims that pictures should be given great credit for the ease with which the saloon was done away with. The motion picture theatre, he states, has grown to be a source of entertainment for the working man and his entire family.

"We do not need new laws," he writes in conclusion. "No laws were needed to drive war plays from the screen after the armistice was signed, and no laws are needed to drive unclean pictures from the screen today.

"We have laws enough. Every city under its police power can cause unclean pictures to disappear overnight. Here in Los Angeles during the last year and in other cities, the police power has been evoked successfully to prevent appearance or unclean pictures.

"Censorship is un-American and inefficient. Public opinion is all sufficient in obtaining prompt, complete results.

"Your organization will not accomplish results of benefit to the American people by fighting for legislation that would cripple or destroy this great new art. Your organization will accomplish beneficial results by working with the picture industry instead of against it.

"I urge you to invite theatre owners and producers to meet with your organization. Get together. Cooperate for the common good. Nothing will be gained by fighting. Everything will be gained by sincere, earnest cooperation."

if they were passed, and the Rev. Henry Russell Talbot, canon residentiary of the Washington Episcopal Cathedral, Washington, D. C., declared that the U. S. congress had as much intention of passing any blue Sunday laws as it did of commissioning a man to go to Mars.

Present New York Laws

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, anxious to aid the exhibitor in keeping any stringent Sunday closing laws from New York, has sent out a copy of the present laws, which are printed below:

An act to amend the Penal Law, in relation to the exhibition of Motion Pictures on the First Day of the Week.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows.

Sec. 1. The Penal Law is hereby amended by addinging at the end of Article One Hundred and ninety-two a new section, to be section twenty-one hundred and fifty-four, to read as follows:

Sec. 2154.—Motion picture exhibitions on the first day of the week. If in any city, town or village motion pictures are now exhibited on the first day of the week, they may continue to be so exhibited during such time after two o'clock in the afternoon as the exhibition of motion pictures shall not have been prohibited by an ordinance hereafter adopted by the common council or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adoption, repeal or re-adoption of which is hereby authorized. If in any city, town or village, motion pictures are not now exhibited on the first day of the week, they shall not be so exhibited except during such time after two o'clock in the afternoon as shall be permitted by an ordinance hereafter adopted by the common council or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adoption, repeal or re-adoption of which is hereby authorized.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

"Will the Public Pay a Fair Price?"

DOES the big worth-while production deserve to command a higher price at the box-office than the average release—or doesn't it?

The theatregoing public to-day is insisting upon unqualified excellence, upon extraordinary entertainment value in the screen dramas to which it gives its wholehearted support—support that is expressed in crowded houses and lines of waiting patrons.

Will the public pay more to see such productions in proportion to their increased excellence over the common run of features—or will they rebel against an advance in admission prices?

The question is one of the most important confronting the industry today. Upon the answer depends the producer's ability to continue to progress as he has been doing for the past twelve months, and the exhibitor's ability to continue showing attractions of a calibre which he can feel certain will meet the public's most fastidious demands.

The outstanding productions of 1920-21 have proved their power to please the public at advanced prices in every case where the exhibitor has had the enterprise and foresight to play them for what they are worth.

And now there comes from Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., a tremendous demonstration of the public response to the call of quality from the screen.

Mr. Crandall booked "Passion," the Associated First National "Big Five" production, starring Pola Negri, into the Metropolitan for the week of January 16.

The regular scale of admission at the Metropolitan is 20 cents and 25 cents for matinees, 25 cents (balcony) and 40 cents (main floor) for evening performances.

The house record up to January 16 for one week's business was $13,600.

For the run of "Passion" Mr. Crandall raised the matinee price to 55 cents for the entire house and to 80 cents for the evening.

An increase of 140 per cent.

At the close of the last show Saturday night, January 22, the gross receipts for the week totalled $28,829.41.

Not a single complaint was heard during the entire week about the advanced prices. On the contrary, many patrons of the Metropolitan made a point of stopping after the performance and declaring that they would have cheerfully paid $1.50 to see the picture and felt perfectly satisfied.

"It is true that we did advertise the picture well and exploit it properly, said Mr. Crandall. "For this we spen $5,300. The newspaper campaign starte with very small ads and worked up t three-quarter pages on Sunday. In addi tion to that, we got every one of the twen ty-six twenty-four sheet stands availabl in Washington and we put one hundre 24's, 3's and 6's in surrounding town within twenty miles of the capital.

Cinematographers Hold Grand Ball on Coast

On Saturday night of last week th American Society of Cinematographer held a grand ball at the Ambassador Hote in Los Angeles, Cal. It was the most brilliant and most representative affair of the West Coast film colony. The attendance approximated twenty-five hundred. The majority of the picture stars, directors, producers, players, writers and cameramen on the West Coast were present. The Ball Committee consisted of Arthur Edeson, H. L. Braining, Wm. C. Foster, T. G. Gaudio, Frank B. Good, F. W. Jackman, J. B. Jennings, R. B. Currle, R. S Newhard, S. S. Norton, Charles G. Rosher, Homer A. Scott, and L. Gy Wilky.

Impressive Ceremonies Attend Opening of $2,000,000 Cinema Palace

FRIDAY evening, January 28th, marked the formal opening of the new Stanley theatre of Philadelphia. The municipal government as well as the industry was represented at the inauguration ceremonies which attend the formal opening of the $2,000,000 cinema palace. The exercises at the theatre were preceded by a dinner at the Ritz-Carlton at which Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, presided as the host. The Friday evening performance was an invitation affair, and considerable difficulty was experienced outside the big house in making way for those invited so great was the throng which gathered at the doors intent on making their way into the theatre.

The roster of those present at the opening on Friday evening includes the names of some of the most prominent members of the motion picture industry. A partial list follows: Adolph Zukor, H. G. Ballance, M. M. Belding, Ben Blumenthal, Jules E. Brulatour, H. D. H. Connick, Lee Counselman, J. D. Williams, Harry Schwalbe, F. J. Godsol, Oscar Price, Harry T. Gordon, Jesse L. Lasky, Hiram Abrams, Marcus Loew, Morris Kohn, William Brady, Hugo Riesenfeld, Fred Warren, William A. Johnston, John S. Woody, Lewis J. Selznick, Max Spiegel, B. S. Moss, Lee Shubert, Felix E. Kahn, Sidney R. Kent, Earl Gulick, Mannie Mandelbaum, Daniel Frohman, Mae Murray, Eugene O'Brien, Martha Mansfield, Hope Hampton, Dorothy Dalton, Samuel Rachman, Samuel Rothapfel, A. Walsh, Henry Arthur Jones—and a host of others well-known throughout the theatrical field.

Jules E. Mastbaum presided at the inauguration ceremonies and delivered the opening address. Mayor Moore of Philadelphia followed Mr. Mastbaum and felicitated the management upon the culmination of its enterprise in erecting such a beautiful amusement palace of which Philadelphia can well be so proud. The opening orchestral selection consisted of "The Star Spangled Banner," in the rendition of which a chorus of voices behind the scenes took part.

The program of entertainment included the overture, "Pomp and Circumstance," by the Stanley Concert orchestra under the direction of Sidney Lowenstein. The Stanley News, a compilation of current News Weeklies, followed. A cartoon, "Out of the Ink Well," was screened next, and this reel was followed by the Stanley Male Quartette assisted by Emily Stokes Hager, soprano soloist. A new Prisma reel, "The Message of the Flowers," preceded the prologue, a beautiful tableau, which was especially arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld, director-general of the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli in New York City. Cecil B. DeMille's dramatic production, "Forbidden Fruit," formed the feature screen attraction of the opening program.

The Stanley theatre will accommodate 4,000 persons so that every one may have a clear and unobstructed view of the stage and screen. Seating accommodations alone cost $90,000. The seats are folding chairs of red silk velour finish.

Mabel Normand Signs Again With Sennett

MABEL NORMAND has gone back to her original love—Sennett comedies, according to a dispatch from the Coast. E. N. Ascher, personal representative of Mack Sennett, announced the comedienne, one of the original "Sennett Five," had been signed for a series of super-comedies. The first of these, "Molly-O," will be placed in rehearsal within three weeks.

Loew Interests Acquire St. Louis Theatre

Announcement was made today by William Goldman, manager of the Missouri Corporation of Famous Players, St. Louis, that the Kings theatre in the residential district of that city has been leased for a period of ten years to the interests of Marcus Loew. The house will be taken over by Loew on Sunday, February 27, when a grand opening of the remodeled and renovated structure will be held.

When Marcus Loew was in St. Louis during the convention of the Missouri Motion Picture Theatre Owners January 20, 21, he announced his intention of beginning work on the erection of his proposed State theatre at Eighth and Washington avenues early next week. The State will be erected at a cost of $1,000,000.

First Annual Dinner of A.M.P.A. March 4

"The Naked Truth," a super-special in seven reels with trimmings, will be featured by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at a special showing at the Hotel Biltmore March 4, and will mark the most stupendous entertainment which the association has undertaken since its inception. To the uninitiated, Business Manager Tom Wiley offers the explanation that "The Naked Truth" is the title which has been decided upon for the association's annual and first formal dinner. Acceptances for this event have already been received from some of the big motion picture producers and it is anticipated that the guests will include men who are representative of every branch of the industry.

Under the direction of Mr. Wiley and George Landy, a committee is preparing a program of vaudeville extraordinaire and skits by home talent, together with singing and music. Paul Lazarus, president of the A. M. P. A., will preside.

F. P.-Lasky Managers to Meet in New York

S. R. Kent, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has called the annual meeting of the company's district managers to be held all of next week in the home office. Mr. Kent will preside and plans for distribution during the coming months will be discussed.

Those who will attend from the field force will include Herman Wobber of San Francisco, Louis Marcus of Salt Lake City, H. P. Wolfberg of Chicago, R. C. Li Beau of Kansas City, H. A. Ross of Detroit, H. H. Buxbaum of New York, W. E. Smith of Philadelphia, J. D. Clark of Philadelphia, Joseph H. Gilday of Kansas City, Philip Reisman of Minneapolis, George Schaeffer of Boston, Mr. Pratt of Atlanta, and Mr. Dent of Dallas, representing the Southern Enterprises, Inc.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

R. E. Niehls, manager of American Film Company's Chicago branch, with headquarters at the Pathe Exchange, has recently added two more salesmen to his staff. They are W. H. Cary, recently connected with Metro, who will cover the southside and C. A. Beauford, formerly with Vitagraph. Both the new American salesmen are popular and have a wide acquaintance in the trade and will add materially to the strength of American's selling organization in this territory.

Carl Fulton, popular salesmanager of E. E. Fulton Company, who enjoys the friendship and acquaintance of film men from coast to coast, has returned from a brief honeymoon with his bride, formerly Miss Hazel Jarmin, daughter of Albert E. Jarmin, an official of the Joslyn Manufacturing and Supply Company. The wedding ceremony took place at the Jarmin home on the night of January 20th.

The University of Wisconsin has arranged with the Rothacker Film Company, to make new prints on a number of pictures, including "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Silas Marner," "The Mill On the Floss," and "Benedict Arnold." The University used these films in its class rooms and loans them out to other schools throughout Wisconsin. Professor W. H. Dudley, Chief of the University's Bureau of Visual Instruction, spent several days at the Rothacker Chicago Laboratory.

Capital Film Company and Russell, Greiver & Russell have removed their offices from the second floor of the Consumers' Building to 8 S. Dearborn street, where their quarters will be located permanently.

Balaban & Katz are rapidly completing their plans for the opening of their new Tivoli theatre at Cottage Grove and 63rd street early next month. One of the features of this house will be the splendid music given its patrons, Nathaniel Finston, noted conductor, having been brought to Chicago from New York to take charge of the orchestra. Mr. Finston was assistant concert meister under Walter Damrosch in New York and also occupied other important positions in the musical world. In the motion picture field he is widely known as conductor of the Rialto theatre orchestra in New York and also had charge of a musical organization of eighty instrumentalists and seventy vocalists at the Capitol. At Balaban & Katz's new house Mr. Finston will direct an orchestra of forty musicians.

Harry Reichenbach arrived in Chicago this week to take charge of the exploitation and publicity campaign for "Outside the Law" and local film circles are watching for some of Harry's sensational stunts to be pulled before he leaves Chicago.

Manager Lesserman, of Universal, left for the coast Sunday to spend a month or two vacationing. Mr. Lesserman expects to make his headquarters at Hollywood and spend considerable time watching the work at Universal City, but states that he is not going to do any work while away as it is the first vacation he has had in nine years. During his absence Morris Hellman will have charge of the Chicago office.

Dick Robertson, of Independent Film Association, has returned from New York enthusiastic over the consummation of a contract with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton whereby Independent will distribute the Commodore's Lady Diana Manners super feature and three other big pictures which Commodore Blackton expects to produce within the next eighteen months. It is understood that the feature starring the English beauty will be ready for release early in the Fall. Other important Independent Association news will be announced within a few days, according to Mr. Robertson.

Wm. A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago the latter part of the week to aid the motion picture exhibitors in their fight for self-protection against censorship and other adverse legislation which is seriously menacing the industry in Chicago and Illinois.

Many changes in the staff of Jones, Linick & Schaefer have just been announced as result of the purchase of three more theatres in the loop, giving the firm a total of 9 loop theatres.

George H. Moore, who for 10 years has been the manager of the Orpheum, will manage the three new theatres. George Burdick, who for two years has been assistant manager of the Rialto, will be Moore's assistant. Starr Walsh succeeds Burdick at the Rialto. He has been the second assistant manager of McVickers' for some time. Walsh is succeeded by Edward Malone, who has come up from the ranks, having started in as a door keeper at McVickers.

Walter H. Moore, who for several years had been associated with his father at the Orpheum, succeeds to the Orpheum management.

"The changes made are in line with the policy of the firm in moving up its own men rather than taking untried men," said one of the officials of the firm.

William A. Brady, of New York, was among the Easterners who went to Milwaukee Wednesday and Thursday to attend the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association convention there. Chicago managers, too, journeyed to the town once made famous by a now prohibited brew.

Leo Landau has taken over the Alhambra theatre, in Milwaukee, and after giving it a thorough overhauling will have a gala re-opening of that leading first-run house. Landau is expected to take actual charge on Feb. 1. He has selected "Inside the Cup," the big Paramount-Cosmopolitan feature, for the opening.

Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Bros., called upon the several hundred employes of the firm's theatres to submit to vaccination during the recent small-pox scare in some of the towns surrounding Chicago. Following the declaration of Health Commissioner Dr. John Dill Robertson that Chicago was practically free of the disease because of the prevalence of vaccination, Ascher called upon his employes who had not been vaccinated to submit to the ministrations of the firm's physician.

Several Chicagoan's journeyed down to Peoria Wednesday to witness the opening of the New Madison theatre there. The new theatre has a seating capacity of 2300, and cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. It is directly across the street from the New Palace theatre opened recently by Ascher Bros., of Chicago. This gives Peoria two of the newest and most modern motion picture theatres in the country, as both embody latest developments in construction, ventilation and convenience. The opening night was made the occasion of a special prologue, which included dancing and singing.

Jack Graumont, who left the management of Metro to assume the management of the three theatres the Saxe interest bought from Harry Moir, is expected to return to Metro, following the purchase of the houses by Jones, Linick & Schaefer. In fact, it is understood that his return to Metro formed part of the agreement in the deal. Graumont has many friends in Chicago as well as elsewhere, who will be glad to see him back with Metro.

Interest is keen here as to who will be the successor to Harris P. Wolfberg as district manager for Famous Players-Lasky. His office has been deluged with telegrams and letters of congratulations from his friends who read of his resignation to accept the vice-presidency and sales management of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world.

"THE KID," Charles Chaplin's six-reel feature comedy, and the second of Associated First National's "Big Five," has been pronounced a "truly exceptional picture" by the National Board of Review in a special report just made by the Committee on Critique of the Board.

"It is a picture of original situations and treatment such as comprise a distinct stride forward in American screen-art," is the language of the committee. "Chaplin's genius as a pantomimist is outstanding and the picture is not only his most unusual, but his best."

The title of "Exceptional Photoplay" was also conferred upon Lionel Barrymore's last First National release, "The Great Adventure," a comedy-drama made from Arnold Bennett's novel and stage play of that name.

The other two were "Passion," the first of "The Big Five," and "The Devil's Garden," which was also a Lionel Barrymore feature.

Vignola Completes New Paramount Release

Robert G. Vignola has completed his fourth special Vignola production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount. Written by Donn Byrne and scenarioized by Doty Hobart, the story, the working title of which is "Redemption Cove," is based on a rare dramatic theme, the locale being the South Sea islands and New York. One of its unique features is its plot development and construction which are handled from an odd angle producing an unusually dramatic effect, it is declared by the producer.

The picture presents a strong cast of players, including E. K. Lincoln and Seena Owen who play the male and female leads, respectively; and Lillian Walker, Henry Sedley, and H. Cooper Cliffe.

Fred Niblo Is Signed by J. Parker Read

J. Parker Read, Jr., announced during the week the signing of Fred Niblo to a directorial contract.

"My next production will be about twelve weeks in production according to my present estimate," said Mr. Read. "I am prepared to devote to it the ultimate in money, time and effort."

The new Read production will be an Associated Producers' release.

Music and the Picture

"The Moonlight Sonata"

By Charles D. Isaacson

THERE was a tall thin old lady in the house. She never talked to anybody, but carried herself aloof and went straight in and out of her rooms, with the air of an empress, and the face of an Egyptian Priestess. Her hands were folded before her and her chin was out, her lips drawn tightly and her bonnet tied with ribbons from the back of her head. We knew that she was a widow—of a nobleman. She was known as the Countess Gallenberg.

I never detected a smile on her features, nor a sign of an emotion of any kind. Never once, though I watched her, trying to fathom the mystery of her existence, did I catch her unbending . . . Until the day my piano came. She was coming down the hall when the men were carrying the piano up the stairs. She stopped momentarily and looked at it, and then went off, more stiff and formal than ever.

It was the summer weather, and the doors of my rooms were open to the hall. The sounds of my practicing must have annoyed the neighbors more than once, though the rumor of a complaint did not reach me. The first few weeks were spent in bringing my hands back into their supple state—the vacation from work had done havoc to my technique. So it was nothing but a sound of scales and exercise for two hours a day. The old lady seemed to be attached to my practising. It was in this way. She paused whenever she came to my landing—presumably to catch her breath. She had never done this before the arrival of the piano. But of course she was getting older. And going up or down she rested for breath, if the practising was going on. From this I concluded that she must have been interested in piano some time in her life.

Soon my hands resumed their normal pliancy, and with zest I turned to my beloved music, hungry to express the harmonies and themes again. First of all, like a starving man, I went madly through my Beethoven. I played for several hours, rushing through trying to swallow so much at once. As I came to the beautiful notes of the Moonlight Sonata, I became conscious of the fact that someone was standing outside. I stopped playing and went to the hall. There to my amazement was the Countess Gallenberg—standing with streaming eyes.

I said, and it sounded boorishly: "I beg your pardon. May I do anything for you?"

She said, "No, thank you, I beg your pardon. You were playing Beethoven" and she went upstairs.

The incident made an impression on my mind. Thereafter, whenever I played Beethoven, I felt as if the old lady were standing outside—her eyes streaming with tears.

One day, in the midst of my Beethoven hour, the Countess bashfully stood at my threshold. A smile was on the old face as she said half as a query, half as a statement:

"You love Beethoven."

"I do, with all my heart," I exclaimed. "And you do too?" I could have sworn that I saw a faint blush rise to her cheeks, as she dropped her eyes and said:

"I knew him."

It was only a few words, but the strange implication in her answer struck me. I had said I loved Beethoven, the composer, the musician and she had said she—knew him.

To The Reader:

The First National Conference of Motion Picture Music is a matter of history . . . That it has made an epoch, established an incalculable opportunity for the new art, is best known to those who attended the unforgettable sessions.

Rather than give a hurried, newspaper-style account of the Conferences, I am taking a few hours rest (your music editor is practically exhausted after the ninety hours of vigil and rush) and then will prepare the most careful document of the findings and deliberations. The Motion Picture News next issue (watch for it) will contain a Musical Supplement, which will be the record of the three famous days. Speeches by the noted authorities, dramatic accounts of the debates, a full listing of the ideas which have been set in motion all will be contained, even to the analytical discussions of the Rialto Theatre program (as it was told in the projection room) and the Capitol Theatre program (as it was disclosed by the managing director).

The Motion Picture News Special Musical Supplement next week will be a "Cook's Tour" of the Convention and an absent treatment for those who could not come.

In the meantime, I am passing on to you a story which you might like to use sometime in connection with your musical program—if you ever use the Beethoven Moonlight Sonata. With the compliments of the News and myself you may reprint the story and use it in your advance sheets or in the program of the week. . . . Also I am publishing with the permission of the Brooklyn Strand and Mr. Edward Hyman, its managing director, their first Operatic Screen—Orchestra Digest . . . of Verdi's "Aida."

"You knew him, you knew him?" I exclaimed in another moment, jumping to my feet and taking her hands. "You knew Beethoven himself?" She smiled to me and nodded her head, "Yes, very well, for many years."

"Tell me of him, oh please tell me of him. How he spoke, and what he wore, and how he made you feel to be near him. It is like knowing God"—my enthusiasm and interest ran away with me.

The Countess smiled.

"He was a little man, very solid in the body and giving one the impression of being immovable if he chose to be. He was ugly——"

"Ugly?" I cried angrily.

"But yet noble, and beautiful," she said with softer voice. "He spoke in a gruff voice, and seemed very stern. He would look out of his great eyes and you knew he had entirely forgotten your presence, until he spoke to you of the thing you had asked him. . . . That was before he was deaf. (Afterwards he was terrible, always carrying a conversation book so you could write down your questions.) It was the younger Beethoven that I knew."

"And how did you know Beethoven?" I asked—and then regretted it. For instantly the countess grew agitated and seemed eager to go.

"He was my teacher—my piano teacher—I will tell you more of him some other time. Goodnight."

When she had gone, I looked bewildered at the chair on which she sat. She had been a pupil of Beethoven, and she had been here. I took down my picture of the master . . . and forgot the present in the past.

That first talk led to many others. Piece by piece she reconstructed the story of Beethoven. She had come to Beethoven's city, with her father. They had been introduced to the young composer, and he had promised to teach the young lady, then in her seventeenth year. Beethoven was about thirty, serious, gruff, a hard teacher, careful about details and fingering and emotional effects. He would take no money at all—though he needed it. He made the excuse that he was well taken care of. He was so mean, so hard, such a taskmaster, saying spiteful things when she didn't play well.

Her father was a nobleman, but he had very little income from his estates at Modena. They had come from Trieste. Her father's name? And hers? "My name was Guilletta, and my father's, Count Franz Joseph Guicciardi—Oh my, oh my, I gave the name and you know me."

The old lady went panic-stricken from the room. And I saw her no more for several days. I took the next step—I knocked on her door and declared I knew nothing now that I hadn't known before. She looked searchingly at me and I reaffirmed what I had said.

"I thought you were one of those who bantered the name of Guicciardi and Beethoven about in a scandalous way. I wouldn't permit it. I thought I had closed that drama out of my life forever, but here it is up again. And this time, I will tell it to you, as it was, the true facts.

"Once there was a stupid singer named Jahn, who came to my home to dig at the secrets of my heart. I received him, and my husband, the Count Gallenberg was with us. Jahn asked me questions of Beethoven and I told him what a good teacher he was and what a fine man. Then he asked me if Beethoven had ever loved me and I froze all over. My husband watched me very carefully and I bid Jahn an icy goodnight. Now, my husband is dead, I am near death. Beethoven has been dead these twenty-five years. Sit down and let me think.

"Look at this picture. Is it beautiful? I was a beautiful girl. I can say that now, because that girl died years ago, when this woman you see here was born . . . That was Guiletta Guicciardi when Ludwig Beethoven first knew her . . . She is lovely don't you think?"

I looked searchingly and feverishly at the little picture. A tall figure of a girl, slender and delicately proportioned, lithe and graceful. Beautiful arms, and it seemed a creamy skin. The face an oval, the eyes large and black as coals, with an expression like electrically fired soft velvet. The eyebrows curved with a thoughtful air. The features chiselled in stone. In the picture Guicciardi was melancholy and pensive, with an attitude of rapt splendor. So lovely, and such a beauty.

"You like her? That was this lady so many years ago, when Beethoven came to call on us to teach me piano. I was romantic as are all Modenese. I was just such another Juliet as Shakespeare's heroine, seeing romance in everything. I had many friends, and many lovers, who sought to pay court to me. But I was cold to all of them, indifferent to all of them. For a reason . . . for a reason.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Midsummer Madness—

People here educated to like these extravagant pictures, and they take very well. Held up to better than average business for two weeks. (Middle West.)

Holding up nicely in second week of its run. Fair crowds. (East.)

Holding up fairly well in third week. (East.)

This one brought only average business for one week. (Middle West.)

Fair picture with business about as usual. (West.)

Idols of Clay—

Did not expect this to go but it grew each day and what surprised us was that it pleased, or rather we got no kicks. (West.)

An extraordinary picture which brought good business. (East.)

Consider this a fine picture though it brought us only average business. (West.)

The Frisky Mrs. Johnson—

Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel. (West.)

Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked. (West.)

Had poor business with this one for entire week. (Middle West.)

Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair. (West.)

The Charm School—

One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good. (East.)

Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen. (East.)

Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased. (West.)

Very good picture which held down big business for a week. (West.)

The Rookie's Return—

Douglas MacLean and Doris May were well liked in this picture by all our patrons and business was good during its showing. (Middle West.)

Liked this better than anything this pair has done since "Twenty-Three and a Half Hour's Leave." Box-office excellent. (East.)

The Inside of the Cup—

Going over very well indeed. Good picture. (East.)

Playing to excellent business through second week. (East.)

The Life of the Party—

Good picture as far as entertaining value goes, but did only average business during run. (West.)

Heliotrope—

Broke all records for two years as the poorest drawing card One million per cent. overrated and 1,000,000 per cent. oversold picture. Otherwise a good picture with none of the muchly promised Hearst free advertising, even an extra $700 advertising appropriation could not put it over. (West.)

Thoroughly nice picture. Ought to go with most any kind of audience. (Middle West.)

The Testing Block—

Went over big at opening and though only average next few days. It went big at closing. Pretty good picture.

The Jucklins—

Had poor business with this, though it seemed to be a good picture. (Middle West.)

Burglar Proof—

Excellent comedy. Opened with tremendous crowds. (Middle West.)

Frontier of the Stars—

Good picture which brought more than usual business. (West.)

Flying Pat—

To Please One Woman—

Pleased the audience but not up to the standard of Paramount pictures. Business was pretty good. (East.)

Silk Hosiery—

This is a good picture, and my patrons seemed to like it. Business good. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dangerous Business—

This sure did go over big and deserved it for it's an interesting picture thruout. (West.)

Picture brought fine business. Very entertaining. (West.)

The Devil's Garden—

Most unsatisfactory First National ever shown here.

The Kid—

Wonderful picture and greatest box office attraction we have ever run. Broke house records first and second weeks of its engagement and crowds are continuing to come in great numbers on third week. (Middle West.)

Daddy Long Legs—

Just as good as if it were brand new. Bears out the theory that a good picture is always a good picture. (Middle West.)

The Branded Woman—

Very good picture. Big cuts by censors here made it rather choppy in places, but the star is very popular and business was quite good. (East.)

Passion's Playground—

Mediocre picture; business fair. (East.)

Harriet and the Piper—

Fair picture to fair business. (East.)

The Jack Knife Man—

Fair business; no star; not enough pulling power. (East.)

My Lady's Latchkey—

Katherine MacDonald is a favorite with the women and matinee business was particularly good. (Middle West.)

Paying the Piper—

Ran well for the entire week. Big houses set the stamp of their approval on this picture. (East.)

Held over for second week because of tremendous business. Generally pleased. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Earthbound—

Never had a picture in my theatre which called for such divided comment. Those who liked it were crazy about it—those who did not like it roasted it. There were no half-way opinions on it. Kept it on full week in house where limit of run is three days, and it made a lot of money. Personally, consider it the season's most remarkable production. (East.)

Better than the average photoplay in estimation of our patrons and did a very fine business. (Middle West.)

The Man Who Had Everything—

Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory. (East.)

The Branding Iron—

This picture great. Liked by everyone. Went over big. (West.)

Officer 666—

Tom Moore big favorite here. Picture exceptionally good. Big business. (West.)

The Girl With the Jazz Heart—

Madge Kennedy has considerable drawing power here. Her picture is not strong but our people liked it. (Middle West.)

Godless Men—

Fine production which merited the good business it brought. (West.)

The Penalty—

Wonderful attraction from all angles. Praised by critics and patrons alike. (Middle West.)

Hold Your Horses—

Just ordinary picture and did just ordinary business. (Middle West.)

It's a Great Life—

Fair feature with business about average. (West.)

The Guile of Women—

An average Will Rogers picture which was well liked by his numerous admirers. Started out well but business fell off toward the end of the week. (Middle West.)

FOX

While New York Sleeps—

Continues to draw them. Business excellent. (East.)

Fell down somewhat at box office in third week. (East.)

The Thief—

This picture went over extra big during run. Held for one week where usual run is three days.

Box office results on this picture are quite satisfactory. Fairly entertaining. (West.)

Number 17—

An average picture to less than average box office receipts.

The Iron Rider—

A pleasing Western Picture, well acted and produced. Did capacity business. (East.)

What Big Houses Say

Blind Wives—
Good melodrama that pleased lovers of this class of entertainment. Box office returns better than usual. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Wonderful production and biggest business since "While New York Sleeps." (East.)

Splendid production and Otis Skinner's name helped to bring in crowds. Did splendid business first part of engagement and is starting well the second week. (Middle West.)

This went over very big. Audiences seemed enthused with it. (Middle West.)

Crowds came and I packed them in. Surely a wonderful production. (West.)

The First Born—
By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life. (East.)

REALART

The Snob—
Very poor stuff—light and frivolous, but some of them liked it, and the business was good. Personally, consider it punk. But if the public liked it and paid good money to see it, I guess it was all right. (East.)

Very good. The people liked the plot and business was good. (East.)

All Souls Eve—
Average production. Business fair. (East.)

Something Different—
Good picture to fair business. Better crowds than usual. (East.)

Eyes of the Heart—
Fair picture to fair business. Star popular. (East.)

The Furnace—
Very high-class society picture with beautiful costuming and sets which appealed particularly to the women and did splendid business. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Love—
Just fair. Didn't do anything remarkable, just cleared expenses. As a picture it's awful; as a box office attraction it just manages to get by. (East.)

Failed to draw after big advertising campaign. Louise Glaum's name is not a box office getter. (Middle West.)

The Spenders—
This feature was very well liked by our patrons and was an excellent box office attraction playing to better than average business for a week. (Middle West.)

Practical Prologue for "The First Born"

New York Strand Theatre Presentation Given in Detail

FOR the initial showing of "The First Born" at the New York Strand this week, Managing Director Joseph Plunkett is staging a prologue that takes its cue from the picture, the scenes of which are placed in old China and San Francisco's Chinatown.

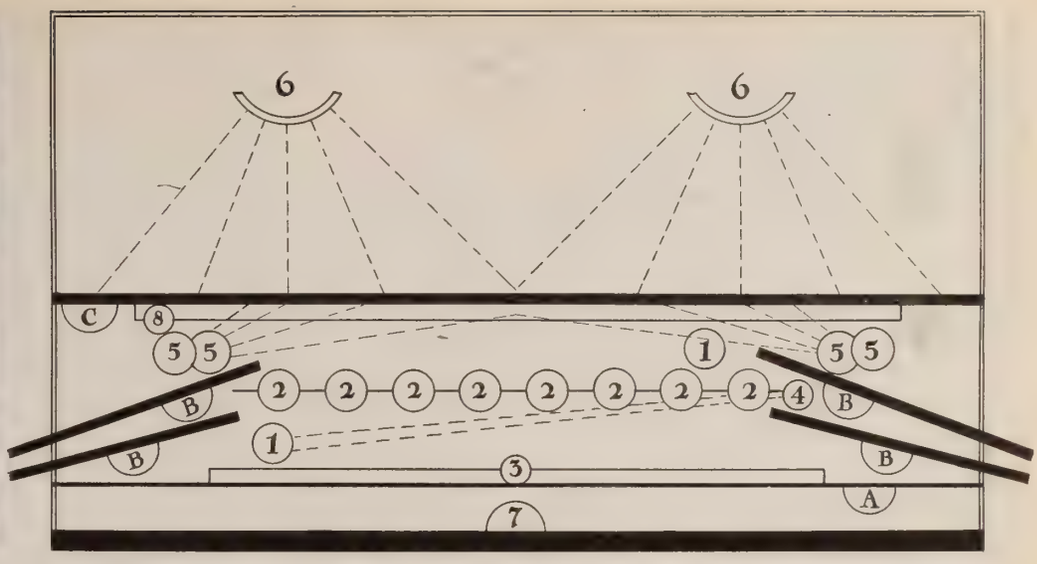
The character of the principal entertainment to be offered was early indicated in the program when, during the overture, two large panels on either side of the velvets were transparently lighted in red and revealed as Chinese etchings, and showing in marked contract to the blue flood that was thrown over the orchestra.

The first scene of the prologue, named "In Shantung," was a simple but none the less effective piece of staging, consisting only of two drops. The front drop was more or less neutral in design, cut away in the middle to a keyhole shape. The drop had a rich cream background, profusely dotted with blue and gold with two vivid red panels, on each side of the wider part of the keyhole opening. In about one and a half, was a bright blue background drop, toned down slightly towards the horizon, and relieved by a sprig of some flowering shrub which apparently came out of the side.

Walter Vaughan, tenor, garbed in the silks of the Chinese, stood centre stage and as the curtain rose sang an appropriate Chinese number. As he finished the refrain was taken up by an invisible male quartet. The lights were gradually dimmed out and during the stage was black, the first scene was struck and the second scene set while the audience still listened to the harmonious voices. Then all lights were dimmed up.

The second scene, representing Chinatown, San Francisco, was a street drop in two with two street wings with a street lamp on either side. The lamps were lighted and the windows of the street scene were transparent with 1,000 Watt lamps at the back wall flooding through the windows. Strung from the flies was a string of eight Chinese lanterns, all lighted with small lamps.

As the voices of the quartet died away, men dressed as Chinese shuffled across the stage, followed by an imitation dragon on the shoulders of three boys (this being a scene taken from the picture). The dragon pranced around the stage and as it left, a Chinese was left dopily sitting under one of the street lamps. A policeman sauntered on the stage, looked e quiringly on the figure of the lone Chines and passed on. The Chinese then drifte away as the lights dimmed down.



The lighting was equally simple but was the lighting that made the prologu stand out. For the first scene, practicall all lighting was blue, including the stri border on the bottom of the raised scree the foots and the regular border. Bac of the first drop, on either side, were tw bunch lights and a spot, all blue which in tensified the blue background of the bac drop. From the left wing a weak red spot shone on the singer and, corresponding on the right wing was a blue spot. The same lighting scene, with very slight changes was used for the second scene, the spots and bunches remaining in the same position throughout the entire prologue, this materially aiding in the quick change of scene.

Elmira, N. Y., Exhibitor Secures Navy Aid

The recruiting forces of the U. S. Marines in Elmira fairly outdid themselves in co-operation with Manager H. L. Walter of the Amusu Theatre of that city, and John P. McConville, exploitation representative at the Buffalo exchange of Paramount Pictures, in putting over "Below the Surface," which was playing a week's run at the theatre. By interesting the recruiting officer, the exploitation man had 200 special one sheets and 300 special hand bills posted and distributed respectively by the recruiting service. The only cost to the theatre was the item of printing.

The poster carried similar copy in heavy red type that was visible at a distance of almost a block.

In addition the recruiting officer used the station's American service flag for the occasion to drape up the front of the theatre. The sight of the military outfit attracted crowds and naturally, a large percentage of these crowds drifted into the theatre. It offered a good example of exploitation that can be effective and still cost very little.

Tally's Presentation of "Kismet" Elaborate

"Kismet" recently completed an engagement at Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, in which the presentation conceived by Manager Talley was no small part of the attraction.

Mr. Talley used a very pretentious prologue in presenting "Kismet." It opened with a title asking the audience if it would like to visit the city of Bagdad. Gates to the stage open and a harem scene is shown. Five dancing girls issue forth to present Oriental numbers. The lights go down, and the girls draw back a curtain which discloses the screen. Besides these atmospheric touches, Mr. Tally had his ushers dress in Oriental costumes, and introduced subdued Oriental lighting throughout his theatre.

Cobe Puts Over "The Devil"

Lawrence, Mass., Exhibitor Neglects No Opportunities on Arliss Picture

ANDREW J. COBE, manager of the Rialto theatre, Lawrence, Mass., one of the four theatres to play "The Devil" pre-release put over an exploitation campaign in conjunction with his showing that eclipsed all previous efforts of this kind for Lawrence.

Mr. Cobe began his exploitation drive a week before the showing of the picture by the distribution of thousands of little red cards with the following text:

GO TO THE DEVIL
AT THE RIALTO
Week Beginning MONDAY, Jan. 24th.

The City of Lawrence is an industrial center with scores of factories, and utilizing this fact Mr. Cobe placed his throwaway cards in the factory pay envelopes. Men were sent through the city casually dropping pay envelopes here and there, and leaving them in restaurants and other places, so that hundreds of Lawrence citizens eagerly seized upon this clever bit of advertising.

Following this, he started two Ford cars throughout the city traveling miles each day. They were completely boarded up with painted signs and paintings of George Arliss. Each one carried the slogan:

I AM ONE OF THE LEGIONS OF HELL AMONG YOU ALWAYS.
I AM IN THIS TOWN.
I AM THE DEVIL.

No mention was made of the Rialto Theatre and no suggestion appeared in the advertising of a motion picture so that much curiosity was aroused.

The third step in his cleverly arranged cMampaign was the appearance in practically all store windows of Lawrence of window out-puts.

On the Friday before his opening this enterprising manager secured one of the most prominent display windows in the center of the town. He decked the entire window with red draperies and filled it in with a profusion of flimsy red silk. Colored lights were placed on the shimmering cloth and fans working from below served to give movement to the whole. In the center window he placed one of the electric flasher signs issued by Pathe.

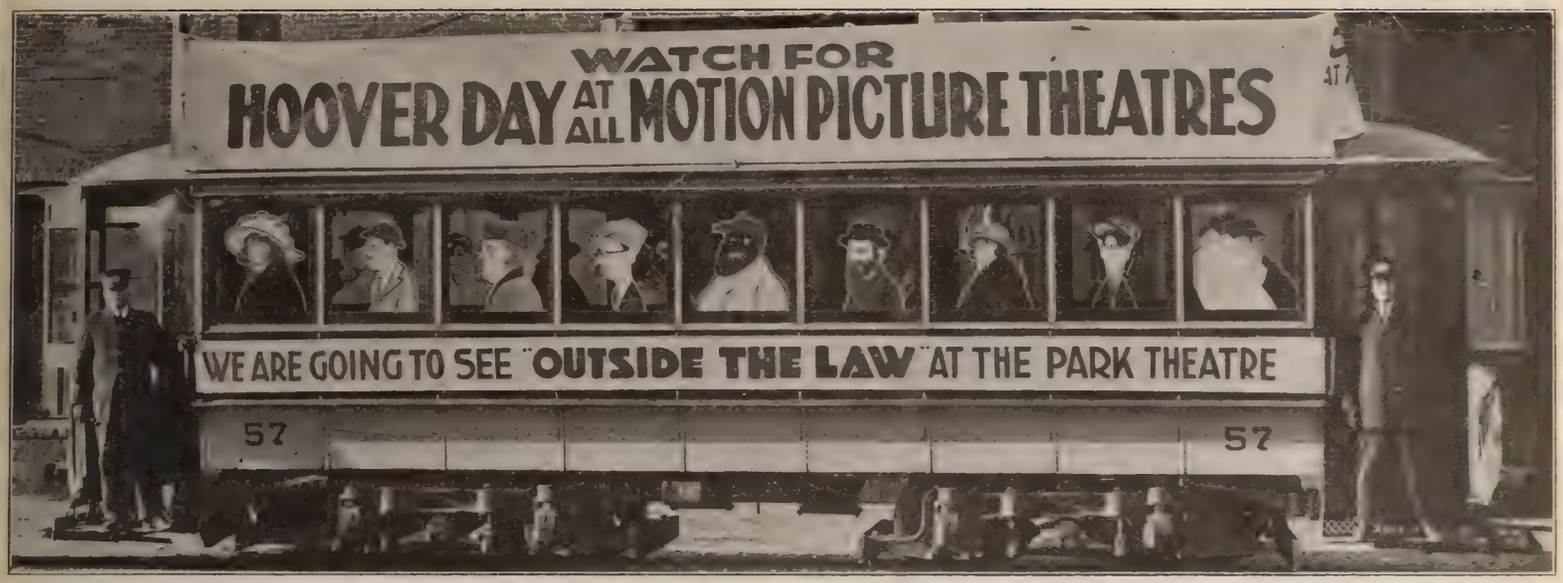
On Friday night Mr. Cobe gave a midnight performance of "The DEVIL" for invited guests only. Editors, newspaper men, public officials and prominent citizens of Lawrence were invited. The midnight show was a distinct novelty in the community and attracted widespread attention. Saturday morning the papers carried big stories and the most favorable comment on the film.

The newspaper campaign opened on Friday prior to the showing with quarter pages in the four daily papers. This advertising was repeated on Saturday and on Sunday full page ads were used in all of the newspapers.

Mr. Cobe based his presentation on the plan inaugurated by Managing Director Joseph Plunkett of the Strand Theatre in New York, using a troup of dancers in a weird thing called "The Dance of the Imps." The stage setting was that of a deep grotto. The lights were thrown from under the stage through glass covered traps. A singer in the garb of Mephistopheles opened the prologue. An original feature introduced by Mr. Cobe was a contortionist who led the ballet girls through a writhing picturesque dance.

Automobile Tags to Exploit "The Thief"

A new and inexpensive exploitation stunt for "The Thief" was devised by J V. McDonald, manager of the Nelson theatre, Springfield, Mass.



McDonald had a small red tag printed reading as follows:

"Just a tip!
"I wouldn't leave my car alone like this if I were you. You know THE THIEF is coming."

On the day and night preceding the opening of "The Thief" engagement every car parked about town was tagged, and the interest and amusement the tags aroused marked them as being one of the best "teaser" stunts ever used.

Boston Exploitation Unique

Harry Reichenbach Startles Bostonians With Novel "Outside the Law" Exploitation

BOSTON'S initial showing of "Outside the Law," at the Park theatre, was the occasion of an energetic exploitation campaign staged by Harry Reichenbach, of the Universal Exploitation Department.

The principal exploitation stunt worked in staid Boston was the use of a street car bearing signs concerning the big Dean picture, which traveled over seventy-two miles of tracks in the heart of the city nine times each day during the several days preceding the opening.

In the windows of the car were painted a variety of human faces, of all races, ages and conditions. "We are going to se 'Outside the Law' at the Park theatre" was the streamer that adorned the entire length of the car. On top of the car was another big banner with the following capition:

"Watch for HOOVER DAY at all MOTION PICTURE THEATRES."

This was the first time in the history of the Boston Elevated Railway Company that this stunt had been put over in that city. It created a sensation in the New England metropolis.

It was only after careful consideration on the part of the traction company that consent was gained by Reichenbach to utilize the car. Boston laws prohibit the use of public service vehicles for advertising purposes. It was not until Reichenbach thought of tying up the "Outside the Law" showing to the Hoover Motion Picture Day, a charitable activity, to the mutual advantage of both, that the street railway company leased the car.

Boston stared at the car. It became the talk of the town. News reel representatives photographed it. Newspapers printed pictures of it, explaining the stunt in detail and giving complete mention of "Outside the Law" at the Park theatre.

Another idea which was worked with great effect was a sign painting stunt. For four days preceding the opening of the Dean picture in Boston, three girls in smocks, tam-o'-shanters, and short skirts mounted scaffolds near the entrance to the Park theatre and painted signs advertising the picture.

The newspaper advertising in all of the Boston papers was also much larger than that usually carried by local theatres. Display ads. running two and three columns and eight and ten inches in depth were used in place of the ordinary one column announcements that Boston papers usually carry.

Window Displays Advertise "Silk Hosiery"

Among the exploitation stunts which Nick Ayer, advertising and publicity director for the Roth and Partington theatres, San Francisco, Cal., pulled to put over "Silk Hosiery" was window displays dressed so the women would look.

On this page is a cut showing a window secured from the Emporium store. The Emporium window boasted a model dressed exclusively in silk hosiery. In fact everything that the wax lady had on was of silk, except the shoes.

The picture played at the California and many of the dollars counted up at the end of the run could be directly traced to the advertising that the windows in the heart of the shopping districts had given "Silk Hosiery."

Window display for "Silk Hosiery" one of a number which the publicity forces of the Roth and Partington houses, San Francisco, secured recently. Details appear on this page in text

How Wendt Exploited "A Child for Sale"

Fake Want Ad With Trimmings Stirs Up Toledo Residents

"A CHILD FOR SALE" and Harold Wendt's ingenuity in his official job as publicity director for the Rivoli theatre of Toledo is responsible for this story of intensive and extensive exploitation:

The Rivoli had booked "A Child for Sale" for Christmas week. Ten days in advance of the showing, Toledo newspapers carried one-inch ads which read: "For Sale—A Child." There was but one ad to the paper. Theatres would ordinarily insert it in several places. Anyone selling a child would have the ad in but one place. So Wendt, too, ran the ad in but one place—not on the movie page. And none outside the theatre and the advertising men on the papers understood. One of the solicitors on one of the papers even had to explain to the advertising manager what it was all about before he could have the ad run. The result of this ad being run for three days was the conversation such as appears in the first paragraph, being heard on the cars, on the street corners and in the restaurants, and in fact most everywhere. For the next three days there appeared an ad similar to the above, except that it also carried two telephone numbers—the telephone numbers of the theatre office. The result of this (everything done in the campaign was followed by results) was that the phones at the Rivoli rang continuously and three people were kept busy all day and late into the night answering inquiries concerning the child for sale.

"How old was the child? Is it white or black? Is it a boy or a girl? Is parentage legitimate? How much is wanted for the child? What is the reason for selling? What is the child's disposition? How is the child's health? And what orphanage desires to make the sale?"

But none of these stumped Wendt. The day before the ad first appeared everyone in the Rivoli offices was given answers for any possible question.

"The child was four years old. It was white. It was a girl. Parentage was legitimate. The reason for selling was that the high cost of living was depriving the parent and another child of a living. The child's disposition was charming. Health was excellent. And for further details, well, call at the Rivoli theatre any time starting Sunday and for a week thereafter."

The following three days came more information concerning the child in all the ads. And the interest ran skyhigh all over the town.

Saturday was the time. The busiest street corner in Toledo was the place. And the auctioning of a child was the attraction.

A large car drove up to the curb and a man, dressed none too well, stepped up into the rear seat. Above his head he held a child, answering the above description. The curious stopped to listen when this man announced in a loud voice that he wanted to "sell this child—his own flesh and blood." "How much was he bid—he, the man whom the profiteers were depriving of a living?" More stopped and still more. The sidewalks were blocked. Traffic, too, soon jammed up.

Now came Wendt's surprise. He had planned everything beautifully,. he thought. He had "rented" the child, engaged the "father" and planted a half dozen men in the crowd to do some bidding. The crowd was expected and was exceeding all expectations. He knew there would be no interference, for the day previous the chief of police had been let in on the secret. But what surprised Wendt was that persons other than the "plants" were doing some of the bidding. Everything was surely being taken seriously. Some women protested and claimed that the sale should not be allowed to continue.

Suddenly, however, the child was "sold" and the "buyer" jumped into the machine and handed the "father" a roll of money. Then a large card was flashed on the crowd reading. "You Can See a Child for Sale all Next Week at the Rivoli"—and thousands of small cards carrying the picture of the child on one side and information concerning the picture which would be shown at the Rivoli on the other, were thrown to the crowd—and the machine squeezed its way through the jam.

The shock was too sudden. People were left with their mouths wide open. And then the whole town seemed deluged with announcements of "A Child for Sale." The newspapers that night carried large ads on the picture. Stories were used that day and followed the next week. Windows displayed large cards and hook-up arrangements. Photos like those thrown out at the street stunt were passed out at the exits of the Rivoli. Hotels had large colored frames as "decorations," while the Rivoli lobby also was "set" with many frames. A trailer was run, showing many of the thrilling scenes from the picture. And autoists rushed up to their machines, seeing red tags on the steering wheels. They had been arrested for parking too long or out of the parking zone. But the card only told of "A Child for Sale" and smiles lit up their faces. Song shops displayed a song entitled, "A Child for Sale." It had been written by a Toledo boy—and this, too, was good for a yarn in the newspapers.

Admits Fat People Free as Exploitation Stunt

Manager C. L. Henry, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., during the week of January 24-30, exploded the theory that "nobody loves fat people." During the showing of "The Life of the Party," Manager Henry entertained at the theatre all persons weighing more than 225 pounds. A scale was placed in the lobby of the theatre and tremendous crowds were attracted by the spectacle of the town's most adipose citizens lining up to be weighed. It was a notable fact that both the successful and the unsuccessful candidates viewed the picture.

How Wetstein Grabbed Front Page Space

It has remained for Elias Wetstein, publicity director, to discover a new way of getting publicity for his theatres, the Queen, Majestic and Rialto of Wilmington, Del.

"The Branding Iron" had been booked for the Majestic and Wetstein looked longingly at page one and racked his brain for a scheme that would land something for the picture.

The newspaper boys were willing to help as much as possible but the well known rules to say nothing of the real news of the day, forbid sliding just publicity in without an excuse.

Finally Mr. Wetstein got an idea that got by with the city editor. He arranged to have a photograph taken by flashlight of the crowd.

The photographer was instructed to load his flash heavy enough to make the touch off a miniature Wall street explosion both in amount of flame and in sound. The picture was taken with results up to expectation. There was dull roar that could be heard several blocks and a flash of light that lighted up the sky like a fork of lightning.

People on the streets rushed to the scene expecting to learn of an accident. The next day the newspapers carried stories telling about the picture being taken with a plausible explanation worked into the account stating that the photograph was snapped at the instigation of the Goldwyn company who were making a collection of crowds gathered in front of theatres waiting to see "The Branding Iron." The story of course told all about the picture and where it was playing.

Holds Dances in Theatre Lobby

The Rivoli orchestra, which has obtained a fine reputation locally, furnishes the music. The "Matinees Dansant" are held from 4 to 5:30 P. M., and are attended principally by the young people. Chaperones are in attendance and the first function seem to indicate that the affairs will be a grand success.

Colorful Prologue Presented

Superba Theatre, Los Angeles, Gives "Outside the Law" Artistic Presentation

A simple yet effective prologue was used at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, during the five weeks' run of "Outside the Law."

Manager W. E. Jones, who is a firm exponent of the prologue for pictures, is convinced that the manner of presentation had much to do with the long run the feature enjoyed.

Carrying out the Oriental atmosphere in which "Outside the Law" is set—San Francisco's Chinatown — Jones used a Chinatown drop for his prologue, duplicating as nearly as possible the Chinatown set used in the production of the picture. In front of this drop he used a male singer, costumed as a gunman. A green spotlight was thrown on the singer, and a faint green light on the drop.

The singer sang "Chinatown." At the conclusion of the song the singer began the portrayal of a dope fiend. He was interrupted by a police whistle, off stage. Quickly there came two shots, fired so the flash could be seen in the house. All lights then were cut and the opening reel of the picture thrown on the Chinatown drop, which slowly rolled up, unmasking the screen behind.

The publicity and exploitation campaign put on by Jones for the "Outside the Law" run was especially notable because of its dignity. He depended mostly upon newspaper advertising, using more than one hundred separate ads during the run, none of which was less than two columns wide.

In addition he obtained many ideal window display locations in which he used attractive pictures of Miss Dean, and the other prinicpals, together with exhibits obtained from police headquarters, and consisting of various burglars' tools, weapons, handcuffs, etc. A history of each article accompanied it.

Among the stunts Jones used was to set out about forty traffic stand signs bearing the caption:

"Don't park here! You are Outside the Law!"

He also had several thousand tags bearing the inscription "You Are Outside the Law" attached to automobiles throughout Los Angeles.

Hammond Obtains Local Merchants' Assistance

Manager Frank H. Hammond, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, is a man who believes in co-operation, and he claims that it isn't hard to get—if only you go about it right. As proof of what he says, he exhibits a double page spread, in the Atlanta Sunday American, consisting of ten ads from local merchants, tying up with Mr. Hammond's exploitation of "To Please One Woman."

The Sunday American was so impressed with Mr. Hammond's ideas that they assigned their star advertising man to accompany him on his rounds to get the ads—and out of twelve firms visited he got ten ads. The title of the picture was used in each ad, and ten tickets were given away by each firm to their first ten customers on the opening day.

Deardorff Gets Lima Excited Over Slim Foot Stunt

The selection of the slimmest foot in all of Lima, Ohio, was the basic idea for an exploitation campaign which C. C. Deardorff erstwhile Goldwyn exploiter but now manager of the Sigma theatre of Lima, recently staged for the showing of "Cinderella's Twin."

The idea was the offering of several prizes for the slimmest foot in the town, and the standard of measurement was a duplicate pair of the shoes worn by petite Viola Dana, who starred in the production. Thanks to the initiative of Mr. Deardorff, the newspapers played up the exploitation as a special feature.

The fitting of the feet took place in a leading shoe store. Awards were as follows: First prize, a $16 pair of shoes or slippers made to order; second prize, a $14 pair of slippers.

On January 9 the Lima News carried a first page three-column story appealing to all girls over eighteen years of age to uphold Lima's civic pride by showing that the city could boast of paragons of slim feet. Statistics were quoted to show what sizes of slim feminine feet prevailed in San Francisco, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Portland, Cleveland, St. Paul and Detroit.

On the following day in the same newspaper, another three-column story pursued the same theme. It made a distinctive feature of the stunt by declaring that it was looking for the perfect Lima foot, and would award the lucky winners.

And on January 11 this paper again devoted two more columns of space with the heading, "Tomorrow Is Day for Cinderella Hunt."

Weisfeldt Invents a New One, the "Songalogue"

"Songalogues" form a pleasing variety of entertainment at Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee. Manager Edward J. Weisfeldt has created a modern version of old fashioned illustrated song.

Cut illustrating the story appearing on this page concerning the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., exploitation of "Curtain"

At the openings of the number two pages in uniform stand at one side of the curtained stage and display a large canvas book on whose cover the name of the song is printed. They then open the book and the words are flashed on the two large white pages. On the second chorus the curtain on the stage is lifted revealing a scene in keeping with the song. The accompanying photograph shows the scene used with "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny." The colored mammy wandered through the scenery cotton field singing the chorus and picking real cotton as she passed across the stage. The numbers which usually include variations by the organ and the orchestra are very popular and provide an economical but effective way of supplying a divertissement between film shows.

"Jazzy" Poem as "Twin Beds" Exploitation

"Twin Beds" went over with a bang at the Orpheum Theatre, Fon du Lac, Wis., probably due to the jazzy line of copy put out by Manager A. S. Ainsworth.

In case other exhibitors, who have yet to play "Twin Beds" want to see some of Mr. Ainsworth's ticket-selling copy, the following, which started in the newspapers a week in advance of the first showing is quoted:

"This is the discreet young Blanche
Who declared to Hubby
There must be Two
Twin Beds in their flat

And this is Monti
Wicked and wise
Who longed for a look
Of those love lorn Eyes
Of Blanche's.

This is the stocking
Of shimmering silk
That Monti saw reeling
Home with the milk
At early morn

This is the wine
So rich and rare
That jazzed the feet
And ruffled the hair
Of Monti

And here's the Window
To which he scaled
To enter the room
Where Romance prevailed

And this is the veil
We have to draw
Over the things
That Monti saw"

Mr. Ainsworth started his newspaper campaign on Monday with a half-page splash. Among his best lines were:—

"Sheets of laughter—pillows-ful of "Pep"—and nothing to blanket your fun."

"Masked Woman" Stunt Works Well for Miss Grogg

Miss Sylvia Grogg of the California theatre at Bakersfield, Cal., which is under the direction of the Grogg Amusement Company, planned an attractive campaign upon "The Notorious Miss Lisle" which aided materially in putting the picture over.

The day preceding the opening of the picture Miss Grogg arranged to have a very handsomely gowned young woman driven about the streets in a beautiful limousine. The girl was masked so that no one could identify her, and the automobile bore signs reading "I am the Notorious Miss Lisle—everyone is talking about me." She called at every home in the city, presenting a small card which read "I am the Notorious Miss Lisle—the tongue of scandal is ruining my reputation." By evening a thorough canvas had been made of the town, and when the evening papers came out there was a sensational story about the mysterious "Miss Lisle." The evening papers also carried the ad of the theatre announcing that "The Notorious Miss Lisle" was to be shown the following day.

Miss Grogg had also arranged with one of the large department stores to have "The Notorious Miss Lisle" shop at a certain hour on the day following her visit to the different homes. The department store offered a handsome pair of silk hose as a prize to the first lady to identify her by saying "You are the Notorious Miss Lisle." The department store carried a large ad on the same day that the theatre made its announcement, with the result that the evening paper of the day before the opening of the picture was full of "Notorious Miss Lisle" publicity, much of which cost nothing to the theatre, and brought a harvest of patronage both for the theatre and for the department store.

Chambers Springs New One for Hart Picture

It has remained for that consistent exploiter of pictures, Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, to spring a new one for "The Testing Block."

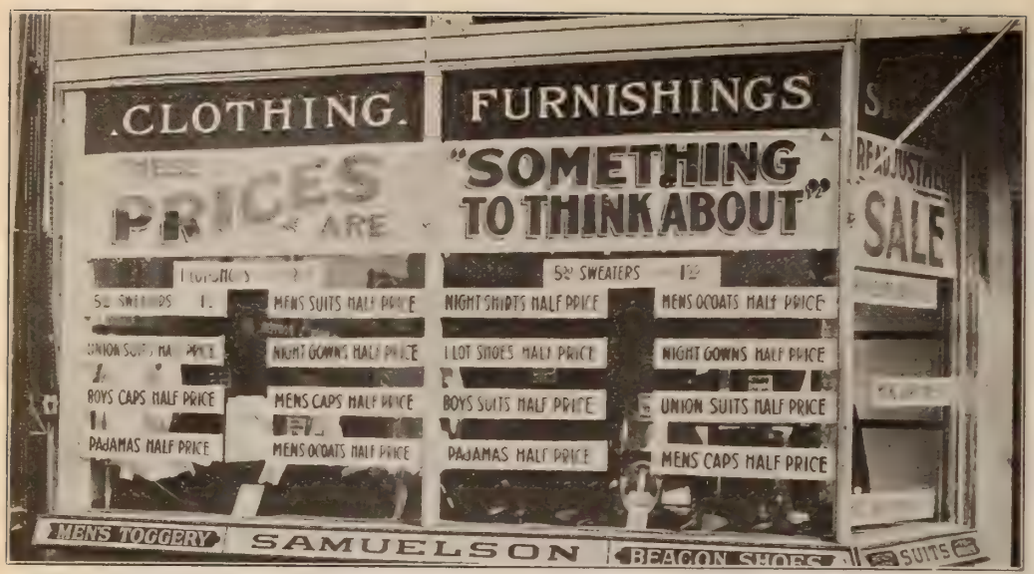
Mr. Chambers obtained the use of a pinto pony which was being exhibited at the recent Kansas National Live Stock Show as Bill Hart's original spotted nag, hunted up a local man who looked like Hart, attired him in full western regalia and sent horse and man about the streets.

The horse of course had previously received a lot of publicity and wherever he went was an object of attention. Mr. Chambers made no explanation of who the rider was but let the public arrive at its own conclusion.

The resemblance to Hart was of course noticed and the stunt brought great returns.

A picture of Mr. Chambers' double for Hart and the spotted pinto used to exploit the picture are shown herewith.

Country Store Goes Over Big with Suelke



Karl A. Suelke, managing director of the Liberty theatre at Cape May, N. J., wanted something to get his patrons all out for the initial episode of the serial, "Fighting Fate." That something was a "country store" night. For a week the prizes to be given away were displayed in a show case in front of the theatre and all Cape May was informed about the approaching event.

There were 25 prizes ranging from canned goods to boiled ham, and everybody was assured of something. The awards were made after the first night show.

The stunt proved a banner business getter and "Fighting Fate" made its bow at the Liberty to capacity houses.

Here is Stanley Chamber's "Bill Hart" and the pony as explained in the story on this page

"Something to Think About" window display, not handsome but effective, which R. C. Gary of the Omaha Famous Players-Lasky Exchange obtained for the showing of the above named picture at Keith's theatre, North Platte, Neb., as told in the accompanying story

Gary Improves an Idle Half Hour

R. C. Gary was passing through North Platte, Neb., in his official capacity as exploitation representative of Paramount Pictures in the Omaha territory on his return to the key city, when he noticed the Keith Theatre of that town advertising "Something to Think About." Also he noticed a clothing store, across the way from the station, advertising a reduction sale. The first items of the window were being installed and the stickers were going up.

With half an hour to wait between trains the exploitation man went ahead without consulting the theatre manager. It required some quick talking to divert Mr. Samuelson's attention from the window; but the retail clothier was ready to grasp an opportunity when it was outlined. The result was that when the window display for his reduction sale was completed the window stickers were topped by the 'Something to Think About.'"

Before his train arrived Gary had time to write a message to the theatre manager and stills and posters, tieing up the ten day display with the picture.

While scrupulous critics may question the artistry of the display there was little room for doubt on the question of effectiveness. The title, capitalized in quotations, was large enough to attract the notice of every passerby and the theatre-attendance evidenced the interest the display aroused. The photograph reproduced herewith was taken in the early stage of the display before the theatre posters and stills from the production had been added.

Duluth New Lyric Puts Over Big Stunt for "Dinty"

With the co-operation of the Duluth News Tribune, the New Lyric theatre of that city put over an exploitation campaign that Minnesota records of showmanship will find hard to equal. The campaign was in the interest of "Dinty." Five hundred Duluth newsboys were invited to a special morning showing of "Dinty." Details of "Dinty Day" were then explained. Publicity attended the rivalry among the newsboys to sell the greatest number of News Tribunes throughout the showing of the picture. A photograph of the winning newsboy was published.

New Idea for Exploiting "Dinty"

Joseph M. Trunk, manager of the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, O., put over a clever stunt for his showing of "Dinty."

Mr. Trunk secured the services of a sketch artist and dressing the artist up as a newsboy had him cover the town drawing sketches on store windows in chalk. Some of the pictures showed Wesley Barry. Others showed striking scenes from the play. Others were just striking ads. Trunk played the picture the week of January 16. He used this stunt the whole week previous to the play date, and stirred up so much interest in the picture that he had difficulty taking care of the crowds.

Stage setting for the showing of "Down on the Farm" at the Rialto theatre, Lawrence, Mass. An elaborate prologue was arranged by Manager Andrew J. Cobe

This is the way the lobby of the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., was decorated for the showing of "Madame X." Complete details of the Sun's exploitation campaign are given below

"Madame X" Campaign Sets

Omaha Showmen Demonstrate What Exploitation Will Accomplish

OMAHA is one of the cities where exploitation for pictures has reached its greatest development with clever stunts the rule rather than the exception.

However, it has remained for N. N. Fruedenfeld, publicity director, and Harry and Sam Goldburg, managers of the Sun theatre to plan and carry into effect a campaign that eclipsed all previous efforts for the city.

The picture was "Madame X."

A four weeks' campiagn was started by 100 eight-sheet posters covering the city which read: "Should that great photoplay, 'Madame X,' be shown in Omaha at $1 or at 35 cents per seat?" The posters were given a two weeks' showing, during which time 50,000 dodgers asking the same question were distributed from house to house. Teaser ads were also run in the three Omaha newspapers. At the end of two weeks, large display space was taken in the papers announcing that they had booked "Madame X" for the Sun theatre and for two weeks, starting January 9. The announcement stated that $1 admission had been charged elsewhere and that the theatre was under tremendous additional expense in booking the film, but that they were willing to leave the Omaha admission price to the decision of the public.

A special midnight social matinee was given before the first showing to which a special list of residents covering every social strata were invited. Seats were placed on sale at $1 each and 375 were sold. Ads and dodgers advertised the midnight matinee on December 27. More than 700 stamped postcards were distributed to those present, bearing this wording: "Opinions differ. We consider 'Madame X' the greatest photoplay of all time—and well worth the highest admission. However, you have seen the production and we would value your opinion. Kindly write it below and mail this card to the theatre."

On January 2, on the billboards, in the newspapers, by dodgers and on the theatre's screen and in its lobby, the Sun theatre announced that "Madame X" would show at 35 cents.

For the next seven days every possible means of exploitation was utilized. The lobby of the Sun theatre was cleared of everything movable and a sign tacked up reading: "This lobby enlarged for big crowds for 'Madame X.'" Many of the postcard opinions on the picture were pasted on large boards in the lobby and were the centre of attention. The Sunday newspapers carried an announcement that the Sun theatre had arranged for special telephone service, with additional operator, to answer all inquiries regarding "Madame X."

Mr. Frudenfeld arranged a great lobby and front-of-the-house display. "Madame X," being considered the greatest of "mother" pictures the lobby, chandeliers, etc., were decorated with the Mothers' Day flower, the red rose. The rose decorations were carried out in the auditorium. The entire front of the theatre was enclosed in a huge compo-board frame, carrying scenes from "Madame X." The marquise carried two powerful cut-out scenes, illuminated from the rear. A large illuminated letter X on the marquise could be seen for a distance of a mile.

The presentation was dedicated to the mothers of Omaha. A poem entitled "Mother," written by an Omahan, was recited.

Here's a New One for "Huck"

Canandaigua, N. Y., folks saw something of a novelty when an old fashioned wood sawing contest was pulled off as an exploitation stunt for "Huckleberry Finn," running at the Liberty Theatre. The stunt was planned and executed by John P. McConville, exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in the Buffalo territory. The contestants were drawn from every representative body of boys' clubs, including the Boys' Scouts, and other young organizations. The contestants were "painted up" to represent "Huck Finn," "Tom Sawyer" and "Jim." Manager William J. MacFarlane of the Liberty Theatre, offered substantial prizes and the contest was staged directly in front of the theatre lobby. Outside of the vast amount of newspaper publicity gained, the stunt was effective in the personal interest it involved, as every contestant had at least a dozen people interested in his success. The crowds at the picture afterwards told the story.

"Dinty" Gets More Newspaper Cooperation

In conjunction with the Newark Star-Eagle, Frank Lamson Smith, managing director of the Rialto theatre, Newark, N. J., put over a most successful campaign for "Dinty."

Mr. Smith directed his efforts toward the circulation department of the Star-Eagle and succeeded in arranging for a "Dinty Day." Each newsboy, and the circulation department claims about 400, wore placards, reading:

DINTY DAY

I'm out for the special "Dinty Prizes for selling the most Star-Eagles today.

BUY YOUR STAR-EAGLE FROM ME."

The day before "Dinty Day," a special show was given for the newsboys, at which time the details of the contest were announced. The prizes were inexpensive; and consisted of a fountain pen, a metal pencil and five one-month passes to the Rialto.

Swift Ties Up with "Don't Jay Walk" Campaign

A new exploitation idea was used by Harry Swift, Albany exploitation man for F. P. Lasky in putting over "Something to Think About" for the new De Luxe theatre of Utica, N. Y.

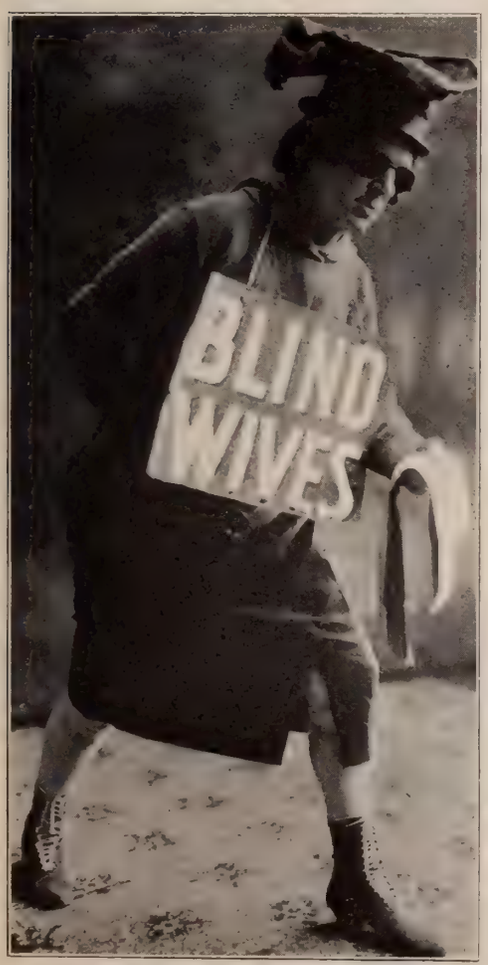
A unique angle was given the exploitation by Swift's adaptability in seizing upon a popular theme on which to train his guns for the opening volleys. For a long time ineffective agitation had been centered upon the rural custom, prevalent in Utica, of crossing streets in the middle of blocks. Despite admonition on the danger in such carelessness the custom continued.

Upon obtaining official permission from the mayor of the city, Swift placarded every lamppost with signs headed by the slogan: "Something to Think About." The copy read: "X Your Streets at the XXs. Don't Jay Walk." The fact that these signs were used as teasers promptly squelched any hostile criticism and after their first success in enlisting public sentiment for the campaign, orders were issued to post signs of permanent structure. More than 250 such signs are hanging in Utica today, advertising "Something to Think About."

A further assault was made on local store windows in connection with the theatre's opening. One of the most effective windows was made in conjunction with a jewelry firm in the very heart of the business district. A diamond tie-up is "Something to Think About," according to the proprietor of the store, who used the title for his reduction sale on precious stones.

Imagine a sign 30 feet long on the first floor of a building to advertise a picture! It might cost anywhere from a hundred dollars up at paid outdoor display rates; but the exploitation man obtained it gratis for the De Luxe theatre on the strength of the picture's advertising value.

Here is a window display for "Suds" which Henry Bercovich, manager of the Allen theatre, Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, used for the showing of the above mentioned feature



Fagan Plays Benefit on "Freedom of Ireland"

Barney Fagan, showing the "Freedom of Ireland" at the Odeon theater, St. Louis, charged an admission fee of $1, had the Mayor of the city address his audience, secured the services of the leading Irish baritone in St. Louis free, and enjoyed an advance sale of $35,000. Ten per cent of this goes to the fund for Irish freedom.

The lobby display at the Odeon was unusually attractive. The front of the theater lobby was decorated to resemble an Irish village in green. The ticket office was latticed with green shingles and profusely scattered with paper Shamrocks. The ticket-seller and all the girl ushers were attired as Irish colleens. Even the footman at the door was clothed in a green suit.

With the announcement in the daily papers that the picture would help the Irish Fund, Fagan postered the entire city with placards and signs of all descriptions. Tickets were placed on sale at all the drug stores and music houses in the city. This was two weeks before the presentation, which came on Sunday, Dec. 16, for a four-day run.

Fagan's offer of 10 per cent of the total receipts to the Fund worked wonders. It secured for him space in all the newspapers, and capitalized the Irish sentiment to such an extent that it drew unusual throngs during the four days.

Walter D. Shafer's "Blind Wives" ballyhoo, as described in the story appearing on this page

This lobby display that makes use of large white letters as shown above was used for the showing of "45 Minutes from Broadway" by the Orpheum theatre of Scottsbluff, Neb.

Good "Blind Wives" Stunt

Walter D. Shafer, Manager Liberty Theatre St. Louis Stages Unique Exploitation Campaign

WALTER D. SHAFER, manager of the William Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, literally went out, assembled the New Years Eve crowds, and escorted them bodily to the threshold of his house where enticing lobby displays compelled them to seek entrance. It was one of the cleverest ideas that Shafer has originated and was executed at a most opportune time.

The exploitation stunt was in connection with "Blind Wives."

The stunt began with a judicious teaser campaign in the four daily newspapers. The paper advertisements were in the form of heavily bordered "boxes" bearing the admonition to "Watch the Blind Wives." The advertisements continued until the day previous to the opening when they were ended with a display four columns wide and 150 lines deep.

While the newspapers were heralding the film production every person whose name is on Shafer's large mailing list was finding on his regular weekly program a small sticker on which was printed the head of a blindfolded woman and beneath which was printed "Blind Wives Will Open the Eyes of the World." Each envelope containing a program also carried one of Shafer's circus heralds which were especially prepared for the occasion.

Then to culminate the exploitation on New Years Eve when the majority of St. Louis inhabitants were celebrating on the main thoroughfares of the city, Shafer procured the services of a man whom he attired in a garb that reminded one of the ancient but famous "Bedelia." The apparel the manikin wore consisted of a woman's hat of 1902 vintage, a foot-ball sweater, a knee-length of burlap, men's socks and garters (all visible) and a pair of old stage shoes. The fellow also wore a wig, a set of smoked goggles, and bore a sign on his breast with the two words, "Blind Wives."

Then he was assigned to parade a beat in the vicinity of the center of night-life in St. Louis and a short distance from the Liberty. In addition to startling the natives with his freakish attire, Shafer's employe distributed several hundred of the circur heralds. Several times the parader was compelled to appeal for police protection due to the inquisitiveness of enthusiastic celebrators who were doubtful whether "it" was really a man, woman, or escaped lunatic.

As the parader marched up and down he attracted large throngs of persons, and having accomplished this, began a rapid march toward the Liberty, the crowd following. When they arrived at the ticket office, the secret of "Blind Wives" was out and many hundreds of the followers paid their way inside to see the picture. Then the parader would return to his beat, assemble mob, and escort them to the theatre.

One newspaper reporter who happened to see the man on the street, but who did not to follow him to his lair, wrote a feature story on how far some of the New Years celebrators went in their carousal and masquerading. To say the least, the stunt was the best ever undertaken by the Liberty and the results were remarkable.

Now Shafer's motto is: "Go Out and Bring 'em In."

NEWS Review Resume—Colorful Western with Fatty Arbuckle as feature star.

Exhibitors Box Office Reports—Very disappointing and tame. Just like hundreds of other Westerns. Those who liked Westerns didn't mind it very much—but they certainly didn't like it. Box office receipts good, because they wanted to see Fatty in a five-reeler.—Fairly good picture, but business was not exceptionally good, due largely to the fact that the star has yet to make his reputation as the principal in a feature picure. His fame rests only upon his work in comedy.—This is an average picture but seemed to please the audience.

NEWS Review Resume—Plenty of melodramatic fireworks in this sob-sister story.

Exhibitors Box Office Reports—Picture not up to the previous high standard of the star, Norma Talmadge.—Very big business, but picture criticised for slow action.—A slow-moving affair which failed to create any excitement, although Norma Talmadge performs in her usual excellent manner. A cut-back showing a Roman slave market was unnecessary and plainly lugged in for its sensual appeal.

Exhibitors Box Office Reports—Fine picture. Brought good business.—Great picture. A sure fire money getter. Drew large crowds with large box office results.—Not very well liked. No box office value.—By far the best thing this star has done. She always draws well for me but never so well as in this. Would like as many more like it as I can get.—Great stuff.—An average picture, which brought fair business.—Fine! Acting splendid. Subtitles are a screen. TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, left for Los Angeles on Saturday where he is going to spend a week securing a number of new productions to be released during the coming season. The Arrow plans to release at least one feature a week during 1921. A great deal of this product it is said has already been contracted for and in many cases these productions will consist of series of features.

Dr. Shallenberger expects to have eight features made for him by Morris R. Schlank. The first one to be delivered March 15th. These features will consist of four productions each with two prominent female stars. In addition to this Mr. Schlank is going to make two series of comedies beginning production right after the completion of the Spotlight Comedies of which Schlank has made fifteen of the eighteen contracted for.

It is expected by Arrow that Dr. Shallenberger will bring back with him a number of special productions for the independent state rights exchanges.

"The Price of Silence" Press-Book Ready

A splendid press book, both from an artistic standpoint and from a point of sales, advertising and exploitation values, came off the presses during the week to go with the first Sunrise Pictures Corporation release, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland. This book contains sixteen pages and is in two colors. In addition to scene cuts and ad cuts, the press book is replete with original drawings that have a compelling interest and which can be used in exploiting "The Price of Silence."

Arrow Vice-President Sees Good Business

Ray Johnston, vice-president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has sufficiently recovered from his recent operation on his tonsils to take up actively his duties in his office. Mr. Johnston reports that business in the state right field is improving and that more sales are being made at this time than were being made this time last year.

Reports from the various representatives of Arrow travelling on the road indicate that business all along the line is inceasing and that judging from the number of contracts these men are turning in almost daily there is little truth to the report that business is suffering a depression.

Teaser Campaign Planned

Use of Simple Word "Hush" Will Popularize New Young Picture

THAT Equity's fifth Clara Kimball Young production 'Hush' is to be given exceptional attention by exhibitors in the way of advertising and exploitation, was again demonstrated this week when Leo Barclay of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., stepped into the Equity offices and sat at a round table discussion on the exploitation of 'Hush' for his three theatres—the Nemo, Fairview and Grand.

It was the consensus of opinion of all present, including Milton Crandall, the new exploitation director of Equity pictures, that the most effective advance interest in the picture would be obtained by the simple use of the word 'Hush' without explanation or addition. The reason for this action is to arouse mystery and suspense in the public mind. A single-word advertisement appearing at the bottom of newsmatter in the press, reading 'Hush,' is bound to arouse surprise, as the title gives no indication of its connection with a motion-picture. Placed at the end of a report on crime or some divorce story, the word 'Hush' would be very suggestive.

A novel and effective use of display cards in public schools with the injunction 'Hush' neatly printed would be acceptable as a substitute for cards reading 'Silence' in classrooms. With the word 'Hush' there would be a small illustration, taken from a still of the picture, showing a profile of Miss Young's lips with her forefinger vertically across them. In the tie-up with the showing of the picture, the same illustration will be used.

One of the 'stunts' that Barclay expects to bring most response is that of a free Sunday supplement given to readers of the most popular newspaper in Johnstown, consisting of a familiar picture showing a child asleep, with the title 'Hush' at the bottom.

Kineto Review at Capitol

"Babyhood" Wins Praise of Critics When Shown on Broadway House

ONE of Charles Urban's Kineto Reviews is at the Capitol Theatre this week. The subject is entitled "Babyhood."

"Babyhood" is one of the instances of the variety in the Kineto Reviews. These subjects, all arranged in one reel lengths, comprise every possible variety in motion pictures. They form the nucleus of "The Living Book of Knowledge," a motion picture encyclopedia.

"Such a subject as 'Babyhood' for example," states Kineto, "has in it a great deal of instructional value and it is as entertaining as it is worth while." The reviewer of the New York Herald said of it:

"'Babyhood,' a Kineto Review of the young of the species in all possible variations, deals with a subject on which people can't be coached too much."

The New York Times said:

"'Babyhood,' a reel of babies of various notionalities, moods, sizes and shapes, photographed for the Kineto Company, is also on the Capitol program. Is there anyone to whom it is not a reel of joy?"

For some weeks past a good many of the Kineto Reviews have been playing at the Capitol in New York and the Strand Theatre in Brooklyn.

Beginnig March 1 or very soon thereafter, the Kineto Reviews will be available to theatres everywhere in the United States and Canada through the National Exchanges, Inc., and its distributors which include important Independent Exchanges in all domestic territories and the Allen Bros. in Canada.

R. D. Film Corp. Start New Comedy Series

The R. D. Film Corporation, recently organized under California laws with capital of $100,000 has begun to make a series of comedies at a Long Beach studio. This will feature Denver Dixon with Alma Rayford and Merrill McCormick as principal players under the direction of Fred Jefferson.

Officers of the company are: W. C. Rae, president; A. F. Devereaux, vice-president, and S. B. Drum, secretary and treasurer.

A COMPLETE line of "paper," exploitation material, lobby display, and advertising cuts, copy, and mats has been prepared by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation in connection with the release of the "Star Ranch Westerns," the series of two-reel Western dramas which this company is releasing to the independent market, and is ready for exhibitors playing this series. It is announced by Joe Brandt, President of C. B. C. that the same care has been taken with the preparation of publicity accessories as for five or six reel features.

"Star Ranch Westerns" is a series of twenty-six two-reel pictures. Four pictures of the series have already been released, and the fifth, "A Daughter of the Law," has been edited, titled, and will be released shortly.

Initial Scenes Taken on "The Unfoldment"

The first scenes for George H. Kern's super-production "The Unfoldment," featuring Florence Lawrence, former Biograph beauty with William Conklin, were taken at the Hollywood Studios recently. Kern, who created the story, is directing the play with Murdock MacQuarrie officiating as co-director.

"The Unfoldment" is a psychological story of newspaper life in which Miss Lawrence portrays the role of a newspaper woman. Albert Prisco, who scored a hit in Mary Pickford's "The Love Light," plays an important part in the production. Lydia Knott, famous mother of the screen, is included among the principals of the cast, which also includes Willis L. Robards and others. Scenes for "The Unfoldment" will be taken in San Francisco, San Diego, Costa Rica, and Salina Cruz and Mexico City, Mexico.

For his business organization Mr. Kern has selected James Caldwell as his scenario editor and Harry Eflis Dean as business manager. W. E. Keefe has been chosen as production manager.

Seaboard Film to Open Clarksburg Exchange

A new exchange is to be started on or about February 1st, in Clarksburg, W. Va., by the Seaboard Film Exchange, who have offices in Washington, Baltimore, New York and other cities. H. I. Coleman is the president of this corporation and expects to personally open this office with a number of state right features and commercial reels.

Independent Films Unique Campaign to Aid Exhibitors

Neal Hart Advertising in Phone Directories of Large Cities

NEAL HART, Independent Films Association's star, is to be the most advertised man on the screen. Within a few weeks his portrait is to appear on the inside back cover of five million telephone directories, the American public's most widely used reference book, as a result of an unusual and revolutionary advertising compaign, originated and carried out by Harry Rice, business manager of Independent Films Association, for the purpose of making Neal Hart America's pal.

Mr. Rice's scheme of placing an ad having the picture of the star in every telephone directory in all large cities of the country will start to bear fruit with the January issue of the New York phone directory with a circulation of 850,000 and the Chicago directory, over 600,000 copies of which are issued. Both will be out early in February. Everyone who picks up one of these directories next month will pick up a portrait of Neal Hart. other cities which will be included in the campaign and carry Neal Hart's picture an ad on the page facing the inside back covers of their phone directories, are Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Los Angeles and other communities in which there are first run houses that show Neal Hart series and which will bring the total circulation of this portrait and ad above the five million mark.

The tremendous publicity and prestige given this star by Mr. Rice's advertising campaign, not only will add greatly to the prestige of Independent Films Association, but marks another healthy advance in the publicity methods used by independents and is the most important national advertising campaign ever entered into by an independent.

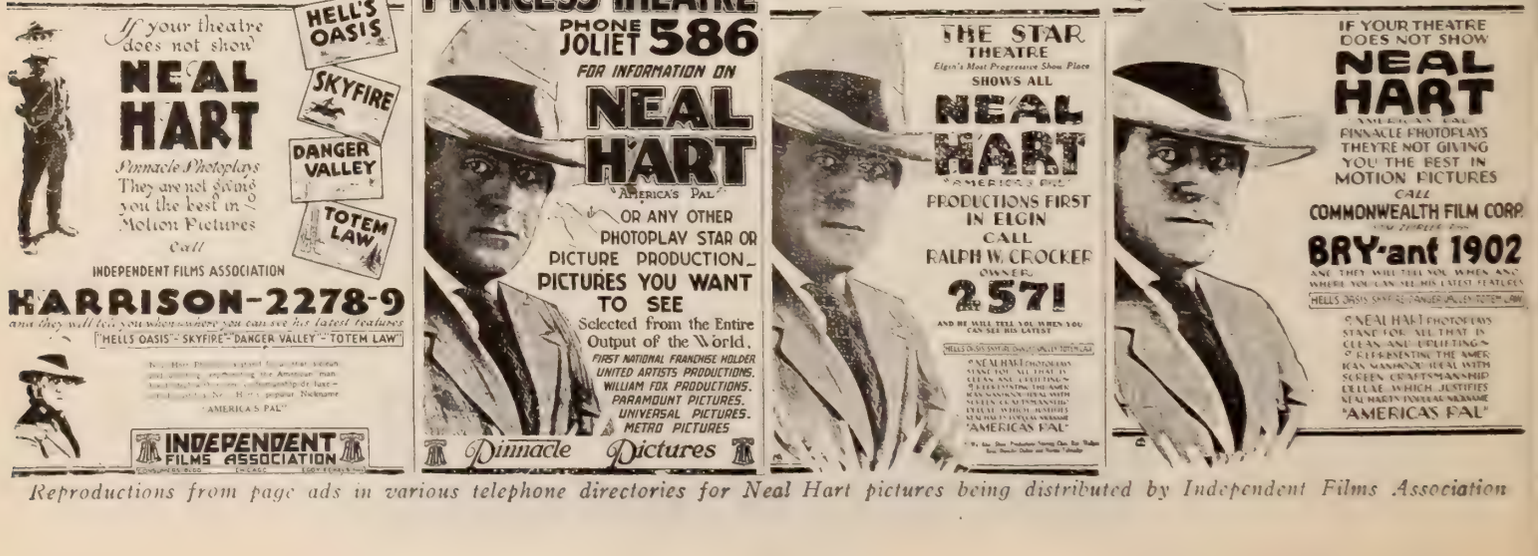
Eddy Eckels, president of Independent Films Association, in commenting on Mr. Rice's plan and the way it is being carried out, said "This idea is practically limitless in its scope. Its advantages can be viewed from a thousand angles and its effect can as yet be only vaguely estimated. It will mean that in each large city every hotel, every drug store, every railroad station, every film exchange and in every theatre there will be as many pictures of Neal Hart as there are telephone directories. It will mean that in thousands of homes whoever picks up a telephone book will be reminded of a star who is fast winning the national nickname of 'America's Pal.' It will mean that anyone in the country who starts to look up a telephone number will presently find himself looking into the smilling face of Neal Hart. His features will be so impressed upon the American people that the mere mention of a moving picture, anywhere, anytime, will call to mind the star whose portrait has become part of their daily life. The idea is to create a feeling of homely friendship between Neal Hart and the members of the average American household and the telephone directory is exactly the right medium for making this an accomplished fact."

Harry Rice describes his achievement as a million dollar idea that can be put over at the cheapest price ever paid for a publicity stunt of anything like similar magnitude. He states that Independent Films Association made an arrangement with Sam Zierler, president of Commonwealth Picture Corporation, which handles the Independent product in New York, whereby Commonwealth placed the advertisement with the directory company making mention in the ad of the telephone number of the local Commonwealth exchange, and of the fact that all information in regard to Neal Hart and theatres showing his latest features can be received by calling the number.

Mr. Zierler expressed himself to Dick Robertson, of Independent Film Association, who was in New York in connection with the deal, that he regarded this as the greatest advertising stunt ever put over by an independent. In Chicago Arthur Lowy of the Illinois and Indiana Film Exchange, distributors for the Hart series in that territory placed a contract with the directory company and also was enthusiastic over the plan. These two progressive exchangemen being the pioneers in this big new field of motion picture advertising and first exhibitors to take advantage of this big opportunity and blaze the trail for others to follow and the first exhibitors to make use of this novel form of advertising were Ralph Crocker, owner of the Star theatre, Elgin, Illinois, and Maurice Rubers, manager of the Princess theatre, Joliet.

The big Neal Hart advertising campaign is only part of Mr. Rice's plan as he also proposes to establish a moving picture supplement in the back part of each phone directory consisting of several pages devoted to producer's advertisements which will be a unique agency for bringing pictures before the public. Space will not be confined to the Independent Film Association but will be available to all producers who wish to advertise. The agency through which this will be handled will be known as the Harry Rice agency and will have branches in various parts of the country. Hand in hand with this will go a service department so that users of the telephone can call the nearest Harry Rice agency for information about pictures which the enquirer has seen advertised in the directory as to when and where they will first be shown, etc., and Mr. Rice's local agency will give the necessary answer.

It is planned that the first of these supplements will be issued within a few months.



This inspiration as to Neal Hart advertising first came to Harry Rice during his recent visit to New York and he first sold the idea to Sam Zierler of New York, president of Commonwealth and following that sought out R. B. Donnelly Printing Company, which prints many of the phone directories used throughout the country. Harvey Wood vice-president, convinced the officials of the advisability of the scheme and forthwith one of the most revolutionary publicity stunts in the history of the motion picture industry was realized.

Screenart Announces Ten Features

The Screenart Pictures Corporation of New York City, announces a series of ten all-star features. These ten features are the best of a series of pictures that were issued several years ago. Each picture has a proven box-office record and the ability of each star is so well known that the reissuing of these pictures it is said will meet with popular favor everywhere.

The following pictures are included in this series: "The Light of Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum; "Playing Square," with Gladys Hulette; "Playthings of Passion," with Kitty Gordon; "An Amateur Orphan," with Gladys Leslie; "Mary Lawson's Secret," with Charlotte Walker; "A Man in the Open," with Dustin Farnum "Hinton's Double," with Jeann Eagles; "Adele," with Kitty Gordon; "Just His Wife," with Gladys Hulette; "A Man's Fight," with Dustin Farnum.

The Screenart Pictures Corporation have already begun an advertising campaign to state rights these pictures. They will go through the independent exchange and are being sold on an unusually low basis.

DRASCENA Productions have completed distribution arrangements of Company's first six-reel drama. "Get Out and Stay Out" will be distributed by National Exchanges Incorporation which has offices in New York. At the present time Drascena organization is giving practically all its attention to filming two-reel comedies. Hal Stephens is being directed in one series by Stuart Featherstone. Another company making a series featuring Milburn Morante and directed by Tom Gibson is working at Balboa Studios. This unit is to make a series of 26 comedies for Federation Exchanges. The first titled "Politics" has been completed and another named "Cakes" is now being made. Helen Williams is leading woman of this troup and Jack Henderson is playing the heavy.

Rockett Film at Work on New Production

Production work has been started by the Rockett Film Corporation on its second release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Pathe Exchanges, which will be an adaptation of the Irving Bacheller novel, "Keeping Up With Lizzie." A very notable cast has been assembled for this subject by General Manager R. R. Rockett, which includes Enid Bennett, late Thos. H. Ince star on Paramount program, together with Victory Bateman, Lila Leslie, Eddie Hearn, Otis Harlan, Leo White, J. L. Stevens, Harry Todd and others.

At the time of announcing the cast for this picture the information is also given out that Will M. Ritchey, supervising director of Realart Studios has become manager of production for the Rockett Company. Ritchey has been identified with the film industry as scenario writer for the past ten years.

The engagement of Lloyd Ingram to direct this picture and Ross Fisher as chief cameraman is also announced. Miss Dolly Harrison has been named casting director; Ted Bevis technical director; and S. E. Snyder press representative.

It will be the policy of this company, according to President R. R. Rockett to film only comedy dramas of successful published books. A. L. Rockett, brother of President R. R., will be assistant to his brother.

Harry Levey Completes "The White Bottle"

"The White Bottle," Harry Levey's latest "Feature With a Purpose" has just been completed. The picture, which is an appeal to children to drink more milk, has an excellent cast.

Lillian Bonnie, and Leslie Hull have the leading adult roles. The Carr Kiddies—Tom and Rosemary who also have leading parts in "The White Bottle," will be remembered for their work in "Over the Hill."

Farnums Do Big Business

Minnesota Exhibitors Send Fine Reports on Canyon's Westerns

M. H. CONHAIM of the Greater Features Company in Minneapolis has just returned from a trip in which he touched every important town in his territory. In a communication written to the executives of the Canyon Pictures Corporation in New York, Mr. Conhaim enclosed letters which he had received from a great number of exhibitors in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin, in which these theatre managers express their opinions of the drawing power of Franklyn Farnum as a star, and the value of the features in which he is appearing for the Canyon Pictures Corporation, as screen entertainment.

L. G. Darling of Kenmare, N. Dak., says, "'The Galloping Devil' is a good picture; did a fine business." Messrs. Vavrika and Kuhn of Evansville, Minn., states, "Farnum's are the best Westerns ever shown here. Everybody pleased."

J. F. Miller of Ogilvie, Minn., told Mr. Conhaim that if all the Franklyn Farnum pictures are as good as "The Galloping Devil," the exhibitor who does not play them is missing something. S. A. Goethel of Huron, So. Dakota, said, "The Farnums are very good pictures. Different from the general run of Westerns."

From all parts of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota come similar statements. Among those upon record as believing that Franklyn Farnum series of features are money getters may be mentioned Blackmore Brothers of Duluth, Minn., Kaus and Townsend, Lake Minnesota, H. A. Brumund, Thief River Falls, Minn.

C. H. Taylor of Corsby, Minn., writes, "I want to congratulate you on 'The Galloping Devil' with Franklyn Farnum is a good Western picture, with good comedy to offset it. My people liked it very much."

In speaking of the above remarks, Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg said, "These opinions voiced by exhibitors have a peculiar significance, inasmuch as they come from the men who pay their money for pictures. They know what kind of a picture makes money for them and at the same time pleases their audiences. It is this type of screen entertainment that builds reputations for theatres and establishes the exhibitor as an asset to a community.

"We feel justly proud of our Franklyn Farnum pictures for they are making money for every exchange and theatre that use them."

Buyers Tell Their Wants

Exchangemen's Reply to Dominant Questionaire Shows Needs

THERE has been a most enthusiastic response to the questionnaire sent out by Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of Dominant Pictures Corporation, to state right buyers and independent exchangemen at large, requesting that they express their views on the type of pictures they would like to handle in their respective territories in 1921.

The replies received—and they are many, show in a measure the complexion of the territorial market at the present time. The demand for Western subjects of feature and short reel length as well as the desire for one-reel slapstick comedies seem to be principal types of pictures independent exchangemen welcome in 1921.

The analysis of the replies received to date are as follows, states Mr. Popfstein:

The replies received from independent exchangemen in the southern territory which comprises the states of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee and the South Western territory indicate a strong demand for Western and Northwestern feature productions as well as Western subjects of short length.

The territory consisting of the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia has evinced a strong interest for this same type of product.

The response that has come from independent exchangemen in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New Jersey indicates a great demand for Western productions and virile outdoor dramas which contain plenty of action. The demand for Western productions extends clear through the entire West and Northwest and from the tenor of the replies received, demonstrates that this is the most popular type of picture in the independent market.

Independent exchangemen operating in the New England, New York and Eastern Pennsylvania territories, express a desire for society dramas which have a leaning towards sex. Contrasting the favor with which Western subjects meet in other territories, Westerns do not go so well in those territories, although there is a possible market for them if sold on a reasonable basis.

Other territories from which there has been a response request high-class two-reel comedies.

Famous Art Model in "The Devil's Angel"

Included in the cast of players appearing in the Lejaren a' Hiller production, "The Devil's Angel," which is being distributed by Clark-Cornelius Corporation, is Miss Peggy O'Neill, who is famous as an art model.

In this picture Miss O'Neill plays the part of a model. She was chosen by Mr. Hiller from all the models in New York City to interpret this role.

WHAT is said to be the largest insurance policy issued since the day that Ignace Paderewski, the famed pianist, took out a policy calling for indemnity in the amount of about one-half million dollars against loss of appearance due to any injury that might arise from the crippling of his nimble fingers, was recently called for by Victor Kremer as a safeguard against any delay that might arise through an accident happening as a result to the hazardous risks taken by Texas Guinan in her latest series of eight western dramas now being filmed at Los Angeles under the direction of Francis Ford.

Several companies were appealed to, but on account of the hazardous nature of the riding done by Miss Guinan no one company would accept the whole amount called for with the result that seven companies finally decided to assume and divide the risk.

Each picture calls for a policy of $50,000 and as others who are more than incidental to the picture may meet with accident an additional policy covering the rest of the cost was issued in the amount of $100,000, in all making what might be called a blanket policy of one-half a million dollars.

Hirsh Gives Statement on Pickford Reissues

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, has sent out a notice to the trade relative to the series of fifteen Mary Pickford two-reelers and the Success Series of Short Subjects.

Both the Pickford pictures and the Success two-reelers were purchased by Mr. Hirsh, he states, from the Biograph Company who owned and controlled the negatives. The Aywon Film Corporation is the only concern authorized to market these pictures.

Mr. Hirsh states that in order to protect exhibitors and all those concerned in the releasing and showing of the Mary Pickford series and the Success Series that arrangements have been made to prosecute any theatre owner or releasing company that offers any such pictures for sale or for showing.

Farnum Combating Cranks

Personal Appearance of Star, Arranged by Brandt, a Success

WORD comes from Philadelphia of the enthusiasm that is being aroused among exhibitors and motion picture patrons by the personal appearances of Fraklyn Farnum, who is making a tour of the country to talk against the proposed Blue Law legislation. The tour was planned by Joe Brandt, President of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, and Mr. Brandt made a special trip to Philadelphia last week for the purpose of seeing how Farnum was "going over" and with what success he is meeting in the fight against the curtailment of Sunday liberties.

Mr. Farnum has been in Philadelphia for a week, and Mr. Brandt was assured personally by H. M. S. Kendrick, manager of the Fairmont Theatre, C. G. Hexter, manager of the Point Breeze Theatre, and several other exhibitors, that the actor is lending just the personal touch that is needed in this matter of Blue Law legislation and that his talks are having excellent results.

That real showmanship is being applied to these personal appearances of Mr. Farnum, and that exhibitors consider the Blue Law situation more serious than most people will admit, is shown by a novel exploitation stunt that was arranged in connection with Mr. Farnum's appearance at the Astor Theatre, Philadelphia, on Monday and Tuesday, January 31st and February 1st. It was arranged that, in conjunction with Mr. Farnum's personal appearance, a motion picture be made in which the most popular girl in the neighborhood was to be co-starred with Mr. Farnum.

The stunt attracted wide attention, all performances were crowded and when Mr. Farnum appeared and delivered his talk, the audience was in a thoroughly receptive mood.

Mr. Farnum is putting his entire heart and soul into his appearances in behalf of personal freedom. Upon the completion of his appearance in Philadelphia, he will work west, arriving at the West Coast around April 1st to start production.

Horizon Pictures Active

Backer States 14 Talmadge Re-Issues Are Arousing Interest

WITH a large suite of offices in the Times Building, New York, Horizon Pictures, the new company headed by Franklyn E. Backer, has opened operations on what promises to be a large scale if the results already obtained are any criterion.

The first pictures announced by Mr. Backer, and upon which he is now planning an elaborate advertising campaign, are a series of fourteen Norma Talmadge two reelers to be released one every two weeks beginning at an early date and available to independent exchanges. These subjects are said to be splendidly produced and, according to Hopp Hadley, under whose supervision they are all being re-edited and whose long and successful career in cutting and titling important productions is well known, they present Norma Talmadge in some of the most interesting roles she has ever played.

Mr. Backer states that the interest shown in his re-edited Norma Talmadge subjects by state right exchange-men is even greater than he anticipated. He says that it proves to him that things are far from quiet out in the field as he received sixty-four telegrams from independent exchanges, and fully as many letters, in less than a week's time and that the inquiries covered every territory without a single exception. Three of the series are now completed and ready for early release while Mr. Hadley promises to turn them out at the rate of one a week from now on. A full line of advertising matter is also ready on the first three, which includes Ritchey one-sheets and three-sheets, hand colored eleven by fourteen and twenty-two by twenty-eight photographs and slides. Mr. Backer promises to announce two five reel subjects at an early date.

Second Jack Hoxie Ready

"Cyclone Bliss" Available for Independents, Announces Arrow

THE second Jack Hoxie five-reel Western feature is entitled "Cyclone Bliss" and has been released to the Independent State Right Exchanges. It is said that "Cyclone Bliss" is a worthy successor to "A Man From Nowhere." It is said to be full of action with plenty of thrills and the story gives Jack Hoxie an opportunity of displaying his wonderful horsemanship and fighting qualities.

The third Jack Hoxie feature is under course of production and will be delivered to Arrow within the next two weeks.

P. B. Dana, sales manager of Arrow, states that nearly all of the territory on Jack Hoxie features has been sold and he has received a number of telegrams from the independent state right buyers praising the first Hoxie feature and asking for more like it. There are to be four pictures in this series and the two that have been delivered, he states, have been received with enthusiasm by all the exchanges who have contracted for the series.

The Arrow Film Corporation reports a number of sales during the past week. Several territories were disposed of on the two Rubye de Remer features, the Spotlight Comedies and Sport Pictorial. The publicity that has been given the Sport Pictorial through the New York daily newspapers has been responsible for the sale of several additional territories on these one-reel pictures, it is said.

GEORGE WEST, territorial salesman for the Reelcraft Pictures, confirmed the confidence in him of President R. C. Cropper, by closing negotiation in Boston last week for the distribution of the entire Reelcraft Program of releases through the Exchanges of Samuel V. Grand in Boston for the Northeastern States territory.

Grand is one of the best known Independent State Right distributors in the United States.

The new additions to the many series of releases distributed through the Grand exchanges will include, the George Clarke single reel comedies, the Bud and His Buddies series of comedies, the Reelcraft Scenic Series, the Romances of Youth and the other various Reelcraft releases.

Adolph Samuels to Buy European Pictures

The president of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta Ga., Adolph Samuels, has left Atlanta and is on his way to Europe. He will visit England, France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. He expects to be in touch with the film industry of Europe, and also to negotiate for and bring back with him several productions.

Mr. Samuels started in Atlanta in the early days of motion picture business, at one time owning twelve theatres in the South, but since acquiring the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, he has disposed of his theatres, with the exception of two in Atlanta.

First Muriel Ostriche Feature Started

Work on the first production of Salient Films, Inc., was started last week, and Salient announces that a special cast which has been engaged to support the star, Muriel Ostriche, is making rapid progress under the direction of J. Charles Davis, 2nd.

The leading role opposite Miss Ostriche is in the hands of Walter Miller. The heavy is portrayed by Harold Foshay.

Urban Receiving Pictures of Tangiers

Carl von Hoffman, who was recently sent on a foreign tour by Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, is now in Morocco.

A letter from him, received this week by Mr. Urban and dated from Tangier says the first batch of negatives dealing with life in and round Tangier, is already en route.

Von Hoffman will be away for about eight months.

Quality Films Opens Charleston Office

The Quality Film Co., a Pittsburg exchange, will open a branch office in Charleston, W. Va., under the management of Mr. Elder, who has returned from Cleveland, where he was manager of the Lande Film Corporation.

"Sham" Has a Strong Cast

Ethel Clayton Stars in Picture Version of Harris-Bonner Comedy

EMPHASIZING Paramount's new policy of "perfect casts" is the one assigned to "Sham," the Elmer Harris-Geraldine Bonner stage comedy success, now being made as an Ethel Clayton starring vehicle. In support of the star are such well-known players as Theodore Roberts, Walter Hiers, Sylvia Ashton, Arthur Carewe, Clyde Fillmore, Helen Dunbar and Carrie Clark Ward.

After all of these were chosen, however, one important comedy character remained. A fat girl was needed, of proper appearance to be the sister of the rotund Hiers.

Filmdom was searched in vain. Then the stage was called upon. And the result is that in "Sham" theatregoers will see the motion picture debut of a young woman who has been considered "the funniest fat girl of the American stage." She is none other than Eunice Burnham, who with Charlotte Greenwood made up the well-known vaudeville team of "Greenwood and Burnham, Two Girls and Piano."

Both Miss Burnham and Miss Greenwood entered musical comedy as show-girls in the Sam Bernard company of "Nearly a Hero." Then for six years they teamed together in vaudeville. Miss Burnham left the team to play with Charles Irwin and then in "Canary Cottage" by Elmer Harris and Oliver Morosco. She soon rejoined Miss Greenwood, however, replacing May Boley in the cast of "So Long Letty," also by Harris and Morosco.

"Sham" sees her again in an Elmer Harris story with a full understanding of the particular twist of humor which has brought success to the well-known writer.

In addition to being a comedienne Miss Burnham is well-known as a writer of popular songs. Her "A Wondrous Rose," has had a big vogue and "Naughty Brown Eyes" is being used this season by Julian Eltinge.

Miss Young in Southwest

Equity Star to Make Personal Appearances in Lynch Theatres

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has kept a promise of three years standing and wired Mr. Lynch of the Lynch Circuit in Dallas today that she was at last ready to fulfill her engagement for a personal visit to the Lynch theatres.

The probability is that Miss Young will take a flying trip to the Southwest without stopping off in the interval. The moment her engagement is completed she will hurry back to the Garson studios. It is expected that Miss Young's first appearance will be in Dallas, during the week of Feb. 13th. From there she will go to the Lynch theatres in San Antonio and Houston. Her appearance will be followed by a showing of 'Midchannel,' which has not yet opened in the Southwest, but which was delayed till Miss Young could appear in person.

In company with Miss Young will be Harry Garson, her director, Louis Baum, Equity sales-manager, who is now in Dallas in anticipation of Miss Young's arrival, and Milton Crandall, well-known exploitation expert of the Equity staff. A luncheon to the press is another of the incidental events that will mark Miss Young's presence.

Mayer to Make New Series

Known as Stahl Productions; Slowing Up Not a Real Slump, He Says

COINCIDENT with First National's announcement that "Sowing the Wind" has been selected as one of the "Big Five," comes the statement from Louis B. Mayer's offices that all future pictures by the director, John M. Stahl, will be known as John M. Stahl Productions. They will be made as all-star specials, and will be released by Mr. Mayer through the channels of Associated First National.

Following the country-wide success of "The Woman in His House" and First National's naming "Sowing the Wind," which stars Anita Stewart, as one of the five foremost productions of the new year, this announcement carries with it a distinct tribute to John M. Stahl's ability as a directorial ability.

"What to many seems like a general slump and period of depression in the industry is, in my opinion, merely the settling of the business onto a solid foundation," said Louis B. Mayer, when asked "The" question of the hour.

"The present slowing-up ot the business is not depression. It is the process of getting into step with the times. The elimination contest is on, and the worth-while picture is emerging untouched and prosperous.

GREATEST SINGLE REEL IN FILMLAND
"Screen Snapshots"

Reelcraft Enlarging Coast Studio

The Coast studio of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation is to be expanded to care for several additional producing units which are being added in accordance with the plans of President R. C. Cropper for the expansion of the Reelcraft program.

The plans call for a new dark stage, enlarged property room, a new carpenter shop, an additional outdoor stage, and the addition of several new dressing rooms. There is to be a special room constructed for the handling of still plates and prints for the Reelcraft productions.

The staff of the Coast studio is also to be augmented, and several additions have already been made. Raymond M. Freil, creator of the animated Mutt & Jeff cartoons, has joined the scenario staff; Dick Currier is to have charge of the cutting for the Franey and George Clarke Comedies, while Walter Bell is chief cinematographer.

Myrabel Film Corp. Is Formed in New York

The Myrabel Film Corporation announces that it has opened offices in New York City, where it will handle features for Greater New York and New Jersey and also dispose of independent productions.

Fred Meyers, formerly manager of the New York Independent Masterfilms, is president of the new company, Leo Lebel, formerly secretary of the same exchange, is secretary, and F. J. M. Iredell is treasurer. The sales force for New York and Brooklyn is composed of Jerry Wilson and Jeff Dolan. Mr. Meisel will be in charge of the New Jersey territory. Miss Weitzer will take charge of the bookings.

New Kineto Subjects Coming from Athens

Charles Mavroyeni has just written to Charles Urban, saying he is shipping some new negatives which have just been completed at his studio in Athens. He says he has a big schedule marked out for himself, one that will keep him busy for many months, all the results of which will be shipped to the Kineto Company to be incorporated in the Kineto Review and the Movie Chats.

Many of the finest biological studies in the Urban Popular Classics are the result of Mr. Mavroyeni's research. One of them is especially familiar to the motion picture trade. This is "The Tragedy of the Praying Mantis," which played at the Rivoli theatre in New York.

New Sport Pictorial at Brooklyn Strand

"The Making of Man-Handlers" is the last Sport Pictorial released and played recently at the Capitol theatre, New York. It also played at the Brookly Strand where Eddie Hyman, manager of the Strand, put on a prologue which added greatly to the presentation of this particular Sport Pictorial.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"THE Offshore Pirate," the new Metro production, starring Viola Dana, will be released by Metro January 31, it was recently announced from the home offices of the company in the Longacre Building. The picture, adapted from F. Scott Fitzgerald's story in the Saturday Evening Post, gives promise of being the best vehicle for the screen that Miss Dana has yet appeared in reads the statement from the Metro headquarters.

"The Offshore Pirate" was written as a story by F. Scott Fitzgerald and was published in the Saturday Evening Post. The picture is a special production, adapted by Waldemar Young and directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Prison Inmates Enjoy Crook Farce

The latest number of Good Words, the monthly publication edited and published by the inmates of the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., contained an unusual review of a recent Goldwyn comedy starring Tom Moore, "Stop Thief!" from Carlyle Moore's successful stage farce. The review in part, follows:

"'Stop Thief' is a clever and amusing screen farce of high order, presenting many complicated situations that holds the interest of an audience; a better fifty-fifty crook comedy was never imagined, and suspense holds half, while humor fills the other half."

Enid Bennett Is Signed for Rockett Picture

The Rocket Film Corporation, which is making "Keeping Up With Lizzie," the second of Irving Bacheller's stories to be brought to the screen, has engaged Enid Bennett for the title role.

Miss Bennett has a long record of successful productions to her credit. She has appeared in a number of Thomas Ince's productions, including "Fuss and Feather," "The Vamp," "The Biggest Show on Earth," "Law of Men," "The Haunted Bedroom," "The Virtuous Thief," "Stepping Out," "What Every Woman Learns," "How To Be Happy Though Married," "Partners Three," "The Woman In The Suit-Case," "Hairpins" and "Silk Stockings."

New Film Market Picture

R. W. Priest Announces "The Great Passion" for Immediate Release

ROBERT W. PRIEST of the Film Market, Inc., announces a new picture for immediate release on the state rights market. "The Grand Passion" is the title. The story is based upon the proposition: "Is a woman loved for beauty of body or beauty of soul?" and the treatment is such as to emphasize the pure and spiritual in love.

Strange as it may seem, with a theme such as the foregoing dealing with the primitive as well as the spiritual in man and woman, "The Grand Passion" is a picture that will appeal to all that is best in mankind and will pass any censorship, it is stated. The production is the result of collaboration of two of the best known photoplay authors in America—Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children," and Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky."

Florence Dixon is the star of "The Grand Passion," and to her, as heroine of the play, is given the demonstration of the precepts of the theme.

In offering "The Grand Passion" to state rights buyers Mr. Priest announces that it is his intention to schedule the United States at such a valuation as to give every buyer a chance to turn his money quickly.

"Money," said Mr. Priest, "is too important a factor in the motion picture industry at this time to warrant considering a schedule that would work a hardship on independent exchangemen, who, it is our purpose to aid in every way possible.

"'The Grand Passion' is the first picture I have seen in several months that has what the state rights buyer demands and still is not a strong sex problem play likely to irritate the censors of the various states."

"1921 to Reward Fighters"

Brinch, Hodkinson Sales Manager, Has Cheerful Slogan for Force

THE attitude of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation toward "the period of unrest" is expressed in a letter sent out recently by P. N. Brinch, the general sales manager, to the men in the field. This letter starts off with a cheery phrase:

"Boys, we've got 'em coming!" and goes on to give a few very brilliant ideas for obtaining results in the selling of pictures.

And then Mr. Brinch in one very pithy paragraph remarks: "Let us follow up on our advantage; let us keep the ball rolling. A lot of film exchanges are laying off salesmen because they don't know of any other way to meet the present situation. We have anticipated this 'period of re-adjustment' for many months and we are ready to cope with it. Instead of laying off men, we are advertising for more men—high grade men who are strong enough to handle the toughest proposition in the land. We want to take the aggressive now that the field is ours. We want to work twice as hard as ever before and place our service in each and every community. We can do it if we all put our shoulders to the wheel."

Mr. Brinch said in a recent interview, "This describes perfectly the way each and every member of our organization feels. We have adopted as a working slogan that sentence originated, I think, by the Chicago Tribune: '1921 Will Reward Fighters,' and you may believe me when I tell you that in 1921 we are going to put up the biggest fight in our career. The truth of our own little slogan, 'Nothing Can Stop Us!' is being proven more thoroughly every day."

Tom Moore Scores in "Hold Your Horses"

Tom Moore has scored again, announces Goldwyn, with the production of the Rupert Hughes' comedy, "Hold Your Horses," based upon his story of "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," which received its initial showing at the Capitol theatre last week. The picture reviewers on the New York newspapers had all sorts of good things to say of the story, the star and the production. Long since, Tom Moore demonstrated that he was a real actor, could give a complete, rounded impersonation as well as evoke laughter, but in "Hold Your Horses" he has capped the climax of his artistic career up to date, states Goldwyn.

Carewe Directing for Louis Mayer

UNDER the direction of Edwin Carewe, "The Invisible Fear," Anita Stewart's new Louis B. Mayer-First National vehicle, has gone into production at the Mayer studios.

Walter McGrail, Allen Forrest, Ogden Crane, Estelle Evans, Hamilton Morse, George Kiwa and Edward Hunt support the star.

Hampton Del Ruth wrote the story and Madge Tyrone prepared it for the screen. Robert Kurrle is in charge of the photography and effects.

This is Mr. Carewe's second consecutive picture with Anita Stewart, the first being a Jane Murfin story filmed under the working title of "The Tornado."

"Ladies Pets" Title of Chester Two-Reeler

"Ladies Pets" is the unusual title of the two-reel Chester Comedy to be released through Educational Exchanges early in February. It is unique in the fact that only one adult has a part of any importance—the dog catcher. Baby Arthur Austin and eight year old Ida May McKenzie have important roles, with Snooky, the Humanzee, the hero and more than a score of dogs the remainder of the cast.

"Ladies Pets" is the eighth of the Chester Comedies released through Educational.

New Pathe Building Is Opened

Jackqueline Logan, leading woman for Thomas Meighan in a forthcoming Paramount picture titled "White and Unmarried"

Houses Home-Office Forces and Pathe News Staff

PATHE Exchange, Inc., opened its new headquarters building at 35 West 45th street, New York, on February 1st. The new building now houses in the upper six stories the entire home office organization of Pathe, in addition to the entire staff of the Pathe News with the exception of the positive printing plant. They will continue to occupy the Pathe building in Jersey City, where formerly the entire Pathe News staff was located.

Every modern appliance and convenience that would tend to develop the efficiency of a business organization is to be found in the new Pathe Building. The offices are segregated in such a manner that cooperating departments will be linked together on one floor and will be in constant contact.

The executive offices, with that of President Paul Brunet, will be located on the eleventh floor. In addition this floor will contain the offices of the secretary of Pathe Exchange; the export manager's office; the auditor and accounting department; the reception room; and offices for the secretaries of the various executives. There will also be the meeting room of the board of directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The eighth floor will be the first occupied and will house the office manager, the comptroller, the branch auditing and statistical departments, the mailing department filing department, switchboard room, and the stenographic department.

The ninth floor will be given over to the publicity department, the advertising department, purchasing department, the Pathe Sun, the scenario department, and the production manager, in addition to stenographers.

The sales department and a modernly equipped projection room will occupy the tenth floor. Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson presides over this floor, which will hold the offices of the assistant director of exchanges, the feature sales manager, serial sales manager, short subject sales manager, the exploitation department, secretary to the director of exchanges, and the sales control department.

The projection room on this floor will be used for public and press showings, and for reviews by the Pathe Reviewing Committee.

A considerable portion of the twelfth floor will be devoted to the Pathe News, with the film editing manager and department, Pathe Review editor and three projection rooms—two for the film editing department, the other for the Pathe News—sharing the remaining space.

In addition to the office of the editor of the Pathe News, the offices allocated to his department include one where the cameramen will assemble; another where the cartoonist of the Pathe News will perform his difficult tasks; another for general equipment, for film cutters and one for clerks.

Many facilities for rushing the Pathe News to the screen—some but recent developments of the modern science of motion picture technique—which will help the organization maintain its superiority in the news reel field, are found on the top floor of the Pathe Building.

There the news negative will receive the laboratorial treatment that will make it ready for shipment to Jersey City for positive printing and fo distribution throughout the United States. On this floor are located two cutting rooms, the negative developing room, the drying room, and the film vaults—one for Pathe News library, and the other to contain the prints necessary to the workings of the film editing department.

Attractive Press Book on "Wing Toy"

"Wing Toy," the fanciful story written by Pearl Doles Bell for Shirley Mason and released by William Fox last Sunday, Jan. 30, has been made the subject of one of the most attractive press books ever offered to exhibitors by Fox. Printed in two colors throughout, and liberally sprinkled with decorative art work in addition to the scene and ad cuts, posters and lobby display, it reflects admirably the Oriental atmosphere of the tale. The live exhibitor will go far to find a more effective exploitation vehicle.

Open School for Rothacker Forces

The entire Rothacker Chicago laboratory force now goes to school regularly. How to turn out superior quality prints is the only subject taught at this school.

Every department is taken separately to the large projection room. The lesson begins with the screening of film containing imperfections which were caught in the inspection rooms where every Rothacker print is put to the test of projection before being shipped to the exchange. The causes of various imperfections are explained and the "pupils" told how such imperfections can be avoided. The session is ended with a round-table discussion.

Vitagraph to Produce Curwood Story

One of Vitagraph's biggest productions of the year, another of the series of special productions begun a year ago which has met with success, will be "Flower of the North," by James Oliver Curwood. Like many other stories by this author, it is a tale of the North—a romance of shores of Hudson Bay.

Work on the new production will be begun almost immediately under the supervision of David Smith. There will be a specially engaged cast, headed by Philip Whittemore and Jeanne D'Ancambal. Some of the scenes will be made at Vitagraph's West Coast studios at Hollywood, Cal., but the greater part will be filmed in the Hudson Bay country of Canada.

Strands Book "Black Beauty"

New York and Brooklyn Theatres to Give it Week's Run

VITAGRAPH's special production "Black Beauty," featuring Jean Paige and an all-star cast, has been booked for two weeks by Mr. Joseph Plunkett of the Strand theatre, New York City, starting February 20th. During the first week, it will be presented at the New York Strand, on Broadway, and the following week at the Brooklyn Strand.

Elaborate plans for the presentation of this unusual picture are being completed by Mr. Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, states Vitagraph, and full advantage being taken of the wealth of exploitation possibilities back of "Black Beauty," with its years and years of publicity through Anna Sewell's famous book.

Since the first announcement of Vitagraph that this book was to be adapted for the screen, the offices of that company have received thousands of inquiries by mail and telephone, asking where the picture would be shown, it is declared. Until last Tuesday, when the booking arrangements were completed, no definite answer could be given those seeking this information. Many inquiries were traced to the schools of the city.

Representatives of the Strand theatres were in the audience which saw the first showing of "Black Beauty" to invited guests at the Astor a few weeks ago. The enthusiasm displayed at that showing has seldom been equalled, and from the start of the great race scene near the end of the picture to the finish of the race at the close, the applause was continuous. Many of the very prominent exhibitors present at the showing booked "Black Beauty" that afternoon, although it was 5 o'clock before the showing was concluded.

In making the adaptation of "Black Beauty" Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester not only have retained all the characters, both human and animal, described by the woman who created them, but have added an entrancing story, using only the persons told of in the book—the legitimate thrills which have been added are logical and independent of the story proper of "Black Beauty." The production, with its "outside" story told by "Black Beauty" himself, and the "inside" story enacted by the human characters of the play, holds an appeal for all ages.

Vitagraph reports more interest on this production than in any it has ever put out. Its special school and child appeal is entirely independent of its general appeal. Its race scene and other spectacular thrills are such as to create enthusiasm in any audience, but the appeal behind the title, regardless of the thrills, is a powerful lure to children as well as others, educators and who may seldom attend the motion picture theatre in any numbers.

The race scene has never failed to thrill—reviewers in trade, fan and general newspapers have characterized it as the thrill that "will make them stand and cheer." As for the work of "Black Beauty" himself, one reviewer stated that "Man o' War could not have run the race any better."

"Black Beauty" was directed by David Smith on the West Coast, and it is one of the few productions in which more persons were in back of the camera than in front of it—this despite the unusually large cast. The corps of attendants for the horses, the specialists on period costumes and period manners, all helped to swell this number. Jean Paige portrays the role of "Jessie Gordon" at three different periods of life, first as a little girl romping about the nursery with Harry, the Vicar's son, then as a girl in her middle 'teens, and finally as a young lady whose experiences furnish much of the potent love interest of the story. James Morrison appears in the opposite role, and he, also, as Harry, the Vicar's son, gives three different characterizations, at three different ages.

Exhibitors Expect Big Year

MacMeekin, of Realart, Reports Prevalence of Optimism

PREDICTIONS that 1921 would prove one of the best years, if not the banner year in the history of motion pictures, are being justified, according to John N. MacMeekin, Realart's special representative, who has just returned to New York after a six months' tour of a large part of the United States. Mr. MacMeekin talked with exhibitors in the key cities he visited and found them practically united in the opinion that the present year would be an exceedingly prosperous one for the industry. Traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, Mr. MacMeekin obtained first hand information regarding the 1921 outlook.

"What impressed me particularly," said he yesterday, "was the optimistic attitude of exhibitors. This cheerful outlook is not confined to certain isolated localities, for my tour embraced key cities from one end of the country to the other.

"I spent some time in Kansas City and found local exhibitors in an optimistic frame of mind. Frank Newman, of the Newman theatre, was particularly cheerful over the outlook. Mr. Newman deprecated the suggestion of lowering admission prices. In his opinion that would be nothing less than folly. Sam Harding, of the Liberty theatre, also in Kansas City, expressed the same cheerful optimism over the business outlook generally.

"In Omaha, Nebraska, A. H. Blank, who controls a dozen or more theatres, said that his managers all report splendid business. He felt that the present season would shape up as a good one for motion pictures. And Realart, he told me, is proving one of his best bets for the year.

"Montana and Washington are, like the Middle West, in fine shape. Seattle alone has opened two new first run houses, the Blue Mouse and the Winter Garden. Both of them are playing to capacity business. John Hamrick has just secured the Realart Star Franchise for his Blue Mouse theatre. He, too, seems more than pleased with this year's outlook.

"To me, one of the best indications that this year is destined to be a big one for our industry is the fact that projects for needed new theatres can always find ready backing. The new theatres, I have observed, always open to big business and continue to play to capacity audiences.

"Denver, Colorado, is a close contender with Kansas City on optimism and progressiveness. It is reported that two new first run theatres are to be added to Denver's list in the next six months. That city is in excellent shape and motion pictures are certainly coming into their own.

"The same thing is true, I found, in Montana. Missoula, Billings and Great Falls, among others, are doing great business. Exhibitors in those towns are most optimistic, both as to the present and the coming season.

"Among other exhibitors with whom I talked regarding conditions was Stanley Chambers, of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas. Mr. Chambers is a Realart Star Franchise holder. 'Not only am I pleased with Realart,' said Mr. Chambers, 'but I always try to book them on their earliest release dates if possible.' Mr. Chambers also told me that he found business generally building up right along and said he could see no reason why this shouldn't be a happy year for the industry. With new theatres opening and the public's interest in pictures increasing it looked to him as though it would prove a banner season.

"This spirit of optimism and confidence is shared by H. E. Sherman of the Bee theatre, Albuquerque, New Mexico. In his estimation, 1921 will round out a record to be proud of.

"Buffalo is coming right along, too, as well as Chicago where the theatres are doing good business and exhibitors are confident that they will continue to do so.

"Out in Portland, Oregon, G. A. Metzger, of the Rivoli theatre, had practically the same story to tell. Better pictures, he felt, are bringing bigger crowds, and with so many important advances in the production of pictures, the industry, as he saw it, is enjoying a prosperity it has not known before. He, too, spoke of the building boom, referring to it as a sure sign that the appeal of motion pictures is widening."

Country Praising "Doug"

United Artists Declares "Mark of Zorro" is Scoring in All Sections

WORD-OF-MOUTH advertising to an enormous extent accompanies the presentation of Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro" in all sections of the country, according to a statement just issued from the headquarters of the United Artists Corporation. "The critics, the theatre owners and managers, the motion picture fans, have seemingly set themselves at the task of being 'committees of one' to go about and boost the picture," continues the statement from United Artists.

So tremendous has been the business this picture has done that there are but few exhibitors who have not extended their runs on the productions. In many cases exhibitors have set aside their standard policy which has been in existence since the inception of their business of never running a picture more than two, or three or four days, and have run this production for four, six and ten days instead. In one instance in California at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, the picture, booked for a week, ran an uninterrupted run to capacity business for a total of eight weeks.

In speaking of the picture to Mr. Abrams in a recent communication, R. G. Peltier, manager of the Bijou theatre, of Mount Clemons, Mich., he said: "I have played every Fairbanks picture that he has made, and I speak for my patrons as well as myself when I say that I consider 'The Mark of Zorro' by far the greatest picture in which Douglas ever appeared. It's a whole week's entertainment, jammed into eight reels of solid enjoyment, suitable for all ages and all classes. Business has been a little quiet, but I liked the methods you used in booking me this picture, and without even seeing it, I went right after it with the result that I turned what would have been a couple of bad business days into real profit. 'Zorro' will sure send you off with a flying start in 1921."

Third Associated Exhibitors Feature

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., wil offer their third big feature on Fe 27th, the date set for the release b Pathe of "What Women Will Do. Edward Jose's elaborate productio of a modern melodrama written b Charles A. Logue and presenting cast comprised of Anna Q. Nilsson Jane Jennings, Earl Metcalf, Alla Forrest, George Majeroni an Riley Hatch.

The precedent set by Associate Exhibitors in the magnificence o "The Riddle: Woman" and "Th Devil" is observed in the new play which is declared to be the most pretentious staging Mr. Jose has achieved. Two spectacular scenes that have been singled out for remark by those who have attended studio showings of "What Women Will Do" are the cabaret setting and the horse race.

Geo. D. Terry Endorses "The Broken Gate"

A letter received from George D. Terry of the Lincoln theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., by Hodkinson, reads as follows: "Let me congratulate you on your picture, 'The Broken Gate.' It is some feature. I very seldom talk about the features I show at any time, but 'The Broken Gate' certainly is worthy of praise. Sincerely yours,

"GEO. D. TERRY."

"The Broken Gate" is a J. L. Frothingham production.

ON few of the attractions that it has ever released has Robertson-Cole received anything like the number of favorable comments as on "The Stealers," William Christy Cabanne's picture which is playing all over the country, announced that company.

Spontaneous praise continues to reach Robertson-Cole, telling of the appeal on this picture and its entertainment qualities. All sorts of audiences appreciate "The Stealers" because it delves into a phase of human existence which is of interest to everyone. From houses catering to the highest types of audiences, down to the humblest theatres in the country. "The Stealers" is proving an excellent attraction.

Two scenes from Paramount releases: At left, a "shot" from the George Fitzmaurice production, "Paying the Piper;" at right, a view from "The Frontier of the Stars," starring Thomas Meighan

Current Paramount Releases

PARAMOUNT presented on its release schedule for January 30 feature-films directed by two of its special producers—the George Fitzmaurice production, "Paying the Piper," and the Charles Maigne production, "The Frontier of the Stars," starring Thomas Meighan.

A new screen luminary sheds lustrous light in "Paying the Piper." She is Dorothy Dickson, the Chicago girl who took Broadway by storm through her dancing, singing and acting in "Oh, Boy!" and "Lassie" and danced her way into the favor of New York society at fashionable entertainments with her husband, Carl Hyson. In "Paying the Piper," Miss Dickson makes her first screen appearance, and it is said that the debut is a most auspicious one.

"Paying the Piper" was written by Ouida Bergere, and featured with Miss Dickson in the cast are Alma Tell, George Fawcett and Rod LaRocque. Other well-known players also seen are Katherine Emmett, Reginald Denny and Robert Schable.

In this, her latest screen story, Miss Bergere presents characters typical of the monied classes of New York, persons who believe that everything worth-while may be obtained with money, and who ignore all the real things of life. How they lose their wealth and are regenerated when they are forced to put a real value on love, friendship and other human qualities makes a picture which Paramount claims has a universal appeal. It is, in fact, a companion picture to "On With the Dance," the first Fitzmaurice special production for Paramount, which Miss Bergere adapted from Michael Morton's play and which proved one of the biggest successes of Paramount's 1919-20 series. The production is said to have been dressed up with unusual lavishness and the photography by Arthur Miller is of high grade.

Thomas Meighan himself was responsible, in a way, for Albert Payson Terhune's story, "The Frontier of the Stars," being filmed by Paramount, for when he read the story when it came out serially in All-Story Weekly he immediately requested that it be purchased and that he be starred in it. So it was given into the capable hands of Charles Maigne to produce, with wholly satisfying results.

The story, which abounds in human interest, is laid on the Lower East Side of New York. Mr. Meighan has the role of Buck Leslie, a gangster, who is mixed up in a fight and in trying to escape from a Bowery detective runs into Hilda Shea, a cripple who has spent most of her life in a wheel chair on the roof of a tenement. The ensuing events are amusing, exciting and pathetic and through them all runs a love story of great appeal.

Faire Binney plays Hilda, the little cripple, and the supporting company includes Alphonz Ethier, Edward Ellis, Gus Weinberg and Florence Johns.

"Old Guard" Branch Is Founded on Coast

The Old Guard was the designating title selected by the recently organized club of "old-time Vitagraphers" at its regular monthly dinner which was held last Monday evening. At this same meeting the election of officers took place and as it is an association of motion picture men it was decided the officers should be known by a name similar to that applied to officers of a producing company instead of the usual titles. Those selected to guide the organization for the coming year were: Anders Randolf, Director; Harry Morey, L. Roger Lytton and William Humphrey, Assistant Directors; Ray Gallagher, Scenario Editor; C. Graham Baker, Associate Editor; Edward Montagne, the Heavy; Eugene Mullin, Location Man; Frank Loomis, Studio Manager; Don Bartlett and Walter Bonyan, Assistant Studio Managers. This was the largest of the three meetings so far held. At the first dinner in November there were twenty-three charter members—at this last gathering the number had reached a total of fifty.

Out in California a West Coast Branch of "The Old Guard" has been formed and a telegram of greeting announced the fact that they had already attained a membership of twenty-five.

Alice Lake Takes Snow Scenes in Sierras

By way of innuring herself to the rigors of the trip she later is to make to the Arctic circle in the course of acting the stellar role in "The Woman Who Went Away," a forthcoming Metro special production, Alice Lake this week is at Truckee, Calif., for the purpose of doing such snow scenes as can be photographed there.

Miss Lake's presence in the mountain town, now embedded in from eight to ten feet of the snow of the Sierras, is coincident with the stay of May Allison there for winter scenes of "Big Game," that star's production to follow "Extravagance," her next picture.

Goldwyn Planning Sales Drive

UNDER the direction of A. S. Aronson, recently elected vice-president and general sales-manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, the Goldwyn sales organization operating from twenty-two branch exchanges is keyed up for an energetic sales drive on the winter and spring releases of this company. The confidence of the Goldwyn sales organization is based on the strength of the pictures which have been placed on the market during the past few months, declares Goldwyn officials.

"The fourth year pictures, in dollars and cents, are proving their high box-office value beyond question," says a statement from the Goldwyn headquarters. "Reports show an unparalleled number of extended runs, 'Earthbound,' 'Madame X,' 'The Penalty,' 'The Branding Iron' and 'The North Wind's Malice,' taking the lead in the length of engagements and the total of returns.

"The Goldwyn Company is bending every energy toward turning out the best pictures that can be conceived by the foremost authors of the country. These, it is confidently expected, will meet the need for genuine feature attractions that will warrant longer runs.

"Exchange managers have invited exhibitors to compare the pictures that Goldwyn is now offering with any product on the market, from a box-office as well as an artistic standpoint, and the result has been a great number of new bookings," continues the Goldwyn statement. "Tom Moore in Rupert Hughes' 'Hold Your Horses,' is accorded a place second to no comedy of recent months, not even 'Scratch My Back,' 'Godless Men' is being ranked at the top of the dramatic class; 'The Concert,' made famous on the stage by Leo Ditrichstein, is high comedy of the finest caliber, and more equally strong dramas and comedies are either at the exchanges or scheduled to reach them at an early date."

An authorized list of branch managers, who will supervise the Goldwyn distribution service for exhibitors follows: Arthur Lucas, Atlanta, Ga.; D. J. Horgan, Boston, Mass.; George A. Hickey, Buffalo, N. Y.; Cecil E. Maberry, Chicago, Ill; Jack Stewart, Cincinnati, Ohio; W. J. Kimes, Cleveland, Ohio; L. B. Remy, Dallas, Texas; Ben Fish, Denver, Colo.; J. E. Gladys Walton puts up a fight in "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," a Universal feature

Eva Novak Begins Feature

"Girl and the Goose" is Put Into Production at Universal City

"THE GIRL AND THE GOOSE," the story written by Emma Bell Clifton especially for Eva Novak, Universal star, has just been put into production at Universal City under the direction of Fred Leroy Granville.

In this story Miss Novak appears as the most attractive chorus girl in a small time musical comedy which goes on the rocks in a provincial town. One of the "props" carried by the show is a goose to which the girl has become attached, and the awkward bird is her sole possession when the troupe disbands.

Amateur night in a vaudeville theatre gives the chorus girl a chance to win a prize, thanks to the faithful goose, and the money thus received enables her to seek a farm house, where she hopes to spend a restful summer till the theatrical season opens again.

Not far from the farm is the country estate of the Vaughans, whose chief worry is the son of the family who labors under the conviction that money was made to spend on having a good time. How the chorus girl meets the rich young man and how, under her wholesome influence, he begins to see life from a different angle, give rise to a series of situations that interests, amuses and occasionally thrills.

Fred Leroy Granville, who has just returned from London, where he produced two photoplays with Peggy Hyland, has some unique ideas to introduce in this feature, and Miss Novak's support includes Geoffrey Webb, Frank Braidwood, Mayre Hall, Norman Hammond, Dorothy Hagan, Calvert Carter, Margaret Mann, James O'Neill and Evelyn McCoy.

Goldwyn's "Concert" Read

Prints of Former Ditrichstein Comedy in All Exchanges Soon

ANOTHER picture that promises to take a high place among the comedies released by Goldwyn during the past six months is "The Concert," an adaptation of the play that supplied Leo Ditrichstein with one of the best roles of his stage career, and was the sensational success of several seasons in New York and on the road. The picture was recently completed at the Culver City studios under the direction of Victor Schertzinger and prints soon will be in all of the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges.

At a pre-view of the picture, attended by a critical audience in which a number of the authors now engaged in writing original stories for Goldwyn, were included, the production was given a high rating in the matters of story, presentation, acting, settings and titling.

The cast of "The Concert" is comprised of players suited to fill their roles. Lewis S. Stone, who portrays Ditrichstein's character of the Maestro, is known to followers of the stage and screen. Myrtle Stedman, long a favorite with picture audiences, plays the pianist's wife, while Mabel Julienne Scott is the foolish young woman captivated by the musician. The husband she deserts is presented with finely humorous effect by Raymond Hatton. Others who contribute to the comedy are Gertrude Astor, Russ Powell, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Frances Hall and Louie Cheung.

The list of successful comedies produced by Goldwyn is a long one. It includes such sound financial successes as "Scratch My Back," "It's a Great Life," "Honest Hutch," "Bunty Pulls the Strings" and "Cupid, the Cowpuncher." From a box office as well as an artistic standpoint, it is confidently asserted that "The Concert" will prove to be on a par with the best of these.

Filming "Peck's Bad Boy"

Irving Lesser Pleased With Work of Jackie Coogan in Leading Role

WITH the return of Irving M. M. Lesser from New York, where he has spent the past few weeks in behalf of his Western Pictures exploitation projects, he at once delved into all matters pertaining to his initial production in which Jackie Coogan, the "kid" of Charlie Chaplin's six-reel special, appears.

Mr. Lesser, in company with the Peck studio executives, witnessed the running of all scenes filmed during his absence and was highly enthused over their merits. "I thoroughly feel," said Mr. Lesser, "that this rural story will be one of the most, if not the most novel feature seen on the screen. It will carry everybody back to childhood again and the capital support that Jackie Coogan has in the story have created their characterizations to such perfection that they more than live their respective roles."

During the five weeks Lesser has been away, Director Sam Wood managed to rush production to the point where it will be but a very short time before the picture is entirely completed. The recent accident to young Coogan has, in no manner affected his work before the camera and, according to all connected with the Lesser organization, he seems to have more ambition and display more cleverness than ever before.

Mr. Lesser states that the subtitles that will be meshed into the scenes of the Peck film will be very novel and will be written by some of the most expert people in that line on the coast. Every inch of the five thousand or more feet that make up the story will be gauged with respect to comedy situations and laughs and no dragged out scenes will be found throughout the entirety. Lesser states that the "Peck's Bad Boy" subject will take everybody back to their childhood days and bring back youthful recollections.

Jackie Coogan as he looks in "Peck's Bad Boy," now being produced by Irving Lesser

There is a strong possibility of Lesser making a second rural comedy production along "Peck's Bad Boy" lines as soon as the first is marketed. All of the late Colonel George Peck's novels have been purchased by Lesser so he will have ample material with which to work.

Aiming to Set New Mark

This, Says DeMille, Is Reason for So Many Stars in His New Cast

"WHY have so many stars in the cast of a single picture?"

That question has been asked of Cecil B. DeMille many times following the announcement of the truly stellar cast of his current production, "The Affairs of Anatol," suggested by Schnitzler's play of that name. This cast includes Wallace Reid, Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Kosloff, Monte Blue, Raymond Hatton, Dorothy Cumming, Julia Faye, Guy Oliver and a number of other notable screen players.

"So-called all-star casts have been common in the recent past," says Mr. DeMille, "but to the best of my knowledge the cast assembled for 'The Affairs of Anatol' sets a new mark in this respect.

"It is precisely for this reason that it was done—to set a new mark in motion picture production.

"Stars achieve stardom because of their ability to play certain roles better than anyone else," points out the Paramount producer. "By making a careful selection from the field of real stardom it is possible to get the best possible actor or actress for each individual screen character. I think this has been accomplished in this production.

"This move was not made by whim—it was dictated by sound business. The public is ready for the real super-production, to use a much-abused phrase. This super-production must surpass previous marks in every department including the cast, of course. Hence the grouping of this considerable number of stars in a single production.

"Today it is not uncommon for a picture to play for six or eight weeks in the best theatres of the country. This of course is true of only the best pictures. But it marks the tendency of the times and the attitude of the public. This may be summed up as follows: If the picture is worthy, the public will support it for an indefinite period of time. The period of its popularity is entirely dependent upon its quality."

Gladys Walton Starts New Production

Gladys Walton, Universal's youngest star, who was so well liked in "Pink Tights," "Risky Business" and "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," has begun work on her fourth stellar vehicle, "The Bobbed Squab," an original story of New York, from the pen of John Colton. Rollin Sturgeon, who claims credit for discovering this clever little actress, is directing the production.

Florence Turner appears as a wealthy spinster; Fred Malatesta is seen as an Italian opera singer and Ruth Royce as his sweetheart; the part of a chauffeur is played by Ed. Hearn and other good parts are in the hands of Frank Norcross, Richard Norton, Helen Bruneau, John Coff, Muriel Godfrey Turner and Lydia Yeamans Titus

Canyon Press Books Are Ready for Exhibitors

In order to fill the orders from the exchanges handling the Franklyn Farnum series of six westerns, the Canyon Pictures Corporation is distributing on the state right basis elaborate press books on the forthcoming pictures have just been issued.

"The Fighting Stranger" and "The Hunger of the Blood" have press books which were designed and written to present the pictures to the exhibitor in a manner which will allow him to decide upon its merits, and at the same time to supply him with a liberal allowances of press matter, cuts, "ads," and practicable exploitation suggestions.

"Love Light" Bringing Fine Reports

A statement from the headquarters of United Artists announces that reports from all sections tell of Mary Pickford's "The Love Light" doing "tremendous business everywhere." In Los Angeles, the California theatre, departing from its customary policy of one-week runs, retained it for a second week because of the capacity business done the first week.

"The Love Light" in Los Angeles will also have a second run of three weeks at the Miller theatre, which will be followed by a third run of two weeks at the Garrick Theatre.

Universal's Chiefs on Coast

Augurs Bigger Production Schedule Says Home-Office

FOR the first time since the opening of Universal City, eight years ago, both Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president —the two men at the helm of the film corporation, are at Universal's West Coast studios together. It marks the first time Mr. Cochrane has been to Universal City in several years.

The presence of these executives on the West Coast augurs great things for Universal's coming period of productive activities, it was announced at the Universal home office upon Mr. Cochrane's departure for the coast, last week. It indicates, says the home office, that Universal, instead of entering upon any dimunition of production, is planning upon a larger picture-making schedule, in preparation for next season's film needs. In the opinion of the Universal heads, next fall will see the moving picture business in a new prosperity peak.

Mr. Cochrane timed his arrival in Los Angeles to correspond with Mr. Laemmle's arrival from Cuba, where the Universal chief has been watching the work of Eddie Polo's serial company at the present filming a new serial in Cuba and the West Indies. The Universal vice-president was accompanied West by his family, and intends to remain at Los Angeles for a considerable length of time, assisting Mr. Laemmle in supervising the production work necessitated by several new companies and half a dozen new directors. Mr. Laemmle will remain at Universal City all winter. He has taken a house in Los Angeles, and has engaged tutors for his children, Rosabelle and Julius Laemmle.

The presence of Mr. Cochrane in California marks a new departure in the management of Universal affairs. Hereafter, upon his return to New York, either Mr. Laemmle or Mr. Cochrane will be at Universal City nearly all the time. When Mr. Laemmle is in the East, Mr. Cochrane will be in the West, and vice versa. This will absolutely assure complete accord between the production end of the Universal organization, and the executive and distributing ends.

It is expected that both Mr. Laemmle and his chief aid will be together at Universal City during the completion of the next big Universal-Jewell production, now approaching its final phases—the costly and elaborate photo-drama of Monte Carlo. "Foolish Wives," written and directed by Erich Von Stroheim. This picture is said to be the biggest thing by far ever attempted by Universal. One million dollars is being invested by Universal in the new Stroheim film, declare Universal officials The sets alone are said to have cost in the neighborhood of half a million. In order to reproduce Monte Carlo exactly, full size reproductions of many of the buildings of the famous Mediterranean resort have been constructed—some at Universal City and some on Monterey Bay, California.

Experts have pronounced the continuity for "Foolish Wives" the most perfect ever written and to be far in advance of those prepared for "Blind Husbands" and "The Devil's Pass Key," Stroheim's previous successes, master craftsman in the art of building photoplays. The Universal heads are determined that the production of this picture shall receive the greatet possible care and attention, even to the cutting of the last foot of film. At present the entire technical and advisory staff at Universal City is concentrated upon it.

Refutes "Paralysis" Rumors

First National Tells of Work Being Done in 8 Big Plants

IN a statement just issued Associated First National Pictures refutes the story recently circulated that a "paralysis of production activity on the West Coast" was being experienced at the present time.

"The reading public has been told that 50,000 actors had been laid off, that scores of studios had been closed—that, in short, chaos and confusion was the order of the day in Filmland," reads the statement from First National's headquarters.

"In direct refutation of these ridiculous and misleading assertions, the following summary of the work now being carried forward in eight of the leading independent studios in Southern California should be convincing. Representative as these producing units are, the experienced film man may safely assume that a like amount of normal activity prevails all through the producing areas of Los Angeles and Hollywood. Each one of the productions referred to below will be released as a First National attraction.

"Marshall Neilan's latest production 'Bob Hampton of Placer' required the services of 2,000 people for the big scenes depicting the last stand of General Custer against the Sioux. A dirigible blimp was used in photographing the action for these big scenes, which extended over miles of wild country. The cast includes James Kirkood in the title role; Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley and Noah Beery.

"Katherine MacDonald's present vehicle, 'Stranger Than Fiction,' written by Charles Richman, with A. S. Le Vino on the scenario end, is employing a large amount of talent. Included in the big scenes are: the flight of an airplane from the top of a down town office building, never before successfully performed, the replica of a big amateur theatrical performance, and a big Chinese restaurant situated in the night-life district.

"Charles Ray's 'Scrap Iron,' which is just being completed, is an adaptation by Finis Fox of Charles Van Loan's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name. The cast supporting Mr. Ray in 'Scrap Iron' includes Vera Stedman, Lydia Knott, Tom Wilson, Tom O'Brien, Stanton Heck, Charles Wheelock and Claude Berkeley. The direction is being supervised by the star, assisted by Al. Ray, his cousin.

"Anita Stewart's current production, 'The Tornado,' employs several hundred extras in the scenes showing the destructive work of a Jamaica hurricane, which sweeps away an entire village. The principals in Miss Stewart's support include Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail, William V. Mong, Grace Morse, and little Richard Headrick, who appeared in 'The Woman in His House.' Anthony Paul Kelly, scenarioist for "Way Down East,' adapted 'The Tornado' for the screen from an original work by Jane Murfin, author of 'Lilac Time.'

"King Vidor is now concluding 'The Sky Pilot,' the Ralph Connor story, which he is directing for Catherine Curtis Productions. The cast includes many players who are of star calibre, and every principal has been featured in more than one production. They are: Colleen Moore, John Bowers, David Butler, James Corrigan, Kathleen Kirkham, Donald McDonald and Harry Todd.

"Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven are bringing to a close their comedy production of her career, 'The Girl in the Taxi.' In the cafe 'sets' playing an important part in this production, hundreds of actors were employed by Director Lloyd Ingraham. The principals include Mr. and Mrs. de Haven, King Baggot, Grace Cunard, Leo White, Tom McGuire, Lincoln Plummer, Otis Harlan, and Freya Sterling.

"In Sidney Franklin's adaptation of Andrew Soutar's 'Courage,' now under production, the scenario calls for many scenes depicting the workings of a huge English foundry. To get these scenes Mr. Franklin secured the use of the Baker Iron Works, in Los Angeles, and every Sunday for the past month he has taken a large aggregation of players, including Naomi Childers, Alec. B. Francis, Lloyd Whitlock, Sam de Grass, Adolph Menjou, Lionel Belmore and hundreds of extras to the plant to get the required atmosphere."

"Forbidden Fruit" Has Broken Record

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S newest Paramount production, "Forbidden Fruit," which opened its New York pre-release engagement at the Rivoli theatre Sunday broke all records for receipts on the opening day, exceeding the amount grossed by John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the previous Sunday record holder, by $584, declares a statement from the Paramount headquarters in New York.

On Monday the mark reached was just under the figures for Washington's Birthday and Labor Day last year, it is stated, both of which holidays fell on Monday. Paramount states that the DeMille picture is certain to break all previous Rivoli records for a total week's attendance.

Hyman Reports Ray's Release a Success

In the opinion of Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, "Nineteen and Phyllis" is the very greatest production in which Charles Ray has ever appeared. This is the star's third independently produced picture for First National, in which he is presented by Arthur S. Kane.

In a letter to Arthur S. Kane, Mr. Hyman says:

"Without reverting to the vernacular of the press agent, I don't know how I can give you an impression of the furore Ray created in a week's run at this theatre. Matinee and evening performances were crowded. It was a pleasure to witness the Strand audiences responding to the irresistible humor, both in the theatre and at the box-office."

Next Christie Special Is "Man vs. Woman"

Christie Film asks that the following correction be published. The title of the next Special Christie Comedy is to be "Man vs. Woman." This will be released as the next in the series of comedies handled through Educational exchanges, and will feature Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore with a special cast.

"Fighting Fate" on Way

William Duncan and Edith Johnson Finishing 15th Episode of Serial

WILLIAM DUNCAN and Edith Johnson are now finishing the fifteenth chapter of their new production, "Fighting Fate." The earlier chapters have been praised by exhibitors as something novel and original, and the two chapter-play co-stars were put on their mettle and deliberately slowed up their production speed so as to make the most of each separate detail in the filming, declares statement from Vitagraph's headquarters.

The explosion of a large houseboat recently rocked Balboa Bay and gave winter resorters in the big hotels from Long Beach south a great thrill. Thousands packed the shores after the explosion. Several other exciting water scenes for the late chapters of "Fighting Fate" were filmed along the prettiest spots of the Southern California coast.

"Fighting Fate" is the most expensive production ever made by William Duncan. Feature-length methods have prevailed throughout the production of this chapter-play, and all settings are of the same quality as those of the biggest feature pictures, it is declared. The star, who also directs his pictures, is confident that within one year the chapter-play will have showings in practically every high-class theatre in the land. He calls attention to the fact that the highest-class American magazines run chaptered installments of stories.

"In "Fighting Fate" there are plenty of thrills, but every one in a logical sequence, declares the Vitagraph statement, and there is no cheapening of the picture by the haling in of any purely mechanical stunts. Edith Johnson is a co-star with Mr. Duncan for the first time in "Fighting Fate." Larry Richardson, Frank Weed and West have important parts in "Fighting Fate."

Brandt's Successful Trip

Trip Proves to Independent Man That Depression is Exaggerated

"WITH the whole country in a position where people are inclined to retrench on buying until conditions become better, and the moving picture business according to some reports in a semi-dormant state due to over production it has been demonstrated that when you have a good box office attraction no matter what the business conditions may be, people will patronize and buy," states Joe Brandt of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation who has just returned from a five weeks' business trip through the middle West and South.

This opinion of Mr. Brandt's is borne out by the number of contracts he secured on George H. Davis' super-feature "Isobel or The Trail's End" which was recently so successfully presented at "The Strand Theatre" New York.

Mr. Brandt declared that people all over the country were inclined to view things in a pessimistic light and that he personally considered it a form of economic hysteria. He added that the exhibitor could do a great deal to bring about a normal condition by careful selection of pictures and a campaign of optimism on his screen.

Lucy Cotton Signed by Metro Pictures

Miss Lucy Cotton has been signed by the Metro Pictures Corporation through George L. Clarke, of 145 West 45th St., N. Y. C., to appear in their forthcoming production.

Ohio Censor Commends DeMille's Picture

Maud Murray Miller, who has been a member of the Ohio State Board of Censors for many years, and is now its chairman, is the latest to express her praise of Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount production, "Forbidden Fruit," according to a statement from the Paramount headquarters.

"I really consider Mr. DeMille's 'Forbidden Fruit' a glorious picture—the most wonderful from every angle that I have ever viewed. It was a story filled with surprises and heart interest and the Cinderella scene is the most gorgeous ever presented. It is refreshingly clean and wholesome. The only eliminations ordered were trivial—less than ten feet out of the 8,000 offered, a mere flash on the screen in two places."

Dorothy Wood to Lead in Mermaid Comics

Dorothy Wood, a New York girl, has been selected as the new leading woman in Mermaid comedies, released through Educational, opposite Jimmie Adams. She replaced Elinor Lynn, and has already started to work on a two-reeler which has not been named.

Two years ago, Stuart Paton, Universal director, persuaded her to appear in a feature on the Coast. Then she was engaged by Fred Fishback, who was looking for a blonde beauty to appear in his comedies. Following this she appeared opposite Hoot Gibson in Western

Motorcycling in Grand Canyon in Fox News

Nothing on wheels ever had reached the bottom of the Grand Canyon of Colorado until the other day, when John Hogg, an adventurous spirit, got there on a motorcycle, declares a statement from the Fox Film headquarters. He took with him a Fox News cameraman to tell the picture story—and a thrilling story it is, according to William Fox.

Motoring to the bottom of the Grand Canyon sounds like a sudden affair. There was nothing sudden about John Hogg's feat. It took him four days and nights to cover 22 miles; and when you see the pictures in Fox News you will understand why.

New "Passion" Prologue for Coast Opening

Interest in the opening or the Ambassador theatre in Los Angeles, which will take place on February 5, has been enhanced since it has become known that S. Barrett McCormick, managing director, is working on a prelude which will contain a novelty never before used on stage or screen which he confidently expects will be a sensation. National production starring Pola Negri, will be the feature production used for the opening of the house, and beyond the fact that the prelude is based upon the picture the nature of it has been kept a profound secret.

Critics Still Praise "Great Redeemer"

Laudatory comments from the press, public and the clergy upon the recent Metro release, Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Great Redeemer," which have been flowing in a steady stream into the Metro home offices, either directly or by way of the exchanges, indicate that this picture continues to take the country by storm.

H. H. Van Loan wrote the story of "The Great Redeemer." It was adapted by Jack Gilbert and Jules Furthman, photographed by Charles J. Van Enger, and directed by Clarence Brown, under the personal supervision of Maurice Tourneur.

Press-Book Available on Realart Release

"Unusual stunts make the best exploitation and are often the least expensive," is the message conveyed in Realart's press-book for "All Soul's Eve." The exploitation section of the press book offers a campaign to put over the picture. This includes newspaper tie-ups, mailing list suggestions, unusual stunts to arouse public curiosity, prologues, lobby displays and other features.

Holubar Film Given Premier

Paterson House Presents "Man, Woman, Marriage"

"MAN, WOMAN, MARRIAGE," starring Dorothy Phillips, the Allan Holubar contribution to Associated First National Pictures' first group of Big Five productions established a city record for attendance during its week's premiere at the Regent theatre in Paterson, N. J., declares a statement from First National headquarters. In the eighteen performances of the spectacular production in the New Jersey theatre in the six days of its showing the box-office registered an actual paid attendance of 31,741 people, it is declared.

The present previous record of attendance for the Regent was 31,198 during a six days' showing on a production. Special exploitation was used in establishing this earlier record, according to the First National statement, and nearly twice the amount of money spent in advertising as was used on "Man Woman, Marriage" in bringing the attendance up to the figure which falls short of the record established by the Allan Holubar production by over 500 admissions.

The advertising given the Big Five production started with a full page in the theatre program for the full week preceding the opening. The newspaper advertising started on the Wednesday preceding opening and consisted of eight or ten small teaser ads each one column and varying in size between an inch and an inch and a half. This same advertising was repeated on Thursday, and on Friday display advertising two column six inches in size was used in all of the papers. Saturday the space was increased to quarter page size. A special rotogravure section was used in the Sunday Chronicle, two pages of which were devoted to the production, and in addition a half page of display was used in the theatre section. The picture opened the following day and the last large display advertising was used in the one evening paper on Monday, a quarter page in size. For the week of the run small two-inch one-column readers were used in all of the newspapers.

The outdoor advertising consisted of the regular 100 one-sheet stands that the theatre always employs. In addition to this Manager Charles L. Dooley employed ten twenty-four sheet stands. His first billing on these were special printed yellow and black sheets merely announcing:

"The world's greatest picture is coming to Paterson. Watch this space for announcement of dates."

He left these in place until five days before the opening when they were replaced with the special twenty-four sheet posters prepared by M. Leone Bracker, the noted illustrator.

Two thousand tack cards featuring the mile-stone insignia of the production which distinguished all the newspaper advertising. The special facsimile lobby display of the seven Bracker posters prepared especially for the production completed the advertising given the picture.

Because the Paterson showing was in line with the policy of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to determine the actual box-office values of production before a rental value is affixed to them, Mr. Dooley was not permitted to make capital of the fact that the showing at the Regent theatre was the world premiere of the Holubar production, declares the First National statement, and the advertising was based only upon facts that are available to any exhibitor.

Mr. Dooley's advertising appropriation for the production was $500 and he turned back $22 of this after all bills had been settled. The Regent is a 2,200-seat house, and the admission prices are from 10 to 30 cents.

"Man, Woman Marriage," the third of the First National Big Five productions to be shown to the public is following the precedent of its two predecessors in the group in smashing attendance records. "Passion," starring Pola Negri, the first of the Big Five to be released, is not resting on its laurels gained by establishing a world's record for drawing power at the Capitol theatre in New York but is still breaking house records wherever shown, declares First National officials. It opened at the Plaza theatre, a usual four change a week house in New York, for a five day run on Sunday, January 30, and the sale of tickets had to be stopped at 8:30 o'clock due to a sell out on all avaliable seating and standing room in the theatre for the evening.

"The Kid," Charlie Chaplin's six reels of joy, is starting on its third week in the Randolph theatre in Chicago, with the capacity of the theatre the only limit to the attendance.

"Fifteen Years of Progress"

Pathe Traces Career of Veteran Showman of Canada

IN a statement just issued from the Pathe home-office, the career of L. E. Ouimet, president of Special Film Import, Ltd., is traced with a view to set forth "fifteen years of progress in the motion-picture industry" and show how one wise showman anticipated by a great margin of time some of the present-day methods now used in the management of motion-picture theatres of the better class. The Pathe statement follows:

"Fifteen years ago this January, the first theatre devoted exclusively to motion pictures in Canada was opened, in Montreal, by Mr. L. E. Ouimet, now president of the Specialty Film Import Limited. After having been two years as motion picture operator with the Kinematograph Company, showing pictures on a vaudeville program at Sohmer Park or between the acts in the regular vaudeville theatres, and on the streets for advertising purposes, Mr. Ouimet took over the 'Porier Hall,' originally built as a vaudeville theatre, but at the time being operated as a Dance Hall.

"Mr. Ouimet was confident that there was no limit to the development of motion pictures and he was then already known by the general public for his association with this new branch of entertainment. It was this popularity which suggested the idea of calling this, the first Canadian moving picture, 'the Ouimetoscope.' Mr. Ouimet's ideas at that time were far-sighted; and imbibed with the confidence of the great future which lay behind motion pictures, this theatre was operated and run on the principles of what the theatres are becoming today—the best pictures obtainable, reserved seats at both matinee and evening, with prices ranging from ten to forty cents. From the openign day, the Ouimetoscope was a success; and from week to week the audiences increased, making it evident that there was a demand for this form of entertainment.

"The accumulation of films and the rapid development of the popularity of motion pictures, saw Mr. Ouimet open an exchange for the circulation of films in the fall of 1906. In December of the same year, this pioneer of the motion picture industry in Canada, purchased the Ouimetoscope property for $100,000 and in the following May closed the Hall and immediately proceeded with the erection of a real motion picture theatre at a cost of $50,000 (valued today at $300,000 which was to be the first theatre erected for the sole purpose of the exhibition of motion pictures in North America. This new Ouimetoscope theatre was opened on the 7th of August, 1907, and still remains as one of the most up-to-date motion picture theatres on the Continent."

A severe attack of illness about this time obliged Mr. Ouimet to abandon the picture business until 1914, says the Pathe statement, which continues as follows:

"In December of 1914, Mr. Ouimet signed a contract with Charles Pathe, the veteran pioneer of motion pictures, for the distribution of Pathe Films in Quebec and the Martitime Provinces. In April, 1915, the success which had rewarded his re-entry into the motion picture business enabled him to obtain an extension of this contract to cover the Province of Ontario, and in the following May this contract was extended to include the Western Provinces, and so constituted the present formation of the Dominion-wide organization of the Specialty Film Import Limited, which now stretches from Coast to Coast. From an initial distribution of 2000 feet of film per week, Specialty Film Import, Limited, now distributes an average of 65,000 feet each week.

Ray Production Due Feb. 14

Release of "The Old Swimmin' Hole" to Be Delayed One Week

FIRST NATIONAL has changed the release date for Charles Ray's next great picture, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," in which Arthur S. Kane will present the star, from February 7th to February 14th. Even though this adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's best-loved heart-interest poem can be shown in comparatively few places on that date, it is peculiarly fitting that the release should be set for St. Valentine's Day.

When Ezra slips candy hearts, freighted with such tender love messages as "I Love You," "Be Mine," and "Kiss Me," into the hands of the fascinating but fickle Myrtle, and Esther hides a big red apple in Ezra's desk, there is something strongly suggestive of the St. Valentine spirit. Also, this is the picture in which the star springs a great production surprise, and surprises always have been appropriate to this holiday.

The candy and apple incidents are characteristic of the whole picture, which is a succession of scenes from the every-day life of the normal American village boy and girl. Mr. Ray described the spirit of the piece exactly when somebody asked him how he acted the part of the mischievous, barefoot Ezra. "I don't act it," he said. "I simply live over again many scenes of my boyhood. It seems only yesterday that I was going down the meadow path to the old creek near the home where I was raised. And the little schoolhouse came back to me vividly as if I were still making life a burden to the teacher."

In selecting his favorite poem, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," for picturization, Mr. Ray insisted that the film must adhere closely to the time and locale of the original, and Bernard McConville, who made the adaptation, and Joseph DeGrasse who directed the production followed instructions to the letter.

"A Small Town Idol" Opens

Sennett's Associated Producers' Comedy Drama Scores on Coast

"A SMALL TOWN IDOL," Mack Sennett's first contribution to the output of Associated Producers, Inc., of which he is a member, opened to an immediate public and box office success at the New Mission theatre, Los Angeles, last week, according to word received from the Coast.

The following telegram from Harry David, managing director of the Mission, to F. B. Warren, general manager of distribution for Associated Producers, indicates the production's success.

"Mack Sennett's 'Small Town Idol' positively the biggest thing that ever played Los Angeles. No question that it is Sennett's greatest picture. Our gross business week ending tonight, $13,950. This seems unbelievable, taking into consideration that Mission theatre has only 880 seats."

The newspaper critics of Los Angeles gave great praise to the production. Florence Lawrence, writing in the Los Angeles Examiner, said:

"'A Small Town Idol' is an instant success. Huge audiences filled the Mission theatre yesterday to greet Mr. Sennett's picture. He has eliminated entirely the proverbial slapstick and has evoked one of the most amusing films of his career."

"Hardly an angle of melodramatic art escapes unscathed," says Guy Price, in the Evening Herald. "Melodrama, farce, polite comedy, comedy drama revue, spectacle and plot are all there. It is Sennett's first big picture since 'Mickey.'"

Beban Special in the South

Has Scored Heavily in South and Is Now Headed for "Windy City"

"ONE MAN IN A MILLION," the George Beban production which is being released by Robertson-Cole, has turned its course Northwestward, after a sweep through the South. It is heading toward Chicago which it will reach soon after the middle of February, and where more than three full weeks will be played, announces Robertson-Cole.

Starting at Newark, N. J., where its national premier was marked by the personal appearance of Mr. Beban, who wrote, directed and acts the leading role in the production, "One Man In A Million" went to Atlanta, Ga., after which it went to Nashville, Tenn., where it played at the Orpheum Theatre, controlled by the Crescent Amusement Company. Its next engagement was at the Strand Theatre, Louisville, of which Col. Fred Levy is proprietor.

Intervening between this engagement and the Chicago runs will be stops in Indianapolis, Detroit, Cleveland and Milwaukee. These engagements are all included in the $100,000 worth of contracts which Mr. Beban had obtained for the picture at the time he arranged for its national distribution with Robertson-Cole. "In each city where 'One Man In A Million' has been shown so far it has proved a sensation," declares a statement from Robertson-Cole headquarters.

While in Nashville, Tenn., Mr. Beban, who is appearing with "One Man in a Million" for a limited tour, was invited to speak before the state legislature. In reporting this one of the Nashville newspapers said:

"There will be no necessity for censorship or closing on Sundays when the little producers, the parasites of the trade, are wiped out, and we get clean, wholesome pictures," declared George Beban, noted motion picture actor, in a talk to the joint session of the state legislature at 12:30 o'clock today at the capital. Mr. Beban is making a coast-to-coast tour of the larger cities in the country, making appeals for better, cleaner motion pictures in connection with the showing of his picture, 'One Man In A Million,' a featured attraction today and tomorrow for matinee and night performances at the Orpheum."

New Priscilla Dean Story

"The Conflict," by Clarence Kelland, Is Purchased by Universal

UNIVERSAL has acquired the screen rights to "The Conflict," a novel by Clarence Budington Kelland, now running in the Red Book, and hailed as one of the best stories of the year. It will be used as a starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean, the star of "Outside the Law" and "The Virgin of Stamboul." Miss Dean is now being starred in "False Colors," by Edwina Levin.

Universal paid a good stiff price for "The Conflict" it was stated by Mr. John C. Brownell, scenario chief for the big film company. Negotiations regarding the purchase extended over considerable time.

"As soon as I read the opening installment of "The Conflict" in the Red Book," said Mr. Brownell, "I knew that it was what we call a Priscilla Dean story. I lost no time getting in touch with Mrs. C. C. Wilkening, the author's agent. Upon reading the entire novel, I wsa more firmly convinced that the story suited Priscilla Dean as it would no other actress on the screen.

"The Kelland novel will be published in book form by Harper Brothers, after it has been completed in the Red Book. It is very likely that the book and the Universal picture will appear about the same time.

"Clarence Budington Kelland has written several popular novels which have been made into photoplays. Among them are 'Sudden Jim,' which was produced by Triangle with Charles Ray, and 'The Hidden Spring,' produced by Metro with Harold Lockwood. Kelland also was the author of "The Little Moment of Happiness" a very popular war story, and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship."

"'The Conflict' is a big powerful story of the north woods. It is as griping a tale as has been written in many months . . . The story, despite its mystery and its gripping drama, is filled with thrills and virile action of the out-of-doors."

Edith Roberts Starts New Production

"Three at the Table," a new photodrama with a unique plot, has just been put in production at Universal City with Edith Roberts in the stellar role, supervised by William Worthington. The story is from the pen of Bennet Cohen and was adapted for picturization by Wallace Clifton.

Edith Roberts will have the part of a small town girl who finds her way into New York society; Casson Ferguson, who will be remembered as the son in "Madame X," plays opposite the star in the role of Donald Grant, alias the Kid, who comes to the small village to rob and remains to reform; Willam Quinn and Joe Neary appear as his pals; Spottiswoode Aiken has an excellent role, and other parts are played by Augustus Phillips, Bert Frank, Mathilde Brundage, Jessie Pratt and Edith Stayart.

THE entire Robertson-Cole organization was moved from its recent location at 1600 Broadway, New York City, into the new Robertson-Cole home office building, 723 Seventh Avenue, between the close of the working day Saturday and the opening of Monday, January 31st. So careful was the removal planned that not an hour was lost.

The six upper floors of the new Robertson-Cole building, a thirteen-story structure standing at the corner of Seventh Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, are now occupied by Robertson-Cole. The executive offices of the Robertson-Cole Company and the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation are on the tenth floor. The Robertson-Cole New York Exchange is on the eighth floor. The contract department and other clerical offices are on the ninth.

On the eleventh floor are situated the auditing department, Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation offices and the publicity department. On the twelfth floor are situated the foreign department and the theatres, of which there are two. The thirteenth floor is occupied by the shipping department and the stock rooms.

S. Barrett McCormick Adds to Staff

S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the New Ambassador hotel theatre in Los Angeles, has secured the addition of Emma Lindsay Squier to his publicity staff for the Gore Brothers-Sol Lesser playhouse.

Miss Squier needs no introduction to either exhibitors or motion picture followers. Her many years of experience as a staff writer for fan magazines have given her an insight into the likes and dislikes of film patrons.

Big Booking for "First Born"

Many Theatres Will Show Hayakawa Pictures

IN addition to its booking at the Strand Theatre, New York City, for the week of January 30th, "The First Born," Robertson-Cole super-special starring Sessue Hayakawa, has been booked by its distributors to the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, and a formidable list of other theatres in and around the New York territory, which will give it a greater showing there than any other Hayakawa picture ever has had.

After "The First Born" closes its engagement at the Strand, New York, it will be shown at the Strand, Brooklyn. Thence it will go over the U. B. C. circuit which includes Keith, Proctor and Moss houses in the East. It will play in Proctor theatres in Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Jersey City, Elizabeth, N. J., and Plainfield, N. J.

In addition to this, on the contract signed for Robertson-Cole by B. S. Moss, "The First Born" will be shown in the 81st Street Theatre, Flatbush Theatre, Greenpoint Theatre, Prospect Theatre, 23rd Street Theatre, 58th Street Theatre, Harlem Opera House, 125th Street Theatre, Mt. Vernon house, Yonkers theatre, Regent theatre and the Coliseum.

The booking of this number of houses in the New York territory amply shows the confidence which the U. B. C. interests have in "The First Born." This picture Robertson-Cole believes to be the best one Sessue Hayakawa ever made. It is the first of his new series of four super-specials made for distribution by Robertson-Cole under a new contract which calls for maximum attractions.

George Beban speaking before the legislature at Nashville, Tenn., incident to his appearing here in his special production, "One Man in a Million," which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole

Based on a stage production by Francis Powers, which was originally produced in San Francisco, "The First Born" tells a story of a Chinaman who was robbed of his first love along the Hoang-Ho river, and who came to America later where he became the father of a child who was killed through the plot of an enemy. How the father, played by Hayakawa, takes revenge on this enemy for his wrongs, is told in the photoplay.

In the cast with Hayakawa are Helen Jerome Eddy, Marie Pavis, Wilson Hummel, "Sonny-Boy" Warde, and the two Japanese actors, Goro Kino and Frank Seki.

Kipling "Continuity" Is Ready

"Without Benefit of Clergy" Scenarized by Author

RUDYARD KIPLING'S first script as a screen author under his contract with Pathe has been received from England. It bears the familiar Kipling title, "Without Benefit of Clergy," and has the form of a complete continuity, lacking nothing essential to the process of filming. That Kipling's first effort writing directly for picturization is technically so nearly perfect, occasioned no surprise, at the offices of Pathe Exchange, for it was part of the great novelist's arrangement with Paul Brunet that he should be supplied with competent technical advice and cooperation. Randolph Lewis, author of many successful picture features and the expert assigned to advise the Englishman, corroborates this evidence in a letter recently received at the Pathe home offices announcing that his task is virtually completed.

"One of the first things I did on joining Mr. Kipling over here," writes Mr. Lewis, "was to supply him with a model continuity, the technique of which he mastered in an amazingly brief period. So it is that now he really speaks in the language of the studio, and talks of 'fades,' 'lap dissolves,' 'irrises,' 'fade-ins,' 'cut-backs' and 'flashes' as though he were either an old hand in the studio or at writing continuity."

Pending Mr. Lewis's return with other Kipling production material, the continuity of "Without Benefit of Clergy" has been sent on to the Pacific Coast to be consulted by those in charge of production preliminaries. From all accounts, their task will be a simple one, all the research work respecting costumes, scenes, etc., having been done by the author, with the result set forth in his text. With what characteristic Kipling thoroughness this part of his work has been done is indicated in correspondence received from Randolph Lewis. Before leaving New York for England Mr. Lewis predicted that, once interested in the technique of the photo-drama, which he might master within a week, Kipling would give some of his best activities to the work. Apropos, at the beginning of January Mr. Lewis wrote:

"The scenarios of all three of the stories are as much the work of Mr. Kipling as though all of the actual writing were his own. In many cases, and for considerable stretches of composition, the wording is his. He has entered the work with the greatest enthusiasm."

All of the titles in the continuity of "Without Benefit of Clergy," too, are supplied by Kipling. Mr. Lewis adds: "And his clever invention, which shows a woman in a natural scene with her shadow projected across a vision, in my opinion, is one of the cleverest novelties yet attempted in picture making. It is not only a novelty for novelty's sake, but has a vital relation to the plot from a psychological viewpoint. And his inspiration came to him in a flash. He seized a pen and a drawing brush and, rapidly sketching, outlined just what specific effect he was seeking, Like his father, the late J. Lockwood Kipling, Rudyard is a clever artist; he not only can draw pictures with pen and pencil, but he is a wonder at mental visualizing. I predict that, if Kipling continues with the same enthusiasm, eventually he will become the master writer for the screen."

Sunrise Publicity Director Married

Nat Dorfman was quietly married last week to Miss Belle Bloomfield, a Lynn, Mass., girl. The couple spent their honeymoon at Lakewood, N. J.

Mr. Dorfman is at present vice-president and publicity director of the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, No. 220 West 42nd street.

Ad. Accessories for Dominant Westerns

The series of Western Star Dramas, comprising twenty two-reel Western subjects, and now being offered to independent exchangemen and state right operators by Dominant Pictures Corporation, have been provided with a veritable barrage of advertising accessories and exploitation helps that should prove of inestimable value to the state rights buyer in disposing of the series to exhibitors and to the enterprising showman in arranging his program for his patrons.

A press book and clip sheet containing breezy news notes, advance stories, feature article and news shorts covering the series of Western Star Dramas has been elaborately prepared and printed.

In addition to the press book, the Ritchie Lithograph Company has been engaged to furnish a series of one, three and six-sheet lithographs for every subject in the series. Besides the posters, a complete line of advertising accessories including slides, heralds, photographs, lobby displays, etc., has been prepared to assist the exhibitor in obtaining the maximum results in the exploitation of the series.

Constance Binney Aids in Hoover Drive

Constance Binney, Realart's star, played an important part in the Hoover campaign to save Europe's starving children when she appeared at a number of New York theatres on Wednesday, January 25. Using her automobile, she was able to visit several theatres, ending at the Claremont theatre, Broadway at 135th street.

Strong Cast Is Seen in "The Lost Romance"

Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Fontaine La Rue, Maym Kelso, Robert Brower and Mickey Moore are among those who compose the strong roster of players in "The Lost Romance," which William DeMille is producing from Edward Knoblock's original story for Paramount. Olga Printzlau wrote the scenario.

Allison Forces at Truckee

To Spend Week on Location Filming Snow Scenes for "Big Game"

MAY ALLISON, Metro star, arrived this week at Truckee, Calif., high in the Sierras and celebrated as a location for Far North pictures, to enact outdoor scenes of "Big Game" her forthcoming special production. Accompanying Miss Allison were Dallas Fitzgerald, her director; members of her supporting cast necessary to the action; technical men, photographers, carpenters and electricians; and a team of Alaskan husky dogs. Mr. Fitzgerald expects the stay at Truckee to extend from a week to ten days.

Dallas Fitzgerald, of Metro's directorial forces, is at the head of the film expedition, taking advantage of the heavy snows that have deposited drifts eight and ten feet high in spots. An average fall of four feet of snow within the last few days has given this part of the top of the world the appearance of polar frigidity.

With the Metro expedition is an entire crew of technical men, photographers, carpenters, electricians, and all the trappings that are required to stage spectacular screen scenes in the wilds. The supporting company includes Forrest Stanley, popular matinee idol of the speaking stage; Edward Cecil, well known to followers of Metro productions; Zeffie Tillbury, William Elmer and Sidney D'Albrook.

A team of the powerful dogs was brought from Alaska for the production, along with furs, sledges, snow shoes and all the other essentials of life in the frozen North. While it may be necessary to erect a camp in the wilderness being used for the exterior scenes for "Big Game," no "sets" will be constructed.

Famous Ballet for Screen

Phyllis Bedells and M. Espinosa to Appear in Paramount Release

FOR his production of E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Mystery Road" at the London Famous Players studio, Paul Powell has engaged one of the foremost ballets in Europe, headed by the famous Phyllis Bedells who is recognized as the most brilliant English dancer of the London stage.

Miss Bedells is still quite young, for she was a tiny child when she embarked upon her professional career. The following year she commenced a ten-weeks contract at the Empire theatre and there she stayed for nearly nine years.

So great was the new dancer's success at the Empire that on January 1, 1914, she was made Premiere danseuse, following worthily the footsteps of Adeline Genee, of whom Miss Bedells has always been a devoted worshipper. On completion of her contract at the Empire in 1915, she went to the London Hippodrome. Last year, in association with the famous Russian dancer, M. Novikoff, she did a series of matinees of ballet at the Duke of York's theatre, winning the approbation of all of London's keenest critics.

In the ballet in "The Mystery Road," Miss Bedells will have the support of another distinguished dancer, M. Espinosa. He created a sensation in New York some years ago on the occasion of the joint appearance of the Edward Strauss orchestra and the Espinosa Ballet, staged by his father, at Madison Square Garden.

In "The Mystery Road" ballet, these famous leaders will be surrounded by the Tiller troupe of Palace girls from the London Palace. The costumes have been designed by Mlle. de Saint-Martin, probably London's most famous and exclusive modiste.

Arthur Beck Completes "The Heart Line"

Following five months' intensive work on the West Coast, announcement is made this week that Arthur F. Beck has completed the screen version of Gelett Burgess' novel, "The Heart Line." Pathe Exchange, Inc., will distribute this production, in which Leah Baird is starred, and in which a pre-eminent cast supports her.

Frederick A. Thomson, director of "The Christian," "The Island of Regeneration," and great pictures in which John Barrymore, Marguerite Clark and other noted players were starred, adds another splendid work to his list in "The Heart Line."

The first print of "The Heart Line" has just arrived in New York, and within a week or two, the release date of this great picture will be announced by Pathe.

Hallroom Boy Comedy Satirizes Movies

A satire on getting into motion pictures is "In Again, Out Again," fifth of the series of new 1921 Hallroom Boys Comedies which is now in process of editing and titling and will soon be released by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

In this picture the producers have seen the funny side of their own industry, and have presented it on the screen in a series of incidents that make a farce said to be the best picture of the series so far.

"In Again, Out Again" was directed by Del Pratt, under the personal supervision of Harry Cohn. The cast includes those well known funmakers, Sid Smith and Harry McCoy, as Percy and Ferdie, and Polly Moran and Lillian Hackett lend them able support.

Australian Exhibitors en Route to America

W. A. Gibson, managing director of Australasian Films, Ltd., together with Stuart F. Doyle of Union Theatres, Ltd., are leaving Sydney on February 3rd, on the steamer "Niagara" for the purpose of visiting all the studios and leading picture theatres of America, with a view to incorporating all that is best in the picture world, in their new theatres, which they are introducing into Australia.

Edgar Lewis presents

"THE SAGE HEN"

With Gladys Brockwell Lillian Rich & Wallace MacDonald

From the story by Harry Solter

Personally directed by Edgar Lewis

A horse came galloping into the tiny Western hamlet, and bound to his back was an unconscious child.

They, the people who had driven the mother from the place, knew her little son.

"It's the 'Sage Hen's' boy," they said.

But what of the mother? What had become of her, what tragedy had caused her to give up the only thing in life that she cared for?

Here is a fine out-of-door picture, made as Mr. Lewis makes all his pictures, with pathos, thrill, human interest and deep understanding.

"WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE"

By H. V. Esmond. Adapted from Nat Goodwin's famous stage success.
Director Henry King.

He did not dream that he, a man approaching middle age could arouse love in the heart of that fair young girl. He could not guess that she should see in him qualities that she failed to find in her fiance, the young man he loved as a son, and whose happiness was dearer to him than his own.

Should he let her know how deeply he cared for her and thank heaven for his good fortune, or should he try to turn the current of her love back into the old channels again?

The stage success made famous by Nat Goodwin, now put into a truly superior picture.

Elsie Ferguson to Do Next Film in East

Following the completion of the Paramount screen version of Arnold Bennett's play, "Sacred and Profane Love," which was produced at the Lasky studio under the direction of William D. Taylor, Elsie Ferguson has returned to New York and will shortly start work in a new production at Paramount's Long Island City studio.

The new picture will be "Footlights," adapted from Rita Weiman's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, and the director will be John Stuart Robertson, one of Paramount's special producers, who has just completed the final cutting of his big production, "Sentimental Tommy," adapted from the Thrums stories by Sir James Barrie.

Jacqueline Logan Cast Opposite Meighan

Jacqueline Logan, former Follies beauty, is playing the leading feminine role opposite Thomas Meighan in "White and Unmarried," the star's latest Paramount production which Director Tom Forman has just started at the Lasky studio.

A little less than a year ago she stormed the theatrical offices of New York and won for herself a role in the revival of "Florodora." Then followed an engagement with the Ziegfeld Follies. It was during this engagement that she first attracted the attention of the motion picture producers. A flattering offer brought her to California and awarded her the leading role in a recently completed production. Her engagement by Paramount followed.

Advance Bookings for "The Devil" Heavy

With three pre-release showings, breaking three house records in New York City, Buffalo and Lawrence, Mass., the Associated Exhibitors production, "The Devil," featuring George Arliss, has set the highest record in the history of Pathe Exchange for bookings in advance of release, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

"Statistics taken from the contract records ten days before its release date, February 6th, show that practically every important first run center in the country has been closed and that in several instances indefinite runs in large cities have been planned for the picture," declares that statement.

Hines Scoring a Hit on Tour in Mid-West

Johnny Hines, star in the Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford and released through Educational Exchanges, completes this week a three weeks' personal appearance tour of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh exchange territories. During that time he appeared in some 200 theatres and received a vast amount of newspaper publicity.

The February release of the series is "Torchy's Night Hood," and this will be followed by "Torchy's Big Lead."

Scenes from the new Lyons-Moran picture, "A Shocking Night," a Universal feature

Reorganizing at Universal City

REORGANIZATION of the serial and short-reel feature department at Universal City has just been announced by Lucien Hubbard, scenario chief at the Universal studios. William Lord Wright, well-known scenario expert, has been engaged by Universal to head the short-stuff department.

Wright is widely known in the film world, having worked on various trade publications, as well as in various capacities as a scenario editor. Twenty years ago he wrote copy on the Marion Daily Star and frequently watched President-elect Warren G. Harding make-up the paper at press time. Wright worked under George Van Fleet, who then was city editor and now is the managing editor. Young Wright received $9.00 a week.

After varied newspaper experience, Wright arrived in New York with an idea that he could write material for the screen. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, was then the executive behind the old Imp organization. Wright dashed off a thrilling two-reel drama which he called "For the Sunday Edition," and Mr. Laemmle used it with King Baggot in the starring role and Owen Moore as the villain.

Following several years as a department chief on such trade publications as the Motion Picture News and the Dramatic Mirror, Wright published what is reputed to be the first text book on the art of writing scenarios. He then joined the Selig Polyscope Company in an assorted job of scenario writing and editing, publicity, film editing and title writing. Later he rendered a similar service to the Pathe organization.

Cashing in on his extensive experience and exacting training, serial and short-reel feature de- Wright now is reorganizing the partment at Universal City to keep up with the demand of the exhibitors for the Universal output.

To his staff he has added John W. Gray, George H. Plimpton and George Morgan, all widely known writers of original material and continuity.

The first work of the department under the new arrangement is the writing of two thrilling serials upon which production will begin immediately. The first of these is "Opals of Evil," a mystery story in which Art Acord, the cyclonic western star, will be featured under the direction of Al Russell. The second is "The Trail of Terror," a chaptered screen mystery in which Edward Kull will direct Eileen Sedgwick.

Because of the demand for short reel subjects, Wright has arranged to speed up production on the snappy two-reelers for which exhibitors say there is an unusual call among the fans. Before actual filming begins on the serials, Miss Sedgwick will do "The Road Agent," a fast two-reeler, and Acord will turn out "Range Justice," a western action-drama in two reels.

Hoot Gibson and Jack Perrin both popular as western stars, will be busy under the new production schedule. Gibson will start a series of two-reelers, each a complete story but with the same character. The series is to be released as "The Texas Ranger" and will give the hard riding star the chance of his life for dramatic punches.

Perrin, who has just finished "Trigger Trail," an Edward Hungerford story, will soon begin production on "The Range Rider," a two-reel western which was written by Edward Laemmle and in which young Mr. Laemmle will direct the popular player.

E. Hammons on Extensive Trip

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., left this week for Los Angeles on the most extensive trip he has made since the establishment of the exchange system. He will visit a number of the branch offices on the way to California and on the return journey.

In Los Angeles he will have important conferences with the producers of Christie, Mermaid, Vanity and Gayety comedies, series distributed through Educational. While representatives of these producers have made frequent trips to New York for conferences during the past year. Mr. Hammons desires to get in personal touch with production activities and to offer such suggestions as the experiences of the home office and the various branches have had with these pictures.

Many other producers of one and two-reel subjects of much variety have made appointments during the past few weeks with Mr. Hammons and he will meet these gentlemen in Los Angeles. While no effort is being made to increase the volume of product handled by Educational, it has always been Mr. Hammons' position that he is willing to consider pictures within his company's scope that meet its quality standard. However, in every case he has declined to make contracts until he has seen the product itself and that he is satisfied the standard of production can be maintained.

"There is no change in policy involved in my trip," said Mr. Hammons, just before leaving New York. "As you know the plan of Educational has always been to build slowly and soundly. Before we selected the product that we are now distributing we examined a vast amount of product and we were sure that we selected the best. Not a week goes by that we are not offered much other material, but we have resisted any temptation to acquire quantity at the expense of quality. We have been too successful with the pictures we have to endanger their standing with inferior material.

"Another element entering into the situation has been that we are distributing organization new, and as specialists in short subject selling, we have preferred to devote our efforts to the material that we have already had rather than to accumulate too much product and distribute our energies over too large a field. We have now reached the point where we have put these various pictures 'over the top.'

Three scenes from the new Vitagraph special production, "The Heart of Maryland," in which Catherine Calvert will be starred

Theatres May Obtain "Norma" Fox Trot

The Interstate Music Company of Macon, Mo., and the Foster Music Company, and the McKinley Music Company of Chicago, Ill., are co-operating with the Norma Talmadge Film Company, in securing widespread publicity for the Norma Fox Trot, dedicated to Norma Talmadge, and bearing her picture on the cover.

Through the New York home office of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., copies of this song and full orchestrations for both orchestra and band have been sent to every theatre playing Norma Talmadge pictures.

Paul Brese is making a record of "Norma" for the Columbia Phonograph Company. Window cards and one sheets bearing Miss Talmadge's picture, are being placed in music stores throughout the country, as well as in a number of theatre lobbies, and a novel publicity stunt was put over at the Chicago Winter Garden Cafe last week, when the management called up Marvin Jackson, who wrote the words of "Norma," and May Hill, who wrote the music, on the long distance Bell telephone, and had them listen in Macon, Mo., to the Louisiana Five Jazz Band playing "Norma" in the Chicago Winter Garden Cafe.

Novelty Is Supplied in Release by Stoll

The productions thus far released by the Stoll Film Corporation of America have met the demand of the American picture-fan for novelty of setting, story and cast, declares a statement from the New York headquarters of the Stoll organization.

Of the five pictures released by the Stoll company, two George Clark productions, "Squandered Lives" and "The Lure of Crooning Water," showed the sporting set, stage life, and rural life abroad; "Mr. Wu" was marked by exotic Chinese atmosphere; "The Hundredth Chance," English racing story; and "The Tavern Knight," a spectacular costume play of the time of Cromwell.

"The Flame," the next Stoll picture, will be released February 6th.

Civil War Play Is Filmed

Vitagraph Has Completed Filming of Belasco's "Heart of Maryland"

VITAGRAPH'S special production of "The Heart of Maryland," which has been more than three months in the making under the direction of Tom Terriss, has been completed and is now undergoing the final editing at the Brooklyn studio. The famous Belasco play of Civil War days works out far better on the screen than most stage successes have done, declare Vitagraph officials. William B. Courtney has provided a splendid continuity, it is stated, working in thrilling scenes not previously shown, owing to the natural limitations of the spoken stage. He has not departed from the original story, but has added a deft touch here and there that lends additional charm to the screen version, it is declared.

Mr. Terriss has a strong cast. It is headed by Catherine Calvert, as the heroine, who, oddly enough, is "Maryland Calvert." Crane Wilbur is her leading man as Alan Kendrick Others in the cast are Felix Krembe, William Collier, Jr., Ben Lyon, Bernard Siegel, Henry Hallam, Arthur Earl, Warner Richmond, Master Russell Griffin, Jane Jennings, Victoria White and Marguerite Sanchez. In addition there are hundreds of extra people.

While certain of the scenes for "The Heart of Maryland" were made at Vitagraph's East Coast studios in Brooklyn, the major portion of the picture was filmed in the South, where Mr. Terriss had the advantage of real Southern types and scenery. Hundreds of old Confederate uniforms were brought out of cedar chests by Southerners who displayed more than a friendly interest in the production of the famous play. Many of the Southerners, some of them veterans of the struggle between the North and the South, volunteered to appear in the soldier scenes, it is declared. Rare and treasured china and silverware of the war period were loaned for the picture, it is stated.

Editorial Praises Linder

Robertson-Cole Sees Advertising Aid in Telegram's Endorsement

A STATEMENT just received from the Robertson-Cole headquarters quotes the New York Evening Telegram as bestowing unusual editorial praise on "Seven Years' Bad Luck," with Max Linder in the leading role.

"Such comment is the word of walking advertisements who are advising all their friends and acquaintances to see the picture as soon as possible after it is released, declares the statement from the R.-C. headquarters. "The writer of the editorial says without reservation that Max Linder is the peer of French comedians and one of the funniest men known to either stage or screen in any country."

In the leading role of the picture, Max Linder (as himself) is declared to give the greatest comedy portrayal of his career. His is a hard luck story and the old jinx begins to work early in the picture when Max hurls a shoe through a large mirror, shattering it all over the set. His first blow comes when his fiancee returns the well-known engagement ring and asks him to visit a warm cliamte for a rest. Throughout the story Max proves himself a good fellow but certainly captures the prizes for hard luck.

With the comedian is a good cast including: Thelma Percy, Alta Allen, Betty Peterson, Lola Gonzales, Harry Mann, Chance Ward, Ralph McCullough, Hugh Saxon, Cap Anderson, F. B. Crayne and Pudgy, the dog.

The press book for the production is being written with the general idea that the exhibitor shall work for a very big opening of the picture and thus send out his hundreds or thousands of patrons to spread the word to their friends that "Seven Years' Bad Luck" is a picture that they "must see."

N.Y.F.I.L.M.CLUB

The New York Federated Exchange, Inc., 729 7th Ave., New York, Mr. H. Rodner, manager, was admitted to membership at last Club meeting.

Mr. Iris, chairman of committee appointed to investigate and recommend uniform action with reference to supplying service to middlemen or sub-renters in either theatrical or non-theatrical field, submitted the following written report, which was adopted as a rule of the Club.

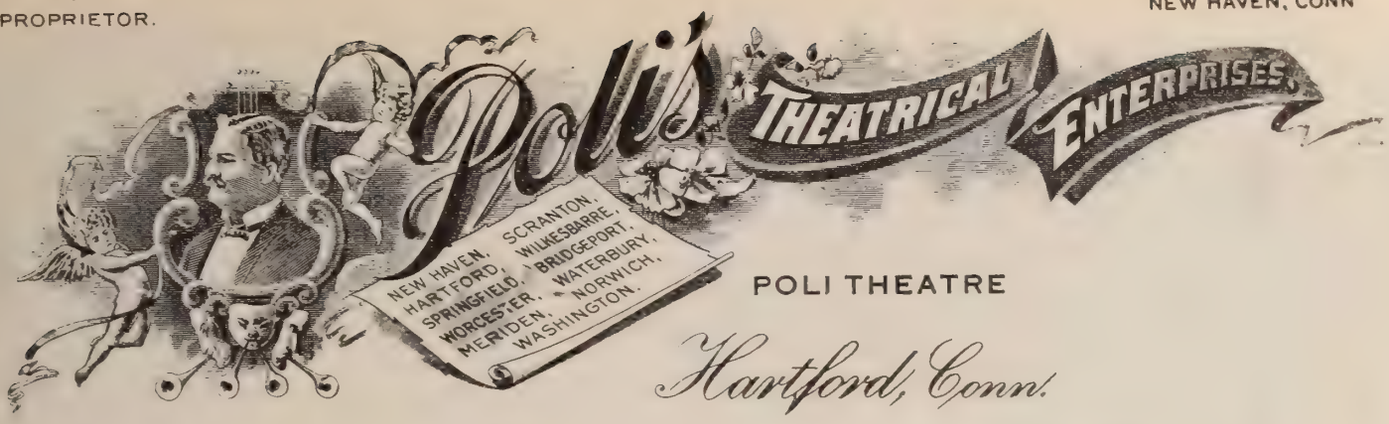
"The Committee appointed to investigate the non-theatrical field reports that in their unanimous opinion it is considered advisable to discontinue doing business with all middle-men or sub-renters in either the theatrical or non-theatrical field."

The members welcomed Mr. Earl Kramer back into the Club, now branch manager of New Jersey Select Pictures Corp.

Mr. Broskie was appointed chairman of committee to represent F. I. L. M. Club at the grand opening of the Capitol Theatre, Paterson, N. J., on Friday. Others on this committee were S. H. Fabian, Earl Kramer.

President Chadwick announced that the exhibitor bodies accepted the proposal made by the F. I. L. M. Club for exhibitor representation on grievance committee and that no doubt they would appear at the next grievance committee meeting for service.

President Chadwick ruled that no F. I. L. M. Club member should sit in on future committees, when this member has a case before the Committee for consideration. An alternate would then serve.



President Chadwick appointed Messrs. Zierler (chairman), Iris, Levy, Committee of three to look up permanent quarters for future Grievance Committee and F. I. L. M. Club meetings.

NEW HAVEN, CONN

POLI THEATRE

Hartford, Conn.

January 31st, 1921.

Vitagraph, Inc.,

New York City.

Gentlemen:-

Your "Black Beauty" special is a dandy. It smashed all attendance and money records at the Capitol Theatre. More people saw it than any picture ever shown in this Theatre, and I have heard more favorable comment on it than on any ten others I ever booked. Every performance packed to capacity, and our special children's matinee proved the biggest kind of a success.

On Wednesday we played to over four thousand children. The letters I sent to school teachers made every teacher in town a booster, and the talk the kiddies made brought in their parents who enjoyed "Black Beauty" as well as the children. The letters proved the most effective bit of advertising I ever did.

It was this double-barreled idea that put the whole thing over 100 per cent--it got my regular theatregoers in and pleased them, and in addition drew thousands of persons who rarely go to see a motion picture at all. The Capitol Theatre has an unusually spacious lobby, but in holding out the crowds at the special matinee, I had to open the side door into the alley, or there wouldn't have been room enough.

"Black Beauty" is a great picture and one that has an appeal for all persons, from six to sixty. No picture I ever played has approached this one in drawing the crowds, getting the money and generating real satisfaction. It was a pleasure to have been able to offer this to my patrons.

Very truly yours,

CAPITOL THEATRE,

J. F. Feeney

Manager.

A still giving some idea of the magnitude of the castle set in Fox's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

Fox Prepares Booking Drive

Announces Arrangements for Issue of Twain's "Connecticut Yankee"

SPURRED by the success of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," in Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, where it was given a pre-release run, the Fox Film officials are preparing for the biggest booking campaign of its career, it is announced.

According to the Fox officials, no exhibitor will be allowed to book "A Connecticut Yankee" until he has seen it screened at one of the Fox branches. The reason for this, explains William Fox, is that the officials want every exhibitor to get the enthusiasm they themselves have for this Mark Twain picturized story and then go out and put it over in the biggest possible way. The Fox officials believe every exhibitor who shows it can break every house record he ever had, if he knows the real box office value of the picture. They demand that the exhibitor make "A Connecticut Yankee" the greatest money maker he has ever shown. They want him to be more than satisfied with their contention that this production will duplicate the Los Angeles record anywhere in this country.

"A Connecticut Yankee" is now in its sixth week at Miller's theatre. Its tremendous success there was made in the face of big competition. "The Mark of Zorro," with Douglas Fairbanks, was playing in Los Angeles during four weeks of the run of "A Connecticut Yankee" and there were other big pictures and attractive programs offered to the city's picturegoing public at the same time.

The Fox officials claim that "A Connecticut Yankee" has more laughs in it than any picture ever made; that it is a spectacle as colossal as any ever presented to the public; that it contains all the subtle humor of Mark Twain; that the acting and direction are perfect, and that it contains absolutely the best box office mouth-to-mouth advertising possibilities of any production ever handed to the exhibitor.

LOUIS B. MAYER is now casting his first John M Stahl special production. The subject chosen is Perry N. Vekroff's story, "Muffled Drums." The selection of the cast, which will be an all-star one, is nearing completion under the guidance of John M. Stahl.

The scenario for "Muffled Drums" has been completed, and actual work of shooting the picture will begin Monday, February 7th.

"Muffled Drums" will be the first picture to be known as a John M. Stahl Production, a series of which will be presented by Louis B. Mayer through First National.

"The Greater Claim" Is Alice Lake's Next

"The Greater Claim" is the new title chosen by Metro for its production, "Mother Love," in which Alice Lake will be starred. The production has been known by several different tentative names in the course of the company's quest of one suited to the character of the story. In the final selection of "The Greater Claim," Metro officials feel that they have chosen a title that thoroughly typifies the picture's stirring drama.

Samuel Merwin at Studio

Prominent Author Joins Paramount to Write Directly for the Screen

"THE thing that interests me most in motion pictures is the possibilty of putting real human characters on the screen," said Samuel Merwin, author of "Anthony the Absolute," the famous "Henry" stories and other fiction, after a visit to the new Paramount studio on Long Island where he viewed the actual making of motion pictures for the first time since joining the staff of prominent writers for Paramount pictures. "To an old story teller—and I have been making my living at it since I was eighteen years old—the opportunity of using the resources of the screen is exciting."

Mr. Merwin has had eight of his stories adapted for motion pictures, his latest being "The Passionate Pilgrim," a Paramount release and knows something of the industry from that angle. But writing direct for the screen is a new experience for him and one in which he has become greatly interested.

"Any new way of telling a story interests me very much," he sai "but I am not familiar enough wit the technique of motion pictu writing to make many comment The opportunities are infinite. have very definite ideas about story telling and how I think they shoul be applied to the motion pictur but I do not want to say anythin until I have had an opportunity study the various angles of th business—the lighting, possibilitie of the camera, the problems of th director and all the things that to make up the finished motion pic ture. There is a difference i method of telling a story for th screen and telling one for a maga zine or in a book but whether it fundamental or not I do not know

After spending a short tim studying motion picture making i the Paramount studio on Long Isl and, Mr. Merwin expects to go t the Lasky studio in Hollywoo where he will stay six months, go ing into every phase of writing fo motion pictures.

English Fog Is "Captured"

Serves as Background for Story in Stoll's "The Branded Soul"

"THE BRANDED SOUL" is the final title given to the Stoll Film Corporation's production of "The Iron Stair," the novel by "Rita," the noted English writer, which will be released on February 13. It is the seventh in the Stoll one-a-week program of adaptations from famous authors, to be shown throughout 1921.

"The Branded Soul" contains at least one remarkable novelty—it has succeeded in imprisoning in pictures the impalpable, but world-renowned, English-fog. Furthermore, it has used the fog to lend real background and atmosphere to an intensely dramatic story of mystery and romance. F. Martin Thornton, the director, had to turn inventor, and devise a special camera attachment, to succeed where many others had failed.

Many of the prison scenes in "The Branded Soul" were take at Dartmoor, the great Britis penal institution. By arrangemen with the officials(inmates took part in the scene. When the pic ture was completed, the film wa shown to a gathering of the con victs. Because of the actual prison scenes, arrangements are being made to have special prints shipped to Sing Sing and other penitentiaries throughout the country and shown to the inmates and offi cials.

The cast of "The Branded Soul" is headed by Reginald Fox, wh gives a skillful, contrasted per formance of the roles of tw brothers, and Madge Stuart, th favorite of the legitimate stag "Rita" (Mrs. Desmond Humph reys), personally superintended an advised at the production and th taking of many of the spectacula scenes.

Book Hodkinson Releases

Recent Engagements of Hodkinson Releases Announced in Statement

IN a statement issued from the Hodkinson headquarters during the week, some of the recent bookings for productions released by the Hodkinson organizations are announced. Frank Cassil, the Hodkinson supervisor for the Northwest division, closed a contract with George L. Hood of Spokane, Wash., under the terms of which "Down Home," "Love Madness," "The U. P. Trail" and "The Kentucky Colonel" will be presented at Mr. Hood's Auditorium theatre in that city during February and March.

Another booker of the Hodkinson service is announced to be Edward Smith of Newman's College theatre, San Francisco, Cal. Beginning January 22 and continuing thereafter for a period of four weeks, Mr. Smith will present "The U. P. Trail," "Down Home," "The Brute Master" and "The Spenders."

A. Price, manager of the Blue Mouse theatre, Baltimore, Md., has booked "The Spenders" for a two-weeks' showing beginning January 31, according to the statement from the Hodkinson home office.

First view of what to expect in "Doug's" next United Artist production scheduled for March release and titled "The Nut"

Doug's Next Set for March 13

UPON his return from California this week, Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists announced that the next Douglas Fairbanks production, "The Nut," which he viewed while at the studio, would be released on March 13th, and that as the attraction to follow the hit that is being made by "The Mark of Zorro" the exhibitors of the country will have a picture for their patrons that is par-excellent and which will give them another real box-office winner.

In this story Fairbanks takes the part of an eccentric young fellow whose hobby is invention. He is deeply in love with a girl who lives on the floor above him in a Greenwich Village apartment house. Having laid siege to this lady's heart, he invents ways of pleasing her and he also invents ways of getting out of the troubles caused by his inventions.

Many complications are developed in the story when "Doug" undertakes to win the hand of the girl by obtaining for her permission to use the homes of a number of wealthy persons in a philanthropic project through which she hopes to make better citizens of New York's slum children.

He is opposed in this plan by a very plausible chap who poses as the girl's benefactor, but who in reality is the proprietor of a gambling house. With this opposition there comes into the story many difficulties which keep the hero on the jump at all times and gives "Doug" no end of opportunities of doing a great variety of things that are seemingly impossible and some of which just make the chills run up and down one's back.

Although one will laugh uproariously at "The Nut's" misfortunes, yet he has the trick of holding your sympathy; you feel sorry for the predicaments he gets into because of his earnestness as a suitor. Not only does he get out of his troubles because of his agility, but also because of his quick wit and inventive genius. A few of his tribulations involve being suspected of murder, starting a fire, getting caught in the street in his B. V. D.'s robbing a wax figure museum and making a single-handed raid on a gambling house.

As "Charlie Jackson," Fairbanks is said to have one of the best characters of his career to portray. Not only will he have the opportunity of endowing the role with a wealth of humanness and sympathy but he again has a chance to inject into it that droll humor, which he so wonderfully did in "The Mark of Zorro." The whole picture is described to be a wholesome, gingery mixture of drama and vigorous comedy, crammed with whirlwind action, thrills, suspense and irresistible funny angles with never a let-up in its headlong pace, from the very start to the rip-roaring, rattling, satisfactory finish.

Marguerite De LaMotte, who was "Doug's" leading woman in his last picture is cast for the leading role in this one also, and will have a new opportunity of proving herself as a bewitching heroine. William Lowery plays the heavy, in the part of the gambling house proprietor, while the remainder of the cast include Gerald Pring, Morris Hughes and Barbara La Marr.

"The Nut" was directed by Ted Reed and the story is from the pen of Kenneth Davenport, while the scenario was prepared by William Parker and Lotta Woods.

Pearl Doles Bell Will Write Titles

Pearl Doles Bell is the latest novelist to offer to the producer her services as a title writer. She points out that too much good film is wasted by inadequate and hackneyed sub-titles, and points out instances where our own critics have had cause to remark that sub-titles can make or break a picture. Mrs. Bell quotes from a recent criticism of a picture that won instant fame: "The author of the sub-titles of this picture should take equal credit with the director." Another critic, in reviewing a picture, said: "Twenty-five per cent. of the success of popular pictures is due to good titles."

Besides being a novelist Mrs. Bell has for some time been the editor of a well-known magazine. Her recent film stories are "Love's Harvest," "Her Elephant Man" and "Wing Toy."

"Angels' Feathers" Is New Capitol Comedy

An original comedy idea is made the basis of "Angels' Feathers," a coming two-reel Capitol Comedy, distributed by Goldwyn. The story, written by Kingsley Benedict and directed by Mark Goldaine, has as its central character a freckle-faced youth who grows weary of being the pampered offspring of a millionaire family, and finds an ingenious way of realizing his ambition to become amateur detective.

Under the direction of Mr. Goldaine, this comedy is said to move at a rapid pace and is replete with humorous bits of incidental business cleverly presented.

Rothacker Film Elects Officers for 1921

THE 1921 election of officers of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company resulted as follows:

Watterson R. Rothacker, president; Chas. E. Pain, vice-president; H. J. Aldous, treasurer; J. G. Mammoser, assistant treasurer; John G. Hahn, secretary; and Edward H. Seifert, assistant secretary.

Those on the board of directors are: Messrs. Rothacker, Pain, Aldous, Mammoser and Hahn.

Paving Way for New Success

Pauline Frederick to Surpass First Her Effort is Claim

AS the time for the release of "The Mistress of Shenstone," Pauline Frederick's second Robertson-Cole production, approaches, the distributing company watches with satisfaction how well the first production, "A Slave of Vanity," is paving the way for the second.

"Everywhere the first picture, which is based on Iris, by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, is pleasing exhibitors and their patrons through its enthralling story of a pampered English gentlewoman placed in the dramatic situation where she is forced to choose between her love for luxury and her affection for a man who desired to make her his wife," declares the statement from the Robertson-Cole home office.

"Miss Frederick's following is a large and growing one, and theatres of all sorts of patronage find her productions of the widest appeal. Recently, desiring to entertain its employes at a theatre party which required the entire house, the Shredded Wheat Company, of Niagara Falls, New York, chose the Cataract Theatre, which was playing "A Slave of Vanity," deeming the attraction one which would meet general approval among the whole rank and file of its employes.

"Miss Frederick again proves in 'A Slave of Vanity' that she is without a peer as an emotional actress. The story gives her many opportunities to show her versatility and throughout she is well supported by an excellent cast. With her are Nigel Barrie, Willard Louis, Maude Louis, Daisy Robinson, Arthur Hoyt, Ruth Handforth and Howard Gaye.

"Although Iris Bellamy, played by Miss Frederick, is introduced as a luxurious, pleasure loving woman, it soon becomes apparent that she is really the victim of circumstance. The petted, pampered wife of a wealthy English clubman, showered with luxury; after his death she finds herself the victim of his capricious will, forbidding her to re-marry unless she sacrifices every penny of her fortune and her social prestige.

"When she meets and falls in love with Laurence Trenwith, an upright young chap, who has nothing of the world's goods to offer, she hesitates to marry him, not so much because she knows that it will mean giving up the luxuries to which she has been accustomed, but because she feels that she is not fit to be the helpmate of a poor man. Her struggle is hard."

Author Aids in Production

Anzia Yerzierska on Coast Will Assist in Filming of Her Story

THE colony of authors at Goldwyn's Culver City Studios was augmented last week by the arrival of Anzia Yerzierska, author of "Hungry Hearts," picture rights to which were recently purchased by Goldwyn. In accord with the Goldwyn policy that encourages the cooperation of authors during the filming of their works, Miss Yerzierska will remain at the studios to assist in the production of "The Fat of the Land," the first of the "Hungry Hearts" stories chosen for picturization.

"The Fat of the Land," a wonderfully penetrating study of the soul of an immigrant as it reacts to American environment, was selected by Edward O'Brien as the best short story published in 1919.

After a stay on the Coast, during which she conferred with Goldwyn officials on the production of her first original story for the screen, tentatively called "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie," Mary Roberts Rinehart returned to her home in Pittsburgh, last week, accompanied by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston, who will collaborate with her on another story for motion picture presentation.

With the resumption of studio work on "Made in Heaven," following the eastern trip of Tom Moore and Director Victor Schertzinger to get exteriors, several important additions were made to the cast, including Al Filson, Freeman Wood, Charles Eldridge and Rene Adoree. Moore is supported by two leading women in this picture, Helene Chadwick and Molly Malone, and another prominent role is filled by Kate Lester.

In order to secure just the right sort of settings for the production of "The Bridal Path," on which he is working, E. Mason Hopper gained permission to use one of the finest estates in Pasadena and is working there with his company. Wallace Worsley and "The Night Rose" company are going to San Francisco for exteriors. Frank Lloyd, who is directing Charles Kenyon's story, now known as "The Alibi," is also out on location. Reginald Barker is making rapid progress on Rupert Hughes' "The Old Nest." The author is on the set daily.

A Realart February Release

"Plaything of Broadway" Stars Justine Johnstone; Has Good Cast

ANOTHER star franchise picture, "The Plaything of Broadway," with Justine Johnstone, has been added to Realart's schedule for February release. This picture, which is Miss Johnstone's second for Realart, is adapted from the story, "Emergency House," by Sidney Morgan.

With scenes that carry one from the luxury of the exclusive "Thirty Club" to the misery of the slums, "The Plaything of Broadway" presents a wide range of contrasting settings. In some, Miss Johnstone is seen surrounded by every luxury that wealth can provide, while in others the lower East Side provides the settings.

Supporting Miss Johnstone is a cast including names well known to motion picture patrons. Crauford Kent, who has played lead with many of filmdom's most famous stars, appears opposite her as the young doctor. Other members of the cast are Macey Harlam, Edwards Davis, George Cowl, Lucy Parker, Claude Cooper, Garry McGarry, Gertrude Hillman and Mrs. Charles Willard.

Brief Reports of Various Exhibitors ON "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"

Broke all records for attendance and money at this house and this means that we have during the last three years run some of the most important and most prominent pictures on the market. Extraordinary picture in point of story, attractiveness and photography and wonderful money-getter. Shall be glad to give to you bookings on anything you may have that compares with it—and we won't argue about the price.

Marcus Notes, Criterion Theatre, Washington, D. C.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" was a record-breaker at this theatre. Opened doors 5:30 Sunday evening, instead of 6 o'clock, the advertised time, on account of immense crowd. In less than an hour the theatre was crowded to capacity, including legal standing room. Had to stop selling tickets.

James F. Clancy, Capitol Theatre, Hartford, Conn.

Played "Dead Men" to record business. Police stopped sale of tickets second night. Everybody satisfied with production.

Pete Hanlon, Strand Theatre, Vallejo, Cal.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" did capacity business opening day. Turned over two thousand away.

Chas. W. Denzinger, Strand Theatre, Youngstown, O.

Pleased to say that we broke the record. The title was a very good one, which permitted a lot of publicity, which ordinarily could not be obtained. The picture itself was full of thrills and surprises, the action of a superior kind and the acting of a high order.

Arthur B. Leopold, Louisiana Theatre, New Orleans.

Vitagraph special, "Dead Men Tell No Tales," broke all records for attendance in this house.

A. A. H. Weinberg, Mt. Vernon Playhouse, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Positively the best picture booked into this house this season. Business at opening was ordinary, but picked up, until box-office record for week was set. A great picture with plenty of thrills and the best bet this house has had in many a long day.

Gem Theatre, Salt Lake City.

A Word or Two of What the New York Newspapers Said About

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"

When It Was Presented at the Broadway Theatre

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE:

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" is a thrilling drama on the screen. It follows Hornung's tale closely and reel follows reel without the slightest drop in interest. It is a fascinating story from first to last, much nicer, we think, on the screen than in book form. The picture is one of the best of its kind that we ever saw. It is perfect in every detail, and the burning of the ship at sea is so realistic that you have to exercise great self-control to keep from jumping on the stage and joining in the rescue.

THE NEW YORK HERALD:

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester who adapted the picture from the novel by the master craftsman of mystery and crime, E. W. Hornung, have provided a rapid fire belt of thrills in the way of rescues at sea, smuggling through secret tunnels in an English mansion, attempts at murdering the barrister hero—unsuccessful—and attempts by the hero at love-making—naturally successful.

THE EVENING SUN:

Starting off with an explosion at sea, engineered by a Spanish villain to garner the cargo of gold, this Vitagraph feature, adapted by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester from the novel of the same title by E. W. Hornung, rushes along at breathless pace with piracy, casting away on an island, smuggling in England and finally triumph of virtue at the end.

THE DAILY ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

If you want to go back to the days when you sat with your legs wrapped around the "rungs" of a chair and, your eyes glued to a book, refused to budge when your mother called you for meals—all because you just had to find out how the hero got away from the pirate ship—you must see "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

THE EVENING TELEGRAM:

E. W. Hornung is the author of "Raffles," and in "Dead Men Tell No Tales" he has supplied melodramatic material which is as thrilling as any of Raffles' adventures. It carries the watcher into the South Sea Islands and commands absorbed attention by its thrilling scenes and tense situations.

THE NEW YORK AMERICAN:

Tom Terriss has handled a big ship-wreck scene with fine dramatic sense, giving the production a position among the genuine features of the day, while the romance that runs through its length has many episodes of emotional appeal, fine lighting and dignified treatment.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH:

At the Broadway theatre the new Vitagraph picture is delighting large audiences. "Dead Men Tell No Tales" is a picture that will be remembered. The production could not be improved upon.

THE EVENING JOURNAL:

The picture has been made with a lavish hand and the entertainment is of the exciting and lavish sort.

THE NEW YORK MAIL:

The production is most elaborate and consistent.

THE NEW YORK WORLD:

Keeps the audience on the qui vive.

A Defence for Thrillers

Storey, of Pathe, Answers Critics Who Condemn Serial Melodrama

THAT the adventurous drama, vivid action, panoramic change of scene and romantic love interest of the motion picture serial, lift thousands out of the rut of convention and every day happenings, is the contention of John E. Storey, Assistant Director of Exchanges, in answering critics of the episode play in an illuminating and interesting article in the current issue of the Pathe house organ, the Pathe Sun.

"Neither man nor article ever attained universal popularity without some just, and much unjust criticism," says Mr. Storey, "and the great success of serials has not failed to produce a measure of derogatory comment. Most of it has been swept away by the tidal wave of public opinion.

"Primarily, this critic has his eye focused on the wrong end of the telescope, which he is directing on the discussion in question. In other words, he is examining the serial film from the restricted personal element or aspect and not through the broader medium of public opinion.

"The vast majority of motion picture fans want serials. This manner of entertainment provides them with an effective antidote to the strenuous manual life of our commercial, industrial and agricultural districts, as the spectacular and thrilling scenes lift them out of their otherwise daily and unromantic atmosphere, in which, through force of circumstances, so many millions are compelled to pass their working hours.

"This does not mean that they do not desire to be mentally elevated. It must be remembered that the majority seek the motion picture theatre as a modest-priced form of amusement, and as such it must provide a decided diversion for their tired hands and brains, and not endeavor to weary their mentality too much with polemic themes in the form of film production."

Super-Kinograms Released

Wide Representation for Educational's News Weekly Release

SUPER-KINOGRAMS, under its first release through Educational exchanges, was shown in every principal motion picture theatre in New York City, according to announcement by the distributors. Practically an equal showing was made in every principal city in the country, while it is said that almost every important circuit of theatres was represented among the first showings.

So great was the demand for the initial issue of super Kinograms, which took over the product of Gaumont News and will absorb another news weekly on March 1 that exactly double the number of prints that were originally estimated were sent out from the New York laboratories Friday evening. Every theatre as far west as Omaha had copies for Sunday showings.

Stress has been placed on service by Educational's field forces in selling these pictures calling attention to the fact that the organization is the sole specialist in one and two-reel pictures and that exhibitors are familiar with the attention that is given in seeing that such pictures reach them well on time and in the proper condition.

The first issue of super-Kinograms contains exclusive pictures of the Roumanian royal family on a state visit to an ancient shrine, the first pictures of them since the close of the war to reach this country; striking views of the great fire at New Haven; scenes in Washington and California showing the railroads fighting the heavy snows; pictures of the moving of the Hardings from the home they occupied when he was a mere Senator, to the White House with Mrs. Harding superintending the work and the Harding cook posing for the camera; striking views from the top of the Queensboro Bridge showing the traffic across the East River; testing the biggest of lighthouses at Navesink, N. J.; photos of a Siamese Prince who is here to follow his study of bugs; views of a ceremony at Chicago in which Miss Van Gordon becomes a member of the Sioux tribe of Indians; some striking pictures of war vetterans in the wilds of Haiti; and, finally, the latest pictures of President-elect Harding enjoying himself on his houseboat cruise in Florida.

Kinograms is to be released twice weekly—Sunday and Thursdays.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CINCINNATI

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Southern Ohio held a two-day session on the ballroom floor of the Hotel Gibson Wednesday and Thursday, January 26 and 27. This was the first general meeting held by the organization since it was launched last October.

Telegram invitations were sent to all motion picture exhibitors in Southern Ohio to attend the meeting.

Incorporation papers were filed in Columbus recently by the Vine Street Lyric Theatre Company, which has taken over the Lyric theatre building, one of the oldest legitimate theatres in the city. The company is capitalized at $250,000 by I. W. McMahan, Jerome M. Jackson and Frank W. Huss, who hold the controlling interests in the new enterprise. The present lease of the Heuck Amusement Company does not expire until next September, and the theatre will continue to house Shubert theatrical attractions until that time.

I. W. McMahan, when interviewed, stated that while a definite policy had not been decided upon for the theatre, it will positively be operated by the newly organized company as a motion picture theatre. All rumors of an extension of the lease to the Shubert interests or other outside concerns are groundless, he said.

While it is impossible to secure definite information regarding the deal, it is rumored that the new holders paid approximately $800,000 in defeating the Shubert interests in a deal for the playhouse. When the Cincinnati Lyric Theatre Company acquired possession of the Vine street property it was understood that the price paid for the realty was $680,000, since which time the owners are said to have refused a profit of approximately $100,000 on their purchase.

INDIANAPOLIS

George Beban was at the Circle in person this week with "One Man in a Million."

Richard and Henry Stegmeier, proprietors of a cafe at 17 North Illinois street, announced last week that they will raze their building and erect a $175,000 photoplay house on its site. The structure will seat 1,200 and the Central Amusement Company, controllers of the Alhambra, Isis and Lyric, will be the lessee, it is said.

SOUTH CAROLINA

"Checkers," Henry W. Blossom's sensational racing story, will not be shown on the screens of motion picture theatres of High Point, N. C. This famous picture was banned by the High Point Parent-Teacher Association, before which body the picture was shown on the afternoon of January 28th. The film was scheduled to be shown at the high school auditorium in the evening, but the association forbade its appearance upon the recommendation of its censorship committee. The action of the association aroused state-wide discussion.

Fire gutted the Piedmont motion picture theatre at Concord, N. C., on January 27th, entailing a loss of several thousands of dollars to the owner, C. M. Isenhour. The flames originated in an office next door to the theatre and spread rapidly. All the interior of the theatre, including the seats, was completely destroyed. The loss was practically covered by insurance. It is understood that the theatre will be restored as rapidly as possible.

The Universal motion picture theatre, Lenoir, N. C., has closed a contract for a $4,000 orchestra. This orchestra carries with it music of the piano, pipe organ, bass and snare drums, violin, etc. It will be installed within about two weeks, it has been announced by Manager Hanks of the Universal theatre.

The Norma Talmadge Company will be in Asheville, N. C., soon, according to letters received by the Asheville Board of Trade. Preparations are now under way to place all roads in that section of the Tar Heel State in prime condition. N. F. Friend, Miss Virginia Friend and Earl W. Rossman, of Famous Players, have been at Esmeralda and Chimney Rock., N. C., taking scenic movies in the Gap and near Asheville for the past two weeks. Films were made around Wander Trail, Sunset Mountain and Grove Park Inn, places of noted scenic beauty in Western North Carolina.

DETROIT

The Majestic theatre has changed its policy and is now offering two complete programs each week.

Herb Weil, of Port Huron, has sold the Family theatre there and also has leased the Majestic theatre to W. S. Butterfield. Capt. Reid purchased the Family. Mr. Weil will operate the Bijou and American theatres and will open a new one, the Maxine, in about a month.

Detroit Board of Exchange Managers holds its annual banquet at the Detroit Board of Commerce on Friday evening, January 28.

An employment bureau for managers, cashiers and operators is now under way at the offices of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association in the Hotel Tuller.

The Maceo Amusement Co. of Tampa, Florida, have applied for a charter. The new company will take over the present Maceo theatre, and build a new house. The capital stock is $150,000. The officers are: H. A. Wade, president; Frank H. Young, vice-president, and Chas. A. Sappal, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Sappal is now operating the Maceo and it has been very successful under his management.

Dunedin, Fla., has a new theatre, called the Dixie. It was built by the Dunedin Improvement Co., and leased to Mr. H. Pitman, who operates the Royal theatre at Clearwater, Fla.

ST. LOUIS

William A. Shalit, recently appointed sales manager of the new St. Louis office for United Artists, has located his headquarters at 3531 Olive street, the center of exchange activities. Shalit has just returned from a successful trip through Missouri and reports that conditions are more favorable than ever.

Harry D. Buckley, former manager of the Columbia theatre, St. Louis, and until recently in charge of the Kansas City office for United Artists, spent several days in this city this week preparatory to settlement in Los Angeles as representative of the same organization.

Manager Hill of Associated Producers' exchange has settled in his new quarters on film row. Hill's office is one of the most pretentious in St. Louis and part of the space is being shared with the Pioneer Film company in charge of Tom Leonard.

Walter D. Shafer, manager of the William Fox Liberty, has been informed of a proposed transfer to the managership of the William Fox Washington theatre in Detroit. Harry McDonald, who is managing the Detroit house, is scheduled to take charge of the Liberty. The change will take place about the fifteenth of next month.

Virginia Corbin, the eight-year-old Fox juvenile star, is in St. Louis and will make personal appearances at several local houses. She is accompanied by her mother and will tour the East before returning to Hollywood.

SOUTHWEST

The Oklahoma newspapers do not like the proposed increased theatre tax fostered by the national treasury. They the proposed tax would destroy business claim that outside of a few large cities and defeat its own purpose. In addition to the ticket-tax, the motion picture house, if the secretary's recommendations are carried out, must sustain a surtax on films.

W. M. Weeks is erecting a new movie house at Stephensville, Texas.

J. B. Wilson is building a new motion picture theatre at Clifton, Texas.

The picture show owned by Sparks & Connor at Marquez, Texas, was destroyed by fire last week. No insurance covers the loss sustained.

O. R. Xarroll's motion picture theatre was destroyed by fire at Valera, Texas, last week. No insurance covers the property destroyed.

Andrew Zuccaro, owner of the Queen at Fort Worth, Texas, has purchased ground on Main street at Fort Worth, and will erect a modern theatre in the near future, costing approximately $25,000.

The new Alcove theatre, owned by Lee Acuff, at Stamford, Texas, will open in the near future.

R. L. Moore has purchased the opera house at Vernan, Texas, from Duke & Barry. J. A. Crow will be the new manager.

J. M. Sayeg is building a new motion picture theatre at Ennis, Texas.

Floyd T. Kennedy has purchased an interest in the Crystal theatre at Colorado, Texas.

The Crazy theatre at Mineral Wells, Texas, is being remodelled and made strictly up-to-date.

A deal was made last week whereby R. L. Rudell of the Dixie theatre takes over the Wynola (Lewis) theatre at Wynona, Okla. Mr. Rudell plans extensive improvements in the house.

The Palace theatre at Hugo, Okla., was badly damaged by fire last week. Loss is estimated at $4,000.

Pierre Levy will assume the management of the Hippodrome and Palace theatres at Fort Worth, Texas, but will act in an advisory capacity only. Harold Gould, manager of the Hippodrome, and Ray Whitfield of the Palace will confer with Mr. Levy over matters that come up from time to time. Mr. Levy formerly owned and operated the Strand and Hippodrome theatres. He sold both to the United Amusement Company a short time ago.

The new motion picture theatre on West Main street, Oklahoma City, Okla., which has been generally known as the Cooper theatre, has been renamed the Criterion, according to reports of its manager, Mr. C. C. McCollhouse. Good business is the report in all the Oklahoma City theatres.

The corporation charter for the Dixie Film Company of Oklahoma City, Okla., was granted last Wednesday under capitalization of $5,000 by Mr. Joe Morries, secretary of state. The new officers of the company are as follows: B. H. Anderson, W. H. Hollan and Walter Benson, all of whom are of Oklahoma City.

Mr. C. J. Doerr has just purchased the Ideal theatre at Kerens, Texas, and will in the future operate it for the colored people of this place. Good business is expected.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

C. J. Trowbridge, assistant general sales manager of United Artists, left for New York last Monday after spending several weeks at the Buffalo exchange, recently opened in the Nu-Art office, under the management of P. H. Smith. Mr. Smith announces the closing of contracts with Shea's Hippodrome for the showing of the next Fairbanks picture, "The Nut," and "Through the Back Door," the new Pickford production. The Regent, Elmira; Wintergarden, Jamestown, and Regent, Rochester, have also booked these productions. The Mozart in Jamestown has been signed up 100 per cent on the United Artists' product.

The Realart franchise army is constantly on the increase, according to an announcement by Harry E. Lotz, manager of the Buffalo office, who has returned from Mount Clemens, where he went to take the rest cure. Among recent additions to the franchise holders are the Gem, Delavan; Family, Leroy; Family, Caledonia; Strand, Brockport; Temple, Albion; Park, Avon; Elk, Buffalo, and Family, Mount Morris. George Schaefer, formerly with Pathe in New York, has joined the local Realart sales staff. F. B. Smith, another Realart salesman, was taken ill in Canaseraga last week, but has recovered and is now on the job again. Mr. Lotz looks like a new man since his return from the mountains and anyone not a Realart franchise holder had better look out.

Bob Wallner, formerly with Paramount in New York, has come to Buffalo to join the Gardiner company, with which outfit he was formerly associated. E. F. Callahan, formerly manager of the Buffalo Special Pictures company exchange and more recently with C. A. Taylor, handling "Ireland in Revolt," in New York city, has also returned to Buffalo to join up with the Gardiner sales force. Richard C. Fox, former manager of the Buffalo Famous Players exchange and now manager of the Select office in St. Louis, is on his way to Buffalo to become general sales manager for Gardiner Pictures, Inc. The Dempsey-Brennan fight pictures are being handled by this exchange and are going over big. They have just closed a week run at the Empire, Buffalo.

E. T. Gomersall, manager of the Fox exchange, has been elected president of the Buffalo Exchange Managers' Association, succeeding Fred M. Zimmerman, resigned. The exchange managers held a meeting Monday, January 24.

UNIVERSAL

R. H. Cochrane arrived at Los Angeles on Monday of this week. Carl Laemmle is expected to reach here on Thursday. The Universal executives will find the greatest number of companies operating at Universal City in the last two years. Twenty-three units are actively engaged in the production of new pictures under the supervision of Irvine G. Thalburg. This marks the first visit of Mr. Cochrane since 1918.

The title "Blood Brother to the Pines," has been changed to "The Magnificent Brute." This production stars Frank Mayo under the direction of Robert Thornby. Dorothy Devore is playing the female lead.

The title of "A Kentucky Cinderella," by Hopkinson Smith, has been changed to "Li'l Miss Merrydew." Gladys Walton is starred in this production, under the direction of Harry Harris.

Herbert Heyes has been engaged to play the male lead in "The Dangerous Moment," starring Carmel Myers, under the direction of Marcel De Sano. George Rigas is playing the "heavy.". Smoke Turner will appear as a Bolshevist.

The cast for "Patches," starring "Breezy" Eason, aged four, includes Gertrude Olmstead, L. C. Shumway and Molly Shaefer Reeves Eason is directing.

Subjects recently completed include: "The Girl and the Goose," starring Eva Novak, under the direction of Fred Granville; "Three at the Table," starring Edith Roberts, under the direction of William Worthington; "The Bobbed Squab," starring Gladys Walton under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon. Art Accord has completed the filming of his two-reel Western, "The Ranch Romeo," with Bill Craft directing, and he will now play in a Western serial. Lyons and Moran have completed "Bootlegging." Production work has been completed on "Dotty's Dire Dilemma," featuring Dorothy Wolbert, under the direction of William Beaudine. Jacques Jaccard has completed "There Was a Pal," a short Western subject, featuring Leonard Clappan, with Dixie Lamont in a leading role. Edward Laemmle has completed "Lightnin' Ferguson," featuring Jack Perrin, with Louise Lorrain in the leading female role.

METRO

Viola Dana has renewed her contract with Metro for a year. The actress has left for New York on a vacation trip, after completing "Home Stuff."

Nazimova's "Camille" will be presented as a modern production with present-day costumes. Rodolph Valentine will play the role of Armand. Other members of the cast include Rex Cherryman, Arthur Hoyt, Zeffie Tillbury, Ruth Miller and Consuello Flowerton. The last named "Follies" girl arrived in Los Angeles last week. Ray Smallwood will direct the picture.

Bayard Veiller has selected "Barber John's Boy," written by Ben Ames Williams, as the next starring vehicle for Gareth Hughes. George Elwood Jenks is writing the continuity for this production.

Director Wesley Ruggles and the members of his company are at present at Flagstaff, Arizona, filming snow exteriors for "Unchartered Seas," based on a story by John Fleming Wilson. Alice Lake is the star.

Doraldina has left for the East to appear personally in connection with the presentation of her picture, "Passion Fruit."

May Allison's next production is titled "Dated." Al Roscoe plays the male lead, and Frank Elliott, Stanely Goethals, child role, Irene Hunt and James Atherton are in the cast. The continuity is being prepared by Mollie Parro.

The following changes in titles have been announced: "The Little Lady of the Big House," based on Jack London's novel, has been named "The Little Fool." "Mother Love," starring Alice Lake, has been changed to "The Greater Claim." May Allison's "Are Wives to Blame," written by Ben Ames Williams, has been titled "Extravagance."

T. Daniel Fawley, who has been a stage producer for twenty-five years, has been engaged for Metro's directorial staff by Bayard Veiller. Some of Mr. Fawley's past productions include "East is West," "Polly With a Past," "Lightning," and "The Brat."

Nelson MacDowell was engaged for an important part in Viola Dana's "Home Stuff."

Malcolm Saint Clair, the former Mack Sennet director and comedian, has been engaged to alternate with Eddie Cline in the making of Buster Keaton comedies. Saint Clair is now directing "The Goat" with Virginia Fox in the female lead and Joe Roberts in the "heavy" role. This subject concludes Buster Keaton's first year's series of eight pictures for Metro.

A dramatic scene from "Partners of the Tide" a forthcoming Irwin V. Willat production for W. W. Hodkinson release

BRUNTON

The Robert Brunton Studio has effected a banking connection thus enabling the studio to give financial aid to reliable picture producers. M. C. Levee, vice president and business manager, who is at present in New York, negotiated the contracts.

Director Edward Sloman has completed the production of "The Other Woman" for J. L. Frothingham. The picture is based on a story written by Nora Davis and is scheduled for release by Hodkinson. The cast includes Jerome Patrick, Helen Eddy, Jane Novak, William Conklin, Lincoln Plumer and Frankie Lee.

J. L. Frothingham will next make Peter B. Kyne's story, "A Ten Dollar Raise," in which William B. Mong will be featured.

The Irving Lesser production, "Peck's Bad Boy," in which Jackie Coogan is starred, was completed on Saturday of last week. Sam Woods directed the picture. No releasing arrangements have been made as yet.

T. Hayes Hunter is continuing the production of "A Light in the Clearing" for the Dial Film Company.

The Brunton organization is completing the titling and editing of the Ruth Roland serial for Pathe release, entitled "The Avenging Arrow."

GOLDWYN

Goldwyn has purchased the picture rights to "Hungry Hearts" written by Anzia Yezierska. The author has arrived at the Goldwyn studios on the Coast to assist in the adaptation of her work for the screen.

Mary Roberts Rinehart has returned to her home in Pittsburg, Pa., and is accompanied by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnson who will collaborate with her on her new original screen story.

Recent additions to the cast of "Made in Heaven," starring Tom Moore, include Al Filson, Freeman Wood, Charles Eldridge, Rene Adoree, John Cossar and Fronzie Gunn. Victor Schertzinger is directing.

E. Mason Hopper and the members of the company, producing "The Bridal Path," are at present at Santa Barbara, filming exteriors for the production. Andrew Robson has been added to the cast.

The company producing "The Night Rose" under the direction of Wallace Worsley is now in San Francisco.

The unit engaged in the filming of "An Unwilling Hero," starring Will Rogers, has arrived in Los Angeles from New Orleans.

The following subjects are at present in production: "The Old Nest" by Rupert Hughes, Reginald Barker directing; and "The Alibi" by Charles Kenyon, Frank Lloyd directing.

FIRST NATIONAL

Louis B. Mayer's production, "Invisible Fear" by Hampton Del Ruth is now under way with Anita Stewart in the stellar role. Edwin Carewe is the director. The cast includes Walter McGrail, Allen Forrest, Ogden Crane, Estelle Evans, Hamilton Morse, George Kuwa and Edward Hunt.

Production work is progressing on the ninth Katherine McDonald release, "Stranger Than Fiction," written by Charles Richmond. The continuity is by Albert Levino. The cast includes David Winter, Wesley Barry, James M. Dumont, Tom McGuire, Edward Burns and Harry O'Connor.

The Sylvia Breamer contract with Sidney Franklin has expired after the duration of a year.

John M. Stahl will direct Terry N. Vekroff, starring in "Muffled Drums," which is to be produced by Louis B. Mayer.

Final studio run of "The Sky Pilot," the first Catherine Curtis screen production for First National made by King Vidor was shown Monday evening, January 24, to Associated First National representative Sol Lesser, and the following day editing print and negative was shipped East. Mr. Lesser expressed himself as more than pleased with the production. All star cast for this subject includes Colleen Moore, David Butler, John Bowers, Kathleen Kirkham, Donald McDonald, James Corrigan, and Harry Todd.

VITAGRAPH

William Duncan and Edith Johnston have completed their current Vitagraph serial, "Fighting Fate."

"Three Sevens," which was made under the direction of Chester Bennett, has been shipped East.

The Joe Ryan Company, which is filming "The Purple Riders," is back from San Francisco, where Chintown scenes were made for the production.

Director David Smith has two weeks' more work on "Loot of the Night," starring Earl Williams. Elinor Fair is playing opposite Mr. Williams in this picture.

SPECIAL PICTURES

The title, "Caught in a Cafe," has been given to the Reggie Morris comedy. The picture was completed on Monday of this week. The principal parts are taken by Charlotte Merriam, Margaret Cullington and Eddie Baker. The production will be released February 20.

"The Vici Kid," featuring Chester Conklin and directed by Harry Edwards, has been completed. The release date is set for February 27.

LASKY

Mayme Kelso, Robert Brown and Little "Mickey" Moore have been added to the cast of "The Lost Romance," an original story for the screen written by Edward Knoblock and scenariozed by Olga Printzlau. William deMille is directing.

Allan Hale, Fred Huntley, Truly Shattuck, Harry Duffield, Charles Ogle, Mabel VanBuren, John Herdman and William Boyd have been added to the cast of "The Money Master," a George Melford production of Gilbert Parker's novel. The principal roles are played by Jane Kirkwood, Alice Hollister and Ann Forrest.

The members of the cast are now being selected for "the Great Moment," written by Elinor Glynn. Monte Katterjohn wrote the continuity. Gloria Swanson is the star.

Subjects now in production include "White and Unmarried," starring Thomas Meighan under the direction of Tom Forman; and "Crazy to Marry" starring Roscoe Arbuckle, under the direction of James Cruze.

Cecil deMille has completed production work on "The Affairs of Anatol."

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The J. Parker Reed organization is completing a Louise Glaum subject, "I Am the Woman," an original photoplay written by Miss Bradley King. This is described as a mystery story in which a husband is called upon as public defender to act as attorney for his wife charged with murder. Mahlon Hamilton appears in the role of the husband attorney, and other principals of the all-star cast are Joseph Kilgore, Ruth Stonehouse, Merrium Cooper, and Claire DuBray.

ROACH

The Hal Roach Studio at Culver City, Calif., already one of the large and economically complete producing plants of the West Coast is to be materially increased to make possible additional production work and give more comforts to producing staff, according to plans perfected and now being carried out under the presonal direction of Hal Roach.

Contract has been let by Mr. Roach to the Milwaukee Building Company for the erection of an inclosed stage, 100x200 feet, and the building of another frame structure which will become the Green Room for the players and Cafe for the entire working forces of the Studio which will shortly number more than three hundred persons.

The additional stage space will be needed by March 1st when the producing activities at this plant will be doubled. In addition to the Harold Lloyd Comedies made under the direction of Hal Roach and numbering eight a year, the productions made there will be the Harry Snub Pollard Comedies directed by Alf Goulding, numbering twenty-six single reel subjects annually, and the Vanity Fair Girls Comedies directed by Bruce Gordon, numbering twenty-six single reels each year.

Future activities provide for the revival of the "Lonesome Luke" character created by Harold Lloyd under the direction of Hal Roach when he did his first picture work. Gaylor Lloyd, who is the exact image of his brother Harold in the Lonesome Luke make-up, and who has had considerable screen experience, will be featured in the new series. It is probable that Alf Goulding will take the directorship of this Company and another comedy engaged to continue with the Snub Pollard series.

The fifth unit to begin work at the Roach Studio will be that headed by Ruth Roland for the making of serials for Pathe.

At the present time the Harold Lloyd Company has two productions completed, "Now or Never" is a railroad comedy consisting of three reels which will be released in February and at the Studio is considered the greatest comedy of Llyod's career, containing as it does the greatest number of smart "gags" in proportion to the footage, than any previously made comedies. The cast for this subject is uniformly strong and the comedy contains a story of unusual merit.

Lloyds is now working on "Ain't it the Truth," an English hunting story, and the Scenario Department has completed a domestic comedy with an elopement titled "I'll Tell the World."

New Film Firms on West Coast

Los Angeles, Calif.—Joe Rock Productions, Inc.—Capitalization subscribed, $1,000; Joe Rock, Albert Leighton, Murray Sinberg, Edna Turner, Notary.

Bell, Calif.—Unique Films, Inc., Hobart Bldg.; will erect studio.

HERE AND THERE

J. J. Goodstein, exhibitor and film exchange man with theatre interests at Philadelphia and film exchanges at Denver and Salt Lake, is in Los Angeles visiting Studios and other institutions of the industry. While here he spent considerable time at the Robert-Morton Pipe Organ factory at Van Nuys, and it is probable he will install instruments from this plant in several of his theatres.

Doris Baker, who is considering several proposals for engagements in New York after five years in films on the Coast, is on her way East, and after attending the Golden Wedding anniversary of her grandparents at Baltimore will go to New York.

Irving Lesser arrived on the Coast from New York on Saturday of last week after concluding the arrangements for the release of George Beban's "One Man in a Million," through Robertson-Cole and completing preparations for Mr. Beban's personal appearance tour throughout the country.

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's New

Hi Abram's gone East.

We heard a lot about Censorship.

Fred Quimby is still in town.

Von Stroheim's home from Monterey.

Wesley Barry is in New Orleans.

Not a new merger suggested this week.

Alexander Alt is back from the East.

Now we are told that Lew Cody is not a male vamp.

That new subdivision is to be named Moroscotown.

Larry Semon has finished "The Hick," poor fellow.

Will Rogers is to appear as Romeo in a scene from Romeo and Juliet.

Carmel Meyers is to wear fashionable clothes in "The Dangerous Moment."

Tom Meighan is to go back to New York as soon as he finishes "White and Unmarried."

Governor has promised to give the protest against censorship a "careful consideration."

Snowy Baker has had his famous Arabian horse "Boomerang" shipped to him from Australia.

Bill Duncan has been weathering the Pacific for two weeks, "Fighting Fate," as it were.

Lois Wilson has gone to New York to see what the people and papers say about her pictures.

Bob Thornby writes from the Yosemite that the landslide killed his lightning effect machine.

Mabel Normand sent the speed cop after Hugh Thompson and for a half a day Hugh thought he was pinched.

The Mathie Brewing Company advertised his fixtures for sale—if that means anything to any home brewer.

Bob Cochrane's coming West on his bi-annual trip. In fact he is going to accompany Carl Laemmle.

Vic Schertzinger has been trying to perfect a manner of using the "Milky Way" for a location for "Made in Heaven."

Howard Hickman gives us the information that a syndicate of spiritualists to cure the desire of young people for jazz music.

Old Triangle Pictures in which Lon Chaney appeared are now being shown, and according to the advertising, "Star Lon Chaney."

Harry Brand, Buster Keaton's publicity man, claims actors are born, not made, and Hokum agrees with him without qualification.

Helene Chadwick claims the title of the picture in which she is appearing at present as leading woman should be changed to read "Maid in Heaven."

Joe Jackson comes out this week with a column headed, "I Knew Him When," but this publication prints no such stuff as might be termed libelist.

Harry Caufield is positive that "Too Much Pep" which Max Linder is now making, will be the greatest comedy ever, and here's hoping it will.

Ford Sterling is going to try and win laurels as a photographer and is making a number of pictures of Rosemary Theby, which will be exhibited in New York and abroad, we are told.

George Loan Tucker is shortly to return from Europe, and here we never knew that he had gone to Europe, so we apologize to our readers for not giving them this bit of news.

The Blue Sunday fanatic was at work at Pasadena this week and wanting to be fair insisted upon closing churches, carlines, light plants and everything else at the same time they closed the theatres.

Page advertisements of Union Film Company and Realcraft Pictures Corporation were placed opposite one another in the Christmas issue of Motion Picture News. No negotiations until that time. On that date they started and the Union is now to release through Realart. Advertising pays.

The Metro publicity department continues to receive fan letters asking for the photograph of Miss Lillian Way, but Lillian Way being only a street has not complied with the numerous requests. Ray Leek is having photographs made of the street sign post, which are to be sent out in answer to future requests.

Mrs. Lillian Grant, 53 Grey street, Boston, wanted to know the whereabouts of Hugo Hamlin and Gweldlyn Hamlin, so she wrote a letter addressed to "Motion Picture Information, California," and Mr. U. S. Mail brought the letter to Hokum's sanctum, and so Hokum's editor will write a letter giving the desired information. Old man Mail knows a thing or two.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

GEORGE ARCHAINBAUD, is nearing the completion of his fifth picture starring Elaine Hammerstein, "The Gilded Butterfly," which will follow the promised release of "The Girl From Nowhere." In addition to the Hammerstein pictures, during the last year, Mr. Archainbaud directed one of the most successful Eugene O'Brien pictures, "The Wonderful Chance," and "Marooned Hearts," with Conway Tearle.

E. H. Griffith, one of the youngest and busiest directors in the field, who recently completed "Scrambled Wives," with Marguerite Clark, Florence Evelyn Martin and other prominent players in the cast, has been signed to direct a picture for Famous-Players. Mr. Griffith, sojourning in Canada, on a mid-winter vacation, had been approached for the engagement before leaving, but negotiations had not been completed. He was requested by wire to make an immediate return, and the contract, through the offices of Edward Small, was closed.

Robert Ellis, who, in the midst of a picture was interrupted by the illness of the star, Owen Moore, hopes to renew upon the picture at an early date, Mr. Moore, being reported as much improved.

Charles Maigne has commenced work upon his next picture for Famous-Players, with Alice Brady as the star.

At a recent meeting of the National Board of Reviews, among speakers who were called upon to illustrate the director's side of the censorship question, was George B. Seitz, whose youth is not against him in the matter of production, direction, acting or even speech-making.

Jerome Storm will direct Katherine MacDonald! A bit of good news. A contract for Mr. Storm's services, negotiated through Arthur H. Jacobs, with B. P. Schulberg, closed the deal. And at the conclusion of the first picture, it is expected more interesting news regarding Mr. Storm's affiliations in a similar connection are to be announced.

Samuel R. Bradley, responsible for "Endearing Young Charms," "Women Men Love" and "The House Without Children," has completed filming of a story from the pen of Edmund Goulding, entitled "Dangerous Toys." Mr. Goulding, who is among our most successful scenarists, and who adapted "The Devil," as the starring vehicle for George Arliss, has, no doubt compiled a story with all the interest the title implies. Marguerite Clayton and William Russell will be seen in the leading roles.

Raye Dean, who will appear opposite Bert Lytell in "The Message from Mars," and in Madonnas and Men"

The President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, Los Angeles Lodge, received an acknowledgment of a protest against the proposed film censorship, from Governor Stephens, of California, who has promised to give the protest registered careful consideration.

On behalf of the directors, a telegram was sent the governor, contending that the screen has the same right as the press to the constitutional guarantee of free speech. Censorship, according to Reginald Barker, Director, would violate that guarantee. The telegram sent, read as follows:

"I understand a bill to establish a State Board of film censorship will be submitted to you. In opinion of myself and colleagues, the screen as an instrument of entertainment, education and expression is governed by the same rights and responsibilities that fall on the press.

"The most important right is that of freedom of speech, guaranteed by the first amendment to the constitution of this republic. The most important responsibility is that of safe-guarding the morals of the people by offering clean reading and clean pictures. Violations of decency by screen or press are already punishable under police power. Further than that, the right of free expression cannot any more constitutionally be abridged by a censorship of the screen than it can by a censorship of the press."

Close-up of Governor digesting contents of telegram and deciding to act favorably upon the appeal!

"Lesson in Love" will be the title of the Chet Withey production starring Constance Talmadge, adapted from Douglas Murry's story, which supplied the working title for the Withey film, "The Man from Toronto." Following closely upon the "Lessons," Miss Talmadge started studying her role in "Wedding Bells," second Chet Withey productions with the young First National star. Harrison Ford will be seen as the masculine subject of escape from a loveless and bigamous marriage, while the cast indicates the Withey power of casting, William Roselle, James Harrison, Emily Chichester, Ida Darling, Dallas Wellford and Polly Vann.

In Marshall Neilan's current production, "Bob Hampton of Placer," which includes the Custer massacre and which requires the largest number of people ever emloyed by Neilan, the part of Custer is played by Dwight Crittenden, who happens to be a nephew of the late Captain J. J. Crittenden, a member of Custer's staff who shared his tragic death in the massacre.

ABOUT PLAYERS

LITTLE JACKIE COOGAN, star of "Peck's Bad Boy" now being completed on the coast by Irving Lesser, came near having a second serious accident this week during the filming of some railroad scenes for the Peck film.

Director, Sam Wood placed Jackie and Wheeler Oakman upon a small gasoline hand-car which was supposed to be smashed into by a locomotive with its occupants jumping in the nick of time.

When Oakman and young Coogan were within sixty yards of the engine, Jackie discovered he had caught his shoe between the small rail on the seat of the car. Oakman realizing the immediate danger, threw on the brakes and derailed the car just in time to escape the oncoming train.

Realism is O. K. for films, according to Jackie and Oakman, but some times its a bit too real.

Vincent Coleman, who played the leading masculine role in "Good References," starring Constance Talmadge, has been engaged to play opposite Constance Binney in "The Magic Cup." Mr. Coleman will also shortly be seen with

Montagu Love, temporarily devoting his well known screen personality, to the legitimate stage

Alice Calhoun, in "Princess Jones."

Eulalie Jensen, playing a leading role in the all-star David G. Fisher special "In the Shadow of the Dome," shortly to be released, was first considered too young for the part of Raimunda, in the picture version of "The Passion Flower," starring Norma Talmadge. Miss Jensen, in the role enacted upon the legitimate stage by Nance O'Neil, is, in the play, the mother of Miss Talmadge, and while it required exactly her qualifications, otherwise, Herbert Brenon opined the flattering news that she looked too young. Thereupon, Miss Jensen, with characteristic assiduous care and skill, applied a ten cent piece upon the make up under her eyes, bringing vivid relief shadows, and adding sufficient years to satisfy the director. It is guaranteed by the artist herself, and others who know, that this is no dime novel story.

Lucy Cotton, states George L. Clarke, ex-juvenile man and present artists' personal representative, has been placed under a term contract by Metro Pictures Corporation. Miss Cotton recently appeared opposite Bert Lytell in "The Misleading Lady," and will appear opposite the same popular Metro star in the forthcoming production of "The Man Who." And opposite George Arliss in "The Devil, Miss Cotton shared honors in its phenomenal success.

Rod La Rocque is featured in the leading male role of "Paying the Piper," a George Fitzmaurice Paramount Special. Mr. La Rocque has been playing upon the legitimate stage with Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," but declares he will enjoy motion picture work, with the same old vigor.

James W. Morrison, after six months, has returned to the east, from sunny California, where he completed work in four pictures.

Robert Schable, who plays the heavy lead in a big episode of Fox' "Blind Wives" and who has just completed work as the heavy lead in "Without Limit," a George D. Baker production, has not always been the disliked third of the screen triangle. For ten years, Schable was John Drew's stage director, and acted in a similar capacity for Ethel Barrymore, Nazimova, Marie Doro, and others. Schable's drifting into heavy leads in motion pictures was an instantaneous matter—George Fitzmaurice, Charles Maigne, and other noted directors recognizing in him precisely the type to put the punch into the story. And for several years, now, Schable has been doing the "heavy punch" act. Among his big 1920 releases are "On With The Dance," "The Stolen Kiss," "The Romantic Adventurer," "Blind Wives," and others.

In the midst of the wholesome surrounding of a big ranch near Bakersfield, Cal., Antonio Moreno is guiding the operations of a giant farm tractor these days, with all the seriousness that he puts into his Vitagraph features. He recently finished "Three Sevens," and while he had earnestly hoped, before starting another picture that he could wedge in a trip to Honolulu, it begins to look to Tony as if the element of time will not permit. All preliminary preparations have been completed for starting his next production. In addition to plowing and cultivating, Tony is directing the construction of a real Spanish hacienda on the ranch.

"Three Sevens" was shipped from the Pacific Coast to Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Chester Bennett, who has done so many excellent Vitagraph features, directed Moreno in "Three Sevens," which was adapted from the novel by Perley Poore Sheehan.

The theme is that no man is greater than the law.

The star will make the most of his rest on the Bakersfield ranch in real outdoor work preparing himself for the next of the Antonio Moreno features. His next will be a radical change from "Three Sevens," but it is hoped to retain some of the members of the 'Three Sevens" cast, which is an exceptionally large and adequate one, including such well known players as Beatrice Burnham, Jean Calhoun, Thomas Jefferson Hector Sarno, Robert Mack, and others.

Norma and Constance Talmadge have just signed an important contract with Lucien Lelong, one of the best known couturiers in Paris—whereby they agree to have Lelong furnish them with twelve models per year. These will be the very last word in ultra chic advance styles, and will be introduced into America exclusively by the Talmadges.

The exploitation possibilities resulting from this contract are unlimited, as the photographs of the Talmadge sisters in these French clothes are to be syndicated by the Overseas Feature Service, not only in the United States, Canada, France and England, but also throughout the South American countries, Italy, Germany and even India.

Miller Addresses the Board of Review

CHARLES MILLER, Director of New York Lodge of Motion Picture Directors Association, was called upon to present to the National Board of Review assembled at the Hotel McAlpin, for a conference on January 29th, the difficulties encountered by the director of the motion picture. A part of Mr. Miller's talk follows:

"If one were to form an opinion from the helpful inspiring and informing remarks of previous speakers regarding the advancement and continued healthy growth of the Motion Picture Art, he must admit there is little of value to add. Our art can be approached and discussed from so many angles, it is difficult to decide which to select in the brief time I hope to hold your attention.

"First of all, I want to thank the National Board of Review personally and as the representative of the Motion Picture Directors Association, for their consistent co-operation and splendidly helpful and constructive criticisms for the advancement of our art and better motion pictures; in all essentials, the objects and aims of the National Board of Review and the Association, which I have the honor to represent, are identical.

"Your President has suggested that I speak upon the difficulties encountered by a Director. There is no field of endeavor worth entering; no feat worthy of accomplishment; no ambition worth achieving, that is not fraught with difficulties. It is the going over the top of the barriers, and meeting and overcrowding the unforeseen obstacles that make the game worth playing. The greatest difficulty which the director has, however, is in trying to comply with the requirements and demands of the various Boards of Censors in the different States. It is difficult, if not impossible to make a picture today which will meet with the approval of all those numerous Censorship bodies whose opinions as to what should be or should not be portrayed on the screen are as diverse and varied in character as the individuals who maintain them. We have endeavored to ascertain their standards but to no avail.

"I am frank to say that without the helpful suggestions and criticisms of the National Board of Review, the director's labors and problems would be greatly multiplied, and in many cases might go for naught, and, for this reason, I do not think there can be too close a relationship or frequent interchange of ideas between the Motion Picture Directors Association and the National Board of Review. Our objects and ideals are the same. We are both seeking constructively to advance and develop this newest of arts, which as a means of entertainment, an adjunct to science, and a molder of public opinion, is the most potent force yet discovered for impressing the minds of all who behold it.

"The formation of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and the record of accomplishment since its organization, is one which every member can point to with pride. The various avenues of investigations and research, the means taken to minimize the many abuses which have been and are still prevalent, would be a subject for interesting discourse, but which I will not impose upon you at this time. One thing I will say, however, that every lover of the motion picture may be sure of and, that is, that any picture which is produced by a member of the Motion Picture Association, whatever may be its other faults, it will not offend, it will be clean, and we hope that the National Board of Review will call upon our organization for its fullest and most enthusiastic co-operation, which I assure you will be forthcoming, in all things that will make for the betterment of the screen and the fuller realization of the wonderful possibilities of the silent drama."

The Third Time—The Charm!

DISCIPLES of superstition, take heed! Here is an old, dyed-in-the - wool one - come true!

And the proof, in a feminine object lesson—Hope Hampton.

Long has lived the petted belief of the supersitious, that all important happenings come in threes.

Suppose the first article in the household to be broken is the most expensive treasure possessed. Does that keep the next two from following suit? Never! The first may be a bronze statue worth hundreds. The second may be only a common kitchen saucer, and the third the handle off the cup—but three things will surely be broken before the sequence is ended, and thereby is the charm.

So it was with the titian blonde, whose eyes, animation and general beauty without having time to think it over, was drafted from a school of dramatic art, and assigned the leading feminine role in a motion picture. She had had no theatrical training of any kind, had never been upon the stage, had never faced a motion picture camera.

The first picture, according to her own criticism, was found wanting, in many ways. She fully realized her inexperience was not an asset. It robbed her of the necessary confidence in herself, and therefore could not reflect the possibilities that later were made potent. The second picture, however, and a marked difference was accentuated by the appearance of Miss Hampton's name in electric lights on Broadway, outside a down-town motion picture theatre. The hope and ambition of thousands of girls a reality. Only no girl ever presumed to dream of it being done so fast. As a rule, it could not. Miss Hampton, nevertheless, is, according to fact, not fancy, an exception to the rule.

Hope Hampton, star of "The Bait," and who will soon be seen in "Loves Penalty"

Even the second picture did not meet with her approbation. She listened intently and with appreciation to the assurances that her improvement was most extraordinary. She said but little. And it was not until the third picture that Miss Hampton, herself, admitted that the screen reflected the ability she felt, intuitively, was hers—but the third time was surely the charm, which proves that in superstition there is sometimes a rudiment of fact.

The first picture in which Miss Hampton ever appeared was "The Modern Salome." The director who insisted upon her playing the title role scoffed at her inexperience. In such physical beauty, he could visualize the subject being made to act. And when Miss Hampton finds serious fault with her own performance, we wonder if she has ever pictured another untrained and unprepared girl out of school in the same predicament?

The second picture, of course, gave her a bit more of an idea what she herself must accomplish. By this time her awe, and the novelty of the sudden transplantation, had begun to wear off. The mysteries of the studio, the powers of the varied lights, had all been made known to her. So, she found herself face to face with the reality of the work—the accurate record of the grinding camera, and took time, in a prolonged conjecture, to determine what it was all about.

The third time—the "charm" came when a coveted release was arranged for Hope Hampton pictures. And those who came to be convinced, will be bound to acknowledge the vast improvement and the marked advances of the young star, a solace to believers in the superstition that in the third time lies the charm. Personally, the writer believes it lies in Hope Hampton, herself.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"His Bitter Half"

(Vanity Comedy-Educational)

JUST an ordinary comedy with much running about, a few acrobatic stunts and a couple of girls to tie the story or whatever it may be called, together.

The girls become excited because a tramp seeks admittance to the house. When the iceman in performance of his duties enters with his "cake of ice," the girls hit him on the head with clubs. When he comes to he has an easy time making love to one of the girls.

The husband of the other returns and is mistaken by the iceman for a burglar. In a series of rapid comedy scenes the husband is bound and gagged to a chair by the iceman but succeeds in tumbling down the stairs with his paraphernalia where he finally makes himself known to his wife who saves him from arrest when the police arrive.

In the cast are Patricia Palmer, Kate Wynn and Henry Murdock. This comedy should please.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Kickaroo"

(Two-Reel Western-Universal)

THERE is no denying that this two-reel Western featuring the dynamic Hoot Gibson is well named. There is a kick to it like 500 bomb proof "likker." It carries about the most original idea that Hoot ever offered—one that is good for loud and spontaneous laughter any time, any day in the week. Hoot is cautioned about his ability to pour the sizzling hooch down his throat. He rises to remark that it is his own business. So they play a large sized prank on him.

He is placed in a casket and taken to his final resting place—overcome from his unquenchable thirst—when he revives. They still remind him that he is dead. But he proves that he is very much alive by chasing the practical joker into a fade-out. "Kickaroo" is away from the orthodox ideas—riding, shooting and what not. It is going to make a lot of friends for Hoot Gibson. It shows that he is in the market for wide-awake ideas. The offering is good enough for any house—bar none.—Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Chicken in the Case"

(Selznick—Five Reels)

AN audience that looks in on this feature starring Owen Moore is certain to find it a satisfying entertainment—one which explodes a maximum of humorous scenes from very little plot material. The idea itself cannot be called original. It has served the stage and screen in various guises. Yet the director, Victor Heerman, has kept it going by dressing it up with bits of business, most of which are generated from the element known as surprise. It is as light as a feather and a great deal more ticklish. Whenever it shows signs of spending itself, along comes a breezy sub-title, or a trick of direction or some effort of the star and it gains new sparkle.

There are really two chickens in the case—one belonging to the barnyard variety, the other the species more dangerous than the male. A rich aunt cuts off her nephew from his inheritance unless he gets married. Therefore when the antique lady comes a-visiting it behooves the hero to pose as a benedict. Which he does by assuming the guardianship of his friend's bride. You know the rest. The old lady is extremely gullible but she knows what constitutes connubial bliss. She will thrust the masquerader in the wrong bedroom and send the real groom from the house. A bottle of iron tonic is the kink in the chain of incidents. She forgets it time and again which necessitates the two schemers doubling in brass as it were.

The farce is provocative of laughter of the explosive kind in several places. The bedroom scenes are stressed a trifle too much and become quite repetitious—the only flaw in this pattern. The young people journey to the newly-weds' Jersey bungalow for the week-end. When the chickens are released from their coop, one of them flies over the wall to the estate of the human squab. And the hero, in pursuit, remains to fall in love. Every time he wants to come over, he takes the white leghorn and tosses it over the wall. Aunty arrives unexpectedly and jazzes the complications. The detailing of each incident is impossible here, but there is a lot of clever hokum. And Owen Moore, Kathryn Perry, Teddy Sampson, Edgar Nelson and Vivian Ogden seem to enjoy themselves as much as the spectators at the Broadway in watching them. The picture shows what can be done with slight material.—LAURENCE REID.

"Bordeaux to Lourdes"

(Paramount—Holmes Travel Pictures)

THIS is a most interesting and appealing travel picture, which goes in more for well-selected scenes of French natives and French street scenes rather than emphasizing scenic beauties. It opens with a close-up of a typical native of southern France. After a few street and harbor scenes in Bordeaux, it takes the audience to Pau, and illustrates quite thoroughly the famous Pau hunt, giving an international flavor to the scenes by close-ups of the English and American followers of the hounds. The picturesque and ceremonious European hunt is well portrayed.

The reel ends with some views of Lourdes, a pilgrimage city for Catholics throughout the world. It shows the grotto; the piles of crutches, left behind by those who were cured; and the church itself.

An animated map shows the location of Bordeaux and Lourdes on the screen in the beginning of the reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"In Gipsy Land"

(Urban-Kineto Review)

GIPSIES. They suggest hooded wagons, dark, malicious looking faces and wholesale kidnapping. But 1800 years ago, the Roman Emperor Trajan, according to the subtitle, carved a road to burst the Iron Gates of the Blue Danube and conquer Dacia. In those days, Gipsies were only a calamity fearing people, afraid to do wrong, and the descendants and degeneration is shown in about half the footage contained in Review No. 39. It is most interesting. We find that except for navigation, the River life is little changed, and that Gipsies, supposed to be possessed with the wanderlust, only till the soil and act like civilized farmers in a most common-place way. Neighboring towns, and the centers of commerce, are represented by a polyglot of races and religions. They have even taken on the "Woman's Rights" wave, and the women have a right to carry the burden of making a living in all kinds of manual labor, the same as the men. There follows, mid-projection, a few illustrations of the real gipsy folk, including the Romany Chief, who is especially fond of his pipe, and in the end we find all classes joining in the municipal dance, to the sound of the Gipsy fiddler's bow.—LILLIAN GALE.

"A Dog-Gone Mix-Up"

(Hall Room Boys Comedy—C. B. C. Film Sales)

THE fourth Hall Room Comedy of the 1921 series may be catalogued under the brand that releases merriment, but it strikes us that "A Dog-Gone Mix Up" may properly be called a thriller. The offering is packed with original gags and incident and deserves a place on any exhibitor's program. Certainly it eclipses the other Hall Rooms. One hasn't the inclination to laugh because of the concentrated effort to provide a thrill. Sid Smith and Harry McCoy, under Herman Raymaker's direction are put through their paces when they attempt to win a pretty girl's reward of a hundred simoleons for rescuing her frizzled-haired pup from the air. The poodle takes the ozone when a mischievous youngster ties him to a group of toy balloons.

The comedians dash over the ground, take a series of hard falls and eventually find themselves on a skyscraper. This scene introduces the thrill. It shows Percy (it might be Ferdie) attempting to walk a plank from one building to another and climbing the flag-pole. Shivers of suspense are felt when he miscalculates in his steps. Finally the law of gravity reveals its force and the comedians and pup land on the sidewalk. The girl's reward is a mere "Thank You." It is an original idea used here and quite a departure from the cartoonist's treatment of the character as found in the newspaper. Polly Moran is also in the picture—sort of "also ran," because the part is only a bit. Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Baby"

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

THIS is an average comedy, with a series of fairly good gags running through most of it, and a nice little thrill arising from an aeroplane and a drowning baby to end it up. Harry Williams directed and the cast includes a number of familiar Sunshiners, among whom are Ethel Teare, Gus Pixley and Tom Kennedy. The story is that of a young man who leaves the country to come to the big city. He wins a thousand dollar reward for stopping a runaway horse. A family, consisting of a father and about eight children, have been dispossessed, and the eldest girl decides that the easiest way to find a home for her family is to marry the young man with the thousand-dollar reward. So the young farmer and his many in-laws take up their abode in a houseboat. The villain finally sets the houseboat adrift and the baby is rescued from a watery grave by our hero. Length 2 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 16, 1920.

"Clever twists make interesting crook story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased." "Story little impossible but business was big. Some fine double exposures in this and picture one of his best." "An entertaining feature which drew well." "Great in story and in production. Wally Reid always has good following and great stories. Went over big." "Better than average business." "An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done." "Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and 'Always Audacious' pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week." "Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run." "Drew large crowds and met with the favor of home-going audiences." "A good production having entertaining story. Box-office receipts good." "A very good picture to average business two days."

ARE ALL MEN ALIKE? (METRO) MAY ALLISON ..... NOV. 6
"Rather inconsequental for feature length."—M. P. News.

BAIT, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) HOPE HAMPTON ..... JAN. 15
"Rather hectic but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a good picture and business was way off. Our patrons didn't know the star." "Fair picture to fair business."

BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS ..... DEC. 11
"Mediocre picture on a hackneyed theme."—M. P. News.

BEGGAR IN PURPLE, A (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

"Novel story given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One theatre considered it such a success that it held it over for a second week." "Splendid production which was well liked by my patrons. Sure-fire box-office attraction." "Very good picture playing to good business. Held for second week." "Undoubtedly one of the best and most successful pictures of the year. Played to exceptionally big business for seven days." "Interesting picture and well put on which appealed to both men and women patrons. Did more than average business for a week." "Doing good business second week. Everyone agrees it's the kind of picture to hold the attention spellbound." "One of the best pictures of the year. Went big all week." "A good picture and box-office attraction which has been held for a second week at the highest class theatre in the city." "With the aid of exploitation, including a prologue, this picture went over big and brought good business." "Held over for a two weeks' run, and did big business throughout. Critics pronounce it one of the best of the year." "Went very well. Two days of extra big business."

BEWARE OF THE BRIDE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY ..... OCT. 30
"This would look better as a two-reel slapstick."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Favorably received and good program picture. Average business three days."

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE ..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE ..... JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from famous classic."—M. P. News.

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly good both as to pleasing the audiences and box office returns."

BODY AND SOUL (METRO) ALICE LAKE ..... OCT. 23
"Story of dual personality fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BRANDING IRON, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Story of primitive passions is rather overdone."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture. Fair box-office results." "Brought a normal business, something unusual for pre-Christmas days." "One of the best hits of the year." One week to big business."

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE... FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH ..... NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BRUTE MASTER, THE (HODKINSON) HOBART BOSWORTH.... NOV. 6
"Hobart Bosworth scores in vigorous story of the sea."—M. P. News.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy little story to this one. Pleased my patrons and kept me packing 'em in. Almost a record-breaker."

CHALLENGE OF THE LAW, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.... OCT. 23
"Russell at his best; a real entertaining drama."—M. P. News.

"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business. Consensus good picture, good puller."

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... JAN. 1
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.

CITY SPARROW, A (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON ..... DEC. 4
"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape." "Two days to average business."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... DEC. 25
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.

"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business." "Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying." "A good picture and brought more than usual business."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST.... NOV. 13
"Vivid, 'punchy' story: production excellent."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This one went over good and brought more than the average business."

PICTURE — BRAND — STAR — RELEASED — PLAN BOOK

DEVIL, THE (ASSO.-EXHIB.-PATHE) GEORGE ARLISS.....JAN. 29
"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.

DEVIL TO PAY, THE (BRUNTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Strong mystery story carries interest."—M. P. News.

DEVIL'S GARDEN, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE .....NOV. 6
"Rather grewsome story, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment.—"Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business." "Its too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused."

DICE OF DESTINY (HAMPTON-PATHE) H. B. WARNER.....DEC. 11
"H. B. Warner puts 'punch' into strong dramatic story."—M. P. News.

DINTY (NEILAN-FIRST NATIONAL) WESLEY BARRY.....DEC. 4
"Melodrama and Sentiment put this one over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wesley Barry in this picture is proving a worthy attraction and causing favorable comment." "Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind." "Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic." "Good picture. Splendid vacation attraction. Big and little folks all like Wesley Barry." "Personally, think this is better than 'Go and Get It,' but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it." "Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house record." "This is a fine picture and brought good business for me." "Played to increasing business each day. Wonderful kid picture."

DISCARDED WOMAN, THE (HALLMARK) SPECIAL CAST.....JULY 10
"Hectic melodrama with familiar stock situations."—M P. News.

DOWN HOME (WILLART-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 6
"Some interesting moments in this rustic story."—M. N. News.

DRAG HARLAN (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....NOV. 6
"If they like Farnum, it's a good bet."—M. P. News.

813 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST) .....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

EYES OF THE HEART (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....NOV. 13
"Mary Miles Minter scores in story of pathos and sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture, well acted. Mary Miles Minter has her own personal following, but aside from them, the picture did not have much of an appeal." "Ordinary picture. Poor business three days." "Not as good as some of her previous pictures, but Miss Minter is always pleasing." "Two days to big and average business."

FACE AT YOUR WINDOW, THE (WILLIAM FOX) SPECIAL CAST .....NOV. 13
"Propaganda picture developed along orthodox lines."—M. P. Netws.

FATAL HOUR, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Crude melodrama makes mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FELIX O'DAY (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) H. B. WARNER.....SEPT. 18
"A good production from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture to average business one day."

FIREBRAND TREVISON (FOX) BUCK JONES.....JULY 31
"Buck Jones practically duplicates his last picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some of the others. Average business two days."

FIXED BY GEORGE (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN.....NOV. 6
"Lyons and Moran produce successful farce."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent. Very funny and pleases the patrons who enjoy high class comedy." "A rather poor picture to poor business two days." "Good—one day to extra big business."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH .....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good."

"Very obvious, but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Light, pleasing little comedy. They came because they liked Wanda—and they did not register a kick. Box-office just fair." "This sure did go over big and the picture deserved it, for it is interesting and entertaining." "Fair picture with only average box-office receipts." "Better than 'Miss Hobbs.' Miss Hawley is likable in this sort of a story. Big to average business two days."

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST..FEB. 5
"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.

FORBIDDEN THING, THE (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS).....NOV. 27
"Vivid and vital story rich in spiritual quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business." "A fine production. People stood in line all week to see this picture. Big success." "Well acted and produced but rather long-drawn out; exploitation put it over to big business."

FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) BILLIE BURKE .....JAN. 8
"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays."

FRONTIER OF THE STARS, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....JAN. 22
"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.

FURNACE, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Talky picture has little appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures I have seen. It has strength and purpose and is wonderfully portrayed by excellent cast. Exceptionally good business." "An absolute sensation. A knockout. Had S. R. O. sign up from opening day till finish of week. One of the best picture I've ever seen." "Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business." "Very big production. Business better than average." "The plot of the picture is good but the details are not well worked out. It is fair. Average receipts."

GILDED DREAM, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....OCT. 23
"Commonplace story developed along traditional lines."—M. P. News.

GIRL IN THE WEB, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET .....JULY 31
"A splendid production from all angles."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"A good story. It drew well. Two days to average business." "Fair. Don't think Blanche Sweet belongs in these silly namby-pamby roles. She is one of the best emotional actresses on the screen—but wasted in drivel like this. Box-office only fair."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY .....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week." "Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses."

GOOD-BAD WIFE, THE (VERA McCORD PRODS.-FILM BOOKING OFFICE) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 30
"Good production given rather illogical story."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 22
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted."

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A poor picture. Average box-office reecipts." 'Fine picture with some very excellent acting and interesting story. Played to better than average business for week."

HALF A CHANCE (JESSE D. HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST).OCT. 30
"Well acted and directed, but development suffers."—M. P. News.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....OCT. 30
"Favorite formula given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regarded this as just a fair picture and drew average houses." "The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business." "This picture pleased. Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card."

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run." "Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses, which were pretty well crowded." "Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out." "An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week." "One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run." "Excellent. The patrons of this theatre filled the house at each performance every day for the entire week."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 29

"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew 13,000 paid admissions the day it opened. A wonderful drawing card." "Opening week equalled 'On with the Dance.' Held for second week. Picture makes 'em talk." "Went over big. Certainly a sure fire production, both as to entertainment and box office value." "Big business second week. Thrilling. Gorgeous sets and sensational title are big attractions." "A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business." "Opened up extra big and continued so during week run." "This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title." "Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week." "Picture is quite fair. Good business during run." "Went over very well and held over for two days to big business." "A picture with beautiful scenery, excellent acting, a rather mediocre plot and several daring scenes. The acting of Mae Murray and David Powell and the South Sea and London Limehouse settings make the picture well worth seeing. It drew good-sized houses."

House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. Balcony Staircase and Balcony Front of Stanley Theatre

Opening of Stanley Is Great Event in Philadelphia

Forms Magnificent Monument to Memory of Late Stanley Mastbaum

THE New Stanley theatre, at Nineteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, opened its doors on Saturday morning, January 29th, to crowds who have long awaited the great event, and who found the theatre finer, if possible, than they had expectetd.

Erected at a cost of two million dollars, in memory of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, the theatre easily stamps itself as one of the very finest in the country. Architecturally it is unusually beautiful, and its imposing white marble pile is fitted to stand beside the greatest photoplay palaces of the world. The Hoffman-Henon Company, who designed it, have every reason to feel proud of their work, as have the Keystone Construction Company, who did the actual work of erecting the majestic house.

To attempt to describe the house in detail is a stupendous task. The richness of the decorations is perhaps one of the most striking features. The richly ornamented dome, for example, in the ceiling, with its myriad of lights and fine gold decorations was put in at a cost of two thousand dollars. The procenium arch is crowned with a beautiful mural painting, the work of Anton P. Aubers, who did notable work at the Hague in Holland, representing beauty crowned by the Muses. Flood lights make this picture stand out with extraordinary clarity and beauty. Another fine painting in the building, best observed from the mezzanine floor, is on the wall at the main entrance just inside the doors. It was painted by George Harding, is called "Le Carnaval," and represents Pierrot and Columbine and Harlequin at play in a dream garden overhung by glowing lanterns, the setting being the landing place of an Italian lake. Other paintings adorning the walls of the beautiful theatre are romantic historical subjects. One panel represents Joan of Arc leading her compatriots to victory. Another shows Columbus returning triumphant, from his voyages of discovery.

Entrance and foyer, Stanley theatre, Philadelphia

Four thousand people can be seated comfortably in the new Stanley theatre. Every seat, whether in the balcony or on the main floor, commands an uninterrupted view of the stage, and is commodious and comfortable. The folding chairs are of red silk velour. The boxes and lodges are furnished with beautifully upholstered wicker. The theatre is amply provided with comfortable boxes and lodges. There are four lower proscenium boxes on each side on the first floor, and two above. In addition there are four lodges on each side, each seating twelve persons. On a direct line with the balcony, and extending across its front and below on the main floor are more lodges, each comfortably arranged, for those who like semi-privacy even at the movies.

One of the features of the new theatre is the absence of steps. In their place inclines, easy on patrons who must sit upstairs, are to be found. There is one large balcony, reached directly from the street, as well as from the interior.

The stage, with a proscenium opening of sixty-four feet, and splendid equipment of "flies" and dressing rooms, is prepared to accomodate the largest of theatrical attractions. It is provided with a screen of the newest type, showing a clearer picture than has hitherto been obtainable. A specially designed setting of silk and plush, sets off the pictures to best advantage, and is one of the loveliest in the world. Superb lighting effects are possible on this stage, and there is also a miniature stage in connection with this set that will provide accomodation for spectacular tableaux that may be shown behind the screen.

In addition, the theatre is equipped with not the customary two, but three Simplex machines. The projection room, at the rear of the balcony, is the last word in construction and equipment. To insure patrons against breakdowns three machines have been provided and the operators have a special compartment in this enclosure with every facility for providing elaborate effects.

The building, as constructed, is absolutely fireproof. Stone, brick, terra cotta, and steel are the materials that have made it. But it also has numerous well-placed exits and fire escapes on each side of the building.

The lighting system is unusually elaborate. There are both a direct and an indirect system, and there is also a system of flood lighting, with a three-color effect.

Arrangements are such that one system will diffuse with the others by a set of dimmers, and any lighting effect is possible of achievement. An expenditure of seventy-five thousand dollars was made for the various chandeliers and concealed lights behind sunken art glass enclosures. The chandeliers were all specially designed. They are made of crystal and gold.

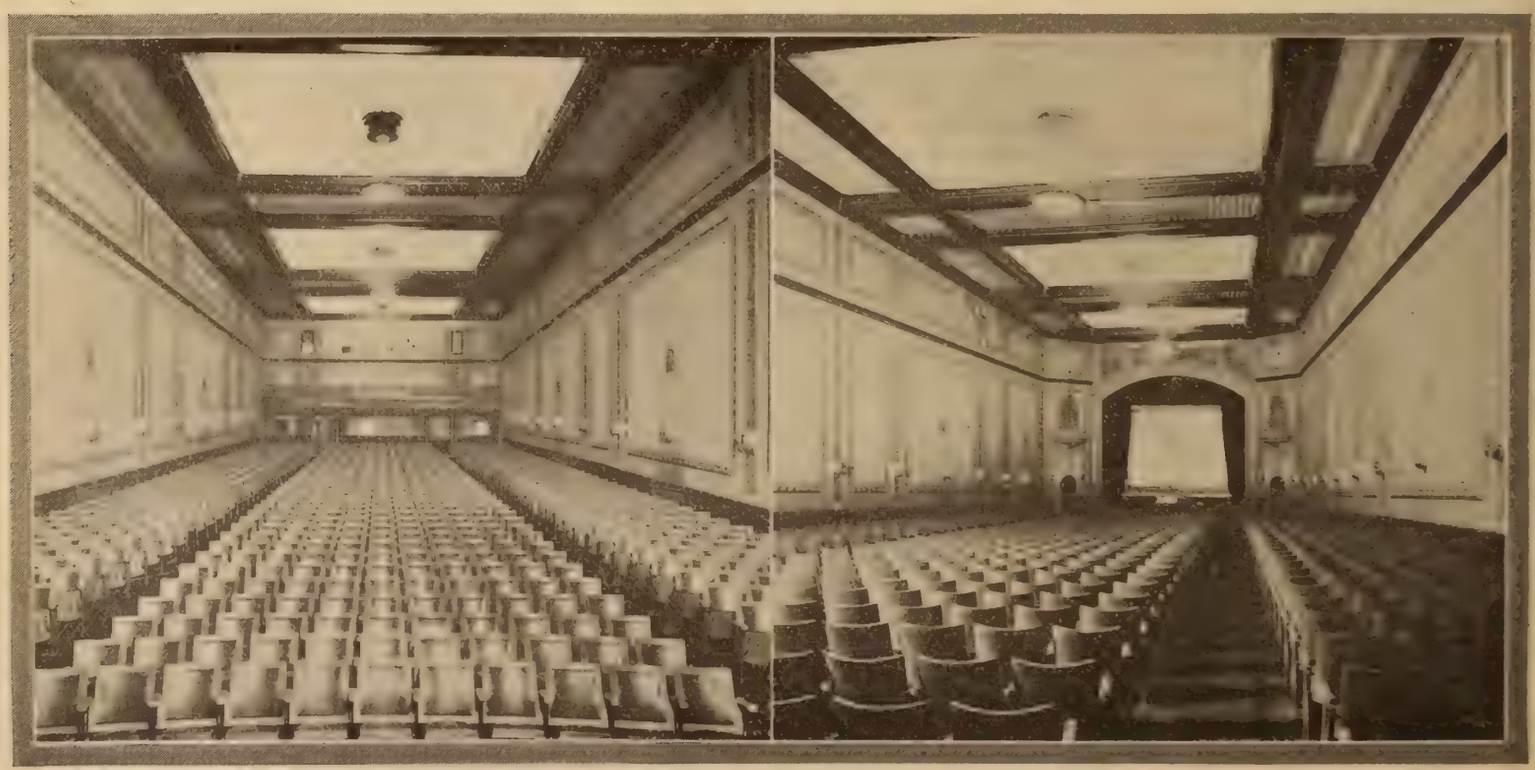
On the outside of the theatre many bright lights testify as to its presence in the city. Two thirty-foot electric light signs flash the news of its being in letters ten feet high. A large sign projects from the corner and can be seen for many blocks. Hundreds of lights illumine the marquee of iron and glass at the Market street front, and each one of the handsome signboards that are found on the Nineteenth street side is flooded with radiance, coming from shaded lamps that cast their beams on the announcements there displayed.

Special arrangements for the comfort of patrons are to be found at the box office, which is a handsome structure of broad bronze and rose Tavernelle marble. Two ticket windows and a separate compartment for the use of the manager are within the structure. Just beyond the ticket booth extends the lobby, eighty by thirty feet, arranged so that waiting crowds shall be more than comfortable. It has a beautiful mosaic floor and is wainscoted to the full height with rose Tavernelle marble.

When one enters the theatre proper the mezzanine comes immediately into view. It is an open promenade and lounging section, with a handsome Georgian marble balustrade at the edge. On this floor one gets access to the men's smoking and rest-room, done in Italian renaissance style, and to the women's rooms, on the opposite side of the building. These are decorated in Japanese style, and another lounging room for women, in the basement, is in Louis XV. style. A beautiful, richly-upholstered settee extends along the wall separating the mezzanine promenade from the auditorium proper. Everywhere there are handings of red silk velour and damask.

The carpets have a background of old rose with blue and yellow figures. Everywhere, a lavish and artistic use of color enhances the richness and beauties of the bare building. The Adam style of decoration prevails in the main portion of the building, the only deviations being in the rest rooms.

Even the brass railings throughout the theatre were not belittled in importance is proved by the care given to their design and finish. According to the Newman Manufacturing Co., who furnished the railings, they are 2 inches in diameter and finished in statuary bronze to match the remainder of the decorations and furnishings. This finish was recommended by the architects because it retains its original beauty without polishing.

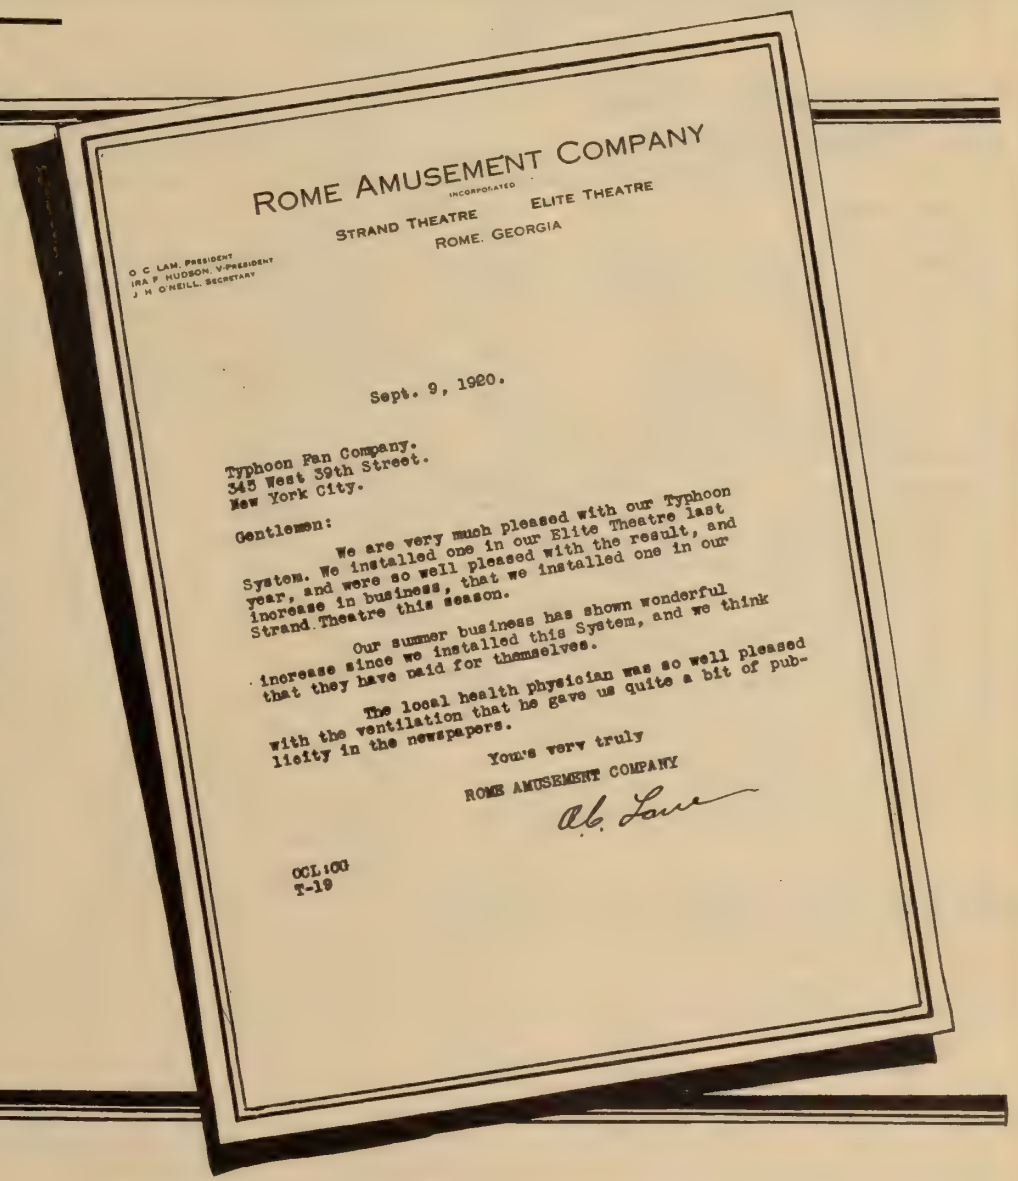


At the 19th street entrance are ten cast bronze frames costing nearly $250 each.

In front of the orchestra pit is a remo able railing, while the loges and side box and the balcony front are supplied wi the same materials in permanent form.

Excellent accomodation has been pr vided for the large orchestra that is bei maintained. The orchestra pit has roo for a symphony orchestra of seventy-fi men, and there too is the keyboard of t hundred-thousand dollar Kimball orga the finest thus made, which is to suppl ment the work of the musicians. Th organ is concealed, the outlet for ton being through handsomely decorated gril over the proscenium boxes. The men the orchestra have a finely equipped re room at the Market street front of t basement, which contains special re rooms for men and women, in addition t the main rooms on the mezzanine floo The basement also contains the apparat for the heating and ventilating systems, c the indirect blower type, furnishing thirt cubic feet of fresh air per minutte fc each person in the theatre.

Marble drinking fountains providin iced water are conveniently place throughout the building. Easy access t the many exits is also afforded. There ar seven of these on each side of the mai floor, and four from the balcony directl to the street. To the west of the theatr is a ten-foot alley. Five entrances ris from the mezzanine floor to the balcony and seats extend both below and above th level of this floor. All the exits and entrances are arranged to facilitate movement and to aid comfort.



And still there are many interesting details of construction that this description has hardly touched. The immense switchboard on the stage is one of the best in the country. Various devices for main-

Gentlemen:

We are very much pleased with our Typhoon System. We installed one in our Elite Theatre last year, and were so well pleased with the result, and increase in business, that we installed one in our Strand Theatre this season.

Our summer business has shown wonderful increase since we installed this System, and we think that they have paid for themselves.

The local health physician was so well pleased with the ventilation that he gave us quite a bit of publicity in the newspapers.

Yours very truly

taining a fixed temperature and for providing fresh air abound. Every possible modern appliance or piece of equipment that would in any way aid in making this the greatest theatre in the country has been employed, and the results are gratifying.

Work on the theatre has been going on for some time, subjected to the usual tiresome delays. But at last it has been completed. The demolishing of the old buildings at nineteenth and Market streets started October 11, 1919. The cornerstone was laid with impressive ceremonies on May 8, 1920, and since then work has been constantly in progress, the only delays being due to difficulties in securing sufficient steel. All the plaster casts were made right on the ground, thus effecting a great saving of time. Jules E. Mastbaum, the president of the Stanley company has been constantly on the ground and his unremitting efforts are responsible in great measure for the success of the great theatre.

In the front of the balcony are ten loge boxes which contain the only reserved seats in the house. The balcony and auditorium seats are the overwidth, leather upholstered variety.

Agnes Foster Wright, of New York, designed and supervised the decorations, with the exception of the stage settings which were designed by Joseph Platt, also of New York, and painted by the Lee Lash studios. The lobby is decorated with several Chinese panels which are imported from the Defosse studios in Paris, and in the foyer is a velvet panel brought from Watanabe, Yokohama.

A novelty feature of the souvenir program which was used during the first week of the showings at the new theatre was a page devoted to coming attractions under the heading: "Some Delft Promises." Among those listed for showing in the theatre were:

"Peaceful Valley," starring Charles Ray; Marshall Neilan's "Dinty;" "The Branded Woman," starring Norma Talmadge;" "Passion," starring Pola Negri; and the Toonerville Trolley series, all distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The music in the new theatre is supplied by Madeline Sack's orchestra, which is favorably known throughout Michigan. Programs will be changed three times a week.

The projection room is equipped with two of the latest type 6 B Powers Projectors.

Delft Theatres Add to String

Delft Theatres, Incorporated, added a second theatre in Marquette to their chain of Michigan houses, when the Delft Theatre was opened on Christmas Day. The new theatre is the most beautiful of the five houses operated by the company and in point of decoration and appointments compares favorably with any theatre in the middle west.

The theatre is entirely a fireproof construction erected by the Foster Construction Co., of Milwaukee. Most of the material used in the construction was purchased in Marquette.

The theatre is 84 feet wide with a seating capacity of 1,250. The floor of the auditorium is bowl-shaped, providing a clear view of the stage and screen from any seat. The foyers and lobbies are especially spacious.

Loew's State Theatre Is to be Well Ventilated

In the construction of the equipment of Marcus Loew's State theatre, Memphis, Tenn., one of the most important features is the method of ventilating by the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, similar to that in other Loew's theatres throughout the South.

The Typhoon System of cooling and ventilating is based upon the simple laws of nature, it having been demonstrated a long time ago by Ernst Glantzberg, patentee of the Typhoon System, that it was possible to maintain absolute comfort in theatres under the most adverse weather conditions throughout the warmest section of the United States, providing air is supplied into these theatres at a sufficient velocity. This principle is carried out to the letter by the Typhoon Cooling System, which delivers cool air to the audience with an air motion of sufficient velocity to break up the aerial envelope surrounding the body, thus allowing a natural dissipation of the excess heat generated by the body.

Wherever the construction of the theatre permits, the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating apparatus is installed on the roof, and by this means is enabled to draw pure fresh air from high above the dirt and dust of the street, and blow it down through the grill into the ceiling of the theatre, where it passes over the audience both in the orchestra and balcony with sufficient velocity to maintain a steady breeze, the air finally passing out at the rear of the theatre, through the opening doors or other exits. So completely does this system renovate the air in the theatre that it requires only one minute to completely change the entire atmosphere.

The Typhoon equipment installed in the State theatre comprises two No. 28 and one No. 212 Typhoon Twin Sets, and one No. 112 Typhoon Single Set—the twin sets being installed in the attic space above the theatre, and the single set on the roof.

During the winter months perfect ventilation may also be maintained by simply reversing the operation, as carried on in the summer, thus drawing out all of the foul air.

For heating purposes the process is likewise very simple, being very much the same operation as that which cools the theatre; the air before passing into the theatre is forced through a heating chamber. Thus, when it reaches the audience it is of a sufficiently warm temperature to make all parts of the theatre comfortable.

So popular has this system of cooling, ventilating and heating become, that a large number of the big new theatres being built throughout the South are installing Typhoons.

The Typhoon Fan Company, of 345 West 39th street, New York City, manufacturers of the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, has representatives in practically every large city in the country. Its business has so increased during the past year that it has been compelled to establish new factories in New York, New Orleans, and Chicago, from where it is sending out forces of salesmen and engineers to solve the different ventilating problems of exhibitors in every locality.

City to Get Theatre After Nineteen Years

A motion picture theatre which, after a run of nineteen years will become the property of the City of New York, is the latest news item. This unusual condition comes about through a lease made a year ago of space under the Manhattan Bridge to the Manbridge Company of New York. The theatre is now nearly completed at a cost of $230,000. The rental is said to be $10,000 per year for the period of nineteen years, after which time the present owners will relinquish possession and allow the amusement house to become the property of the City.

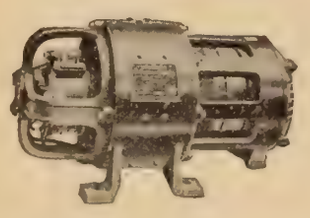
The equipment for the new house was furnished exclusively by the Howells Cine Equipment Company of New York. It includes Simplex machines, Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen, Ticket Selling Machines, Ticket Choppers and Lobby Display Frames.

The actual operation of the house will be taken over by The Florence Theatrical Corporation of which Mr. Kay is President and Mr. Gross, Vice President and Treasurer.

Schenectady Gets New Barcli

Of the many motion picture theatres which have been opened in New York state this year, few, if any, are handsomer than the Barcli of Schenectady, a 1,100 seat house, owned by John Walker and managed by William E. Gladstone. The house is a downtown one and has been opened but two or three weeks, with its marquise still to be completed. The house is a combination of mahogany and grey in its interior furnishings, the seats and carpets being in grey, while the women ushers are also garbed in Quaker grey, the whole effect being most restful to the eyes.

The house has been about a year in building. One of its novel features is in connection with the exits to the balcony which run along the side walls to the first floor with exits near the orchestra, an arrangement which results in the minimum of annoyance from those who are leaving the house.



The Barcli gets its name from the combination of the first letters of the two streets, Clinton and Barrett, on which it is located

The rather peculiar name is due to the fact that the entrance to the house is in Barrett street and the exits on Clinton. The house is equipped with a most modern projection room, so complete that the General Electric Company has requested permission to photograph it and use it in their publications.

The room is about 10 by 16 feet in size, with a depth from floor to ceiling of nine feet, two windows opening out of doors. There is a trap door leading to the workroom below, where the G-E motor-generator set is installed. Speaking tubes connect the room with the orchestra as well as the office. Two Simplex machines have been installed. The throw is about 110 feet. Charles H. Travis has been selected as the projectionist. Mr. Walker, owner of the house, was for six years connected with the Lincoln theatre in Schenectady.

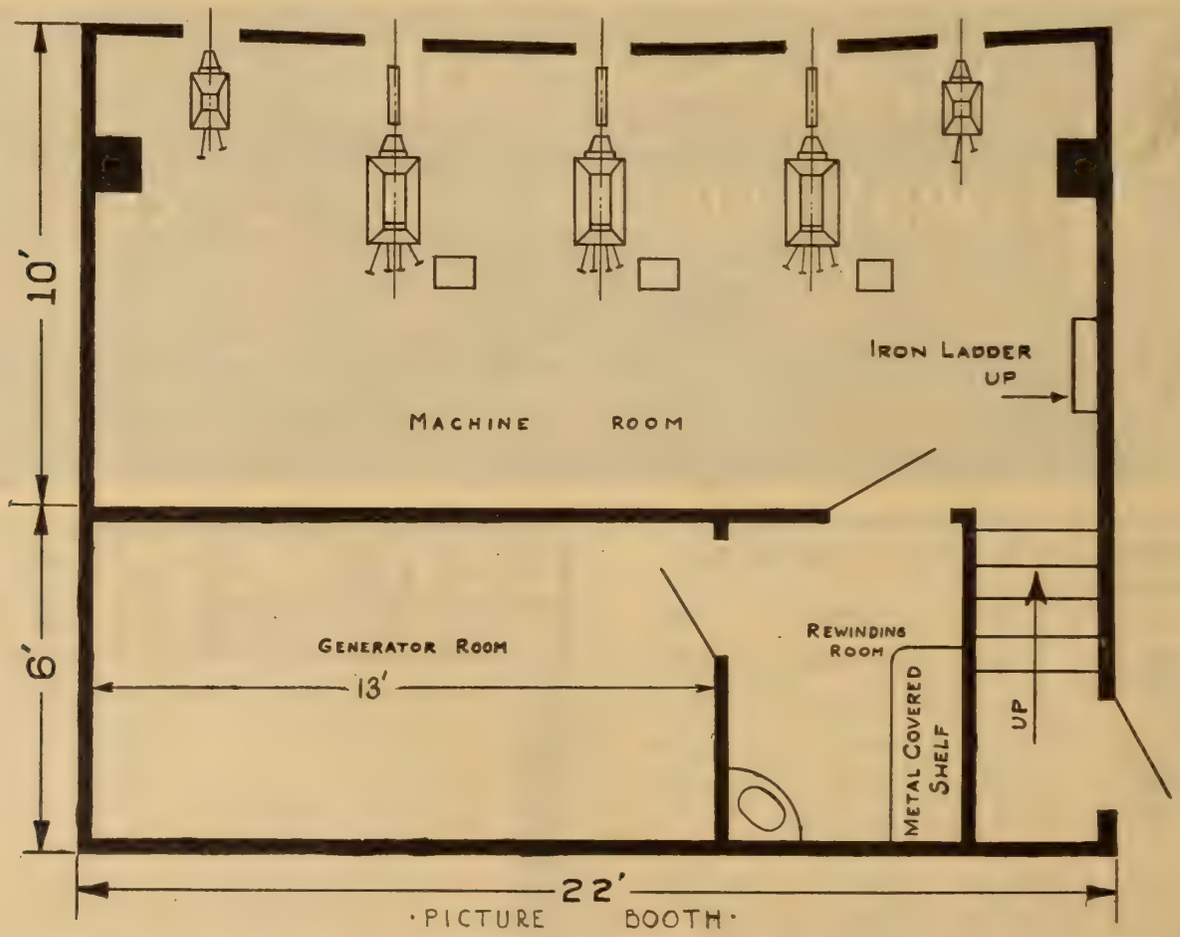
Projection Room and Equipment in Stanley Theatre



Philadelphia's New Theatre Contains Excellent Projection Layout

THE projection room at the Stanley theatre is indeed in keeping with this splendid new example of up-to-date Cinema Palaces, and a glimpse into the concrete enclosure impresses one at once with the tremendous strides taken by projector makers in the past several years. For where, a few years ago, one machine with a stereopticon attachment would comprise the entire apparatus, the eye is greeted, in the Stanley, with an imposing, glistening array of Simplex Projectors, each of them lined up as accurately as are the huge guns on a modern dreadnought, and one rather feels that he is in the presence of a subtle, weird influence which seems to be a combination of science and mechanics, as the hum of electric current, and brilliant streams of pure white light, with a soft purring of perfectly running mechanisms, hold one's attention.

The projection room is located in the rear of the balcony and instead of reaching it by means of the usual steep ladder, one steps into a full width door, set on a level with the balcony floor. The room is unusually spacious with a high ceiling. An ideal system of ventilation carries off the obnoxious gases and the always present smell of cellulose.

A Kliegl spot light with color wheel is located in the corner nearest the entrance, with a sufficient amount of space allowing for its operation. Then comes the battery of three Simplex type "S" motor driven Projectors, each of them enameled in battleship gray with nickeled trimmings and fixtures. Contained on these machines are numerous special appliances which Lewis M. Swaab, the Simplex distributor in Philadelphia, specified, through the Precision Machine Company. Included among these features are the extension knobs on the flywheel, which permit the user to turn the flywheel for framing purposes without opening the left hand door of the mechanism; carbon periscopes mounted on the lamphouse doors, through the use of which the projectionist may project the image of his carbon crater on any specified spot at his convenience; Simplex arc controls to regulate to a nicety the feeding of the carbon arc; and Robin Speed Indicators to register the manner in which the film is passing through the machines.

A dissolving stereopticon completes the projection apparatus and through its use, the projection of an announcement on the screen is accomplished in a most artistic manner through the dissolving method, so popular during the days of the beautiful colored illustrated song slides. The system of wiring employed in the laying out of the projection room is unique and practical, in that there is a marked absence of visible wiring in and around the machines, for to one accustomed to going into projection rooms, the absence of the usual conglomeration of wires is quickly noted.

In a separate generous-sized concrete room, is located a full-sized sheet iron covered rewind bench, fully equipped with cutting and splicing appurtenances, while through a steel covered door, one walks into the electrical room, in which are mounted the three special Simplex 100 ampere, 200 volt rheostats controlling the projector current. Here also is mounted the 100-ampere resistance unit, as well as two 100-ampere G. E. Ft. Wayne motor generators of D. C. to D. C. type with necessary panel boards and short-circuiting switches. In this room, too, are placed the huge "flashers" that operate the intermittent flashing of the large electric signs on the front of the theatre.

The projection room is in charge of two of Philadelphia's well-known projectionists, the Messrs. Harry J. Abbott and Oscar W. Lummis respectively. Mr. Abbott, for several terms, served as president of the Philadelphia Moving Picture Operators' Union, of which Mr. Lummis is also an active member. Both men are exceedingly pleased with the Simplex apparatus which forms an important unit of the projection equipment in many of the Stanley houses. Two of the younger members of the projection staff are Thomas Dunlap and Jack Dubin, who are apprentice projectionists, being trained under the skilled supervision and practised eye of the senior members.

All of the apparatus described in the foregoing, was purchased through the establishment of Lewis M. Swaab, of Philadelphia, who included, besides the projection apparatus, two electrically driven ticket choppers, as well as a Swaab super-light screen, equipped with a special stretcher frame. Mr. Swaab announces that the order for the Stanley equipment, which amounted to more than $10,000, marks the high water point in individual theatre orders up to date in his territory.

Lewis M. Swaab, president of the Swaab Company, together with its manager, Mark Swaab, and Mr. William C. Francke, of the Precision Company, attended the opening of the new Stanley house, and received the congratulations of many of the leaders in the industry who were present, for the very creditable manner in which the high-class features were projected.

Harry J. Abbott, Chief Projectionist, Stanley Theatre.

Alaska Man Keeps Record of Film Condition

E. Paulson, of Ketchikan, Alaska, the farthest north of any of the correspondents of the Projection Department, seems to have been afflicted with a series of junk features. According to his record which we publish below in the hopes that some film executive may see and study it, some of the films that found their way to Alaska were no better than many of those that the smaller theatres in the Middle West are constantly receiving.

This is the letter, and the film record:

I am enclosing a little record of the films I handled from July 17 to October 17, 1920. I am getting a little better service now from Fox but the champion of all came the other day when I looked over a serial, "The Lure of the Circus." In part 1, I made 119 splices and after I ran it through the machine there were many more to make, so the manager cancelled the booking and got his film from the Alaska Film Exchange at Juneau. This is my record:

Former Projectionist Makes Good as Contractor

Morris J. Rotker, up to 1919 the secretary of Local 306, and who resigned to associate himself in contracting work with the firm of Wilson-Rotker Co., has recently taken over the entire interests in the company and is now the sole owner.

Further commendation of his ability was shown at the last meeting of the Bronx Electrical Contractors' Association, when he was unanimously re-elected to the office of secretary with a doubling up of salary.

Motion Picture Engineers to Meet in Washington

C. Francis Jenkins, chairman of the Spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, has announced that the Convention will be held in Washington, D. C., on May 9, 10, 11 and 12. An unusually complete program of papers has been arranged by the Papers Committee and these together with the numerous inspection trips to local points of interest will make the coming meeting of wide interest.

Wonders Why Union Took This Operator

Says C. F., a projectionist from Georgia: I was in Jacksonville, Fla., a few weeks ago and while there went into several of the theatres, and gosh, I never saw such projection in my life. In one place he (the operator) had at least three breaks in each reel and he had punch marks at the end of every reel. Twice he let the screen go white. Then at the end of the picture he flashed a Union slide on the screen. If I had been him I would have been ashamed to let people know that an operator like him could get in the Union.

I will send you a photo of my booth some time soon.

Reply: Contrary to the general opinion membership in the Union is not a sign of excellence. It would be a good thing if it were. This, however, is not the fault so much of the Union itself as of Human Nature. A man may know his projection data by heart and yet be lax and lazy in putting it into practice. Union membership is more a matter of book knowledge than of operating efficiency and that is where the trouble comes.

Send in that photograph so that we may see if your room compares in any way with the many others that have appeared lately in the News.

Auto-Rewinding Device Stops at Every Broken Patch

The newly exploited Worman Auto Rewind is a vertical rewind, motor driven that automatically stops when a broken place in the film is reached so that the attendant may mend it. Where bench space is limited this Rewind will be found valuable.

How to Tell Rectifier Tube Capacity

John F. Hepp, Boonville, Ind., writes: "I wish you would illustrate the new and the old types of mercury arc rectifier tubes, also tell me how to distinguish the 40 amp. tube from the 50 amp., as there are no marks on them.

Reply: Your request was transmitted to the General Electric Company, one of the firms making mercury arc rectifiers and the reply was as follows:

"I presume your correspondent has in mind the old tube made before the war when we could afford to use platinum and the new tubes made since that time which uses a special type of wire. The difference is in the seals, the platinum seals having a platinum color and the new wire having a reddish color. The platinum in the old seals has quite a little value but there is no scrap value to the new seals.

"The best way to distinguish between a 40 and a 50-ampere tube is by the catalog number stamped on the condensing chamber of the tube; the rating is also stamped, but sometimes indistinctly. The catalog number of the 40-amp. (G-E Tube) is 40958 and of the 50-amp., 47409."

Loew Circuit Standardizes on Simplex

FOLLOWING closely upon the heels of the announcements of the important Simplex installations in many well-known quarters, comes a piece of news that will, no doubt, be looked upon with considerable interest by progressive men in that circle comprising projector users.

This relates to a recent determination by the officials of the Marcus Loew Circuit, to standardize the projection room equipment throughout this nationally-known circuit with Simplex Projectors. And not only has the standardization idea been adopted in theory, but has become so effective in practice that more than two dozen Loew theatres in various parts of the country have become Simplex-equipped, most of them being provided with two machines, and some of them with three machines.

Mr. Michael J. Campbell, whose picture is shown herewith, is chief supervisor of projection for the Loew interests, and can well be included among the list of well-known projectionists of the industry. Up to the present writing, he has been with the Loew organization for 15 years, which is a long period when one considers how time is computed in this industry.

Mr. Campbell's first active experience in the industry dates back 18 years, when he had charge of the Miles Brothers repair shop, then located at No. 10 East 14th Street, in which district the motion picture industry got its first growth. Thru the shop referred to, passed all of the projection equipment both before and after being used on "one-night" stands, and road shows that the Miles Company specialized in, and where, under Mr. Campbell's supervision, all projection equipment was thoroughly overhauled and inspected. This applied not only to the motion picture machines, but to all electrical apparatus as well.

During this period, Mr. Campbell also operated at the old Grand theatre on Grand Street, which house was then conducted by the Automatic Vaudeville Company.

Three years later, Mr. Campbell joined the Loew Company, which had just opened their first theatre located at Lenox Avenue and 125th Street, which location, for a long period, had housed the Penny Arcade thru which the wonderful Loew Company made its entry into the arena of amusements. Mr. Campbell was chief operator at this important house, and has, since that time, supervised the installation and lay-out of every Loew theatre projection room. Today, Mr. Campbell not only takes care of the many details that are a part of the making-ready and actual maintenance of the many Loew projection rooms, but he collaborates with the architects and builders of the new theatres as well. There are at present, 55 projectionists, not including assistants, under Mr. Campbell's direction, which gives one a definite idea of the scope of his position, the duties of which carry him into almost every city of importance in this land. Mr. Campbell is also one of the original members of Local No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., the New York City Union of Projectionists.

Mr. E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Company, is quite elated over this latest achievement and promises some most important announcements concerning other Simplex activities in the very near future.

49. What kind of receptacle is necessary for hot carbons?

Hot carbons should be placed in a pail of water or covered tin container.

50. Give method of testing for grounds.

Tests for ground may be made with a bell and battery set. Place one terminal on base of apparatus and the other terminal in the part to be tested. A ring is an indication of a ground.

51. How can positive carbons be detected?

The positive carbon is that one in which a crater is formed, and the one which remains red the longest when the current is cut off.

52. Is it possible to use 110 volt rheostat on 320 volt current?

One 110 rheostat cannot be used in a 220 volt circuit, but two 110 volt rheostats in series would be suitable.

53. Is it possible to use two 110 volt rheostats on one 110 volt projection circuit? If not, why? If so, how? And to what advantage?

Two 110 volt rheostats could not be connected in series in an arc circuit as this would not allow a high enough drop across the arc, however these two rheostats could be connected in parallel in order to obtain sufficient current carrying capacity.

54. Is it possible to connect two rheostats of different voltage on one projection circuit? If not, why? If so what will be the result?

It is usually not advisable to connect rheostats of unequal value in a projection circuit, unless care is taken to figure the total resistance of the rheostats as connected, and thus obtain the drop and current carrying capacity. This may be figured from Ohm's law.

"My piano teacher was so different than all of the other men. He never smiled on me, he never paid me pretty flatteries, he lived so far apart from my world and all our ordinary world, that I thought him always to be communing with the angels. He was so stern, so great, so thoroughly uncommon that—I was in love with him, really in love with him.

"He didn't know. Day after day when he called I would watch for him at the window and see him enter the door and come into the room and look at me with those stern, spiritual eyes, and command me to start. When he spoke to me, I looked so hard at him, that he seemed annoyed, and while I played he would walk behind my back and give the corrections.

"I wanted to fall on my knees before him and tell him that I . . . loved him. But he was so stern.

"Many suitors called for my hand. One more persistent than any other was the Count Gallenberg. He conferred with my father. . . . and it was decided that I should marry him. It was all arranged, quite finally".

"It was the evening before the formal announcement of the betrothal, that I was to have another lesson with Beethoven. I was bursting with agony and so was he—I could see it in his face. We had started the lesson, I was at the piano, when I heard a crushing sob, and I felt myself lifted into his arms, for one moment, for one moment. . . . he kissed me, his lips were salt with tears. . . . then he was gone.

"I was overwhelmed. He had never known I loved him. I never knew he loved me. I pulled myself together, and went into the dining room. 'Lesson over so soon? Why you've been crying' my father exclaimed. 'Yes,' I lied, 'I didn't know my lesson and Beethoven was mean to me, and I couldn't stand it any longer. So he's gone.'"

"That night when all the family were abed, I crept out of the house and down to Beethoven's room. He was fully dressed—sitting at the piano, his head in arms. He did not hear me enter, until I fell at his feet, and threw my arms around him, and sobbed out my heart. For an hour neither of us spoke. Then for another hour, only the confession of our love. Then. . . . the story of Gallenberg.

"Well, you man, you may well stare at me. I am a fine old, ugly woman to be telling of this. Look at the picture. That is the girl who spent these hours with Beethoven. . . . He dedicated. . . . the Moonlight Sonata. . . . to me. . . . Ah me, we were mad for weeks and weeks before that hateful wedding. It had to be. Beethoven had his work to do, and I would not take him from it. He loved me, always, he said. Here are letters I received from him, and even long after I was married. I saw him many times in secrecy. . . . I was Beethoven's one love."

At B the tenor sang: at D the soprano had her solo; at G the ballet appeared in Egyptian costumes (all the singers were in costumes of the opera), at H we returned to the Triumphal Entrance and used the double quartette.

The stage was kept in an old rose hue light; the text being used in the scrim.

Following is the screen text which can be read, letter by letter referring to the orchestral score (at certain times the text faded out—as for instance when the singers had their solos,—then the scrim was empty, but the text resumed at the last few notes of the solos.

Note: This entire overture occupies a little less than fifteen minutes; the best parts of the opera are used, and the newest comer to the opera must leave the theatre with an absolute knowledge of the score, which he'd never get from librettos or a first visit to the opera house.

It is said that Mr. Hyman plans to carry on a series of Operatic Digests that will bring to his patrons the whole operatic repertoire—in the course of several seasons.

The Operatic Digest

With the permission of Edward L. Hyman and the Brooklyn Strand, I am enabled to publish their first Operatic Digest. . . . Mr. Hyman asked me to assist in an idea he had developed. He wished to give his patrons the popular grand operas in such a way that as he put it:

1. The lovers of opera will get what they like.

2. Those who don't know the opera but want to know something of it will get the idea of its story and action, its atmosphere and its principal melodies.

3. Those who don't know the opera and don't want to be bored, won't be bored.

4. With this in mind, Messrs. Hyman and his musical director, Alois Reiser, and I had several conferences.

We used the orchestra with sixty pieces, the pipe organ, a double quartette, a ballet and screen text. The score of the opera was not changed in any particular—excepting that we only used a small part of it—the meat of it—and changed the order of the selections to suit the particular psychology of our presentation.

In any opera, certain atmosphere is predominant. In Pagliacci, it is the actor-stage and clown bit; in Cavalleria it is the Church-Easter bit; in Rigoletto it is the tragedy of the jester; in Tales of Hoffman it is the water-music. . . . And so on. In Aida the Egyptian music must be uppermost—hence we used the priestess theme as the opening and dominant bit, with the Nile scene music for the atmosphere.

Following is the score which was used:

SCORE

A—Orchestra—Priestess intonation theme (Scene 5—Act 1). (Note to conductor: very listless, sensuous, and slowly. About three full minutes.) Page 60 in score, full orchestra over to end of Page 64.

B—Tenor—"Oh Celeste Aida" (Heavenly Aida). Begin Page 7, third brace to end of Aria, Page 11.

D—Soprano—"Ritorna Vincitor (Return victorious). (Middle part of Aria only.) Top of page 54 to end of change of key, Page 56.

H—Quartette—Glory Chorus—Page 112, down to first bar, second brace, Page 115.

FINALE

CHARLES D. ISAACSON'S
INTERPRETATION OVERTURE
AIDA
By Giuseppe Verdi.

A—Egypt. Old land of ancient splendor. The days of the Pharaohs, when Egypt was the ruler of the universe. The temples, the pyramids, the cruelties, the chanting religions of strange rites, the colorful, sensuous hot lands. . . . Slaves, courtiers, dancers, priests, soldiers—and in the midst of it all in the close confines of the temples and the palaces, a conflict of opposing emotions.

We are in the Palace of the King of Egypt. The high ceilings, statues, exotic plants, the mystic temples. Deities leer, there are rows of columns, one behind the other into the distance and darkness. The god sculptured in stone frowns. Drowsy intoning, narco incense, a mysterious light from above.

B—Gallant Rhadames, the finest soldier in the roun has secretly adored Aida. He sings "O Heaven Aida," who is always in his thoughts.

Rhadames is slave to Aida. Aida returns the lov Amneris suspects and always seeks to learn the secr of her hand-maid. To win her were Greater Than t Throne.

C—But there is no time for love-making. The riv armies are reported outside the nation, and Rhadam has been selected by high priests and king to le the Egyptian armies.

Go forth Rhadames—up, up Nile's sacred river, gua your nation. Return—Return Rhadames, victorious.

So the people shout, the king commands, the pries pray.

D—Aida also prays for him to return victorious.

Aida, dusky maid, is held prisoner by the Egyptian Herself, a daughter of Kings, she is now hand-ma to Amneris, Egyptian princess.

Aida secretly nursing the love of Rhadames is in th midst of terrific emotions.

If Rhadames falls, my lover die—oh woe is me, Aid

Yet, if Rhadames win, my people's land will ru in blood, my father conquered—while my captors flau my dearest hopes asunder.

Return victorious—what can Aida really pray?

E—Yet ever the priests commune with their idol The frowning adamant god, Ptah, looks down relen lessly.

The high priests croon—the chorus drowsily intone in the darkness and the mystic temple.

While in the distance, the Nile sluggishly flows i its ancient bed.

The moon shines brightly in a yellow dazzle; th deep blue of the sky illumined by a million stars.

The calls of frogs, myriad insects, the dull accent of the river—and the midnight calm.

In the distance, the Temple, where the priests in tone their prayer.

TIME PASSES

F—Triumph. The soldiers return victorious.
The entrance to the city of a thousand gates.

Vast crowds await the returning heroes. Ancien civilization's proudest march!

The Index to The Complete Plan Book

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

MONEY-CHANGERS, THE (BENJ. B. HAMPTON-PATHE).....NOV. 6
"Hectic melodrama may draw in the neighborhood houses."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—consistently satisfactory business all week." "Went over in fine shape. Corking good story with plenty of action, and it scored nicely."

MOUNTAIN WOMAN, THE (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....FEB. 5
"An excellent Pearl White vehicle."—M. P. News.

MR. WU (STOLL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA) LANG-M'CARTHY .....JAN. 1
"Unique and strongly dramatic from plot angle."—M. P. News.

NEW YORK IDEA, THE (REALART) ALICE BRADY.....DEC. 18
"Stage success not so good as a picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The very best picture Miss Brady has made on the Realart program. Ran a two-reel Harold Lloyd comedy with this one and we had a program that was hard to beat. Drew usual Sunday and Monday crowds; big to average business."

NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY .....JAN. 8
"Ray scores again with pleasing study of small town life."—M. P. News.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE, THE (REX BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 30
"Probably the best Beach picture yet produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not much. Did fair business." "Good picture of the cold Northwest which did excellent business for two weeks, having been held over a second week on account of the large crowds it drew the first seven days." "A very good picture, to very good business considering the fact that it is the week before Christmas." "This is the sort of picture they seem to like. Went over big three days."

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE.....NOV. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard, although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box-office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

OH, LADY, LADY (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....JAN. 1
"Rather light but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture. Bebe Daniels has become very popular here in her short career as a star. This picture has lost nothing; it is transition to the movies." "Good picture to average business." "Great. Bebe certainly has a great following here, and this picture went over 100% better than her first. Believe she is going to be one of the biggest drawing cards among stellar-folk." "Good picture and business was very good during run." "Good picture—good entertainment. Meets modern popular taste. Average satisfactory business."

OLD FASHIONED BOY, AN (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY .....NOV. 13
"Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard." "Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business." "Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and whirls like he was crazy. Only fair business." "Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual." "A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)" "One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it." "An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box-office attraction, howeve." "Audience greatly enjoyed star in this picture ,which attracted overflow business during holidays." "Not up to the usual Ray picture and after opening business dwindled."

ONE MAN IN A MILLION (BEBAN-LESSER-ROBERTSON-COLE) GEORGE BEBAN.....JAN. 29
"Character study is satisfying offering."—M. P. News.

OUTSIDE THE LAW (UNIVERSAL) PRISCILLA DEAN.....JAN. 22
"Best straight melodrama in many a day."—M. P. News.

PAGAN LOVE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Magazine story developed into mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

PASSION (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 23
"German picture is spectacular; wonderfully acted."—M. P. News.

PASSIONATE PILGRIM, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Better than average picture from well known novel."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Paramount seems to have fallen down here this season in its big releases. This picture did only an average gross."

PAYING THE PIPER (FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORP.) DOROTHY DICKSON.....JAN. 29
"Well produced domestic drama that will please."—M. P. News.

PEACEFUL VALLEY (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY..OCT. 23
"Humorous incident, rustic settings and Charles Ray—enough."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Registered a big hit. A real Ray triumph. Audiences applaud enthusiastically." "Very good week. Ray always sure of big business. This considered much better than '45 Minutes from Broadway.'" "Charles Ray in any story is enough to pack this house. In 'Peaceful Valley' he is cast in a role that his admirers want to see him in. The picture attracted capacity houses for a seven-day run." "Did very well. Picture entertaining and box-office results good." "A pleasing feature which took well in my theatre. As to box-office value it is a pretty good bet." "An improvement over "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," but not his best by any means. Usual business."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1) .....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

"Great vehicle for Lon Chaney, but falls short in many ways."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture, although some women were shocked at the idea of Lon Chaney with legs cut off." "Very good. Chaney's work is wonderful. Average business four days." "Wonderful story and very fine acting on Chaney's part. Good business." "A great picture. It went over exceedingly well. Was well liked, and brought big box-office returns."

PINK TIGHTS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....SEPT. 25
"Slight story, but entertaining incident, in circus picture." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Turned them away at night." "The boiled down opinions on this picture is 'Old Stuff.'"

PLUNGER, THE (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....NOV. 20
"Story of frenzied finance makes ordinary picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a surprise. First time Walsh has been tried out for a week here. Even in the week before Christmas it drew."

POLLY WITH A PAST (METRO) INA CLAIRE.....DEC. 18
"Ina Claire's rare artistry makes her a welcome screen figure."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair. The picture is entertaining but lacks pep."

PRAIRIE TRAILS (FOX) TOM MIX.....JAN. 1
"Trivial story, senseless action and a few good thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regular Mix picture. Well liked. Big crowds, mostly men." "A fine picture which brought more than usual business."

PRISONERS OF LOVE (RELEASED BY GOLDWYN) BETTY COMPSON .....JAN. 29
"Very unusual and artistic drama."—M. P. News.

RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....JAN. 29
"Gladys Walton scores in heart interest story."—M. P. News.

RISKY BUSINESS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....DEC. 4
"Good combination makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

ROGUES AND ROMANCE (PATHE) SEITZ-CAPRICE-COURTOT..JAN. 1
"Good production given thrilling story."—M. P. News.

ROMANCE PROMOTERS, THE (VITAGRAPH) EARLE WILLIAMS.JAN. 29
"The sun shines on Earle Williams in this one."—M. P. News.

ROMANTIC ADVENTURES (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY DALTON..JAN. 22
"This one looks like a vehicle."—M. P. News.

ROOKIE'S RETURN, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MACLEAN-MAY .....JAN. 8
"Quite frail but fairly pleasing."—M. P. News.

SAGE HEN, THE (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST... ...JAN. 22
"A well-produced dramatic story of the west."—M. P. News.

SCUTTLERS, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....DEC. 25
"Farnum has a 'He-Man' role in story of the sea."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fully up to the average as to Farnum productions. Pleased our audiences. Business good considering general conditions."

SHE PLAYED AND PAID (JOAN FILM SALES) FANNIE WARD..NOV. 27
"Fannie Ward's acting the redeeming feature here."—M. P. News.

SHOCKING NIGHT, A (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN.....JAN. 15
"Not substantial enough for five reels."—M. P. News.

SILVER LINING, THE (METRO) JEWEL CARMEN.....JAN. 15
"Interesting crook play brings Jewel Carmen back to the screen."—M. P. News.

SINS OF ROSANNE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON .....OCT. 23
"Very little appeal in this wildly fantastic story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good business. Satisfactory to people willing to accept story as just movie. Rather good drawing qualities. Many liked it."

SLAVE OF VANITY, A (ROBERTSON-COLE) PAULINE FREDERICK .....OCT. 30
"Big from a production and acting standpoint."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good business. The picture satisfied a critical audience." "Fair picture, business very good."

SMILING ALL THE WAY (D. N. SCHWAB-STATE RIGHTS) DAVID BUTLER .....NOV. 27
"Butler's third is well produced and thoroughly interested."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"David Butler's popularity growing with each picture. There was nothing spectacular about this—but it was a clean little picture, well received."

SO LONG LETTY (CHRISTIE-ROBERTSON-COLE) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 30
"Famous stage success intelligently adapted to screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Street car scene where bathing girls disrobe should be cut out by all exhibitors that run it, as it has some bad morals."

SOMEONE IN THE HOUSE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

"Impressive moments in this artistic production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent production in every way." "A great picture and drew like house afire." "Now here is a picture. Typical De Mille cast, direction and all. Not as enjoyable throughout, of course, as 'Why Change Your Wife,' but finely built for contrast of action and suspense. Big business carried over another week." "Drew very good houses to excellent business during fourth week of its run. Crowds continued." "Picture so good business grows. Held for a third week." "This picture is entertaining and sure did go over extra big. House crowded every performance." "Holding for second week in a one-week house which tells the story."

SONG OF THE SOUL, THE (MESSMORE KENDALL-GOLDWYN) VIVIAN MARTIN.....OCT. 23
"Fine basic plot, but lacks action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a great picture but Vivian Martin's charm and cleverness put it over. Played to good business for a week."

SOWING THE WIND (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....JAN. 29
"Powerful drama, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.

SPENDERS, THE (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Quite interesting picture made from best seller."—M. P. News.

SQUANDERED LIVES (STOLL FILM COMPANY OF AMERICA)..JAN. 1
"Viewed from all angles, rather a notable film"—M. P. News.

STAR ROVER, THE (SHURTLEFF-METRO) COURTNEY FOOTTHELMA PERCY .....NOV. 27
"Artistic production, but disappointing for a London story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. The plot is well put together and the details are worked out well."

TAVERN KNIGHT, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"This one will hardly interest the majority."—M. P. News.

"Sure fire western with star in the kind of role that made him famous."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Certainly a fine picture and a sure-fire box-office attraction. Picture seemed to please and went fine all week." "Best Bill had done to date." "An average picture which went over big. Hart great favorite here." "Best picture Hart's made in a long while. Marks his return to the sort he does best and that people want. Fine business."

TEXAN, THE (FOX) TOM MIX.....NOV. 27
"Average entertainment in this Mix offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Tom Mix still popular. Picture pleases though not as good as other recent ones. We boosted a Clyde Cook comedy to help business."

THAT GIRL MONTANA (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET..JAN. 8
"Star dominates pleasing production."—M. P. News.

THIEF, THE (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....DEC. 11
Fairly interesting, with Pearl White scoring a hit."—M. P. News.

THOUGHTLESS WOMEN (GOODMAN-PIONEER) ALMA RUBENS.NOV. 27
"Human document with real life-like touches."—M. P. News.

"Arbitrary plot and coincidence hinder the values here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture. Virile. Interesting. Steady business all week in spite of proximity to Christmas." "A great picture but poor business on account of the holiday season."

TIGER TRUE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....Jan. 22
"Rather crude but carries a punch."—M. P. News.

TO PLEASE ONE WOMAN (LOIS WEBER PRODUCTIONS-PARAMOUNT .....JAN. 1
"Falls rather short for a Lois Weber production."—M. P. News.

TORRENT, THE (UNIVERSAL) EVA NOVAK.....JAN. 8
"Orthodox story makes rather colorful picture."—M. P. News.

TRUANT HUSBAND, THE (ROCKETT FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 23
"Simple and human is this contribution."—M. P. News.

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS, THE (WHITMAN BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 25
"Orthodox but careful production of well-known play."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to good business. Audience seemed delighted with it." "Drew very strongly at the box office and my people liked the picture."

"Famous stage success scores a hit on the screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Audiences laughed long and heartily. Seemed to give entire satisfaction." "Spicy advertising helped to keep the ticket sellers busy." "Excellent polite comedy. Nothing risque in it, but always spicy. Splendid week's business." "One of the best comedies I have played in a long time. Went over great. Box-office receipts entirely satisfactory for week's run." "Carter de Haven at his best, but many did not like it. Poor business due to holidays." "Another stage farce gone wrong. A good program picture. Business about average." "An excellent attraction that proved a remarkable drawing card for three days. Kept our crowds laughing from title to close-up." Big business three days."

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

" Pathe of Glory "

(Chester Outing-Educational)

MANY are the scenes which this one-reeler show in and about Pekin, China. And there isn't one of the many which hasn't interest value.

The reel covers a lot of territory from the opening scenes which show the camels which are used to a great extent in China as beasts of burden, being led by coolies, to the closing views of the enormous tombs and tombstones erected to the emperors of bygone times.

The state reception hall, the office of the premier, his cabinet and even the president himself, with his children, march down the marble steps of the " Chinese White House " and stand for a close-up before the camera.

A good educational and instructional.—FRANK LEONARD.

" Golf "

(Cinal Slow-Speed-Educational)

HERE'S one for the golfers. It's a half reel principally of slow motion stuff showing how to hit the ball and then chase it for another hit.

The instructor shows you how to hit the ball straight from the shoulder and at the same time turn the wrists, the slow motion giving an accurate account of how its done.

The mashe approach, the bunker shot, the approach put, and the shot put are all illustrated and made easy by the slow motion photography.

This is a splendid half reel for those interested in this sport.

If your patrons care for the sport, by all means book it. If they don't, it is a question.—FRANK LEONARD.

" The Mambuti Pigmies "

(Paramount-Vandenbergh)

THE third series of pictures taken by the Paramount-Vandenbergh Expedition in British East Africa and Uganda are worthy companion pieces to the forerunners. They present educational values which cannot be disputed since they offer most interesting close-ups of a race of pigmies, doomed to extinction. It is difficult to believe that there could be a race of people so backward—so absolutely hopeless. They have no conception of time, religion or occupation. Averaging a height of four feet, they live their circumscribed lives in the heart of the Uganda jungles, subsisting entirely on nuts, bugs, and certain animals.

Dr. Vandenbergh has shown great patience in photographing these people who are naturally timid. He had to coax them into the sunlight with salt—a substance which doubtless appealed to them and which they have long needed. The subject is rich entertainment and surpasses the average photoplay because it offers something which is unusual. Certainly it is a novelty to see pictures of a group of people who are a part of civilization and yet not a part of it. The two reels are packed with humorous incidents. As for instance, the silly little dance which is done monotonously in a circle with the participants closely crowded together. Truly the shimmy.

The natives have no sense of shame and nurse their infants and disport themselves at their simple pastimes au naturel. They build leaf huts to sleep in—huts which aren't as well constructed as birdnests. No wonder they are doomed! And they are as temperamental in front of a camera as a matinee idol. The camera is certainly a great medium for enlightenment. The races and places of the globe are being shown to us. It behooves us to show our appreciation by becoming acquainted with them. —Length two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" Whirl of the West "

(Snub Pollard—Pathe)

"SNUB" POLLARD'S latest is rather short on comedy, but it certainly provides compensation with some of the best action and stunts in which this actor has ever indulged. In fact we didn't believe " Snub " could do the acrobatic contortions he performed on a wild horse and get away with it.

In his endeavor to escape from a band of " shoot 'em up " cowboys the star seizes a horse, mounts him and does a series of " Arabs " on his back that equals anything ever done by a troop of trick riders.

This is one of the big moments in the comedy which sparkles in action from the time " Snub " goes West to meet a relative to the finish.

Pollard's two assistants, the fat fellow and the little negro boy, act as splendid foils for the comedian and assist in many of the situations.

Although there are a few good comedy scenes in the picture, it relies mostly on the development of its situations and the action which it contains.—FRANK LEONARD.

" Back From the Front "

(Christie Comedy-Educational)

THE fellow who would palm himself off as a hero is the idea behind the latest Christie comedy starring Bobby Vernon—an idea which never grows old because it is akin to human nature. " Back from the Front " is about the best full grown legitimate comedy which has reached the screen in some time. There is no slapstick present, nor any recourse to burlesque. What is depicted is genuine. Bobby has been a " stay at home " lieutenant. When the boys come back with their decorations for bravery his humiliation seems complete. He is invited to a week-end and to make a hit palms himself as the most successful " ace " in the aviation service. Now everything would have been O. K. had Bobby just talked of his exploits. He never dreamed that he would have to indulge in aviation feats. He attempts to find a way out of his difficulty but to no avail. He is forced to take the air and the evolutions certainly spell a heroism as great as that he might have earned during the war.

The high spots of the picture come when the ambulance corps attempt to follow him about. A quartet of ambulances in perfect formation, wheel and turn, and race, over the field to be near when the machine tumbles to earth. It is a very humorous bit and one that will be appreciated wherever it is shown. Eventually Bobby is forced to fly with his fiancee's father. The entire house party are indulging in hero-worshipping. But Bobby never leaves the ground. Instead the aeroplane skims over the surface and strikes a hugh haystack and Bobby and his future father-in-law are propelled through space. He hasn't proved himself much of a hero, but he has the satisfaction in knowing that he will not be urged to fly again.

There is no repetitious detail, the company builds from its idea, sending out thrills and humor without effort. It certainly scored with the Rialto audience in New York. After one has been " slapsticked " to boredom it is a relief to see something which can conquer with realities. " Back from the Front " is a sure-fire comedy—a refined comedy, but one which carries a " kick " like 500 bomb proof " likker." Christie will have the slapstick directors eating out of his hand if he continues with similar ideas.—Length, 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" Astray from the Steerage "

(Paramount—Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

HERE is a Sennett comedy that is good for many a laugh. Clever gags mark it throughout. It is a story of a pair of immigrants who arrive in America with no knowledge of English and a little baby. The physical examination of immigrants is admirably burlesqued. Our hero, stripped to the waist, is strapped to a chair which revolves about in pinwheel fashion at a high rate of speed. His examiners, all good Sennett types, calmly read the paper during the test. Strange to say no sub-title comments upon " taking no more revolution out of him."

The couple are mixed up in a great deal of trouble by a bootlegger who wants to smuggle a bottle of booze into the country by means of the immigrants. There are two detectives who can smell whiskey within a radius of a couple of miles. The smuggler, hidden in the immigrants trunk, is unable to escape them. There is lots of action in the home of the employer with the detectives, smugglers and irate husband. Louis Fazenda is especially good as the foreign wife.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"MAN–WOMAN–MARRIAGE"
(Holubar-First National)

Propaganda and Spectacular Melodrama Are Blended Here

ALLEN HOLUBAR'S widely publicized picture, "Man-Woman-Marriage," certainly carries a healthy box-office value. The name of its sponsor, the attractive title and the fact that it carries a theme which will interest feminine audiences are sure-fire factors towards its success. There is no doubt that it offers spectacular appeal in the immensity of its sets depicting in the development the triumphant march of woman down through the ages, though these scenes have no place in the story proper other than showing the progress of the sex. The manner in which they are introduced certainly preclude any effort at direct continuity. Yet their very introduction sort of takes the sting off the propaganda.

Holubar hasn't done so well by his story which shows him at cross purposes with himself because he relegates his fine ideas to the background in order to bring forth purely melodramatic moments. His logic takes flight at critical times only to be brought back through captions which preach and moralize. In attempting to limit his scenes, continuity is dispensed with so that one is forced to jump at conclusions. The idea attempts to show the emancipation of woman. The wife is represented as the reincarnation of triumphant woman through the centuries and her memory goes back to the matriarchal age, the era of Constantine or the Elizabethan period. Here is Holubar and the players at their best. Some scenes are tremendous and have no more space in the picture than a passing subtitle, yet as brief as they are, tell more of the big idea than the orthodox and rather commonplace modern story. The battle of the Amazons is truly breath-taking and the knighthood scene when milady is carried off by a chivalrous trooper is like a rare tapestry. There is one "shot" which standus out distinctively in its representation of a mad orgy.

In all the picture carries a big idea which is more or less forced. That it is rich and colorful cannot be denied—that it is excellently acted cannot be disputed with Dorothy Phillips lending her emotional talents—that it has triumphant moments is certain. A mighty and dignified climax would give it the impressiveness that such a theme deserves. There is no question of its success. Holubar doesn't do things by halves and Dorothy Phillips is an actress of the first order. These names and the title cannot fail.—Length, 9 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE–STORY

Allen Holubar's tremendously spectacular drama, "Man—Woman—Marriage," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This offering is said to be one of the most lavish ever produced. The director who conceived the idea also has brought forth the emancipation of woman in terms of colorful appeal, compelling drama and scenes of spectacular dimensions. The emancipation of woman has been in progress throughout the ages and Holubar simply visualizes them in a manner which can be appreciated by all. A modern home is represented which depicts a marital conflict. The wife compares herself to heroic figures of the ages as she progresses toward her emancipation. In her search for complete independence and happiness she turns the pages of history and becomes a Christian slave, or an Amazon, or a lady of the Elizabethan age. The picture presents a forceful argument for womanhood and offers an entertaining drama in the bargain. Miss Phillips is ideal for the leading role and her cast is entirely efficient.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— takes great pleasure in announcing that Allen Holubar's tremendous spectacle, "Man—Woman—Marriage," is coming to the ———— theatre for an extended run. This feature is said to have taken months to prepare, which is believable in the magnitude of the sets and the number of people employed. Surely it marks a mile-post in the advancement of motion pictures. Its theme is vital and timely; its drama is always interesting and the magnificance of the production will be appreciated by all who attend the ———— next ————. Dorothy Phillips is the star and in the cast are James Kirkwood, Barney Sherry and Ralph Lewis.

SUGGESTIONS

Holubar's name; the name of the star and the names of the principal players; the attractive title—these are factors which cannot be dismissed in the exploitation of this feature. Get out your paper, play up the vital theme, tell of the immensity of the production and spread your arguments all over town through every conceivable medium. Spread them far in advance, too. Your crowd will flock to see this picture. You can link up with the churches and women's clubs. You can interest the feminine sex mightily. Bring out that it is the biggest picture of the year. Don't overlook a single bet in your exploitation.

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT"
(Fox)

Mark Twain Modernized in an Appealing Picture

FROM Mark Twain's story William Fox has produced a photoplay version which will please the majority of American picture audiences. He has taken a modern young American, transplanted him in a dream to the sixth century when King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table held forth in Britain and then piled one comic incident on top of another as the young fellow proceeds to Yankeeize and modernize the days of jousts and iron clad warriors. There is a plot of course, for the Yankee finds envious members of the Court to contend with and also a sixth century vamp to escape from. It is clever satire, and the titles, written throughout in a vein of slang unknown to Mark Twain, but which make excellent laugh-getters to-day, play an important part.

The scenic staff and art director who executed the medieval castle and banquet hall set deserve great credit. The production from a scenic standpoint would bring joy to the ghost of Tennyson just as the satire would make him writhe in anguish.

There are any number of good laughs from the time the Yankee awakes to find a mounted knight above him inviting him to "joust." He is taken to the court of King Arthur and there with his breezy Yankee familiarity, earns for himself the penalty of death. But he claims credit for an eclipse of the sun, and is made the King's magician. He is then sent out to rescue a maiden, as was customary among able gentlemen of those days. This he does, and then comes the tournament scene, one of the biggest in the picture, historically correct, pictorially beautiful and screamingly funny when our indomitable hero comes out on a broncho, dressed in a cowboy suit to contend with the prepossessing figure in armor. After this, preaching the doctrine of democracy, he induces the king to disguise as a peasant and journey forth in search of adventure. The pair are captured and about to be hung by the vampire-queen, when the rescue party sets forth—not on slow moving steeds, but in a flivver made from discarded armor, and a whole battalion of motorcycles. It is a thriller and at the same time ludicrous ride over the mountains. For each knight is still armor clad and carries his pennant and shield.

The picture is really subtly disguised flag-waving. It says the same thing as the village orator on the Fourth of July—that we are the pluckiest, gamest, nerviest and most democratic nation in the world—but it says it only insinuatingly. And that is its greatest appeal. For we have had Fords made from cast-off sheet metal before in slapstick, but the contrast between the carefree, give-'em-hell American and the ceremonious knights of the Round Table, is more than funny. It is an appeal to our national pride and to our love of the traditions of the traditional American.

Harry Myers plays the Yankee and gets a whole lot out of this wonderful part. Rosemary Theby is the wicked queen and Pauline Starke is an attractive heroine except in two close-ups. William Mong is splendid as Merlin and Charles Clary is King Arthur. Emmett Flynn's direction is quite flawless and his staging of the tournament is a wonderful piece of work.—Length, 8 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The management of the ———— announces one of the biggest pictures of the year as the attraction beginning ————. It is none other than "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," a picturization of the immortal story by Mark Twain by the same name. The dean of American humorists, had he lived until today, would welcome this screen version of his wonderful satire. For Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee," is just as real and just the same happy-go-lucky young fellow on the silversheet as he was in the author's book.

From the time when the young Yankee is transplanted to the sixth century in his dream until he wakes up to find himself still in the library of his palatial home, the picture is crammed with screamingly funny satire of the highest type. Especial attention has been paid to the correct picturing of the medieavel tournament scenes. Our young hero comes forth to joust with the armor-clad warrior on his armor-clad horse, riding a broncho and swinging a lariat. It is a scene which will more than interest any American—it will enchant him, thrill him and amuse him at the same time.

Playing in this wonderful satire are Rosemary Theby, Harry Myers, Pauline Starke, Charles Clary and William V. Mong. The direction was handled capably by Emmett Flynn, and Bernard McConville scenarioized Mark Twain's story, changing it only where it was necessary for the retention of screen technique.

"A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

"THE FIRST BORN"
(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

Good Title, Heart Interest and Hayakawa's Acting Should Attract Them

GIVE this Japanese star, Hayakawa, appropriate material and there is no reason why he cannot enter the popularity stakes along with American favorites. Time was when his sponsors gave him stories based upon the conflict of East versus West ,the very theme of which aroused animosity in certain circles. But "The First Born" like the memorable "Dragon Painter" is of strictly Oriental characterization and it carries enough sound ingredients to please anyone. The idea itself is absolutely sure-fire in appeal. The note of heart interest, the touch of juvenile interest—these are certain to attract feminine patronage. Place this splendid pantomimist in a sympathetic part and give him a good production and people will flock to see him.

"The First Born" takes up the Oriental romance in China. According to custom, the girl is sold into slavery and the hero is forced to marry one whom he doesn't love through obedience to his father. The action shifts to Frisco's Chinatown, the time, some years later. The young Oriental finds compensation for the loss of his sweetheart in his first born, a boy whom he adores. He doesn't dream that the girl of the romance is living the life of a slave in the household of the Evil One—not until he chances to meet her in the street. The lustful villain, to circumvent any threat of vengeance, sells the girl to a conspirator while he kidnaps the little boy. But the youngster in attempting to escape falls out of the window and is killed. This scene is made the most of by Hayakawa and he stresses the pathos and sentiment without once making it maudlin. His sorrow seems complete but time erases the sadness as he returns to China with his former sweetheart.

The author arranges this episode by showing his wife unfaithful and already entering bondage. The picture is remarkably rich in atmosphere, the settings being correct and generating romance and color. Those who expect something vivid in action are due to disappointment. The picture doesn't depend upon melodramatic incident for its charm and appeal. A Chinese romance can be made as effective as a Chinese melodrama of hate and vengeance. The star is supported by an adequate cast, although some of the Orientals show Occidental traces in their expressions and customs. However, one doesn't pay much attention to the subordinates when Hayakawa is present. While he doesn't "hog" a scene his personality is so vivid and his pantomime so genuine that one only looks at the others as so much atmosphere. "The First Born" should draw like a house afire. It has a universal appeal. A simple and expressive feature with a star who is thoroughly grounded in his art.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the eminent Japanese star, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in his latest production, "The First Born." This adaptation of Francis Powers' play gives the talented Hayakawa a splendid opportunity to display his exceptional pantomime. He appears in the role of Chan Wang whose sweetheart is stolen from him in China and who is forced to marry another in obedience to his father's wishes. He comes to America and ekes out a livelihood as a wood peddler in Frisco's Chinatown, the tragedy of his life being compensated for in the happiness he finds with Chan Toy, his first born. He never dreams that his erstwhile sweetheart is the slave of Man Low Yek, a notorious dive-keeper, until he chances upon her in the street.

The evil one remembers the romance and to circumvent Chan Wang's revenge kidnaps the youngster. The little boy, frightened, falls out of the window and dies. His father's despair is overwhelming, but time erases the sorrow when he renews his romance with Loey Tsing who enters his life again when the mercenary marriage is disrupted. The picture is crammed with moments of heart interest which stress pathos and sentiment. But it is also rich in melodramatic action and suspense. Colorful backgrounds provide perfect atmosphere. Maurice Campbell directed.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— considers himself fortunate in being able to present the talented Sessue Hayakawa in the first of his 1921 productions, "The First Born." Certainly his place has been achieved on the screen by his ability to interpret the most effective pantomime. "The First Born" is said to be one of the finest productions in which the Japanese star has ever appeared. It is rich in action and suspense, pathos and sentiment, and is told against a picturesque background of perfect atmosphere. The picture will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Prominent in the cast are Helen Jerome Eddy and Marie Pavis. Don't miss this sterling picture of Oriental romance and thrills.

CATCH LINES

With his first born he found a happiness which compensated for the loss of his boyhood sweetheart. See "The First Born" with Sessue Hayakawa.

"THE KENTUCKIANS"
(Paramount)

Very Little Drama Here; Backgrounds Are Interesting

IT doesn't take a great deal of imagination to penetrate the idea behind a John Fox story. In "The Kentuckians" he dwells upon his favorite theme—the conflict between the mountaineers and the blue grass aristocracy. The plot being obvious, the director should have hidden its shortcomings with moving incident or substituted action which would make it resemble something else than a picture of illustrated subtitles. A goodly portion of the story details the conversations between a small group of characters. One will walk into a scene and argue and a shot will show him making an exit. Such a bit will be followed by a long and explanatory caption. There is a small representation of a feud depicted which is more or less subordinated for the talky conflict between the rugged legislator from "them thar hills" and the aristocrat from the Blue Grass.

The homespun hero is dreadfully serious and is guided by a sense of honor which destroys sympathy. Rather than aid in releasing his convict brother he permits the law to take its course. This attitude will save the mountain counties from being absorbed. There is a play at romance which is easy to guess if one knows the author at all. The girl marries the aristocrat when she realizes that he has developed some character. The director has staged the picture among truly enchanting backgrounds. In fact the Kentucky atmosphere looks like the genuine thing. The hills, the ramshackled homes of the mountaineers, the valleys and the winding roads—these are much more interesting to watch than the obvious thread of story. There are two scenes which carry a little color—one shows a fight between the rugged hero and his kinsmen and enemies from the hills, the other shows an attempted raid on the jail.

It strikes us the jail delivery should have been shown to compensate for the talky tone of the picture. As it is there is no suspense generated. And the aristocrat and the girl jumping through the lines of the raiders at the psychological moment smacks of movie heroics. There isn't any comedy relief. And humor could have been found by incorporating some homespun touches in the hill scenes even though it would be unfaithful to the story. The action is serious; the same may be said of the characterization. Monte Blue as the mountaineer is a good type, but it isn't a clearly defined portrayal because of the subdued key in which he is guided. Wilfred Lytell as the aristocrat is called upon to orate and walk in and out of sets. And he does it with excellent poise. Local color may be found in some of the extras. "The Kentuckians" has too much conversation and descriptive matter and very little drama.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Kentuckians" is the name of the feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of John Fox's stirring story of the same name and presents a cast of notable players among whom are Monte Blue, Wilfred Lytell, Diana Allen, J. H. Gilmour and John Miltern. It is a story of a mountain man, of a distinguished son of the Blue Grass, and of the Governor's daughter. With the avowed ambition of obtaining emancipation for his people in the mountains of Kentucky, Boone Stallard goes to the Kentucky Legislature.

He discovers that the aristocrats of the Blue Grass regions are in conflict with him but he triumphs in the end through his honesty of purpose. The picture is told against backgrounds which are rich in spectacular appeal. The mountains, the hills, the valleys, the streams, the winding roads, the sunsets,—these are all brought out and give the picture much of its atmosphere. The action presents a deal of clever incident which always interests. And the acting is of high calibre. Charles Maigne directed.

PROGRAM READER

"The Kentuckians" will come to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast headed by that sterling actor, Monte Blue. This is a picture version of John Fox's story of the same name and deals with the ever present conflict between the hardy mountaineers and the aristocrats of the Blue Grass region. It is filled with tense moments, big dramatic situations and climaxes which exert a powerful appeal. A plain story of bitter struggle—of vital contrasts—of love, romance, pathos and sentiment—that is "The Kentuckians." The picture retains the fine characterizations, the simple mountain atmosphere and the appealing romance of the book. Monte Blue is ideal for the leading role. Others in the company are Wilfred Lytell, Diana Allen and John Miltern.

SUGGESTIONS

A John Fox story is sure in its appeal. So exploit this by telling that this true son of Kentucky is the author. Play up that the picture is a faithful adaptation of the book and that it features that fine type, Monte Blue. This actor is not only a splendid type but he knows something of his art. You might mention that he scored a big hit in "The Jucklins." Play up the appealing romance, the fine atmosphere, the wonderful characterizations. Have your orchestra play "The Southern Rhapsody," by Lucius Hosmer.

"THE FIRE CAT"
(Universal)

Edith Roberts Scores in Carmenesque Role

NOT since "Lasca" has Edith Roberts had such an ideal vehicle for the expression of her vital and vibrant personality as "The Fire Cat," written and directed by Norman Dawn. While it is a familiar pattern insofar as its theme and characterization are concerned, the director has incorporated some clever incident, a goodly measure of suspense and a great deal of local color and atmosphere. The latter ingredients are richly presented in nearly every scene and are so realistic that the spectator is transported to the locale. "The Fire Cat" holds the attention because of its painstaking detail and the picturesque characterization. Miss Roberts, in the title role, puts plenty of nerve and vivacity in the portrayal—a portrayal which she makes compelling. Her supporting company is also thoroughly in character. Properly costumed a player would have to be a rank amateur not to present the right conception of the part.

The star appears as the daughter of a proud Castilian family and the introductory footage is given over to planting the characters. Once the motive of the action is established, the picture moves with considerable vigor. So "The Fire Cat" becomes a story of vengeance rather than romance. Her mother being robbed and killed by a notorious bandit, it behooves her to execute revenge. Hence the title. She goes to a wicked town and absorbs its atmosphere for the purpose of hunting down the assassin. Which of course permits her to score with Carmenesque touches. There is no let-down in the action, but the director saves his trump card for the finish. This climax depicts a volcanic eruption which destroys this South American Sodom and is certainly realistic to a degree. Some may object to the way that the backgrounds move back and forth. But it is no easy task to stage a scene of such proportions. Mr. Dawn has taken a good sized hill, considerable dynamite, started some huge bonfires and the result is an achievement of the first order. There is a touch or two of double exposure which is also praiseworthy.

Naturally the eruption takes the life of the arch-villain which saves the heroine from committing murder. Other incidents include a "he-man" fight between the hero and the heavy and an uncanny touch depicting a diabolical scheme of vengeance. An admirer of the girl uses a tarantula as an instrument of death, releasing the poisonous spider upon the face of the sleeping victim. The romance doesn't have much opportunity to intrude and isn't missed in a story which depends upon vivid action and startling incident. The picture is told mostly against exteriors all of which are in harmony except one bit of painted scenery. Your patrons will like the star here. It is a good bet for her and her following.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edith Roberts, the Universal star, who flashed a distinctive personality in "Lasca," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Fire Cat," a picture said to be ideal for the expression of her charm and talent. Written and directed by Norman Dawn, it carries the same elements as "Lasca" and "The Adorable Savage"—which is to say that it is well fortified with good action and incident. The location of the story is South America—at the base of Cotopaxi. There it is that Dulce Alvarez, a young Castilian girl, who to avenge the brutal murder of her mother, becomes a habitue of a dance hall in a foul Peruvian mining camp and lures the assassin to his doom. Into her life comes a young American who brings to light her finer nature.

The picture permits the star to run the scale of human passion and she receives very capable support from Wallace McDonald and others. The backgrounds are rich in picturesque appeal with some of the scenes being exceedingly gripping in action, articularly the one which shows the demolishing of a town by a volcano. Indeed, the director has been painstaking in his attention to atmosphere and detail.

PROGRAM READER

"The Fire Cat" is Edith Roberts' latest picture and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. It may be described as a colorful story of life in the South American mining district, in the heart of the Andes. Miss Roberts depicts the role of a native girl of primitive passions. In one of the startling scenes she leaves the shelter of her mountain home to go to the lawless town where she becomes a dancer. Her motive is to mete out revenge upon the despoiler of her home. The picture is remarkably rich in picturesque backgrounds and is said to afford the spectator a story of vivid action and incident. Wallace McDonald appears in the opposite role.

SUGGESTIONS

This Universal star is rapidly forging to the front since her memorable performance in "Lasca." So play her up prominently. Tell that she has in "The Fire Cat," a picture cut from the same pattern. Tell that it permits her to run the scale of human passion in a role which has been written with her in mind. Use stills of her in her colorful costumes and offer those of the leading man, Wallace McDonald. Bill it as a vigorous melodrama of life and love, passion and sentiment in a South American mining camp. Play it up as a melodrama which carries one thrill after the other. Your musical program can be arranged from typically Spanish airs. You can have some talented dancer execute some native dances.

"WING TOY"
(Fox)

A Shirley Mason Vehicle Slightly Below Past Performances

AS in the case with other stars of the dainty and cute type, Fox seems to be endeavoring, in starring Shirley Mason, to give her a chance to portray every nationality on the globe. Here she is a Chinese, or rather a supposedly-Chinese girl, who acts just as vivaciously and who frolics about with as much vim, as in her previous pictures.

The story is laid in America where the girl has been brought up by a laundryman in the Chinatown of an American city. It develops in the end into more or less simple melodrama, deserting the romantic and human interest touches of some of her past performances to bring in some rescue scenes by the hero, who breaks down thick doors with axes just as the horrible Chinese ogre is about to marry the star. It is gripping enough, but it is not the kind of stuff they have learned to expect from Shirley Mason.

The star herself does not disappoint except possibly in her appearance. Playing a Chinese part her short-cut hair is plastered tight to the sides of her face and throughout the picture she is not allowed to make herself as attractive as it is possible for her to be. Raymond McKee has not a part which gives him any opportunities, for romance is not the dominating note of this picture. Harry Northrup stands forth as a capable Chinese villain. The others in the cast are average.

The story is of the Chinese-American variety. There is none of the plum-blossom pomp and ceremony of a straight Oriental picture. Wing Toy as a baby, was adopted by a Chinese laundryman, forced by poverty to forfeit his protectorate. Yen Low, the proprietor of a gambling den, has brought her up since the age of five, and seeks to marry her on her sixteenth birthday. A cub reporter, having met her once, has fallen in love with her, and seeks to have the den raided by the police. At the same time the mystery of the girl's birth is solved. She is the daughter of the district attorney. The criminal who kidnapped her thoughtfully telephones the entire details of her history and her coming marriage to the father. Then comes the raid and the rescue scene.

There is one touch which is not sympathetic. Wing Toy, in order to escape the coming marriage is anxious to run away and mary the benevolent Chinese laundryman who has brought her up as a baby and who is pictured as the most fatherly of persons.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Wing Toy.....Shirley Mason
Bob.....Raymond McKee
Wong.....Edward McWade
Yen Low.....Harry S. Northrup
White Lily.....Betty Schade
The Mole.....Scott McKee

Story by Pearl Doles Bell.
Scenario by Thomas Dixon, Jr.
Direction by Howard M. Mitchell.
Assistant Director, Edward Dodds.
Photography by Glenn McWilliams.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Shirley Mason, the dainty Fox star, is the featured player in "Wing Toy," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Mason was recently elevated to stardom by William Fox, and is fast gaining as many followers among screen patrons as her sister, Viola Dana.

In "Wing Toy," she has been given a story which gives her every opportunity to display her remarkable personality. She is cast as a little girl of Chinatown, where she was brought when a baby by a man who left her with a kind-hearted Chinese laundryman to bring up. So Wing Toy grew up to be sixteen and used chopsticks instead of knives and forks and wore Chinese silks instead of pretty American dresses. In the end she is brought to her true American home, and wins a true American husband.

There are some thrilling and exciting scenes laid in a Chinese gambling house, where pretty Wing Toy is held a captive. There are also sets of exquisite beauty, for the Chinese luxurious and lavish home life has been faithfully reproduced on the screen.

WING TOY ———— PLAN BOOK ————

PROGRAM READER

Shirley Mason, the dainty and attractive screen star, is the featured player in the picture scheduled for ———— and ———— at the ———— theatre. It is a story of the Chinatown of a large American city and is entitled "Wing Toy." The story is by Pearl Doles Bell, a well known novelist who has written other photoplays in which Miss Mason has been starred. Petit, bobbed-haired, vivacious and of a whimsical and unfailing personality, Shirley Mason has won for herself a large following in the series of pictures in which she has played the leading role.

"Wing Toy" is a story of a little girl of Chinatown who was adopted when a baby, by a kind hearted Chinese laundryman. Her birth is shrouded in mystery and although her eyes are not slanting nor her features of Oriental type, she eats with chopsticks, worships Chinese gods and wears Chinese dress. How she finds her true father, and at the same time a true husband, forms the basis of this interesting photoplay.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a star in Shirley Mason who is now fairly well established. Her previous pictures, beginning with "Her Elephant Man," have gradually increased her following. Apparently her period of probation as a star is over. So devote a good part of your advertising to exploiting her.

Carmel Myers Is Appealing in Greenwich Village Formula

THE vibrant personality of Carmel Myers is certainly felt in "The Mad Marriage," a picture based upon the favorite Greenwich Village formula. The popular conception of life in the village is something extraordinary—that its inhabitants are so "arty"—that conventions are flouted in every form of conduct. Place a hero in a painter's jacket, permit him to dabble with a brush, introduce some high jinks and you have it. This is really a respectable little story which seems more appropriate with an ordinary background. But Greenwich Village is supposed to lend it the required atmosphere. It is all about a temperamental artist who marries for convenience and realizes after months of indifference, or jealousy, or both, that his wife is quite adorable.

The picture is very frail and it doesn't take much imagination to discover how it will end. The wife goes in for playwrighting and develops an affair with a manager. This is the point to introduce the conflict. The husband comes home to learn that his rival is attempting to intrigue his better half. The triangle is so arbitrarily planted that sympathy for the wife is never inspired. The men indulge in a pugilistic encounter for the purpose of finding out which is the strongest force—love or duty. The upshot of it is the wife leaves them both for the seclusion of the country. An infant cuts a compromising figure since the husband doesn't really know whether he is the father. But after all have suffered a reconciliation is effected. And the artist's eyes are opened to the splendid virtues of his wife.

The continuity is ragged, which may account for the difficulty to get into the spirit of the picture. The scenes are too jumpy, some having very little connection in advancing the action. If an older figure had represented the husband the picture would be more appealing. Truman Van Dyke runs a poor second to Arthur Carewe, who plays the potential philanderer. It may strike some that the picture is miscast on this point. Sympathy cannot be extended a man who continually nags his wife, nor can she obtain any for marrying such a type. The picture has an interesting pageant, the outstanding highlight. There is nothing unconventional about it. In fact it is rather dull aside from Miss Myers' colorful performance. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Mad Marriage" is the title of the Universal feature which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with Carmel Myers as the star. This is an adaptation of the novel, "Cinderella Jane," by Marjorie Benton Cooke and the figure of Jane which Miss Myers interprets is called one of the most delightfully droll characters ever drawn by a writer, and in adapting the story for the screen Marion Fairfax has retained all the delicious humor. The picture is full of action and suspense and gives the star a chance to prove that she is one of the most capable actresses on the screen.

The plot revolves around a Greenwich Village artist who marries a girl for convenience. It never dawns upon him to offer her love; he only finds time to complain. Jane takes it good-naturedly. She is successful in winning the admiration of a play broker who produces her first play which scores an instantaneous hit. Jerry, the husband, places a false interpretation on things which leads to a quarrel. Their baby is taken ill but the recovery of the child brings a reconciliation. Thus the husband learns to appreciate his wife's fine qualities. Miss Myers is supported by a cast that includes Arthur Carewe. The picture is adequately staged.

PROGRAM READER

They say that one never knows what constitutes real happiness or sorrow until one lives in Greenwich Village. Certainly it is the home of the artistic temperament. And only one blessed with such a temperament can feel the thrills of real happiness or the woes of real sorrow. Carmel Myers is the star of "The Mad Marriage," a picture of romance and matrimony in Greenwich Village. She plays the part of a young girl who enters matrimony and finds that it is a sham. How she emerges a happy bride is told in five reels of a story crammed with action and incident. The Mad Marriage" is picturized from Marjorie Benton Cooke's charming story, "Cinderella Jane" and will appear at the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

There doesn't appear to be much plot to this story and the fact that it has been done often might keep some away. So don't play it up. Exploit the picture on the strength of Carmel Myers' personality. Tell that she is rapidly forging to the front as an accomplished actress—one gifted to play most any type of role. Play up that she has scored a big hit on the stage. Bring out the source of the picture, playing up the author and the original book. Tell that it is a charming picture of romance and matrimony and high jinks in Greenwich Village, the Bohemia of New York. You can stage a prologue much after the fashion of "Boheme." Have an ensemble attired in artists' costumes singing quaint songs.

CATCH LINES

She left him because he nagged her constantly. Was it a mad marriage? Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Carmel Myers in a delightful photoplay.

"HIS OWN LAW"
(J. Parker Read-Goldwyn)

Trite Story Makes Poor Screen Material

HOBART BOSWORTH'S latest production "His Own Law" falls short of the mark in screen entertainment. In fact there is hardly a redeeming feature in the production to raise it above the ordinary.

The picture opens with a bang and runs along most interestingly for a reel or so and then when one expects something of the unusual, it suddenly takes a decided drop and stays there to the finish.

The plot is well worn and could have been told very easily in two reels and then have something left over. When padding is resorted to it is easily noticeable in situations which are long drawn out and others which are introduced as "fill ins."

This is particularly noticeable in scenes in which the star appears. When he is not pausing and thinking, he appears to enter into weighty dialogue with the other actors, while the cameraman grinds away.

When action is called for Bosworth engages in a couple of good fist fights which are rather thrilling because of the way they are staged.

The opening scenes show the star well "lit up" in a bar-room where he makes the acquaintance of a young Frenchman.

After engaging in many scenes, some of which are rather funny, the two are admitted to a cheap lodging house for the night. The next morning on disclosing their identities they both discover that they are in the same profession, that of engineer.

Bosworth secures a job for the young Frenchman and when the latter falls in love with a beautiful girl and is called to France to join the colors before he has time to marry her, his pal protects the young woman and her child until "Frenchy" returns.

Suspense is withheld in the form of a cable which announces that the young soldier has been killed in action and this turns to surprise when the latter returns to claim the girl.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hobart Bosworth, popular screen actor of virile types, is the star of "His Own Law," the latest production by J. Parker Read, Jr., released through Goldwyn, which opens at the ———— theatre Monday for a three-day run.

The drama of friendship between men gives Mr. Bosworth one of the best roles that has fallen to his lot and he gets out of it every bit of entertainment and acting value that it contains.

As MacNeir, a member of a great engineering firm who goes off on a prolonged spree after every big job, Mr. Bosworth gives a touch of naturalness and humanity that makes the character continuously human and interesting.

After having a fight with a Frenchman in a saloon in the underworld, he becomes fast friends with him because of his grit.

The next morning as the two pals are leaving a lodging house they discover that both are engineers, which brings them closer together and eventually off on a big job.

The Frenchman falls in love with a beautiful girl but is called to the colors by his country and as there is no one to marry them he can only pledge his faith with the ring which he had bought for the wedding. When MacNeir learns that the younger man has been killed in action he marries Sylvia in order that his friend's child may have a name and father.

The Frenchman returns after four years and then comes the big thrilling, human drama which makes "His Own Law" one of the big pictures of the year.

PROGRAM READER

If you care for the real human interest drama, the one that will grip you at the start and hold you until the last close-up, don't fail to see Hobart Bosworth in his latest production, "His Own Law," produced by J. Parker Read and released by Goldwyn.

"His Own Law" is a drama of friendship between men and gives Hobart Bosworth one of the best roles that has fallen to his lot and he gets out of it every bit of entertainment and acting value that it conains.

In the opening scenes the star is shown as a prominent engineer, out on a spree. In a saloon in the underworld Bosworth meets a young Frenchman, Jean Saval, and is impressed by his ability to fight.

The two become fast friends and go off on a big job in the Chinook country. Here the young Frenchman falls in love with a beautiful girl but is called to the colors suddenly by his country and as there is no one at the camp to marry them, he can only pledge his faith with the ring which he had bought for the wedding.

When MacNeir learns by cable that the younger man has been killed in action he marries his sweetheart in order that his friend's child may have a name and a father.

The young Frenchman returns, however, and in a series of exciting moments learns from the older man that—well, see the picture and find out for yourselves.

SUGGESTIONS

This feature is rather short on story and as a result should be handled lightly in your publicity.

About the only exploitation possibility is the playing up of Hobart Bosworth's past experiences upon the screen and the theme which deals with the friendship between the two principal characters in the production.

If you go lightly on this one you will get by. However, make no promises.

CATCH LINES

See Hobart Bosworth in his latest feature, "His Own Law," a play strong in human interest, in which one man sacrifices himself for the other.

"Come on, Frenchie, they've discovered where I am"—and then something happened. See Hobart Bosworth in his latest feature, "His Own Law," it will interest you.

"COUSIN KATE"
(Vitagraph)

ALICE JOYCE'S personality is the principal attraction in "Cousin Kate." The production as a whole is well directed, has a good cast and runs along smoothly from beginning to end, but is rather short on incident, romance or any of the virtues which would place it above the average program attraction.

"Cousin Kate" is another illustration of what happens to many plays, strong in dialogue, when they are put in scenario form and reproduced on the screen.

Action has to make up for the sparkling witticisms and the result is the picture falls far short of the mark.

When Ethel Barrymore played "Cousin Kate" upon the stage the star scored in almost every scene because of the situations and dialogue.

In the screen version Alice Joyce is handicapped in many of the scenes, the picture simmering down to entrances and exits with the action rather slow and draggy.

And then again Miss Joyce does not appear to have a clear understanding of the principal role, which calls for a heroine who is alert and always able to twist a situation to suit her purpose.

This, however, may have been the fault of the scenario writer in neglecting to develop the big situations.

Still, in a Broadway neighborhood house where the picture was reviewed, the patrons seemed to be interested more in Alice Joyce's movements than in the story, judging from their remarks.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Cousin Kate," a Vitagraph special production with Alice Joyce in the stellar role, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

On the spoken stage as a comedy drama in four acts the play enjoyed two long and highly successful runs, one when first produced by Charles Frohman at the Empire theatre in New York City, and the second on its revival, several years later with Ethel Barrymore in the title role.

The tremendous success of Hubert Henry Davies' most popular play and its special adaptability as picture drama, caused heavy bidding for the photoplay rights.

It was finally purchased by Vitagraph as a special vehicle for Alice Joyce because of the star's talents which fit snugly into the leading role.

In the picture Kate Curtis sets forth some unconventional theories regarding love and marriage in her hectic romances and it was assumed that she was as unconventional in conduct.

Her lover was rather puzzled by her manner when he tried to kiss her, however, for while seeming to accept his attentions she did so unemotionally.

And then his pride was hurt when she explained, "Scenes like this are a wonderful help in my writing."

See "Cousin Kate" and let her tell you of love, marriage and romance.

PROGRAM READER

"Cousin Kate," the famous Charles Frohman play by Hubert Henry Davies, will be shown at this theatre on ———— of next ———— with the beautiful Alice Joyce in the role which was portrayed by Ethel Barrymore on the spoken stage.

The role of "Cousin Kate" is ideal for the charming and fascinating Vitagraph star and her portrayal will be remembered as one of her best performances and most notable achievements.

On the stage as a comedy drama in four acts, the play enjoyed two long and highly successful runs, one when first produced by Charles Frohman at the Empire theatre in New York City and the second on its revival several years later with the charming Ethel Barrymore in the title role.

Because the friends and relatives of Cousin Kate do not approve of the reckless and unconventional heroines of her novels, they assume that she is unconventional in conduct. But they are rather surprised to learn that she is unemotional in her manner even to her lover.

The climax was capped one day when Kate remarked to Grant when he tried to kiss her: "Scenes like this are a wonderful help in my writing."

The play is admirably adapted as a vehicle and was directed by Mrs. Sidney Drew.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature play Alice Joyce as strongly as you can in your advertising, as her personality sticks out very prominently throughout the production.

Do not promise them too much as regards the story, for it is of the ordinary variety as far as screen material goes.

A good idea would be to play up the story in your town papers and programs. Tell them that "Cousin Kate" was first produced in this country by Charles Frohman at the Empire theatre in New York City, and on its second revival several years later was produced with Ethel Barrymore in the leading role.

Do not promise them too much, however, for the picture is not strong enough for this sort of advertising.

CATCH LINES

Friends and relatives of "Cousin Kate" could not approve of the reckless and unconventional heroines of her novels. They thought she must be unconventional in her ways. What did they find out? See "Cousin Kate."

See Alice Joyce in the play that made Ethel Barrymore famous, "Cousin Kate." It will surely amuse you.

Why did the beautiful and fascinating heroine refuse to be loved? See Alice Joyce in "Cousin Kate," it will certainly amuse you. At the ———— theatre ————.

"GODLESS MEN"
(Reginald Barker Production-Goldwyn)

Unpleasant Story Depending on Acting and Unusual Twist to Story

"GODLESS MEN" or rather "Black Pawl" as fiction was a virile story of the sea boasting of vivid descriptions, good dialogue, a semi-religious theme and an unusual twist at the end.

As a picture it becomes almost a tragedy with little to recommend it from an audience standpoint and entitled to small praise except for the acting of Russell Simpson and a very fine cast and the unusual twist, with its strongly dramatic tempo, of the original story.

The story told mostly by titles is pretty obvious as to its ultimate ending and certainly most unpleasant. There are three murders, "Black Pawl's" deliberate shooting his own son being one, to say nothing of a lot of other scenes that will jar, like father and son looking with covetous eyes on the heroine who turns out to be their daughter and sister, respectively.

Also there isn't any too much action for a melodrama. Long titles that attempt to preach and only prove tiresome are used to tell the story for the greater part of the offering. The love interest is negligible. Incidentially Helen Chadwick playing the role of a girl marrooned since childhood on a South Sea Island, uninhabited by white people, shows up on the schooner with corsets, corset cover, patent leather pumps, a modern shirt waist and sport skirt and a 1921 style of doing her hair.

The big trouble with the production is the fact that it does not entertain in individual sequences. It has no comedy relief. It drags badly in telling its story. Fade outs are used to tell what happened years before. It is brutal and unreal, resorting to the undue use of coincidence, with a continuity that goes to great pains to explain everything and make things dovetail to the detriment of the dramatic climax withheld until the very last few feet of the eight reel. The theme gets lost. About all that is apparent in this connection is summed up in the fact that titles tell you that "Black Pawl" does not believe in God and then that he has changed his mind.

From a production standpoint the offering is satisfactory. Mr. Barker's direction is up to standard and the photography is extra fine.—Length, 8 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another unusually strong picture story, "Godless Men," an adaptation of the famous "Black Pawl," which ran in the Cosmopolitan magazine some months past, is booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

"Godless Men" is a story of the sea and concerns principally "Captain Black Pawl," a role played by that sterling character actor, Russell Simpson, commander of a schooner, his villainous son, "Red Pawl" and the long lost daughter who becomes a passenger on the vessel with her identity unknown. Though the picture is a theme founded on religion. The love interest is supplied by Captain Pawl's daughter and the second mate of the ship, a part played by big handsome John Bower. Except for a few scenes the action of the picture takes place on board the schooner and many beautiful water shots have been secured. An unusual twist to the plot will recommend itself to those who object to the sugary romance that ends with "they lived happy ever after," although the picture does have a happy ending.

PROGRAM READER

Those who are partial to the good sea story in pictures should be especially interested in the engagement of "Godless Men," a Reginald Barker production released by Goldwyn to be the feature attraction at the ———— for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————. "Godless Men" is an adaptation of one of the most popular serial stories ever to be published in the Cosmopolitan magazine, "Black Pawl." It was written by Ben Ames Williams, famous for his virile tales of life on the sea and replete with dramatic situations and good incident. The principal role, that of "Black Pawl," is played by Russell Simpson. Helene Chadwick is the heroine and John Bowers, as the mate of the "Deborah," is the lover. Among the other members of the strong supporting cast is Aleck Francis and others of recognized screen talent. "Godless Men" is a Goldwyn special in eight reels. It has had bookings in the best houses of the country including the famous Capitol theatre of New York, and the California of Los Angeles. It is recommended to people who like good drama with a strong story value.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as a production, giving extra attention to the theme and the unusual twist in the story. In your newspaper display make much of the title with a good scene cut showing action on the deck of the schooner used. Your catch lines should refer to "Black Pawl" and promise action. For a prologue you are referred to a page in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau for a description of one staged by S. L. Rothafel at the Capitol theatre, which is inexpensive and capable of being staged by the ordinary theatre.

CATCH LINES

The story of the man who turned from God because he claimed that the Almighty did not mete out justice.

"BURGLAR PROOF"
(Paramount)

Washburn's Best One in a Dog's Age—A Real Comedy

BRYANT WASHBURN has been starred so extensively during the past year in adaptations of once famous stage comedies that it is a relief to see him at last in a production in which it is not necessary to rely upon sparkling dialogue, often ineffective in titles, for the humorous note. He has tried them repeatedly—often disastrously. In "Burglar Proof," which has only a fictional ancestry, the star has a story that he fits into just as a cherry in a cocktail, or to continue the simile—the hand into the w.k. glove. He is droll and really humorous and at his best since "Skinner's Dress Suit." The part was seemingly made for him and he makes the most of it.

The story deals with the country bumpkin who has been brought up to regard money as a fire extinguisher—to be used only upon urgent necessity. He is so literally "Burglar Proof" that when he actually opens up and spends a dime the chorus echoes: "The world is again safe for grafters." It is sure fire incident that follows. The tightwad migrates to the city, still with his first penny, wearing a hole in his trousers which he presses himself. A doctor advises dancing as an exercise and it is in the jazz emporium that he runs foul of the one girl. He has passed every pitfall toward squandering his money; but he falls on the love pit. Then he cuts loose to show that he is a regular guy. The subsequent development offers complications which are eventually straightened out. The conclusion shows the star promising to give up his spendthrift habits. Which is a sure sign that he is hitting on all six at last.

Some of Washburn's more recent pictures have palled by their overdrawn attempts at humor; but in "Burglar Proof" the star strikes a human note, humorously, in every respect. Lois Wilson and Grace Morse give him good support. The scenario is by Tom Geraghty, who has been responsible for Wallace Reid's latest successes. He deserves credit for much of the sure touch exposed here. His titles are gems of abbreviated wit and help carry the picture over. The adaptation and the direction of Maurice Campbell's are directly evident in the results. Some good sets are brought out in the dance hall where a colored jazz band adds to the comedy. The picture offers more than the average program comedy. They certainly will compare it to "Skinner's Dress Suit."—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A man so stingy he was dubbed "Burglar Proof" by acquaintances is the character interpreted by Bryant Washburn in his latest picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The star is said to have the most entertaining comedy romance since his memorable "Skinner's Dress Suit." The role of John Harlow might have been conceived with the star in mind so natural is his interpretation—so much enthusiasm does he put into the part. He makes a clever distinction between a "tight wad" and a man who is sensibly thrifty. And "Burglar Proof" deserves special mention because it is one country-boy-who-goes-to-the-city story in which the hero doesn't marry the rural sweetheart.

There are really two heroines in the picture. One is Jenny, the country girl, spoiled by the city into a gum-chewing, slang-using teacher in a dance hall. Laura, on the other hand, is a city beauty, who has remained sweet and charming despite the temptations of the white lights. The picture travels on high from the start and finishes in a blaze of glory. Tom Geraghty, who wrote the scenario, has arranged a series of highly amusing scenes which are compact with action. Mr. Washburn is supported by a clever company that includes Lois Wilson.

PROGRAM READER

It will interest patrons of the ———— theatre to know that Bryant Washburn is coming here next ———— in his latest farce-comedy entitled "Burglar Proof." This is a story of a prosperous young man who is so tight in money matters that they call him "Burglar Proof" meaning that nothing can shake his dollars from him. His transformation is complete but before it is successful the patrons are in for some rich entertainment. It is safe to say that "Burglar Proof" is the star's finest picture since "Skinner's Dress Suit." The comedy scintillates, travels on high without a letdown. A charming romance permits Lois Wilson to ingratiate her personality. The picture is adapted with fine workmanship and directed by Maurice Campbell.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a star and a title which can be exploited to bring in the crowds. You can tell them that it is his finest picture since "Skinner's Dress Suit." That is not a misstatement either. You can emphasize the fact that Washburn's comedies are always good entertainment, but that this one excels the others. Bring forth a novel throwaway written around the title. Use catch lines too. These can be treated in a humorous fashion. How about linking up with electrical and construction firms on "Burglar Proof" houses? This plan should create a deal of interest. Bill it as a snappy, peppery, comedy which carries a full quota of laughs. You can link up with storage warehouses and banks by exploiting the picture through cards.

"Sultans of the Sea" and "Getting a Toe Hold"
(Chester Screenic—Educational)

ALTHOUGH we have seen many pictures of the sea-lion in his haunts we never grow tired of witnessing longshots and close-ups of this peculiar animal.

The first half of this reel pictures the sea-lion in his home surroundings among the rocky cliffs of the northern Pacific coast.

The cameraman has caught him in his various pursuits of happiness showing longshots of his sportive ways on the rocks and in the waters. Many close-ups are also taken of his many wives, for he is a polygamist and sometimes has as many as thirty.

The scenes are interesting and well worth witnessing.

"Getting a Toe Hold" shows the way fancy stirrups or shoes are made for the flashy Spaniard. From the very beginning when the maker takes his axe and hews a block of wood into shape, up to the time the shoe is ready for wear on the rider's foot, the process is shown in various close-ups.

This part of the reel is instructional but contains enough interest to carry it through.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Nature's Handiwork"
(Urban-Kineto Review)

EVER see a butterfly's egg? Then, take heed of the magnified and photographed results of these beautiful spheres in the varied stages of progress toward becoming a worm, from thence to becoming a butterfly. Then, if a butterfly moth, find out why, if precautionary methods have failed, your winter clothes look like sieves, after having been put away all summer.

The caterpillar is a good contractor. He builds his protection as he goes, in the form of a thread, which issues from the mouth and attached to the plant. In case of fall, the elastic attachment saves the worm, be he wooly or with horns, from a terrific fall. When in greedy moments he travels a bit too far, and the leaf gives way, the life line to the rescue. Like in all interesting species of nature, there are many breeds of caterpillar from the tiny wiggly one familiar in the middle-western states, which runs in quantities of millions, enclosed in a weblike home, to the large scary-looking ones which delight in devouring cabbage. There is a surprising amount of informative data, told in the Urban way, set forth in this short subject.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Rest in Peace"
(Vanity Comedy—Educational)

"REST IN PEACE" won't excite any undue comment among the patrons but it will hold them in their seats while it is being projected and give fair entertainment.

It has a rather novel idea but there seems to be too much action especially in regard to entrances and exits before the story explodes. In other words there is too much time taken up in working it to a climax.

However, when the "big moments" arrive the situations are funny and good for a few big laughs.

A young married man who is given to poker parties provokes his wife because he snores so loudly during his sleeping hours. A friend of his who is a good snorer, is finally persuaded to sleep in his bed while he is off playing at his favorite game.

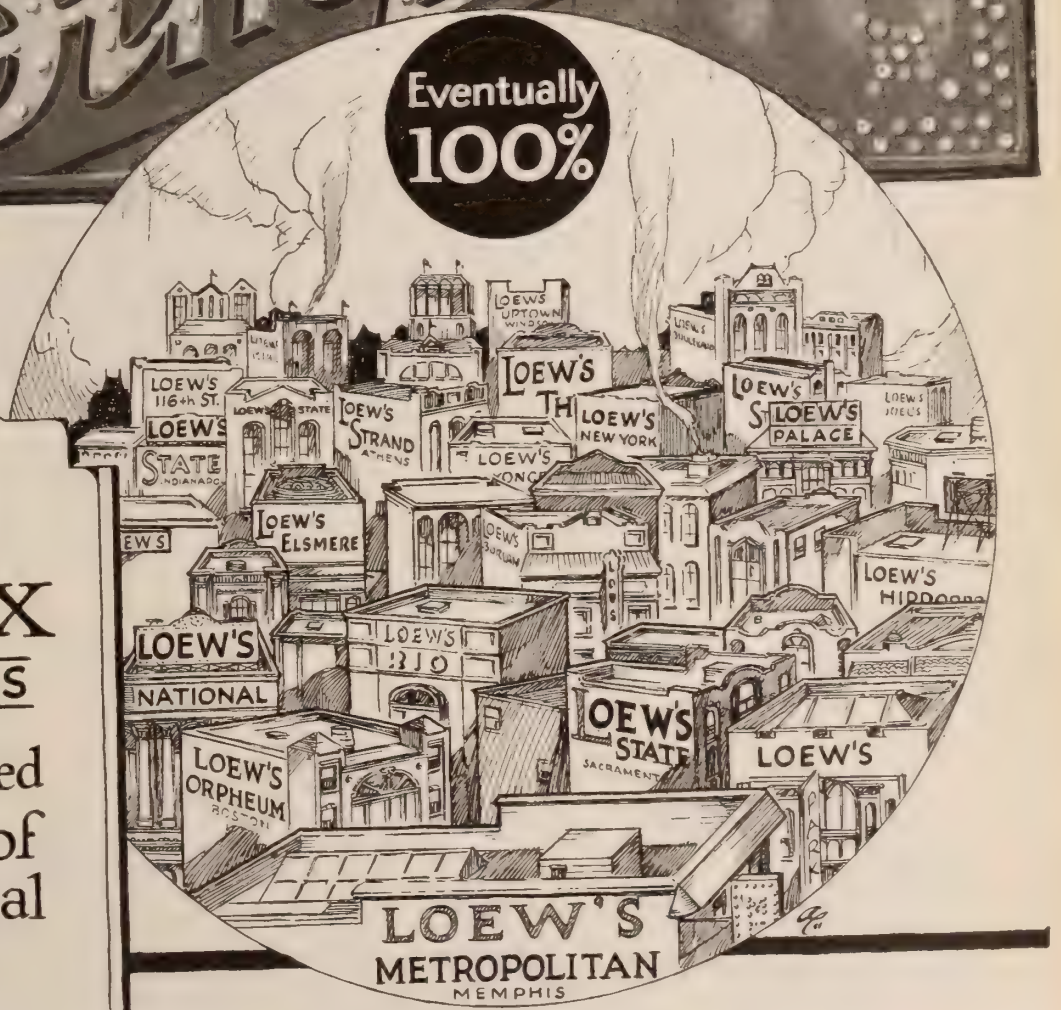
The friend snores loudly while the young wife who is listening at the door believes all the while that it is her husband.

When she finds out who's who, a series of good comedy incidents take place in which the unfortunate friend is landed in jail while the husband succeeds in "explaining everything."

In the cast are Mary Winn, Harry Edwards, Henry Murdock, Jack Henderson and Marion Macky.—FRANK LEONARD.

"In Dutch"
(Educational World Wandering Series—One Reel)

"IN DUTCH" describes the lives of the Dutchman and Dutchwoman from the time they begin to wear their peculiar costumes in early childhood until they are full grown men and women of importance in community life.



The opening scenes show the younger generation at play in the country of shoes and ships and dykes and sandunes and then the locale shifts to the market places where there appears to be a great deal of trading in "cheeses."

A trip along the river front discloses many interesting views of Dutch life, the cutting of hay along the banks of the stream and the placing of it in flat bottomed boats being of particular interest.

The closing scenes show the Dutchmen in their Sunday best strutting about the winding streets. They are a stolid lot and seem to take life seriously—which lends a certain charm to the picture and interest from an educational standpoint.—FRANK LEONARD.

To the Critical Exhibitor:—

ARE you satisfied with cheap posters? If you are content with the type of poster frequently supplied, it is not necessary to read any farther,—but if you really want good posters, and if you have reached a point where you are willing to strike to get them,—then read on!

For some few years past the public have wanted cheaper clothing. People felt that they were being flagrantly exploited. They did a good bit of talking about it,—but conversation got them nowhere. So they struck,—they refused to buy,—and prices came down!

In just that way are the exhibitors going to get good posters. In that way, and in that way only. By refusing to book a film that is unaccompanied by fine posters. There are plenty to choose from, among them the best that are being made. The concerns who furnish fine posters with their films are legitimately exploiting photo-plays. The concerns which do not are illegitimately exploiting the exhibitors. Against such a condition you have but one course open:—STRIKE!

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

Women Simply Can't Resist This Title

SMALL-TOWN women and big-city women are sisters under the skin. Both succumb to curiosity. As a title "The Devil's Passkey" is a curiosity-arouser that is irresistible to women, be they Broadway butterflies or Main Street maidens; as a picture "The Devil's Passkey" is a dramatic masterpiece of elemental emotions that brings more and more business the longer it runs. The combination is one that makes this offering an attraction that unfailingly gets the women. And you, as a showman, know that a picture that gets the women gets the whole family—and satisfies them. This, in a few words, is "The Devil's Passkey"—a picture that to-day is repeating in the smaller towns its unprecedented success in the first runs. You'll make money by booking it—NOW.

"DUCKS AND DRAKES"

(Adapted by Elmer Harris from the play by himself. Directed by Major Maurice Campbell.)

You'll see some droll situations, some spicy funning, a hair-raising fight between the heroine and an impromptu convict on an abandoned houseboat—wherein a big knife went zip, and buried itself in the wall; and some of the cleverest titles ever screened.

You can thank the gods that you hold a Realart Star Franchise which entitles you to this picture. A battery of machine guns wouldn't keep the crowd away!

Smashing box office records is a mere trifle with this picture. The crowds are breaking doors and trying to tear down walls to see it.

Wid's Says:

SMASHING

They are not only smashing every and all previous records at the Strand with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," but Manager Plunkett hopes with the aid of the Police Department and the Fire Department to hold the mobs in check and prevent the smashing of everything that is movable and stationary, too.

At 8:30 Sunday night, the sale of tickets was stopped. At that time the doors were smashed and the crowd that jammed into the theater was so dense that people were crowded around the projection booth in the balcony and actually hanging around the iron bars which separate the booth from the balcony proper.

Mr. Plunkett said yesterday that in all of his 20 years' of experience in the theater business he had never seen anything like it. At 11 o'clock on Sunday night when the last performance was put on, the theater was filled to capacity and lots of those who couldn't get in wondered why the sale of tickets was stopped. The show starts at 10:30 in the morning at the Strand and the last one goes on at 11 at night.

Box-office records are the least things to be smashed.

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXIII FEBRUARY 19, 1921 No. VIII

First Steps in New Paths

THIS issue carries a full report of the important Motion Picture-Musical Conference held last week in New York City.

The conference was a pronounced success.

It was a full-fledged start toward what is admittedly the most important development in store for the motion picture—namely the advancement of music to its proper sphere in the picture theatre.

Had the movement merely been launched the conference would have accomplished all that was expected of it. But, also, a lot of solid work was done and a permanent organization was effected around, as a nucleus, a committee composed of leaders in the picture and music worlds.

The conference was attended by all the various interests involved. Many important problems, never discussed before, were brought to a focus. A great deal of information was gained within a very short time. The New York newspapers evidenced much interest in the meetings and generously recognized their importance. In musical circles, to judge from the leading journals, the event was regarded as of supreme importance.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS sponsored the conference; that is all. Now that the preliminary work is ended we ask the trade press to unite upon the furtherance of what is obviously as important as the picture to the modern picture theatre.

An exhibitor leader said at the conference: "Music, the right kind of music is, with a good picture, 40% important. With a weak picture it is everything."

This speaks only of the immediate importance of music with the picture.

Looking further ahead we can see, and very plainly, that the picture theatre of the near future will also be known as a music theatre. As a community centre the picture house must cater to each of these great art-amusements. Each is of great popular interest and force. The two go naturally together.

We can foresee concert singing in many theatres upon a large scale, the regular routing of an army of vocalists throughout the larger theatres, including even the great operatic stars. We can foresee the installation of more and finer musical instruments and trained artists to play them. Even the smallest house must and will have music of finer quality and synchronization.

The people of this country—the masses everywhere—want better music just as they want better pictures. And they will get better music in their picture theatres. Nothing can halt so logical and inevitable a development and the various problems that now exist and will arise will find a satisfactory solution.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS purposes to lend its every energy to this new epoch in the development of the picture theatre.

Sex in Pictures

"THE Faith Healer," shortly to be released, comes along at an opportune moment.

Here is a picture, like many another, that is at once uplifting, stirring, entertaining. It has its element of sex interest, of course. Every sensible person knows that if you take sex out of pictures, or books, or magazines, or opera, or Shakespeare, or the Bible—or out of life—you would have very little left.

But "The Faith Healer," like many another thoughtful picture and many another picture more amusing than thoughtful, doesn't promote, or project or distort, or seek to commercialize sex. It includes sex because sex enters fundamentally into life and every good picture seeks truthfully to portray life.

It is one thing to make a picture with sex only in mind. It is quite another to include sex because a mind higher than ours made sex the foundation of life.

The first kind of picture we don't want. The public doesn't want it. No reputable or reliable firm or person will make such a picture. And in our knowledge—not opinion—such pictures are not being made.

What we are doing, however, is the putting of this distorted and distasteful sex stuff into our posters and newspaper advertising. It is mighty bad and ruinous business; and it's got to stop.

It's such bad business that we predict, and simply on an angle of good business sense, that before the end of this year newspaper advertising will be telling the public how clean pictures are.

Because the American home wants—and don't mistake it—clean pictures. And the motion picture caters to the American home.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Snapshots

By William A. Johnston

Fred Warren. Optimistic. Says business is good—and proves it with eye-opening figures. Associated Producers only few months old yet books show gross business heavy enough to satisfy anyone. Weekly gross climbing rapidly with such business getters as "Last of Mohicans," "Small Town Idol" and "Lying Lips." Exhibitors must be making money, too, since books show that refunds are negligible, and percentage playing profitable. Percentage playing now amounts to 30 per cent gross business done by Associated Producers.

Hugo Riesenfeld. Dinner given him at Delmonico's by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation "in recognition of his genius in presenting motion pictures." Large and representative gathering. Happy affair. Tributes to Mr. Riesenfeld. Good speeches, some of which struck big keynote.

E. F. Albee. Always hits straight and from the shoulder. And the picture folk listen to him—and act. Have heard him make two speeches. Each hit the bull's-eye with a whack. First time, a meeting at Delmonico's three years ago when industry was raising a fund to fight censorship at Albany. Attorneys Stanchfield and Seabury present. Meeting was stumbling along when Albee arose in rear of hall and talked turkey. Told how the vaudeville business organized against outside oppression, how a fund of $250,000 was raised in five minutes, etc. And—then, the meeting got under way. Second speech was at Riesenfeld dinner. Said two important things. First, that picture producers will make clean pictures only because only clean pictures pay. Exhibitors will have better music because better music pays. The picture and the picture theatre must cater to the American home. Then he spoke for organization. "Fight all you want to among yourselves," he said, "but be friends when you fight the outsider." Very pat advice. We need an Albee in this industry.

Jesse L. Lasky. Best speech he ever made. Utterly frank. Said producer would devote himself to clean pictures, and in this statement he spoke not only for his own concern but for every producer in the business. Words carried conviction.

John Emerson. Spoke of new kind of picture, made by trained staff. Cooperative effort. Eliminates the alibi. Eliminates the ego of a young industry. Pictures of future bound to be better.

South Carolina. Legislature votes unanimously for censorship and then unanimously reverses itself. Turns to logical, sensible solution of local regulation. Just goes to show how little knowledge average legislator has of censorship. He thinks it merely means control. Also shows—most importantly—what the National Association and exhibitors can do together. We came mighty near censorship in South Carolina. Also in Tennessee. Congratulations to both states—and to those who won the day.

¶ A Special Music Supplement starts on page 1501.

Sydney Garrett. Give him credit for the best epigram since R. X. Rowland's last one. He says: "In a motion picture contract there is no party of the second part."

George Melford. Our congratulations. Scores again in "The Faith Healer." Fine picture. Conscientious workmanship. Local color. Suspense. Best work thus far by Milton Sills and Ann Forrest. Looks like big future for George Melford.

Idle Hour Theatre. Kenton, Ohio. Please take note of name and address—everybody! Owner sends forth pathetic appeal for relief. Says his theatre has been out of business for four years. But his motion picture mail comes along just the same. Circular matter. Says it's bad enough, anyway, but now just makes him sick. Asks, "What's the matter?" "Who's doin' all the shootin'?"

Will Aid Censor Battles Individually, Says Pathe

Pathe Exchanges, Inc., issues the following statement in regard to its stand on the Blue Law and Censorship fight:

"Word has come to use by wire from Minneapolis, Minn., and Indianapolis, Ind., to the effect that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in making its contribution toward the expenses of the fight against censorship in said states has advised the local Committee Chairman that this Company had refused to contribute toward such fund.

"While it is true that this Company since its resignation from the National Association has not made any contribution to the fund raised to fight censorship through the National Association, it has never refused to contribute toward the expenses to oppose any menace to the industry. We have contributed directly to Minneapolis and Indianapolis local committees.

"We have always taken an active part in fights against censorship in the past; are as much opposed to censorship in any form today as we have ever been, and any statement to the effect that we have refused either moral or financial assistance toward defeating censorship in any form is false and misleading."

Loew Merger in Canada Is to Be Delayed

The completion of the merger of the various Loew companies in Canada has been delayed, it has been announced at Toronto, pending the securing of certified statements from the auditors as to the exact assets and liabilities of the various companies. Before further steps are taken, it is likely that meetings of the different stockholders will be called to discuss the situation, it is announced.

Intimation has been made that Marcus Loew will probably build a theatre in Winnipeg, Manitoba. A site has been selected and the plans for the theatre have already been drawn, it is asserted. This will mean the invasion of the Canadian West by Mr. Loew.

Late Wire Briefs from the Coast

E. W. HAMMONDS, W. W. Hodkinson, and W. E. Shallenberger are here.

The Ambassador theatre in Los Angeles opened on February 5th, under the direction of Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser. Barret McCormick is managing director. Prices are fifty cents and a dollar in the afternoons, and a dollar and a dollar and a half in the evenings. "Passion," with an appropriate prologue, was the opening bill.

Rudolph Christians, the Otis Skinner of the German stage, for several years director of the Irving Place theatre in New York, died on February 2nd of pneumonia. Work at Universal was stopped during the funeral services on February 4th. Mr. Christians had been featured in a number of Universal productions and had just finished playing the leading role in "Foolish Wives" when taken ill.

T. W. Chatburn enterprises have opened exchanges on the Coast for the distribution of State right pictures. L. E. Kennedy is local manager.

Indications are that Metro will adapt the unit plan of production on the order of the scheme followed by Robertson-Cole. If it is adapted, it will cause many changes here, as the responsibility for each production will be centralized upon the director, who is furnished the star and the story and must select his own continuity writer, players, staff, and so forth. The Nazimova company is following this scheme at present.

Motion Picture Measures Before Pennsylvania Legislature

Billboard Tax Bills in Committee; Plan Censorship in Philadelphia

SEVERAL bills affecting the motion picture industry were among those introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature this week—the first week in which bills of any character were presented in the present biennial session.

In addition to the bill of Assemblyman William J. Brady, which would impose a state tax of 1 per cent on the gross earnings of motion picture theatres, were a measure, sponsored by Assemblyman Hugh A. Dawson of Lackawanna county, which would fix a tax of 10 cents a square foot on billboards, and one by Assemblyman Charles C. Baldi, Jr., of Philadelphia, which goes even further and fixes the rate at $1 a foot.

Governor Sproul, in his message to the Legislature, advocates a tax of 5 cents a square foot on billboards, not on the advertiser's premises, and it is considered probable that the Baldi bill, amended to suit the Governor's views, will be adopted as the administration measure. The Governor believes that a 5-cent tax on billboards would yield the state $300,000 revenue, but motion picture men figure it as close to $800,000.

Motion picture interests, as well as theatrical men generally in Philadelphia and other parts of the state, and the National Association of Advertisers are opposed to the measure and have representatives here watching their progress—particularly that of the Dawson bill. This bill, it is contended, would eat up about one-third of the receipts on a capacity billboard business, and it is claimed by its opponents to be confiscatory. It provides fines of from $500 to $1,000 for violations. Half the revenue from this law, if enacted, would go to the state and the other half to the municipality in which the billboard is located. Both measures call for reports to be made by the billboard owners to the auditor-general of the state, regarding their amount of money received from the use of the boards. Each board must be numbered with a tag to be provided by the state.

Another measure just introduced in the House would give equal rights to members of the white and colored races in places of public amusement. This was introduced by John C. Asbury, a negro member of the Legislature, from Philadelphia. Similar bills have been introduced in recent sessions but always thus far have gone down to defeat. Last session, however, saw a vigorous fight put up by the negro voters of the state in behalf of the plan.

The Asbury bill provides that all persons, regardless of race, color or creed, be permitted in all places of public accommodation, entertainment or amusement. Owners and managers of such places are prohibited from advertising or issuing circulars setting forth any discrimination against persons because of their color, race or creed. The penalty for violation is $100 to $500 or 30 to 3 months' imprisonment.

All the bills thus far introduced that affect the motion picture business, have been referred to committees which have not yet reported them.

Motion picture interests may wisely view with concern the bill presented to the Legislature this week by Assemblyman William J. Brady of Philadelphia, which would impose a tax of 1 per cent on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres and all other places of amusement.

While at each biennial session of the Pennsylvania law-makers there invariably appears a batch of proposed bills aimed at the motion picture industry, a majority of which regularly fall by the wayside, persons familiar with the determination of Governor Sproul vastly to increase the state's revenues by legislation to be enacted this year, say there is more than a fighting chance for Assemblyman Brady's tax bill to pass both legislative bodies and receive the executive signature.

It is recalled that in his opening message to the Legislature the Governor expressed a desire to provide new sources of revenue that would yield the state something like $22,000,000 additional cash in the next two years.

The need for additional revenue is emphasized by the fact that total deficiencies in the conduct of the state government in the last two years have been estimated at at least $6,000,000, and the administration has certain plans for expansion that will call for greater expenditures of public funds in the coming two years.

In this connection, too, it must be considered that present established sources of revenue will likely yield far less in the form of corporation taxes in the next two years if the present business depression continues.

The Brady bill describes a "place of public entertainment or amusement" as "any building, tent or enclosure wholly or partly used for dramatic or theatrical or operatic or vaudeville performances, or tragedies, or comedies or farces," and also for "fixed or moving pictures, athletic exhibitions or games, exhibitions of trained animals, circuses, menageries, museums or Wild West shows."

The proposed 1 per cent tax is to be paid on all gross receipts of such places, except those intended for charities or religious or educational purposes. On or before the fifteenth of each month statements must be made by an official of each place of amusement, to the auditor-general of the state, by blanks to be provided by his office. The taxes are due after each performance and if the payments are not made a penalty of 10 per cent of the amount due the state will be enforced.

The right to examine the books of the theatre is given to the auditor-general and the state treasurer, and a maximum penalty of a fine of $1,000 or six months in jail is provided for violators of the law.

According to newspaper advices from Philadelphia, Mayor Moore of that city is contemplating a plan of municipal censorship for the theatres. The mayor is quoted as declaring that it is his intention to ask local theatrical managers to help purge the stage and screen of suggestive or otherwise offensive features.

The announcement came as the result of a conference of a group of clergymen with the mayor, when he outlined to them some of his problems connected with vice and crime and asked them to think over the subjects with a view to offering advice.

"The Kid" Breaking House Records

FROM last Sunday at two o'clock a line has been in evidence most of the time at the New York Strand theatre, waiting to get in to see Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid."

Manager Joseph L. Plunkett announced a special showing of the feature, beginning at 11:00 p. m. Sunday night, by means of a small sign swinging from the marquet, and even amusement-weary Broadway was anxious enough to see the picture to stand in line until the appointed hour.

The Strand has been running eight shows a day all the week. The theatre opens at ten o'clock instead of the customary noon and any afternoon or evening the west side of Broadway between 46th and 47th streets has its line of patient "waiters."

How many thousands who would like to have gotten in to see "The Kid" and couldn't without more trouble than any show is worth to them, is a matter beyond calculation.

"The Kid" is drawing like a "mustard plaster" in New York and early reports from other cities tell the same story.

Al Christie in New York

Al Christie, director general of the Christie Film Company, arrived in New York this week on what he declared to be purely a pleasure trip. This is Mr. Christie's first trip to the big city in nearly five years.

He wound up his long period of work without rest by personally directing "Man vs. Woman," a two-reel comedy, featuring Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore, which is soon to be released through Educational.

Famous Players Tends Dinner to Dr. Riesenfeld

MORE than 100 men prominent in the motion picture, theatrical and musical world were guests Tuesday, night, Feb. 8th, at a dinner given at Delmonico's to Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, by officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in appreciation of his success as managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion Theatres.

A feature of the evening was a concert by the combined orchestras of the three theatres, comprising 100 pieces, who, arriving in the middle of the dinner, surprised Dr. Riesenfeld by playing a number of his favorite selections. Elek John Ludvigh, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was toastmaster, and speeches were made by Dr. Frank Crane, Daniel Frohman, Adolph Zukor, E. F. Albee, Otto H. Kahn, Richard Rowland, John Emerson and Jesse L. Lasky.

Those present included: Adolph Zukor, E. F. Albee, Jerome Beatty, L. W. Boynton, F. V. Chamberlin, Hiram Abrams, H. D. H. Connick, Dr. Frank Crane, Albert H. T. Banzhaf, Lee Counselman, H. H. Ernest Shipman to Have Additional Offices

To care for growing interests of himself and associates, Ernest Shipman has leased a suite of offices on the 8th floor of 17 West 44th Street, from which headquarters the activities of the Renco Film Corporation, the Edward Hemmer Productions, the San Gabriel Producing Company, the James Oliver Curwood Productions, Inc., and the Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., will be cared for.

The other productions controlled or represented by Mr. Shipman will continue to be managed from their present established headquarters.

Ernest Shipman's associates now number twenty-one. S. T. King will continue in the capacity of general office manager.

Rudolph de Cordova Will Assist Blackton

Rudolph de Cordova who has been occupied for several months writing the continuities for the series of special Super-Feature pictures to be produced by the Vitagraph Company, has been engaged to proceed immediately to London by J. Stuart Blackton, in order to assist in the preparation of the first picture to be made by the Lady Diana Manners. Mr. de Cordova's latest continuity to be released is that of "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

New Corporation to Fight Blue Laws in New York

Naming George C. Craft, of Union Hill, N. J., Adele S. Eberhardt and Louis Bennett of New York, as directors, the Liberty League of America filed its papers of incorporation with the secretary of state's office at Albany, N. Y., on February 5, for the purpose of fighting any Sunday Blue Law legislation.

J. P. Fritts Leaves Realart

John P. Fritts, who has been director of advertising and publicity for Realart has resigned his position with that company. He has held that position since the organization of that company. Mr. Fritts states that his future plans are as yet undetermined.

Big Pageant to Feature First A.M.P.A. Dinner

A pageant, resplendent for beauty of costumes and eccentricity of caricature, will feature "The Naked Truth" dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers to be held at the Hotel Biltmore, March 4. According to Victor Shapiro, who is in charge of the entertainment details, the pageant will mark a take off on passing events of interest to the industry, such as censorship and the threatened blue laws.

Members of the A. M. P. A. who attend the dinner have been promised a sightseeing trip "round the town" delving into "The Naked Truth" of so-called reform movements of the industry and revealing the real facts behind the support given these organizations.

"The Naked Truth" dinner will mark the first formal function given by the A. M. P. A. in several years.

Hoover Drive a Success in Oklahoma

Practically all Oklahoma theatres have put on Hoover benefits, according to reports received from Ralph Talbot of the Majestic theatre of Tulsa, who is state chairman of the Motion Picture division of the European Relief Council. The film exchanges, newspapers, and theatre employees rendered splendid co-operation. The returns have not as yet been tabulated, but a substantial return is expected.

Hollywood Directors Plan Attractive Clubhouse

The Motion Picture Directors' Association plan to build a four-story Club House on Highland Avenue, just north of Hollywood Boulevard in Hollywood, Cal. and with this end in view have filed articles of incorporation bearing the firm name of Motion Picture Directors' Building Corporation, capitalized at $200,000.

The Director's Association has for some time owned a very valuable piece of real estate and the Building Committee composed of Frank Lloyd, William D. Taylor, Wallace Wormsey, Murdock McQuarrie, Thomas Ricketts, and Sam Woods have made the plans for financing the project. This will be done by the issuance of two issues of bonds, each for $100,000.

The Trustees of the Association will act as Directors of the Corporation. They are Reginald Barker, William D. Taylor Frank Lloyd, William Duncan, Roy Clements, Joseph DeGrasse, and Thomas Ricketts.

Western Motion Picture Advertisers Organize

The Western Motion Picture Advertisers have organized on the Coast. They have elected Ray Leek of Metro, president; Arch Reeves of Famous Players vice-president; Roy Miller of Miller's theatre, treasurer; and John McCormick of First National, secretary. The trustees are Adam Shirk, of Famous Players Lasky; Richard Spear of Kinema theatre Bradley Smollen of Vitagraph; Pete Smith of the Neilan Company, and Mark Larkin, of the Pickford and Fairbanks companies.

The Day of the Dollar

We print herewith, in full, the A. B. C. audit of MOTION PICTURE NEWS' circulation for the six months ending December 31, 1920.

And we suggest to each advertiser and advertising manager that the audit be carefully read and this issue filed for future reference.

This is the first audit to be made in this field.

It gives, furthermore, a complete analysis and classification.

Compare these figures with those of any other trade publication whose audit may be made and submitted to you.

If no audit is made—ask why not?

If an audit is made but not published or submitted—ask why not?

If no classification of circulation is made—ask why not?

Invest upon definite information.

This is the day of the dollar. Every dollar spent this year in advertising must count. Make every dollar buy circulation value—known value. Every dollar spent blindly is wasted.

Note.—The large circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is refined to the last degree. It is all trade, practically all subscription, solid as a rock. Not a single copy, to our knowledge, is wasted. Note the large exhibitor circulation, add 25 per cent at least to this because of chain theatres not permitted to subscribe individually (the head theatre is the booking office) and you have in definite figures the proof that "THE NEWS COVERS THE FIELD."

Note.—Since this audit 430 exhibitor subscriptions have been added.

Sydney Cohen Questions Motive of William A. Brady's Tour

Lodges Charges Against National Ass'n; Brady Condemns Censorship

CHARGING that William A. Brady's tour of the country for the alleged purpose of arousing the industry to combat censorship, blue laws and other menaces is in reality a move to disrupt the Moving Picture Theatre Owners of America, President Sydney Cohen, Secretary Sam Berman; Senator James Walker, attorney for the theatre owners' organization; and John Manheimer, chairman of the directors of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, attended the Chicago mass meeting called to hear Mr. Brady talk on censorship and bitterly attacked the methods of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry.

When Sam Atkinson, chairman of the meeting, rapped for order, the hall at 19 W. Adams street was crowded with exhibitors, exchange men, newspaper men and others interested in the industry, and on the stage as guests of honor were Blanche Bates, Lenore Ulric, Otis Skinner, William Hodge and Henry Miller.

William A. Brady, immediately after being introduced, stated that he stood for co-operation and was making a trip for the one purpose of sounding an alarm to awaken the men and women of the industry to a realization of the dangers with which they are confronted. He then suggested that for the sake of saving time that anyone who had any questions to ask put them at once and then he would proceed with his speech.

Mr. Cohen arose and asked why Mr. Brady was making this trip following the meeting between the committees of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association in New York. After some discussion and an appeal from Dr. Atkinson that the members of the industry present refrain from conducting a dispute in public, it was decided to have Mr. Brady proceed with his talk, after which the general public and the members of the daily press would be excluded from the meeting, which would then take up questions in controversy.

In the course of his address Mr. Brady made a strong plea for co-operation and declared that it was not the reformers who put over prohibition, but that the break between the whisky men and the beer and wine interests, both of whom stabbed the others in the back, was really responsible for the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment and that the danger to the motion picture industry was similar, unless the industry got together and presented a united front to the reformers and "profiteering moralists," who to keep on the job, needed a new victim and had decided to pick on the movies.

Mrs. Dodge, of Vermont, Back in Business

MRS. PAULINE K. DODGE, of Morrisville, Vt., has become re-established again as an exhibitor in her local district, according to a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Mrs. Dodge became prominent in trade circles in connection with the recent controversy that centered around the Paramount-Black interests in New England.

Through the efforts of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Mrs. Dodge succeeded in having the Selectmen of Morrisville grant her an exclusive license in the town. Irvin M. Salyerds, representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, had gone to Morrisville and helped Mrs. Dodge to remove her equipment from the Bijou Theatre into the Town Hall. It was a gala occasion for Morrisville and the country fifty miles around, because of the nature of the production which was offered to the patrons on Saturday afternoon and evening, February 5th. "Way Down East," the D. W. Griffith Production, was shown on the screen at the opening performances.

Mr. Griffith furnished the entire performance without any charge whatever. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Mrs. Dodge have written to Mr. Griffith expressing their gratitude.

Mr. Brady further pointed out that censorship and blue laws were not the only dangers that were confronting the industry, but that tariff and taxation also were serious questions. He declared that Secretary Houston had recommended the tax on motion pictures be doubled and that at a recent meeting of the National Manufacturers Association, that body sought to shift the burden of taxation from their shoulders to that of the picture industry.

Satisfaction with the present methods of censoring pictures in Chicago, under the direction of the police department, headed by Chief Charles Fitzmorris, was expressed by practically all the speakers who insisted, however, that there should be no more reason for pre-judging and censoring pictures than newspapers, books, or paintings.

During the hearing, Timothy D. Hurley, a lawyer, declared that if he were the censor of last resort, he would bar Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," and declared his reasons were that there were included in it scenes representing things that were in violation of the law.

"Name one," shouted Brady, who had been called to the rostrum to speak and who agreed to answer questions.

"One is where a mother abandons her baby in an ash-can," retorted Hurley. "That is a crime."

"But it was not an ash-can," volunteered Watterson Rothacker, who was among the spectators. "It was a limousine."

"Well, what's the difference between an ash-can and a limousine?" was the reply of Hurley.

One important development in the hearing was the possibility of putting the question of such drastic censorship squarely up to the people.

"Would you," asked W. S. Fleming, a Protestant minister who saw the film, "Hell's Hinges," and has started out to battle for censorship, "agree to putting this question to a referendum?

"Would you people agree to keep your mouths shut and let it go honestly to a vote, without speeches or sermons from the pulpit," was Brady's answer.

"We will, if you will agree not to mention it on a screen," answered Hurley and Fleming.

"Then we will," was Brady's firm answer.

"All we want is a square deal for a great industry," said Brady. Newspapers are not pre-judged. Grand opera is full of crimes. In 95 per cent of the pictures, virtue is always triumphant. Yon cannot write drama without wrong, if you are to have right triumph. In Hamlet, a king is poisoned; in Richard III, there is a murder scene in the tower. But this ordinance would permit three persons at their individual whims to bar such pictures."

Senator Walker pledged the support and co-operation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the fight on censorship, but declared that one big association was impossible unless a thorough housecleaning takes place in the National Association, and that the present deposit system and the lack of uniform contract are blocking the way to one big organization.

At this point the meeting adjourned and when it reconvened with the public and daily press excluded, Mr. Cohen attacked the National Association and Mr. Brady for the alleged failure to carry out agreements as to uniform contracts and a correction of the deposit system, which he stated, were agreed upon at the New York meeting. He also charged that Mr. Brady had not received bona fide invitations to speak from the exhibitor organizations in various cities he proposed visiting, and backed his allegations up with letters and telegrams.

Joe Hopp of Chicago, president of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance, affiliated with the Cohen organization, also declared that the Alliance had not been invited to take part in the mass-meeting.

Cohen Questions Motives of Brady

Mr. Cohen then charged that Mr. Brady was making an effort to disrupt the theatre owners organization and secure exhibitor members for the national association. He also resented Mr. Brady's charge that petty politics had prevented the motion picture industry from turning in over five million instead of two million and a half dollars to the Hoover fund and said that if anyone had played petty politics it was Mr. Brady and the members of his organization. A long argument followed as to this, with Mr. Brady making counter charges and absolutely denying that he had played politics.

The sentiment of the New York speakers was voiced by Sam Berman when he interjected that he loved Bill Brady, but that "he's in damned rotten company" and by Senator Walker, who said, "he's just window dressing for other people."

Mr. Brady was aroused by various statements made and at one point declared that if Mr. Cohen's statement were proved to be true, that the agreement as to uniform contracts and deposits made at the New York meeting were not being carried out by the National Association, that he, Brady, will resign as president of that organization on his return east. He stated, however, that it was the intention of the association to make good on all promises made, but that it took time to get the legal details worked out.

One reason why the Cohen forces had come to Chicago from New York, it is understood, was to prevent Chicago theatre owners from being lined up for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and in this they apparently succeeded, for the meeting dissolved without action. Even a vote of thanks for Mr. Brady's visit, proposed by Sam Atkinson, met with protest and was lost sight of in the shuffle.

Practically all the leading exhibitors and exchange men of Chicago were present at the meeting, as well as a number of visitors from outside the city, including: President John Rhode and Fred Siegert of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association; W. A. Steffis, president of the Minnesota Exhibitors organization; President Gus Schmidt and E. H. Bingham of the Indiana Exhibitors Association; and Jack Connolly of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Following his return from Chicago Sydney Cohen reports that wires addressed to the M. P. T. O. of A. headquarters by the organized exhibitors of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan promise absolute support to the stand that the national organization of exhibitors has taken at the Chicago meeting. Mr. Cohen quotes a telegram said to have been sent Mr. Brady from the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, as follows:

"A repetition of your Chicago City Hall address not required in Milwaukee. Do not come here on our account."

A letter has been sent to every member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, according to Mr. Cohen, the purpose of which is to inform the members of the alleged attempt "to disrupt and destroy the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America," made, says the letter, "in the name and by the authority of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry." The letter also asks the member addressed "to define your position without delay and as plainly as possible."

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City, of which William Brandt is president, also showed increased activity following the speech of Mr. Brady at Chicago. In a resolution adopted by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, exception was taken to the alleged statement of Mr. Brady at Chicago to the effect "that there was dissension in the ranks of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City and that the Chamber of Commerce was not in accord with the plans, aims, purposes and policies of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America." This alleged statement was branded by the resolution as a "gratuitous insult" to the Chamber of Commerce and denounced as "false and malicious."

Paramount District Managers Meet in N. Y.

A convention of district managers of the Paramount sales organization was held at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week at the call of S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution. This convention is an annual affair, the object being to bring all of the district managers into direct touch with the home office officials and with each other so that the various problems of distribution may be intimately discussed.

The sessions of the convention were held in the office of General Manager Kent and were attended by the following from the home office: Mr. Kent, H. G. Balance, E. E. Shauer, J. W. Hicks, Jr., M. H. Lewis, Jerome Beatty, Lee Counselman, Claud Saunders, F. V. Chamberlin, Melville Shauer, Oscar A. Morgan, Henry Saulisbury. Those from the field included H. H. Buxbaum, Herman Wobber, H. J. Corbett, R. C. LiBeau, J. H. Gilday, George Schaeffer, Philip Reisman, H. P. Wolfberg, Louis Marcus, W. E. Smith, John D. Clark, George W. Weeks and H. G. Ross.

At 12:30 each day all of those in attendance went to the Hotel Commodore for luncheon, while the evenings were given up to social engagements, of which there were many.

Several new appointments were made by General Manager Kent at the convention, and these will be announced later.

Harris P. Wolfberg

Paramount District Manager Resigns

At a meeting of the personnel of the Chicago office of Paramount, tribute was paid to the administration of Harris P. Wolfberg, district manager, who has just resigned to accept the vice-presidency and general salesmanagership of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation. Telegrams and letters from exhibitors regretting Wolfberg's departure and congratulating him were read. Milton Hirsch spoke on behalf of the organization. Wolfberg, in his "swan song" and speaking as one now outside the motion picture industry, told his force of the wonderful future of moving pictures, making it clear that he was leaving with regret and only because he had been offered an opportunity for personal advancement he could not reject.

Rocky Mountain Screen Club Elects Officers

At the annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club the following officers were elected for the year of 1921: H. E. Hoffman, president; W. E. Scott, vice-president; Charles Gillen, secretary and treasurer; M. C. Gershart of Ft. Collins, Col., F. Fairchild of Boulder, Col., F. R. Kelly of Salida, Col., and J. T. Lynch of Laramie, Wyo., vice-presidents.

The Board of Directors consists of H. E. Huffman, W. E. Scott, H. T. Nolan, J. H. Ashby, W. Lichenstein, A. G. Talbot, F. B. Culp, M. H. Cohn, Chas. Gillen, M. C. Gerehart, F. Fairchild, F. R. Kelly, J. T. Lynch.

So. Carolina Exhibitor Is Acquitted of Charge

It took a Wilmington jury just twenty minutes to acquit M. F. Schnibben, manager of the Opera House of Florence, S. C., of the charge of manslaughter preferred against him. Mr. Schnibben was driving a car which struck and killed a negro woman last July.

Bitter Fight On in Nebraska Over Censorship Measure

Film Men Attack Bill in Hearing Before Senate and House Committee

A BITTER fight is on in Nebraska over the proposed state censorship bill. It is the main issue before the legislature.

Men connected with the motion picture industry were given a hearing before the joint committee from the house and Senate on February 3 and expressed their views on the proposed censorship bill introduced at the request of the Children's Code commission.

Among the speakers were: Sidney Meyer of the Fox Film Corporation, Omaha; Harry Goldberg, manager of the Aun theatre, Omaha; A. R. Pramer, Alhambra theatre, Omaha; Stuart Gould, secretary of the Nebraska Motion Picture Theatre Owners; W. W. Hughes, David City, Neb.; and J. C. Jenkins, Neligh, Neb.

Mr. Meyer quoted David Wark Griffith on censorship that it was impossible for "small caliber politicians" to censor the heart of one of the greatest art institutions in America. He stated that the proposed censorship was impractical because the censors in one state would find one objectionable feature while another state would find another, and consequently the picture would be ruined by amateurs censoring pictures that needed no censorship.

Mr. Meyer quoted statistics to show that the figures presented by the commission to prove that the expense of the board would be paid by the theatres were incorrect, and that the taxpayers would be forced to pay the deficit. He stated that the law of economics that the consumer pays the expense would necessarily be followed out in this case and that the burden could not be borne by the industry without increasing prices, which would be done as soon as the law became effective.

Stuart Gould explained the workings of the National Board of Censorship, composed of 200 leading men and women in the United States, who, he said, now censored 90 per cent of all pictures shown on the screen. He deplored the fact that 10 per cent were not censored and said within a year the exhibitors would force all pictures to be censored by this board in self defense.

Mr. Gould called attention to the leading art galleries of this country where he said the majority of masterpieces were in the nude. These galleries, he said, were not censored and only the lascivious persons could see evil in them.

Co-operation and not arbitrary legislation was urged by William Hughes, a David City operator.

"If representative men and women of the city and towns will confer with the motion picture operator, he's too smart not to heed their suggestions on the pictures desired in that town," Hughes declared.

A tin can almost precipitated a fight at the hearing. It was shown by J. C. Jenkins, a Neligh motion picture operator, to the committee.

"The day before I came to Lincoln, I cut a little hole in this can, had some ballots printed and walked up and down the main street of Neligh with the can," he said. "The ballots were marked 'for censorship' and 'against censorship.' I asked everybody to vote on the question. I don't know how they voted now and didn't then. But if 40 per cent are for censorship, I'll withdraw my stand against censorship."

The can was handed to Representative Green, chairman of the committee and sponsor of the censorship bill. Newspaper men asked Green to open the can and count the ballots. Green refused. Then Representatives Harry Foster of Omaha and George Williams of Fairmont, demanded that the can be opened. Green turned it over to them.

The vote was 23 for censorship and 96 against.

Jenkins said it was unfair for a "small band of politicians" to censor pictures. He said that every community wants a different kind of picture. He illustrated his meaning by the book, "The Shepherd of the Hills." One reader, he said, would give the book the highest praise, while another would say it should not be read because he found some objectionable feature in it.

The consensus of opinion of the motion picture men was that children under 15 years of age should not be allowed to frequent motion picture shows alone. They urged that if objectionable pictures were shown, it was the duty of citizens of Nebraska to make complaints under existing statutes. The present law, they said, makes ample provision for prosecuting persons showing immoral pictures.

A large crowd attended the hearing, which lasted until a late hour. The spectators were mostly Lincoln club women who are leading the campaign for a state censorship board.

Loew Cleveland Opening a Big Event

The opening of Marcus Loew's new million dollar State Theatre, Euclid avenue and East 14th street, Cleveland, on Saturday evening of February 5th, was one of the biggest things of the kind ever done in Cleveland. The announcement that more than a score of prominent motion picture stars and directors would participate in the grand opening of the theatre, made local interest keen.

Bert Lytell, Dorothy Phillips, Allen Holubar, Anita Loos and John Emerson, Lew Cody, Virginia Valli, Hope Hampton, Creighton Hale, Marguerite Marsh, Johnny Hines and Lucy Fox were among those who were present.

City and state officials occupied a conspicuous place in the formal opening of the State theatre also. Mayor Fitzgerald and his staff were present. Governor Davis and family occupied a box.

150 N. Y. Ministers Frame Anti-Blue Law Petition

Governor Nathan L. Miller, of New York, has received a resolution passed by 150 ministers who are protesting against any "Blue Law" legislation. This resolution was passed at a general conference of Seventh Day Adventists.

"Laws now in force serve to protect citizens against all uncivil acts, making a so-called Sunday law unnecessary," says the resolution.

What Readers Are Thinking

Better-Booking Campaign

THE following letter has been addressed to William A. Johnston by J. L. Schnitzer, president of Equity Pictures Corporation:

"I wish to call your attention to a campaign inaugurated by Equity Pictures which is calculated to stimulate more and better bookings by exhibitors throughout the country.

"On a recent trip through some of the key cities of the country, I found that exhibitors were chosing the cheaper pictures and gradually eliminating the more costly productions from their schedule. This practice was especially common among the smaller exhibitors. The reason for this economy lies in the slump in attendance which exhibitors as a whole are suffering at present, with some exceptions. By some process of mistaken logic, the small theatre-owner figured that when income is low, expenses should be proportionately reduced, even in items that supply his income. The prevailing notion seemed to be, that if patrons stop coming to see good pictures, give them poor pictures and then it won't matter so much whether they come or not, as poor pictures cost little.

"With a view to 'grabbing the bull by the horns,' Equity has launched a campaign against this false theory before it wreaks further havoc on the already depressed state of business. It has sent out a series of leaflets to its franchise-holders, to be distributed by them to every single exhibitor of their respective territories. This series of leaflets constitutes an educational campaign that directs the exhibitor's attention to his misguided policy in strong and simple language. It illustrates to him the folly of cheapening a product when trade is poor, instead of improving it. It points out that by lowering the quality of his pictures, he will even lose the little patronage he has left. Now, above any other time, when discrimination is being exercised by the public in its attendance at motion-pictures, the exhibitors should make it his duty to offer bigger and better pictures than he has ever presented. While the cost may be more than an inferior picture, the returns and the good will will more than balance the extra expense.

"I might add that no mention of Equity Pictures is made in this educational campaign, and that the entire plan is one of service to exhibitors. The official title of the campaign is called 'Play and Pay.'"

More Evils Than Footage

THE following letter was received by Mr. Johnston from E. J. Emery of New York City:

"Having read your article on FOOTAGE in the issue of Jan. 15th, I beg to suggest:

"Footage is a good heading for an article on over production, but there is more than footage the matter with Filmdom.

"A well known producer said to me today, it almost seems as if the bottom was out of pictures. I hastened to assure him he was wrong, and told him that pictures were not going out of business, but that many adjuncts to it were, and that if they did not that pictures then, might go out for good.

"Footage is the stalling device of the unthinking producer and director. And speaking of directors, where do they get many of them; where do they come from? I can name twenty-five directors who three years ago were obscure second-rate assistants to eminent stage directors. I note that the stage directors are still plying their trade, while the obscure assistants now are 'Picture Directors.'

"Surely a profession that can elevate such questionable talent in so short a time, must be on the whole, conducted on a very lax scale, with the aforesaid result, FOOTAGE.

"Again we are met with another very lax method. I refer to the King's Favorite, that certain young female person, who is the particular friend of a particular friend of the producer, or director or the backer, etc., et al., and so on. This young female becomes a featured player, many times a star, for God knows what reason, EXCEPT that she is a YOUNG FEMALE. Result again—FOOTAGE.

"Buttonhole makers and pickle boat captains persist, however, so long as a bank roll remains and thus the FOOTAGE piles up.

"Let those who think the bottom is out of pictures take a look at that real picture, PASSION, played by real actors, (no names mentioned of the cast) except Mlle. Negri, and from that picture take a long and lasting lesson, that first of all a real picture must have intelligence backed up by years of experience. And let me throw a bomb into the picture camp, by adding STAGE EXPERIENCE, actors that are ACTORS, not machines, or marionettes pulled by the string in the director's hand, who often pulls the wrong string, thus adding to the FOOTAGE.

"Let the producers engage actors, players who are schooled to do it the first time, and not have recourse to FOOTAGE to cover the NEAR Director's mistakes.

"Is it then, any wonder that when a picture is put forth with intelligence showing in every foot of its length, that this same picture should receive the plaudits of the public in that one unmistakeable way, i. e., patronage. In such a picture there is not time for FOOTAGE, in fact many hundreds of feet of wonderful and painstaking and costly production work has been cut out, but to the relief and benefit of the dramatic story of the picture. This cutting I may suggest, could have been judiciously applied to the first two reels of 'The Mark of Zorro,' which, however, redeemed itself in the latter reels.

"But you will always have FOOTAGE as long as you keep forgetting that the presentation of a good picture is merely the art of stage acting, plus the mechanical tricks and arts which the camera possesses, and which enhance the subject by these said tricks and arts and thus replace the spoken word."

Read This Letter!

J. L. SCHNITZER, of Equity Pictures, presents a thought for serious consideration in the opening letter on this page.

He offers a real message, not only to exhibitors, but also to producers and distributors—especially independents—who are meeting present conditions by playing ostrich. At a time when live wire promotion and advertising are more necessary than ever.

Unfair Competition

J. L. CLAYTON of the Boulevard Amusement Co., Leaksville, N. C., writes the NEWS as follows:

"I always look forward to the arrival of your magazine, and I can assure you that I always enjoy reading the same. I have been reading for the past few weeks what the different branches of the industry had to say in regard to the Y. M. C. A.'s and other welfare and religious societies running pictures in competition to the legitimate exhibitors. I was very much impressed with what Mr. A. C. Bromberg had to say in the Weekly Film Review of this week, and I am sure that I for one can agree with him, for I think I know something about Y. M. C. A. competition, as I have had them to contend with for the past six years. I am not a knocker of fair competition, but when your competitor has no tax except the 5% film rental tax to pay you cannot class them as fair competitors, and that is just what such societies as these are.

"Just ask one of the officers what he thinks about the censorship bills that are being introduced in the different states and see what they tell you. Ask one of them to sign a petition for you, and then you will soon find on what side of the fence he is standing.

"I know but very little of the rentals such societies as these pay for their service, but I do know of some film exchanges that will give their services to the 'Y' before they ever give me a chance at what they have, and I know some more exchanges that always come to me first, give me the chance to use a part or all, and then what I cannot use they will sell to the 'Y.' I know other exchanges that will come to me and if I have no dates that I can give them they say: "Well, we don't care to sell the 'Y.'"

"We all know too there are plenty of pictures on the market; so a little thing like that doesn't worry a fellow much. But when he sees that he cannot sell you and then will not try to sell these societies you naturally make a place for him on your booking sheet as soon as possible.

"All of these societies are good in their place and some of them are doing a great deal of good, but where is their place? That is the point that we want to find out; and if their place is in the amusement field, then let them open their house as such, pay their city, county, state and federal taxes and be one of the regular fellows.

"Until they are such, the industry is doing itself a great injustice in serving them programs. If the producers and distributors don't soon realize this fact, it will be too late. I think the film managers' association should take this matter under consideration and bring about some action. There is lots that could be said in regard to some of the above mentioned societies, but so much talk and no work doesn't amount to much."

Approves Crandall's Stand

HARRY M. CRANDALL recently voiced his disapproval of the policy of certain producers in running so-called "big productions" in legitimate theatres while excluding the exhibitor from the privilege of screening the attraction. Mr. Crandall's statement has won the following endorsement from James A. Morrison of Meaford, Ont. He writes the NEWS as follows:

"In reading your valuable journal of January 29th, 1921, I noticed a statement of Harry M. Crandall's, the prominent exhibitor of Washington, D. C. Now I entirely agree with him, and I would like to see his thoughts put into practice in Canada. This thing of the large theatres playing the 'big subjects' exclusively is certainly not fair to the smaller houses. And pictures, in my opinion, should not be allowed to be shown in any theatre except the regular picture show-houses, and this more so in the small districts. I hope that we will see more suggestions such as that which Mr. Crandall has made."

Photoplay Magazine Wins Four Year Legal Fight

James R. Quirk, editor and publisher of Photoplay Magazine, has just been notified of verdict in favor of his magazine rendered by the United States Court of Appeals of Pennsylvania in the four years' legal fight against Photo-Play Journal, charging infringement on the name and registered trademark of Photoplay Magazine and unfair competition. The court grants the injunction asked by Photoplay Magazine, restraining the La Verne Publishing Company, Inc., and the Central Press Company, publishers of Photo-Play Journal, from further use of the distinguishing word, "Photo-Play," in the name of this publication.

The action was brought in the State of Pennsylvania as the defendant publication is published in Philadelphia. In reversing the decision of the lower courts in this case, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals states in part:

"We are of the opinion that there is such similarity in the titles of the two publications, which the defendants have created by adopting precisely one word of the complainant's title and the synonym of the other, as to cause confusion, and deception in the public mind. Relief should, therefore, be granted. The decree of the court below will accordingly be reversed with direction to reinstate complaintant's bill in conformity with this opinion."

The court states that "Photoplay is the catchword in the title" of Photoplay Magazine "under which it became popular and built up a large circulation, and the defendant, knowing this, adopted the catchword of the title and added to it a distinguishing noun, 'Journal,' in place of 'Magazine,' which in fact does not distinguish. Confusion and deception may readily happen, indeed, may be expected." The higher court further finds that "the fact that defendants have separated the first part of the word by a hyphen from the latter part which begins with a capital, does not avoid confusion, for this attempted distinction cannot be detected in pronunciation and may not be seen by purchasers."

Neither does the court find that the substitution of "Journal" for "Magazine" makes much difference. "To illustrate," the decision continues, "Scribner's Magazine is popularly called 'Scribner's,' though it is entitled 'Scribner's Magazine.' If another Scribner were to issue a periodical of the same character entitled 'Scribner's Journal,' it is inconceivable that there would not be a confusion and deception in the public mind."

First National Franchise Holders Meet in Los Angeles

Over Fifty Exhibitors of Southern California and Arizona Attend

IN response to a call from Manager David Bershon of the Los Angeles Associated First National Exchange, more than fifty First National franchise-holders of Southern California and Arizona convened in Los Angeles on February 1st and 2nd. Some of the prominent producers, releasing through Associated First National Pictures, were on hand and addressed the assembled exhibitors. Sol Lesser presided at the luncheon tendered the visiting theatre-owners on the first day of the convention. Mr. Lesser during the course of his speech pointed out the means adopted by the First National executive committee "to insure a fair medium and protection for the producer and the exhibitor."

Lesser then in turn introduced Albert A. Kaufman, producer of Allen Holubar's "Man, Woman, Marriage;" Louis B. Mayer, producer of the Anita Stewart and John M. Stahl productions; Pete Smith, Marshall Neilan's representative; and B. P. Fineman, vice-president of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation. The exhibitors listened to the commendation of the producers concerning the treatment of their productions by Associated First National exhibitors. The salient points advanced were that the producer and the exhibitor are partners; the producer is absolutely dependent upon the exhibitor for success; the motion picture industry can never retrograde so long as an organization of the type of Associated First National, with the door always open to artistic independent effort, is in existence.

Albert A. Kaufman informed the gathering of the success of "Man, Woman, Marriage" at the Regent Theatre in Paterson, N. J. He congratulated the exhibitors upon the marvellous start they are guaranteed for the new year with such productions as the "Big Five."

"Five years ago when a producer contemplated making a production," said Kaufman, he sat down to decide which of three or four organizations he would offer his picture. Today there is no indecision, he takes it to Associated First National officials immediately."

Kaufman than told the gathering of the progress being made on the Sidney Franklin productions. In conclusion he said: "If First National franchise holders continue the way they have started, I hope always to be able to produce independently for them."

Louis B. Mayer also had a very optimistic view point. He said: "It is gratifying to me to be here today to greet you. It was just about two years ago that I was tendered a dinner by the Exhibitors' League of Connecticut, when they reviewed 'Virtuous Wives,' my first offering to the circuit, I told those exhibitors that First National would succeed, and I am happy to be able to say 'I told you so.' And there's a reason—First National is fundamentally right. The gates are wide open for everybody who believes he can produce the cream and has the money to back his judgment. If he makes good he can continue—if he doesn't, he's out. The First National executive committee does not grant long contracts to any except those of undisputed calibre. You haven't a gamble in the whole proposition. 'There'll be a franchise everywhere' is the truest statement that has ever appeared in the trade papers." Mayer impressed upon the exhibitors the fact that the producer's task was not a light one, nor his path lined with gold. "We are both trying hard," said Mayer, "to give the best that is in us. We both must live. Frankly, I wish that I had stuck to my theatres, because there is more money in it; but I didn't—I'm a producer, and if it wasn't for First National I wouldn't be producing."

B. P. Fineman said that he, like Mr. Mayer, wasn't making much money: but that he was having a lot of fun. "Five years ago," said Fineman; "I was working for Adolph Zukor when J. D. Williams conceived the idea of First National. Wise ones said that the exhibitors would not stick together long enough to give the idea a test. They were wrong. The fact that you have secured such pictures as the 'Big Five' (and there are others just as big coming along), proves that the proposition is right and that you are going to make a lot of money. I know from reports that Miss MacDonald is gaining in favor every week. Her work is getting better with every picture and we are weekly strengthening our organization."

Pete Smith, Marshall Neilan representative, extended Mr. Neilan's regrets on not being able to be present. "When I came out from New York," said Smith, "I learned a thing or two about putting a picture over. You boys out here seem to put more pep into your work. They are more or less conservative back there—mostly more. You westerners are entirely different. Your stuff is there. Its more like the stuff Barnum, the greatest showman of them all, used.

"Mr. Neilan is trying to make good pictures, and First National will try to sell them to you. Previous speakers have press agented his former efforts, and with pardonable pride may I also remind you of what Neilan has accomplished. We believe that we have a wonderful picture in 'Bob Hampton of Placer,' for Mr. Neilan has devoted more time, energy and money to it than any picture he has ever made."

Nicholas Power Dead

Nicholas Power, pioneer picture inventor, died at Palm Beach, Florida, Monday, February 7th.

Funeral Services, with Masonic rites, will be held Friday evening, February 11th, from the Chapel at 86 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn.

Federated Film Managers Meet on West Coast

An elaborate program has been prepared for the members in attendance at the semi-annual meeting of the Federated Film Exchanges of America on the Coast this week. The exchange representatives are convening at Byron Springs near San Francisco. Following a banquet at Tates in San Francisco on Monday of this week, the members left for Byron Springs on Tuesday, where all the business sessions of the meeting are scheduled to be held. On Friday afternoon, they are to return to San Francisco for a festive celebration at the St. Francis hotel. Saturday morning they will start for Los Angeles by automobile over the Coast highway. They are to arrive in Los Angeles Monday morning, the 14th.

Tuesday the Warner Bros. will be the host at an African Jungle entertainment at Selig Zoo when many of the scenes for a coming animal feature will be filmed. The other two days' program for their stay in Los Angeles have not been fully mapped out. A portion of one day they will be the guests of Special Pictures Corporation, and no doubt on another they will make a tour of the studios.

Plans for the convention entertainment at San Francisco were made by George M. Mann, Marion H. Cohn and D. J. Chatkins, holders of the Federated franchise for San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The following are the officers: J. L. Friedman, Chicago, president; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans, vice-president; D. J. Cathkins, San Francisco, secretary; S. V. Grand, Boston, treasurer.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Superior Screen Service has closed with the Producers' Security Corporation for their six-reel production entitled "When Dawn Came." Superior also has closed a deal with Gaumont Company for fifty-two one-reel releases known as Screen Magazine, also a five-reel feature entitled "The Edge of Youth," and a five-reel feature, "The Infatuation of Youth." Harry Weiss is investigating conditions in Indianapolis, St. Louis, Detroit and Cleveland, and it is rumored that he will put in branch exchanges in those cities.

Richard Robertson announces his resignation as vice-president of Independent Films Association effective at once. Mr. Robertson has not as yet announced his future plans, but it is understood he will accept another important position in the film industry.

Victor Kremer was in Chicago this week in the interest of his corporation. Jerome Lewis of the Kremer Organization was also visiting Chicago last week.

J. D. Whitehead has purchased the Realart theatre on West Madison street from the Sultan Amusement Company and will take personal charge of the house.

T. E. Hancock of the Pacific Film Company, Los Angeles, spent last week in Chicago negotiating for the sale of this territory on some of the Pacific Film Company's productions and, it is understood, closed a contract, details of which will be announced within a few days.

What really was an interesting battle between the motion picture and the spoken drama was staged here last week, and the spoken drama forces were routed with a loss of $516,000 spread over a period of twenty-five years. The battle was between the Shuberts and Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and was over the Garrick theatre here. In January, 1920, the Garrick Building Corporation acquired the property and announced that when the Shuberts' lease expired in September, 1923, the rent would be $75,000 a year. The Shuberts were paying $45,000. They were given until June, 1920, to make up their minds. But they failed to do it and Jones, Linick & Schaefer stepped in and took the lease, announcing that they probably would build a new theatre there after actually acquiring the property. Then the Shuberts decided they had made a mistake and that they were willing to pay for it. So finally the Spring Theatre Company, most of the stock of which is said to be held by the Shuberts, agreed to pay Jones, Linick & Schaefer an annual rental of $96,986 for the twenty-five-year period. So their quick decision in the matter of taking over the lease means $516,000 into the pockets of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who are, under the terms of the agreement, to get $100,000 at once.

The Garden Theatre, Michigan City, Indiana, was destroyed by fire last week and will at once be replaced by a new and better theatre, according to Wallerstein Brothers the owners. Wallerstein Brothers were successful department store merchants and broke into the motion picture game with the purchase of the Starland Theatre in Michigan City two years ago, since which time they have acquired three other houses, giving them control of both the vaudeville and picture business in that city. The Garden Theatre was the most recent of their purchases, the deal having been consummated within the last month.

Ascher Brothers have chosen Ed. Nikodem, a veteran of their organization, and at present manager of the Terminal Theatre, Chicago, to be manager of their Capitol Theatre at Cincinnati, which will open about March 15th. Mr. Nikodem was scheduled to leave for Cincinnati this week to make preliminary arrangements for the premiere performance at the Capitol.

One more theatre has been added to the chain of Ascher Brothers' houses according to an announcement just given out. It is the Capital Theatre at Manitowac, Wisconsin, which is rapidly nearing completion, and which has been leased for ten years by Ascher Brothers from George Brothers Company of Manitowac. The house will have fifteen hundred seats and is a first-class moving picture theatre in every respect, with all modern improvements. General Manager Newhafer has just returned from a visit to Manitowac, during which he completed arrangements for elaborate electrical installation in the Capitol.

The new Vitagraph exchange at 839 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

B. Herbert Milligen of Creation Film Company announces that he has disposed of additional territory for his feature, "For the Freedom of Ireland," as follows: Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Apex Pictures Corporation of Pittsburgh; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, to First National Exchange, Minneapolis; Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and District of Columbia to the Reliance Film Company of Washington, D. C. C. Hoddy Milligan is scheduled to leave on a trip throughout the South this week to dispose of southern territory on the Irish feature.

Friends of Gus Truelich are glad to find him back on the job at the Bonita Theatre greatly improved in health.

The Blackstone Exchange, controlled by Morris Kline, and which has its headquarters at 27 E. Seventh street, has sold out to the New Era Film Corporation.

The syndicate which controls the De Luxe Theatre on Sixty-third street has added the Rex Theatre to its holdings, Adolph Powell having disposed of his entire interest in the latter house to the syndicate.

Booker Heller has resigned from Reelcraft and plans to inaugurate a messenger and pick up service in Chicago.

Two announcements of interest to Chicago film circles were made at the Schoenstadt headquarters this week. They are that Arthur Schoenstadt is engaged to Miss Dorothy Heyman of 4529 Ellis avenue, and that Miss Bertha Schoenstadt's marriage to Lewis Lindenthall took place at the Blackstone Hotel on February 2nd.

Douglas Q. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Industrial Division, spent several days last week with W. E. Hamilton in charge of the Rothacker branch in Milwaukee, and then proceeded on a tour of Canadian border states. S. J. Stoughton has returned to Chicago from a trip throughout the Southwest.

Tom Norman, who has just disposed of his interests in the Gary theatre at Gary, Indiana, to A. I. Cohen of Chicago, left Monday night for Los Angeles on a business and pleasure trip. Mr. Norman is shipping his car to the coast and expects to remain there for two months at least, and it is rumored he may locate there permanently. George Hines, popularly known as "daddy" of the Auditorium, South Bend, Indiana, headed for the coast Wednesday where he will join Mr. Norman.

Si Greiver, of Russell-Greiver-Russell, during his recent trip throughout the south, disposed of state rights on Lester Cuneo series of westerns including "Lone Hand Wilson" and "The Ranger and the Law," to the Pearce Film Company of Atlanta and New Orleans for the following territory: Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi. Frank Zambreno, who recently took over the Cuneo Pictures for Illinois and Indiana, predicts a real success for this star in westerns basing his prediction on the great showing made in "The Ranger and the Law."

It was stated at Metro's Chicago Exchange this week that reports that Jack Graumon was again to become manager of Metro's Chicago Exchange were entirely unfounded and that L. A. Rozzelle would continue in charge of the office.

H. A. R. Dutton of Exhibitors Supply Co., is back in Chicago after spending sometime in Texas. Many friends of this popular supply man will be glad to know that his little daughter, whom he was forced to take southwest on account of poor health has been very much benefited by the change.

Vitagraph, Inc., is the latest of the big producing companies to move into the new film district having removed their quarters from the old Film Exchange to 835 S. Wabash Avenue where commodious offices have been prepared. Manager Tarbell is proud of his splendid new exchange and is kept busy accepting congratulations from callers on the accommodations afforded.

A group of prominent exchange men gathered in Chicago on the 4th and headed by Joe Friedman left for San Francisco to attend the Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., Convention in that city where they arrived on Monday and wired back that they had enjoyed a splendid trip. The party included, beside Mr. Friedman, Sam Grand, Boston; Ben Amsterdam, Philadelphia; Harry Charnas, Cleveland; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans; Al Kahn, Kansas City; Abe Warner, New York; Sam Bischoff, Boston; Walter Crane, New York; Ed. Bons, New York and K. F. Fitzpatrick of Chicago.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

The Kid—

Broke all records for week run. Carried over for 2nd week. (West.)

Smashes all records in the history of this theatre. (Middle West.)

Broke all house records first week and was held over for second week. (Middle West.)

Nineteen and Phyllis—

Only a fair Charles Ray picture and not up to his best. Did average business during its run here. (Middle West.)

Business dropped off a little during the week from that usually given Ray productions. (Middle West.)

The Notorious Miss Lisle—

An average picture with the star interpreting an uninteresting role. Business fair. (East.)

Passion's Playground—

Title and star get the public. A fair picture which went over well. (East.)

Passion—

It is the consensus of opinion that this is undoubtedly the greatest production from every angle shown at this theatre since its opening. Practically capacity business every day. (Middle West.)

The Master Mind—

Very interesting picture which brought more than usual business. (West.)

Go and Get It—

Certainly a great picture and a sure-fire box office attraction. (East.)

Dangerous Business—

This one went over big and the box office showed large receipts. Just seemed to bring 'em in, and they were well pleased with it. (West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Forbidden Fruit—

Elaborately produced and entertaining production that went over for a two week run to capacity business. (East.)

Fine picture that drew enormous crowds during opening week of this theatre. (East.)

Silk Hosiery—

Clever picture but star does not draw. (West.)

Entertaining little picture to fair business. (East.)

Midsummer Madness—

Played to average crowds all week at one theatre. At another the crowds were sufficiently large to justify our booking it for another week.

Found this to be a good entertainer and business was slightly above average during run. (West.)

The Inside of the Cup—

Seemed to take with my patrons and we had good business (West.)

Went over very nicely and the box office showed business somewhat above the usual. (West.)

The Passion Pilgrim—

The story was carried in serial form by one of the daily papers and this brought crowds to see the picture. They were not disappointed. (East.)

The Frontier of the Stars—

Very entertaining feature which the popularity of Thomas Meighan with our patrons help to put over in good shape. Did excellent business. (Middle West.)

Heliotrope—

Good crook story from new angle. Some liked it and a few didn't. Business good. (East.)

Paying the Piper—

Business held up very well for second week. Pleased our patrons. (Middle West.)

Conrad in Quest of His Youth—

A whimsical story, well acted, which seemed to please the crowds. (Middle West.)

The Charm School—

Fair picture but pleased Reid fans. (West.)

The Prince-Chap—

While this seemed to be a very interesting and entertaining picture, business was only average. (Middle West.)

METRO

The Misleading Lady—

Bert Lytell an excellent hero of cave-man love-making comedy that attracted only fair business. (East.)

Fair production which brought about average business. (West.)

Good business with this one. It seemed to entertain them well. (West.)

Off Shore—

Well received by big audience. Good business. (East.)

The Saphead—

Fair picture bringing fair business. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Mark of Zorro—

Bought out all the Douglas Fairbanks admirers and then some. It went over big and in the estimation of most people who saw it, it is the best thing Doug has ever done. (East.)

One of the best Fairbanks pictures in a long time. Drew capacity houses during its two week's run. (Middle West.)

Sure did go over great. Packed houses each performance. Box office receipts very satisfying. (West.)

The Love Light—

Mary Pickford interesting if one would forget the story which utterly failed to measure up to the standard expected. Held for the entire week to our regret. (East.)

The Love Flower—

Played to well-filled houses here all week although the opinions of many who say the picture leads to the belief that D. W. Griffith's name was the attraction and not the photoplay. Most critics seemed to feel there was not enough action in the film. (East.)

GOLDWYN

The Penalty—

Favorable comments were the order of the day. They all liked it but some thought it a bit gruesome. Business fine. (East.)

Scratch My Back—

A breezy comedy. T. Roy Barnes, a newcomer on the screen, is decidedly funny. (Middle West.)

Hold Your Horses—

Fairly good picture. Business about as usual. (West.)

Earthbound—

Personally I consider this a fine picture and worth seeing though it did not take very well at my house, having only average business. (West.)

FOX

While New York Sleeps—

This is an excellent picture, but it might be improved by having some connection between the three episodes with which it deals. (Middle West.)

The Texan—

Pretty good picture as far as entertainment goes. Average business. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Lying Lips—

A good drawing title but the production did not justify the name. Average picture. (East.)

The Last of the Mohicans—

Here is one that gets the money, though why we can't understand for it is too bloody. The name of this classic is its best advertisement. (Middle West.)

REALART

Something Different—

A good picture. This star always draws well at this house. Fine business during run.

The Furnace—

Weak story of marriage that played to average business. (East.)

SELZNICK

The Sin That Was His—

Entertaining story to good business. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Hearts Up—

This picture is a good bet. Audiences seemed very much pleased with it and business was fine. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—

This picture did only average business at this theatre. Fair feature. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—

Only a fair picture. If properly advertised it will get the money. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Immortality—

Picture with some very wonderful scenes but lacks any sustained interest and did not draw well. Played to poor business for a week. Too much of a Bible story to please the average audience. (Middle West.)

A Child for Sale—

Smashes all records for a five days showing. (West.)

Women Men Love—

Average program picture, but the people liked it. Built according to rule, and doesn't disappoint. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Helping Hoover Helped Clara Kimball Young

An amount of free publicity and mouth to mouth praise of Clara Kimball Young that could not be bought for money, was secured by Milton Crandall, the new exploitation director of Equity Pictures last week. Crandall set out for Syracuse a week before a showing of "Midchannel" was scheduled at the Savoy Theatre. Arriving at the depot, the Equity exploitation manager bought a newspaper and began to search for some peg of local events that he could hang his publicity onto. He lit upon a local item regarding the Hoover Campaign for the relief of the poor children of Europe. Syracuse, it appeared, had launched its own Hoover drive and the pride of its citizens was centered upon its success.

Accordingly Crandall visited the Hoover Committee and introduced himself as personal representative of Clara Kimball Young. He announced that Miss Young, whom he had just left on the westbound train, had ordered him to stop off at Syracuse and help the local Hoover Relief campaign. Miss Young, Crandall declared, had permitted him to use her name and expense in whatever assistance could be given to the cause. The Committee welcomed this voluntary co-operation and asked Crandall to suggest the form of assistance, which Crandall did. It consisted of selecting seven typical poverty-stricken children of Syracuse and taking them for an excursion through the thoroughfares of the city on a Saturday afternoon. The machine in which the children were driven about town bore a banner "Clara Kimball Young Unit Hoover Relief Fund." This form of publicizing the Hoover drive took well with the Hoover Committee, when Crandall pointed out that the public would be impressed with the sad sight of the seven poor kiddies and would follow Miss Young's example of charity to the poor by subscribing to the Hoover Fund.

The plan was carried out and the curiosity of the public was aroused, as anticipated. After the trip the children were treated to candy and toys, for which the Hoover Committee paid. Representatives of the Syracuse press were informed of the event, and all the papers carried full-column reports of Miss Young's generosity, together with pictures of the group of children and the star.

Following this event, which took place Saturday, came a big announcement of the appearance of Clara Kimball Young at the Savoy Theatre in "Midchannel." That Crandall's stunt was a success from a box-office viewpoint is attested by the reports of Jack Griswold of the Savoy of excellent business.

Rouda Has Novelty Lobby Display

Below is shown the special inside lobby display which H. M. Rouda, manager of Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, originated for the showing of "The Mark of Zorro."

The background was an amber color with red and amber lights overhead, and blue lights to the extreme left, to give the setting a sort of a sunset effect.

The cutout figure of Douglas Fairbanks in a jumping position was suspended in mid-air between the two houses. These houses were built of beaver board and stand out very prominently in the display.

To the right was a hay stack and also little cart filled with hay.

The above cut shows a special lobby display arranged over the lobby doors of Ascher's Merrill theatre, during the engagement of "The Mark of Zorro." A story relative to the display appears below

Schade Pulls A New Stunt

Toy Balloons and Spieler Exploitation Mediums for "Go and Get It" at Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio

A KNOCKOUT stunt in the way of inexpensive exploitation for street corners was originated this week in Sandusky, Ohio, when George J. Schade discovered that all it takes is an object floating through the air to make the average American citizen start talking.

Mr. Schade didn't use airplanes. He merely bought several gross of small rubber balloons which when inflated with the right sort of gas could be liberated, with the assurance that they would soar high into the clouds, leaving onlookers gazing at, and wondering about the tiny objects in the form of cards which were suspended from the little sky-chasers.

This stunt of Mr. Schade's was in the exploitation of "Go and Get It."

"Go and Get It," cried a leather-lunged young man as he released an ordinary toy balloon with a string and a card attached to it, at the foot of the principal thoroughfare of Sandusky, Ohio.

The crier addressed his command to numerous men, women, children of all ages, who had been watching him cavort with the gas-filled rubber encasement much after the manner of the average youngster when a circus with a balloon man on the job, happens to be in town.

One after another balloons were released at various street corners and other places throughout Sandusky, but the object of the leather-lunged young man who accompanied each release with a "Go-and-Get-It," was not disclosed.

The police were thinking of doing a little investigating when the process of liberation that had attracted so much attention, suddenly ceased.

No one had been able to capture a balloon for they had all soared high and far.

"Go and Get It" became a sort of jocular command in Sandusky. Everybody was saying "go and get it"—and laughing—very evidently enjoying what the average person considered a sort of a joke at the expense of some irresponsible boob.

The newspapers—all of which had, of course, been let in on the secret—carried good stories of the liberation of the balloons. Not, however,—until the first of the cards attached to the balloons released, had been turned in, did they mention the fact that each card was good for two admission tickets at the Schade Theatre—two tickets, as the cards, advised, "to see "'Go and Get It.'"

Cards good for two tickets were turned in from points forty miles away in several instances.

"The idea was original with us," said George J. Schade, owner and manager. "It worked out in great shape."

Home Talent Aids Wells in Putting Over "Down Home"

On this page is shown by cuts some of the exploitation for "Down Home," which O. F. Wells, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Charitan, Iowa, recently put over.

Mr. Wells borrowed all his props from local merchants through the medium of passes. His "farmers," as shown, were local talent who were recruited by the same method. The "rubes" started to sing about fifteen minutes before each performance. They also "cracked" some rural jokes, played checkers and lit up their corn cob pipes.

When not occupied at the theatre, they paraded about town, causing Charitan residents to inquire about all the unusual demonstration. The answer to their questions was, of course, good advertising for the Lincoln.

The Wells states that the stunts paid their small cost many times over.

Action Painting as Lobby Decoration

Frank Ford, manager of the Gold Theatre, West Roosevelt Road, Chicago, believes in action pictures in his lobby and theatre front for exploiting photoplays. When "The Branding Iron" was screened at the Gold Theatre, Mr. Ford instructed the house artist to paint a picture showing the actual branding of Joan Carver by her drunken husband.

The large painting was mounted and placed above the entrance to the theatre where passers-by would see it whether they entered or looked into the lobby or not. It was strongly lighted at night by the glare from the electric sign. Posters and poster cut-outs were used in the lobby. Mr. Ford had 10,000 heralds printed and covered the entire neighborhood with them.

To connect the painting up with the drama of the story, Mr. Ford had the following words printed at one side of the painting: "Has a man the right to brand his own wife?" and "Does a man own his own wife, body and soul?"

This cut illustrates how James H. Thompson, publicity director for Loew's theatres, Rochester, N. Y., secured some most unusual cooperation in exploiting "Earthbound." One of Rochester's leading ministers was induced to make the picture the subject of a sermon and advertised the event on the church bulletin board as shown above

This lobby display by the Savoy theatre, Pittsburgh, for "Kismet," is fully described in the accompanying story

More "Kismet" Exploitation

Savoy, Pittsburgh Theatre Builds Unusually Attractive Lobby Display

THE exploitation which "Kismet" is receiving is lacking neither in originality nor quality and threatens to reach the high water mark that "Down on the Farm" and "What's Your Hurry" achieved.

This week in text and but cuts we are able to relate how the Savoy theatre of Pittsburgh, one of the Rowland and Clifford string, decorated for its showing of "Kismet," especially concerning the lobby display arranged.

There was not much depth to play with, and little more than the average width, but every inch of space counted in the display. From the street to the entrance doors, every piece of wall and door space was disguised in such fashion that one might get the atmosphere of Bagdad. It was an extraordinary transformation that started from the sidewalk line.

Striking representations of the heavy stone walls of old Bagdad with doors or windows "let in" covered the spaces usually devoted to lobby frames. Where there was an angle in the wall, back panels showing houses and towers and minarets were shown in perspective, giving great visual depth. A door that leads to the office building above the theatre was treated in such manner that it might have been the entrance to one of the centuries-old buildings of Bagdad.

Perhaps the most striking piece of work, however, was the covering of the six swinging entrance and exit doors to the theatre. The entire width of these doors was treated as one scene, the inspiration coming from the long shots of the mosque, shown in "Kismet." The mosque apparently stood at the junction point of two streets, the mosque forming the connecting link. The artist did a very effective piece of work by covering the two entrance doors with panels that became a part of the general scenic setting and nevertheless permitted him to logically carry an "entrance" sign. The impression to be gained was that one was entering one of the painted buildings.

The dome of the lobby was artistically covered with streamers, and the front covered with bunting. Overhanging the bunting, one on either side of the lobby, was a star and crescent, the star carrying a picture of Mr. Skinner with the words: "Mr. Otis Skinner in," and the crescent carrying the single word "Kismet." Between the two stars and crescents was a shield, a cut-out of one of the one-sheets.

Lost Balloonists Assist Long Island Showman

Taking advantage of interest aroused by current news the manager of the Strand Theatre, Rockaway Park, L. I., had a special showing at his house for Lieutenants L. A. Kloor, and Walter Hinton, two of the three Army flying officers who were given up as lost when their balloon was swept into the desolate wilds of northern Canada recently. The manager cleverly lined up the showing with exploitation on "Heliotrope," the picture he was playing, with the result that the event was turned into a reception in honor of the navy balloonists and their safe return. Lieut. Farrell, the third member of the party, had been expected to attend but was confined at home by illness, the result of his privations.

Officers of the staff of the Rockaway Air Station got the esprit de corps and made it a regimental affair. A special vaudeville bill was incorporated into the show for the occasion with "Heliotrope" furnishing the feature of the bill.

Among the guests who participated in the welcoming ceremonies to the returned officers were: Lt. Commander J. H. Strong, Lieuts. P. W. Carter, G. H. Carpenter, A. W. Evans, H. T. Stevens, E. C. Hulett, P. Talbot, J. N. Newberger, J. B. L. Murray, L. R. Corbin, L. A. Kloor, W. Hinton and Ensign P. W. Powers. The attendance was augmented by 450 enlisted men from the station.

In addition to building up attendance for the show, the manager established a prestige for his house as a leading spirit in the community's progress and bid for publicity.

"Humoresque" window display obtained for the engagement of this picture at the Olympic theatre, Watertown, N. Y., as told on this page

Introducing Exploitation to Watertown

Securing a violin the exact duplicate of the instrument used in "Humoresque," enabled Harry Swift, Famous Players-Lasky exploiter, to obtain a ten-day window display in the best musical store in Watertown, N. Y., as exploitation for the showing of the above named picture at the Watertown Olympic theatre.

It was pioneer work, because Watertown had never become familiarized with the meaning of the word "exploitation." Swift used the daily paper, heralds and posters, outdoor signs and window display in putting the show over for the theatre.

In one day's work he arranged for four window displays. The best one, and the one which was most difficult to obtain, was the music store display. The proprietor failed to see the advantage of such a display until Swift remembered the violin, referred to above, which he had located in an Albany store. Mention of this clinched the case, although it required fast work to deliver the goods. Swift wired to Albany for the instrument which was forwarded by express and was on hand early the following morning.

The proprietor's demeanor thawed out as he realized the advertising possibilities; and he gave his window over generously to the theatre, using several posters advertising the showing of "Humoresque" at the Olympic Theatre, as well as his own talking machines.

With the trail blazed, the exploitation man has expressed confidence that Watertown will, in future, be fertile territory for good showmanship.

As for the proprietor of the music store, he is converted to the cooperative display window, since the display brought him many extra sales.

Lincoln Birthday Number Presented at the Capitol

The number opens with Bertram Peacock reciting the poem, "Abraham Lincoln," by Coral Thomas, in Roycroft.

At the close of the poem the drapes before which Mr. Peacock has been standing are parted and two figures posed and made up to represent Lincoln and a slave are disclosed. They stand on a platform built to resemble the base of a statue.

Poker Chips as Exploitation Medium

Poker chips, made of cardboard, twenty-five of which were good for admission to the theatre, were used by Herbert H. Johnson, manager of the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., as a most successful exploitation stunt. The chips were cut out of red, white or blue cardboard and on one side was printed:

"Cash these in at the Luna Box Office Monday, Nov. 25th. Free Tickets for 25 chips."

On the reverse side was:

"'Passion's Playground,' with Katherine MacDonald. An Associated First National Attraction. A Romance of Monte Carlo."

Mr. Johnson distributed 5,000 of the chips, thus taking a chance of two hundred free admissions for the opening night of the attraction. As a matter of fact less than fifty people in Lafayette succeeded in getting 25 chips together in order to present them at the box office, but the efforts of boys and girls and some men and women to collect the required number resulted in enough word of mouth advertising to have made it more than worth while if all of them had been collected, in the opinion of Mr. Johnson.

"Bride and Groom" Advertise "Married Life"

As a stunt for the presentation of Mack Sennett's "Married Life" at the New Grand Theatre, Montreal, during the week of January 16, Manager Rotsky had a young couple, dressed as the bride and groom in the story, engage in a shopping tour of the city. The trips were made in a Studebaker limousine, which was duly placarded with wedding mottoes.

Chinese Band for "First Born" Engagement

A native Chinese orchestra was the extent of the enterprise displayed by the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre in developing atmosphere for Sessue Hayakawa in "The First Born." The Chinese musicians with their bull fiddles and unique drums were only one of the agencies Managing Director Edward L. Hyman enlisted to build interest for the picture. One of the most elaborate prologues ever staged at the Brooklyn theatre introducing it and in which an authentic picture of life in San Francisco's Chinese quarter was reproduced with living Orientals walking among the rose gardens and temples of Nippon.

On the opening a Shantung scene revealed Estelle Carey, soprano, as a geisha girl within a border of red lights and against a background of warm red singing, "Chinese Lullaby" from "East Is West." The lights dimmed, the curtain lifted again, disclosing a reproduction of San Francisco's Chinatown at night. The Mark Strand Quartette sang "So Long Oolong." A Geisha dance by Grace De Carlton, with the native orchestra, concluded the prologue.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman provided lavish Chinese lanterns swinging above the temples and pagodas, and there were all the other languid beautiful things that go with China. Mr. Hyman had continuity in mind in this prologue, for the first scene revealed China in actuality and then the next shift was to Frisco's Chinatown. The film feature had the same course, the action starting in China and shifting to the United States.

Rothafel Staging Musical Prologue

As a prologue for "Just Out of College," S. L. Rothafel, of the New York Capitol theatre, is presenting a mixed quartette in a medley of old songs. The stage setting provided is an interior showing an old-fashioned room, with college flags used to decorate the walls. The props used suggest a college atmosphere. The singers are attired in sweaters and other appropriate regalia. They are grouped near the back drop. The room is artistically lighted, especially near the close of the number, when colors to suggest twilight are blended on the set.

The quartette is made up of the following singers: Elizabeth Ayers, soprano; Louis Scheerer, contralto; Alva Bombarger, tenor and Peter Harrower, basso. Some of the songs rendered are "Roll Along," "Those Endearing Young Charms," etc.

Teaser Campaign for "Blackbirds"

Two weeks of teasing through the medium of billboard posters was an important part of the campaign Frank L. Browne launched in connection with the showing of "Blackbirds," at Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles.

Mr. Browne used both 8-sheets and 24-sheets in his special display work. The 8-sheets appeared on a number of sign boards throughout the city and did their part in creating interest by asking the question "Did you ever see blonde Blackbirds?"

The 24-sheet used the first week bore the warning, "Look out or the 'Blackbirds' will get you." When everybody began to wonder what it was all about and who the "Blackbirds" were, the signs were changed by covering the top and bottom lines of the posters.

The second week's teaser sheets appeared with the name of the theatre and the date at the top (the top line having been covered) and Justine Johnstone in place of the bottom line (also covered).

Striking colors added to the effectiveness of the posters. Mr. Browne had the 8-sheets done in red, top and bottom, with the name of the picture appearing in black on a yellow background. The 24-sheets were done in black on yellow.

Chickens Used for Window Display

Taking a page from the book of life, Fred V. Green, Jr., exploitation representative for the Denver territory of Paramount Pictures, used a crate of chickens to exploit "The Restless Sex" for the picture's showing at the Coronado Theatre, Las Vegas, N. M.

To what extent exploitation has grown was evidenced when the exhibitor in the small town of New Mexico found that the few window displays and news stories arranged by the exploitation man brought a packed house the opening night and then followed up with attendance far above normal during the remainder of the picture's run.

Manager Max Kohn of the Coronado Theatre had called Green in to put over the campaign. One of the best windows the exploitation man arranged was the Chicken display under the caption "The Restless Sex," which also advertised the theatre and date of showing. It didn't cost the exhibitor a cent, because the druggist in whose window the display was placed was a chicken fancier and he was glad to donate his fowls and turn it into a co-operative window display to sell chicken food.

The only way Green could obtain a window in the local bookstore on the picture was by promising that the display would sell the only copy of "The Restless Sex" that the store had. He was prepared to buy it himself if necessary. At noon the first day of the display he passed the window, only to find the copy of the book missing. The proprietress declared that she had not only sold the lonely volume but had requests for additional copies that she was unable to supply.

Espy Has New Display Idea

Scheme to Make Public Read Advertising Proves Successful at St. Louis

THERE is one man in the U. S. A. today, in perfect possession of good eyesight who wears dark goggles and an "I am blind" sign on the streets without the slightest intention of imposing upon the public. His name is Harry Skyes and his residence is in Des Moines, Iowa.

Sykes, be it known, is far from sightless. He possesses unusually good orbs and a mental capacity that can visualize a good exploitation stunt. So it happened that when E. H. Helmts, manager of the Rialto theatre, and Norman Dixon, exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation broached a plan which would afford something out of the usual line as well as the means for providing a little Christmas cheer at the home hearth.

His work started a week before Christmas and eight days before "Idols of Clay" commenced its run. On a tall stiff, light grey derby the words were painted: "I am blind." The sandwich sign with which Sykes paraded around Des Moines read: "But I would give $10 to see Mae Murray in 'Idols of Clay,' at the Rialto, Sunday."

There was one difficulty, a rather delicate one, Manager Helmts had to contend with in this unique exploitation. It consisted in overcoming the prejudice of his patrons against the use of a physical defect for commercial purposes. Some of the regular attendants at the Rialto theatre complained that it was inhuman to exploit a poor man's condition simply to advance a box office angle.

Manager Helmts had conjectured this opposition and figured accordingly. On the day the picture began its run Harry Sykes was in the lobby of the theatre. The sign that he would give a huge sum, placed definitely at ten simoleons, to see the picture, still remained but the hat had been removed. So were the goggles intermittently as Sykes bowed to the patrons and wished them a very happy holiday season and hoped they would enjoy the picture. The expression of his clear eyes left no question as to the sincerity of his wishes. As soon as the patrons saw through the stunt their attitude changed. "Inhuman," "brutal," were adjectives that were changed to "clever" and "neat" in their appreciation of the stunt. It tickled them that a Des Moines manager had been the first one to plan such an ingenious method of exploitation. Sykes had been obliged to refuse numerous coins which, in the spirit of Christmas giving, had been tendered him in pity for his supposedly sightless condition; but he made no attempt to dodge the kindly grins cast in his direction when the dark plot had been revealed.

Making Right a Matter of Geography

A little matter of geography needs explanation in these columns. Some weeks ago the Service Bureau carried a full page layout showing a lobby display for "The Idol Dancer." The captions and head gave credit to the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, which was only a mistake of some 2,500 miles and let 'Frisco grab off honors belonging to Kalamazoo, Mich., which wasn't "fair, nor just, nor decent."

Therefore we acknowledge that the mistake was ours and that the lobby display under discussion, a very meritorious one too, was the work of W. Griffth Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens theatre of Kalamazoo, one of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise string.

Affidavit Attests Virtues of Pictures

When Manager Ralph de Bruler, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, started to write his ad for the Mary Pickford picture, "The Love-Light," he realized that all the flamboyant phrases in the world would leave the people more or less unimpressed. He wanted something a little out of the ordinary—and he couldn't quite think what it would be. But at the last moment he hit on the idea, which gained a great deal of interest, and cost very little money.

The following affidavit, signed, and sworn to, all in the proper manner, was the Howard's ad for "The Love-Light" and created much favorable comment.

HOWARD THEATRE

MANAGEMENT MAKES

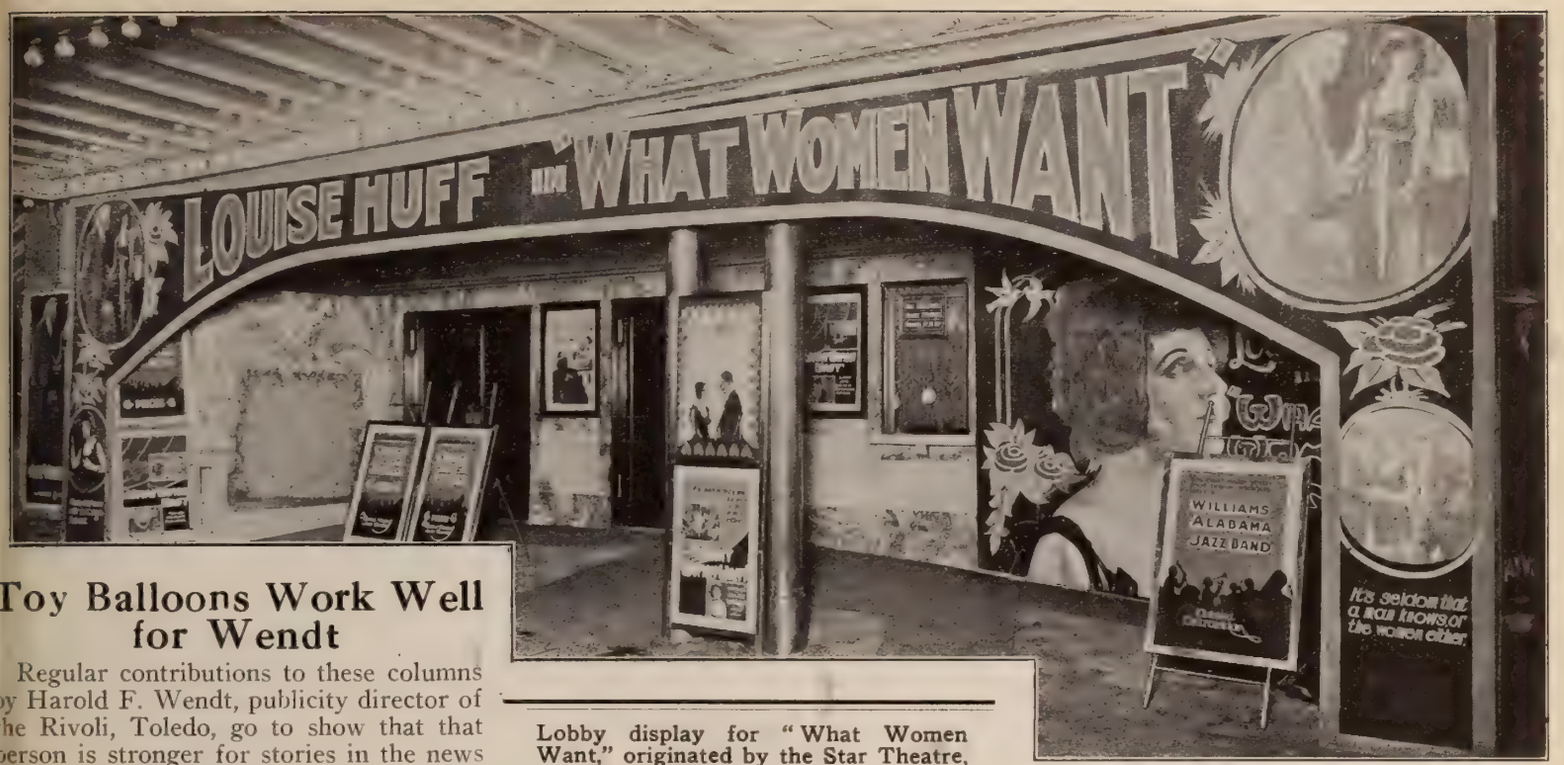
SWORN AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF GEORGIA
COUNTY OF FULTON.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, Ralph H. DeBruler, manager of the HOWARD THEATRE, who, being duly sworn, deposes and sets forth as follows:

That, on the 12th day of January, 1921, he saw in the projection room of the HOWARD THEATRE the MARY PICKFORD picture, "THE LOVE LIGHT."

That, in his opinion as an observer of motion pictures for the past fifteen years, "THE LOVE LIGHT" is the GREATEST MARY PICKFORD PICTURE ever made, and one of the greatest pictures of any sort that ever came to Atlanta;



That the slashing storm scenes, the dramatic rescue of a baby in the teeth of the sea, the tragedy of death, the pathos of blindness, the hungering heart of motherhood for her stolen child, the droll humor of barnyard comedy, the cutest bald-headed baby that ever crowed on the screen, that these and other heart-touching elements of "THE LOVE LIGHT" lift it far above the ordinary motion picture into a class of its own.

That he does truthfully and sincerely advise the people of Atlanta, whether admirers of MARY PICKFORD or not, that they DO NOT miss "THE LOVE LIGHT" during its three days' showing at THE HOWARD THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY of this week.

(Signed) RALPH H. DEBRULER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 12th day of January, 1921. B. F. BENNETT, Notary Public.

My Commission Expires April 26, 1924.

Toy Balloons Work Well for Wendt

Regular contributions to these columns by Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli, Toledo, go to show that that person is stronger for stories in the news columns of the daily newspapers than any other sort of publicity, as is evidenced by the lengths to which he goes in getting this space.

Now he comes through with an old idea used to get results with the "sheets." This time it is a balloon ascension. The reason for picking this stunt is seen when he informs us that the feature picture for the week was HERITAGE, a story of a friendless street urchin and one that was particularly pleasing to the kids.

First Wendt saw the editor and circulation manager of one of Toledo's leading dailies, The News-Bee, and showed them how they might derive some benefit from the stunt, in fact, impressing upon them that they were going to get the bulk of the results derived. They were strong for anything he suggested.

So he purchased a gross of small gas balloons and a tank of hydrogen. The balloons were inflated and tickets good for one child at the Rivoli the following week attached. They were worded to the effect that the captors of the balloons were to be the guests of the paper. This sounded better.

Front page stories, double column headlines, told the story a couple days in advance—and there was plenty of copy on the picture to be shown—right on page one. But this did not suffice. Wendt got the names and addresses of all those who picked up the balloons, together with a story of how they had to climb roofs and trees to make the capture. Hence, another big yarn in the news columns.

This is a stunt which any paper will be only too glad to cooperate on, regardless of the size of the town or city.

Exhibitors should always consider that probably only one-third of the tickets sent up will show up at the theatre, as many balloons travel as far as fifty miles before they are picked up, while others are never found, as Wendt's results show.

Hyman Presents Scenes from "Faust"

Brooklyn's revival in music and the prediction of motion picture men that the greatest operas and highest priced opera stars would eventually divide honors with the screen stars—both gained support recently at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, where Managing Director Edward L. Hyman provided with elaborate scenic investure a complete scene from the opera "Faust," sung by men and women operatic artists, who had sung the same roles with success in grand opera houses.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman offered the entire prison scene from "Faust." Scenic detail and adherence to the original operatic score were component in the operatic presentation.

The prison atmosphere was emphasized with the straw pallet, grated windows with a mellow yellow light streaming through. The soloists who were designated upon the house program and identified as to their singing parts, appeared in correct "Faust" costume.

Exploitation on the Banks of the Wabash

The readers of the newspapers in Lafayette, Indiana, a town of about twenty-five thousand inhabitants located on the historic banks of the Wabash river, had their curiosity keyed to a high pitch recently by an ominous half-page display which appeared every day in the newspapers throughout the week of January tenth, Monday to Saturday, inclusive, under the caption of "Dangerous Business."

On Monday it read as follows:

"Dangerous Business" — drinking moonshine; it may contain wood alcohol.

Tuesday—joy riding; you may wake up in a ditch.

Wednesday—singing "Die Wacht am Rhein"; you may be shot.

Thursday—talking in your sleep; you may be heard.

Friday—guessing the answer to this; you may be wrong.

And then on Saturday a full page display announcing the showing of "Dangerous Business" at the Lafayette Luna theatre told people all about the meaning of the mysterious teaser ads.

Exploitation in Connie Talmadge's Marriage

Rudolph Benson, publicity representative for the Libson Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, and W. A. Clark, exploitation man for the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Exchange of Cincinnati, put over a neat bit of exploitation when they arranged for a monster letter of congratulations to be sent to Constance Talmadge upon her marriage to John Pialoglou.

The stunt was staged simultaneously with the showing of "Dangerous Business" at the Strand. It was the occasion of her first appearance in Cincinnati since her marriage in Greenwich, Conn., where she was married.

An artist was employed to sketch the letter in enlarged form. He occupied a conspicuous place in the lobby of the theatre during the entire week. A table, with pen and ink and a young lady attendant, made up the balance of this novel stunt.

Over two thousand names were attached to the letter.

His Honor Mayor Galvin of Cincinnati was the first to place his name on the list, the letter being taken to his office in the City Hall where newspaper photographers "snapped" the Queen City Mayor in the act of signing the missive.

The Cincinnati dailies carried stories for several days on the stunt, also photos.

Vesey Has Model Advertising Calendar

Trying to describe or reproduce advertising calendars is a job that never works out well, but those who are looking for something neat, tasty and effective in this line will find the calendar used by the Lodi theatre of Lodi, Cal., a model.

We have not inquired of Manager F Vesey, but feel sure that he will mail a sample to any exhibitor who asks for one.

Mr. Vesey's calendar covers the entire month and is very attractive.

Overline Extra Goes Well at Lancaster

The Fulton opera house of Lancaster, Pa., recently pulled the "green extra" stunt for the first time in the history of the city. The picture for the newspaper extra was "Madame X." Additional advertising was carried out on a big scale.

Banners advertising the photoplay were placed on all street cars; an attractive "Madame X" display, consisting of mounted cut-out figures, etc., was placed in the public square; the theatre front was decorated in snappy fashion with cut-outs, posters, photographic enlargements, stills, etc.

A fine soloist and special orchestra were engaged as presentation aids, the singer rendering "Wonderful Mother of Mine," "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "The Curse of An Aching Heart" during the court room scene. "Madame X" made a big hit in Lancaster.

Carroll Tries Out Tried and True Idea

Tom Carroll, manager of the Standar Theatre, Cleveland, put over a big wee in the history of the theatre with his re cent exploitation of "The Untame Woman."

Carroll started his campaign by firs announcing the showing of Doraldina i "The Untamed Woman" for the week o January 2. Then he announced a post ponement of the showing until the wee of the 9th. Then he again shifted th play date to the 16th. This kept the nam of the play, the name of the player, an the name of the theatre before the publi for three consecutive weeks, and kept th names associated one with the other.

The week of the actual showing of th picture, Carroll placarded his box offic and the prominent corner of the lobby which is conspicuous to all passers-by with signs descriptive of the apache dan cer. A thrilling cut-out hung over the en trance. Three sheet posters were place so as to attract the greatest amount of at tention, and there was always an audienc in the lobby taking a free look at them Inside the lobby there were more intimat posters, such as the one showing hov much insurance the star carries for he ankles.

As a result of this persistent hammer ing on the one "wild woman" idea, Car roll packed his house for every perfor mance.

"Love Light" Extras Used at Seattle

After having run a constructive tease ad campaign for "The Love Light" th Clemmer theatres of Seattle, Wash., th Clemmer and Winter Garden, blossome out with page displays and then bought up a thousand "red ink extras" for distribu tion about the business section.

The page smash announcing the show ing at both theatres, day and date, con vinced Seattle people that "The Lov Light" was worth seeing.

Sylvia Grogg Stages Original Prologue

For the showing of "The Branded Woman" at the California theatre, Bakersfield, Cal., an elaborate oriental prologue was made a feature of the presentation.

The "auction block" idea was suggested in the prologue following the theme of the picture.

Several girls, costumed as Egyptian women were led upon the stage, which was set to represent a slave market. Each girl in turn was rejected by the buyer, a man costumed as a Shiek, until finally a beautiful dancing girl takes her place upon the auction block. The Shiek is pleased with her beauty and commands her to dance for him. She entrances him with her gracefulness and he signifies his wish to purchase her by flinging a bag of coin upon the ground. At the conclusion of the dance she falls at his feet, as the curtain descends.

The prologue was done entirely in pantomime, and the action was enhanced by beautiful lighting and music effects.

Hewitt Tests Memory of His Patrons

A memory test stunt in which the old songs are used and prizes given has been inaugurated with great success by J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Strand theatre of Robinson, Ill.

The plan of procedure is to have the Strand organist play snatches of the old favorites while the audience writes down the titles which they recognize on prepared blanks. The winners are given passes to the Strand good for a month.

Weisfeldt Makes Use of Local Celebrity

E. J. Weisfeldt, manager of the New Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, with the cooperation of The Milwaukee Journal, succeeded in having Miss Edith May, recently chosen as the most beautiful salesgirl in America, tell the audiences who came to review "The Scoffer," "just how it feels to be famous."

Miss May told the audiences all about her being chosen as the most beautiful salesgirl in America, her subsequent trip to New York, a promising offer from one of the foremost film companies to become a film star, and her experience with the Ziegfield productions.

Miss May until recently lived with her mother and father in Monroe, Wis.

Engages Boy Soloist for Special Feature

After a vigorous newspaper campaign "A Child for Sale" opened at the Palm theatre, Pueblo, Col., managed by Charles H. Ernest, where special presentation stunts had been prepared for the showing.

Mr. Ernest engaged a very clever eight-year-old boy singer, who rendered "Who Wants a Baby?" at each performance. The young soloist was the talk of the town.

One of Mr. Ernest's best exploitation mediums was advertising that all children, whose mothers wished to attend the performance, would be cared for in the nursery. These ads were headed "Bring the Kiddies" and resulted in many extra dollars.

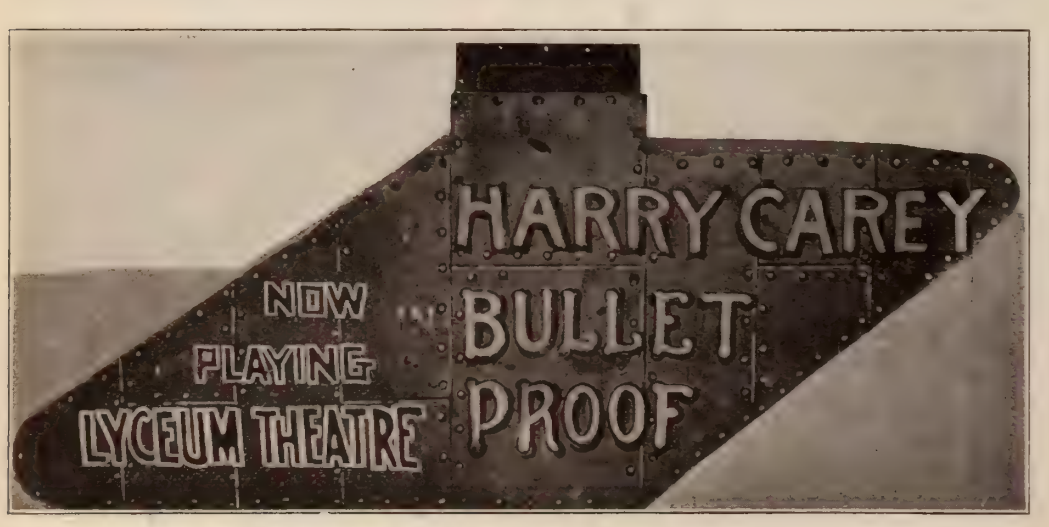
Morrison's Lobby Display Deserves First Prize

Above is a lobby display arranged by Will Morrison, advertising manager of the Pantheon theatre, Chicago, for the showing of "The Mark of Zorro," that draws a first prize for effectiveness and artistic worth.

The cut of course does not do Mr. Morrison's display full justice. The lighting was a most important part of the decorations. To the left behind the "trees" shown a 500 watt bunch red light was placed. To the right in the same position was a bunch of blues. The result was a very pretty sky effect of a sunrise breaking in the blue clouds of dawn.

Mr. Morrison's display faced the patrons as they came in and when they left the theatre and was instrumental in bringing many extra dollars to the box office.

Salvini Advertises "Bullet Proof" with Tank



Below is shown a cut of the "war tank" which B. G. Salvini, manager of the Lyceum theatre, New Britain, Conn., used to put over "Bullet Proof."

The "tank" was constructed around a motor cycle and paraded the streets, attracting no end of attention.

Mr. Salvini reports that the idea went over big.

Another of Mr. Salvini's exploitation ideas that brought great results, was for "Lady Rose's Daughter." Four high school girls were engaged to go about the streets with sashes over their shoulders which read "Lady Rose's Daughter," distributing pictures of Elsie Ferguson.

Elsie Ferguson is popular in New Britain and the photographs were eagerly sought.

Here is a cut showing the motor cycle "tank" which B. G. Salvini used to advertise "Bullet Proof" for the showing of this picture at the Lyceum theatre, New Britain, Conn.

Freckles That Won't Come Off for "Dinty"

Youthful enthusiasm! It can't b equalled.

As evidence of this, we cite a recen happening at Lima, Ohio.

R. M. Emig, manager of the Reger Theatre, was showing "Dinty." Amon the several stunts that he had arranged was one in which he wanted a Lima yout to impersonate "Dinty."

A thorough search of the city revealed the startling fact that Lima did not boas of a very great number of freckled face boys, and those who did "sport" the su spots, could not be induced to walk th city streets garbed as the Neilan hero But it was an easy matter to manufactur freckles and that was what Emig wa forced to do.

And therein comes youthful enthusiasn to the fore.

The lad was secured and his duties ex plained to him. He immediately entered into the spirit of the stunt with a will tha only a ten year old ruddy faced youngste can command.

"But I don't like the freckles yo give me," said the boy after Emig ha dressed him up to impersonate "Dinty." "I'm goin' to get better ones." And he did That night when the lad made his appear ance, his features fairly glistened under a covering of freckles that would make Wesley Barry turn green with envy.

"Huh, I told yer," chuckled the lad "I've got freckles that look like freckles."

The youngster in his eagerness to ge "real freckles" had dotted his face with iodine.

Novel Operatic Presentation

Edward L. Hyman Gives "Aida" With Screen Text at Brooklyn Strand Theatre

THE Brooklyn Strand theatre's presentations of standard operas has been augmented by the effective and original way in which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman gave "Aida" recently, using soloists, the orchestra and a specially prepared screen text.

As the overture played the introductory passage to the opera, the film text which told the story of "Aida" was shot on a gauze screen hung in front of the black velvet cyclorama. The border lights were in red and blue, giving the effect of the white letters being thrown against a deep crimson background.

At the point in the screen text which described one of the familiar highlights of the opera, the projector was stopped, and at the same time this was the cue for the soloists to appear centerstage through the opening in the cyc. The appearance of the singer was met with a soft lemon colored over-head spot, which was snuffed at the end of each solo, and as the singer retired behind the curtains from whence he or she came.

The first cue for a soloist was a passage telling of the maiden "Aida." An excellent tenor sang "Celeste Aida," and then there was more descriptive matter to the accompaniment of the Strand Symphony Orchestra. Next, a soprano sang the "O, Woe Is Me" number. The screen text went on telling about the return of the victorious army, and mentioned "dancing girls." This was the cue for the appearance of three good looking and talented young ladies, costumed in a manner familiar to all purchasers of Turkish cigarettes.

When the dancers went off, the screen text continued for a few moments, and then the quartette in the costume of the opera sang the big finale.

This is one of the few times that this method of opera presentation has been staged. It is the evolution of the old lantern slide and song stunt, but it proved to be exceedingly popular with the Mark Strand, Brooklyn audiences.

Rothafel's "Godless Men" Prologue

As a prologue number for the showing of "Godless Men" at the Capitol theatre this week, S. L. Rothafel has adapted portions of the opera Otello, selecting the baritone solo "Credo" (Iago's Creed) which is a free translation or rather adaptation of "Iago's" last speech with "Cassio" in the second act of Shakespeare's tragedy "Othello" and furnishing the soloist selected for the number, Bertram Peacock, with a stage setting that conforms somewhat to that required for the first act of the opera, an angry sea beating upon a rock bound coast.

The story told in "Iago's Creed" in which "Iago" declares he was fashioned by a cruel God who intended him for evil, and that he fears nothing for the consequences of his sins as there is nothing beyond this life, is admirably fitted to portray the creed which "Black Pawl" of the picture pretends to have embraced. Also the stage setting fits well with the type of picture found in "Godless Men."

The mechanics of the prologue setting have been cleverly contrived. The soloist dressed in a costume similar to that worn by Russell Simpson in the picture stands on an invisible platform some feet above the stage and is silhouetted by spots against darb draperies. Below the singer just cutting his feet a film showing a rough sea dashing against rocks is projected. From the audience the singer looks to be standing on a rock above the water. Except for the spot outlining the performer, all lights are dimmed and the curtains are scarcely discernible.

New "Peaceful Valley" Stunt

Quinine, Water and an Idea Does Wonders for Manager O'Hare of the Armory Theatre

THE exploitation achievements of S. O'Hare, manager of the Armory theatre at Clarinda, Iowa, are not unknown to NEWS readers. Many a story of how the show has been put over at the Armory has been told in these pages to the betterment of the industry.

However, Mr. O'Hare now gives us the details of an exploitation stunt that we hail as his best achievement to date and certainly the most original idea in many a day.

The Armory was going to play "Peaceful Valley" and Manager O'Hare wanted to pull something new to get his patrons interested. Here is what he did. From a local druggist he purchased 500 small vials like you get when you buy ten cents' worth of toothache medicine, and fifty cents' worth of quinine. With ordinary H.O.-2 and the quinine he made a concoction that tasted like Burdock Blood Bitters and looked like ordinary water. Each bottle was filled, corked and a small card attached, reading as follows:

"If you want to know how Hosiah Howe (Charles Ray) felt toward Ward Andrews, taste this; also have your friends taste it. It's a sample of the water found in the well at 'Peaceful Valley' farm and sells for a dollar a gallon. The taste lingers. The memory of 'Peaceful Valley' at the Armory, January 28 and 29 will linger longer."

The druggist, who possessed a sense of humor, furnished boxes and a place for the boxes and bottles to rest in his store. On the box was a sign, "Free Samples. Take One."

Mr. and Mrs. Clarinda Citizen walked into the drug store, saw the sign, took a bottle, read the card, tried the water, made a wry face, looked foolish and immediately started out to find a friend on whom they could spring the new joke. The druggist, who had been the first taster, stopped selling porous plasters and perfumery and devoted his time to O'Hare's "Peaceful Valley" spring water.

When the show opened at the Armory there were few people in town who didn't know how "Hosiah" felt toward "Ward Andrews." When the picture showed the characters tasting the water at the "Peaceful Valley" well, the audiences roared with laughter. They went out and talked about the show and O'Hare's stunt, with more box office results. The whole stunt cost Mr. O'Hare $7.60 and was worth a hundred. It was exploitation de luxe. It got people into the theatre who had never heard of "Peaceful Valley," Charlie Ray or maybe, the Armory.

And Mr. O'Hare passes it along for other exhibitors to use because, as he writes, "I am greatly benefited by your exploitation department and feel that I should contribute this idea for what it is worth."

If this stunt isn't used a thousand times for putting over "Peaceful Valley" our guess is all wrong. Will all exhibitors who use the stunt report to us how it worked? We in turn will inform Mr. O'Hare in the NEWS. Practise reciprocity as Mr. O'Hare does.

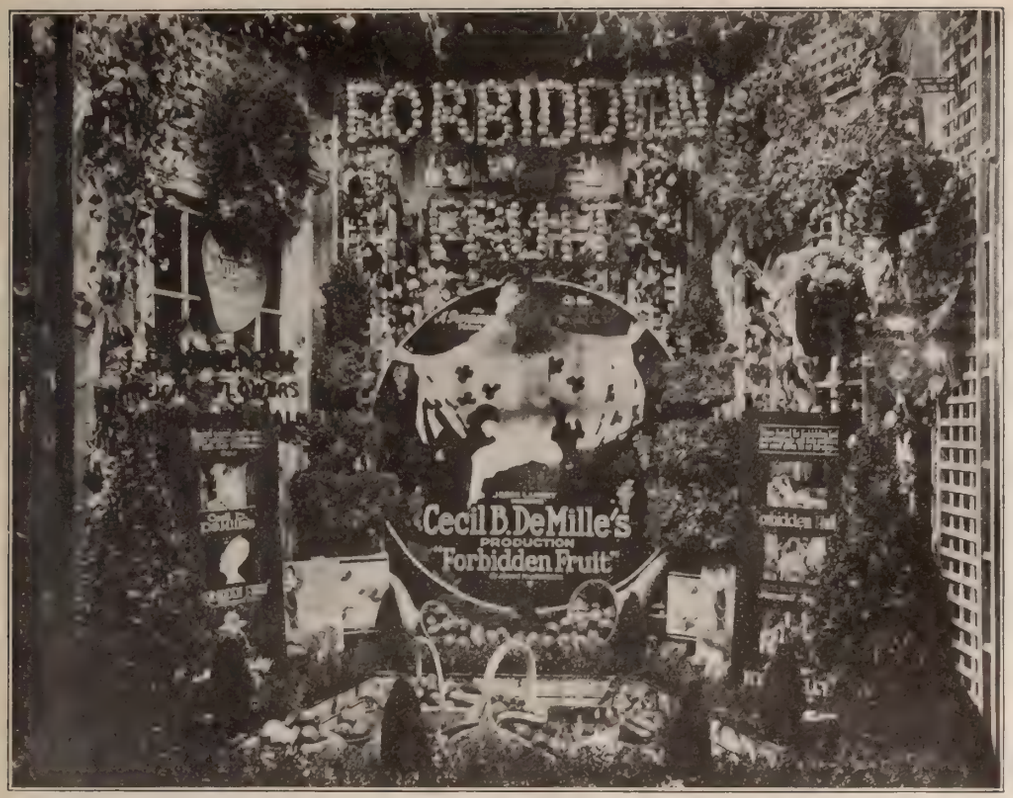
Gets Much Publicity from Local Hockey Match

Manager Eddie Benson of the Walker Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, pulled a novel trick, which gave the theatre much publicity, by having as his guests at the Walker the members of two prominent local hockey teams. It was not the mere inviting of the players to the theatre that brought the notoriety but the fact that Benson offered box seats to the players of the winning team and seats in the gallery to the losers. This little twist to the arrangement caused a lot of talk.

Rouda Designs Fine Lobby Display

A lobby display which created a sensation in Milwaukee was recently designed by Manager H. M. Rouda, of the Merrill theatre, for the showing of "Godless Men."

The display was mounted above the entrance doors leading from the lobby into the auditorium of the theatre. The mechanical effects of the display were worked out, under Mr. Rouda's direction, by Edward Leidoff, house electrician.



The background was a transparent moon and cloud effect, with blue lights in front of them to give a subdued night light. At the bottom was a series of beaver boards, scalloped and painted to represent rough waves. These waves were on two separate runners, going backward and forward, in opposite directions, to represent the sea in motion. To the left was a lighthouse, with small windows and a door, lighted from within with soft, amber lights. In the tower of the lighthouse was a flashing light which played a white ray on a miniature sailboat on rockers which rolled with the motion of the waves.

The unusualness and effectiveness of this display, coupled with exploitation and advertising stunts, attracted great crowds.

Brooklyn Strand Has Fine Lincoln Birthday Program

Lincoln's Birthday is being properly celebrated at the Brooklyn Strand theatre this week, with a special program designed by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman.

The orchestra opens with Herbert's "Grand American Fantasy." The curtain lifts, disclosing a battle field scene of Civil War days. Off stage the quartette sang "Tenting Tonight," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and other airs of Lincoln's period, including "Dixie." Walter Smith, raconteur, as Lincoln, delivered the statesman's address. A tableau, "North and South," closed the pictorial commemoration. It revealed veterans of the north and south against a solid background of the American flag.

Essays as Exploitation Stunt

How Jackson Aroused Interest for His Showing of "Once to Every Woman"

BEGINNING with a series of "teasers," which were stock cuts—small black circles, occupying "thumbnail" amounts of space, lettered in white with such questions as "What is it that comes 'Once to Every Woman'?" "Is it enough that it should come 'Once to Every Woman'?", and so on, Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, played "Once to Every Woman" to highly successful business.

He arranged a contest with a local private school for girls, in which he gave a prize of ten dollars for the best essay on "What Comes Once to Every Woman?" The second prize was five dollars.

He also arranged a "tie-up" with a local drug-store—rather, a chain of drug-stores owned and operated by one man, and located in three different sections of the city. Great care was taken to provide windows that would appeal to the particular people who spent most time in that neighborhood; one window, for instance, made a direct appeal to girls of the "flapper" school-girl age; another, in the shopping district, made its bid for the attention of older and more serious-minded women, while a third claimed the attention of men.

The best part of the entire campaign was something that was unexpected and therefore doubly appreciated. This happened when Mr. Jackson went over to the Constitution, to arrange for some advertising. He carried a bundle of photographs of Miss Phillips, the star, and some effective stills from the production, with which he intended decorating his lobby. But, at the Constitution office, he met the editor of the "Screen and Drama Section" of the paper, and showed the pictures to him. The Editor was interested, and the result was that he gave Mr. Jackson the full front page of the Screen and Drama Section, on the Sunday before the picture opened at the Tudor,—an amount of publicity impossible to buy, though space in the Constitution brings this full page to the value of $304.00.

Across the top of the page, ran the caption, "What is it that comes 'Once to Every Woman'?", which, of course, instantly connected the page with the "teasers" which had been attracting daily attention in the three papers.

The lobby front of the Tudor for that week was also unusually good, showing an effective use of cut-outs, and a plentiful use of striking stills, in the lobby-frames. The figure of the mother, more than life-size, cradling in her arms, four tiny, doll-like cut-outs of her daughter, (who was, of course, the character portrayed by Miss Phillips) at various stages of her career—the school-girl, the music-student, the prima-donna and the girl who comes home—was at one side of the theatre, and drew a great deal of attention. At the opposite side of the lobby, was a sort of ladder on which the girl mounted, from the age of her school-girl-hood, to her success.

Tie-Ups with "Forbidden Fruit"

Two interesting tie-ups were effected in Philadelphia by the Paramount organization in conjunction with the opening of "Forbidden Fruit" at the new Stanley. One of these was the placing of a one-sheet card, with an attractive scene from the picture in the window of a small waist and hat show called "The Paramount Shop." On the card was a legend stating that this was the Paramount Shop and that not far away the Paramount Picture, "Forbidden Fruit" was just as pleasing and full of fine raiment.

Another hook-up was with a cigar store at Thirteenth and Chestnut streets, which displayed a scene from the play showing Theodore Roberts with his inevitable black cigar, and calling attention to the fact that in "Forbidden Fruit" he smoked this cigar, which was also for sale in the shop. Both shops are in the heart of the busiest section of town, on Chestnut street, and the window card seemed to attract considerable interest from passers-by.

New Kink to "What's Your Hurry" Stunt

A new kink will often send an old exploitation stunt over the barrier for a goal. Harry Swift, exploitation representative at the Albany Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, proved the axiom when he went to Proctor's Schenectady, N. Y., theater, to exploit "What's Your Hurry," in cooperation with Manager Charles Goulding.

"What's Your Hurry" had been exploited from coast to coast with anti-speeding campaigns, truck parades and stolen traffic semaphores. It was the latter stunt that Swift and Goulding decided to appropriate and stamp their own particular trade-mark on.

They got hold of a police semaphore and planted the 'What's Your Hurry" sign in a circular disk above the "Stop" and "Go" signs. Then, instead of replacing the sign at a traffic crossing, they put it at the entrance to Proctor's theater.

The semaphore alternately wig-wagged "Stop" and "Go." As prospective patrons approached the theater it signalled "Stop" and the unusual sight of a traffic semaphore in the lobby of a threater usually meant that the imperative order was obeyed. As the patron gradually turned so as to face the lobby and the box-office, the semaphore changed to read "Go."

A real honest to goodness policeman was on duty to operate the semaphore. He caught the idea of the exploitation early and signalled "Stop" and "Go" without the need of cues from back stage.

That the unique exploitation, new to Albany, got the city's undivided attention, goes without saying.

Sets Example in Small Town Showmanship

Putnam, Conn., Exhibitor Gives "Go and Get It" Big Town Exploitation Campaign

IF there ever has been an exploitation drive in a town of less than 10,000 population that will rival in effectiveness and small cost the publicity campaign recently put over in Putnam, Connecticut, then there are two campaigns that merit the attention of such showmen as are always ready to learn what to do to increase box office receipts. However, the "other" campaign has not as yet been brought to light. As a result, Jacob Alpert's Victory Theatre campaign deserves the spot-light all by itself.

Jacob Alpert is manager of the Victory Theatre at Putnam. And although Manager Alpert modestly confesses that only a few of the devices he used to put over "Go and Get It" were original, and that "the rest were culled from various trade journal sources," it is fitting and proper that he should be recognized for his showmanship in assembling the various stunts and putting them into one, big, record-breaking campaign.

It is a matter of interest to note that all reference to "Go and Get It" was kept from the lobby of the Victory until the production actually began its run. This is contrary to the policy of the Victory, since advertising in the form of posters and cut-outs is displayed in the lobby long before runs are definitely scheduled.

In handling his newspaper display advertising, Mr. Alpert was forced to take into consideration the fact that the two newspapers in Putnam are weeklies, one being published on Wednesday and the other on Friday. Accordingly, the opening teaser ad for "Go and Get It" appeared in the Friday paper. The ad showed a line-cut of a railroad train going at mile-a-minute speed. Only the words "Go and Get It" completed the ad.

Matters were left to rock along by themselves over Saturday and Sunday; but on Monday morning between midnight and 4 a. m., Mr. Alpert's men were on a secret mission in the business and residential districts, slipping blue cards bearing the mysterious "Go and Get It" phrase under every door. This stunt had never before been done in Putnam. It started a flood of inquiries. Newspaper telephones began ringing, but the Observer and Patriot staffs were "in" on the stunt and revealed no information.

On the Wednesday following the Monday morning on which the entire city found its official doorstep favored with a "Go and Get It" card, the Observer appeared with three teaser ads. One ad showed the snarling ape-man and carried on the title of the picture for word matter. The other again showed the speeding railroad train. The other merely carried the title. The Observer commented editorially on Page One regarding the mystery.

The next day, Mr. Alpert distributed 10,000 paper bags to his friends among the grocery store proprietors. The bags varied in sizes from a quarter-of-a-pound to two pounds. This was on Thursday and as yet the mysterious "Go and Get It" had not been tied up with the theatre or identified in any manner whatsoever.

To the Putnam Patriot which appeared the next day was accorded the honor of announcing what "Go and Get It" meant. This ad which set the puzzled minds of Putnam folk at rest was a three-column by eleven inch display which was entitled "If P. T. Barnum Were Advertising 'Go and Get It.'" And the ad certainly was a glowing tribute to Mr. Barnum's use of the superlative. The Patriot also published a crackerjack news story on the opening of the production.

The free paper bags kept the public informed with respect to "Go and Get It" during Saturday, and on Monday and Tuesday preceding the Wednesday and Thursday of the run of the picture, Mr. Alpert sent out a freckled faced lad carrying a sign which made capital of the boy's freckles by offering a pass to the Victory to any boy who possessed as many.

Ramsey Used Teaser Campaign for "Dangerous Business"

Howard G. Ramsey, manager of the Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kansas, writes that he has just put over his most successful teaser campaign, the picture being "Dangerous Business."

The picture played El Dorado, an important oil town, during a time when merchants and oil men were not enjoying very good business.

Several days before "Dangerous Business" was due to open, the local papers carried a series of all cap, single column display ads as follows:

"Bankers: Dangerous Business is Coming. Merchants: Dangerous Business is Coming. Oil Men: Dangerous Business is Coming." The teasers excited a great deal of curiosity due to the industrial depression and when Mr. Ramsey announced his current attraction, all of El Dorado was sold into the idea of seeing the picture.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

TO make clear the arrangements between the Kineto Company of America, Inc., and the National Exchanges, Inc., it was announced this week by the Kineto Company that the contract between them concerns only the Kineto Review. The National Exchanges, Inc., will distribute a series of 52 Kineto Reviews. These will be the first 52 subjects of the permanent film library, "The Living Book of Knowledge."

Ultimately the library will be arranged in alphabetical form just as an encyclopedia of printed matter is arranged, but for the purposes of release to motion picture exhibitors it will be arranged numerically.

Arrow Does More Business Than in 1920

P. B. Dana, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, is away on a southern trip and will be on the road for the next two weeks. Owing to a temporary shift in special representatives, E. R. Champion, who has been covering this southern territory, has been called to New York, and Mr. Dana is making this trip to clean up some odds and ends, and close out some territory on a number of pictures.

Notwithstanding the fact that there is more or less talk concerning a slack period in the motion picture business, Mr. Dana states that business with Arrow is away ahead of last year at this time.

"Gun Runners" is New S. B. C. Western

"The Gun Runners" is the title of the newest release on the "Star Ranch Western" series. C. Edward Hatton is the featured player in this two-reel Western thriller, which marks the sixth picture of the series that is being released by the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation.

Prints of "The Gun Runners" have just been received at the C. B. C. New York offices, from the Coast, and are being edited and titled.

M. D. Crandall Joins Equity

Well Known Exploitation Man to Aid Exhibitors With Young Series

MILTON D. CRANDALL, one of the best known and most successful exploitation and publicity man of the country, has joined the Equity staff. His duties will embrace every angle of assistance in the exploitation of Clara Kimball Young productions, particularly the last two, "Midchannel" and "Hush." The news of Crandall's connection with Equity comes at the end of several months of standing invitations extended to him by Joseph I. Schnitzer, head of Equity, to sign up as exploitation director. Crandall state-right interests in Cleveland and Cincinnati delayed his acceptance till recently.

'Milt' Crandall's career in exploitation and publicity is marked by a series of achievements. It was his advertising of 'Mickey' in Ohio and Pennsylvania that first brought the attention of the national producers to the necessity and value of adding exploitation men to their staffs, it is claimed.

Crandall is said to have inaugurated the era of picture exploitation years ago, when the first spectacular feature 'Dante's Inferno' was released. Associated with Joseph P. Collins and Arthur Fearery, he undertook the task of lecturer and press-agent for the film in the state of Pennsylvania. He occupied the same capacity in the run of Homer's 'Odyssey.' His next achievements were in behalf of the productions 'Cleopatra,' 'Buffalo Bill's Wild West' and James K. Hackett in 'The Prisoner of Zenda.' Joining hands with Montgomery in Jacksonville, Fla., he became the exploitation director for Kleine's 'The Last Days of Pompeii.' He then followed in the wake of Kalem's sensation 'From the Manger to the Cross.' Returning to New York he handled the Chicago Tribune's war film 'The German Side of the War.' He later startled New York and the entire New England territory by his effective handling of the Marjorie Sterrett Battleship movement fostered by the New York Tribune and attracting national attention. In Missouri, Crandall scored another triumph with his campaign on the Universal production 'Where are My Children,' which he followed in Nebraska and Oklahoma. One of his outstanding personal successes was connected with his campaign on 'The Whip.' His last crowning effort, which brought Crandall national fame in the film industry as well as the country at large, was his work on 'Mickey' in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Salient Busy on Picture

Feature, Starring Muriel Ostriche, is Nearing Completion

WORK on the first feature, the title of which has not yet been announced, of Salient Films, Inc., is rapidly being completed under the direction of J. Charles Davis, 2nd. This is the first of a series of ten five-reelers to be made by Salient during 1921, and stars Miss Muriel Ostriche who is ably assisted by a strong supporting cast, headed by Walter Miller. The role of the heavy is interpreted by Harold Foshay, whose work in Edgar Lewis productions stamped him as one of the foremost character actors of the present day. Others in the cast are John Hopkins, Helen Courtney, Dorothy Blackburn, Wreath MacIntyre, Fred Nichols and William Armstrong.

The company is now engaged in making exterior scenes, having completed the interiors this week. Officials of the company expressed themselves as well pleased with the progress of the first production and state that from every angle the picture looks like a winner. President Goosman and Vice President Weeks visited the studio and watched the filming of the final interior scenes, afterwards viewing the film on the screen, and are most enthusiastic over the picture.

Every attention has been paid to detail, and each part, no matter how small, has been carefully cast by Jack W. Brown, who is assisting Mr. Davis in the direction. The photography of Paul H. Allen is said to be remarkably fine and it is rumored that several innovations will be seen when the final print is shown. Work is expected to be completed on exteriors next week, when the cutting will be started.

Walter E. Greene Visits Exchange Centres on Way to the Coast

WALTER E. GREENE, president of the Walgreene Film Corporation, left New York last week on an extended trip of the country, which will embrace a visit to every large exchange centres of the United States. During this trip Mr. Greene will attend the convention that is being held by the Federated Film Exchanges of America in San Francisco.

It is Mr. Greene's intention to include a visit to Los Angeles in his present itinerary and to confer with several independent producers covering the distribution of their product throughout the world.

Mr. Greene will not return to New York City until the early part of March, inasmuch as he will visit many southern exchange centres, including Atlanta.

The Walgreene Film Corporation is at present marketing the product of several well known independent producers and it is their intention to expand their organization to include several producing units, thereby guaranteeing to state rights exchanges an ample supply of quality productions for distribution.

Rapid Progress Made on "The Unfoldment"

George H. Kern is starting on his third week in the production of "The Unfoldment," with Florence Lawrence and William Conklin as the featured players.

Work is being rushed on the interior settings at the Hollywood studios in order that the entire company can leave for Mexico City within the next two weeks.

In Geo. H. Kern's production, "The Unfoldment," William Conklin is cast in a part that gives him splendid opportunity for development of character. His transition from the callow college youth to the hardened cynical man of the world, and thence to that of an unselfish man, laboring only for his fellow man, is said by those who are viewing its daily run of film at the Hollywood studios, to be one of the most remarkable specimens of pantomime acting ever shown.

The cast includes also Albert Prisco, Lydia Knott, Willis L. Robards and others

Sherman to Release in April

First Picture As Yet Undecided, States Producer

HARRY A. SHERMAN, president of Sherman Productions Corporation, has completed his production plans on the Coast and will shortly return East to arrange for the distribution of his product, according to an announcement made at the Sherman offices early this week.

It was further definitely announced that the first Sherman picture would be released the third Monday in April, although whether this picture would be "Man and Woman," which was written and produced with an all-star cast by Charles A. Logue for Sherman Productions Corporation, and was originally scheduled as the company's initial offering, or one of the other productions which President Sherman has had under way since the first of the year, could not be positively ascertained.

It was stated, however, that the first release might be any one of four attractions, all of which have been completed, which Sherman Productions Corporation now have ready.

According to Max E. Nazur, treasurer of Sherman Productions Corporation, the decision, as to which of these productions will be chosen for the initial release, will have to wait the return of President Sherman to New York, and this selection will be governed largely, by the wishes of the franchise-holders.

It is expected also that an important announcement will be made immediately following his arrival in New York regarding future Sherman activities on the Pacific Coast.

In announcing the date of the first Sherman release, Mr. Mazur said:

"With the announcement of the date for our first release, Sherman Productions Corporation has come to the place where it can at last demonstrate even to the doubters that the so-called Sherman plan, with its many advantages to the exchange and the exhibitor, which by many was regarded as being too altruistic ever to become a reality, is, on the contrary, an entirely practical proposition.

"While perhaps it does more to standardize picture costs for the exchange and the theatre than any other system yet put into practice, it is so eminently fair and equitable to them, that on first examination it seems unpractical from the producer's standpoint.

"We are confident, however, that we shall soon prove to the industry that it is the best method yet evolved to give an absolutely fair division of each picture's profits to all concerned, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor.

"Personally, I look forward to many other independent producing concerns following the lead of Sherman Productions Corporation within a few months after we have blazed the way, for, as a matter of fact, only by so doing can they actively compete with us.

"Broken Wing" Rights Not Sold

EPORTS to the effect that screen rights to "The Broken Wing," the play successfully drawing on Broadway, had been disposed of was denied last week by Lee Kugel. While a number of concerns have been said to be dickering for the rights to this, as yet, according to Kugel, no disposition has been made.

Screen Attractions, Inc. Formed in Buffalo

Screen Attractions, Inc., is the name of the new franchise idea just launched by C. P. Saunders, former manager of Famous Pictures Sales Company of Buffalo and Albany. The new corporation, which has headquarters at 257 Franklin street, Buffalo, will release 24 features on a percentage of cost franchise basis, first-class houses paying a maximum of $100 for three days; second-class, $30 for two days; third-class, $15 for one day, and fourth-class, $10 for one day. The percentage of cost in most cases, Mr. Saunders says, will run much lower than the maximum. All contracts will carry a cancellation clause enabling exhibitors to cancel attractions if not entirely satisfied. The first release of four features already purchased will be announced shortly. One and two-reel comedies will be released on the same basis later on.

Better Foreign Market Seen

Cromelin Finds Outlook for Exporters Greatly Improved

STRIKING evidence that the foreign film markets are recovering and that conditions in these territories are returning to normal, is convincingly demonstrated this week by a statement by Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, one of the largest distributors of American-made films and motion picture accessory products in foreign markets.

Mr. Cromelin, who is well known in foreign film circles by virtue of his long association with motion picture projects of an international nature, is thoroughly at home in matters affecting the foreign film market.

Answering a query as to the status of the foreign market at the present time, Mr. Cromelin said:

"It is obvious that the foreign market is at present not as good as it might be. This is of course due to the unprecedented conditions which resulted from the recent world war. Despite the fact that the past year was one of the most perilous which the American exporter ever faced, the foreign market as a whole presents a promising outlook for the coming year.

"I am optimistic and look forward to a readjustment of conditions within the very near future. I base this statement on the strength of recent transactions which have been made by the company of which I am heard. During the past four months the foreign market has taken a decided turn for the better, and its effects have been felt perceptibly by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in renewed activity in markets which have been practically closed until now.

"To determine the status of the foreign market at the present time, one must needs study the recent activity in the exchange market. The pound sterling and the French franc have increased in valuation, and this has necessarily acted as a stimulus in foreign trading. While exchange is by no means normal, there is every reason to believe that the recent activity is a forerunner to a rise in exchange.

Mr. Cromelin endorsed wholeheartedly the policy of importing the product of Great Britain, Germany and other countries whose productions are suitable for the American market.

"The importation of foreign-made films," said Mr. Cromelin, "will be a real step towards the internationalization of the motion picture industry. Commonly regarded as the 'universal language,' the motion picture should be universal in scope.

"Importing productions made abroad will promote reciprocity and assist in settling the problem of international exchange—and the settling of this all-important question is one of the greatest, if not the greatest problem that faces us at the present time."

Irving Lesser to Star Wheeler Oakman

After having appeared in featured roles in some of screenland's most successful photo productions, word is received from Wheeler Oakman, husband of Pricella Dean, will now shine as an individual star.

Mr. Oakman has been signed by Irving M. Lesser and will make pictures under the Irving Lesser productions banner.

Mr. Lesser announces that Oakman will have his own studio which will be the second production unit under Lesser's control. According to the producer, Oakman will be starred in a series of Western pictures known as the "Bronco Boy" series. That is the character which Oakman made famous in his portrayal of the faro player in "The Spoilers."

Russell Can See No Slump

Chicago Independent, Back from Coast, Calls Rumors Propaganda

W. D. RUSSELL of Russell-Greiver-Russell recently returned from a trip to the studios of California, where he went to arrange for future productions to be handled by his concern.

Mr. Russell was on the Coast for some time and during his stay had the opportunity to investigate at first hand rumors current regarding the slowing up of productions. When questioned about the seriousness of the reports, Mr. Russell made the following statement:

"There has been an insidious propaganda of pessimism circulating all over the film industry of late months. There are rumors of slumps, unemployment, and other disagreeable situations being carried through various channels to those concerned in the motion picture industry. I have personally discovered a great deal of this propaganda and a great deal of these rumors to be unfounded. There is no slump, but there is a pause to take a fresh breath and start in on new roads to build up a finer industry on a more stable foundation.

"Starting right now, each person in the motion picture industry should appoint himself a committee of one to fight the crepe hanging propaganda that has been circulating. The way to fight fire is with fire. Each one concerned in the motion picture business should make up his mind to face the future with entire confidence and with a smile. The constantly repeated murmur of good cheer and a hard slap on the back and the spirit of optimism is all that is needed to keep the wheels oiled, things moving as they should—at a normal, logical and legitimate gait.

"If every exhibitor, every director, every producer, and every exchange man will repeat to himself, and to those he comes in contact with, the simple sentence: 'There are no bad times. The future looks great.' We will shortly find ourselves traveling at a clip that will come up to our fondest expectations.

THE first of their 1921 releases which the Clark-Cornelius Corporation will offer on the independent market will be the Jane Novak spectacle, "Hearts Aflame." This picture has been made in six reels.

The cast in addition to fifteen principals, contains several thousand supernumeraries. Sets also are on a big scale and the entire production has been built along most lavish lines.

"Hearts Aflame" has been selected by S. J. Rollo, general manager of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation for the initial offering of the year by his company.

Billy West is Popular in Southwest

According to reports in the hands of the Joan publicity department the Southwest has gone on record as solidly in support of West—the Joan comedian.

William Underwood of Specialty Films, Dallas, who distributes the series of twelve two-reel comedies in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, conceived the novel idea of introducing his Billy West comedies to his exhibitors by means of a popularity test, in which the candidates were exclusively screen comedians. With every new contract on the Billy West series, Underwood presented his exhibitors with the plan for a popular vote by the exhibitors' patrons on their favorite screen comedian. The test which has just come to a close ran for five weeks in the leading towns of the three Southwestern states. West led in some of the smaller towns and headed the list of independent comedians.

Underwood managed the vote as follows: Through his regular channels the exhibitor would announce the comedy contest. The opening of the match was always scheduled simultaneously with the presentation of the first Billy West two-reeler, "Sweethearts." The posters, window-cards, and other advertising media on Billy West carried an announcement of the local contest. Patrons were asked to judge the merits of the leading screen comedians on the strength of their recent pictures. This made it necessary for every patron to visit his local theatre and see the latest picture.

Enthusiastic Reception for Price Feature

The unusual number of inquiries that Mr. C. B. Price, president of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., has received on his preliminary announcement of "Your Daughter—and Mine," which he is marketing on the state right plan, is, according to an announcement from the offices of that company, the most spontaneous reply that Mr. Price has ever received on any picture during his entire career in the motion picture business.

This picture has been adapted from the Stanley Houghton play "Hindle Wakes" which was put over to a big success both abroad and in this country. In America it was produced by William A. Brady and during its run on the stage was highly endorsed by the Drama League of America.

Oletzky and Warren Buy Fanny Ward Feature

"She Played and Paid," the five-reel Fanny Ward feature released by Joan on the state-right market some time ago, was bought for distribution in their respective territories by Peter Oletzky, head of the Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore, for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, and by Frank Warren of the Standard Film Exchange of Kansas City, for Kansas.

Horizon Has Five Reeler

Backer Announces Talmadge Feature in Addition to 14 Two-Reelers

WITH Norma Talmadge appearing both as the mother and the daughter in the story a five-reel special re-issue is announced by Horizon Pictures, Inc., for immediate release to independent exchanges. The drama, which is by D. E. Ackerly, was adapted to the screen by Arthur C. Lichty, and staged by Van Dyke Brooke. It deals with the subject of prenatal influence and is entitled "A Daughter's Strange Inheritance." The two roles played by Norma Talmadge are said to give her a splendid opportunity for powerful emotional acting. The part of the mother runs through the first two reels when the main theme of the story is carried for three more reels to an intensely dramatic climax by Norma Talmadge as the daughter who has inherited, in addition to riches, beauty and talent, dangerous habits which promise to spell her ruin.

In announcing the first Norma Talmadge feature to be offered by his company, Mr. F. E. Backer said: "Dealing with the sensational and interesting subject of prenatal influence and presenting Norma Talmadge in what I consider two of the greatest acting roles that a star could possibly essay. I think Horizon Pictures has a special production in 'A Daughter's Strange Inheritance,' which will be welcomed by exhibitors in every territory and I expect to see independent exchanges in all parts of the country handling it in a very short time as it is ready for release now and will be launched immediately.

Mr. Backer recently announced a series of two-reel subjects in which Norma Talmadge is the star. There are fourteen in the series, three of which are now ready and all of which will be released at regular two-week intervals.

New Federated Announced

"Servant in the House," Based on Stage Play, for Early Release

GEORGE WILEY announces that Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has acquired the distribution rights to the film version of Charles Rann Kennedy's famous play, "The Servant in the House," in which Henry Miller scored a sensational success on Broadway about ten years ago.

The exploitation possibilities of "The Servant in the House" are said to be unique because of the fact that this play is one of the most widely known dramas of recent years. "The Servant in the House," originally produced at the Savoy theatre in New York by Henry Miller, has been on tour throughout United States and Canada for more than ten years, and it is estimated that more than one million persons have seen the play on the stage.

Hugh Ryan Conway, director of many well known film successes, is the director of "The Servant in the House," and he has followed as closely to the original story as possible.

The picture was produced under the personal supervision of O. H. Davis, who is personally responsible for the selection of the splendid cast. Jack Curtis, rated among the screen's best character actors, plays the role of the "Drainman." Edward Peil, who is well known for the work with D. W. Griffith, and Jack Gilbert, one of the recent leading men to turn director, are prominent in the cast. Others include Jean Gersholt, Harvey Clark, Zenaide Williams, Clara Horton, Claire Anderson, Anna Dodge and Dick Rosson.

Canyon's Big Press Book

Advertising Accessories on Pictures One Reason for Success

ACCORDING to Joseph Goldstein and Jack Weinberg of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, one of the reasons why their concern has had a successful history is the high quality of the advertising matter which has been issued on each of the Canyon productions.

The great measure of success which has attended the series of Franklyn Farnum pictures is due to a large degree to this policy, it is claimed. The six pictures which comprise this series of productions have selection of lobby display scenes which are not surpassed by any other concern, while the paper on these pictures represents a small fortune.

Perhaps the greatest item of expense is the series of press books which were published under the personal direction of Joseph M. Goldstein. These press books were written with the one purpose in view of giving to the exhibitor, not only an intimate insight into the picture, but professional advertising and press matter. Mr. Goldstein who has had large interests in motion picture theatre enterprises insisted that the exploitation department of the Canyon Pictures Corporation carry on its operation with the single idea of supplying the busy exhibitor with prepared material which he could use without change or alteration.

The latest press book to be issued by the Canyon Pictures Corporation is on Franklyn Farnum in "The Hunger of the Blood." This publication was written by Mr. Goldstein and a well known exploitation man.

First Morante Comedy Is Completed

The first efforts of Milburn Morante, as star and producer of his own comedies will be offered for the approval of exhibitors and the picture public soon when the comedian's initial picture, announced under the title, "Politics," is turned over to the Federated Exchanges, Inc., for distribution. The picture has entered its final stages of production at the company's studios in Long Beach, Cal., and is now being prepared for introduction on the state rights market.

Four weeks and three days were consumed in the filming of the story and the producers, it is said, have spared no effort to place on the market 1,000 feet of clean comedy entertainment.

Tom Gibson, formerly director for Gale Henry, Hank Mann and other funsters, directed the first Morante comedy.

Sunrise Pictures Finds Business Good

Several deals for the states right sale on the first Sunrise Pictures Corporation release, "The Price of Silence" starring Peggy Hyland, is reported by S. Rubenstein, New York Exchange manager, who just returned from a three days trip to the Philadelphia and Washington territory. Another deal involving the New England states is also reported about to be closed.

"If there is a business slump," said President Max Carnot, "our sales force can't seem to find it. We've had offers from practically every territory in the country and we will probably announce sales soon for the larger slices."

Mermaid Comedies Are Well Under Way

After a vacation of three weeks, made possible by being ahead in production, Lloyd Hamilton and Jimmie Adams have both started to work on New Mermaid Comedies under the direction of Jack White at the Glendale, Calif. studios. The Adams picture which is promised as a burlesque on the westerner will be released through Educational Exchanges the last week in March and the next Hamilton comedy in April. This will bring the total of Mermaids up to eleven.

SUNRISE Pictures Corporation of New York, announces the release date for the Greater New York territory, of its first appear- independent special, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, on February 21. The feature has been heralded by several hundred twenty-four sheet stands, publicity in all the New York newspapers, and has been aided by a teaser campaign.

Following the release of its first picture, Sunrise announces that the purchase of another big production with a famous woman star will be made public.

"Raw Material" Relief Drive

Exhibitors Asked to Aid Relief Society in Its Work

THE Society for the relief of the starving women and children in Austria and Central Europe have adopted a unique plan of procedure in covering the moving picture theatres throughout the United States.

They have had published and now ready for distribution an eight page Tri-Colored Photo Supplement, showing many interesting scenes of the exact conditions in Europe and comparing the situations "over there" with those over here. This supplement has been made up at a great expense and will be more than interesting to all who see it. A slide is also available calling attention to the Pictorial Supplement.

This Relief Society is not asking the Exhibitor to contribute money, nor are they asking his patrons to contribute money, but they are pleading with the manufacturer, the farmer, the merchant, and others to furnish them with raw materials to send to Central Europe, so that those starving people may have tools to work with.

The society desires that the exhibitors throughout the country display either in the lobby or in a window adjacent a copy of this photogravure supplement. They will appoint the exhibitor as their official agent in that vicinity to collect the raw material from his patrons this raw material may be anything from a spool of thread to a bale of cotton, they desire that the exhibitor run the slide upon his screen calling attention to the humane mission of the society and to the fact that they do not need money, but do need raw materials.

All members of this society are giving their services gratis. Everything connected with same must be a free offering. There is no money available for circularizing, advertising, etc. The photographic supplement has been donated by a certain concern, and the slides by another.

If the exhibitor will forward his name, theatre and address, the society will immediately get in touch with him forward to him the necessary authority, slide and supplement with a detailed letter of instructions, etc.

Names should be forwarded to James B. Kelly at 500 Fifth ave., New York, or to Mr. Kelly, care of the Austrian Relief Society, 261 Madison ave., New York City. Mr. Kelly is taking charge of the moving picture end of this drive for raw material.

Dominant's Production Plans

Questionaire to Guide Company in Filling Buyers' Wants

THE several hundred replies which have come to hand on the Dominant questionnaire entitled, "What Do You Want In 1921?" will shortly bear fruit in the company's proposed production activities during the coming year.

"Hitherto," states Dominant, "the independent market has been the dumping ground for such pictures as did not come up to the standard or were rejected by the program distributor. Instead of building up the independent market by giving it merchandise which could compete successfully with program material, most of the feature productions were second rate material that would play only the so-called 'shooting gallery' type of theatre. The Dominant Pictures has inaugurated a policy of making special features directly for the independent exchange. Few so-called film producers are interested to know just what class of picture an independent exchange can handle."

The questionnaire which supplemented the last three trips with Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of the Dominant Pictures has made throughout the country, will, it is said, inspire all future activities in the marketing and distributing of film product handled by that company.

The pronounced demand for "big" productions will be met with the release during the next month of a screen version of Edgar Selwyn's play, "Lonely Hearts," starring Kay Laurell, the noted queen of the Follies. John O'Brien, who has directed Mary Pickford and other well known screen stars, has finished the active directorial activities on this production. Katherine Hilliker has been entrusted with the titling of the film. When finished it will be the first production promised the independent market to meet their demands.

The demand for snappy comedy of feature length will be met with a specially produced comedy of five-reel length, with a well-known comedy star as the featured player. When full details of this production are announced it will come as a pleasing surprise to the independent market and one which will prove that this type of film is in great demand.

A series of Western and Northwestern feature productions, for which such a keen demand exists throughout the entire country, has induced the contracting with one of the greatest of all fiction writers for a series of six stories from his pen.

The requests for short subjects consisting of two-reel outdoor pictures and one-reel comedies will be satisfied by the release of a series of two-reel dramas to be known as "Western Star Dramas" and a unit of twelve single-reel comedies to be known as "The Newly Wed Series," in which Rosemary Theby and Harry Myers are featured.

Joan Announces New Picture

Chapple Production of Poe Poem for Independent Field

THE latest newcomer to the state-right market arrived this week in the offices of the Joan Film Sales Co. It is 'Annabel Lee' in five reels, adapted, as the title indicates, from the poem by Edgar Allan Poe. It was fictionized by Olive M. Briggs, and put into story form by Arthur M. Brilliant, William J. Scully, Paul M. Sarazan and Joe Mitchell Chapple, the latter also being the producer of the picture-poem.

'Annabel Lee' is the first of Chapple's Heart Throb production series, and was produced before others because of the popularity of the poem. It is a love story of a fishing hamlet in New England, and follows Poe's masterpiece faithfully. The cast includes: Lorraine Harding, who takes the title role; Jack O'Brien, as David Martin; Florida Kingsley as Mother Martin; Louis Stearns as Colonel Lee; Ben Grauer who impersonates David Martin as a child; Arline Blackburn in the character of Annabel Lee as a child; and Ernest Hilliard as David Grainger.

'Annabel Lee' is a simple, wholesome love-tale and abounds in colorful native scenery. Flashes of the fishing hamlet, with typical views of the life of the fisher-folk form one of the picture's quaintest charms. Midnight scenes of raging storms and shots of natural beauty make 'Annabel Lee' a kaleidoscope of picturesque images, it is said. The action of the story, which never loses thread is intense because of its simple strength, is the claim. There are no side plots to distract attention and the continuity is clear throughout.

The original beauty of Poe's poem is preserved in the titling of 'Annabel Lee.' The famous stanzas of the piece are quoted to describe the scenes that follow. There are also ball-room scenes that are introduced during the period that Colonel Lee arranges brilliant social gatherings in his home to entertain his daughter while David is away.

The Joan Film Sales Co. anticipates a lively demand for a production that is wholesome, simple, and that boasts of such an advance reputation as 'Annabel Lee.' An announcement to state-rights buyers of the release of this picture will be made this week.

Kineto Review Added to Strand Program

Charles Urban's releases published by the Kineto Company of America, Inc. are now playing in all the major first run houses on Broadway and in the Mar Strand, Brooklyn.

The last link was forged this week when Joseph Plunkett gave over a unit of his program at the Strand Theatre, New York, to "Thrills," a Kineto Review.

S. L. Rothafel has been running quite a number of Kineto Reviews at the Capitol; so has Edward Hyman at the Strand in Brooklyn. New York Strand is now added to the list.

Tie-Up With Publisher Planned by Price

An additional piece of co-operation which Pricefilms Inc. will render the purchasers of their latest release, "Your Daughter And Mine" which was adapted from the Stanley Houghton stage play 'Hindle Wakes,' will be a co-operative selling and advertising arrangement with the publishers of the book which has been put out on the play. Negotiations are now going forward between C. B. Price, president of Pricefilms Inc. and the John W. Luce Co. of Boston, Mass., publishers of the book, for a co-operative exploitation campaign between the theatres that play the picture and the local book stores in the city where the picture is being played.

"Sport Pictorial" in Capitol Theatre

Grantland Rice's Sport Pictorials which are being produced by Jack Eaton and distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation, are playing in some of the best theatres in the United States, announces the distributors. For instance, "Leading a Dog's Life," the latest release, has played all this week at the Capitol theatre, New York. This is the fourth release to play at the Capitol theatre.

"The New York Times," in reviewing the Capitol bill last Sunday, stated that "The brightest feature on the Capitol bill this week is Grantland Rice's Sport Pictorial."

Callahan Film Co. is Formed in N. J.

Jimmy Callahan, head of the Jimmy Callahan Film Co., and star of the series of Jimmy Callahan Comedies which are being offered by Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., announces the formation of a $500,000.00 corporation under the laws of the State of New Jersey to take care of the financing of his activities.

Aywon Film Moves to Larger Offices

Because of a large increase in the amount of business being done, the Aywon Film Corporation have taken larger offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Last week Nathan Hirsh, president, and the members of his organization moved from the seventh to the sixth floor.

Associated Has Two Stars

Doris May and Helen Gibson to Make Series of Super Features

VICTOR B. FISHER, general manager of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., has just issued an announcement to the effect that contracts have just been signed whereby his concern will handle during the coming year two series of super features starring Doris May and Helen Gibson.

The contracts call for six pictures with Doris May as the star, and eight productions starring Helen Gibson. According to present plans these pictures will be released at intervals of two months. This arrangement will assure the exchanges handling Associated Photo-Plays attractions, one big picture a month. Helen Gibson will have the honor of being released first and will be followed by Doris May in her new production. This system will be followed throughout the year; each star being offered in her latest production on alternate months.

Doris May who appeared with Charles Ray, under the direction of Thomas Ince in a number of his most successful Paramount offerings, is looked upon with great favor by the independent buyers and exhibitors. Her later appearances as co-star with Douglas McLean in several pictures has placed her in the very front rank of popular stars.

The staff of the Associated Photo-Plays are now busily engaged in selecting story material for both Miss Gibson and Doris May. It is the intention of Mr. Fisher and his associates to give both of these players the best stories and plays available for their forthcoming activities under the banner of the Associated Photo-Plays.

The announcement of policy which was recently issued by Mr. Fisher has aroused an unanticipated amount of comment and interest in the field. From present indications it appears that the Associated Photo-Plays will have a large majority of the best established independent exchanges in the United States and Canada, as its distributors.

"Hush" Dispels Bad Slump

Equity Feature Scores for Moore in Washington in Week of Jan. 23

"HUSH," the Equity picture, and the latest Clara Kimball Young production, emerged victorious from a week's run at Tom Moore's Rialto theatre in Washington, D. C., where it was shown during the week of January 23rd.

The conditions confronting the run of the Clara Kimball Young production were far from favorable. Attendance was on the wane, the weather was consistently inclement, and the nine-reel feature 'Passion' was booked for the same week at the opposition house.

Shattering all expectation, 'Hush' brought more money into Moore's box-office than any picture previous, since the slump period. Even in normal times, the income from the run of 'Hush,' was beyond the average.

This is what the Washington exhibitor himself says about the picture in a letter to the Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore, who are handling the feature in that territory:

"From every viewpoint, we consider this release the equal of any of Miss Young's previous efforts—the star being at her best; the story was most enthusiastically received, being staged in a lavish manner, both from the standpoint of settings and costumes. In brief, the production has everything that the high class of motion picture clientele of the day demands."

Coast Studio for Capital

Cuneo Pictures to Be Made in Studio Now Under Construction

DOUBLEDAY PRODUCTION COMPANY have broken ground for a new studio near Hollywood, to cost in the neighborhood of $150,000, according to word received at Capital Film Company's headquarters in Chicago. The new studio will be used for the production of the Lester Cuneo pictures for Capital Film Corporation.

The new studio will be almost completely out doors and glass covered. 12,000 square feet of glass are necessary to roof in the studio proper and space sufficient for the shooting of ten scenes simultaneously has been arranged. The customary laboratory space and projection space has been provided.

Several new features enter into the new studio. A herd of Holstein cattle together with grazing space for them is included in the contract for use in the Cuneo pictures. There is a corral in which over a hundred head of horse will be housed.

A new departure is the establishment of a riding school for the equestrian education of the supporting cast in the Cuneo series. Although the bulk of the folks on the Doubleday payroll are graduates in horsemanship, it was decided that the riding school was a valuable asset.

It is expected that the new studio and its surrounding acreage will be ready for operation by April 1, 1921.

Kremer Returns from Trip

Argues That Prosperity is Not of the Future But is Here Now

AFTER an extended tour between here and Kansas City, during which he visited most of the large cities, Victor Kremer returned to New York on Thursday overflowing with optimism and good cheer, the result of what he saw and heard along the line.

"All this silly talk about panicky conditions, and decay of the motion picture industry and a general outlook for poor business is absolute rot," said Mr. Kremer.

"I find that in all the cities I visited there had been no reduction of admission prices and that the attendance was of about the same average as it has been for the past couple of years. If such happens to be the case how is it that an exhibitor can reasonably complain of poor business?

"The general excuse given by the complaining exhibitor is that the exchanges are demanding so much more for their wares. Now the exchange man argues that the producer is asking much more for his productions. It seems a shame that the producer can't find some excuse to pass the buck along.

"If the exchange man is getting more for his goods than before of necessity he must be doing an increased business and so on along the line so that in the final analysis each and all engaged in our industry are in about the same position as in the past.

"There is a growing demand for stories with real action and a real heart story in them and I know that in these pictures I have attained the ultimate in this direction for my selection of the eight five-reelers that are now under way was made from over four hundred scenarios submitted and are from the pens of the foremost writers of this class of story. For the most part they are built on actual chapters from the history of the West and have the punch and pep that have gone so far toward making that country the wonderful place it is.

"Let the gloom purveyor take to his dismal swamp of inactivity and let the real men of this business forget that he exists, for while my optimism is in no small measure built upon conditions that hold with me still it will soon be proven that the motion picture industry is in for the biggest year of its history."

George Matthews Selling Price Pictures

George I. Matthews, who has long been associated with the film business is now associated with Pricefilms Inc. in the capacity of special representative. Mr. Matthews is covering the Eastern territory for this company right now, and last week during his stay in Philadelphia disposed of several of the Price pictures.

Urban Movie Chat at Lamb's Gambol

One of Charles Urban's Science Series will be the only motion picture shown next Sunday night at the Lambs Club when the Lambs stage their pre-release of their annual Gambol.

Jack Hazzard is going to use it as the basis of an illustrated lecture, so the chances are it will not be quite as serious a reel as the Science Series Studies usually are.

Public to View Kinekrom

Example of Urban Color Process to Be Shown to Club in New York

EXAMPLES of Kinekrom, which is Charles Urban's new Natural Color Process for motion pictures, will have a semi-public showing the evening of February 18 when they will be exhibited to the guests of the nineteenth annual dinner of the Canadian Camp at the Hotel Astor. Until now Kinekrom has never been outside of the Projection Theatre at the Urban offices in the Masonic Building, 71 West 23rd Street, New York. The new Natural Color pictures controlled by the Urban-Joy patents will be ready for the general motion picture market some time next autumn when the projection machines necessary to their operation will be completed in sufficient number. These machines, known as the Duplex Color Projector, also show black and white pictures. The change is made by the simple throwing of a lever.

Mr. Urban will be a guest at the dinner as well as other officials of the Urban organization. Roy F. Soule, general sales manager of the Urban Motion Picture Industries, Inc. will be one of the speakers.

Mystery Serial for Howells

Acquires Rights to "The Hope Diamond Mystery" Grace Darmond Stars

FOLLLOWING his successful distribution of "The Son of Tarzan," David P. Howells has acquired the United States and Canadian rights for another big serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery," featuring Grace Darmond.

The final papers in the transaction were signed last week and work has already been instituted in getting the picture ready for the market. The Hope Diamond is undoubtedly the most sinister jewel in the history of the world. It has an authentic history dating back 1,400 years and it has a story of disaster and misfortune. Every person who has actively been connected with the diamond during that time has met disaster in some form or other, it is declared.

It is a picture replete with action and excitement from start to finish, according to Howells officials, and tells a story that not only touches the heart but carries the audience through the entire gamut of the emotions.

In order that the picture may be marketed in a thorough and efficient manner with the maximum amount of service to the states rights buyer and the exhibitor, David P. Howells has caused to be created a states rights department which will be separate and distinct from his foreign and export business

This department will be under the active management of William Fait, Jr., who has formerly been in charge of the South American activities of the Howells organization. The advertising publicity and exploitation will be under the direction of T. C. Eltonhead.

Brandt Aids Censor Fight

Arranges Tour of Manilla Martens to Sway Public Opinion

INDEPENDENT will fight tooth and nail the curtailment of all privileges of freedom, an end toward which legislators are steadily tending.

With Sunday Blue Laws, and drastic film censorship the issues of the day, the film industry is marshalling all its powerful forces, and announcement comes from the offices of the C.B.C. Film Company that it stands ready to do anything and everything in its power to uphold the cause of personal liberty.

By way of proof of this, it is announced that Manilla Martens has arrived from the West Coast this week, and is soon to start on an extensive tour planned by Hoe Brandt, President of the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation, to appear personally in theatres throughout the country in connection with the subject of film censorship. Miss Martens, who is the heroine of the super-serial "A Son of Tarzan," will tell audiences of film theatres just what Censorship will mean to them, and to secure first-hand information on their re-action toward it. According to Mr. Brandt, it has heretofore been the exhibitor's side of the question that has been most closely considered, and it is his belief that, since the public is, after all, the ultimate consumer of motion pictures, it should know exactly what Censorship will mean, and its wishes and views should be taken into full account on the matter.

Miss Martens arrived from the Coast on Monday, and makes the initial appearance on her tour on February 20th, at Philadelphia. With this tour, the second big gun in the fight against curtailment of liberties, under the supervision of Mr. Brandt, will be fired, since it was he who made it possible for Franklin Farnum to accomplish the excellent work he is doing by appearing personally to talk against the proposed Sunday Blue Law legislation.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"THE FIRST BORN," starring Sessue Hayakawa, according to Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand Theatre, ran second in actual receipts to "Kismet," which holds the house record. Both pictures are Robertson-Cole productions.

Mr. Plunkett said: "'Kismet'" the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Otis Skinner, holds the record for the Strand throughout its entire history. The final count on 'The First Born,' a second Robertson-Cole picture which has just completed a week's engagement, shows it ran second in actual receipts."

First National Men Wil Meet in Des Moines

The Associated First National Pictures of Iowa, Inc., will have a meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, on February 14th, for all Sub-Franchise Holders. A screening of The Oath, Sowing the Wind, The Kid and Passion will be featured. A banquet will be given at the Savery Hotel.

Scott Sidney at Work on Christie Comedy

Scott Sidney, Christie director, is working on a new two-reel picture for Educational release. The title will be "Red Hot Love." A fire-department will furnish the heat and riot-call of fun as a background for a love story in which Neal Burns and Vera Steadman are to play the principal roles.

Current Paramount Issues

February 6 Sees Release of Gish and Arbuckle Comedy Productions

FEBRUARY 6 was comedy day on the Paramount release schedule, for both the features listed for that day were comedies—Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "Brewster's Millions" and Dorothy Gish in "The Ghost in the Garret."

No better guarantee of the merit of the picture could be offered, Paramount says, than that it was directed by Joseph Henabery, who not only directed Arbuckle in his first stellar feature comedy, "The Life of the Party," but also put Douglas Fairbanks through his paces in three of his best pictures. Moreover, the scenario was written by Walter Woods who so successfully adapted Irvin Cobb's story for the previous Arbuckle picture.

In transferring to the screen the Melville Stone-Winchell Smith play based upon George Barr McCutcheon's popular novel, Messrs. Woods and Henabery introduced some novelties which were impossible of incorporation in the play. These were two sets of scenes which served to introduce the story proper, showing Monte Brewster (played by "Fatty" himself) at the ages of one and five.

Playing opposite "Fatty" for the first time is Betty Ross Clark, whose work is declared to be of a high order. These principals are aided and abetted in the fun-making by Fred Huntly, James Corrigan, Charles Ogle, Jean Acker, Neely Edwards, William Boyd, Parker McConnell and others.

The Dorothy Gish picture, "The Ghost in the Garret," was directed by F. Richard Jones. The story was written by Wells Hastings.

William E. Park is Miss Gish's leading man, while admirable support is also furnished by Downing Clark, Ray Gray, Mrs. David Landau, Walter T. Lewis, Mrs. Foy, Frank Badgley, Tom Blake, Frank Hagney, William Nally and Porter Strong.

Stoll Film to Release "God's Good Man"

Marie Corelli's famous story, "God's Good Man," will be released by the Stoll Film Corporation of America on February 20, according to an announcement issued by the company. This will be the first motion-picture production of a work by the noted author in which every detail was personally supervised and authenticated by her, it is declared.

Maurice Elvey directed the production, from a scenario by Kate Gurney, who also plays a part in the picture. Miss Corelli left her home at Stratford-on-Avon, within a stone's throw of William Shakespeare's abode, to spend all of her time at the Stoll studio during the period of the filming of the interiors, declares a statement from the Stoll offices.

Robert Hichens Will Write for Screen

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, yesterday received a cablegram from London advising that Robert Hichens, famous author of "The Garden of Allah," "Bella Donna" and other stories and plays, had signed a contract to write original stories for Paramount Pictures.

Mr. Hichens was one of the group of noted British authors with whom Mr. Lasky negotiated last summer on his trip to London, but because of other engagements for novels at the time Mr. Hichens was unable until now to begin active work as a photoplaywright. Expressing enthusiasm over the opportunities which the screen offers to authors, Mr. Hichens said he was ready to begin work immediately. It is expected that he will work in the London studio of Famous Players, where Arnold Bennett, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Joseph Conrad and Sir James M. Barrie already are studying the technique of the screen drama.

"Full House Program" for Coast Theatre

At the Windsor theatre in Los Angeles on the same bill are advertised Metro's special "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" and Christie's special two-reel comedy "Dining Room, Kitchen and Sink."

A scene from the W. W. Hodkinson release, "A Certain Rich Man," which features Claire Adams and Frankie Lee

"The Three Musketeers" for Doug

THE next vehicles for Douglas Fairbanks, following the publication of "The Nut," his fifth United Artists' production scheduled for release about April first, will be Alexander Dumas' world-famous story, "The Three Musketeers."

It is the intention of Fairbanks to engage one of the world's best known dramatists to adapt this tale to the requirements of the camera. Several prominent contemporary authors and playwrights are now being considered for this task, it is stated, among them Edward Knoblock, who gave to the speaking stage such notable works as "Milestones," "Kismet," "Tiger, Tiger," "My Lady's Dress" and "Shulamite."

"The most elaborate and extensive campaign of research ever launched is now in process of formulation at the Fairbanks studio, the purpose of which will be to insure the utmost accuracy and faithfulness of detail in every episode of the picture," declares a statement from United Artists. "It is expected that considerable difficuly will be experienced in this respect because of the divergence of various authorities regarding the matter of customs and costumes of that particular period.

"In the beginning it was the intention of Fairbanks to make this picture in Europe. Owing to the fact that so much time would be required for the trip that it would be impossible for Doug to complete his 1921 production schedule, this idea has been abandoned. But in order that the picture may be embellished by the correct locale, arrangements are being made to send two cameramen abroad, one to England and the other to France, where suitable exteriors will be made and in corporated in the production."

New Radiosoul Production

L. E. Miller Announces "You and I" to Follow "A Man There Was"

L. E. MILLER, president of the Radiosoul Films, Inc., who has returned from a short trip to the West, reports about the remarkable change that occurred in the attitude of the film folks towards the foreign product of the better class. Whether it was due to the highly favorable comments of the press upon the first showing of Ibsen's "A Man There Was," or to the sensational success of "Passion," or to the general awakening of the trade which began to realize that the craving of the public for things different cannot be disregarded any longer, the fact is that the old prejudices of the exhibitors are rapidly dying out and that a high-class European picture does not require any longer a disguise or the subterfuges of yore. Mr. Miller's experience with Ibsen's "A Man There Was" established this fact beyond every doubt.

While this picture, after its re-release showing at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, was received by the entire press, the trade as well as the daily New York, as one of the noteworthy of the season, and while the New York Times in its New Year's review singled it out for its merits alongside of the very best of the year, and the New York Globe in a similar review of the year's output placed "A Man There Was" alongside of "Treasure Island," the state rights men and exchanges were at the beginning somewhat shy to tackle it just because of its being an Ibsen play.

This, states Mr. Miller, is now entirely changed and gone. The Ibsen origin of the picture today, if anything, is one of its best and most attractive points.

Mr. Miller cut short his trip to complete the second feature of his organization, "You and I," with Victor Seastrom as star and director, also featuring Edith Erastow and Lillian Walker. "You and I" is based upon the famous classic "Eyvind of the Hills," the original drama of which is now being played at the Greenwich Village theatre in New York, with Margaret Wycherly in the lead.

Lloyd Comedy on March 13

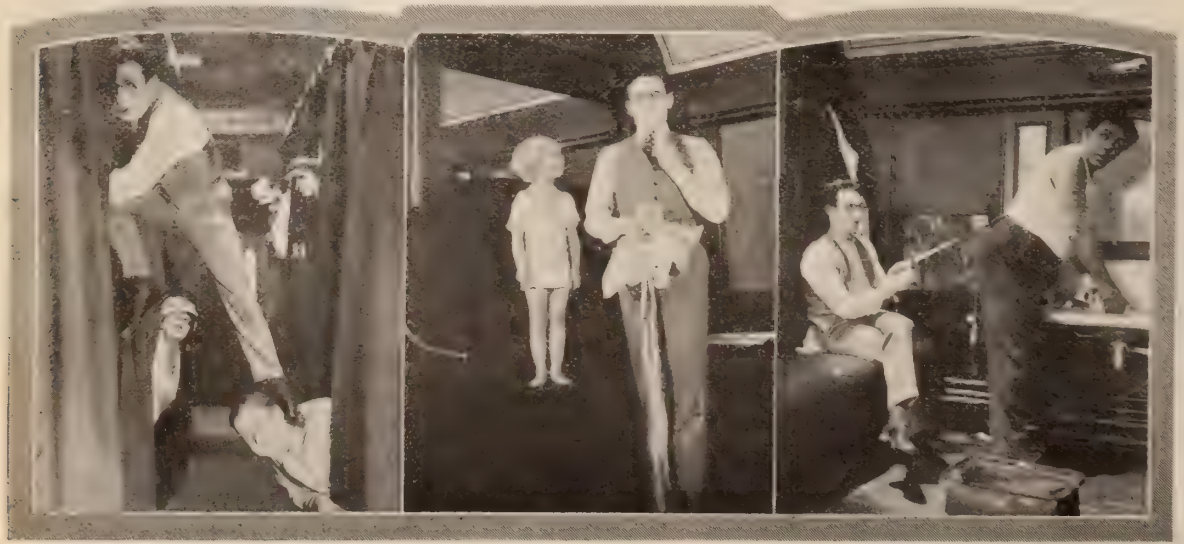
"Now or Never" Marks Debut of Star With Associated Exhibitors

ANNOUNCEMENT of March 13 as the release date of "Now or Never," Harold Lloyd's first picture under his contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., was made this week. This production is in three reels and sets a new standard for Lloyd comedies. The contract entered into between Hal Roach, the producer of the Lloyd pictures, Lloyd and Associated Exhibitors last summer does not remove the Lloyd comedies from the Pathe releasing schedule as the pictures are to be distributed by Pathe, with whom Lloyd has been identified for six years.

The release of the first three-reel Lloyd comedy marks another step in the career of the most spectacularly successful star of the screen. The policy responsible for the ever increasing success of the comedian was formulated by Paul Brunet, president of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., who saw the possibilities of Lloyd in two-reel comedies of an exceptionally high character. His judgment was vindicated immediately upon the release of "Bumping Into Broadway," the first two-reel in which Lloyd appeared.

"Captain Kidds Kids," "From Hand to Mouth," "His Royal Slyness," "An Eastern Westerner," "Haunted Spooks' and "High and Dizzy," all established new box office records, it is said.

Goldywn Completes Cast



Cullin Landiss and Louise Lovely in "Old Crow" Rupert Hughes Story

GOLDWYN has practically completed the cast for "The Old Nest," Rupert Hughes' screen adaptation of his popular novel of the same name, which is about ready to go into production under the direction of Reginald Barker. Cullen Landis, Louise Lovely and Billie Cotton have been added to the cast which already included Mary Alden, Dwight Crittenden, Johnny Jones, Lucille Ricksen and Buddy Messenger, the three latter from the Booth Tarkington two-reel comedy series, "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy."

Wallace Worsley, director, and Leroy Scott, author, have gone on location with the company acting in Mr. Scott's first original photoplay, "The Night Rose." William A. Pinkerton, the famous detective, has been at the Goldwyn studios this week consulting with Director Worsley on the underworld and police phases of "The Night Rose."

Director E. Mason Hopper and "The Bridal Path" company have gone to Santa Barbara, Cal., to take exteriors on the Thompson Buchanan comedy.

Work on Charles Kenyon's first original photoplay which went into production under the provisional title of "The Alibi," was held up a few days through the illness of Director Frank Lloyd.

Three amusing scenes from Harold Lloyd's new Associated Exhibitors' production, "Now or Never," to be released by Pathe Exchange

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, and George Randolph Chester left New York for California late last week, and immediately upon their arrival in Hollywood will commence preliminary arrangements for the filming of Vitagraph's big special production, "The Son of Wallingford."

Mr. Chester will personally direct "The Son of Wallingford," which he first wrote in novel form. This is to be published in Collier's Weekly, and shortly after the final chapter is printed in that publication, the novel will be brought out in book form and the film production will be ready for release.

Hart Maintains Popularity

S. R. Kent Says Bill Hart's Four Last Films Are Best He Has Done

William S. Hart as Sgt. O'Malley in his new picture, "O'Malley of the Mounted," released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

ACCORDING to the distribution department of Paramount, William S. Hart is today more popular than ever with the motion picture fans not only of the United States but the entire world. That is due, says S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, to the fact that the last four Hart pictures, produced by the Paramount star's own independent organization, are unquestionably the best he has ever appeared in.

"It is easy to call any picture, with any star, 'the best yet,' but it is another thing to convince people that you are sincere when you say it," said Mr. Kent. "I base my statement upon a careful study of box-office reports sent in by exhibitors, some of them direct to us, others to the trade papers. In the reports on the last four Hart production, the number of times the simple statement, 'Best Hart yet,' or 'Finest picture Hart ever made,' is used by exhibitors is simply astonishing. And in innumerable instances the reports include the significant phrase, 'Broke all records,'"

No doubt, says Paramount, the big success scored by these independent Hart productions is the direct result of the thoroughness with which Mr. Hart built his organization and the confidence which he placed in it as a competent producing outfit. For all these pictures have been directed by the same man—Lambert Hillyer, who also adapted the stories of all of them for the screen; all were photographed by the same cameraman—Joe August, A.S.C., one of the acknowledged leaders of the profession; and Mr. Hart himself either wrote or collaborated in the authorship of two of the four, besides writing the original story of "O'Malley of the Mounted," the fifth of the series, which is shortly to be released.

Ku Klux Klan in Kinograms

Educational Says News Reels Will Maintain Newspaper's Standards

"IT is not the newspaper that scores a beat now and then and is content to be the second best paper the greater portion of the time that keeps the circulation and has the confidence of the public," says a statement from Educational. "People demand a readable, first-class, comprehensive newspaper every day in the year. And please remember that they would not stay long on the subscription lists if deliveries were irregular, often missing the breakfast table or the dinner hour.

"Kinograms is the newspaper of the screen, and we mean to make the super Kinograms, already including the service of the old Kinograms and Gaumont news, and soon to absorb the forces of a third news weekly, the same standard as the best of newspapers. We will have our full share of 'beats'—this very week we have an important one—but it will not be our point to boast of these and then rest on mediocre, but to keep the standard of every portion of the reels of equal quality.

"Educational adds to the concentrated efforts of these three news staffs a service that exhibitors have learned to appreciate since the inauguration of our own exchange system. They will all get their news weekly on time, and as much efforts will be put behind that delivery as behind the most important feature. It is our peculiar business to do this with one and two-reel pictures."

Super Kinograms No. 2012, third of the semi-weekly release through Educational contains exclusive pictures of the Ku Klux Klan actually posed at their headquarters in Georgia, showing close-ups of the Imperial Wizard and weird night scenes of the Klan's meetings.

Another most interesting element is the exhibition by men of the Royal Horse Guards, the crack ski athletes of all Norway. Championship winter sports at Banff, Canada, are also shown in the release for the first of this week, as well as the first ice boat races of the season at Red Bank, N. J.

Other interesting items are President Wilson's farewell to Secretary Tumulty, first views of Chicago's secret subway for handling freight underneath the loop district, a great festival of Koreans and a number of others.

Fox Issues Booklet on Its New Star

The elevation to stardom of Harold Goodwin by William Fox is being announced to the film world by Fox Film Corporation through the medium of a neat and artistic folder devoted to pictures and reading matter about the new star.

"Slave of Vanity" Scores

Newspaper Critics Praise Work of Pauline Frederick in Film

ROBERTSON-COLE continues to receive telegrams and letters and hundreds of newspaper clippings telling of the successful trail blazed by "A Slave of Vanity," the big super-special release starring Pauline Frederick. The photoplay, a screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's drama, "Iris," has established a remarkable record, according to Robertson-Cole officials.

Newspaper comment bearing on the success of "A Slave of Vanity," received from various sections are interesting. The Constitution, of Atlanta, Ga., has the following to say: "Miss Pauline Frederick charmed a large audience at the Forsyth theatre on Monday when she made her debut as a Robertson-Cole star in the super-special 'A Slave of Vanity.' Never has this great emotional actress had a vehicle which afforded her the opportunity that the new picture does. At all times Miss Frederick is convincing and her superb acting is materially aided by an extraordinarily fine cast."

The Tribune, of Beaver Falls, Pa., comments: "One of the finest pictures in years is 'A Slave of Vanity,' the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Pauline Frederick, now playing at the Majestic theatre. Here is a photoplay of real merit. It has a story and a moral which is well told by Miss Frederick and an excellent cast. It is a picture different from the general run and therefore a decided relief. In the stellar role Miss Frederick again demonstrates the ability which has won for her the distinction of being the leading emotional actress of the silver sheet. Critics have declared her work in 'A Slave of Vanity' to be the best of her career and justly so."

Ruth Peiter, in the Toledo Times, wrote the following: "Miss Frederick has a role which allows her emotional abilities full sway and she paints a vivid picture of a woman rescued from her own selfishness by the 'divine spark' of love. The nature of the play demanded artistic costuming and setting, and the production is luxuriously presented."

Educational Comedies in Force in Philly

Five out of six of the leading theatres of Philadelphia last week played in competition comedies released through Educational Exchanges. The sixth theatre used no comedy since the length of the feature, "When New York Sleeps," precluded the inclusion of any other film than the news weekly.

At both the Stanton and the Palace "You'll Be S'prised," a Chester Comedy, was shown while at the Capitol Bobby Vernon was the featured player in "Back From the Front," a Christie. The Torchy series was represented at the Arcadia where it was held for the second week. "Without a Wife," a single reel Vanity, was an attractive portion of the bill at the Regent.

John McDermott Does Ubiquitous "Bit"

John W. McDermott, who wrote the continuity for "The Sky Pilot," which is being directed by King Vidor, also plays a "bit" in the picture, which occasions him much glee whenever he thinks about it, for in one scene he jumps out of a window in an interior filmed at Vidor Village, lands on his neck in an exterior filmed at Truckee, and disappears in a forest filmed way up at Banff, in northwestern Canada.

Movies Popular in the Philippine Islands

R. G. France of Manila, a member of the firm of Wise & Company, distributors of Paramount Pictures in the Philippine Islands, spent several days in New York last week en route to Manila after a vacation of several months spent in England. Mr. France arrived in New York on January 29, and departed on February 3rd for Vancouver, where he will embark for Manila.

"The motion picture screen is the one form of foreign entertainment which has made great headway in the Philippines, and American pictures are popular wherever shown," said Mr. France. "Formerly the natives delighted in cowboy and wild west melodrama, but in the last two years they have begun to show a desire for society and business dramas. Once the process of deflation is completed, I look for great prosperity in the Philippine Islands, and the motion picture business undoubtedly will enjoy a considerable growth.

Christie Comedies in Competing Houses

As evidence of the popularity of the new Christie comedies, which it is releasing, Educational pointed out that last week these comedies were playing in opposition in theatres in two of the principal cities, Chicago and Denver.

In Denver "A Homespun Hero" was being shown at the Rialto while "Movie Mad" was on the bill at the Strand, and in Chicago Barbee's Loop had "Mr. Fatima" and the Riviera "Going Through The Rye."

Fox News Cameramen in Competition

A worldwide competition for cameramen, with a gold badge as the prize, is announced by Fox News. All field and staff cameramen of Fox News are eligible.

One of the most important factors in building up Fox News from its beginning, only 16 months ago, to its present high place in the American motion picture industry has been the fostering of a competitive spirit among the great array of Fox News cameramen in all parts of the world.

In the present competition, the decision to give a gold badge was made at a conference of William Fox, president, and Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, of Fox Film Corporation; and H. E. Hancock, director-in-chief of Fox News.

Goldwyn Returns from Coast

Issues Statement on New Developments in Production

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, on his return from California, expressed his extreme interest in three immediate phases of motion picture production:

1. The lengthening time element in production; 2. The inevitable drop in actors' salaries; and 3. The replacing of the spectacle in pictures with convincing original stories of human beings.

"Actor's salaries are coming down," said Mr. Goldwyn, "but the cost of production will not be materially decreased, because more time and care must be used in making the kind of pictures that the public is demanding. This means a heavy overhead expense. There has been a mad rush to make pictures whether there was a market for them or not. This resulted in many salaries being boosted to ridiculous heights."

Mr. Goldwyn said he is convinced that the public wants sensible, well-developed stories more than anything else. "The story will be the spectacle of the future," he stated.

"Directors have tried to out-do each other in devising spectacles," he continued. "That has resulted in great waste, and there is now no place in the industry for useless expenditure. If producers will pay more attention to their stories they will find it unnecessary to drag a circus into every photoplay. They will also be doing themselves and the industry a signal service.

"That is why the Goldwyn Company took a flying start two years ago and invited the author into the fold to tell his stories in pictures. The important American authors now on the Culver City studio lot signify the great development that the motion picture has made.

Nineteen new productions, six of them already in work, and practically all original stories by well-known authors, were announced by Mr. Goldwyn on his return from the Coast. The stories selected, with tentative titles, are:

"Till Death Do Us Part," an original story by Gouverneur Morris; "A Tailor-Made Man," the popular play by Harry James Smith in which Grant Mitchell was starred; "From the Ground Up," an original story by Rupert Hughes; "The Bashful Romeo," a story written especially for Will Rogers by Elmer L. Rice; "The Mother," an original photoplay by Leroy Scott; "Jane," an original photoplay by Mary Roberts Rinehart; "The Grim Comedian," an original photoplay by Rita Weiman; "The Christian," Hall Caine's famous novel adapted to the screen by Elmer L. Rice; "The Purple Flask," an original photoplay by Gouverneur Morris; "The Wall Flower," by Rupert Hughes; "The Poor Relation," Edward E. Kidder's famous play; "Hungry Hearts," from the series of short stories by Anzia Yezierska; "Cleared for Action," an original story written especially for Tom Moore by Charles Kenyon.

The six pictures now in production are: "An Unwilling Hero," an O. Henry story starring Will Rogers, under the direction of Clarence Badger; "The Bridal Path," a screen version of Thompson Buchanan's play, directed by E. Mason Hopper; "The Alibi," a Frank Lloyd production of an original story by Charles Kenyon, with an all-star cast; "The Night Rose," an original story by Leroy Scott, directed by Wallace Worsley; "The Old Nest," a Reginald Barker production of Rupert Hughes' novel adapted to the screen by the author; and "Made in Heaven," a starring vehicle for Tom Moore, adapted from William J. Hurlbut's successful stage play of the same name and directed by Victor Schertzinger.

No Slump Seen at Lasky Plant

"FAR from reflecting a condition of stagnation in motion picture production at Hollywood, which certain amusement publications are harping upon in every issue, the exceptional activity which has been noticeable at the Lasky studio for some time has been further increased during the past week, and prospects are for a long-continued busy period," declares a statement received from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters.

Cecil B. DeMille has just completed "The Affairs of Anatol," suggested by Arthur Schnitzler's play of the same name, which he has produced for Paramount with an all-star cast. This epoch-making production now goes to the cutting room for the last stages of work and when it is finally released to the public it is believed that it will create a veritable sensation.

William DeMille is securing some admirable scenes for his new Paramount production, "The Lost Romance," which is an original story by Edward Knoblock, scenarized by Olga Printzlau. Jack Holt has the role of Mark Sheridan and Conrad Nagel the part of Allen Erskine, M. D., Lois Wilson appears as Sylvia Hayes and others of note in the cast are Fontaine LaRue, Maym Kelso, Robert Brower, Mickey Moore.

The Gorge Melford production of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master," for which the author and director wrote the scenario, has been employing a large number of extra people during the past week for scenes in some of the quaint interiors and exteriors which have been built at the Lasky studio. At all times Sir Gilbert Parker is a close observer of the progress of the production, and as soon as the company starts for its location work in the distant North, he will accompany it.

Lois Weber, author, director and producer of Paramount releases

James Kirkwood is the featured player, Alice Holister is the leading woman, with Ann Forrest in a delightful role and a number of other spendid players such as Alan Hale, Fred Huntly, Truly Shattuck, Harry Duffield, Charles Ogle, Mabel Van Buren, John Herdman and William Boyd in the various important characterizations.

The company engaged upon the production of "Crazy to Marry," with Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in the stellar role, has left Hollywood for a short trip northward to obtain some important scenes for the picture. James Cruze is directing. Frank Condon wrote the story and Walter Woods the scenario. Lila Lee is leading woman. During the week an extremely handsome interior scene was utilized and one of the amusing features was an amazingly clever fall perpetrated by the star in which he somersaults over a fountain and drops a dozen or so packages that he is carrying.

Gloria Swanson will now have a brief rest before starting on her first star production at the Lasky studio, for Paramount, under the direction of Sam Wood, her picture being Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," the scenario for which was prepared by Monte M. Katterjohn. Miss Swanson is very anxious to begin work and will be engaged during the brief interim in preparing her gowns and other details for the production.

Ethel Clayton, under the direction of Thomas Heffron, is progressing splendidly with "Sham."

Big Circuits Book "The Devil"

BOOKINGS of the Mastbaum circuit of theatres in Pennsylvania and the Gordon Circuit of New England are among the high lights of last week's accomplishments of Associated Exhibitors production, "The Devil" in its triumphant procession over the country following its successes at pre-release showings in New York, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Lawrence, Mass., and Albany, N. Y.

Due to conditions obtaining in the booking engagements of these two theatre circuits the booking of "The Devil" for early showing certifies the box office merit of the great production. Under these circumstances the announcement that George Arliss in his first screen vehicle was under contract to the Mastbaum and Gordon circuits can be regarded only as a distinct triumph for the Associated Exhibitors production which Pathe is distributing.

The successful showings made by "The Devil" at pre-release presentations at the Strand, New York; Strand, Brooklyn; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Rialto, Lawrence, Mass.; and the Strand, Albany, have spread far and wide the fame of the picture as one having mighty box-office appeal and rare artistic merit.

"The Devil" carried its record-breaking ways into New England after proving its worth in New York. At its pre-release engagement at the Rialto, Lawrence, the Arliss starring photoplay played to capacity throughout the week of January 25, thereby living up to the expectations of Andrew J. Cobe, manager of that house, which he expressed to Pathe in a letter as follows: "We opened with 'The Devil' to the biggest business ever done in this house. The picture went over splendidly and every one was very much pleased with it. I look forward to a record breaking week, despite the zero weather."

"Blocking the traffic" is an ambition to which many shows have aspired and a chosen few attained, among them "The Devil" at its premier in Albany. To this achievement the following telegram, dated February 5th, to Pathe from Albany, bears testimony: "Strand played to capacity all performances today. Traffic blocked for two blocks tonight. Largest crowds since opening of house."

The picture duplicated its success in the New York vicinity at presentations in Cincinnati and Cleveland. The Cincinnati Post recorded the event of George Arliss's appearance on the screen at the Walnut theatre there in a laudatory review which opened with the statement that "George Arliss brings all his superb artistry to the screen in 'The Devil.'" In commenting on the bill at the Metropolitan and Strand in Cleveland the Cleveland News sums up a review of the picture with the terse but eloquently praiseful statement: "It is Recommended."

Neilan Finishes New Feature

MARSHALL NEILAN recently finished "shooting" on the most spectacular production he has ever attempted—"Bob Hampton of Placer"—an adaptation from the Randall Parrish book of the same title. Reports from those who are in a position to know indicate that this film is undoubtedly the most artistic offering yet staged by Mr. Neilan.

During the past year Mr. Neilan has not particularly emphasized on the artistic settings, his stories being of such a nature as to depend entirely on the force of dramatic construction and presentation in order to get over. In "Bob Hampton of Placer" the director has a plot that is of particular dramatic intensity and, in addition calls for unusually beautiful natural backgrounds.

In order to get this atmosphere, Mr. Neilan took his entire producing organization to Glacier Park, Montana, and later to Fort Huachuca, Arizona, where—amidst naturally artistic surroundings that have never before been photographed—he staged the action of his story.

With the idea of making this film stand out as an artistic as well as a dramatic achievement, Mr. Neilan transported two immense ten-ton electric generators and a dirigible "blimp," together with other new motion picture producing apparatus. Much of the exterior action takes place at night in the heart of the mountains. The generators made this not only possible, but resulted in obtaining effects that are expected to prove for all time that Marshall Neilan, who has disclosed himself a master in all other branches of screen production, is second to none is artistic accomplishments. Unusual effects were also obtained through the use of the "blimp." With photographers aboard, the dirigible made possible something new in motion picture photography.

The historical charge of "Sitting Bull" and his thousands of savages on the little band of soldiers headed by General Custer, and resulting in the famous "Last Stand of General Custer," is said to have been faithfully reproduced by Mr. Neilan and serves as the great dramatic climax to the story. In photographing these scenes, the "blimp" proved of particular advantage in that it allowed the cameramen to float over the action at will.

Marion Fairfax, who has handled all the scripts of the Neilan independent productions since the formation of his own company, has worked for months on the scenario for this new film with the idea of making it her master work. A cast that might well be termed an all-star aggregation includes James Kirkwood, Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley, Noah Beery, Dwight Crittenden, Charles West, Tom Gallery and Priscilla Bonner.

EXHIBITORS who play Goldwyn's production of Basil King's photo-drama of the unseen world, "Earthbound," are themselves breaking records, along with the records which "Earthbound" smashes. The manager of the Alamo theatre, Louisville, Ky., Mr. Dolle, played "Earthbound" for a week at a definite stipulated rental price and without Goldwyn participating in the receipts. The photoplay broke all records for receipts in the history of the Alamo theatre and Mr. Dolle was so gratified with the results that he made out a check for $250 above the rental price and mailed it to Jack Stewart, Cincinnati, manager for Goldwyn.

Delivers Print by Aid of Aeroplane

The Rex Theatre at Claresholm, Can., recently booked "Blind Husbands," Universal's release of the Von Stroheim production, from the exchange at Calgary, Can., one hundred miles distant. Train deliveries, however, were completely disrupted by a severe snow-fall and the roads rendered almost impassable for motor traffic. In the emergency, D. G. Walkley, general manager of Universal's Western Canadian salesdivision, arranged with a local aviator at Calgary to make the delivery of the "Blind Husbands" print to the Rex Theatre at Claresholm. The round trip was made in two hours. Failure to deliver the print by aero would have resulted in eliminating one day's showing of the film.

Bebe Daniels Vehicle Booked for Rialto

Bebe Daniels, starring in "She Couldn't Help It," has been booked by Dr. Riesenfeld for the Rialto theatre for the week of February 20. This is Miss Daniels' third Realart picture and with its appearance at the Rialto a 100 per cent record of Broadway showings for "The Good Little Bad Girl" is maintained. The other two, "You Never Can Tell" and "Oh Lady, Lady," appeared at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres respectively.

"She Couldn't Help It" is an adaptation of Miriam Michelson's popular novel, "In the Bishop's Carriage." The scenarist is Douglas Bronston and the director Major Maurice Campbell. The latter also directed Miss Daniels in her second Realart production, "Oh Lady, Lady."

New Screen News Syndicate Is Formed

Announcement is made that Charles Donald Fox and Charles Read Jones have organized Screen News Syndicate, the principal function of which, according to the statement issued, will be to act as a "central bureau for news of the screen and its players" and to distribute feature stories to publishers.

WALTER S. RAND, who has been sales manager of United Artists Corporation's Los Angeles branch since the organization began its operations, has just received from Hiram Abrams, President of the Company, substantial recognition of his good work. Mr. Rand will hereafter travel the West Coast offices of the Big Four, representing the Home Office. His territory will include Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver Exchanges.

H. D. Buckley, who has been Kansas City sales manager since the organization of the Company, becomes Los Angeles' sales manager.

T. Y. Henry, who has been sales manager at the Denver office from the beginning, has been transferred to the position of sales manager at the Kansas City office.

H. D. Cassidy has been appointed sales manager at the Denver office.

Pattullo With F. P.

The recent signing of George Pattullo, of Saturday Evening Post fame, to write a Paramount Picture for Roscoe Arbuckle, emphasizes the fact that the writer of special articles on technical, semi-technical and political subjects has his place in motion pictures along with the man who devotes himself strictly to fiction.

For while Mr. Pattullo is a most successful writer of short stories—his success in the field of special articles will provide, it is believed, new values that will prove most important to the new art of cinema.

Madge Kennedy Stands 'Em Up in Troy, N. Y.

Madge Kennedy is a sort of Helen of Troy to those modern Trojans who live in Troy, N. Y., for her latest Goldwyn picture, "The Girl with the Jazz Heart" pleased them so much that it kept them in line on the sidewalk to get seats from 2:30 to 9:30 P. M. on the last day of the showing at the American theatre, and showed to S. R. O. throughout the booking, announces Goldwyn. The picture was shown recently at the American theatre.

Mary Beaton Is Called Real Film "Find"

From early glimpses of the finished print of "A Message from Mars," the new Metro production starring Bert Lytell, there is offered ample confirmation of the judgment displayed by Metro officials in casting Mary Louise Beaton in the part of Mrs. Jones. Miss Beaton appeared first for Metro in two of its Americanization pictures, namely "Strangers Beware" and "The Price Mystery," and displayed such unusual talent for the screen as to warrant her selection for an important role in "A Message from Mars."

"Kismet" Scores in Chicago

Makes Great Record at Ziegfeld Theatre Showing

HAVING swept America from East to West and broken records in all the houses in which it has played from the Strand theatre, New York City, to Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Otis Skinner, made a wonderful record for itself in Chicago, where it was shown at the Ziegfeld theatre.

At this house, which is a landmark of Chicago, "Kismet" played to business which completely overflower the theatre. After his opening Roderick Ross, of the Ziegfeld, wired to Robertson-Cole as follows: "'Kismet' went over so big that my only regret is that Ziegfeld theatre is not five times as big. It broke my heart to see the crowds turned away. Got wonderful publicity from all newspapers. Ziegfeld theatre never saw such crowds since it was built. Policemen on the beat had a hard time keeping the automobiles in line. Best wishes."

A few days previous to this Chicago engagement another part of the Middle West registered for "Kismet." At the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, this super-special, based on Mr. Skinner's greatest stage success, proved the big Indianapolis house inadequate. In a wire which he sent to Robertson-Cole, Ralph Lieber said: "We opened today on 'Kismet' and our three thousand seat house was entirely too small to take care of the tremendous crowds. Hundreds were turned away."

Another echo from the Coast was received by Robertson-Cole just as the second month of 1921 was being ushered in. Frank J. Costello, general manager of the Turner and Dahnken Circuit, reported another triumph for "Kismet." It only took the officials of this organization two days to realize that the Otis Skinner picture was an attraction needed over the entire Turner and Dahnken Circuit. Mr. Costello's wire read: "'Kismet' opened Tivoli Sunday, January 30, capacity business. Monday broke all previous house records by two hundred dollars. Audiences delighted with entire show. We have booked our entire circuit on Sunday, Monday business Tivoli."

Further East, in Salt Lake City, Georges Mayne, general manager of the Swanson Theatre Circuit, was finding "Kismet" the greatest attraction in the history of the American theatre. He wrote Robertson-Cole as follows: "Congratulations on your wonderful production 'Kismet.' We played this production week of January 16th, and are pleased to advise you that 'Kismet' established a new record for the American theatre, both as to the gross week's business and individual day records.

"Robertson-Cole deserves a great deal of credit for their fine policy in releasing 'Kismet' to exhibitors."

At about the same time in Pittsburgh the record-breaking super-special attraction was winning out against a handicap of unfavorable weather. In Rowland and Clark houses, where it has been booked, "Kismet" will score most forcibly, if its record at the first house, the Savoy, is considered.

James B. Clark wired Robertson-Cole: "With coldest weather of season ushering in week and rain closing week 'Kismet' shattered all box office records. 'Kismet' being continued for second week at the Savoy theatre. As a business getter it is unparalleled. Congratulations."

Hodkinson Has New Ruling

"Program Will Be Sold in Its Entirety to All Who Desire It"

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has just promulgated a new ruling, which it is believed will interest not only the users of Hodkinson features but exhibitors throughout the country. The ruling is to the effect that hereafter the Hodkinson program will be seld in its entirety to all exhibitors who desire it. The pictures on the Hodkinson program will continue to be sold on the grading which has been applied heretofore.

This, it is stated, has been done in response to a demand by exhibitors who saw a distinct advantage in buying the entire Hodkinson output.

"Exhibitors consider the purchase of the entire Hodkinson program a distinct advantage to them, as the program provides them with a steady supply of quality pictures at reasonable prices," declares a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters. "In this way the frequent saying of Mr. W. W. Hodkinson that his organization is in a position to book every exhibitor according to his full needs is once more fully borne out. Being close to the sources of production at all times, with an accurate appraisal of the quality needs of each theatre owner, the W. W. Hodkinson Organization is in an excellent position to relieve the exhibitor of his booking worries and asure him of his continued independence and to the fullest protection of his investment."

Exhibitors Endorse Metro Week

Officials Expect 7000 Exhibitors Will Participate

WHOLEHEARTED endorsement by the exhibitors of the country of the holding of Metro Week February 27 to March 5 has influenced officials of the company to make it an annual institution in booking, declares a statement from the Metro headquarters.

The recent announcement of the period set aside especially for the exhibitors of Metro pictures only, together with publishing of Metro's national advertising campaign to back it and of the decision of the distributing organization to further support the exhibitor by the issuance free of charge of poster and slides, brought a response from motion picture showmen that even exceeded promises.

The Metro statement declares that from among the 7,000 exhibitors who, is is expected will, between February 27 and March 5 of this year, project upon their screens only Metro pictures there came an immediate influx of hundreds of telegrams and letters, "not only commending the company for the inauguration of Metro Week but also suggesting—and in some instances actually insisting—that this special week be made an annual event," the Metro statement declares.

Remarking the spontaneity of the demand that Metro Week be made a yearly event in the motion picture world, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, said:

"It is a confirmation of our own belief in our productions and a reward for the effort we have put forth to make them the best in the world's market today, to note the heartiness of the exhibitors' reception of Metro Week and the further and even more gratifying evidence of the appreciation of the theatre owners and managers in their expression of desire to have the week not a thing of this year only but of every year."

The company is making arrangements now for the increasing of its personnel to handle the exceptionally heavy business before and during Metro Week. It is expected that every one of the chain of Metro exchanges throughout the country will increase its staff to a size capable of carrying on the multitude of details incident to this special period. With an extraordinary number of prints of pictures in use the task of keeping them, in this week of uncommon stress of activity, in the first-class condition Metro insists on, is in itself a tremendous problem. A score of others, equally as vital, makes it an obvious necessity that emergency methods be employed in meeting them successfully.

No definite date has as yet been made public regarding the initiation of the national advertising campaign which will precede and support Metro Week during the entire stretch of time, but it is understood that the wholesale display of Metro announcements will break forth in dailies covering every community in the country well before the beginning of that week. In addition to this, slides for flashing on the screen of every theatre in the United States will be ready for distribution; and billboard paper to advertise whatever attractions exhibitors may choose from those Metro has released during the last eighteen months, will be available to the exhibitors without cost.

Lesser Denies "Depression"

Industry Simply Passing Through State of Readjustment, He Says

IRVING M. LESSER arrived in Los Angeles after having spent several months in New York City. Mr. Lesser is prepared to make a fight against the "depressed condition of the film industry" propaganda which has been circulated both in Eastern and Western film circles.

According to Lesser, the motion picture industry is simply passing through a state of readjustment—something that every standard industry has or will do. That everything is quickly working to an advantageous point of harmony for all concerned, is firmly believed by this producer.

"I do not feel any fear concerning the future of the picture world," says Mr. Lesser. "I am a producer and am producing at the present time in Los Angeles. I will continue to produce in Los Angeles. I have just completed 'Peck's Bad Boy,' a five-reel feature starring Jackie Coogan. Within a very short space of time, I will add two additional producing units under my banner. These also will be in Los Angeles," added Lesser.

According to this film executive, there is little need of "shelving" film products if these pictures are up to standard.

"There is a big future in store for independent producers," states Mr. Lesser, and he goes further in saying that our big national distributing organizations are willing to consummate contracts on independently produced products if they are worthy subjects.

"Recently," says Lesser, "several people now producing films in the West have issued statements that they will, in the future, confine their production efforts to the East—that the public desire new environments and faces on the silver sheet." According to Lesser, none of the big stars whom we all look upon with dignity and whose activities have put the motion picture industry on the pedestal it now rests on, have any thought of going Eastward for productions. Among these are mentioned names such as Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Fickford, Charles Ray, Charles Chaplin, and many others.

Lesser also mentions the fact that, within the past few weeks, not less than ten new picture studios have been built or are at the present time being erected.

Johnny Hines at Loew Cleveland Opening

Johnny Hines, star in the "Torchy Comedies" made from the stories by Sewell Ford and released through Educational Exchanges, had the honor of being the only motion picture player invited to appear at the opening of Loew's magnificent new Park Theatre in Cleveland, O. according to a statment from Educational's headquarters. Inasmuch as the Loew houses in Cleveland play all of the Torchy Comedies arrangements were made to have him appear. The park seats 3,800

Since the other Loew theatres in Cleveland play all Torchy Comedies promptly on schedule it was necessary to permit a pre-release showing of "Torchy's Night Hood."

Hines tour occupied three weeks, during which he visited the Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburgh territories, appearing in the average of six theatres a day. Many requests were received from houses in other territories, but the star was compelled to return to New York to start work on the tenth of the series.

Arthur Zellner Will Go to Coast Soon

Arthur Zellner, Metro scenario writer, and for the last several months assistant to Maxwell Karger at the company's Sixty-First Street studios in New York will leave for Hollywood within a fortnight to join the colony of scenarists.

Since his appointment last September to assist Mr. Karger in the production of special pictures at the Eastern plant, Mr. Zellner has done the double duty of this work and of writing continuity for several important screen offerings.

St. Louis Exchange of Pioneer Opens

Appropriate ceremonies marked the opening of the new St. Louis Exchange of the Pioneer Film Corporation, a few days ago. The exchange is located at 3435 Olive street and is in charge of Thomas Leonard, who needs no introduction to exhibitors in his territory.

Rothacker Commended for "Fine Work"

"Such letters are certainly appreciated," replied Watterson R. Rothacker to Jay Emanuel, of Royal Pictures. Mr. Emanuel had written this letter: "I wish to take this means of complimenting you upon the extremely fine work you turned out in printing and developing of the picture 'Isobel' or 'The Trail's End.'

"The work in this was absolutely a revelation to me, as I had seen the picture, previous to the final touches, and I cannot help but tell you that wherever I have shown this picture, the exhibitor was most loud in his praise for the wonderful work which you turned out on this picture. I feel certain it will help a great deal in making this picture more popular."

Bert Lytell Back from New England Tour

Following cordial receptions by Massachusetts and Rhode Island State and city executives, Bert Lytell returned recently at Metro's New York studios on West Sixty-first street in time to begin work on "The Man Who," the next Bert Lytell picture to be made by Metro under the personal direction of Maxwell Karger.

Mr. Lytell's recent trip to Rhode Island and Massachusetts suggested something after the order of a triumphantal entry into the New England States, states Metro, for following his reception by a large delegation of New England exhibitors, the Metro star met and was entertained by the governors of the two respective states, as well as the mayor and city officials of Boston and Providence.

Carmel Myers at Work on New Picture

Production has been started at Universal City on "The Dangerous Moment," a dramatic story of Greenwich Village, with Carmel Myers in the starring role.

The story was written from the police records of New York City by Douglas Doty, formerly editor of the Cosmopolitan magazine, who adhered closely to the facts and incidents in the original case, a celebrated homicide mystery. It was adapted to the screen by Wallace Clifton and is being directed by Marcel de Sano.

Filming F. Hopkinson Smith's Novel

The suggestion of playgoers that Gladys Walton be starred in a modern screen version of "A Kentucky Cinderella," the widely read novel by F. Hopkinson Smith, is being followed, Universal reports. Miss Walton has begun work on the story under the direction of Harry Harris and while it will be released as "Li'l' Miss Merridew" it will be based upon the popular novel and follow the theme in all the romantically dramatic incidents which have endeared the work to the public.

Moving Into New Headquarters

ROBERTSON-COLE is the recipient of hundreds of wires and letters of congratulation on its removal to its new home, 723 7th Avenue New York City. The process of arranging offices in the new thirteen story home office building is now completed and the company, during the past week, has been receiving countless friends in the various lines of motion picture work who have united in congratulating it upon the appearance and practicability of the new structure. Work on the new structure was begun late last spring. Of the thirteen floors in the building, six are occupied by Robertson-Cole. The rest will be rented to various commercial concerns which are now bidding for space.

Robertson-Cole occupies the building as follows: On the eighth floor is situated the Robertson-Cole New York Exchange which distributes film for this territory. On the ninth floor are situated various clerical offices. The tenth floor is devoted to the executive offices including those of R. S. Cole, head of the organization, and of A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. On the eleventh floor are situated the Robertson Cole Distributing Corporation offices, and offices of the publicity department and those of the auditing department.

On the twelfth floor the foreign department of Roberston-Cole has its offices. On the Seventh Avenue side of this floor are situated two theatres where motion pictures will be projected for the pleasure of buyers and for the purposes of the executive officers. The thirteenth floor is devoted to a stock department where supplies and accessories of all sorts are stored.

New Robertson-Cole building, corner of 48th St. and Seventh Ave., New York

Three of the latest high speed passenger elevators serve the building. They are situated on the north side and are reached through the Seventh Avenue entrance. The freight elevator is situated on the east side of the building and is reached through the Forty-eighth Street entrance.

For many months, in fact throughout its existence, Robertson-Cole has been forced to struggle under the handicap of certain home office limitations as regards space and situation. These are removed through the occupation of the new building, and the distributing company feels that it will be enabled hereby in the future to give even better service to exhibitors all over the country. It will be able to concentrate directly and solely on the business of distributing the best possible pictures now that it occupies its own home office building. The plans were laid out with the needs of the company in mind, and it will be ideally situated henceforth to give a maximum service to the exhibitors who are playing its pictures. The New York Exchange in particular will be better equipped henceforth to care for the needs of its extensive patronage.

The New Robertson-Cole building is entirely fireproof. Its materials were concrete, steel and other building metals. Every precaution known to modern building was taken to make it safe. There is a universal sprinkler system and the film vaults are surrounded by a special reinforcement which renders them absolutely impervious to fire.

Educational Gets New Series

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Corporation of America, this week authorized the announcement that a contract has been signed with Master Film, Inc., whereby Educational acquired a second series of Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines. This will be the second year of the distribution of these pictures through Educational Exchanges.

The current February Release is "Torchy's Night Hood," the eighth of the series while the ninth and March release "Torchy's Big Lead" has already been delivered to Educational. Work has been completed on the tenth picture which completes the first contract and on April 1 initial delivery under the second contract for twelve pictures will be made. The schedule is so arranged that Educational will have all prints six or seven weeks ahead of release schedule, assuring the fullest service to exhibitors.

According to Educational the new contract calls for the expenditure of larger sums on the production of these comedies than in the past. Johnny Hines gave up a lucrative stardom in musical comedy to become associated with Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films in making these pictures, and has not appeared on the stage for the past year. The new contract calls for his exclusive service. Master Films controls the entire screen right to the Sewell Ford stories through the publishers, E. J. Clode.

A late photograph of Johnny Hines, star of the Torchy comedies, produced by Masterfilms and released by Educational

The initial general release of "Torchy," the first of the series, was made through Educational Exchanges July 11th, though it had been given a pre-release showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, some weeks previously. It was followed by "Torchy Comes Through," "Torchy in High," "Torchy's Millions," "Torchy Turns Cupid," "Torchy's Double Triumph" and "Torchy Mixes In."

"These pictures have been particularly pleasing to us because each release has shown a considerable gain over the previous one, says a statement from Educational. We believe that there is no series of pictures that has proven so well its cumulative power. From practically every city where they have been shown the same report comes. In many cases where a circuit first booked the pictures in smaller theatres they have been transferred to the largest in the city, and have been many cases where they have been played simultaneously for week's runs at two theatres in the same city. The standard and appeal of Torchy Comedies has been greatly established. Our plans for the future assure that they will have greater audience and box office appeal."

"We selected Educational to distribute our pictures," says Charles C. Burr of Master Films, "because we believed our pictures were unique. We recognized Educational as the real specialists in the short subject field.

Has Many Exploitation Angles

So Declare R-C Executives About "Seven Years Bad Luck"

"SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK," with Max Linder, which Robertson-Cole is shortly to release as a super-special production, lends itself most admirably to exploitation of all sorts, and of this fact full advantage is taken in the elaborate advertising campaign which the distributing company has just issued on this subject.

In the very large press book which has just been published, exploitation taks up three full pages, the first two of which are headed "Turning Broken Mirrors Into Horse Shoes." Around this title are worked all manner of humorous figures illustratig the familiar articles of every-day life which are linked with superstition, and which are concerned with the story. These include looking glasses, shoes, cats, the numeral "13," umbrellas, salt shakers, pen and ink, horse shoes, the numeral "7," hair pins and other articles. At the bottom of these two opening exploitation pages is the line "Five Thousand Funny Feet," over which funny bugs with innumerable feet are walking.

On these pages are set forth a great variety of teaser campaigns, tie-ups, stunts of all sorts and advertisements which may be used by the enterprising exhibitor to draw in the direction of his theatre much additional business. For instance, there is the "Horseshoe Matinee." Says the exploitation book: "For your opening advertise a 'Horseshoe Matinee.' Advertise that you will pay the war tax for all children who bring a horseshoe to your theatre for this matinee. For the average exhibitor this would mean that he would get a horseshoe for each two or three cents he expends. This is very cheap advertising when you figure that these horseshoes will be an extremely valuable lobby display, and when they are of no further value than can be sold as old iron to the junkman for very little less than what they cost. In fact, with the present high price of old iron it is quite likely that some exhibitors will show an actual profit."

Another clever scheme is worked around the idea that the audiences which see "Seven Years' Bad Luck" will laugh so strenuously that they will burst buttons off their clothing. "Advertise," says the press book, "that you have engaged tailors and seamstresses who will be in atendance at all performances to sew on burst buttons. Follow this ad up with another pleading with all patrons of your theatre to bring additional supplies of buttons with them as your seamstresses and tailors have run out of stock. Another variation would be to advertise that your cleaners picked up so many hundred buttons after the day's showing and these buttons will be returned to the original owners on application. Add to this a big box of buttons in your lobby with a sign:

"These buttons have been burst from the clothing of the patrons who have seen 'Seven Years' Bad Luck.' Do any of them belong to you? If so, claim them at the box office. To all intending patrons we solemnly warn of the necessity of Loosening Up."

The press book pictures a good street stunt which utilizes a truck upon which is mounted a large broken mirror and a black cat which are pushed along the street by a grotesquely dressed man. On a sign placed on the truck is printed, "If You Think This Is Funny, See 'Seven Years' Bad Luck,' with Max Linder, at the ——— Theatre, and Have a Thousand More Laughs."

Atherton Story Released Soon

THE first story written directly for the screen by Gertrude Atherton, produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation under the title of "Don't Neglect Your Wife," is regarded so highly by Goldwyn officials that it has been decided to release it immediately, thereby giving exhibitors an assured success with which to follow the early pictures in Goldwyn's fourth year group. Particular interest centers in this production in that it marks the fulfillment of Goldwyn's faith in the policy of having the foremost writers of the country devote their energies to the creation of motion picture stories. Also, it is interesting to note that Mrs. Atherton remained at the Goldwyn Culver City studios during the filming of her photoplay and collaborated with Director Wallace Worsley on the production from the writing of the continuity to the final editing.

"Don't Neglect Your Wife" is said to be an unusual photoplay, in theme, in treatment and in setting. Its action takes place in the best social circles of San Francisco, ending in what used to be the infamous Five Point section of New York City. Dr. Howard Talbot of the Southern aristocracy of an earlier period in San Francisco, brought his beautiful Boston bride to a fine residence hotel in the Golden Gate city and then neglected her for his club life. An innocent friendship with a rising newspaper man, Langdon Masters, ripened into love—a love which they decided should be repressed, but scandal got busy and the neglectful husband decides that, to save his wife, Masters must give up his promising career and leave the city. He goes to New York and is there drinking himself to death in the lowest haunts of vice and crime, when Mrs. Talbot, at last freed by her husband, arrives and rescues him.

The old Five Points section of New York was built on the studio lot at Culver City with the utmost fidelity. Old prints of the section as it then appeared were obtained from the New York Historical Society and were copied, detail by detail, by Cedric Gibbons, Goldwyn's art director, and his staff.

Lewis S. Stone and Mabel Julienne Scott head the cast.

"Without Limit" Wins Official's O. K.

Final cutting and titling of "Without Limit," the George D. Baker production for S-L (Sawyer and Lubin) Pictures, which has just been completed, in Metro's New York studios, is now finished, and the picture was given a recent special showing before Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and other officials.

Mr. Rowland pronounced himself as highly pleased with the picture, which Metro will release in the fairly near future. "Without Limit" was adapted to the screen from Calvin Johnston's story, "Temple Dusk" in The Saturday Evening Post. In considering the difficulties of transferring the story to the silversheet, Mr. Rowland announced that the task, in his opinion, had been creditably performed.

"A Small Town Idol" Comedy Spectacle

In his six-reel comedy-drama, "A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett has entered the ranks of the creators of biggest spectacles according to a report from the Sennett Coast headquarters. One scene involving the presence of more than five hundred girls and an army of comedians and supernumeraries, he has called, "New Year's Eve in Babylon" and it is declaared to be a triumph of artistic skill.

At the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, with prices ranging from fifty-five cents to $1.50, all records of that picture playhouse are being shattered.

T. Daniel Frawley Added to Metro Staff

T. Daniel Frawley, who has staged some of the most notable successes of the speaking stage in the last quarter of the century, has become a member of Metro's West Coast directorial staff.

Mr. Frawley, who just has returned from an extended stay in the Orient, joined Bayard Veiller's colony of celebrities in the company's Garden Court studio building and will undertake the study of film-making at close range.

A NOTABLE chapter in the history of motion pictures was written this week when it was announced that Curator G. H. Sherwood of the American Museum of Natural History, had purchased from Educational Films Corporation principal portions of "The Race of the Age," the exclusive picture of Man o' War's victory over Sir Barton at Windsor, Ont. The print will be preserved for all time in the vaults of the museum so that generations yet to come will be able to see the picture.

In addition to this, "The Race of the Age" was shown to the trustees of the museum at their meeting on February 7.

Equipment Damaged by Snow Avalanche

A severe blizzard, which recently isolated the Yosemite valley, did many hundreds of dollars damage to the equipment of a Universal company under the direction of Robert Thornby, who was in the valley filming scenes for "The Magnificent Brute," Frank Mayo's next feature.

When the blizzard first broke, Thornby set his cameramen to work, taking snow scenes such as have rarely been filmed before. A small avalanche put an end to the snow scenes, however when a slide of earth, rock and snow partially buried the company, ruining much of the lighting equipment.

"Outside the Law" in Demand

Is Booked in Almost Every City of the U. S., Is Report

"OUTSIDE THE LAW," the new Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean, already has been booked in almost every city in the United States, so great has been the demand for it on the part of first run exhibitors, is the statement of Mr. H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal.

Interviewed upon his return from a sales conference of Universal exchange heads at Cincinnati several days ago, Mr. Berman admitted that there is a greater demand for "Outside the Law" than for any Universal picture ever released.

"Although the picture was not officially released until January 17," said the Universal sales chief, "we already have several hundred bookings, most of which are for from four days to a week, and many of which are for two weeks. The picture just completed a five week run in the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, which set a record in Universal picture success. The picture played to packed houses for practically all of the thirty-five days of the run.

"We have been greatly surprised in the Universal sales force, by the unusual demand for 'Outside the Law,' on the part of exhibitors who have had no chance to see it run off. It is our belief that this demand has been prompted by the unusually favorable reviews and criticisms by 'Outside the Law' in the trade journals and newspapers.

"The unusual amount of advance bookings also has resulted, I am convinced, from the extensive exploitation campaign inaugurated by our company, and which has worked its way down through the exchanges and local publicity men, so that it now is directly benefiting the exhibitor.

"This campaign is calculated to help exhibitors sell 'Outside the Law' to their patrons. J. H. Mayer, of our Exploitation Department, now is in Akron, O., aiding the management of the Allen theatre in the local campaign for the Dean picture. Other exploitation men are in other sections of the country, giving direct aid to exhibitors.

"Universal exchange managers from the Middle West, whom I met in Cincinnati early this week, for an important conference on our plans for next season, were highly enthusiastic about 'Outside the Law' and assured me that they only were echoing the expressions and enthusiasm of their exhibitor-patrons.

"Not only the home office, but the various Universal exchanges have been flooded by letters of commendation on the new Universal-Jewel, in which great credit has been given to Miss Dean and to Tod Browning, the author and director of the photo-drama. It seems to be the concensus of opinion that Browning, with the help of Miss Dean and Lon Chaney, whose remarkable portrayal, 'Black Mike' is one of the events of the screen year, has made the best underworld melodrama ever filmed."

Gloria Swanson to Be Starred

Paramount Will Star Her in "The Great Moment"

WITHIN the next week the word "Camera," ordered by Director Sam Wood, at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, will start the taking of the initial scene for "The Great Moment," the first production in which Gloria Swanson, for several years a leading player in Cecil B. DeMille's special production, will appear as a Paramount star.

Following her introduction into the film world in comedies, Miss Swanson was featured by Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of Paramount Pictures, in a series of his personally directed super-specials. The first of these was "Don't Change Your Husband," in which Miss Swanson played the leading feminine role of Leila Porter. This was followed by another success, "For Better, For Worse," in which Miss Swanson played Sylvia Norcross.

The promise given by this star in the first two productions was amply fulfilled when the release of Cecil B. DeMille's stupendous "Male and Female," took place, for few screen followers who saw the production have ever forgotten Miss Swanson's keen appreciation of the part of Lady Mary Lasenby in that momentous production.

At the time the picture appeared it was freely predicted that she would soon be listed on the constellation of Paramount stars; but it was destined that she was to appear as a featured player in two more super-specials before that event came to pass.

Both of these productions, it happened, only served to evidence still further her right to stardom and enhance her popularity with the film public. They were: "Why Change Your Wife?" in which Miss Swanson took the role of Beth Gordon, and "Something to Think About," in which she played the part of Ruth Anderson. Like the previous productions in which she was featured, these were directed by Cecil B. DeMille.

In making her bid for stellar honors Miss Swanson will have the advantage of an excellent script written especially for her by Elinor Glyn, the noted English novelist who came to America for the express purpose of writing "originals" for Paramount. Miss Glyn has co-operated throughout the preparation of the continuity with Monte M. Katterjohn, who prepared the film form. Sam Wood, who will direct, has an enviable reputation as a master of technique and an appreciation of a story's possibilities.

Metro Buys Stage Success

Pays Quarter of a Million for Half Interest World Rights "Turn to Right"

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announced this week that it has purchased from John Golden one half interest in the world's screen rights to "Turn to the Right," by Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard, for a quarter of a million. Golden retains a half interest.

Negotiations for the disposal of this record-breaking stage success have been in progress, it is understood, for more than two years, and offers were made not only by Metro but by every other company of importance, according to the Metro-statement.

The picture production will be made and distributed by Metro, and presented on the screen by John Golden and Marcus Loew. The making of the picture will be supervised personally by Winchell Smith, the American playwright.

The production will be made at Metro's Western and Eastern studios, and at the estate of Mr. Smith, at Farmington, Conn. This last location will be used for the celebration peach orchard scenes. It so happens that Mr. Smith's country place has just such an orchard and old-fashioned house as that he presented in "Turn to the Right." When given at the Gaiety theatre a few seasons ago "Turn to the Right" broke all records for box office returns. Its run totaled 452 days.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, made the following comment upon the announcement of conclusion of negotiations with Mr. Golden.

"We're doing what we said we'd do; buying, at no matter what figure, the best in the world for the stories for Metro pictures. In obtaining 'Turn to the Right' we believe we have something that will do on the screen what the original play did on the stage: absolutely shatter all previous records."

New Frederick Production

"Roads of Destiny" to Follow Up Success of Star in "Madame X"

FOLLOWING the success of "Madam X," Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is releasing another drama in which Miss Frederick is the star. The new release, that will make a follow-up for exhibitors who have found "Madame X" to be a good drawing card, is "Roads of Destiny," an adaptation of Channing Pollock's stage success, which, in turn, was suggested by the O. Henry story of the same name. With "Madame X" still fresh in the minds of motion picture audiences, the exploitation possibilities of "Roads of Destiny" may be realized to the full, said Goldwyn.

From all parts of the country Goldwyn states that it is receiving reports of new records established by "Madame X" and it is generally conceded that never in her career as a screen star has Miss Frederick given an emotional performance of such compelling force. In "Roads of Destiny" she has a role fully on a par with her characterization in Alexandre Bisson's drama.

Points to be played, says Goldwyn, up are the engrossing story, the gripping characterization, the marvelous acting of the star and the supporting cast, the fascinating twists and turns of the action, the question of destiny, "can a man overcome his fate, or is the unwritten word unescapable?" the powerful appeal to women, and that everyone who enjoyed "Madame X" will find an equally stirring drama in "The Roads of Destiny."

English Producer Is Here

George Clark, Whose Pictures Are Released by Stoll, Here on Visit

GEORGE CLARK, president of the George Clark Productions, arrived in New York from England on the "Aquitania" on January 30th. He came to this country for a short stay during which he has planned to look over the American field, with a view to becoming better acquainted with conditions here, and to inaugurate a campaign on behalf of his two stars, Ivy Duke and Guy Newall.

The George Clark Productions are being released in this country by the Stoll Film Corporation of America, and it is at the latter's main offices at 130 West Forty-sixth Street, New York, that Mr. Clark is making his headquarters.

Two of the Clark productions, "Squandered Lives" and "The Lure of Crooning Water" have been released, and have won high commendation. Others which will follow are: "Testimony," "The Garden of Resurrection," and "The Persistent Lovers."

According to Mr. Clark, who was preceded to this country by his publicity representative, Leila Lewis, Miss Duke and Mr. Newall, because of their clear lead among British Film Players, have been generally nicknamed the "English Mary and Doug." The two stars are extremely versatile and talented, for Miss Duke, in addition to playing the female lead, reads and selects the stories for production, while Mr. Newall doubles up by writing the scenario, and directing the production, besides holding down the featured man's part.

George Clark and Guy Newall started the corporation following a friendship which had sprung up between the men during the war, when they were both attached to an anti-aircraft defense station in England.

"The Furnace" Wins Praise

Realart's Headquarters Reports Exhibitor Endorsements Continue

THE Realart headquarters reports that exhibitor endorsements for its release, "The Furnace," continue to arrive and submits the following letter from C. S. Musser of the Opera House, Shepherdstown, W. Va., as typical of the comments received from bookers of this William D. Taylor production:

"Book it, see it, advertise it and then reap the benefit of the word-of-mouth advertising that few pictures create. 'The Furnace' is a great picture and the work of Agnes Ayres is truly remarkable," writes Mr. Musser. "Entire cast is good with special mention of Milton Sills and Theodore Roberts. Every exhibitor ought for his own benefit to book this picture; he should see it screened and then with his knowledge of it go out and advertise it like the devil. It is too good a picture to let slip by without strong advertising. Book it to benefit from the word-of-mouth advertising that but few pictures create."

W. C. Clavier, of the Liberty theatre, Fargo, S. D., used teaser advertisements on the picture a week before it was shown at his theatre. He writes: "Everyone who saw it was more than pleased. Personally I think it the most elaborate picture we ever screened and we have been in the business for twelve years. We can cheerfully recommend it to any exhibitor who wishes a high class entertainment."

One exploitation stunt creating considerable comment was employed by M. Melincoff of the Capitol theatre, Lynn, Mass. He cut out some cardboard butterflies, painted them and hung them from his marquis where they fluttered in the wind. He also used additional advertising space in the newspapers in announcing the picture. Concerning "The Furnace" he says significantly:

"This is the first time we have run a full week on any picture."

Acord to Start New Serial

Star in "White Horseman"; Albert Russell to Be Director

THE return to Universal City of Art Acord, star of "The Moon Riders," to appear in a forthcoming serial, "The White Horseman," is announced by the Universal's home office. The popular cowboy star will have for a director Albert Russell, under whose supervision Acord's previous chaptered photo-drama was filmed.

"Acord has been training for several weeks—he has been conscientiously conditioning himself as preparation for the dare-devil stunts which he will be called upon to perform—and he is now in perfect trim," declares the statement from Universal's New York headquarters.

Throughout the eighteen episodes there promises to be no let-up in the succession of thrills and suspense, which will mark 'The White Horseman' as the superlative in serials — hazardous feats, hair-breadth escapes and perilous stunts, aplenty, to assure the success of Art Acord's latest effort. The story of the serial deals with the attempts of several contending factions to obtain control of a chain of valuable opal mines formerly operated by a tribe of now-extinct Indians and now in possession of a young westerner, Allen, played by Acord.

F. B. WARREN, general manager of distribution of Associated Producers, Inc., announced this week the following changes in Associated Producers' selling organization:

William H. Jenner, who, since the formation of Associated Producers, has been its resident manager in Boston, becomes Western District Manager with headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Jenner is succeeded in Boston by J. A. McConville. Walter R. Liebmann has been appointed Resident Manager in Atlanta. He succeeds Frank L. Hudson.

Mr. Jenner, who is the first district manager to be appointed by Mr. Warren, was, until he resigned to become Boston manager for Associated Producers, manager for United Artists in Boston. Previous to that time he was for two years Boston Manager for Goldwyn. Mr. McConville, who succeeds Mr. Jenner in Boston, was formerly assistant manager of the Boston office of Paramount.

Donald Crisp Will Do Hamilton Story

Donald Crisp's next production for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers will be an adaptation of the popular novel by Cosmo Hamilton, "The Princess of New York," and it will have a special interest for both American and English audiences, in view of the international character of the book and the production, declares a statement from Paramount headquarters.

Furthermore, Donald Crisp, his assistant, Claude H. Mitchell, and David Powell, who is to play the hero, are all three British born, and have had long experience of the film industry in the States. The heroine is to be played by Mary Glynne, one of the most charming and brilliant of the younger generation of British actresses.

Southern Exhib Praises "Forbidden Fruit"

If Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "Forbidden Fruit," is not shown in every important theatre in the South, it will not be the fault of Charles W. Picquet manager of the Carolina theatre, Pinehurst, N. C. He says:

"I screened 'Forbidden Fruit' for a jury of twelve blase New Yorkers, after midnight and with no musical accompaniment, and I have never seen such unbounded enthusiasm in a group of such people, and a picture that will stand that test is some picture.

"I am paying the highest price for it that I ever paid for a production which means, with my limited capacity and a limited number of winter guests to draw from, that I have no thought of profit. I am proud of the opportunity of showing such a picture and I consider it will give my house a standing and a prestige that it could attain in no other way."

Hayakawa Seen at the Strand

SESSUE HAYAKAWA'S appearance in "The First Born" at the Strand on Broadway, New York, was hailed by the New York City dailies with enthusiasm. Almost without exception they devoted leading space in their review columns to criticisms of "The First Born," and many gave the review a separate caption, contrary to usual procedure.

"The First Born" is based on a stage play by Francis Powers, in which that well-known actor played the leading part. Hayakawa always cherished a desire to play the role, and chose it for the initial one of his new pictures. The story is that of a young boatman who loves a girl along the Hoang-Ho, in China, only to lose her to a "picture bride" agent, who sells her in America. Later, following her there, the hero finds her after he has had a son by another woman. How he loses this child in tragic manner, and becomes reunited with his first love is dramatically told.

The distinguished critic Alan Dale, of the New York American, paid a most glowing tribute to the acting of Hayakawa in his criticism, which was nearly one column in length.

In part he said: "'The First Born' was designed primarily to set forth the peculiarly graphic emotional power of that wonderful actor, Sessue Hayakawa. Often I have wished that Sessue could speak, or that at least I could hear his voice. He has all the silently sinister actors of the speaking stage beaten in every direction. He has poise, his awe-inspiring eyes render mere speech unnecessary. His facial expressions are quite extraordinary. In his way, he is absolutely unique.

"What actor of the stage or screen could get away with such incidents as Sessue vanquished, standing for long periods with the dead body of a child in his arms? Yet there was nothing maudlin in anything that Hayakawa did. It was eminently impressive, artistically perfect, and worthy of the highest praise. In fact, it would pay many stage stars to watch this picture, and study the tremendously stirring expressions stamped upon Sessue's face. There are several closeups that are extraordinarily gripping. The eyes will haunt you; the terrific tragedy of the man's out-look will register in your memory. There is nothing trivial or banal about the acting of Sessue Hayakawa. Such dramatic work gives dignity to the screen."

The Sun, in a leading article commented: "The earthquake shook loose from San Francisco most of the landmarks of Chinatown so graphically and faithfully limned in 'The First Born' at the Strand this week, but it would take more than an earthquake to shake from the mind the impression left by the finished and poignant acting of Sessue Hayakawa. As the simple, kindly coolie boatman from the Hoang-Ho who exacts vengeance on the Chinese merchant who enslaved his wife—his second love—and his first born son, Hayakawa surpasses many an American actor, achieving his effects without requiring, as they so often do, a gutta percha face. In his tender passages with his little son he makes one realize as though anew that emotion lurks behind the maskline face of an Oriental, and in his climatic moment of vengeful triumph over his persecutor he silently sounds the high C of emotional acting. Helen Jerome Eddy, Marie Pavis and "Sunny Boy" Warde are his aid and comfort, and Colin Campbell has directed a most ambitious and praiseworthy production by Robertson-Cole in a manner that makes one glad one has managed to live through so many problem plays to see something like this."

Subtlety of Appeal Required

Appeal of Physical Motion on Wane Says Ballin

MR. HUGO BALLIN, who has just finished his modernized version of "East Lynne," for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, believes that the stress of physical acting and indeed the whole physical element in the production of motion pictures has reached its peak and that the public are slowly but surely turning away from this style of entertainment, which at its best is often crude and phimitive. Mr. Ballin says:

"I believe the time has come when we must re-adjust the standards of screen values. Because motion on the screen was a sentimental novelty we suffered much from exaggerated motion in the early days of the industry. Indeed we all remember that the first motion pictures aimed at nothing more than the reproduction of motion as such and that to be sure was novel and startling enough. We had galloping horses, express trains, the flight of birds, athletic and gymnastic exercises,—in short all those activities which either consisted wholly of motion or accentuated motion.

"It was but natural for us to import this tendency to emphasize motion into our early screen drama—a fact which to my mind accounts quite fully for the immense and sustained popularity of so-called 'Westerns.' From time to time we attempted something of the subtler type. When we started to translate popular fiction into the vocabulary of the screen we began to realize that the over-emphasis of motion was a fatal defect. We all remember that at one time the foreign pictures, especially the picture of Latin or to be specific of French origin had a tremendous vogue. Ten years ago the popularity of the foreign picture reached its height. Patrons still looked for plenty of motion, almost for its own sake. From that day forward, i.e., from 1911, the foreign made picture began to decline and while in 1909 and 1910 at least one-half of the average American motion picture programs consisted of pictures of foreign origin, in 1915 the foreign made picture represented a negligible quantity.

"This fact can be explained only in one way,—the people who patronized the motion pictures had become tired of the mere novelty of motion and desired something more subtle and refined. The American producer was quick to sense this popular demand and by responding to it reduced the foreign picture to insignificance. I believe that we are still in the initial stage of this revulsion from the over-emphasis of motion. We have, I believe, now arrived at a point where the majority of our patrons enjoy a picture in proportion to the subtlety of its appeal.

"This means above all things a profound change in the nature and quality of acting before the camera and likewise in the nature and quality of the successful director. Pathos and atmosphere today count for more than ever in the history of motion pictures. Beauty and lavish settings have become factors.

Conditions Favor Serials

Pathe Investigates Business Conditions as They Apply to Serials

A SEARCHING investigation of general business conditions as they apply in particular to photoplay serials has failed to reveal any evidence in support of recent but fast-fading opinions of an "all pervading business depression." It now becomes known that such a survey, completed a short time ago by Pathe, not only refused results indicative of existing or threatened depression but offered the most emphatic encouragements of the elaborate serial program mapped out by Pathe last summer for 1921.

The serial producing and releasing plans therefore will be carried out to the letter by Pathe and with renewed confidence in the outcome of a schedule based on more extensive lines with regard to episode productions. The quality of production displayed in the first two releases in 1921, "Double Adventure" with Charles Hutchison, and "The Avenging Arrow" starring Ruth Roland will be standard for the serial offerings of the year.

In a mass of material obtained by Pathe from exhibitors, whose experiences with serials within recent times are conducive to the optimism felt by the Pathe serial sales department, are found many expressions direct from the box office which leave little doubt of the sustained popularity of the episode film.

Three of Pathe's serials which attained great popular success last year are "Ruth of the Rockies," "The Phantom Foe" and "Daredevil Jack." Very recent accomplishments of these pictures show that the success they registered at the time of release has not suffered any depression up to the present. At the Rex and Capital Theatres, Eugene, Oregon, the Ruth Roland vehicle has just completed a remarkably successful run.

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE, director of "The Stealers," the famous Robertson-Cole super-special, which has achieved such wide success in all parts of the United States, and of "What's A Wife Worth?" another super-special which is to be released, has returned to the Coast, where he has started work on a third production which will be completed several months hence.

Mr. Cabanne wrote the story which he imparted to the Robertson-Cole executive staff recently, and which won the approval of the experts who passed upon it from standpoints of box office appeal, exploitation possibilities, and artistic and dramatic merits. Mr. Cabanne is now at work obtaining for the screen enactment of his remarkable story a distinguished cast.

He has in mind one of the most beautiful spots on the Western Coast, where he will obtain his exteriors, while his interior settings will be made in the Robertson-Cole studios at Hollywood.

Included in the cast of "What's A Wife Worth?" are Casson Ferguson, Alex Francis, Howard Gaye, Virginia Caldwell, Ruth Rennick, Cora Drew and a number of others, including an infant in arms. The scenes are laid in a typical American town of today, and the situations are so familiar and natural as to have instant appeal with audiences of all sorts. Robertson-Cole publicity forces are now at work on a complete exploitation and advertising campaign for "What's A Wife Worth?" which will put the exhibitor in position to reap ample profits from it.

Comedy Output Increased

Four Comedy Companies Busy at Present Time at Universal City

UNIVERSAL recently has increased its short comedy output by several hundred percent, reports from Universal City indicate. Instead of one-reel Star comedy which heretofore has figured in the Universal weekly schedule of releases, four comedies now are under way at Universal City.

A growing demand for short and meritorious comedies is being discovered by film salesmen in almost all parts of the United States, it is asserted by the heads of the Universal sales force.

Universal's first move to build up its comedy output was the installation of a new chief of serial and short stuff scenarios. He is William Lord Wright, well known as an author of books on the motion picture. He has had a varied experience in the film game, including editorial work on trade papers.

A new comedy unit was organized with William Beaudine at its head, as supervisor and director, aided by Frank Roland Conklin, writer, and W. Scott Darling, scenarist. These men formerly were with Sennett comedies.

The new two-reelers being made by Lyons and Moran, also are an added feature to the Universal comedy program, while Joe Martin, the clever orang-outang screen star, is again before the Universal camera for a series of short comedies.

Officials at Universal City also have obtained the services of Ward Hayes, widely known as a director of comedy reels. During his experience with the megaphone he has directed for such companies as Triangle, Sennett, Christie, Nation and the Special Pictures Corporation. He now is directing Billy Fletcher in one-reelers. His first comedy for Universal will be called "All at Sea."

Metro Re-Signs Viola Dana

Is Coming East for Vacation; New York "Is a Closed Book to Her"

AFTER renewing her contract with Metro for a term of years, Viola Dana, whose most popular film production recently showed her in the role of a chorus girl, is journeying to New York to view the chorus girl of real life in her favorite haunts.

For the petite Metro favorite, who played on the New York stage as a child, who has enacted stage parts and appeared as a blase city girl for the screen, admits that New York is a closed book to her.

Viola never has seen New York's Follies. She never has toured New York's far-famed roof resorts. To be trampled upon in the subway will offer new thrills to the city girl of pictures.

On completing her forthcoming feature production, "Home Stuff," the piquant story of farm and village life by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston, Miss Dana was granted a well earned period of freedom, far from the click of the camera.

"Then I'm going to do New York," she said. "I'm going to see the city from the Battery to the Bronx. It has been so long since I have seen the city that I know I'll be a bigger sight to the people than they will be to me. I feel as if I had been absorbed by 'Home Stuff' and actually belonged on the farm."

Under the terms of the contract, she will star in special feature productions to be made from the best stories available.

Trade Views Fox Special

"A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" at Broadhurst

THE reputation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," which is having a pre-release run of many weeks in Los Angeles, traveled clear across the continent and brought great crowds to the trade showing at the Broadhurst theatre, New York, Tuesday of last week, Feb. 1.

It was to prove the "pull" of this Mark Twain masterpiece among all classes of people that William Fox introduced it on the West Coast and then brought it East. It has been running seven weeks at one theatre in Los Angeles, and will certainly go ten at least. And from the enthusiasm aroused by the trade showing the New York run, if this is Mr. Fox's plan will be even longer.

Immediately after the trade showing messages of congratulation began to pour into the offices of Fox Film Corporation.

William Fox has made of "A Connecticut Yankee" a film that is at once a gigantic spectacle, a roaringly funny comedy and a gripping drama. It would be a worthy successor to "Over the Hill" if "Over the Hill" needed a successor, which it does not.

The production of "A Connecticut Yankee" at mid-season abundantly fulfills the promise made by Mr. Fox last summer, when he announced his plans for the season's big special production. It is in many respects the best thing Fox Film Corporation ever has done.

A notable feature of the production is the sumptuousness of the settings.

Centre—Jewel Carmen. At left and right—two views from her current vehicle, "The Silver Lining," a Roland West production, released by Metro

THE Christie Film Company is again calling attention of the trade to the fact that "Christie Comedies" which have been released under that brand name and fully protected, are positively not being reissued.

Statements which are said to be misleading, have again appeared in the trade papers which state that "Christie Comedies" are being reissued.

Fred L. Porter, secretary-treasurer of the Christie Company, states that the only comedies that Al Christie directed besides Christie Comedies, were Nester Comedies for the Universal Company, and Cub Comedies for the Mutual Company. Comedies said to be reissued must be the Cub Comedies, of which there were sixteen made, most of which were directed by Horace Davey, and which were made by the Christie Film Company five years ago. Porter further states that publicity concerning the Christie reissues is not within the bounds of fact.

"We have no desire to hamper the sales of any comedies owned by another company, but we object to misleading advertising, and unlawful use of a fully protected name," states Porter, "and any one advertising that they have a Christie Comedy for reissue will certainly be prosecuted."

Church Journal Lists Hodkinson Releases

"In these days when so much is being said in criticism of the motion picture in the press and elsewhere, it is refreshing to note that the well-known Catholic monthly known as 'The Holy Name Journal' has come out with a list of 'Desirable Pictures' which is headed by two Hodkinson Releases, 'The Kentucky Colonel' and 'The U. P. Trail,'" reads a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters.

Metro Releases for February

Three Features and Keaton Comedy on List

THREE dramatic special productions — "Passion Fruit," starring Doraldina; "The Greater Claim," presenting Alice Lake in the stellar part; and "Without Limit," a George D. Baker production for S-L Pictures and a Buster Keaton comedy, "The Haunted House" constitute Metro's releases for February.

The feature-length pictures will be distributed to exhibitors in the order mentioned. Doraldina, in Carey Wilson's romance of Hawaii, "Passion Fruit," will be available for booking February 7. Two weeks later Alice Lake's next photo play, "The Greater Claim," whose story is of a chorus girl who, marrying into a prominent family that did not want her, will be ready. This will bring the release date of this picture and of the Buster Keaton comedy, "The Haunted House" to fall coincidentally on the twenty-first of the month. February 28 will bring to the screen George D. Baker's production, "Without Limit," an S-L Production made at the Metro studios in Sixty-first Street, and to be distributed by the latter organization. It is a picturization of Calvin Johnston's story, "Temple Dusk," published recently in the Saturday Evening Post. Anna Q. Nilsson heads the cast of players who enact it.

The story, "Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson, depicts the life of the Pacific isles. Edward Lowe, Jr., wrote the scenario for the picture. Rudolph Bergquist photographed it, and special art interiors were prepared by John Hughes. Direction was in the hands of John E. Ince.

As Mary Smith in "The Greater Claim" the star, Alice Lake, declares she has been given the most ambitious part in her histronic career. Mary is a show girl who marries "Chuck" Everard, wealthy and well-born. His family objects to the point of kidnapping the young husband on his honeymoon and later trying to buy a divorce from Mary. She is disgusted with the whole affair and returns to Broadway to lead a more riotous life than ever before, only to be checked and brought to a sense of responsibility by the birth of a son. The story is the original work of Izola Forrester and Mann Page. Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted it to the screen. The director was Wesley Ruggles.

George D. Baker's "Without Limit" retells Calvin Johnston's magazine story, a sensation ever since its appearance in print, with increased dramatic power. It is the romance of Ember, a girl from Broadway, and of David Marlowe, son of a minister conducting a mission on the East Side, who are wed at a midnight revel. The notable cast of the picture, headed by Anna Q. Nilsson, includes Robert Frazer, as David; Robert Schable, as Bunny Fish, rounder and cad; Kate Blancke, as David's mother; Frank Currier, as the minister; Thomas W. Ross, as Charlie, the croupier at the gambling establishment of Clement Palter, played by Charles Lane. Mr. Baker not only directed but scenarioized the picture. Andre Barlatier was the photographer and M. P. Staulcup the art director. It was produced by S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) Pictures.

Buster Keaton in "The Haunted House," adds another to his list of smile getters. This comic, written and directed by Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline for Joseph M. Schenck, is a hilarious tale of ghosts and counterfeiters with the slapstick cracking merrily in characteristic Keaton style.

Ruth Roland Serial Soon

Pathe Announces March 13 as Release Date of "Avenging Arrow"

BY way of establishing firmly and at an early date its serial program for 1921 as the most auspicious it has ever attempted, Pathe announced as its next episode release Ruth Roland in "The Avenging Arrow." This picture will be presented by Pathe on March 13th, the issue being simultaneous with the release of the final chapter of "Velvet Fingers," the current serial starring George B. Seitz, with Marguerite Courtot.

For a serial star, whose vehicles are not less than 30 reels, Miss Roland is making an unusually early return to the screen in a new picture. Her last play, "Ruth of the Rockies," was released last August and is still playing to a big following.

"The Avenging Arrow" is believed to be the superior of any of her pictures as a starring vehicle. It will be Miss Roland's eighth serial for Pathe. The new play is an adaptation of Arthur Preston Hankins' "The Honeymoon Quest," put in scenario form by Ben R. Cohen and produced under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton. W. S. Van Dyke and William Bowman were the directors.

Her part in "The Avenging Arrow" is said to supply Miss Roland with a wider scope than any of her former serial roles. In this regard it is considered unusual to a degree and an important factor contributing to the anticipated success of the play. Colorful setting is another feature of "The Avenging Arrow," which concerns itself with the adventures of a girl born and raised in Southern California.

Nazimova to Do "Camille"

Principal Characters Are Already Chosen; Ray Smallwood Directing

NAZIMOVA'S next special screen production will be "Camille," upon which progress has been made already to the point of casting the principal characters of this classic drama by Alexandre Dumas, the younger.

Following advices from the Metro studios in Hollywood, where the Russian star's pictures are made, to the effect that "Camille" definitely would be the photoplay to follow her latest sensation, "Billions" came news to the home offices of the distributing organization that casting was begun.

Two members of the personnel which aided in the production of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" have been brought into service by Nazimova for "Camille." June Mathis, who adapted the Ibanez novel, prepared the screen script for the Dumas classic; and Rudolph Valentino, actor of Julio Desnoyers in "The Four Horsemen"—the principal male role—will play Armand in "Camille."

Among the other members of the cast thus far chosen are: Rex Cherryman, the youthful actor, who appeared as the playwright in Nazimova's production of "Madame Peacock"; Arthur Hoyt, well known to followers of both the screen and speaking stage; Zeffie Tillbury, versatile character actress, who just has completed an important role in Metro's production of "Big Game"; Ruth Miller, and Consuelo Flowerton.

The task of designing the many elaborate scenic effects has been assigned by Nazimova to Mlle. Rambova, who visualized the dream garden that plays an important part in the star's current production, "Billions." Ray Smallwood, who directed the three last Nazimova pictures, is serving in the same capacity for this one.

Plan Educational Meeting

International Convention to Be Held in Mid-West During March

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., this week notified managers of all of its thirty-one exchanges in the United States and six in Canada to make their arrangements to attend its first international convention at either Chicago or Cincinnati at a date in March to be definitely fixed later. It is said that this will be the first time that any motion picture distributing organization has held such an important meeting before the first year of its existence was ended. The first release through an Educational exchange was made on June 20 of last year.

Late in the fall a convention of the Eastern exchanges was held at the Hotel Astor and the results were so pleasing that the general meeting was immediately planned. In the meantime Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, has made a tour of all of the offices and then special trips to different territories, while President E. W. Hammons, who is now on his way to visit the producing units on the Coast, will visit most of the offices going, or on his return trip. In addition, practically all of the managers have made trips to the home offices to get in closer touch.

Definite announcement of the date of the convention awaits the return of Mr. Hammons, since he announced before he left that he would probably have some interesting announcements to make concerning future business. He has always pursued the policy of talking directly to the various sales representatives and giving them the fullest light on all developments. This is reported to have made a big hit at the Eastern meeting, but it will be carried out on a larger scale at the general convention.

Heads of all the principal departments will be present from the home office, and in addition representatives of all the producers releasing through Educational will tell of their plans and hear suggestions from the sales forces direct as to how they can make their product even more pleasing to the exhibitor. According to the home office, some new and far reaching specialization plans will be announced.

Naval Balloonists Are Entertained

Taking advantage of interest aroused by current news the manager of the Strand theatre, Rockaway Park, L. I., had a special showing at his house for Lieutenants L. A. Kloor and Walter Hinton, two of the three balloonists recently lost in Canada.

The manager cleverly lined up the showing with exploitation on "Heliotrope," the picture he was playing with the result that the event was turned into a reception in honor of the navy balloonists and their safe return. Lieut. Farrell, the third member of the party had been expected to attend but was confined at home by illness, the result of his privations.

Vitagraph Exchange,
1229 Vine Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

I want to take this opportunity to tell you how proud I am of being able to present "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES," now being shown at this theatre, also a few facts regarding it.

This picture has broken every record ever established by this theatre, since it has come under our control three years ago. We played not only to more people, but turned away at least 10,000 on Monday, the first day of its showing.

We have played practically every big production, but never before have we received so many pleasing comments and congratulations as we hear from the lips of those fortunate enough to be admitted.

Nothing would please me more than to run the picture another week, as I feel sure we could play to capacity, but owing to our policy it is impossible to do so.

I want to congratulate you on this wonderful production and not only wish, but am confident, that you will derive from it all the benefits of which all good pictures are deserving.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) H. STEVENSON,
Manager, Knickerbocker Theatre.

Unique Features in the Ambassador Theatre

The Ambassador Theatre which will open its doors to the public soon, will stand unique among the motion picture theatres of America. In the first place, it is the only cinema theatre which, though located in a hotel, caters to the outside public, and in which reserved seats only will be sold.

World premiers will be shown, with the exception of a few photoclassics recently released, which are of such great general interest as to warrant the breaking of this rule. The policy of a weekly change in program will be carried out consistently, and the pre-releases will be far enough in advance of other showings to give exhibitors throughout the country a chance to gauge the possibilities of a feature by the criticisms it receives.

In the intermissions of the afternoon and evening performances, interpolated bits of entertainment will be given from time to time in the lounging room which adjoins the main body of the theatre.

Reserved seats may be purchased a week in advance of all performances and season reservations may be secured, for a preferred location in the house.

Louise Lovely in Story of N. Y. Underworld

The seeming fondness of film fans for productions that have their entire locale laid in New York City, as is evidenced in the case of "While New York Sleeps" whose popularity shows no sign of abatement, has led William Fox to select for Louise Lovely's next starring vehicle a story written by George William Hill and called "While the Devil Laugh's, in which the entire action transpires in the world's first city.

The story of "While the Devil Laugh's" concerns chiefly the efforts of Mary Franklin, a girl of the East Side side slums, to rise above the level of her surroundings and emancipate herself and her impoverished family from the letters with which an unkind fate has enchained them. How this is brought about is made the basis of a gripping tale of New York, with its gaudy cabarets, dreary tenements and picturesque Manhattanese drawn with a fidelity to life that will mark the characterizations of a later-day Dickens.

Ziegfeld Beauty Signed for Nazimova Cast

Consuelo Flowerton, a Ziegfeld Follies beauty, of the Spring Frolic of 1920, and model for all of Howard Chandler Christy's famous war posters, has been selected by Nazimova, for one of the supporting roles in her production of "Camille," for Metro release.

Miss Flowerton arrived in Hollywood a week ago, and immediately was given a screen test in the role of Olimpe. The evidence of the camera was such that she was given a contract without delay, under which she will be a member of Nazimova's supporting company.

Paramount's February Issues

A Striking Array of Features Listed for February

THERE are eight Paramount features listed for February release, including productions from the studios of Thomas H. Ince, Lois Weber and Cosmopolitan as well as contributions from three of Paramount's own special producers, namely, Cecil B. DeMille, Hugh Ford and Charles Maigne.

The honors for February 6 are shared by "Brewster's Millions," in which Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is starred by special arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck, and "The Ghost in the Garret," in which New Art Film Co. presents Dorothy Gish as star. The former, adapted from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon and the play by Winchell Smith, has already been shown in advance of the general release date in some of the larger cities, including New York, and trade paper as well as newspaper reviewers have pronounced it a riot of fun with Arbuckle at his very best. Joseph Menabery directed the picture from Walter Woods' scenario, while the cast includes Betty Ross Clark as leading woman and such film favorites as Fred Huntly, James Corrigan, Jean Acker, Charles Ogle and others.

The other release of the 6th is "The Ghost in the Garret." This comedy was written by Wells Hastings; and F. Richard Jones, who produced "Flying Pat," was the director.

Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Forbidden Fruit," which Jules Mastbaum pronounced "the crowning achievement of the cinema art" when he booked it to open the new $2,000,000 Stanley theatre in Philadelphia, is scheduled for the 13th. Written by Jeanie Macpherson, this super-picture presents in its cast Agnes Ayres, Clarence Burton, Theodore Roberts, Kathlyn Williams, Forrest Stanley, Theodore Kosloff, Shannon Day, Bertram Johns and Julia Faye.

On the same day, Thomas H. Ince presents Douglas MacLean in "Chickens," adapted by Agnes Christine Johnston from the Saturday Evening Post story, "Yanconna Yillies," by Herschel Hall. Jack Nelson was the director, and Gladys George is seen for the first time as leading woman for the lively young Mr. McLean.

On the 20th comes the Cosmopolitan production, "The Passionate Pilgrim," from the story by Samuel Merwin. Robert G. Vignola directed, the scenario being by Donnah Darrell. Matt Moore plays the title role, and the cast includes Rubye de Remer, Mary Newcomb, Julia Swayne Gordon, Tom Guise, Frankie Mann, Claire Whitney, Charles Gerard, Sam J. Ryan and Helen Lindroth.

Scheduled for the 27th is Hugh Ford's production, "The Price of Possession," with Ethel Clayton as the star.

Also on the 27th comes the Lois Weber production, "What's Worth While?" Claire Windsor, who made such a fine impression by her work in "To Please One Woman," is again seen in the leading feminine role.

New Pathe Single Reel Series

A REMARKABLE series of single reel motion pictures, bringing before the public eyes the actual hunting and trapping of the wildest animals of the American woods, and in which two typical American youths are featured, have just been acquired by Pathe Exchange, Inc., produced by Cyrus J. Williams, and distributed by Pathe through arrangements made by Arthur S. Kane.

"The Adventures of Bob and Bill" are certain to establish a new standard for single reel entertainment in the American motion picture theatres, announced Pathe. "Breathing the outdoors, thrilling by the daring of these mere boys who are as skilled in hunting wild animals as the most intrepid woodsman of the Northland, 'The Adventures of Bob and Bill' will hold a universal appeal for audiences throughout the world."

"Bob and Bill" in every day life are William and Robert Bradbury, eleven-year-old twins, sons of Robert Bradbury, who wrote and directed the series of Tom Santschi westerns which Pathe also is releasing.

"Born in the woods, and from the time they started to walk trained in the art of protecting themselves from the untamed beasts that roam American forests and plains, these boys typify all that is American. Not actors, but red-blooded, strong-armed adventurous Western boys, Bob and Bill perform before the camera feats of daring that have never been surpassed in motion pictures.

"These single reel subjects, however, are not nature studies. They are miniature dramas, with a goodly share of comedy in which one of the most remarkable canine actors on the screen has a goodly share.

"The fact that two boys are the comrade heroes of 'The Adventures of Bob and Bill,' should not be construed to mean that they will appeal only to youth. This is far from the fact, for it is a certainty that every class of audience will get the fullest measure of entertainment from these pictures," state Pathe.

Releasing arrangements for the series have not been definitely determined, but within a short time it is expected Pathe will announce these plans together with the release date of the initial production.

"Adventures of Bob and Bill" Are Hunting Pictures

It is explained that several auspicious circumstances, seldom existing in real life, enable the producer to combine in these pictures thrilling stories and reliable nature studies. The twin boy adventurers, William and Robert of Glendale, not far from Los Angeles, California, have their home in virtually the only section of this country where civilization and native woodland wilds frequently lies less than a dozen miles apart. Their log cabin camp in the wooded hills where they hunt and trap wild animals is as rough and primitive in all its appointments as though located a hundred miles from any human settlement. Yet it is reached in a few hours from their comfortable home in Glendale, where school is not neglected, but on the contrary has equipped them with "book knowledge" concerning animal and insect life which adds much to the zest and profit of their adventures.

You are present at the scene of all the preliminaries and the capture itself of coyotes, bears, wildcats, wolves, raccoons, and you observe with fascinated interest that each capture demands a separate and established technique.

Plenty of natural, rude humor inseparable from such adventures is declared to enliven and add verisimiltude to these motion picture true stories. City or country-bred, every boy of the age of Bill and Bob seems to have an instinctive longing for experiences of this character—and often it is quickly awakened in their fathers.

Bebe Daniels in Good Role

Stars in "Ducks and Drakes," an Elmer Harris Story, Available Now

"DUCKS AND DRAKES," with Bebe Daniels in the leading role, is scheduled by Realart for immediate release under its Star Franchise. The story is by Elmer Harris, playwright and scenarist and recently appointed supervising director of Realart's West Coast studios. Jack Holt, leading man in a number of well known productions, plays opposite Miss Daniels in her latest picture. Edward Martindel, William Lawrence and Wade Boteler are also in the cast. Other players are Mayme Kelso, Elsie Andrean and Maurie Newell. Maurice Campbell directed the picture.

It's a comedy with Bebe Daniels as the central figure. The action introduces her as Teddy Simpson, a young girl full of life and the desire for romance, excitement and adventure. Through the untiring efforts of her aunt she has consented to marry Rob Winslow (Jack Holt). Her aunt, however, is unable to persuade her to set a date for the wedding. The truth is that Teddy dreads the prospect of settling down to prosaic married life. She wants to be entertained and amused. So she hits upon the idea of calling up numbers selected at random in the telephone directory and flirting with every pleasant masculine voice that responds.

In this manner she talks with two men who prove to be club mates of her fiance. One day he overhears them in a telephone flirtation and learns what is happening. Realizing the dangers of such promiscuous flirtations he enlists the aid of his friends and they plot to cure her of the habit. An adventure, packed with enough thrills and excitement to satisfy anyone, is arranged by the conspirators. Teddy falls an unsuspecting victim to the arrangement and embarks on what proves to be one of the most exciting expeditions imaginable. So successful is the plot that by the time the adventure is over Teddy is more than ready to name a day for her wedding.

Exhibs' Letters Laud "So Long Letty"

"So Long Letty," the Robertson-Cole super-special release directed by Al Christie, continue to break house records through the country. The screen version of the Oliver Morosco stage success is received with acclaim by all of the exhibitors who have succeeded in booking it.

Noteworthy are the letters received by Robertson-Cole from small communities explaining that the exhibitors were unable to take care of the business and of how it was necessary to renew booking to accommodate patrons. In almost every theatre where the picture was shown, a prologue was also staged with great success.

Exactly how the west coast has received "Letty" is evinced in the following reports from exhibitors:

Ellis G. Berg, proprietor of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., writes: "Business during the run of 'So Long Letty' was very good, especially during the first week. It takes something very much out of the ordinary in this town to run two weeks in succession, and taking this run as a whole, it was very satisfactory."

The manager of Loew's Hippodrome, San Jose, Cal., wired as follows: "Beg to advise you that 'So Long Letty' was a clean-up for me here."

Stockton, Cal., paid "Letty" a tribute. The manager of the Loew's State Theatre there, writes: "From a box-office point of view, we wish there were more pictures produced like 'So Long Letty.' Our audiences appreciated it very much and you can hear ex-pressions on the streets regarding this picture by many people after its showing."

Work Is Completed on "Peck's Bad Boy"

Word comes from Irving Lesser productions that "Peck's Bad Boy," the five-reel feature comedy starring Jackie Coogan, is completed and ready for the cutting room.

After the lengthy delay in production caused by the recent accident of Master Coogan's, everybody connected with the Peck organization were relieved with the fact that work had been completed without additional delays.

As it stands, the Peck film consists of many thousands of feet in excess to commercial footage and Irving Lesser, his production manager, Louis E. Loeb, and director Sam Wood will spend the next week looking over the film with a view of eliminating as many episodes as possible before it is given to the cutter.

Rogers Makes Personal Appearance in South

Will Rogers, who has just returned to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., after several weeks spent in New Orleans taking exteriors for "An Unwilling Hero," his new Goldwyn picture, made several personal appearances while in New Orleans and aroused a degree of enthusiasm remarkable for a screen star who has been appearing in the silent drama for little more than a year.

SAN FRANCISCO

F. R. Newman is the new manager of the Strand theatre, San Francisco, having succeeded Ed Smith. Mr. Newman has for the past seven years been manager of the Pantages theatre in Salt Lake City.

Wayland Taylor for some time exploitation representative at the Seattle Paramount exchange, will soon assume that office at the San Francisco exchange which was left vacant by the recent resignation of J. D. Howard, who went to Mack Sennett's theatre in Los Angeles.

The Strand and Alameda theatre in Alameda, two large new houses, have been purchased from A. Kaliski by Sam Levin, who will continue his managership of the Coliseum theatre, San Francisco.

The New Lorin theatre, Berkeley, was scheduled to open January 27, under the direction of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co.

. NEW YORK

. Many Buffalo exhibitors and exchangemen traveled to Rochester on the evening of Tuesday, February 8, to attend the "Hospital Happiness—Movie Star Ball," in the New York state armory.

The Nicholas Dipson Theatrical Enterprises, operating a chain of theatres in Western New York, will open the new Strand theatre in Olean, N. Y., Monday, February 14. The Strand is built upon the site of the old Dreamland in West State street.

The Buffalo city council has denied a permit to Conrad E. Wettlaufer and others to erect a garage at 22-26 Broadway, because the application came in after the Monument Theatre company had made plans to build a ten-story theatre and office building at Broadway and Washington street at a cost of $1;500,000 The attorney for the theatre company argued before the council that it would be most inadvisable and certainly not in the public's interest to permit anyone to open a large public garage immediately adjoining a new theatre that is to have a seating capacity of 3,500.

The Hudson theatre in Rochester is to be enlarged and re-decorated and the seating capacity increased from 300 to 700, following the incorporation of the Kress Amusement Company, Inc., at $25,-000. Officers of the company are: George J. Kress, president; John J. Appel, vice-president; Charles Stengel, Jr., secretary, and Isaac Fisher, treasurer. These with Joseph R. Soehner constitute the board of directors.

The Empire theatre has announced a general reduction in prices to ten cents and this week Manager Sam Carver is changing his bill three times. Last week he presented Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," at the ten cent top.

Manager Howard Smith of the Palace theatre in advance of the week's run of "The Last of the Mohicans," gave a private screening of the picture in the Hutchinson-Central High school for the members of the Buffalo Society of Natural Sciences, the Buffalo Historical society and the Anthropological club. It was also screened for the school principals of the city.

Fred M. Zimmerman, proprietor of the Oliver theatre in Tonawanda, N. Y., has installed a $10,000 organ in the house.

Jack Kearns, manager of Jack Dempsey and Dan McKetrick, former manager of Freddie Welsh and now a member of the Dempsey camp, were in Batavia, N. Y., on February 4 with Frank McCoy, Jr., of New York, attorney for Dempsey and Kearns, to attempt a settlement of two actions in supreme court for an aggregate of $200,000, brought by Frank P. Spellman of Batavia, former showman, against Dempsey and Kearns.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, turned the house over to the members of the 22nd Ward Women's club on Saturday, February 5, when a benefit performance was staged for the Hoover Fund for Starving Children in Europe.

E. J. Hayes, city sales manager of the Buffalo First National office, has been appointed manager of the exchange, succeeding Hugh Rennie, who has resigned.

T. J. Fitzpatrick, former manager of the Regent theatre, Geneva, N. Y., has been engaged by Fred M. Zimmerman as a member of the Nu-Art sales staff. G. E. Dickmon has returned to Nu-Art after several weeks' illness.

C. John Predari, former Buffalo representative for W. W. Hodkinson, and later with Nu-Art, has gone to Chicago to join the Realart office force.

H. E. Thompson, district manager for W. W. Hodkinson, visited Buffalo the week of Feb. 7.

Dan Savage of the Empire State Film company is now handling the Special Pictures company output.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Buffalo Metro office, leaves Saturday, Feb. 12, for Europe for a two-months' stay.

ATLANTA

George Beban was in town last week, making a personal appearance in connection with the showing of his picture, "One Man in a Million," at the Howard theatre.

Louise Fazenda was another film star who made a recent most auspicious visit to Atlanta, when she appeared at Loew's Grand, and was received with due attention.

Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Savini announce the birth of a son. Mr. Savini is junior partner of the firm of Savini Films, Inc.

Carl Kettler, Jr., of West Palm Beach, Fla., is in Atlanta this week and it is rumored that the object of his visit is to dispose of his holdings—which are incorporated under the head of the Bijou Amusement Company. Mr. Kettler's attorney accompanied him.

The National Amusement Company is to erect a $125,000 house in Greensboro, N. C.

J. W. Camak will erect a new theatre at Daytona Beach, Fla., with a seating capacity of 800.

C. H. Simpson, of the Grand theatre, Hawkinsville, Ga., announces that he has just taken over the Millen theatre, in that city.

The Queen Feature Service, of Birmingham, has been recently incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000.

Lynch interests, it is authoritatively reported, will begin the erection of a new theatre at Asheville, with a seating capacity of 2,100, and which will cost $150,000.

H. B. Warner, of Lexington, N. C., one of the best known exhibitors in the territory, has been appointed state director of the motion picture drive for funds for relief of starving children of Eastern and Central Europe.

F. B. Eades, of Orlando, Fla., has gone to Kissimmee to take charge of the Casino there, which has recently come under the Lynch management.

DETROIT

Johnny Hines made a personal appearance at the Washington theatre Sunday in conjunction with the showing of a Torchy comedy, "Torchy Mixes In."

A trade showing of "The Son of Tarzan" will be given at the Broadway Strand theatre the night of Feb. 14.

The Family theatre, at Jackson, Mich., had the first showing in this state of the William Faversham picture, "The Sin That Was His."

Exchange managers and their chief assistants gathered at the Board of Commerce last Friday evening for their annual banquet. There were no speeches. An elaborate cabaret entertainment was provided.

Moving pictures taken by the Ford company of the sixth annual dinner of the Kiwanis clubs of the state, held here at the Hotel Statler, are being shown at the Broadway Strand and will later be distributed in the state. Kiwanis No. 1 is located in Detroit.

More than $50,000 was raised towards the Hoover fund by about 600 theatres in Detroit and Michigan who gave special children's programs Saturday morning. Everything was donated so that the entire receipts went toward the cause.

"Passion" is scheduled to open here on Sunday, Feb. 13, at the Adams theatre.

Fred Schaffer, formerly of the Liberty, St. Louis, has arrived to manage the William Fox Washington.

ST. LOUIS

Manager Hill of the Associated Producers, opened his new office at 3534 Olive street early this week. The new headquarters of the Associated Producers is one of the most pretentious in the city and has been the rendezvous for many out of town exhibitors during the past few days. It is the first exchange in St. Louis to have every modern appointment which might characterize an automobile show room. Silk tapestries, tile floors, windows on three sides of the room, all three of which face thoroughfares, mahogany fixtures, are just some of the appointments.

Announcement was made this week of the appointment of J. R. Baker as publicity director and assistant to the president of the Skouras Brothers Enterprises in St. Louis which controls a string of 10 motion picture houses. Until recently Baker was merchandising director of the St. Louis Star and previously was connected with the Minneapolis Journal. He will assume his new duties at once.

William A. Shalit, sales manager of the recently established local office of United Artists Corporation, has settled at 3531 Olive street in the center of film row.

The recent amalgamation of the Independent Film Exchange and the Standard Exchange has been completed. The new corporation will publish an elaborate house organ for its own employes and the exhibitors to which it caters.

PROV., R. I.

"Lying Lips," the Thomas H. Ince special, has smashed all attendance records at the Rialto theatre in Providence. The picture was brought to the house on Jan. 31, following a big exploitation through the newspapers and by Wednesday night it had gone $300 over the previous three-day record made by "In Old Kentucky."

Advertising campaign went merrily on, and the lines became longer each day, until Friday night the manager had received so many requests that the manager hold the picture over for another week that all might have a chance, forced the engaging of the Shubert Majestic, the biggest theatre in town, which happened to be dark for the last three days of the week. The doors were opened at this house at noon Saturday, and remained open until 10.30, and there was a constant line of patrons slipping into the house. The prices remained the same at the Rialto—11, 20 and 33 cents.

"Way Down East" began its eighth week at the Providence Opera House on Feb. 7. Col. Felix R. Wendelschaefer, manager of the house, was forced to buy up the contracts of two smaller cities to make it possible for him to show the picture another week. Never in the history of Providence has any form of a show had such a phenomenal run as the picture.

Another benefit was held on Sunday, Feb. 6, when every theatre gave two performances for the benefit of the wives and orphans of several firemen killed here Jan. 31. The Emery Brothers, owners of the Rialto and Emery theatres, also arranged a big benefit performance at the Shubert Majestic on Friday evening at which, among other things were shown "Lying Lips" and Buster Keaton's great comedy, "The Haunted House," which will not be shown in the city for about two weeks.

The Christian Council of Atlanta, composed of ministers and laymen of the city, has passed a resolution in which they commend the motion picture industry in general, and unqualifiedly state that they feel that "owing to frequent visits of young people to the movies, much good may be done by them (motion pictures)." For one month, members of this council visited every theatre in Atlanta, once or twice a week, for the purpose of making reports.

Lenoir, N. C., is to have a new theatre, furnished by George O. Shakespear and associates. The new theatre will be completed by May 1 and will have a program of good vaudeville and pictures. It will be managed by R. W. Sherill.

Under the auspices of the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs, a series of children's matinees will be given at the Howard theatre, under the supervision of Manager Ralph de Bruler. The first of these was given to highly satisfactory business on January 22.

A. Samuels has sold his Alamo, at Griffin, to the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. Sol Samuels, who has been managing the house, will come to Atlanta to make his home.

The Atlanta branch of the National Exchange, Inc., an interesting new national concern, will be in the offices of Savini Films, for "Bob" Savini has accepted the offer of this exchange to represent them.

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ONE phase of motion picture making, which has been given generally little or no consideration, in the past, is the naming of characters, according to Director Robert G. Vignola, director of special productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, whose current release is "The Passionate Pilgrim."

Prompted solely by a desire to tighten up the loose ends of production which retard the development of the motion picture, Mr. Vignola declares that this phase is worthy of the best attention and sincerest efforts of the author, director and producer, because of its potential value.

"Answering the old query: 'What's in a name?' I can say that 'Everything's in a name,'" said Director Vignola. "The proper naming of characters is a base of great strength because it is of tremendous help in conveying the true spirit and heart of the character. One would hardly think of calling a minister 'Bill Skyes,' or a prize fighter 'Reginald Courtleigh' and yet I have seen designations almost as offensive. Giving a character a name in keeping with his or her role assists in establishing in the public's mind precisely the type of person he or she is without the necessity of going into long explanations. Thus, on the screen, it saves footage and speeds up the action to the ultimate advantage of the production.

"The ideal name ought to be characteristic without being eccentric. For instance, it would be bad form, indeed, to name a writer 'Stylus' or a banker 'Richleigh' or a doctor 'Cutter' unless the story were a slapstick, pie - throwing comedy. It is clearly impossible, however, to set down any definite rules or suggest any principle of choice since the characteristic quality depends upon a hundred subconscious, indefinable associations. The only general rule that can be set down, is that the key of the naming, so to speak, may vary with the key to the play—farcical names, within limits, for farces; eccentric names for eccentric comedies, and soberly appropriate names for serious plays."

John S. Robertson, special director for Famous Players-Lasky, is rapidly forging to the climax of his latest picture, "The Magic Cup," starring Constance Binney. Meantime his big production of "Sentimental Tommy," adapted from the James M. Barrie story, by Josephine Lovett, is also being titled by Miss Lovett and Benjamin de Casseras.

Director Robertson has another production awaiting him immediately upon the completion of Miss Binney's picture, entitled, "Footlights," an adaptation of Rita Weiman's Saturday Evening Post story in which Elsie Ferguson will star.

Three important releases of John S. Robertson productions are forthcoming, the first, "Sentimental Tommy," being heralded one of the biggest pictures of 1921. It will recall that the great success of the John Barrymore starring vehicle, "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," was heralded and pronounced one of the most representative of the successes of 1920.

James Young, who directed "The Devil," and thereafter returned to Los Angeles, has again arrived in New York, and will direct Marion Davies in her forthcoming production, the title of which is yet to be announced.

Lois Weber, noted woman producer and directing pictures distributed through Famous Players-Lasky, joined her husband, Philip Smalley, who preceded her trip East several weeks since.

Due to production arrangement, Charles Maigne, directing special production for Famous Players-Lasky, will direct Alice Brady, Realart star, in her next picture, temporarily entitled, "The Tower." This is a dramatic story of high social celebrities in New York, tense with dramatic situations and a gripping climax. In collaboration with Samuel Merwin, Mr. Maigne wrote the story, and adapted it into scenario form.

Director Maigne is one who has won recognition both as a scenario writer and a director. Within the past few weeks he has achieved the singular distinction of having two Charles Maigne productions run almost in succession at the Rialto theatre on Broadway, "The Frontier of the Stars" and "The Kentuckians."

The last few pictures under Maigne's direction found locales in the mountains of Kentucky, "A Cumberland Romance," "A Modern Europa," for example. Maigne is thoroughly familiar with the scenic value of Kentucky locales, since at an early age he was transplanted from his native State, Virginia, to the "Blue Grass" State.

Mr. Maigne's story, "The Tower," is laid in New York and immediate city territory. Gilbert Warrenton, who photographed "Humoresque" at the camera. It will be recalled "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore, was adapted and directed by the Southerner, with success. Recently Mr. Maigne became a member of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, New York Lodge.

The Fox photoplay, directed by J. Searle Dawley, starring Pearl White, is complete, cutting, assembling and all the last touches. It will be released as a special at a date yet to be announced. Mr. Dawley is at present doing the preliminary necessities of preparing to shoot on another Fox photoplay.

Tod Browning's "Outside the Law" opened in four Broadway (New York) theatres simultaneously. Never before has such a thing been done for pictures or anything else. The Astor, the Lyric, the George M. Cohan and the Longacre were the four houses used, and the exterior of each was camouflaged to represent a prison.

The chief of Chicago police a few days ago posted a drastic ruling that prohibited exhibition of pictures in which a criminal appears, either as a hero or villain—even though a prison cell ends his celluloid career. Exception has been made in the case of Tod Browning's amazing American melodrama, "Outside the Law," which the censors recognized as having a restraining influence on the underworld element.

The rumor that Stanley Goethals, four - year - old "star" discovered by Tod Browning, is related to the builder of the Panama Canal was conclusively settled by Master Goethals himself.

"Aw det out!" he exclaimed, waving a chubby hand at his interviewer, "I's got one-two-three relashuns. Mama, pop an' Toddie."

"What relation is Toddie?"

"Toddie iss my d'rector," said Stanley proudly.

Philadelphians are expected to rejoice at the news that Rex Ingram, who recently produced Vicente Balasco Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for Metro, has come to New York to sleep, for so, the director announced at the Metro offices this week, does he expect to spend most of his vacation.

For when it comes to economy of sleep, Thomas Edison has nothing on Rex Ingram.

During the filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" which extended over a period of more than six months, Mr. Ingram spent more time at the studio than at home. On many occasions he worked for eighteen and twenty hours without a halt. During the filming of the war episodes, there were many times he worked at the studio all night.

It was only on rare occasions that the director got away from the studio before 8 o'clock in the morning. After working from 9 o'clock until 6 or 7 on the stage, while filming the interior scenes, he would eat at the studio cafe, then go into the projection room to view the preceding day's work. As many cameras were used for all scenes, this took much precious time. After this was concluded, meetings of the assistant directors were held and the following day's work planned.

After the picture was completed, Mr. Ingram declared that at least two people at the studio would miss him, the night watchman and "Handsome Harry," the Metro cafe proprietor; for during practically the entire six months, he ate his evening meal at his lunch counter, and often a midnight supper.

Webster Campbell likes directing the company selected for "The Co-respondent," in which Corinne Griffith will be seen as the star (Vitagraph) and states that while there is supposedly considerable cross-examination connected with most "co-respondent cases," in this instance he has failed yet to find the prosecution unjust. The entire production has gone along just as he would have it, will be finished on time, and the co-operation shown by the entire company, most unusual. The director and principal players are busily engaged with taking exteriors in the Adirondacks.

ABOUT PLAYERS

ANNA Q. NILSSON has been engaged to play the lead in "Why Girls Leave Home," under the direction of William Nye. Others who will appear in the cast include Josephine Bernard and William Gaston.

William H. Tooker, who appears in prominent roles in two current releases, "Worlds Apart," with Eugene O'Brien, and "The Greatest Love," with Vera Gordon, spends his leisure moments at his country home near Peekskill, New York, sawing wood and planning poultry farming upon an extensive scale. The construction of the buildings will go under way early in the spring. He expects to cut sufficient wood for them himself. During a period of three hours and a half recently he cut and piled exactly three cords of wood, breaking all records for an amateur wood-cutter. Now he boasts that he does not have to worry about the inflated coal prices, with plenty of wood upon the farm, all for the cutting. Mr. Tooker was recently seen in "The Stealers" and in "Heliotrope."

Eulalie Jensen, whose work has won her increased favor with each picture, is interested in the results of her latest achievement, the role of Raimunda, originated by Nance O'Neil upon the speaking stage in "The Passion Flower." The screen version, starring Norma Talmadge, was directed by Herbert Brenon, and that this picture is predicted as one of the greatest emotional productions the screen has ever known, much is expected of Miss Jensen by those who are familiar with her ability. It is a part in which she may portray the extreme point of her versatility, depicting the tragic predicament of the mother who finds her daughter the target of slander. Miss Jensen's latest pictures include "Respectable by Proxy," "Man and His Woman," "The House of the Tolling Bell," "The Whisper Market" and "In the Shadow of the Dome."

George Fawcett, identified with D. W. Griffith productions, will appear in the Realart production now under way starring Alice Brady, "The Tower." The addition of an actor of Mr. Fawcett's ability to a cast is welcome news. The picture is under the direction of Charles Maigne, photographed by Gilbert Warrenton.

Courtney Foote plays a dual role in the forthcoming Thomas H. Ince production, "The Bronze Bell," in which he will appear as an Indian prince and an adventurous American. Foote, who was born in Yorkshire, England, was educated at Oxford and began his stage career at an early age playing many important Shakespearian roles. His first American engagement was to play Sir Arthur Clenham in Margaret Mayo's adaptation of "Little Dorritt" (Dickens) called "The Debtors," Cathleen Clifford and Digby Bell being co-starred. He was then engaged to play opposite Lenore Harris in the William A. Brady production "The Detective," followed by the part of "Captain Jack Archer" in Sir Conan Doyle's "Fire of Fate." Mr. Foote also created the part of "Viscount Deerfoot" in Louis N. Parker's "Disraeli," which opened with George Arliss in the title role, in Montreal, Canada. Soon after appearing in Liebler and Company's all-star production of "Oliver Twist," Mr. Foote became interested in the motion picture industry, and despite the fact that it was not elevating for an actor of the legitimate stage at that time to indulge in "movie acting," he decided to try a hand at it, believing from the first in its infinite possibilities. In the first year, associated with Vitagraph, he played every conceivable kind of a part, gaining experience and establishing favor with the motion picture going public.

Doris May plays opposite Mr. Foote in "The Bronze Bell." In "The Passion Flower" he will be seen opposite Norma Talmadge, and as the husband of Raimunda, played by Eulalie Jensen, which part he was persuaded to come east to play, from Los Angeles, the choice of Herbert Brenon, director, out of the many applicants for th part.

Jacqueline Logan and Grace Darmond appear in Thomas Meighan's newest Paramount picture, "White and Unmarried," which is being directed by Tom Forman

Miss Logan has the feminir lead of Andree Duphot; Miss Darmond the highly important role of Dorothea Walters. They are distinct opposites, both perfect specimens of womanhood.

Miss Logan was a Follies beauty and a prima donna in the revival of "Florodora." Miss Darmond has played in many pictures and was seen in the Paramount picture, "The Valley of the Giants," starring Wallace Reid, in which she played the leading feminine role.

Walter Long, the original Gus in "The Birth of a Nation," is cast as Chicoq, an Apache.

Others in the cast are Lloyd Whitlock, Fred Vroom, Marion Skinner, Georgia Stone and Jack Herbert.

John D. Swain wrote the story, which is now running in Munsey's serially, and is titled: "Billy Kane—White and Unmarried." The scenario is by Will M. Ritchey. Harry Perry is cameraman and Harold Schwartz assistant director.

Versatile Is George Archainbaud

DIRECTORS of motion pictures have widely different perspectives. Those who are privileged to select their own stories; those who are director-producers, are relatively more responsible than the director who is assigned a script for film version, then half-heartedly sets about to do it.

But to the man who must select the best story out of those submitted for his approval, there is a deal more credit due. In one he may find an opportunity to screen some of his pet theories or situations, yet if the balance of the story is not strong enough in support, the director with the true perspective is obliged to lay one aside and peruse another.

Among the directors whose clever selections have won him recognition of increased prominence, during the past fifteen months, is George Archainbaud, for he has proven not only his ability to direct pictures, but also, to choose stories wisely and well. If there were not wisdom in his choice, he would not have been assigned the direction of one of the screen's most popular feminine stars in five pictures since he signed upon the dotted line that pledged his services to one producing company for a period of months.

Mr. Archainbaud, as is locally known, is not American born, but of French parentage and birth. He has retained all of the artistic ability nature generously bestowed upon his countrymen, yet having lived in America and been in the service of the United States Army, indicates that he is thoroughly equipped to direct pungent American pictures. He likes them. He likes Americans.

Only when a "mob scene" might be composed of all French people, would Mr. Archainbaud attempt to use a megaphone. He would rather take patience to "talk" to his players, and direct them through their scenes in a natural tone of voice. A "mob" made up of Americans would possibly pay more attention to his characteristic French accent, than to what he was saying, anyway. So he patiently describes the happenings as he wishes them to occur, sometimes taking small groups at a time, and until he is positive that the erstwhile players are informed as to what they are expected to do, he does not "shoot"—and therefore, as he explained, would have little use for the megaphone.

One of the pictures directed by George Archainbaud that brought the skilled use of the double exposure into recognition, identifying it from the old-time evidence of the camera dexterity, was when in "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," Elaine Hammerstein triumphed in the dual role of twin sisters. His direction of this picture was acclaimed by press and public. So successful was his work with the feminine star, that he was then assigned the direction of one of the most popular of screen idols—Conway Tearle. In this picture the marked difference in the kind of direction required, brought Mr. Archainbaud into more favorable prominence—and then, Success with Conway Tearle, and the greatly exploited Eugene O'Brien was next to be directed by Mr. Archainbaud in "The Wonderful Chance." The director was rewarded for his evident painstaking work, by the flattering reviews of the picture, in which his direction was referred to as decidedly out of the ordinary.

Then, back to Miss Hammerstein again, and from thenceforth he has remained directing the star in "The Fleasure Seekers," "The Girl from Nowhere," "The Gilded Butterfly," and in "Handcuffs and Kisses." Neither of the last three have yet been released, but it is said they are all promising and that the director has, step by step, gained, gradually, a combination of American and French technique that is difficult to surpass.

Youth, has Mr. Archainbaud, and enthusiasm, and the happy faculty of making better out of good or the best material. Satisfied, until he could convince himself that his constant efforts have not been in vain, was the French-American director to appreciate the comment—"a good picture," but now, with a representative career upon which to build a foundation, we look to George Archainbaud to develop into a master of his artistry.

players, says if she were not an actress, the thing she would prefer to be would be a designer of scenery.

She was visiting friends in Los Angeles and for a lark one day they went on as "extras" in a picture being made at the Goldwyn studio. When the scenes had been taken, the director asked Miss Malone if she would like to join the company. She had never thought of acting in pictures, but the moment the director had asked, she knew the one thing she wanted to do was to act. And she has been at the Goldwyn studio ever since.

She has played prominent parts in "Stop Thief," "It's A Great Life" and "Just Out of College," and is cast as leading woman in Will Rogers' next picture, "An Unwilling Hero." Before Miss Malone was asked that momentous question by the director, she had intended to be an interior decorator and had studied for it. So with her knowledge of decoration and of motion picture requirements it is safe to say she'd be an excellent scene designer if ever she undertook it.

There was a notable home-coming of famous stars on the Metro studio grounds in Hollywood when three screen favorites—former associates in the making of comedies—gathered together before a camera for the first time in more than three years.

Alice Lake, Buster Keaton and Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, were the principals in the reunion of laughmakers.

UNIVERSAL

Director William Worthington is assembling the cast to support Edith Roberts in "The Open Shutters."

Mignon Golden will play the female lead opposite Harry Carey in "The Homeward Trail," by Eugene Mann. Jack Ford is to direct.

Director Norman Dawn and Miss Katherine Madden were married on February 7th.

Subjects recently finished are "False Colors," by Lucia N. Hubbard, under the direction of Stuart Paton, and starring Priscilla Dean, and "The Girl and the Goose," starring Eva Novak and directed by Fred Granville. In production are "Li'l Miss Merridew," starring Gladys Walton and directed by Harry Harris; "Patches," directed by Reeves Eason and starring little "Breezy" Eason; "Fanny Herself," directed by Tod Browning with an all-star cast; "The Dangerous Moment," starring Carmel Meyers, under the direction of Marcel De Sano; and "The Magnificent Brute," starring Frank Mayo, and directed by Robert Thornby, which is being taken in the Northern California woods.

The Eddie Polo company has returned from Havana after making exteriors for "The Seal of Satan." Morro Castle and San Juan Hill were used as locations.

Edward Kull has started "The Terror Trail," starring Eileen Sedgewick. Albert Russell has begun the direction of "Opals of Evil," starring Art Accord. The principal supports are Eva Forrestor and Beatriz Dominguez.

Short Westerns in production include "Wanted: a Parson," starring Hoot Gibson and directed by William Craft. Jacques Jaccard is editing "There Was a Pal," featuring Leonard Clappam. Edward Laemmle is directing "The Coward of Covelo," featuring Jack Perrin.

Comedies in production are "Very Fast Friends," featuring Billie Fletcher under the direction of William Beaudine; "Dotty Sees Double," featuring Dotty Wolbert. Harry Burns has started directing a new Joe Martin comedy.

BRUNTON

Mary Pickford has decided that Jack Pickford and Alfred E. Green, directors of her present production, are to direct "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which will be her next picture. Mary will play the roles of the Lord and his mother. This will be her first dual role since "Stella Maris." Jack Pickford has purchased the screen rights for Garrison's "Finish," a race-track story similar to "In Old Kentucky," This production will follow "Fauntleroy."

Edward Knoblock is writing the script for "The Three Musketeers" for Douglas Fairbanks. Casting will begin shortly.

Fairbanks has purchased from Famous Players-Lasky, through Alfred Cohen, the screen rights for "The Virginians," the initial production of the Lasky company, which starred Dustin Farnum. Production of this will follow "The Three Musketeers."

A scene from "The Diamond Queen," Universal's newest serial starring Eileen Sedgwick

GOLDWYN

Samuel Goldwyn returned East last Wednesday.

Louise Lovely, Cullen Landia, and Billie Cotton have been added to the cast of "The Old Nest," a Rupert Hughes story now being directed by Reginald Barker.

Mason Hopper and "The Bridle Path" company are on location at Santa Barbara.

The illness of Frank Lloyd has delayed the production of "The Alibi."

LASKY

William Taylor will direct Ethel Clayton in "The Almighty Dollar," an original screen story by Cosmo Hamilton.

Wallace Reid's next will be "Watch My Smoke," under the direction of Frank Urson. It is an original story by Byron Morgan. Agnes Ayres plays the female lead.

Production starts next week, under the direction of Sam Woods, of the Elinor Glyn story "The Great Moment." The continuity of it is by Monte Katterjohn. Gloria Swanson is to be starred, with Milton Sills playing opposite her.

George Melford and his company have gone north for the Canadian exterior scenes for "The Monety Master." He is accompanied by Sir Gilbert Parker, the author of the story. James Kirkwood is the featured player.

"The Lost Romance" is now in production. The story is by Edward Knoblock and the continuity by Olga Printzlan. William DeMille is directing.

Arbuckle's "Crazy to Marry," by Frank Condon, is in production. The continuity is by Walter Woods. James Cruze is directing.

The "White and Unmarried" company are making boat scenes near San Francisco. Tom Meighan is starred, Tom Forman directing. The continuity is by William Ritchey.

VITAGRAPH

President Alfred Smith and George Randolph Chester are here.

William Duncan and Edith Johnstone are home from Victorville in the Mojave desert where the fourteenth episode of "Fighting Fate" was filmed. They are now using a hundred players and as many horses and aeroplanes for the fifteenth and final episode.

Preparatory work was started at the Vitagraph Studio this week for filming of a special production under the supervision of the author, George Randolph Chester, and to be titled "The Son of Wallingford." Mr. Chester accompanied by Mrs. Chester will arrive at the studio next week and personally look after the making of this seven-reel story from his latest piece of fiction, which is shortly to appear in a National magazine in serial form. Instruction for this preparatory work was given by President Albert E. Smith, who left New York for the Coast in company with Mrs. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Chester.

Two new productions were started at the Vitagraph Studio this week by companies immediately upon the completion of previously made subjects. Earle Williams, who has just played in "The Loot of the Night" from the Frederick Jackson story under the direction of David Smith, is now working on "The Secret of the Silver Car" with the same director.

"The Hick," a comedy with a small town atmosphere, has been completed by Larry Semon and the comedian and his troupe are now at work on "The Rent Collector."

The first Antonio Moreno feature "The Three Sevens" directed by Chester Bennett has been completed by the Editing Department and shipped East.

Joe Ryan serial company, producing "The Purple Rider," is at work on the tenth episode.

HERE AND THERE

The Lloyd Hamilton and Jack White organization, producing Mermaid Comedies for Educational has engaged Chuck Reisner to co-operate with the director and comedian in preparing stories for future comedies. It is the aim of the Hamilton-White forces to eliminate slap-stick to a great degree and give the comedies a real plot. Reisner was formerly with Chaplin where he helped to produce "The Dog's Life," "Shoulder Arms" and "The Kid."

FIRST NATIONAL

Complete cast of Charles Ray production of Forest's "The Midnight Bell" includes Doris Pawn, Jessie Herring, Donald McDonald, Van Dyke Brooks, Clyde McCoy, and S. J. Bingham. Following the completion of this picture Ray will take a two weeks' vacation, as it completes his first year's work of six pictures.

David Hartford and company left in a special car for Seattle and Canadian locations this week to make exteriors for the James Oliver Curwood northwoods story "The Golden Snare." The principal players in this production will be Louis S. Stone, Wallace Berry, Francis T. McDonald, Melbourne McDowell, Ruth Reneck, and DeWitt Jennings. Business Manager Joseph Montrose, Asst. Director Gabin Young, cameraman Walter Griffin, and a complete technical staff accompanied the Hartford troupe.

METRO

John Fleming Wilson, author of many short stories published in the leading magazines of the country and a number of stories written direct for the screen and the highly successful stage play "The Man

Who Came Back," produced by Brady, is to devote practically all of his future writing to the screen and has become a member of the Metro organization. The first Wilson story to be produced by Metro is "Uncharted Seas," adapted from the novel of the same name.

ROBERTSON-COLE

Louis J. Gasnier, producer of "Kismet" and "Good Women" for Robertson-Cole, has recovered from a recent operation for the removal of his tonsils, and is again at the studio at work on his next story.

The Robertson-Cole Technical Staff has been reorganized under the supervision of W. L. Heywood, Art Director, and the Department now has four former Eastern studio art directors as members.

One of the busiest film factories on the West Coast is the reputation now being earned by the new Robertson-Cole studios in Los Angeles. Although the R-C lot is one of the largest studios in the world, for the past few months the task of completing the buildings has taken up much time and limited stage space made it possibly for only two companies to work on the lot at the same time. The past month, however, has seen the completion of three stages and within the next two weeks there will be four companies shooting features.

The studio has not yet officially opened but Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa and Louis J. Gasnier have all shot a picture on the lot and are preparing to start the second. Christy Cabanne will also join them, making four companies on the lot who will be shooting super-special features.

Louis J. Gasnier, whose production "Kismet" has startled the theatregoing world, is back on the Robertson-Cole lot after a trip to the hospital. Gasnier will start shooting another all star feature for the R-C program sometime this week. The story has not been announced.

One of the largest and most proficient art staffs in the country are reported to be working with W. L. Heywood, art director of the new Robertson-Cole studios. Four members of his staff were prominent art directors in the Eastern studios.

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's New

Not much rain.

Wanda Hawley had to play a slovernly wife in her recent production, but she is trying to get over it now with dum bells, weights, etc.

The criminal charge against Bebe Daniels (speeding) will come up for hearing on March 17th, which is a good day for the Irish.

Ruth Stonehouse took a picture engagement because the Essanay Studio was only a block from her house.

Robertson-Cole Studio staff threatens to solve the housing problem as every production they have made recently required the building of a residence at the studio.

Henry King is reported to have caught a 150-pound fish at Catalina. Understand "reported."

R. E. Newman, electrical engineer, and Eugene Shour, electrician, both of Louis B. Mayer studio, have been elected to membership in the Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society. No stars in this organization.

The burglars who visited Vic Schertzinger's residence recently found the engagement such a paying one that they made a return engagement this week and got away with $5,000 worth of jewels, clothing, etc.

Albert E. Smith is coming back to our town.

George Randolph Chester is following the author's trail to filmton.

Antonio Moreno is seeing 'Frisco.

The Federated Exchange men are to give our studios the double O next week, after conventioning at San Francisco.

Bill Duncan went over to Arizona last week and did the town, as the guest of his old friend Gov. Thomas Campbell.

Marshall Neilan has stepped into fame, he admits, for he has been sued for $150,000 for stealing a story.

Jimmy Tynan, who writes pieces for "IT" is very popular with some of the professionals because he adds the statement, "If anyone cares to know" to many of his pertinent paragraphs.

Pauline Busch is at Honolulu and from what we have seen of Doraldina that must be a fine place to be.

Production was delayed at the Hal Roach Studio the other day when Harold Lloyd stepped on his glasses, which points out another danger of having contortionists about.

Lila Lee confirms the report that she is engaged to a Captain of the Aviation Service. Believing no one cares to know his name it is left out on purpose. If marriage follows, however, Lila becomes Mrs. Claude Collins.

Godfrey Webb of Universal productions was one of the best known leading men of the London stage.

A paragrapher remarked that if Jack London knew that Metro had changed the title of his novel, "The Little Lady of the Big House," to "The Little Fool," Jack would turn over.

Bayard Villier claims to have the smallest motion picture theatre in the world. It is eight feet long including projection room and the picture projected is three feet wide.

R. B. Cochrane has come out West with his family, so his children can grow for six or eight weeks.

Carl Laemmle is in our midst.

Lyons and Moran are recovering from three weeks indescribable sobriety required for the making of the blue law Sunday satire.

And now we learn of Art Acord playing the role of "A Ranch Romeo."

The watchman at Universal City this week was introduced to Tod Browning and explanations were made that Tod was a director and had the privilege of coming and going from the studios at any time. Tod therefore feels assured that he won't be thrown off the lot again as a bootlegger.

Smoke Turner has taken his make-up box and crepe hair to Universal City.

Jim Kirkwood has grown a beautiful beard—henna color we should say.

Publicity men of Studios have organized and threatened to make it a press club of motion picture industry underwood-beaters, so that trade paper representatives will be eligible to membership and payment of dues—accent on the last statement.

Pauline Fredericks has a moveable dressing room that she takes from set to set and from location to location.

Mark Strong heard a Ford whistle in the neighborhood of Robertson-Cole dressing-room row and immediately posted a sign "No whistling in the dressing rooms." Mark is one of these fellows who won't permit three to light their cigarettes on one match, and would take poison in preference to walking under a ladder.

The announcement that the Robert Brunton Studio has effected banking connections to enable them to financially aid reliable producers will cause a stampede we fear—the announcement is important, yea verily.

Alice Lake is getting all the winter weather she wants at Flagstaff and Director Wess Ruggles confirms the statement that it is so cold there it froze the flame of a match.

What we want to know is who is the fellow who named that Flowerton girl, late of the Follies, Consuelo.

Frank Dazey permitted his automobile to run into a Ford carrying a gas pipe and the gas pipe came through the wind shield and mashed the index finger of Frank's right hand, which is pretty tough on a man who plays with an Underwood.

T. Daniel Frawley whose time heretofore has been taken up with such trivial matters as producing "East is West," "Lightnin'," "Fair and Warmer," etc., is going to make his life more useful to humanity by directing Metro pictures.

Jane Atherton, a niece of the famous Gertrude is in our midst to gain fame as an actress.

Gareth Hughes never went to see the automobile he bought, but placed the order by phone, having seen the machine's brother on the boulevard, which is the time-saving way for one to do any shopping—to say the least.

Alice Lake, Buster Keaton and Roscoe Arbuckle had a reunion the other day on the Metro lot (you know they all played together the other year) and at the reunion for variety's sake, they had their pictures took.

Mabel Normand, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet, and the Gish girls in the good old Biograph days would have a tear race to see who would buy lunch. The last one to bring the tears was stuck for the five meals—but that was before the days of the H. C. L.

Will Rogers claims the way to get the most publicity is to put on a rotten show.

Rupe Hughes has been elected to the membership of the American Academy of Arts and Science (just between ourselves let it be said this is an organization of colored people, but don't tell Rupe.)

Cullin Landis refuses to make himself known to film fans for fear the girls would pull his hair to see if it is real or a wig.

Leatrice Joy was heard to remark that she would have to renew her magazine contracts or send in new prescriptions.

Tom Moore in recent pictures has played the part of the street cleaner, policeman, district attorney, politician, and next he hopes to be Mayor.

Bill Wing is authority for the statement that some day a Los Angeles newspaper reporter will forget to state that every criminal is a movie fan and when that day arrives Bill alleges the reporter is going to lose his job.

Al Christie is going back home to London, but this London is in Ontario, Canada. Al went back seven years ago and saw the old school house and went in to see if it looked natural. He knocked on the third room door and the teacher opened it and said, "Why, Alfred—," she had been there all this time. Al was ushered in and introduced to all the children and the teacher said, "How many of you have seen Mr. Christie's Comedies?" And Canadians being polite, all hands went up, whereupon Al's good friend the teacher, told the children that Mr. Christie would give them a five minute talk on "Orange Raising in California." You can take it from us that Al don't know any more about orange raising than that they grow on trees, but he made the talk. And after that he is going back to London, Ontario, Canada.

Special Music Supplement

IN HONOR OF THE FIRST NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF MOTION PICTURE AND MUSICAL INTERESTS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE AND MUSICAL INTERESTS

Edited by Charles D. Isaacson

What Is the Answer?

Meetings held January 24-5-6 at the Hotel Astor, New York City, special sessions being held at Rialto theatre, Capitol theatre, Brooklyn Strand theatre, De Witt Clinton High School and in the offices of many publishers, instrument makers, etc.

AT ten o'clock sharp on the morning of Monday, January 24, 1921, the chairman called the meeting to order and a motion immediately following created the tentative organization of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests. At the last session the chairman was empowered to appoint a special committee to draw up by-laws and a constitution and to name an executive committee representing all the interests embodied in the name of the association, this executive body to ratify the business of the conference and to issue the call for the next meetings.

The Motion Picture News in greeting the delegates made its position very clear. I was instructed by Messrs. Johnston and Gillett to state the following:

"The conference is called because it is needed. There is an absolute demand for a central organization to settle the growing problems of motion picture which it is anticipated these meetings will disclose.

"The News was happy to sponsor the plan; was happy to back it to the limit of the power of the News and its music editor. But in all fairness the News feels that the plan is too big, too vital, too elemental, to be the property or the particular hobby of a publication.

"The News has invited all the papers in the picture and musical field to cooperate.

"The News insists that the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests must stand on its own bottom, must run its own meetings, must work out its own internal affairs.

"Of course the News will support the plan and the Association with renewed and increasing vigor, as that Association seems deserving.

"Speaking for myself, the sooner I can relinquish the direction of the organization, remove myself from the chair, the happier I will be. Speaking for myself, I will say that my strength will be given in support of the Association, and every aid which I can draw to the plan will be given gladly and cheerfully."

What the future of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests is to be none can predict with assurance. But from the temper of the two hundred who were present at the sessions, it would seem that the need for the meetings was vital, the opportunity for good work unprecedented in possibilities. All those who were present pledged their undying support to the venture. One man, William Brandt, representing five hundred exhibitors of whose association he is president, felicitated the News on the plan and declared that the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests will find his exhibitors, even the smallest of them, eager to assist, for what this Association seeks to accomplish are the things his exhibitors are feeling around to solve! Speaking for the hundreds of thousands of union musicians, Joseph Weber, the President of the Federation of Musicians, agreed to form an arbitration board to settle all union problems of the picture theatres. Speaking for the organists of the country, a representative stated that cooperation would enable the exhibitors and organists to get together through the new association to settle their difficulties.

For, as was expected, the conference disclosed innumerable questions, any one of which would have deserved a gathering no less dignified and representative than that which gathered in New York.

What was accomplished is historic. The future will look back upon these sessions and will thank the men and women who were present for their energy and foresight in taking the steps they did.

It was promised to all those who were present at the conference that the News would send this supplement to them as a momento and a record of the proceedings and findings.

To the thousands who were unable to attend, but who have been anxious to know just "what happened," this supplement will perhaps prove a substitute for the real thing.

But the most important thing that the Special Musical Edition can accomplish will be this:

It will put in black and white just what took place. It will show the exhibitors and musicians of the country the wisdom and necessity for getting together. Ben Franklin just celebrated his birthday, but what he said is still true, only more so: "In Union there is strength. Let us hang together or we all hang separately."

Music in the theatres of the motion picture field is second only to the picture needs. Shall we work on the easiest road, following the most logical paths, or shall we all fiddle around and fritter away our efforts? Or is the better way going to be through the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests representing the exhibitors, musicians, producers, publishers, instrument makers—supported by all organizations of exhibitors and musicians and producers and publishers and instrument makers—supported by all publications of the film and musical field?

The conference said the latter, and it now only awaits the decision of the rest of the field to ratify.

I am deeply indebted to the News for the magnificent support given my personal efforts. I am everlastingly grateful to all who participated to make one of the most interesting and educative three days in the history of America.

CHARLES D. ISAACSON.

Analysis of the Convention

THE three days and nights and the extra night of the Musical-Picture Conference might be recorded in a formal manner—event following event—or in newspaper style (but this has already been done). Instead, it is the feeling of the writer that the field will best understand what took place and the members of the new organization will be able most clearly to remember the ideas, if the convention be analyzed and discussed under divisions of thought.

Thus, if I were asked to tell in a few brief sentences what occurred, I should probably answer the inquiry in the following manner:

1. We organized the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests, showing why it was needed, discussing the kind of people we want in the society, how to complete a permanent organization which will stand on its own feet. Also we touched upon the fields of endeavor which the Association must hope to cover.

2. We endeavored to organize the musical fraternity of the country in such a manner that picture needs will be better satisfied and taken care of, when once assumed. This brought in the musicians, their clubs, societies, trade and art papers; it brought in the problems of the union, pro and con, the opportunity for more and better musicians, the demand for special picture education of musicians, etc.

3. We endeavored to organize the exhibitors in such a way that standardization of conditions can be effected and a uniformity of policy in music encouraged—thus taking in prices of musicians, number of men in orchestra, kinds of organs, music purchased, style of scoring, etc.

4. We endeavored to induce the producers of pictures to study the musical situation with regard to complete scores, cue sheets, high art scores and hodge-podge thrown together affairs; to bring the producers to see the necessity of giving the cue man or the composer the opportunity to study a film almost from the time it goes to the studio for taking—and at least to see the censored film enough time in advance of release to do a good job.

5. The kind of music to be used; the question of popular, jazz, standard and classical music and just where each fits.

6. The kind of man for the job of director, what he ought to do, how he ought to operate, what liberties he should have; the combination of showmanship and musicianship.

7. The matter of standardization of music for emotional and psychological use, viz., some methods of enabling the musician anywhere to find by index the kind of music to use in any situation.

8. Program making.

9. Methods of procuring musicians easily; methods of routing artists for musical acts and novelties.

10. Tying up with the agencies which are begging for better music; to wit, the music clubs, women's clubs, etc.

11. Matters regarding instruments, acoustics, etc., involving better placing of orchestras, organs, and a means for the dissemination of knowledge regarding such matters before a permanent installation is effected.

12. Publication of music—what is wanted; what publishers are alive to the needs.

13. And an unlucky number—the matter of the Music Tax.

14. Special exhibits in theatres of inestimable value to visiting delegates.

15. Music at the convention, consisting of a Globe concert and some other special music.

16. Advertising the musical show.

17. The Community Theatre and Opera in the House.

18. Entertainment and a dinner.

19. Future Plans.

Organization of the Association

AS indicated on another page, resolutions were carried which made a tentative organization of nearly three hundred members in the new Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests.

Under further analysis this number represents something much bigger. Mr. William Brandt represents five hundred exhibitors. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld represents three theatres and about two hundred musicians. Samuel Rotafel represents the biggest theatre in the world and a hundred musicians. Alf Klingenberg represents the Eastman interests, Mrs. Bendix represents a hundred artists, Mr. Hyman Kraft about thirty artists. C. M. Tremaine spoke for all the piano and player piano manufacturers, representing an industry of about $200,000,000. Joseph Weber spoke for the organization he founded and has headed for twenty-five years, and he represents hundreds of thousands of musicians of the union, to whom the word of Weber is law! John C. Freund and Leonard Liebling spoke for the leading publications in the world of music, both in the art and the industry, and gave their solemn word to advance the cause of the plan through their columns which reach every musician in the country and every musical instrument maker. Mr. Mills and Mr. Harris represent all of the popular publishers in America. G. Schirmer and O. G. Sonneck stand for probably five thousand composers! Herman Irrion of Steinway not only brings the prestige of his house, but he speaks for hundreds of Steinway dealers and workmen. Mr. Ernest Lutz represents about five hundred musicians under his direction in the Loew Circuit of theatres. Messrs J. F. Adams of Wolfsohn Bureau (which he owns) and Daniel Mayer speak for the musical managers of the biggest concert stars and operatic stars of the world. Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer and Mrs. Chapman represent five million actively alive club women. And so on down the line of names.

Every phase of the related interests is represented in the membership of the new association. There was little time wasted in parliamentary procedure as it was the absolute determination of the chairman to leave all that to committees and to keep the conference for the real business.

On another page, the resolutions are noted. Here it might be added that a special committee is now in process of formation, which is to frame the skeleton of the laws. Five important individuals will be named, and these five will choose the large executive board which is to manage the affairs of the organization. In addition committees are to be named as follows:

1. Committee on Motion Picture Education in Music Schools.

2. Committee on Encyclopedia of Musical Psychology and Ready Guide to Music.

3. Committee on the Matter of Publishers, Cue Sheets, Scores, Music Tax.

4. Committee on Women's Clubs.

5. Committee on Organists.

6. Committee on Board of Arbitration for Union Matters.

7. Committee for Producers.

8. Committee for Instrument Makers.

9. Committee to Form Exchange for Musicians and Record of their Worth.

10. Committee for Musical and Picture Trade Papers.

It is expected that within the course of a month the committees will all be named, the executive board actively working and the permanent organization on such a basis that the future of the plan will be guaranteed.

Concerning the Musical Fraternity

AT the sessions were many distinguished musicians and composers and the representatives of hundreds of others. At the very first session, I had the privilege of presenting John C. Freund, editor of Musical America and Music Trades, a gentleman of over seventy years, virile, alert, with more energy and ideas to the minute than most people of twenty-five.

I presented Mr. Freund as the veteran of musical propagandists. In introducing him I brought forth the fact that Mr. Freund and his papers have been more than generous in their support of the project, that for over a quarter of a century he has been first in every movement for the development of art, and that he could summon by the force of his spoken word and written phrase, the best in the musical life of the country.

Mr. Freund is white-haired, wears Gladstone side-whiskers and speaks in a slow, throbbing distinct voice which can be heard everywhere. He has been the guest of the governors and mayors and has addressed audiences of many thousands, being known intimately in hundreds of cities. He went to the platform, and first felicitated the chairman and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and addressing the delegates said:

"This movement will go through many steps which other great ideas have followed. In the beginning a few faithful rally to the banner and then comes the long period of work to establish a confidence in the minds of those who are most vitally affected by the things which the movement seeks to accomplish. After a while, the field wakes up and rushes to become associated. The thing is a success. . . . I have no doubt of the ultimate outcome of what we do today. We have already stated our views editorially and I can repeat them here. We are for you to the end—and we believe the end will be great success."

Then Mr. Freund launched into his formal speech which was as follows:

JOHN C. FREUND'S SPEECH

I am not here, my friends, to tell you what you can do for music. That will take care of itself. I am here to suggest to you what music can do for you in your industry, which is growing every day in importance and in its possibilities is but in its infancy. And it is all the more important that due consideration should be given to forces which may elevate your calling, widen its scope and give it even a greater appeal than it has, for the reason that as you know the so-called "slump" has hit you.

To understand our art situation, let me first and briefly as I may show you the attitude of the public, so far as music is concerned.

Scarcely a hundred years ago there was very little music in the United States. The old Puritan hate of it had permeated the country. They called the violin the "devil's fiddle." They allowed but seven tunes in the churches. They would not have hymn books. A young man at a university or college who took up music was looked upon a "sissy" and as a hopeless case by his father, who was inclined to thrash any musical ability the boy might have, out of him with a broomstick. But when we began to get the great immigration from Germany, from Scandinavia, from France particularly, also from Italy, not to speak of the later English, Scotch and Irish who came, things began to change, so that within the last two decades we have reached a point where it may be said with truth that we Americans today spend more money for music, musical instruments and musical education than the rest of the world put together.

In 1913 I brought out the fact that this country was spending $600,000,000 a year on music in all its forms on musical education and for musical instruments more than all the world spent. Now it is nearer $900,000,000. And today we Americans can say with pride that we give the finest opera, have the largest number of great artists here, have the largest number of symphony orchestras, that our bands are increasing in number and in quality, that our music schools and teachers are just as good, and many of them better, than they have on the other side, and that our musical instruments, whose manufacture scarcely existed a hundred years ago, today pass the world in quantity and quality, for it is we Americans who make the finest pianos, organs, mandolins, guitars, reed organs. We have revolutionized the art of church organ building, and it is we Americans who have invented those marvelous appliances, the player-piano and the talking machine, which carry music into the home of the mechanic as well as of the millionaire.

Now what does this mean, so far as you are concerned?

It means that from 30 to 40 per cent. of your audiences, never mind whether they are in the smaller towns or in New York City, have already reached a certain degree of musical knowledge and culture and that therefore they demand something better than jazz, something more than a pianist who plays by ear on an instrument that has not perhaps been tuned in six months, something more than such a piano, perhaps accompanied by a violin and a cornet, and that they resent, or at least their ears do, the musical cacophony which is inflicted upon them in the great majority of your movie houses. In plain words, the musical entertainment in the great number of the movie houses is below the intelligence of from 33 to 60 per cent. of your audiences.

To the next point.

The moving picture is given, as we know, without words. That is just where music comes in, for music begins where words end. It expresses emotions, ideals, sympathies, where mere words, however beautiful, however poetic, however well chosen, are inadequate. What would a movie be without music? It would be dead. The alliance, therefore, between music and the moving picture is absolute. Nothing can replace it.

What follows logically? That the music that accompanies the picture should not only be adequate, but appropriate. Again and again have I and my friends and others witnessed some beautiful scene and been tortured by the lady who, without rhyme or reason banged away on a piano a horrible medley of jazz and operatic melodies, going it full force, bang! without any reference to time or rhyme, and instead of our minds being filled with beautiful thoughts suggested by the fine pictures, they have been filled with thoughts of bloody murder.

Men like Mr. Rothapfel, Hugo Riesenfeld, and many others, have given us fine orchestras in some of the palaces that we have in New York, not merely because of their personal love of music, their personal musical culture, but because they very soon discovered that it paid in good, cold, hard dollars and cents. These men, my friends, are setting the example and creating a standard in these matters. And through them, the expectation of the average public is becoming more exacting all the time.

This, the first convention held to bring a closer cooperation between the musical and professional world, and the musical industries, between those who are engaged in the moving picture business, makes history, makes history for progress, makes history for enlightenment, makes history for culture. Being today the oldest publisher in the musical world, in fact, the man who gave this country its first musical paper half a century ago, I think I may take upon myself to tell you that you will have the most cordial, kindly and generous cooperation from the professional world and from the musical industries, as soon as they understand the matters that are at issue, and how much not only they can help, but how much they can be helped, by such cooperation.

Personally, I consider it to be a privilege to be present on such an occasion, and I cannot refrain from paying a tribute of respect and recognition to the young man, Charles D. Isaacson, who not only was the first to vision out such a convention, but has been the main factor in bringing it about, through the ready and generous cooperation of Mr. Johnston and Mr. Gillett, of the Motion Picture News.

These three days will bring out, through discussions, matters of great interest and grave importance, and when sent by the musical and the moving picture press through the country, will open up new fields, new vistas, higher purpose.

And let me remind you, my friends, before I close, that if slapstick, low-class, vulgar comedy has seen its day, if the persistent representation of crime and impossible adventure be eliminated, there is a vast field open to you in the musical world, a field providing a wealth of good stories, dramas, comedies, tragedies, which has scarcely been tapped.

So let us get together, work together, pull together, and we shall go far to disarm the criticasters, the Sabbatarians, the Blue Law agitators, who decry your work, your industry, and declare it to be one of the debasing influences in life, whereas when it is true to itself it is one of the greatest, most noble and uplifting, as well as educational forces human ingenuity ever conceived.

Musical America was quick to carry the news of the convention. Before the third day's business had begun, the news of the first day was upon the press. On the first page the following headlines were carried.

"LEADERS OF JOINT INTERESTS UNITED UNDER THE MOTTO 'FINER FILM-MUSIC'"

"First Attempt to Organize Association of Musical and Motion Picture Interests Brings Together 100 Representative Men in Three-day Convention in New York—Forceful Addresses by John C. Freund and Ernest R. Voigt—Convention Sponsored by "Motion Picture News" Through Its Music Editor, Charles D. Isaacson—Resolution Asks More Attention for Film-Music in Conservatories"

The story then goes on in newspaper style to give in detail the things that happened. In the same manner, Music Trade which reaches the intrument makers carried for three large pages an account in the following manner:

"BIG CONFERENCE UNITES MUSICAL AND FILM INTERESTS"

"'Finer Film-Music Is Slogan Adopted by Leaders in Both Industries—Forceful Addresses Made by John C. Freund, Editor of The Music Trades and Musical America, Ernest R. Voigt and Others at Three Day Convention in New York"

On the day following Mr. Freund's speech Leonard Liebling, editor of the Musical Courier, was an honored speaker. Mr. Liebling is one of the best known publicists in the art of music. He is a writer of very forceful manner, he speaks with a good presence and talks up to his point all the time. He is sympathetic to the plan in the most cordial manner.

In introducing Mr. Liebling, it was told of his remarkable support of the best in music and information was given that the Musical Courier was the first to carry news of motion picture music—the first of the music papers of the country. Miss Johnson, the editor of that department, was present all through the discussions as was Miss McHenry, musical editor of the Billboard, Mr. Hal Crain of Musical America and many other reporters not listed in the registry.

Leonard Liebling as the editor in chief of Musical Courier has developed many educational departments and has been always alive and an eager listener to the new movement. His presence at the conference was the sign for pleasure, and his speech was crisp and telling. Unfortunately Mr. Liebling did not furnish a transcript of his address, so an absolute copy cannot be given. However, the following will bring out the gist of his remarks.

"Motion Picture Musical Conference,
Hotel Astor:

"Am acting chairman of the Motion Picture Division of Hoover Relief Fund drive, going on this week, which makes it impossible for me to attend. It is with much regret, because I looked forward to your conference as the biggest event for motion pictures and music since the inception of the industry and will look forward with much interest to the printed reports of your meetings.

"H. B. FRANKLIN,
"Shea's Hippodrome,
"Bpffalo, N. Y.

Leonard Liebling's Address

AFTER touching upon the importance of the film and music in the new marriage, Mr. Liebling declared that there is still a certain prejudice to be broken down among certain classical musicians.

"Last June a very noted musician called upon me," said Mr. Liebling. "He had heard that there was a vacancy at the Rialto theatre and knowing that I was acquainted with Dr. Riesenfeld, he asked me to call upon the doctor and ask him to give the musician the job as conductor.

"I said that I couldn't very well do that, but I would write a letter of introduction. So I dictated a note, and while I was waiting for the typewritten letter the musician told me the following:

"'I know that I shouldn't be seeking a job. You know it's beneath my dignity. At least not in a film theatre. I am a big man. Of course I won't stay there long—why should I? I'll fill in the summer and when I can sign up a symphony orchestra in the fall that will be a signal to get out. One must forget one's dignity nowadays.'

"Just then my secretary brought in the letter of introduction, but I tore it up. The musician was surprised. He wanted to know the trouble. So I told him:

"'You're not good enough for that job. I would send you to Dr. Riesenfeld, for though he may not consider you, my recommendation might influence him to take you. And I would be making a mistake. You're not good enough. I repeat it. Because any man can take up the baton to conduct in a theatre he hates, before an audience he despises. Some day you'll understand what a jackass you've been. Good day.'"

Mr. Liebling had a good round of applause for that story, after which he told how the picture theatre is making men listen to music.

"For myself, my editors and my publications I pledge the Association of Musical and Picture Interests every last degree of support and felicitate you on what you have already done and can do."

On the matter of music, what was said by C. M. Tremaine should next be recorded. Due to a bad throat, R. C. Sedcroft, President of the Musical Instrument Chamber of Commerce, read it. Mr. Tremaine is the head of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, and through his activities represents the piano and player piano interests and other interests whose prime object is to spread an interest in music.

C. M. Tremaine's Speech

Before I say anything which may relate to the purpose of this gathering I want to pay a personal tribute to Charles D. Isaacson, who is responsible for our being here. I shall not say much. I do not need to say much. Many of you know him as well as I do.

As I understand it, the conference is to be a forum for the exchange of ideas, an educational opportunity for the unifying of viewpoints and a business meeting for the standardization of methods and practices wherever such standardization will prove helpful. Above all it is hoped to inaugurate a great forward movement for the greater utilization of music by the motion picture houses to the great advantage of all concerned. To what extent I fit in this program I do not know. I am the director of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music and my interest in this conference is confined principally to the influence it will have upon the spread of music throughout the country, but I shall discuss music entirely from the viewpoint of the picture house manager—the dollars and cents viewpoint.

You have given the public what it wants. This is largely due to the people desiring to see a picture in action, but it is due to a far greater extent to your careful study to give them the kind of picture they want. You have built a great industry out of a novelty because you have given the public something more than a novelty.

Do the people want music—not some people, but the people as a whole, the general public? This is what you want to know and there is no more important question for you to answer correctly. If you fail to read the handwriting on the wall—and there is handwriting on the wall—and fail to make use of this natural ally, you will retard your growth until you do, for ultimately you will be forced to use it.

The people do like music. The evidence is conclusive.

Music is used in industry. Employer and employee alike have welcomed its advent. It refreshes the mind and the body and relaxes the tension on the nerves. Music is used to a steadily increasing extent in hospitals, sanitariums and eleemosynary institutions for its soothing and cheering influence. Within the past few years the audiences at recitals and concerts have more than doubled. New York will have this winter the hitherto unattained total of between 200 and 300 symphony concerts, by its own and half a dozen other leading orchestras.

Municipalities, recognizing the growing desire for music among the general public have appropriated money from the public funds so that its citizens might enjoy it without cost. Baltimore maintains a municipal orchestra as well as a municipal band and has a municipal music director. New York, Pennsylvania and Maryland also have State Music directors. Dallas, Denver, Portland, and several other cities have established municipal music commissions.

What does all this mean? When the politician takes up anything it is pretty certain to be something the people want. They have had their ear to the ground also just as a few of your leaders have had their ears to the ground and with the same successful interpretation of the message they read.

I do not wish to bother you with statistics, but it may surprise many of you to know that the people of the United States are spending more money on musical instruction than on all other higher education combined. According to the United States Census Bureau the following sums were spent in higher education in 1913:

Public high schools	$64,199,952
Private high schools	13,949,195
Other private and public schools of similar standing	13,196,033
Colleges and universities	89,535,110
Normal schools	14,956,105
Total	$195,838,395

The amount spent on music education of all kinds is given as $220,000,000.

What do these figures mean as to the public's desire for music? Witness the success of the musical comedy and the popular song. Witness also the increasing space devoted by the newspapers to music.

Fifty newspapers are publishing a weekly music page treating music from the democratic viewpoint, namely that of the man on the street and the woman in the home. Five years ago there was no such music page as far as I know.

The public are buying phonographs and player-pianos because they want music. They go to concerts for the same reason. Great throngs gather together in community sings because of similar desire. Music is welcomed in industry, in hospitals and among the poor and the rich, because it satisfies a want.

Music is an attraction. It even attracts people who are unconscious of the pleasure music gives them. A few of the progressive men in the motion picture world have been quick to realize this fact and have made music more and more a feature of their appeal to the public. The proof of my argument is conclusively demonstrated by the fact that the men in the motion picture world who have done this are the conspicuous successes. The time is coming when all should utilize music for their like benefit. They should do this for the increased profit which will accrue to them, but the time is also coming when they will need to do so to maintain their relative position. Take two houses showing equally good films. The one which has the most attractive music program will steadily increase its patronage at the expense of the other. Part of the audience will come specifically to hear the music. Many others will come without being conscious of the reason, but will find themselves gravitating there because they enjoy going without knowing why. To get the full benefit of this you should exploit your musical achievements in your advertising.

Personally I wish to see the motion picture houses improve their musical offerings because I believe they will be one of the chief factors in making America a musical nation. It is the only agency which brings music to many people who would not otherwise go to hear music. But in your own interest I urge every manager here not to leave without learning something which will aid him to utilize music to make his house more attractive to his local public.

"I have purposely delayed from day to day answering your invitation to attend the Musical Conference in New York City in the hope that I might arrange to attend. I am sorry I shall not be able to, but I want you to know that I am heartily in favor of the whole movement for better music for the film and especially the Musical Conference. I am glad to see that my open letter to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has done its part in compelling them to assure the exhibitor for a square deal.

"Next in importance to the music tax question is the matter of cue sheets. I earnestly hope that all producers will unite in making COMPETENCE the one necessary qualification for the cue sheet writer, and that they will insist that all cue sheets be written from the standpoint of and for the benefit of THE EXHIBITOR, not the composer, publisher, or other interest.

Standardization of Conditions

IN the discussion of conditions, it became fairly well understood that the exhibitor of small theatres and the bigger men in certain cities are struggling with many problems. These seem to be briefly analyzed as follows:

1. Where to find specially trained musicians to take charge.
2. Where to get the right kind of organist.
3. How to know what to do in buying an organ, where to place it, how to correct it, and other matters concerned with acoustics.
4. How to know the music to procure for cuing the picture.
5. How to standardize the music for all kinds of emotions and moods.
6. How to get the artists for the special acts.
7. How to measure up the film scores which are sent along with big features.

First among those who brought up the standardization of music and its necessities was Ernest Voigt, a scholarly, throughly convincing speaker, who represented his house, The Boston Music Company. His address is as follows:

Much has been said and written about making America musical, about bringing music to the people in this way or that, to weld the component races of our great nation into a harmonious whole by means of music. No one will deny that tremendous progress has been achieved within the last few years. But can anyone imagine a better opportunity to sow the seeds of music everywhere, among rich and poor, young and old, than at the thousands of picture theatres to which (I have no exact figures at my disposal), but I think I am safe in saying, millions of people flock every week, ready and eager to see, and ready and eager, if they were only given an opportunity, to hear.

But the camera man has had a big start over the musician and the latter is only just beginning to realize his possibilities and I might say his responsibilities, in connection with the movies. The example set by the leading moving picture houses in New York is arousing the whole country, in fact the whole world. We are far in advance of Europe in that respect, as I had opportunity to see for myself last summer. Even Germany, long reputed the most musical country in the world, has nothing to offer that can compare with the splendid and intelligent efforts made by America, efforts to use the movies as a means of bringing to the masses the blessings of the most universally appealing art.

The photoplay, unlimited though its advantages may be, had to sacrifice something which constitutes the potent charm of the spoken drama: that is, the inflection of human speech. This loss, which might seriously impair the value of the screen drama, is, however, more than made up for by the equally emotional and more generally understood speech of tones. Viewed in that light, it becomes instantly apparent why the producers of moving pictures, realizing what aid music offers in the enjoyment of their product, have spared neither cost nor labor in order to perfect that branch of their performances to the highest degree. It is just as certain that a good picture can be spoiled by the wrong kind of music, as that good music can go a long ways toward making a poor picture tolerable. Needless to say, when the right kind of music is linked with the right kind of picture, the success is complete. We saw this, not long ago, in the film play, "'Way Down East," where a carefully prepared musical score constantly interpreted and emphasized the emotional appeal of the scenes. We are just beginning to see that we cannot do a picture justice or please audiences, which are becoming more exacting every day, by merely jumbling together a lot of "love motives," agitatos, mysteriosos and imitations of animal sounds, but that it is just as important that character traits be saliently brought out by graphic strains, such as the tell-tale village gossip, in the picture just mentioned, whose evil loquaciousness was accompanied by music of unmistakable realism. The art of accompanying the moving picture by music is something infinitely more subtle, something that presents new problems to the trained musician. I advisedly use and stress the word "Trained," for it is the need of trained musicians for moving pictures that I particularly wish to dwell on today. Moving pictures require musicians who are not only well-grounded in their profession but they must be especially trained for the demands of a new and special application of their art.

Considering the many-sidedness of moving pictures, it is easy to see that the musician who wants to devote his time and talents to their musical interpretation must needs be as variedly gifted and specially trained. Nothing really has been done to bring such special training within the reach of the music student. I hope to see the day when every musical conservatory of note will have its department for the training of such players, under experienced instructors. I took occasion to write to the fifty leading conservatories in the country to sound them on their attitude toward this subject. A goodly percentage answered my letter and I am sincerely gratified to be able to report that with hardly an exception the letters showed that they are deeply interested, that the need for special moving picture music departments has already made itself felt through numerous inquiries on the part of students. They are all looking for practical help and suggestions and are eager to know of the results of this conference. Tell them that you need musicians trained in the new art of moving picture music and they will do their part to furnish you with well equipped recruits which will put music "over the top."

Let us for a moment consider music from the all-important point of view of the exhibitor and its value to him reckoned in dollars and cents. What is the difference between the showing of a film at the Rialto, for instance, and the same reel at a dingy 10 and 20 around the corner. The actors are the same, the negatives identical, the methods of projecting the picture on the screen, made of similar material, do not differ; there are just as many feet to each reel; why is it that people throng to the former and are content to stand in line and wait their turn, when they could see the same picture perhaps a few weeks later next door at half the price? What is this mysterious difference? It is 90 per cent atmosphere. A well equipped theatre with fine appointments, soft mysterious lights, an air of luxury, comfortable seats, neatly clad attendants, and, good music. Good music, I contend, goes as far to create atmosphere as all the other factors combined, and that is why good music with his pictures means dollars to the wise exhibitor. The better the music, the bigger his box-office receipts.

Now as regards the special training. The first requirement is, of course, a thorough musical education, the mastery of piano or organ, or both, and in the case of a conductor, orchestral experience and general leadership. Of prime importance is mental alertness, the faculty to "size up" an audience, and the realization that most audiences are capable of much more education and cultivation than they are generally given credit for. As nothing is too good for the audience in the matter of pictures, so nothing is good enough when it comes to music. As the musical interpreter of emotions depicted on the screen, the player must of necessity be, himself, emotional and respond to the quick changes in the situations. In fact, if not his knowledge of life, his knowledge of the picture, must enable him to anticipate, so that his music is always slightly ahead of the film, preparing, rather than reflecting. His attention should be riveted on the turn of events, his emotions should promptly respond to pathos or humor, as they may be interwoven in the picture-play.

Not the least essential requirement in his make-up is a keen sense of humor. But his wit should be capable of attuning itself to various gradations, from subtle irony to broad slap-stick farce. It depends on the musician to suggest the proper atmosphere for a picture. Nothing is so fatal as the distorting and burlesquing indulged in by some players, who believe it their chief mission to set the house giggling. Flippancy and facetiousness are wholly out of place in a serious and educational picture. The player's attitude of mind should always be one of interest; never betray tiredness or boredom.

In order to illustrate properly in music the happenings on the screen, the musician should be endowed with psychological insight. Many books on the subject are within the reach of the student and not a few of them are written in so popular a vein that they can be understood with profit by the layman. Human nature, in spite of its complexity, can be reduced to a rather limited field of observation. There is more or less resemblance between a great many films. The intrigue is very often the same, the emotions follow each other in a given circle, the development varies in the main but slightly. Such fundamental emotions, and their related affections, should be carefully studied by the player; he should be able readily to recognize them, and he should seek to express them in turn by means of music. In order to do this successfully, he should not wait until he is in the theatre and the film has started. It is here that the higher training sets in, and that the musical conservatories should find ways of offering their students the opportunity to perfect themselves in their task. The class should possess a projecting machine to be in a position to learn from practical experience, or perhaps it could be arranged that the theatre manager permit the use of his machine and films to such classes for practical demonstration. There is no reason why moving picture producers, realizing the arvantages that they will ultimately gain thereby, should not be willing to lend machines and films to responsible musical conservatories for educational use. Just as the singer, trained for opera, never knows whether she is really fit for her job until she stands before the footlights and "faces the music," as it were, so it is in the case of a player for the movies. Only by actual experience can he learn what is required of him and how to meet these requirements.

"I take this opportunity to say to you how very admirably and efficiently you conducted the convention and the greatest credit is due you for your unceasing and determined effort in behalf of the cause. A fine beginning has been made and a great deal has already been accomplished and the future holds out the greatest of promise. Unfortunately, my being in Boston will to a large extent interfere with my taking a very active interest in the affairs of the new organization, but I need not tell you that you can count on me to cooperate with you and the committee who will have things in charge and I hope that you will not hesitate to call on me if I can be of any assistance whatever.

"E. R. VOIGT,
"Boston, Mass."

But before he sets out on his race with the fast moving film, it must be his constant aim to improve his musicianship and to develop his technique. He must cultivate musical resourcefulness, chiefly by gaining freedom and authority in musical improvisation. This does not necessarily mean that all moving pictures should be haphazardly accompanied by strains which suggest themselves to the player while he is watching the film. To begin with, only very few people could successfully do this, nor would it be at all a satisfactory procedure. People in the audience like occasionally to hear a tune that they know. In fact, only by mental association of certain melodies, or what they stand for in the pictured events or emotions, will an audience derive the proper enjoyment from the musical accompaniment. One hears much music in the movies that is as foreign to the action on the screen as anything could be, and frequently kills the effect of the photographer's art. Therefore one of the first things for the student to learn is the proper differentiation between musical moods. The classical literature, and most of all the operatic repertoire, furnish an inexhaustible store of material. The student should be trained to recognize theatrical values. The player should never forget that he is not playing in a recital, nor conducting an orchestral concert, but furnishing theatrical music for a theatrical production.

As the play progresses, gains impetus, presents its problems and intrigues, gradually reaches its climax and leads to the solution, so should the music advance and follow the march of events with an ever-increasing intensity. Nothing can give a better idea of what good moving picture music should be, than a careful study of successful operas. Therein the welding of action and music is so close that they cannot be separated; the musical characterization amounts to a labeling of each personality or situation with a pertinent phrase or motive. This matter of musical characterization cannot be dwelt upon too much. It is the most difficult problem and also the most important which the student has to solve. It will determine the choice of musical material that goes towards the effective interpretation of a film play.

Fine musical taste is necessarily a prerequisite. It will guide the choice of music and its special elaboration. A good memory, moreover, is essential. Keen interest in all the musical happenings of the day, and familiarity with new publications in the fields of serious and popular music. Although "cut sheets," issued by the various concerns, are intended to help the player in making his choice, he should be capable of making independent and proper selection of music. The main drawback of present-day cue sheets is that they are often prepared by people who are connected with special interests in the publishing field, and therefore their choice is obviously prejudiced and narrow, much to the disadvantage of all concerned. Discriminating musicians with broad experience and unbiased judgment should be engaged by producing companies for the purpose of preparing these cue sheets. A great deal would also be gained by the appointment of a committee entrusted with the preparation of a standard index of music suitable for the moving pictures, embracing the publications of all catalogues, and classified according to the peculiar needs of the moving picture organist. Additions should be made to it, from time to time, and thus the compilation would be kept up to date.

The old prejudices are fast vanishing. Musicians are beginning to realize that, while the teaching profession is woefully overcrowded, the gates are opening into a new field, promising rich harvest. But the harvest will be reaped only by those who have carefully sown, that is, have laid a proper foundation of musical culture and have applied themselves successfully to the special demands that the musical accompaniment of moving pictures are making. Perhaps our hopes will be realized sooner than we think, and special schools for moving picture musicians will spring up here and there, and encourage established conservatories to start departments for the study of this subject. A central employment bureau or exchange for organists and musicians who seek employment in the moving pictures would be of great value. In order to further these ends and to hasten the best results, I would suggest that the conference express itself in favor of such special music schools, or departments, in existing conservatories, devoted to the training of moving picture musicians, and that any resolution adopted in that sense be published by musical journals and conveyed to all musical schools in the country.

Following this address, a long discussion followed in which many participated. It was decided that the conservatories and music schools of the country must be shown that there is a demand for specially trained musicians in pictures. Not that a musician must play differently but he must understand the picture psychology as it is practiced by the leading exponents.

So a committee is to be designated to urge the musical schools and conservatories to introduce a course of lectures upon motion picture needs. It was also shown how the exhibitors locally can tell their schools to do this. But principally it was decided to ask the exhibitor associations to pass a resolution and take such steps as will relieve this condition and turn out in the next years the kind of musicians who will understand.

At the next morning's session, it was announced that Alf Kliggenberg, head of the Eastman School of Music (Rochester) a five million dollar organization, had decided to take advantage of the information, and instal within the next few weeks a motion picture department. So immediate action was guaranteed.

In this connection, it should next be recorded that William Brandt, President of the Theatre Exhibitors Chamber of Commerce, delivered a brilliant address. Representing five hundred theatres, Mr. Brandt in terse, alert style made his listeners pay serious attention. He is an interesting speaker and what he says is always valuable.

He began in a witty way by saying that this being a musical convention it seemed to be the habit of the speakers to use notes! Then he worked into his speech. In part his address was as follows:

"Owing to the fact that motion picture drive for European relief opens here Monday, twenty-fourth, which demands my personal attention on several committees and the personal appearance of Will Rogers, Wesley Barry and several other stars, will prevent my attendance at Music Conference. Regret my inability to be present. Congratulations to yourself and the NEWS for the enterprise.

Five Hundred Exhibitors Issue a Plea for More Musicians

"I am a practical exhibitor, I have no Broadway theatres, rather than that I represent a vast amount of theatres, ninety per cent of which have not got a big symphony orchestra but who must, however, supply good music in accompaniment with the pictures they show. The New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, of which I have the honor to be president, owns five hundred theatres in the United States and are now building theatres that are the equal of the Rialto, Rivoli, Strand, Capitol, Criterion, etc. Only very recently, in the heart of Brownsville, the ghetto of Brooklyn, the poorest section of Brooklyn, there was opened a theatre, 'The Stadium,' which in its splendor was unsurpassed. In my mind this is one of the finest theatres in the country. Theatres of a similar character will be built and are being built in every locality in New York. There is no question at all that music is essential to the picture. Quoting the practical exhibitor, these men rate music to a good picture as forty per cent and music to a bad picture as ninety-five per cent of the showing. So you see how essential music is in the program.

"Now, let me say this—that the smaller exhibitor is not unmindful that music is the essential thing and that he must progress rapidly. The motion picture is here to stay, we have arrived and we are going to stay! We are not an infant industry—we are one of the largest industries of this country! When the war arrived, the people had to find entertainment to forget their sorrows and where could they find a more pleasing form of entertainment than the motion picture theatre of today with a nominal price of admission?

"I want to sound a note of warning—the exhibitors are progressing faster than the musicians, that the small neighborhood theatres cannot get proper musicians. The exhibitor is perfectly willing to spend fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for a good organ, but he cannot get a good organist to play it! I am talking from actual experience—and I know for a fact that the musicians are not keeping pace with the exhibitors. Would that the world were full of Riesenfelds, then what an easy lot the exhibitor would have! I take this moment to congratulate the NEWS upon the happy idea in calling this conference. There have been conferences of all kinds—conferences of engineers, conferences for seating powers, architects, etc.—but no one ever thought of a conference for music. Such a conference has never before been called until the present moment and I hope that it will help solve the problems of the neighborhood theatre.

"We have formed a market for good musicians, the theatres of today want a good musician and a good musician should not find any difficulty in securing a good position. I think it is the duty of the musical unions to help in this movement rather than hinder it. We find that it is very difficult at times to get the proper kind of musicians from the unions and we think that the bulk of this should be passed directly to the heads of the unions so that the musicians we get should be thoroughly proficient. The unions should try to see that the men who are sent to the theatres should be of a better calibre than they have been up to now.

"I was interested to know from Mr. Rabee's discussion that fifty thousand people attend the showing at the Rivoli and Rialto at a single showing. Now let me say that in New York City alone we have close to one million people attending theatres on a Sunday. It is very true that these people are receiving the proper kind of entertainment when they come to the theatres in these numbers, and we in turn are trying very hard to, and I hope that this conference will solve the problems of music. We are trying to give the best, and although with a small orchestra, we are giving the best music available.

"One of the problems is to get good organists. No theatre that is being built or is built is complete without an organ. Sometimes the organ unfortunately stands bare without the organist, too often so. To conclude this, I want to say that with this conference I hope that some of the wants of the exhibitors will be satisfied."

When Mr. Brandt finished, I asked him if he would be willing to serve on some special committee which would confer with the exhibitors. His answer was characteristic.

"Delighted—delighted. I'll do anything you ask me for the good of our people; and I will surely convey to our association the aims of this new organization."

Now it so happened that all through Mr. Brandt's speech, another gentleman was growing redder and more fidgety. That gentleman was none other than Mr. Joseph Weber, President of the American Federation of Musicians, or as it is better known, the amalgamated unions of musicians of America.

I had invited Mr. Weber to speak about the aims of the union. This title annoyed two or three exhibitors who wired me that they would not come because "we were trying to unionize the theatre, and that we had better spend our time on something more valuable." My attitude was this: Our exhibitors are surely coming into contact with the musical union all the time. Why not understand each other? Why not find a way by which we can thrash out our mutual problems?

Mr. Weber had evidently come with the speech I suggested in his mind, but Mr. Brandt's talk infuriated him. He came upon the stage with his lips trembling and his voice throbbing. Mr. Weber is a remarkable personality, he has the gift of eloquence and persuasiveness.

What the Union of Musicians Have to Say

He began by remarking that Mr. Isaacson had invited him to speak and had asked him to send a speech ahead, but he had other things to do beside write speeches in advance. But if he had sent the speech and it were printed over the United States he would still change it and address himself to Mr. Brandt's remarks.

"I want to say that the president of this organization that I represent does not consider that he or his organization is on the defensive. At last the American musician has come into his own, and the music art is independent of the foreign musician. But, in the picture industry, the musicians have not been given the chance to develop. The opportunity to develop himself according to the needs of the theatre man has not been given, that is why the musician has not kept in pace with the exhibitor. As far as the art of music is concerned, the American Federation of Musicians has done the most work.

"We all agree that the motion picture industry has been in the making for the last ten years. Before that it was merely an experiment. Now it is forming into a certainty and before this time the organist had no calling for the picture theatre and while the motion picture industry has been developing, the motion picture musician has not, and therefore the musician must be allowed time to develop. You cannot be furnished with the finished article from something which before did not exist. It is true the motion picture musician is out of step, but give them a little time and there will be more organists and musicians in the market than the theatres can use. Because a man carries a union card does not say that he is an honest man. I have learned by actual experiences that many employers have shortcomings. At present, the main question is that of the wage scale—in fact, the employers have oftentimes ousted out a good musician and replaced someone else who was willing to work for a lower wage.

I agree that perhaps we have not good musicians, but the matter will be remedied as best and quick as possible and you will soon have more musicians than you need for your theatres. The question of supplying musicians will be solved as far as the American Federation is concerned. But again I say that the exhibitor gives preference to the lower waged musician. In this reference let me tell you this. I was once a musician myself, considered music an art. I was a member of a symphony orchestra and was taken formerly as a good musician. This was some twenty years since. Why, we actually represented a class of mendicants working away for a beggarly wage.

"When we first started, musicians were receiving six dollars a week. Even the symphony orchestras were not paying more than fifteen dollars a week. In order to live the musicians had to go out and work for dances and cheap affairs.

"But we have changed all that. . . . I have been asked why we do not allow musicians to go from locality to locality without interference by the local union. This is to prevent bad practices which have robbed musicians of thousands of dollars and almost sent local men into the poor house.

"Let me say this: we are for education, we are for music, but we are first for the musician. We are ready to do what you want, and to be fair. Give the musician a chance and he will be in step with the exhibitors."

After Mr. Weber sat down, I asked him if he would consent to arranging a board of arbitration to settle all matters of difficulty between theatres and the union, and he said he would be happy to arrange this.

Then S. M. Berg arose, and asked for the privilege of addressing Mr. Weber a question through the chair. Mr. Berg had previously been the means of arousing some lively discussions and had assumed that he was not wanted. Mr. Berg represents the Exhibitors Trade Review and was under the impression that he was refused admission, whereas invitations had been sent to his paper as well as all others.

Mr. Berg asked if musicians might not be rated, but Mr. Weber said it was not possible to do this.

Before the morning session was adjourned, Buel B. Risinger, director of an orchestra in Cincinnati, Ohio, told the delegates that whenever he was unable to find regular musicians in the town he was playing in he always referred to the local union agency. If the head there told him he could not supply the want he very often wired Mr. Weber himself, and with the facts that he sent to Mr. Weber plus the facts from the local union agency, he meted out justice and if warranted, he would get musicians from out of town to fill his needs. Whenever he had trouble he always found willing help in Mr. Weber's office.

All of this brought out the facts that there is a great need for a central agency through which musicians might be listed and rated—and the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests can gradually accomplish this result.

Artists for the Musical Acts

NOW next of interest and following the present line of thought, comes the matter of artists for the theatres. At the present time there are several excellent agencies which are supplying the theatre needs. Among these might be mentioned the New York Concert League, Mrs. A. K. Bendix and half a dozen others.

But the conference marked the entrance into the industry of motion picture music of the Wolfsohn Bureau, the oldest and biggest managerial offices in America—in fact in the world. They represent the greatest musicians in our midst, and that they are agreeable to a plan for the distribution of their artists through the film theatres, even such as Heifetz and Hofman is a sign of the times!

Mr. A. F. Adams, head of the Bureaus, was in California, his son and partner was suddenly sent to bed with an indisposition, so his speech was carried by a representative and read to the conference:

It would indeed be a surprising statement for me to make to most of those who know our house, that for years we have watched the picture field and awaited the opportunity when we might consider the invasion of it!

It must be understood that our house has for nearly a quarter of a century represented the first and greatest musical artists in the world. From Schumann Heink to Heifetz, from Josef Hofmann to Mabel Garrison, from John McCormack to Alma Gluck, so it has gone. We have forged gladly the way of fine art, aiding and cooperating in the making of musical tastes and musical reputations.

I believe it will be a pretty well conceded point that it was not very long ago, when the mere suggestion that our type of artists were going to appear in the screen theatres would have been a ruinous assertion. That even today the number of houses who could give the right prestige to our international stars is very few is also generally accepted.

But the time has come, we believe, for a new attitude on the part of the most conservative musician. The film theatre of tomorrow will be known by the musical company it keeps. Today it finds itself seeking for the finest kind of prestige.

The theatre may build to the skies, put in more seats and finer fixtures than any other in the world. The orchestra may be one hundred and fifty players, a magnificent pipe organ, but of what use without the right artists—the right conductor and soloists? Let me draw a little comparison. While we are in the frame of mind where we are ready to do business with the film theatres, we are absolutely deaf to the proposals of the vaudeville people! Is not that strange? The vaudeville represents the downward grade but the modern film theatre represents the upward taste! We do not feel that properly presented that our artists will suffer any in their reputation for appearing in the right film theatre—but we would hesitate to put anybody into vaudeville. They could not come out unscathed!

Now, to make the point of my ideas. We are planning the making of contracts for our artists in the moving picture theatres. The biggest of them will not keep away. But the theatre manager must have one thought in mind. He cannot buy high-class artists for nothing or for cut rate. He must pay for quality.

I have been studying the picture situation. Today a man pays thousands of dollars for the rental of a film. How many years ago was it that one hundred dollars rental seemed impossibly exorbitant?

If it has been possible up to now for theatre managers to engage artists for a few dollars—fifty dollars, seventy-five dollars, a hundred and fifty—in his pick-up way, with folks of fair ability and no special reputation, he must prepare to see the musical artists paid for according to their worth.

If it is a fact, as we all seem agreed, that music is forty per cent of the performance, then why not consider that something like forty per cent of the cost of the show ought to go to the music?

If the engagement of an artist at five thousand dollars a week brings its just return in box-office receipts, in prestige, in publicity and advertising, why not pay it and be happy!

Do not misunderstand me. It is not necessary to spend anything like that sum. Good artists can be engaged for very economical fees.

If the motion picture field wants the big concert managers to turn their attention to the theatres, sending the internationally renowned musicians to them for special engagements, then this is the time to make the trial.

(Mr. Adams then gave some very interesting facts and figures relative to the amount of money which is spent upon high-class artists, and proposed to prepare for the field the Wolfsohn routing system for general use of one theatre in a city.)

Following this, Hyman Kraft, who is the youthful head of the New York Concert League, made a very impressive address. He said that he was supplying artists now, and making good and giving many services which are related to music in the film—sending out everything but the film; that he had engaged Nat Finston as his musical director and felt that the first consideration must be given to work such as his and Mrs. Bendix.

Said Mr. Kraft: "I have tried before to get some of the big stars. Galli-Curci stamped her foot and said never, never, never, about singing in a film theatre. We couldn't use Josef Hofmann, he wouldn't pay. We know the kind of people who are needed, and we are making good. But we're glad to see the newer houses come in; it's good competition and this field is very young."

Following Mr. Kraft, Mrs. Bendix made a very brief speech in which she said that the exhibitor was a very much maligned individual. She found him always agreeable and amenable to reason, and ready to appreciate the good in music.

Said Mrs. Bendix: "I am now supplying artists to over thirty important theatres. The routing scheme is now in operation. And we know just how to run it. But we welcome the big houses too."

The Kind of Music to Be Used

IT was Ernest Voigt who first touched upon the matter of the kind of music to be used, and although this phase of his address was passed over in the heat of the conservatory discussion, it came up for reiteration, confirmation and argument all through the three meaty days.

Stated in a paragraph, I think I can put the conference attitudes on music in the following analysis:

How much popular music can be used as compared with standard or classical music? How can operatic airs be incorporated? Shall the leader in the theatre be left upon his own resources in the making of his programs and scores for pictures? Can there be some method of standardizing music in an emotional and psychological manner? How useful is the cue sheet in its present form? How may it be improved? Should a picture be accompanied by a complete score such as is contemplated by the new organization known as the Synchronized Music Company? Should a big feature be accompanied by a specially written score such as that which Joseph Briel has composed in the past?

Many publishers were present in the convention, the principal makers of cue sheets had their story to tell, and composers added their point of view. Also exhibitors told of their experiences.

Although Charles K. Harris, who is composer, publisher and exhibitor, declared that the popular music is so essential to the exhibitor that he can close his doors without it, the general consensus of opinion seemed to be that popular music having its place in the theatre, the larger need is for what might be termed standard music.

Samuel Rothafel, Hugo Riesenfeld, Edward Hyman, Buel Risinger, Erno Rapee, Max Winkler and many others said in various ways this idea:

"The lyric of a song if that song is popular is also popular. Hence, if the words of the song do not agree with the action of the play, it cannot be used in scoring. To illustrate, 'Good-bye, mother, I'm going off with Sue' could not be used in a scene with a young man making love to his sweetheart. On the other hand, it could be used where that same boy was bidding his mother good night. . . . No matter how nice the melody might be, the lyric must be considered, but it is not considered in standard music, which is taken purely for its emotional and psychological construction harmonically and melodically. . . . In the same way, however, operatic melodies must not be utilized. Thus, if the melody of "One Fine Day" from Madame Butterfly were incorporated, no matter how much the melody might fit, those who knew the opera would see the Japanese garden and the little lady praying for the return of her husband. . . . Music must be neutral in its original use to be most useful in pictures. . . . However, there are certain pictures where the use of standard or classical music would be simply ridiculous. Thus in Jubilo, whenever Will Rogers whistles, he should be given a popular hit for his theme. Comedies and slapstick and light dramas often call for musical comedy settings and jazz backgrounds, while the features of heavy proportions are neutralized and made ridiculous unless something substantial and classical is used."

Arguing for the making of special scores for every big feature, not factory-made, but inspiration induced, Joseph C. Breil made a brilliant address. Mr. Briel was introduced as the founder of picture scores—he made the first in "Queen Elizabeth" for Sarah Bernhardt and then brought out "The Birth of a Nation" for D. W. Griffith. S. L. Rothafel commented upon the fact that nothing has ever surpassed Briel's "Nation" score. Mr. Briel has been one of the heartiest supporters of the conference idea, and was not absent for a single moment during its sessions.

The Perfect Motion Picture Score

I am not here to tell the motion picture producer, or the motion picture manager, his business. It would be a rather presumptuous undertaking. But I have been identified with screen productions longer, perhaps, than any musician at this gathering, and as a consequence I have been privileged to observe from within practically every phase of the growth of the screen play and the development of motion picture music.

In screen plays I have seen the best and the worst. In their music scores I have heard the worst, and up to date (including even my own) I have not yet heard the perfect music score.

Therefore I ask your indulgence while we observe what is now—and what might be or what should be.

It is more than eight years since Mr. Frohman and Mr. Zukor summoned me to discuss with them the making of a music score for the first film play that the Famous Players released. It was "Queen Elizabeth" with Sarah Bernhardt in the title role.

Up to that time I had given no thought to the screen. In fact I was among those who had stayed away from photoplays. But when I saw this film and the magnificent acting of the "divine Sarah" and Lou Tellegen, I became converted.

I decided at once that the music for this picture should be a unit like the score of an opera. I was given but two weeks to do the work—a woefully short time in which to write a new score for even a short four-reel film as was that.

The thought of adapting from other composers never entered my mind. I went to work and mapped out a scheme for the composition and then set out to do it.

The first thing was to create motifs for the principal characters of that play. Having established these, the composition was comparatively easy, except that the motifs or themes as they are called in motion picture parlance, could not be subjected to absolute and full development—such as the technical musician would have it—but they had to be made to synchronize with the action on the screen and to melt into each other without being abrupt.

This brings us to a point to consider in this dissertation. Ever since the production of "The Birth of a Nation" it has been the slogan of music writers for the screen to promulgate the motif or the theme. They do it often in the progress of a play but not always wisely.

A motif in a music score is like the seed of a plant. The seed is sown and soon it breaks through the earth and develops into a stalk or a tree. Then it blooms and at the end of its term it brings forth fruit and seed.

The stalk of any plant or tree does not look like its seed. It is larger—more beautiful and decidedly more fragrant. It has more life and more color.

And so, too, it should be with the motif in a motion picture music score. First plant the bare-bald motif. Then when in the action of the play it is brought forth again, let it emerge more enhanced—differently garbed. Do not bring again the same idea or piece of music in the same tone colors you had before, but alter its instrumentation, alter even its form.

If you had it originally in a two-four measurement, show it now in a six-eight, a three-four or any other movement that will fit the intensity or descriptiveness of the action. Invert the theme—break it into parts, make it lighter, make it heavier, do anything to it whereby you avoid repetitions. Thus you will add color to your score and above all you will avoid the monotonous droning of an ever repeated bit of the same thing.

And more important still, write the repeated theme in such a manner that you will not have to leave it abruptly but can easily melt it into the music that follows.

There is nothing so disagreeable in picture presentations as the blunt breaking off from one passage of music and the immediate taking up of another passage entirely foreign to it both in construction and in atmosphere. It savors of the crudest kind of vaudeville and suggests that a stage hand is ever standing by, ready with the hook to pull the conductor and his orchestra out of the spotlight.

Plainly the idea of thematic or motif treatment of motion picture plays has been much overdone. That is why today some of the finest and greatest pictures have musical scores that are not units. Rather are they a jumble of incoherent musical hodge-podge. Not long since I heard one such and it was so broken in its sequences that it suggested a flock of geese that had been disturbed in their bucolic waddlings by the antics of a frisky barnyard pup.

Just as the many scenes in a great picture play are all corelated, so, too, must its score be a collection of logical and corelative musical sequences that melt into each other. The composer must remember that a character whom he has labeled with a theme at his first entrance does not appear in the same condition—in the same surroundings—nor in the same psychological mood at each reappearance.

Therefore his motif must in its further presentations be varied to suit the new situations. And the greatest development of the theme must not appear in the early part of the score but towards the end where is the climax of the whole action. Thus is created a great and a lasting impression on the auditor.

Hitherto most music scores for photoplays have been adapted from compositions that had seen light of day before, under other conditions. The reason for this has been principally the short time permitted to put together a score. This is at present the greatest fault in motion picture production.

Adequate time should be given the composer to allow him to acquire absolute familiarity with the film. No matter how brilliant a mind is the composer's, he cannot grasp immediately all the points that the producing director has sought to bring out in his film.

Perhaps the director has spent days and weeks over certain elements of his play—and I dare say there are some producers and promoters here who have experienced this to their financial sorrow—and yet the composer is asked to grasp it all overnight.

Therefore, Mr. Producer, if you want the best music for your film, have consideration for the composer. Give him time, just as you give your director time to stage the play, for the ultimate success of a photoplay depends not only upon the artistry that your director displays—not only upon the acumen and skill of your camera man—but equally with them upon the musician who interprets their work. In fact, music is the one thing that plays directly upon the sensibilities of the audience.

Therefore I maintain that the producer must ultimately come to a realization that the film which in the future will make the greatest appeal, the greatest success, will be the film which is not only great in its conception, great in its direction and great in its photography, but also has its own great individual music score.

Just like an opera, or a musical comedy, the feature film must have its own music score. The story, the staging, the photography and the music should all be made to fit each other. Never once should the mind of an auditor be diverted from the action of the film by the sudden recollection that he has before heard somewhere else this piece of music or that he heard and saw Dotty Dolly Dimples sing and dance that strain in such and such a show. The only justification for the introduction in a feature film of a composition of old is when the film story has some direct bearing upon that composition. In other words, when the photoplay presents, we will say, all the beauties, comforts and the spiritual attractions of a home, it is perfectly proper to interpret it musically by the old familiar "Home, Sweet Home." But that is no reason why all the other music, too, should be culled from here, there and everywhere.

What would you think of a novel that was made up of some chapters from Dickens, others from Thackeray, some from Chesterton and others from Laura Jean Libbey? Or would you have your photoplay made up of some scenes from a Griffith play, others from a Tucker, some from an Ince play, others from a Sennet side-splitter? And yet that is what you ask your musician to do when he is set to work at a music score for your film.

And a last word to you. Remember that not every man who can write notes on music paper a composer, even if he is a member of the union. Nor is every man who can write notes on music paper a composer.

The composer who writes a photoplay score must be a cultured musician of diversified talents, just as must be that composer who succeeds in having an opera, a symphony or a musical comedy produced under reputable management and by reputable organizations.

He must be a thoroughly trained and scholarly musician, a writer possessed of dramatic comprehension and intelligence, and one who possesses that sixth sense which tells him what the audiences can understand and what they will appreciate. Plainly he must be a composer whose work will bring crowds to the box-office. He must be an artist first.

Then came the subject of cue-sheets. The foremost cue-sheet maker in the country, Max Winkler, backed by S. M. Berg and others, made a capital defence of the cue-sheets. Mr. Winkler, who is a great humorist in his way, furnished a good deal of the entertainment of the meeting. He criticised some cue-sheets on the ground that the makers are too high brow—and he brought out one instance in which he showed that most of the music indicated was out of stock. Mr. Winkler believes that a few standard works should be bought, the popular music generally eschewed and the musician should stick to his few works, substituting as he goes. Mr. Winkler spoke of 300 compositions which he uses in his catalogue—all of which are obtainable. He says that publishing conditions must be considered.

In the discussions about publishings, often times the music tax became hopelessly involved, but I shall try to keep the two ideas separated and explain presently.

A Word from Sid Grauman

"Kindly wire or write my publicity director, Arthur Wenzel, a full report of what just transpired at the Music Conference that will interest motion picture exhibitors. Stop. Regret exceedingly that I was unable to attend such an important conference. Congratulate you and the committee on your noble work in helping to perfect music in the motion picture theatres. You have my support at all times. Best wishes.

The Cue Sheet for Pictures

Max Winkler, talking on his subject of cue-sheets, spoke as follows:

"The music score was to a great extent responsible for the success of 'The Birth of a Nation.' The moment exhibitors, film producers and musicians realized what music meant to pictures, they all tried to do what Griffith did. They all tried to make money with the assistance of music. Like in the days of '49 there was a rush of gold diggers which brought forth a mass of musicians calling themselves business men trying to commercialize the idea of 'music to pictures.' The first solid result of their efforts is the music cue, I believe known to every one of us. In a short time the music cue attained popularity, and like everything that is popular, it has been subject to severe criticisms and as in the majority of cases 'we didn't all agree.' Every musician and musical business man as I call him was out to get his share of the money the various film companies expend for the compilation of music cue sheets. Most of these gentlemen were unsuccessful and resorted to severely criticizing and condemning the music cue.

"Gentlemen doing this work have had to digest these criticisms and why? This is just the reason why I am here today and I welcome the opportunity to eradicate any unworthy opinion which may have taken root in the minds of the people in this industry.

"In my estimation a musician only will never be able to compile a perfect music cue sheet. By perfect I don't mean the fitting of a particular musical number to a certain scene. It is impossible to agree on this subject, because a scene which may strike me as being funny, may seem sad to my neighbor. There are other reasons why only a musician cannot compile a music cue.

"The music cue is meant to serve the majority. Exhibitors employing large orchestras, and a man especially to conduct, will not accept the music cue sheet because he is under the impression, and I really believe, that he can do it better because he is more thoroughly acquainted with the musical intelligence of his audience.

"Musical compositions suggested on music cues must be published for every conceivable combination of instruments used in the United States today. The man compiling a cue sheet must be acquainted with what can and what cannot be purchased in every part of the United States. If the musician compiling a cue sheet is an orchestra musician, he may mention a great many numbers not obtainable for organ or piano solo, because he is not acquainted with the organ and piano solo libraries, and vice versa with the musician who may be only an organ player. I say this to impress upon you that a man compiling music cues must not be a musician thoroughly acquainted with the game in general but he must also know the publishing business.

"However, one of the most important factors to a great extent condemning the music cue, is the idea that the making of these cue sheets is in the hands of a gang of publishers and publishers' tools employing the music cue as a medium to advertise their publications.

"Bear in mind that no music cue is designed for such institutions as Shea's Hippodrome, of Buffalo, the Strand and Rivoli of New York, and other theatres whose musical destinies are in the hands of competent directors and managers. In my estimation there is no living man who could enforce his idea upon men of such calibre as H. B. Franklin, Hugo Reisenfeld, and a great many others. As far as I can understand the music cue is nothing but a musical continuity, dividing the film into musical characters. The fact of the matter is, I have selected about 300 compositions, representing characters most likely to appear on the screen. I have selected the 'Elegie,' by Massenet for scenes of a pathetic character; 'Cavatine,' by Bohm for pathetic scenes of dramatic character; 'Birds and Butterflies,' for light and gay scenes, etc. By continuously using the same numbers I will ultimately compel the musicians to purchase these particular compositions and become thoroughly acquainted with them. The consequence is that whenever these compositions are mentioned on the cues, the musician can intelligently substitute with numbers he has in his library. In brief, a music cue is not positive, but it is to serve in helping disclose the character of the coming film in musical terms.

"Let us for a moment consider the consequence if most music cues listed new and different material for every picture. There is no doubt but that such a cue would be valueless, for the simple reason that the compositions would be unknown quantity to the musician. Ninety-nine per cent of the music cues are used by daily changing houses. Without exception the films and cues reach the theatre a few hours before the opening performance. After going through the cue sheet the musician will throw his hands up and exclaim: 'I haven't got this stuff and there is no time to get it.' Consequently the first performance is nothing short of guess work, the next a rehearsal and by the time the thing is perfected another film is due. I admit there is room for improvement, and I do not claim that the music cue is a perfect solution of the problem; however, I believe it is for the small house.

"There is no question but that a perfect music score is THE thing. But, don't forget that a music score compiled for general use means that the exhibitor cannot use his own ideas, but must play what the music score contains. You will agree with me that there is not one clever enough to create something that will meet with the approval of one hundred per cent. The music score is nevertheless the only medium for an appropriate musical accompaniment. I personally believe that a musical director in collaboration with the exhibitor is the only one to compile a perfect music score in strict harmony with the musical intelligence of his audience. They can gradually educate the locality and bring their programs to the point of perfection.

"I believe I have said enough and in conclusion wish to impress upon you that I am progressive enough to realize that the music cue sheet is not a solution of the problem, at the same time I must admit I have no other remedy. This is one of the purposes of this convention. We are not here to tell one another how wonderful we are. We are here to construct, improve and possibly perfect. Let us therefore review our faults and errors and try to benefit by them, and consider only one thing—'Better Music For The Film.'

"Let us get together and conceive a definite idea out of the conglomoration of advices and criticisms which may be offered, and arrive at a style of exhibiting pictures and give the public a good feature and an excellent concert for a single admission price."

Classic vs. Popular

SPEAKING to the subject of popular versus classical music, the following came from Charles K. Harris, who will always be remembered for his song, "After the Ball is Over."

"Now, there are many sides to the question of music that I can speak from. I am a music publisher, a scenaric writer and an exhibitor. I've worked the question from all sides. Now as to music from the publishing viewpoint. Music is music whether it's a popular hit or a grand opera. It is God-given. Then again there is no popular music and non-popular. All music is popular. The reason why my songs have spread so wide is that there is a little homely story in every melody. A story of love, mother and home—that is my creed. Now as to popular music in the motion picture theatre. If you cut out popular music in your motion picture house you can close up your theatre. Popular music is all-essential to the film. Why, can you play a classic to a Charlie Chaplin comedy? It would kill the picture! You can't get along without popular music, and don't fool yourself. Of course, popular music should not be used all the time. Once a classic and then a popular in their right places."

The speech of Mr. Harris and that which was made by others present roiled the classical publishers, and finally. O. F. Sonneck of G. Schirmer arose and in a clearly defined speech brought out the attitude of the classical folks. Mr. Sonneck was Librarian in Congress and is a great authority and composer himself.

"G. Schirmer, Inc., is a music publishing company and like other publishers have made their mistakes. But we are willing to rectify these mistakes. We have not really understood the needs of this art, the motion picture musical side. We are trying to learn as far as the moving picture house is concerned, and we have certain plans that may be for the benefit of the motion picture industry. Again it may not, I cannot tell. Now I was very busy, but I came down here because I was told I might be wanted to say something, so I left my work and came down here. But when somebody stands up and passes slurring remarks about the house of G. Schirmer, I really think I should not be wasting my time to address you. But about popular music. I want to say a few words on that. A popular song may sell enormously when it comes out, but let a little while pass and it's dead. Now take a song like 'The Rosary,' published by G. Schirmer, or songs by Schubert, these songs will live forever, even from the commercial side of it. We can hold our own against the publishers of popular songs, in fact their music is not popular at all and cannot be made popular until it has to become popular. It may be all right for other music houses to talk of their own music, but they should not criticise other publishers who bring out the kind of music they feel like using. . . . I know that what is being given by the inspired writers and publishers is what is wanted in the larger sense by the exhibitors of the country."

The Music Tax

ONE of the biggest fights of the convention was precipitated by the matter of the music tax.

I had invited the Society of American Composers and Authors to come before the conference to settle certain problems. . . As I have stated before and as I repeated then, I see these facts:

The Society of Composers and Authors is able to enforce its tax; the courts have already given precedents which make their position impregnable. To fight them is one thing, to ignore them is another thing. Not to use the music represented by their society is within the power of any exhibitor. Then no tax need be paid. But to use their music and not pay the tax is running the risk of paying a fine which is many times the tax.

Everybody agrees that the tax is not prohibitive and is indeed very minor, and does not mean anything to anybody. But will it always be that—may it not become prohibitive—when the Society has the theatres all signed up, won't the price go up? Now several thousand theatres are paying the tax license, will they find in a little while that the license costs a lot of money?

So Mr. Rosenthal, the executive secretary of the Society, came before the conference and stated as follows: The tax never will be prohibitive.

> "Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen, I am empowered by our Board of Directors to say that we will go in writing guaranteeing to the industry for any term of years you may specify that we will not raise our present price of ten cents per seat per year."

Now this settled the question of price. The conference was about to ratify this as a pact which would clear this aggravating problem from the exhibitor's table, when other questions were raised.

Mr. Rosenthal explained that the composer deserved to be given his price for performance and that a million dollars would go to the composers for performance in the theatres. He said that he now represented most of the publishing industry.

S. M. Berg, asking if he had the privilege of the floor (he always seemed to assume that nobody wanted him, whereas everybody was glad he was present) spoke as follows:

"The American Society we know are perfectly justified in demanding their rights—legally the payment of this tax is right, but morally they are not. It has been the custom in this country for the musicians to go out, buy a sheet of music, and pay the price. The society said, 'We will do anything under the sun for you—play our music.' Then they sent over representatives and handed out music gratis and did anything and everything to get the publicity which the motion picture always gives. It is ment to say that if you buy a standardized piece of music for about $1.50 everybody knows that when you buy this piece of music you have the privilege of doing whatever you please with it.

"It has been said that the members of the American Society represent the cream of music in America. I beg to differ. It is true that they have the musical comedies and also the works of the genius of America, but we are in the motion picture line, and, frankly, we practically don't need any of their music. Mr. Rosenthal, you made a remark that in the past two weeks you have some new members, but if I may take the present status, I will tell you that we have better music that is non-taxable than you have in your entire society."

Later Charles K. Harris speaking to the point of the society said the following: "As to the music tax, I am a member and officer of the Society of Authors and Composers, a member of the Music Publishers' Protective Association and of the Music Protective Society. In my opinion 90 per cent of the music of this country is in that society—the Society of Authors and Composers—and without that music your theatres might just as well close up."

Mr. S. M. Berg, of the Exhibitors Herald: "Mr. Harris, I resent very strongly your statement that 90 per cent of the music is in the Society of Authors and Composers and also that without this music the motion picture theatre might just as well close up. Can you substantiate these facts? We don't need your music, and furthermore we won't use it."

O. G. Sonneck then declared: "You claim that 90 per cent of the publishers in this country are in the society. They are not. Take the publishers who are in that society, take the music they publish, that which is not already dead, take the music of the publishers out of the society, their current music, and then compare the total with the total of music in the society. After that, where do you gentlemen come off? No, we are not yet in that society. As you know, G. Schirmer, Inc., now means the Boston Music Co., Willis Music Co. and Hatch Company, and we have over a thousand branch stores in the larger cities of the country, and are working for the uplift of music in this country and in the interest of the American musician. We will fight his battles, too, and we will not join that society unless we are absolutely convinced that the hundreds of composers who are represented by us will get a fair showing in the share of the moneys that the society intends to collect. I happen to know that G. Schirmer and a good many other publishers are simply an open mind on this whole question and they are not going to commit themselves one way or the other until the Society of Authors and Composers will put before them a concrete plan which will convince them that not only the publisher is properly taken care of, under his rights as drafted by Congress, but also the composer. Until this time comes G. Schirmer's music will be tax-free. I do not say that they will always be tax-free. We are not thinking of ourselves but of the composer also, but whatever happens, one thousand composers certainly ought to get more than one hundred publishers. But our chief aim is to cooperate and we shall certain cooperate, once the time is ripe for the discussion of the plan."

Mr. Max Winkler, of Belwin, Inc.: "I resent Mr. Harris' statements very strongly. I will figure out to you that this 90 per cent belonging to the society only constitutes 10 per cent of the music used in the motion picture theatre. Let us see if there is enough popular music represented in this society. Popular music is used when the picture directly suggests it. Popular music is essential when the theme of the picture reveals entirely the theme of the lyric. However, I maintain that I personally am willing to see the justice of it, the Amerocan Society and the tax, but before anybody extracts ten cents out of my pocket I want to know what it is going for. Unless this society is put on a strict business basis they will not get 100 per cent. Imagine one million dollars collected out of the exhibitors, 50 per cent of which goes to fifty publishers and 50 per cent of which goes to THREE MILLION authors and composers!

Mr. Ernest Lutz, of the Marcus Loew Circuit: "We are not functioning right. We are here to better music in the motion picture theatre and here we are listening to the troubles of the music publishing industry. There is no use arguing, Mr. Harris' music is wanted in the theatre and Mr. Winkler's music is wanted just the same. What we want is to make motion picture music one of the arts and to develop the best kind of music in America. We love America, then let us make her the best!"

This was good. It brought the conference back to business. A good many people had forgotten for the moment the purpose of the meetings.

Summarizing the conditions: Whether or not the Composers' Society is functioning correctly is a matter outside of the exhibitors' business—that is up to the composer and publishers to get together and work out, elect new officers, make a new organization if necessary but settle.

On the matter of the tax: If the music of the Society is used, it must be paid for (so says the Court). The Society guarantees to the industry that the price will never be raised. So be it and the matter stands settled on that point at least.

For further discussion, a motion to act upon the Society through a committee was passed and the executive board will take that matter up through such a committee.

Standardization of Music

CAN an encyclopedia be drawn up by the industry which will give to the musicians of the world the analysis emotionally and psychologically of all music adaptable to the screen.

Such an encylopedia would be a Herculean task—as big or bigger a task than the original making of Dr. Johnson's dictionary. But it can be done.

Erno Rappee said that he has a book coming out which is useful in this direction. Ernest Voigt showed his book of emotional analysis in music. Hugo Riesenfeld showed the visiting exhibitors his library of 10,000 compositions which he has analyzed in this manner.

Think of Utopia. You want any kind of mood to be properly expressed. You turn to your encyclopedia and there it is—stated in fifty ways! See So and So and this and that.

It can be done! Will the industry jointly work it out for the good of all? Or will some private enterprise do it? A committee to see whether this can be done will be appointed by the executive board.

What Kind of a Man Is Wanted for Musical Director?

THE best way to answer such a question as this was to call upon the biggest men in the industry. On the first day of the conference, Samuel Rothafel, introduced as the man who pioneered the big idea from its infancy, the father of many who now are leaders and directors, the man who first visioned the future—was about to speak, when a telephone message informed him that one of his family was suddenly taken ill and was in danger of death. He had just started his speech when the message arrived, so it was postponed until later, and then he combined his remarks with those which related to the program at the Capitol theatre which will be taken up later.

What he said to the subject of the motion picture impressario is as follows:

Samuel Rothafel Speaks

"I think that the motion picture has done more to cultivate a popular taste for good music in this country than have most of the symphony orchestras since their inception. Let us take the Capitol theatre for instance—whose architectural beauty and magnificence is an inspiration in itself. There is no other theatre in the world which can house so many people during a week's performance, neither is there a form of entertainment—musical or dramatic—which makes its appeal to so large a portion of the amusement-seeking public. No symphony orchestra can play in a respective performance to any such number of people as come to the Capitol in a single day—both because of its physical limitation and the limited class of the public that attend the symphonies.

"This then is the contribution of the motion picture to the world of music. It supplies a bridge to a new world of wide vistas and unexplored beauty and delight.

"To my knowledge of the art of presentation, I try to bring an insight in the psychology of my audiences. I study the conditions that would influence in the slightest degree the success of my entertainments and shape and build my programs to meet the present demands and contingencies.

"The psychological application to this type of entertainment has broadened its scope so that today its possibilities are almost unlimited. It covers the field of music, general news, topics of the day, drama, comedy, travel tours, ballets and these interpreted by the coordination of music, interpreted with light, color, and architectural beauty has served to establish a new type of entertainment, of a distinctive atmosphere and a high standard.

"It has a universality of appeal. There is something which must appeal to both youth and age, to those interested in the simple things and those who find pleasure in the classical. Americans live at a rapid pace, but America's taste for entertainment is, I believe, every bit as fine as anything the more leisurely theatrical paths in Europe have to offer. The American is appreciative of the beautiful, but he is impatient and he will not sit through a long and tedious performance, no matter how artistic. He wants his entertainment quickly and well done and that is why this type of performance which changes with such rapidity and such diversion, at the same time supplying every element of artistic entertainment, has met with such popularity.

"Years ago, when I presented my first moving picture show behind a barroom in a mining town in Pennsylvania, I dreamed of the day when a theatre larger and more beautiful than anything ever built would house the presentation of a new form of entertainment grown from the seed of the crude 'movie' of those nickelodeon days.

"The germ of the idea first came to me when with perfect confidence in the great future of the motion picture, I thought of a manner of presentation in which the best results could be obtained. I first tried out the idea in the West where it met with instant success. I then brought it to New York, where at the Regent theatre was shown the first stage of motion picture entertainment as we know it today, with appropriate music, harmonious lighting effects and appropriate accompanying features. Continuous experiments, constant application, and the developing of those elements which I found successful, brought the presentations to its first house on Broadway, the Strand, and subsequently the Rialto and Rivoli.

"The appeal and charm of the picture are that it permits full scope and sway for the imagination and this is where the music functions in its relation to the picture, for music heightens the imagination and paints the picture for you.

"Music is my inspiration and into my score I try to put the dramatic expression of the pictures. I endeavor to express the dramatic theme of the picture by a musical theme and the counter theme of the story with a counter musical theme and these music themes cross and recross and are woven into the fabric of the score as the dramatic themes develop and build up through the climax of the story. Thus the dramatic value of the story is intensified and augmented by the dramatic accompaniment of the music. The same principle applies to the music for comedies and films of a lighter vein. There is just as much skill and attention required for stories written in a comedy vein as those of heavier dramatic texture.

"There is a human element in his organization which the exhibitor should never lose sight of, for I am a devout believer in the strength of organization and the power of 'esprit de Corps.'

"A good musical organization with each member coordinating and working in perfect harmony can rise to unlimited heights of achievement. Each musician in the orchestra is an individual artist, not a mechanic, and must be regarded as such. One must create an atmosphere of love and respect for him to work in so that he will give to you the best he has, not for the stipend that he may receive, but because he loves to do it. That atmosphere of harmony must be carefully watched and zealously guarded. Thus only can the program be successful in its fullest sense—in the careful nurture of the human element that gives it life and vitality. Thus alone will it throb and vibrate with the creative spark that each artist who contributes to the program imparts to it, until the whole is kindled into a flame of glorious achievement."

On the second day of the meetings, the honor guest was Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres. This man was introduced as the first of the musicians now in the theatres. That is to say, that Dr. Riesenfeld, who was trained to conduct opera and symphony, has chosen the film as his field, and made it an art.

The Motion Picture Impressario

"The subject allotted to me by Mr. Isaacson, 'The Duties of a Music Impresario in a Motion Picture Theatre,' is as wide as the world of motion pictures and music and as limitless as time. Those of you who have been with me through the birthpains of this new industry—and I take the liberty to call it an art—will sympathize with me. It never has been an eight-hour man's job. But I shall not cover the entire field assigned to me nor shall I try to tell you how to provide music for your house. You each have problems that are peculiar to yourself—the size of your theatre, its location, the size of the stage, the class of patronage, the size of the orchestra and the funds at your disposal. It would be futile for me to talk to you here in great detail about scoring pictures or selecting overtures or preparing the special numbers and so-called prologues that are put on at the Criterion, Rivoli and Rialto theatres. What can be done in New York can not be done in the same way in St. Louis, for instance. In fact, we can't do things at the Rialto that we can do at the Rivoli. Besides, the talent of America—I mean singers, dancers, scenic artists and so on—drifts to this big city and needs only to be found to be utilized. As for scoring pictures, I hope to see you all later when we shall try the only method worth while—that of seeing how the thing is done.

"There is one duty, however, that falls upon all of us with equal force. And to explain this I shall go back for a moment to the beginning of music's career in motion pictures and tell you something of its progress. And since you represent music, it will be the story of your progress.

"Before music came to the picture we had the nickelodeon—the cheap house with cheaper films which became a by-word in the land. Conditions grew so bad that the word motion picture almost lost its original meaning and came to stand for something cheap and degrading. Of course, people went to the movies then—but it was not with head in the air and chest out. It was something for which one almost apologized.

"Need I recall to you the conditions of the early day? Small stores were converted into so-called theatres by the nailing down of a few wooden benches. Admission prices were trifling and the returns small. And the pictures were changed every day. When the exhibitor's receipts were a mere pittance, what could the producer do? Could he even dream of stories especially written by famous authors? Or stage settings made by an artist of the fame of Josef Urban? It is to the credit of the pioneers in film production that they wrought as well as they did.

"Then came the music man. With good music as a palliative, people began to forgive the motion picture for its past sins. The creation of such theatres as the Strand and Rialto brought to the attention of millions the fact that motion pictures had in them the elements of the world's finest entertainment. The best people came. Some came to scoff and remained to praise. The newspapers, skeptical at first, finally accepted us as institutions. At first people explained that they came to the Rialto to hear the orchestra. Today they admit that they come to see the picture as well as to hear the music. If they don't admit it—we know it. The best music program, with a poor picture, will not crowd our houses.

"I have wandered into this bit of history to point out the one duty of music or the music-master. Fo the motion picture house he has been the advance ma into the field of respectability,—the connecting lin between those who appreciated the possibilities of mo tion pictures and those who scoffed or were indifferent

"Not that those who scoffed were entirely wrong Progress has been so rapid in our field that we ar too likely to forget with what we started. Music ha helped in that progress. Just as motion pictures mad these theatres possible, so these theatres—still em phasizing their music—have in some measure made the present high-class photoplay possible.

"Runs of a week and more, theatres that can pay tremendous prices for the rental of a picture gave the producers the help and encouragement they needed. Better pictures—longer runs. Longer runs—better pictures, and both resting on the foundation of good music.

"And the music impresario by doing his work well has brought a steady clientele to his theatre—a clientele that came irrespective of favorite stars or alluring titles. I do not know what part of my audience pays its way in because of the music part of the program. Seriously, I don't care. I know they like the music and we try to give them what they like, always remembering, however, that it is better to develop the public's taste toward the things that are worth while. Naturally the impresario has to move cautiously. We can not in one day develop an institution that supplies good music. It takes months, even years, to build up an orchestra. It also requires months, even years, to develop in your audience a taste for good music. Even something so prosaic as a music library, which seems so easily bought by a mere trip to the publisher, takes time and patience and much money to acquire.

"Early in the married life of music and film, music was sometimes ashamed of his helpmate as the pictures rarely measured up to the music.

"But we have passed that day. Our great difficulty now is to keep the people supplied with music that is in keeping with—and as good as the films we show them. The most beautiful music in the world is none too good for a good scenic—a moving painting that brings the Creator's choicest work to our vision. As the film art advances we are kept incessently trying to find adequate means in music to match the proceeding on the screen.

"Until now we have been able to score our pictures from the world of created music. You know the system. We divide each reel into so many scenes according to the mood. Then we find for every scene a composition or a bit of composition that fits the mood. It requires continuous search in the classics, modern and popular music.

"But can we keep that up forever? The limitations of memory leads to evils. The same selections are likely to creep in again and again. Even in my theatres, where we have a library of 10,000 compositions, these evils occur. How much greater is the danger in theatres where there is no such vast collection of music?

"There are musicians who dream of the day when the motion picture will have its own music, when each great screen production will have its own score, composed by a great musician when the world will be searched for a composer just as it is now being combed over for real authors to write the stories for the film. I hope to see that day, but it is in the far, far distant future. The present system of making films, the present system of releases, prevent any such dream from coming to quick realization. Even if we did have that necessary time where would we get the composers? The man who devoted his life to writing real music looks for more than money. He is thinking of posterity.

"What, then, can we do? We have our orchestras, and our organists with the gift of improvisation. We have adopted the leit motif idea—on the cue sheets they call it the theme—the idea that was brought to perfection in grand opera by Richard Wagner. It is a constant reminder to the audience that a certain character, with certain traits, is about to do something which has a vital connection with what he has done before in that same play. It is the thread of the story in music, something that keeps the various parts, acts and scenes from becoming separate units. Properly done, it unifies a picture play and its music. It is worth careful study by the impresario.

"Another matter that deserves attention is that of music color—music accompaniments for pictures. Because the orchestration of already-created music is usually arranged for concert purposes, that is, to be played by itself, with the greatest possible dynamic effect for that particular number, we are likely to lose sight of the fact that the score for a motion picture is not a series of orchestral numbers but an accompaniment in the truest sense of the word. May I go so far as to give you a little example? We have a certain classification in motion picture music, which we call mysterioso. As in all other groups every composition in that classification is arranged for the whole orchestra. On many occasions, however, a much more appropriate effect could be obtained by having the melody played by just one instrument, such as a double bass or cello or on woodwind. But no such arrangement exists. The conductor must either improvise or prepare his own score beforehand.

"California theatre concert wonderful. Over three thousand in the house and droves turned away. It is an object lesson for movie houses. The house was packed before 11 o'clock and was delighted with the class of people attending.

Pioneering for Better Music

The Bartola Musical Instrument Company's contribution to Better Music for Motion Picture Theatres is not new—we have maintained a school for motion picture musicians for years—a musical education comprising the principles of music as used for pictures has been given to musicians without charge. These musicians are placed with exhibitors also without charge.

The Bartola Musical Instrument Company's product is not only a musical instrument but a musical service as well—maintained for your benefit—to insure you better music.

This means something to you.

"The most essential part of the function of an orchestra in a motion picture house in my opinion, much more important than performing an overture, is playing to the picture. For the conductor this means that he must unlearn a great deal of what he has learned and disregard all dynamic and metric effects which the composer conceived and improvise a fitting dynamic accompaniment to the picture, accelerating or retarding his music according to the action on the screen. It is a much more difficult task than the layman thinks.

"Playing to the picture means using the notes of a composition and improvising a spirit for it.

"Now to something that is of rather timely interest.

"Once in so often some misguided reformer starts a campaign to curb or even to suppress motion pictures. With venom bred by a neurotic condition, he launches an attack that looks dangerous. Under the guise of Sabbath reform or some other so-called moral cause the personal spleen of an individual becomes a menace not only to an industry and an art, but also to the wholesome entertainment and recreation of all the people.

"It is in a crisis like this that the value of your music comes most prominently to your attention. It is music that has drawn the best people of the community to your theatre. The public that has learned to associate the film with real music will not let the hysteria of the reformer affect you.

"Take the case of the Rivoli and Rialto. In each house we have an orchestra of about forty-five musicians. We spend about half a million dollars a year on the two groups of musicians, including our singers, artists, dancers and conductors. It is not for me to say how good that music is. New York has decided. Each Sunday alone there are approximately 20,000 persons in those two houses. Add the Strand and Capitol and Criterion and the number reaches nearly 50,000. Of course, they see pictures, but they also hear worthwhile music. Where else could they get it?

"I'll answer for you. They might get it at Carnegie Hall or wherever one of our first rate symphony orchestras play. But would they go? The average American who is not passionately fond of good music will not take a chance on spoiling a whole afternoon or evening by going to something that is over his head—or over his wife's head. But he feels that if he goes to one of the good motion picture houses his chance of disappointment is reduced to a minimum. If he doesn't like the overture—and I must confess that there are persons who chafe under the delay occasioned by that number—he is almost certain to like the incidental numbers. Arias from famous operas—usually the most beautiful of simple melodies—are sung by voices that rival those of our best opera companies. English ballads—old folk songs—and the best and simplest songs from the Italian and French—all provide good music. The average citizen knows what to look for when he comes to us. With him it is no longer a risk of getting into water that is too deep for him and his family. In addition, of course, he knows that he will get pictures that range in quality, from fair to excellent.

"I might go on from this point and tell you how much the music impresario does for the cause of good music. We are a sort of missionary luring persons into our houses under the guise of giving them motion pictures and then converting them to the cause of music.

"Walter Damrosch, who, like his New York Symphony, is a national institution, told me four years ago, when we were still young, that we were making patrons for his symphony orchestra. I was proud and happy then. Since that time I have been working to make my orchestras grow with the public. I believe we are succeeding in a large measure.

"Adolph Zukor, considered one of the greatest in the world of films, said recently, in discussing the present and future of pictures, that after all is said and done, the director makes or mars the production. The director is the thing. So, in our case, I should like to sound a word of warning. Remember that the conductor is to the orchestra what the director is to a picture. He makes or mars your music. Beware of the poor musician, but beware even more of interfering with a good one. Give him his orchestra, tell him what you want and let him work out his problems in a musicianly way. If he succeeds, give him the credit. Let him grow as your business grows. And ultimately you will have an institution from which you will profit and in which your commuunity will take pride."

Brooklyn King Exhibitor Speaks

EDWARD L. HYMAN, held at a meeting of the board of directors, sent a brief speech, which follows. (Mr. Hyman is one of the livest wires in the industry; he is managing director of the Brooklyn Strand.)

"Your mission here today is to get the benefit of practical experience—plus progress and the success that goes with it.

"The distinguished speakers before me have taught us much.

'It is not my desire to nullify anything that has been said. My purpose is merely to give credit to the one great factor that has stood for progress in the development of music in the motion picture theatre.

"That factor is the American motion picture theatre patronage.

"They are responsible for music having won a supreme place with the picture.

"My schooling as an exhibitor came mostly from that veteran showman, Moe Mark.

"Mr. Mark always impressed upon me that I must have faith in the public.

"He always contended that the public must be given what they want. He always insisted that the public never went wrong in its final selection of its entertainment.

"The public has not gone wrong in its selection of music in the motion picture theatre. Mr. Mark's teaching has not been false.

"You here have done much to put music on a high plane in the theatre. The public has done even more.

"The wonderful development of music in the motion picture theatre is a tribute to the intelligence of the public. Had they not demanded the best in music they would not have been given it. For the public gets what it wants.

"Music's progress in the theatre is a reflection of the love the public has or the best in everything—especially music.

"We of the industry have been inspired and encouraged to give our patrons the best in music by the patrons themselves. They have been behind us in every advance. Their appreciation has spurred us in

"You are invited to the Brooklyn Mark Strand. We believe that Brooklyn Mark Strand music is a criterion of the good taste Brooklyn has for music. It is no monument either to me or to Mr. Reiser, but a testimonial to the Brooklyn people who demand good music and get it."

Special Entertainments and Exhibits—Explanations and Advice

It would be quite an oversight to pass over the news of the First National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Interests, without paying a tribute to the prelude to the conference. On Sunday evening, the night before the formal opening of the meetings, the New York Globe (through my solicitation as music editor) arranged a Movie Night at the immense De Witt Clinton Hall. The general public was invited free of charge, as in all the Globe educational series. The visiting delegates, in and out of town, were invited, and had a good time. They saw how enthusiastic a crowd of people could be made with just music.

Over 3,000 piled into the auditorium, which was filled by eight o'clock and then thousands more were turned away, necessitating the calling of special police cordons to handle the traffic.

All the people on the program were chosen from the motion picture music field—that is to say, those who are making a success in supplying music to film theatre audiences.

The Capitol theatre courteously loaned the Cumansky Ballet, which danced with the finest art and rivals with skill the best ballets of the Chicago and Metropolitan Opera companies. Alexander Cumansky is an artist of the first rank; his chireography places him as a worthy follower of Fokine and Balm. He dances to recall memories of Nijinsky, and his premiere danseuse, Mlle. Gambarelli, is nothing if not a second Genee. She is as light on her toes as a bird on the wing. All the members of the ballet delighted.

From the Rialto theatre came Eduardo Albano, familiarly known as the "King's Baritone." His voice is said to be the highest in the world; surely he sings with abandon, assurance and mighty manner, which recalls a combination of Amato and Titta Ruffo. Albano gave probably fifteen encores.

From the Strand circuit, and by special courtesy of Hyman Kraft of the New York Concert League, came dainty Amanda Brown, the soprano. Here is a coloratura who is dramatic and effective, with a voice of great flexibility and sweetness, and a manner that is delightful. No wonder she is featured as big as the feature pictures.

Felice Bann, cornettiste, made a novelty appearance, playing with the voice of a rich singer. She is beautiful and effective, and her coming (also through Mr. Kraft's courtesy) was singularly appreciated.

The guests of honor were Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld and Florence Reed. When Dr. Risenfeld appeared on the stage, an ovation was given him. I introduced him as I did later at the conference—the foremost musician in the picture field. Very brief and to the point, Dr. Riesenfeld told how he is changing public taste through his theatres and compared his work with mine as being parallel and similar in ideals. Dr. Riesenfeld commended the men of his staff and his associates as patrons of fine art.

Miss Reed, who was the only actress officially summoned to the meetings of the conference, was so named for her peculiar qualifications. She is an actress who has won renown in theatre and screen. Besides, she is a noted musician and lover of the art. She is a literateur and a broad-minded democrat and humanitarian.

"I am stage-frightened," laughed Miss Reed, as she stepped to the footlights; "you know I am supposed only to know the author's lines. This is an original speech and I am just going to ramble on. I am glad to be here and glad to be introduced, not as an actress, but a lover of music. It is my life. It is essential to my welfare. I need it all the time. I have music at home, in my dressing room and everywhere. In my present play I see how effective music can be. The play, "The Mirage," is brought to the end of the first act. I am listening to a long speech. I go to the piano and play to indicate the real meanings in my heart. I use Chopin and Liszt and MacDowell. When I first tried it, the whole atmosphere in the house changed. It put across the meanings I could not speak. Mr. Selwyn, the author of the play, was delighted, and we've never changed it since.

"When I see how musical taste is changing in this country, I should shout for joy. I remember only a little while ago when you couldn't bribe people to go to the concerts. Now they're pouring in by thousands. We can't take care of them in opera houses, concert halls, movie houses. Now people understand. Europe is sending all its greatest teachers to America, because this is the headquarters of the world in music.

"What is the reason? Reason stand up! (At this point Miss Reed insisted upon Mr. Isaacson standing, and despite his embarrassment, she continued): There's the main reason for it all. He's making millions of music-lovers. And then comes Riesenfeld and Rothafel and then the others. These men are making our country music-hungry. Thank God for them. I go around in my spare moments rooting for them."

Unfortunately a stenographer ran out of paper at this time, and the rest of the notes of Miss Reed's speech were lost. But the audience carried the ideas into their hearts. Miss Reed, who is beautiful, eloquent, magnetic and thoroughly flattering, had me too flustered to know what was being said. So I can't remember.

With Florence Reed and others like her, we are assured of intelligence in the studios and on the stage.

During the sessions, music was brought into the business to lighten the hearts of those who were present and to make it easier for the brains to operate. Winifred Marshall sang. This

BETTER MUSIC

For 37 years the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau has been engaged in promoting and directing the careers of the world's most distinguished musical artists. Practically every operatic and concert celebrity in the country has at one time or another been managed by this office, and today under its exclusive management fifty recognized artists tour America and Europe.

The growing movement toward better music—toward the BEST music—in the moving picture theatres is naturally a matter of no small concern to us. During the last few years we have watched it with interest; from time to time theatre managers have consulted us about broader musical policies and we have been instrumental in helping them on several occasions to present exceptional musical artists to the public.

Recent developments in the picture amusement industry indicate the positive necessity for soloists of standing and to meet this situation we are now prepared to co-operate with theatre managers over the country.

charming American soprano appeared in a costume of a French lady of the Louis XIV period. Beautiful in appearance, she sang exquisitely arias and songs. In this she was accompanied by Louise Knapp.

In the Theatres

AS had been announced, special shows were arranged at the Rialto, Capitol and Brooklyn Strand—each of them being analyzed by the managing directors. This feature, said the visiting exhibitors, was worth a fortune.

"If I were asked to pay a thousand dollars for what I learned at these theatres under the frank analysis I could not pay for what it was worth to me," said one exhibitor, and he was seconded by many others in the same idea.

Thus on Monday the performance was shown at the Capitol theatre, where the entire conference were the guests of Samuel Rothafel and the board of directors.

The delegates assembled at the beginning of the program and left shortly after the beginning of the feature picture had appeared on the screen. Returning to the Astor hotel, they listened to an analysis of the music as given by Samuel Rothafel and Erno Rappee.

How Rothafel Did It

IN beginning his analysis Mr. Rothafel said that the feature, being a light comedy, required light and humorous score and therefore the rest of the program had to be built around it, and the result was not of the best that the Capitol has provided.

"Most people disagree wtih the fact that I place the orchestra on the stage. There are a few reasons for doing this. The first is that the audience can see as well as hear the music, and the second is the orchestra on the stage is put on its mettle. Everything has its result. The dress of the men, their attitude, they are not considered merely mechanics but we can treat them with sincere consideration. Now, again, the atmosphere of a theatre is created almost entirely by its music. It has its result on the audience, has its result on the patrons entering, and has its result upon every soul confined wherever it can be heard.

"The overture is always played before the program—creates atmosphere—offers the background.

"Harmony of sight as well as sound. The orchestra is not dressed in evening clothes, but in the velvet loose-fitting coat and the careless tie. To add to this the color scheme. All this accentuates and helps to make up the atmosphere. If you have noticed, at certain points the bringing up of the lights also accentuates the atmosphere, and while it may not be good form and may be sneered at by our narrow friends who laughed when we mentioned motion pictures, it seems to be just what the public understands and appreciates. Do you know, there was a time when I actually went around begging men to take the job of handling an orchestra of about 25 men. I think there is more bunk in symphonic concerts that we have been hearing than there is in anything I know of that is supposed to be artistic and beautiful. There the orchestra on the stage, in evening clothes, no two suits the same, room improperly lighted, and white socks as the finishing touch to the evening suit. Still, someone asks, how do you know what the people want, how are you always up to the standard? Well, I find out what is the best seller. I visit the phonograph places, and find out which songs are the best sellers. Some time during the musical program I work it in, the audience hears it, recognizes it, and the first thing you know they say to each other, 'Why, we have that home!' and they appreciate it and that is the psychological side of it.

"You remember the striking of that one bell. Well, there was a reason for it. After that bell was sounded you were anxious to see what followed, and you were then ready to hear the few strains of 'Auld Lang Syne.' It appealed directly to you, it warms your heart. There is a reason for everything.

"Why, once I had a short West Point reel—what did I do? I went up to West Point, took out the commandant to lunch, and wheedled out of him all the songs and melodies that were used right at the U. S. Academy. When it was played this short 200-foot reel got more applause than you would get at the end of an overture.

"Now the accompaniment to the Edgar comedy. The entrance to the Edgar comedy places him in a little suburb of New York. The best way to get the audience to travel to the suburb is to let them hear the old reliable, 'On the 5:15.'

"The motion picture field offers a wider scope and is unlimited while the grand opera has a limited scope. You have every facility to interpret pictures. Some pictures are easier than others, some hard and very difficult, but as soon as you get a picture you can tell whether it is good or bad, and if good you can arrange the music for it. Arrange themes for the characters or the scenes and then develop them.

"You always have a theme and from that river a little tributary—that is the way motion pictures are going to be scored, properly cued and properly directed. With this you will have a psychological satisfaction.

"When we had 'The Mark of Zorro' playing, every time the picture or the mark of the 'z' appeared there had to be some recognition of it. We took a climbing of chromatics and repeated it just three times for every appearance of the mark of the 'z.'

"Then again light popular music is a great factor. Most of the best things can be done with the light popular music.

"I do not pander, and I never will pander. I will as an interpretative quality or accompaniment to a thing or not. I sit in the projection room and view the showing, and if there is anything in it that has any feeling, and if it satisfies me, then will I throw it out to the public. I will not accept the fact that the audience do not understand and know less, but if they know more I am very happy. I am the medium through which I submit everything to my patrons. If it appeals to me then I submit it to my audience.

"Should any of the present ladies or gentlemen wish to visit a rehearsal of the orchestra, if you will come to the Sunday morning rehearsals you will see how simple it is to handle a mass of men, how they are all with you to the end. The mere fact that a man is a musician does not mean that he is able to take charge of a presentation. There must be something else besides the musician, the musician is the fundamental and must be necessary, but the real thing nine times out of ten, the musician must have dramatic instinct, dramatic education and must know his subject. Make him proficient in his study of music but do not make him too academic. Then it will depend on his ability and further it will depend on his imagination. Any musician cannot take a stick in his hand and conduct any number of individuals. It takes more than an ordinary musician to be able to switch from a Beethoven symphony to an Irving Berlin melody, and still retain a certain amount of his dignity. Imagination and good taste send many pictures along. I will never use an aria from an opera that is well known as an interpretative quality or accompaniment to a motion picture. This creates a conflict immediately, if you have any imagination at all. When you hear the well known aria and you are viewing a picture, there immediately come up before you two pictures instead of one. This is one of the things to remember—neutral music.

"My first venture in photoplays lasted just four days. We had a dance hall and a bar in the back, and we borrowed 250 chairs from the undertaker. Every time there was a funeral we couldn't have a show. I never saw so many people die as in that time. I learned to master the art of operating a picture machine. With the course of time I got so proficient that I could run a film of 500 feet fairly well. Well, I mastered the art and soon had the best picture show in that part of the country. I wanted to do something more than that. So one day a tramp came into the barroom and drew a picture of a landscape on the window. I became interested and struck a bargain with him. He stayed with me three months and during that time he painted six or seven pictures on those walls, and then I began the use of indirect lighting. I made my own posters and got up at four o'clock in the morning to put them up on the main street. As things stand now I am satisfied, and I hope some day to have a motion picture theatre that will be right on a level and on a par with any of the arts as it is related to the theatre."

Mr. Rapee, conductor of the Capitol Orchestra: "There is not much more to add to the musical program than what Mr. Rothafel told of the little showman tricks. The orchestra is handled in the same way as a symphony orchestra is handled, with just a few little side tricks. The size of the orchestra is not an important factor. Sometimes volume must be eliminated.

"Playing to the news items, playing to pictures is merely interpreting music to action on the screen. You will gnd there are about eighty pictures out of 100 which cannot be interpreted. These pictures are so that you will see a love scene and then switch to a robbery and then back again to the love scene. This breaks up the continuity of the playing. In this particular case, suppose you take a love melody—the conductor will shape it and make it possible to use in connection with music. There are very few pictures which you can play with any kind of continuity. Light musical comedy music for action and atmosphere. An orchestra of from twenty-five to thirty men should always rehearse the complete program before the showing and besides allow your conductor an hour or two by himself with his orchestra. This is as a plea to all motion picture directors and is being now carried out by Mr. Riesenfeld of the Rialto and all the largest theatres on Broadway.

How Riesenfeld Does It

ON Tuesday the meeting adjourned to the Rialto theatre, and after the beginning of the feature, "Brewster's Millions," the conference sat around Hugo Riesenfeld's private projection room.

Mr. Riesenfeld showed the delegates his library of 10,000 numbers and explained in detail just how he has it sub-indexed by title, composer, and emotion. In the latter respect he showed how oftentimes a composition might be listed fifty times or more in the emotional catalogue. Mr. Wagner and others joined Mr. Riesenfeld in discussing how it is done.

Then going into a discussion of the program Dr. Riesenfeld said in part:

"We opened with the overture from 'La Gioconda,' using as you see the chorus of twenty voices. I had to put the people on one side of the stage instead of balancing them. This brings out the idea that every place must be considered separately. I do different things at the Rialto than I do at the Criterion and Rivoli.

"There is a difference between music that accompanies and that which describes. Oftentimes I feel that neutral music is best. I never leave music up in the air. I mean that I would rather in the news reel go over a second or two than not finish a phrase. I don't synchronize exactly for each subject."

Dr. Riesenfeld then analyzed with the pro and con for each number the score of his feature. The score is as follows:

1—In An Old-Fashioned Town (First Part).
2—D. Segue (After Baby's Feet) Serenade. Cesek. Make Repeat.
3—D. Segue (Dining Room) Danse Fantastique.
4—D. He Shoots Dice with Sugar Cubes. Flute Solo. (Manuscript).
5—T. And Thus the Grandpops. Danse Fantastique. (Again).
6—D. Insert of Military Academy Advertisement Seen. Trumpet Signal. Improvisation.
7—Grandfathers Argue. Faust Ballet No. 7. Make Repeat and D. S. (To Action).
8—T. And So the Grandpops. Spring Flowers.
9—T. The Blue Star Line. Organ. (Orchestra Intermission).

Dr. Riesenfeld explained that he lives one week ahead always. He forgets what is happening this week, because now he is thinking about the week following and making the score.

Dr. Riesenfeld told of rehearsals. "I spend the first rehearsal giving the men their markings—so that they can fix their own music and understand the cues."

Aida at the Brooklyn Strand

ON Wednesday afternoon the delegates visited the Brooklyn Strand especially to see the interpretative overture of "Aida," which was described in detail in the last issue. Mr. McLaughlin, assistant manager of the theatre, received the delegates and was very gracious to them, making them comfortable and happy. (See last week's NEWS for text and score of the Aida overture.

A luncheon was tendered to the visiting delegates at the Cafe Boulevard by Hyman Kraft of the New York Concert League. Informal speeches and a good time brought the first real social note into the meetings. A resolution of thanks was voted Mr. Kraft and the Concert League.

WHAT THE MANAGERS SAY

Newman Theatre, Kansas City:
I think you are worthy of getting all the business in Motion Picture theatres. First, because you are very faithful and you can be depended upon, and your artists are of the very best.

Frank L. Newman.

"However, since your service has been so highly satisfactory I am leaving the selection of these artists to you."

Milton H. Feld.

Riviera Theatre, Chicago:
"Artists decided hit for this I thank you."

Kohls.

New Capitol Theatre, St. Paul:
"This means that whenever an artist comes from Bendix that everyone can depend upon their being 100 per cent. There is no agency or circuit or booking office that can compete with such a line-up, and Artists should feel that when they are working for Bendix playing such houses as you now have, that they are playing the biggest and hardest houses to make good in, in the United States."

"The reports from the theatres now being booked by you have been very nice indeed. Everyone seems to be highly pleased with the treatment from your office and with the soloists you are supplying."

L. V. Calvert.

Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee:
"Within the next two weeks or so I will have some news for you which may be the means of your enlarging your circuit."

L. A. Landau.

New Ambassador Theatre, Los Angeles:
"I thank you sincerely for your efforts and trust we may again resume our very pleasant business relations."

S. Barrett McCormick.

Garrick Theatre, Duluth:
"I wish to acknowledge our appreciation for your efforts."

P. F. Schwie.

Madison Theatre, Detroit:
"Replying to your letter of the 6th. We also have been receiving many letters from Booking Agencies both old and new, but I will say that we are perfectly satisfied to continue our arrangements with you."

T. D. Moule.

Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee:
"We also wish to mention that we appreciate your services and the class of artists that you have been sending to us."

John R. Freuler.

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis:
"I certainly wish to thank you for your interest."

Ralph Lieber.

Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis:
"I also wish to say I have been very very well pleased with the artists you have sent us so far, and I trust that they will all be as good."

C. C. Perry.

Imperial Theatre, Montreal:
"Permit me to congratulate you on the splendid line of artists I am receiving regularly through your bureau. Your manner of booking and kindly assistance in cases of emergency are certainly more than appreciated."

H. W. Conover.

Lyceum and Crown Theatres, New London:
"I wish to express my appreciation and entire satisfaction for the excellent entertainment furnished by you."

Walter T. Murphy.

Olympia, New Haven:
"I am going to leave it to your good judgment to send the best one you can to meet the conditions."

W. E. Spragg.

What the Women Have to Say

MRS. A. F. OBERNDORFER, general chairman of the Music Department of the Federated Women's Clubs in the United States (5,000,000 members), was introduced and something immensely important was started. It was agreed that the Federated Clubs would begin a campaign to put their local clubs in touch with the exhibitors who show good pictures. It was fortunate that Mrs. Chapman, who is head of the motion picture division, was also present and she pledged her support to the idea.

Mrs. Oberndorfer's formal speech in part follows:

"Although I am here as representative of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, it is not on 'Censorship' that I have come to speak. As my topic has been assigned me and I have been requested to bring a message regarding the music work of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, as it relates to the motion picture industry, I suppose I shall have to try and remain within my subject for, at least, a part of the time that has been assigned me.

"We started our music work in the clubs with a definite aim that we will make music a vital part of the daily life in every community in America. Our motto is: 'To make good music popular, and popular music good.' Like the rest of the world, we club women realize that a tremendous opportunity lies before America in the building of a National School of Music. We know that as history but repeats itself, America is destined to be the leader of the world artistically in the immediate future, just as in the past, after every war the nation coming forth commercially and politically supreme, has always builded its national art.

"But a National School of Music in America is difficult to build among a people who have been taught for generations that they must look to European countries for the education, inspiration and actual accomplishment in music. We are not in the least awake to the fact that we have the greatest music in the world in the native Indian and negro sources of our music, and that from the beginning of immigration, way back in 1620, when the first ship load of foreigners came to these shores, we have been receiving ever since all the greatest and best of the world's folk music as our inheritance from that mythical 'land of our fathers,' which in America today embraces practically the whole world.

"We Americans have humbly submitted to be called a race of jazz and ragtime lovers, and by so doing we have rather definitely divided America's audience into two classes; those 'high brows' who have learned either a little or a great deal of the technique of the art, and therefore judged themselves capable of listening to good music; and those 'low brows' who openly boast that they wouldn't give an ear to what they are pleased to call 'classical' music. Now, all this wall of prejudice is broken down, it does not seem very possible to build a strong national school of music in America, and it is this false wall of ignorance, which is of course but another word for prejudice, that the music department of the Women's Clubs wishes broken into a million pieces.

"We have enough native music in America, in fact we possess the greatest primitive folk music which the world knows today..

"America has music enough, and good music enough, and we have singers and players enough, but the principal trouble in our country today is that we haven't audience enough. We have done practically nothing in a definite and national way to make good music a part of the daily life of every person in America.

"It is just because we realize that the industry, which you represent, can be the biggest audience educator in the world, that we five million women of the General Federation of Women's Clubs appeal to you to help us in our campaign 'to make good music popular and popular music good.' It will not be a very unusual thing if you are to find that the spreading of this propaganda will be of actual benefit to you personally, as well as to the building of a national art in America.

"There is not a theatre manager in the world who does not try to improve his musicians and his musical accompaniment every year; yet we are not going the entire way in the matter. We are using the language of music as a financial and artistic asset, but we are only in the kindergarten class in the use of that language; while in the production and reproducing of films we are taking college degrees, and in the advertising of star artists we have long ago gone away beyond the master class.

"Many musical organizations, and quite a few motion picture houses have found it to pay more profitably in the end to give the audience more than it demands, and thus as the audience develops so will the demand, until the greatest perfection in artistic performance will be the result.

"The entire basis on which all great dramatic music is founded is to make the audience, dramatic action and music of equal importance. Many times operatic composers have overlooked one or the other of these three compenent parts, which make up dramatic composition; but whenever this has been done, while in many cases the music may still be popular, the work itself has not been recognized as the highest form of dramatic, musical art.

"Richard Wagner, who taught the world the importance of 'making the audience a part of the being,' that is, the action on the stage, through the use of music, would have been the greatest motion picture scenario writer of the twentieth century had he been living today. Wagner lived a century too soon to have caused contention between the motion picture producers of today, but you can all use the same principles which he employed in his operas. Many of you know that whenever you have done so you have found an immediate response from your audiences. I mean specifically the use of a characteristic theme, or a characteristic instrument for each person depicted upon the screen.

"We all know that Wagner's principles have been used successfully, yet I am sorry to point out to you that you are still in the A, B, C class in the employment of the idea. Possibly you feel that your audience would not be able to follow a more complex method, but is it not quite as well to use a real Indian theme as an imitation one? Can you not use a real negro spiritual, or clog, instead of its cheap, vulgarized bastard-brother the blues or jazz?

"You spend millions of dollars arranging a Western production; you choose real Indians, real cowboys, real Spanish Americans of the old pioneer days. You arrange for every detail of costume, you have your stage director studying for weeks the life and customs of a certain tribe of Indians, just how the cowboys in that section dressed and rode, and how the Spanish Americans wore their clothes. Yet your music for your film uses cheap imitations of the Indian and cowboy themes. Maybe your organist will use real Indian music, but it is scarcely ever of the same tribe as that which you have so carefully depicted on your screen. Possibly the audience will not know the difference. Until motion pictures taught us in America, there were very few people who could differentiate between the Zuni and the Dakota Indians. All Indians were visualized in the minds of the public as fierce, wild creatures, with rows of feathers down their backs and much bead trimming on their clothes.

"Why do you not try to have real negro music instead of its cheap imitation? Your companies go away down the Mississippi to get the atmosphere of the lower South, and your musicians accompany this picture with a cheap, vulgarized version of a Virginia plantation air, written on the East Side of New York City by a man who has recently landed in America, and who has never been below the Mason and Dixon line. Then you use the same tune for the negro Creoles of Louisiana or Cuba, and again you use it just as cheerfully to depict the river boat negro. Now, each of those types has its own music, which is just as clearly distinguishable as its manners, customs and appearance.

"When you reproduce a cowboy scene, which is usually animated, your musicians search for something rapid and exciting sounding, and nine times out of ten play the 'Ride of the Cossacks.' Some of us remember seeing cowboys riding across the plain to the accompanimentt of the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and the 'Witches' Dance' of MacDowell is also popularly correlated with such a subject. Yet there is in America real cowboy music.

"Now, you have a big, squelching question to ask me: 'How will the audience know the difference, and as long as it does not, why should we care?' And I'm going to say that you have it in your power to educate your public to know the difference in two ways; either by employing a few words, telling them you are using the real things, just as you inform them that you have made your picture in Arizona, or Texas, or Wyoming; or you can help them to know these airs by playing them as interludes, with their titles thrown upon the screen.

"There are a few 'high brow' compositions, that in some miraculous manner have overstepped the wall between good and popular music. You have all used these, and you all have profited by using them. There is no one here who does not realize that the audience is closer to the picture because it recognizes the Handel 'Largo,' the 'Intermezzo' by Mascagni, or the 'Humoreske' by Dvorak when it is played. One could name twenty-five or thirty such melodies which have become universally popular in America, and I am glad to say that the motion picture theatres have helped to make them so; but cannot we increase the repertoire of the public, so that they will know a hundred such compositions, where now they know one?

"In many of the communities in America the Women's Clubs are working to make good music popular by the use of the Music Memory Contest. This plan of familiarizing the community with good music is the most attractive form of presenting musical compositions to both the old and young of America. The plan of operation is doubtless familiar to you. A committee representing the musical interests of the town selects a certain number of good compositions, and these are played at school, at the motion picture theatre and in the home, for a certain period of time. Then a contest is held, at which eight or ten of the numbers are played without program, and the contestants write down the name of the composition that they have heard, who its composer was, and some brief facts about the work itself. Prizes are given for the best papers turned in.

"You motion picture men can do more to educate your audience to an appreciation of good music by any such method of arousing a community interest in good music. And by making good music popular you will automatically make popular music good. Theodore Thomas once said: 'Popular music is familiar music': therefore the women of the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America ask for your cooperation in making the real and the true, the popular and familiar music of America."

"My gratitude to you all for what you have done in calling this conference. It is better than anybody could have believed.

"ERNEST LUTZ,
"In charge of music, Marcus Loew Circuit of Theatres."

An important discussion followed somewhat in this manner:

Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer, General Chairman of the Music Department of the Federation of Women's Clubs in the United States—"We have the greatest opportunity to make America musical through the movies than we have through any other phase. Good music in the theatre will make good censorship. And when there will be good music in the theatre we won't need censorship. The music, and the drama is of the utmost importance because the music, the drama and the audience are all of equal importance, and we will use every facility to cooperate with you motion picture exhibitors. When we are made to realize that you are the greatest force then will we work with you. But the exhibitors are not working with the women's clubs, and I suggest that some resolution be sent broadcast to the many exhibitors in this country urging them to admit a solicitation of the various organizations in their community that will help to bring better presentations of pictures and a similar better liking for good music. The motion picture theatre is the medium through which popular music must and can be made good music and good music popular."

C. M. Tremaine of the National Music Advance Bureau—"We have two great forces—the motion picture house and the women's club. I think that the chairman of the music department of the women's clubs and the chairman of this organization should be put on some committee and I feel that a great deal of good will result. These people could suggest certain changes that might be brought about and certain things to do, recommendations to give out to the motion picture theatre and then the women's clubs could tell their own members that they effected these things and tell them to patronize the houses. To commend once in a while, to suggest once in a while and within the course of a very short time the exhibitor will be asking the women's clubs for suggestions for the good of the house."

Mrs. Chapman—"What the women's clubs want the motion picture exhibitor to do is to use their forces to carry out their ideas. What the motion picture people want the women's clubs to do is to help them make more money. With these two forces I don't see why they can't work in close harmony—to make their local house the best and to get all the people of the community to patronize the best. As Mr. Tremaine has said before and to this I turn again, get the joint information of the Advance Music Bureau, add the women's clubs and spread it between the exhibitors of today. It is my intention to urge upon the women of the country in every community that the local chairman of motion pictures shall make it her business to become personally acquainted with the local exhibitors. They shall attend the pictures and whenever they see a good picture they shall make it their business to tell the owner that that was a fine picture. But when a poor picture is shown, to go to the manager and tell him that they cannot get the women to come to see that picture; it was not up to the standard of the house, and since he has been hearing commendations from some of the patrons he will listen to these women and try to ask their help in picking pictures that come up to the standard. If we start to work in this way directly in cooperation with the exhibitor on the kind of picture to show, we can then work in active cooperation with the playing of music and the kind of music to use.

A beautiful speech on women and music was delivered by Mrs. Winifred Stoner, editor of the Forecast.

"Woman representing the great mother spirit of the universe, has more power than man to make the world better or worse. She is the potter that moulds humanity's clay. Upon her depends the good or bad citizenship of any nation.

"Women of to-day are recognized as leaders in all educational movements and women even more than men realize that of all the liberal arts, music has the greatest influence over young people. A well composed song sung by a real singer produces a greater effect than the best moral book that has ever been written. The book may convince our reason that we should do right, but the song warms our hearts and inspires us to BE RIGHT.

"And there is no better place to introduce good music than in the picture houses that work such an influence for good or for ill. The picture houses even more than the schools are acting as America's educators of old and young; of native and of foreign born; yes even of rich and of poor. Crimes have been traced to seeing scenes of happy and lucky criminals displayed on the screen and poor foolish girls get their ideas of how to catch a rich husband through seeing scenes of love matches made on the top of a Fifth Avenue bus or through being a movie actress, etc. In the same way a taste for jazz instead of real music has been created in the hearts of young people.

"One's musical taste is no doubt created by the lullabies we hear at our mother's knee. A baby of American blood born in China and hearing from a Chinese nurse Chinese music would have his taste cultivated to like that kind of musical sounds—sounds that are as discord to the lover of Beethoven and Mozart. Some years ago the Shah of Persia when attending grand opera in London evinced great pleasure when the men in the orchestra were tuning their instruments, but after the real music began he was not pleased. The first sounds, he said, were like those his nurse had made to him when he was a baby, but the real music he could not understand. His ear had not been educated either to the sounds made by Nature's orchestra of waters, winds, insects and birds—and neither had he heard the beautiful reproduction of these sounds as expressed by great artists. Naturally he was less capable of appreciation than the Indian child who had been hung as a papoose where birds and leaves sang to him, or the native African who slept in the jungle and listened to the call of his jungle

MUSIC TO FIT EACH FOOT OF FILM

WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR EVERY FEATURE YOU SHOW

No matter where your house is located—no matter what distance from Chicago or New York—you can have your music specially arranged and directed by such musical celebrities and scenario score writers as Carl Edouarde, Director of Music at the Strand Theatre, New York City; James C. Bradford, director at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and C. J. Briel, composer of the music score of "The Birth of a Nation."

Ask your orchestra leader, pianist or organist what this would mean—how it would please your audiences. These men are on our staff and personally supervise all music issued by Synchronized Music Service.

When you use Synchronized Scenario Music Service you are assured of having proper music at all times and you eliminate all expense and trouble of preparing scores and purchasing a lot of unnecessary music that would be used but once.

Practically the entire country is now covered by our representatives—from New York to California, Mississippi to Minnesota. WRITE for name of our representative in your territory.

You cannot possibly afford to be without Synchronized Service, so write for information at once.

brothers blessed with musical voices. And that is the trouble with our city bred children. They do not have the opportunity to become acquainted with Mother Nature's orchestra and they do not have their ears educated in schools and picture houses to appreciate real music.

"It has been truly said: 'As a nation's music so is that nation in morals, power, and beauty.' We no longer have intoxicating beverages to steal away our senses, but some people are intoxicating themselves with jazz music. They go on jazz drunks and jazz does not elevate and inspire one to do glorious deeds. Nature's music, the language of the spheres is also the language of the soul that inspires us to lead healthier, happier, more beautiful lives. It is without doubt the greatest of all educators, but how few of us are trained to assimilate real music, the gods' intoxicant, that takes away sordidness and lifts us up to the stars! .."Our ears are trained to listen to the sounds of street traffic and the rumbling of elevated trains. Children hear more of jazz than of Beethoven and razzle dazzle instead of grand opera and that is why we have no American school of composers. The children in sunny Italy are trained in Nature's school and through hearing their parents sing to them in the cradle and their friends sing in the streets. The children in Germany, until the late war, were trained in an atmosphere of music and of song. The children of Russia in the same atmosphere. That is why so many of the world's greatest singers and composers have come from these countries.

"Music in this country is for the classes, not the masses.

.."In the picture houses to-day Dr. Riesenfeld, Charles D. Isaacson and other great music lovers and educators are striving to give the works of great masters through the playing of fine musicians to those who attend picture houses. They believe that although some of the grown-ups may not enjoy the music, enduring it only until the picture appears, yet there will be some mothers who will receive music's message and carry it home to their babies, and there will be many children who will become accustomed to harmony, melody, and perfect rhythm of sound so that they will learn to love real music that will inspire them to be good citizens with noble purposes."

The Producers Speak

IT appears that most of the producers were ill or in Chicago. But representatives did come down and something was said which showed that the producers are sympathetic.

Mr. Albert Parker, who has directed Clara Kimball Young and Douglas Fairbanks, and is now the head of his own producing company, appeared with a swollen face and exhibit A of his toothache. He said that he felt his pictures could be killed by the wrong music; that the right music improved his best efforts 25 per cent. He also declared that he hoped for the time when the scenario writer and composer could get together at the start of the work and continue to think together. In the studio, declared Mr. Parker, who is handsome as well as eloquent, he used music to put his actors in the right frame of mind.

E. W. Hammons had sent his speech in advance and here it is:

"Without disparagement of my friends in the feature field, I believe that the short subject and proper music, in combination, have done more for the advancement of the motion picture theatres than any elements which have entered the industry in the past six years.

"Certainly these two forces have worked distinctly to the advantage of each other, and there has been a team work that is remarkable in the field which has not always been known for its harmony. Pioneer as Educational has been in its particular realm we found the first great leaders in theatre conduct and from you creators of music for the millions.

"I say from the very start, for with the first picture that we released S. L. Rothapfel afforded a surrounding that made this single reel one of the sensations of the day at its showing at the Knickerbocker theatre. From various sections of the country, especially from those that today stand at the head of showmanship there was not only a sincere welcome of our product, but an appreciation shown by the musical presentation of our pictures which did a great deal to encourage us in days of very modest beginnings.

"I have never claimed to be a prophet, but I did have the confidence in the better theatres when I started Educational Films Corporation—to the extent that I left another very profitable field and invested my every cent in an organization to give you the very supreme of entertainment in one and two-reel pictures. I believed that you gentlemen would welcome the same quality in these short subjects that you demanded in the best of your feature pictures. But there was another and very strong element that entered into my decision.

"You will recall that just six years ago a sort of Klondyke rush to the feature picture had begun. Most producers were devoting their efforts to length in production; many of them thought of mere footage—as is shown by the few producers of those days who are in the field today. I do not mean any reflection when I ask you to remember the number of notable companies which had produced really good pictures in one and two reels, which were lost in the Chilkoot Pass in the struggle for mere length and for expenditure. It wasn't because the public did not want feature pictures, but because they demanded something more than mere footage—that they wanted a reason for the existence of each film that was offered to them, whether it occupied the screen for two hours or for ten minutes.

"That very mad rush impressed upon me that the public was hungry for something more than the five or six-reel picture—that it would not be long content to sit through some more or less elaborate drama and call it an evening's entertainment. You gentlemen were then seeing the value of music in the motion picture theatre. When you were offered the single reels that gave you opportunity for more variety not only in film, but in your musical interpretations you showed your appreciation by bringing us far greater business than our estimates had anticipated. I do not believe that the present development of the theatre would have been possible unless there had been such a company as ours, devoted to this purpose alone, entered the field when others were offering you length and so-called magnificence in production—even if you found it somewhat tarnished.

"I know that there could never have been our development without the musical surroundings that you gave our product. Your music, settings, your care in selection changed motion pictures from a mere show to true entertainment. Without such an evidenced welcome from you, we might have fallen into the temptation of producing the mere filler, but when, even in those comparatively early days there came from Minneapolis, and Buffalo, and from literally the four corners of the nation the news of the manner you were presenting our pictures, the settings of melody and artistry you were giving them, we were inspired to better things—and steeled to resist the demand for quantity at the expense of quality. We have always earnestly tried to merit the trust that you evidenced in us from our very beginning.

"It would be presumption on my part to talk to you gentlemen about the musical presentation of our pictures. Week after week you give so many notable examples of your ability to make these one and two-reel offerings stand out on your whole programs that it would take me hours to even attempt here to place a share of the credit where it is due. Just as our productions were few at first, just as the pioneers in music for the theatres composed just a little band, you have grown by the hundreds, with a sound growth that I believe has brought you all prosperity.

"Will you pardon the element of business when I refer to the fact that we have grown in a period of six years from a company that was warned to be entering on an insane venture, promoted, the wiseacres said by a man who knew nothing about the motion picture's future to a company that has a complete distribution system of its own at every important point in the United States and Canada and which enjoys a complete and most liberal circulation of all of its product to every portion of the world where pictures are shown. With the organization of this exchange system we have added one and two-reel comedies, have released frequent short subject specials that you have made real features of your program and just now we are including in our product the combination of three news weeklies.

"On a recent advertisement we announced that we were now prepared to offer everything that the feature needed fifty-two weeks in the year, except the feature picture—and the music. We will never be tempted to enter the feature field. We are content to leave that in other hands. But I do want to impress on you how much we appreciate the value of the music element to the success of the theatre, and how sincere we are in expressing our gratitude for the way that your musical efforts have contributed to our success.

"Gentlemen, the feature picture simply grew in length as a natural development. It was you who with your music and your immediate recognition that people demanded something more than the five or six reeler, that they wanted a rounded out entertainment and to your way of giving it to them—really meritorious short length pictures in an atmosphere of complete delight that doomed the tin-panny nickleodeon and brought it the orchestration of the arts.

"It has been our delight that we have been able to contribute something to the doom of the store show, some encouragement to the creation of the national institutions of motion picture."

In addition certain producer speeches were delivered (the following comments are only in part):

Mr. Pritchard, representing the Educational Films of America—"For the last few years we have been making single reel scenics and every picture that we have made has been shown at one of the largest theatres in the city. We have been working hard for the last few years and have tried to make these pictures worthy of the music and of the position in the program that they receive. In fact, the musical settings have been specially arranged for these single-reel pictures. I do feel that the musicians of the country have helped us in this and stimulated the interest in these reels and have been responsible in a great degree for our success."

Mr. Crandall, representing the Equity Pictures Corporation—"It is my belief that music in connection with motion pictures will be the beginning of something which will revolutionize the industry. I predict that when the next convention of this kind is brought about, six months or a year from now, that this hall will not hold all the people that will be happy to come and who are vitally interested in it. Now, I want to tell you of a bugabco, a bugaboo that exists between the producer, the exhibitor and the word music. You can never get a number of exhibitors to get together to talk on music unless they are educated to the value of music. But the average exhibitor will not. Now, I will tell you what I think of the musician and the exhibitor. I speak with authority and from experience. The great trouble is that the exhibitor and the musician are not together on a wage scale. You can start out and form your Coast to Coast plans with Tetrazinni or Galli-Curci, but until you make that scale for the exhibitor you can do nothing. There must be a price for every theatre owner, no sliding scale and no change in price. Broadway theatres do not represent the last thing in music or in art, because the little fellow in the small town is also working toward that end. Not only does he want the good pictures, but wants good music with his pictures."

Mr. Bray was unable to be present, but he was represented by a gentleman from the Columbia Phonograph Company, a Mr. Doray, who has delivered speeches upon the subject of music in the educational field where films are shown.

From the Instrument Makers

HEADING the round table discussions of the instrument makers was Herman Irrion of Steinway & Sons. His presence and the registration of his company brought much prestige to the gathering, as his house is the oldest and finest in the industry of instruments of the world.

Mr. Herman Irrion of the Steinway Company—"Ten years ago if you would have called this convention together and you had asked a piano man to come to talk to you you would have wondered how he would have fitted in such a gathering and that question has presented itself to me when I came here. We believe that we know, more or less, the musical development in the United States, being the oldest musical instrument company, and will endeavor to take you back in a sort of rapid fly over the steps in musical understanding and will try to do this with the aid of a few rough sketches. Probably the future may be best read by judging from the past. Up to the middle of the last century there had been very little musical development in this country. The first musical society, which still exists, is our own Naticnal Philharmonic Orchestra. It was first an organization of music, pure and simple, and if there was any money to divide from the receipts of the concerts, the musicians shared in it. They hired their own director and conductor and usually brought him over from Europe. If there was a deficit, some public spirited men were asked to help it. Another musical society was the National Symphony Society. A little later the Metropolitan Opera House was built, also by public spirited men, who took shares in the organization, which have never yet had any returns. I give you these facts to show you how very slowly the public in general took to music, the higher class music, and what a long struggle it was. We have frequently estimated that up to about ten or twelve years ago the entire concert-going public numbered in round figures about fifty thousand, and as a consequence you always seemed to see the same faces. Now, it is estimated that the concert-going people number from three to four millions. This was the situation ten or twelve years ago, and then there suddenly came an uplift, not only in New York City, but through the entire country. I do not know just what brought it about, this tremendous turn in our views upon music, it did come suddenly, but I believe that the motion picture industry is to be credited for it. The picture houses gradually instituted these wonderful orchestras, have given people music of a higher order and brought music to the attention of a great amount of people who ordinarily would not have thought of ever going to a concert. To show this is the fact that the artists of the picture house are able to charge for their services, the exhibitor is willing to pay, and the artists' services are sought for. While I feel that it will always be a bone of contention between the motion picture houses and these artists, it follows that they cannot do business independent of one another. Producer and exhibitor ought to get together and do all they can with the music in connection with the picture. The sooner music is brought on a level with the picture, the sconer will you make your attractions more profitable in your theatre. We have not yet done anything in connection directly with the moving picture houses, we have not been approached, but will consider the question of allying and are ready to do this as the time is now ripe and opportune."

Mr. Marr, President of Marr & Colton, Inc., Warsaw, N. Y.—"This is not an advertising campaign for our company but more a desire of the organ building profession to be of every possible help to you, to the motion picture industry, in defining the value of music in the theatre. The organ builders of the United States formed the Organ Builders' Association of America, this association being formed to maintain that standard of organ building which has made the instrument the standard of the world, and to preserve an art which has been handed down from generation to generation." Mr. Marr read his paper, which was a technical account of the history of the organ.

The History of the Organ

"Ladies and Gentlemen: We esteem it a privilege to come before you to present in a brief way the past history of the organ and the general characteristics of the modern theatre organ.

"This is not intended as an advertisement for our company, but is presented to you more with a desire on the part of the organ building profession to be of help to you in the advancement of music in the theatre. One of the most important events in the history of organ building in this country happened recently when the organ builders of the United States formed the Organ Builders' Association of America. The chief aim of this association being to maintain that high standard of organ building which has made the organs manufactured in the United States the standard of the world, also to preserve an art which has been handed down from generation to generation. Our description of the organ is necessarily a brief one and is intended as a simple outline showing the progress in the art of organ building which has been made in connection with the organ in the theatre.

"The desire for music has been experienced by man since the earliest days and we find that down through the ages music has played an important part in man's life. This is shown first in the primitive pipes of Pan and in the Chinese cheng, instruments which date back to a time that is lost in the mists of antiquity, these instruments being blown by the breath. Possibly the Chinese cheng may be taken as the first instance of the organ.

"The earliest authentic record of the organ is probably found in the fourth chapter of Genesis, where it is recorded that 'Jubal is the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ.' The organ of the ancients was a simple contrivance consisting in order of evolution of three essential parts, first, sequence of pipes graduated in length and made of reed, wood or bronze; second, a contrivance for compressing the wind and for supplying it to the pipes in order to make them speak. The ends of such pipes as were required to be silent being stopped by the fingers, and third a system of enabling the performer to store the wind and to control the distribution of the supply separately to the pipes at will.

"The primitive form was probably the Syrinx or the pipes of Pan. These were later combined with the bellows and the bagpipes. The third part of the organ was composed of contrivances made by artisans, boxes or chests with sliding lids running in grooves and controlled by levers. The pneumatic and hydraulic organs of the ancients were practically the same instrument, differing only in the method of the wind supply. In the earliest organs there is no doubt that the pipes consisted of flute and reed pipes of different length, as this is clearly indicated by the early Egyptian, Greek and Roman carvings and pottery. The hydraulic organs probably date back 200 years B. C. and were probably the invention of some of those early scientists of that city of learning, Alexandria.

"It is interesting to note that the organ was probably used largely in its earliest day in connection with entertainments. The hydraulic organs were played in the theatre and in the Arena and on account of its association with the theatre, gladiatorial combats and pagan amusements of corrupt Rome it was placed under a ban by the early Christian church. Later the recognition of the value of the organ in Christian worship proved an incentive which led to the rapid development of the instrument.

"During the medieval period this development was in the hands of the Monks and we find no fewer than three treatises on organ building written by the Monks of the ninth and tenth century. Considerable activity was displayed in England in the tenth century in organ building on a large scale for church and monasteries. We read at this time of that organ of four hundred bronze pipes, twenty-six bellows and two manuals of twenty keys each which good Bishop Elphage built for Winchester Cathedral. This marvelous organ required the labor of seventy men at its bellows, who strove until the sweat poured off them while its iron tongued thunder roared forth with such a blast that it could be heard all over the ancient town of Winchester. Saint Dunstan, that cunning craftsman, who caught the devil by the nose, made an organ with bronze pipes for Malmesbury Abbey which was still unrivaled one hundred and fifty years later.

"At the close of the medieval period we read that there was at Bordeaux in the Cathedral church at Saint Andrews the fairest and greatest of organs in all Christendom, in which there were many instruments and voices as of giants with heads which do move and wag their jaws and eyes as fast as the player playeth. Surely such an instrument might well be copied for use in some of our modern theatres.

"And so the development continues down to the present day. Italy, Germany, France and England all contributing their share to make the organ what it is to-day.

"We find that the greatest advance in organ building has happened in this twentieth century when the organ has come into general use for public amusement, large organs being installed in public auditoriums and concert halls. About this time the first instrument was installed in the motion picture theatre and the ingenuity of the organ builders has been called upon to meet this rapid advance and how well he is doing it is shown in the instruments manufactured to-day. We find tones resembling remarkably the tones of the orchestra, such as saxophones, clarinets, cello and other numerous representations of the orchestra assembled under the control of a competent player. The motion picture theatre to-day is considered incomplete without its organ for use alone or for use with the orchestra.

"In the organ of to-day we find that the four principal qualities of tone are as follows: True organ or foundation tone given by metal pipes of liberal scale. Flute tone produced from stopped wooden pipes and other flute pipes without stoppers modeled after the orchestral instrument. String tone from pipes of small scale and usually made from pure tin. Reed tone which, as the name implies, is produced from reed pipes of various shapes and materials. The tone produced from a vibrating reed, is similar to the reeds of an orchestra. It is interesting to note that from the earliest records the organ and the orchestra have been closely allied and present indications point to that alliance becoming even closer in the future. A set or row of pipes is generally termed a stop and groups of stops of various tonal families are placed together. We find in the modern theatre instrument such groups of pipes assembled under the name of Accompaniment, Orchestral, Solo organ, etc. The number, power and quality of these stops vary greatly and each stop is usually controlled by its manual. The manuals are the keyboards which are played by the hands, while the keyboard for the feet is known as the pedal. All these keyboards are made up of black and white keys throughout their compass and are presided over by the organist. To the organist, whom we might term the exhibitor's musical ambassador, belongs the responsibility of the musical portrayal of the picture as shown on the screen and at all times he should be encouraged in every effort he puts forth in presenting the musical interpretation which is so essential for the accompaniment of the picture. He plays an important part in the success of the theatre.

"We will now glance for a moment at the various forms of organ action which are in use at the present time. These come under the following heads: first, mechanical; second, tubular pneumatic; third, electro pneumatic. Notwithstanding the complications attached to number one, it is for small instruments both cheap and efficient. For medium sized and larger organs it is entirely out of the question and has been abandoned in large organs owing to the great weight and variation of touch involved. In church organs, however, this action is sometimes found even to-day. As to number two, notwithstanding the great endeavor that has been made to perfect this system much time and ingenuity, that could ill be spared, has been wasted upon it. The tubular pneumatic system never can and never will be fully perfected owing to the fact that instantaneous response with the tubular pneumatic action is impossible. Air working under compression or in connection with a vacuum will not transmit an impulse instantaneously. This makes the action sluggish, especially when the organ is some distance from the console or keyboard. Complications also enter into the construction which makes this action more or less unreliable and reliability is one of the prime requirements in theatre organs. Most forms of tubular pneumatic action are fast being discarded and the electro pneumatic action is becoming more and more the standard action. This electro pneumatic action is the third form mentioned and is the prevailing form with all modern organ builders. This action eliminates all mechanism, tubes, etc., in the keyboard and requires only a small electric conductor cable from the keyboard to the different parts of the organ. The electric action when carefully designed and accurately made is by far the most simple, efficient and reliable type of action made and, as noted above, to-day is accepted as the standard action in the organ building profession and within a short time few organs will be made that do not have this simple and reliable form of action. Even to-day we can safely say that 80 per cent. of the theatre instruments are made with electro pneumatic action. The rapidity in response and repetition secured by this action is really wonderful and mechanical tests prove them to be capable of no less than one thousand clear repetitions a minute, such speed being greatly in excess of any possible requirements.

"The greatest advantages of this electro pneumatic action may be briefly summarized as follows: simplicity of mechanism resulting in increased reliability; rapid response and repetition; light touch; stop key contactors saving the organist unnecessary labor and giving better control of all the registers. This also applies to the keys and studs for automatic control of pedals and registers, increasing control of swell shades. To-day the modern theatre organ is fashioned after the orchestra, all instruments being expressive and controlled by sets of swell shutters which produce a crescendo of remarkable volume. It would be possible to go on and minutely describe the various details which enter into the construction of the modern organ, but as we have said before, our object at this time is more to show what an important factor the organ is in every day life. You can readily picture in your minds, as we are gathered here, what is happening in all the motion picture theatres throughout the country and the happiness and enjoyment that is being obtained through the presentation of the motion picture combined with the musical accompaniment. You can also realize what an educational work music is doing and how it is appealing to the better part of man's nature, inspiring him to greater ideals, while this appeal might have laid dormant had it not been possible to reach the mass of people through the motion picture theatre. It is an acknowledged fact, and you can readily prove this to yourself the next time you visit any motion picture theatre, that music refreshes, invigorates, saddens or makes us glad through its action upon the emotional side of our nature and is a language without words, common to all people of the earth, a language through which a musician speaks to the audience of the theatre. The modern theatre organ should therefore be so designed that with varying strength and delicacy it will be able to arouse these emotional feelings, and strange to say, its success mainly depends upon the psychological effect upon its audience.

"It is interesting for the pioneer exhibitor to glance back for a moment and review the progress of music in the motion picture theatre. In the first days you will recall we had a piano alone, possibly augmented with a singer singing the words to the illustrated song. Then there was a desire for a more pretentious musical program and the automatic instrument found its way into the theatre and at this period it may be questioned whether the art of music was benefited by some of the terrible contrivances which were supposed to regale the public with sweet sounding music. Then came the organ into the theatre, the first organs being practically models of church organs, deadly monotonous in tone and not having that quality which was necessary to produce the music which the public demanded, but within a short time the organ building profession adjusted itself to the new popular demands and we find that the instruments were a close counterpart of the orchestra until we now have that ideal combination, which is tending to become the most successful of all attempts on the part of the motion picture exhibitor to overcome the music question, namely, the combination of the organ and the orchestra. Of course, where the expense does not allow this ideal combination the exhibitor must turn to either the orchestra or the organ. If a first class orchestra is not available, or the expense thereof too great, then the organ is the only solution to the problem. We find in the medium and smaller sized theatres the exhibitor is turning to the organ alone more and more as the ideal music for his theatre. The patrons of which demand a high class musical accompaniment to the high quality of pictures being shown throughout the country.

"If there are any questions or if there is any information which the exhibitor desires, please do not hesitate to speak, as we are here to further his interests."

HUGO RIESENFELD SAYS:

"I consider the book MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT OF MOVING PICTURES of the greatest value to organists and pianists now engaged in playing for the pictures, or contemplating to enter this field. The book will go far toward convincing musicians in general that the musical interpretation of photoplays can be made an expression of art and a serious profession."

MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT of MOVING PICTURES

by E. LANG and G. WEST

Price 1.25

A practical hand book for organists who play, or want to play, for the movies, written by musicians with years of experience in this field. The contents include authoritative chapters on "Equipment" as regards musical resourcefulness and repertoire, and "Musical Interpretation" treating the subject of appropriate accompaniment of the various types of film.

"The Theatrical Organ" is presented from the point of view of the skilled moving picture player, with practical mastery over the instrument, and there is particularly valuable instruction in producing special effects, the identification of tone color for descriptive purposes (registration) and orchestration by means of organ stops.

Further on the Organ

RICHARD HENRY WARREN, one of the world's foremost organists, made a plea for the more conservative use of his instrument, declaring:

"Don't overuse it—and make your audience tired. Alternate piano and organ when the orchestra is at rest. Don't expect your organist to play jazz, it can't be done. Be sure your organ is rightly placed, and is up to register and is responding correctly, otherwise it's not the organist's fault. On the other hand, use the organ to fill in with the orchestra. You can make a ten-piece orchestra do the duty of twenty-five if you use the organ with discretion.

"I think that the organist, if he is the right sort of man, should be allowed the greatest amount of assistance. Don't hamper him—encourage him—occasionally say that you like what he has done. I don't know of anything more boring than to hear an organ pounding away for hours and I have left a good picture because I could not stand the organ any longer. Don't allow the organ to become a bore. Save it up as a good thing."

Mr. Fred Stark, Musical Director of the Superba Theatre, Raleigh, N. C.—"There is no score which has an organ part. When we get a score and if we want to use it with the organ, we have to work in an organ part of our own. I strongly advise that producers and film distributors issue a regular organ arrangement for the show."

Mr. Richard Warren—"I think there is a great crying need for a school for motion picture organists. There are a great many organists in this country but the moving pictures do not interest them. They should be made to become interested in the film."

Mr. Charles D. Isaacson—"Would the Guild of Organists take up the idea of some kind of a bureau for information which would be given the exhibitor with reference to the building of his theatre, the placing of his organ and the kind of an organ to get?"

Mr. Richard Henry Warren—"The National Association of Organists would be the proper place to put this before. I am also a member of this association and I will be happy to take your question up with them and will let you have a report on this."

Mr. Arthur of the Famous Players Canadian Corp.—"I think that an organist, if he is a good player and has technique, can play popular songs and with a certain amount of success. In fact, I like to hear an organist play a fox trot. I have been using the organ on our comedies. Not always, of course, we change occasionally."

Mr. Buel B. Risinger of the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati—"I think that the organist should be allowed to play whatever he wants to. It is no use to tell a man to play his organ to the comedy if he doesn't want to, because then there would be nothing in his playing. If he wants to play light numbers, don't ask him to play anything else. Let him do the choosing."

Naturally, the discussion veered around to acoustics, and a speech from Harry M. Prince of Dallas, Texas, was read. (Previously representatives of the different organizations of organists promised to urge a department of information for exhibitors seeking to instal organs, to correct them and to get organists. This alone will be worthy of an entire convention.)

Mr. Prince's speech follows:

"Much will be said here on the subject of Music, but too little, I am afraid, about Acoustics. Unfortunately for those of us who claim Architecture as our profession, and Theatres our specialty, little of great value is known of Acoustics, except in a scientific sense, and through the work of such excellent men as Prof. W. C. Sabine. There is not, however, any great mystery relative to the subject, for it is a simple matter to trace and exactly delineate the course of every sound wave that eminates from an orchestra.

"A simple knowledge of acoustical fundamentals should be as necessary to the orchestra conductor, as a knowledge of correct perspective is necessary to the successful artist or Architect.

"No hard and fast rules can be laid down on what to do, or what not to do, except one. That one is, be sure that the Architect of your theatre, be it a three-hundred-seat house, showing only pictures with the accompaniment of a three-piece orchestra, or be it a sumptuous theatre of three thousand seat capacity and a seventy-five piece orchestra, is a master of the acoustical problems. It is said that Architects are impractical. May I digress long enough to tell you a little story of how one client has condemned his Architect to the world for his impracticability?

"A young and blushing recently married young couple of limited financial means decided that they would build one of those cute little bungalows, just for two, of the kind everyone dreams about, but no one has. The kind that friend husband says, 'I planned the outside, and Minnie planned the inside, and the only thing our architect did was to make them fit together and put in a stairs.' Six years later finds the same couple trying to combat the old H. C. L. with the addition of housing four children in the original bungalow, and not enough money to build a new one of larger size. Result: It is the Architect's fault for had he not been so impractical, he would have advised them six years before to provide for this present condition. How he could have foreseen that they proposed to increase and multiply their family, when all he was supposed to do was to 'fit it together,' is never explained.

"So it must be with you gentlemen. Don't blame the entire Architectural Profession if you entrust your theatre to an Architect, who has never designed one before and knows nothing of acoustics. If you must save money on construction, don't eliminate the Architect as the first step, and then weep afterwards when the acoustics are bad, for the first thing you will do will be to go to that same Architect for an expert opinion. You must not then be surprised if he tells you that your system of blowing hot-air inio the auditorium up through the floor is producing heat waves that are seriously deflecting your sound waves. Nor must you complain when he advises you that the space under the auditorium that you believed was an excellent place to secure revenue from a bowling alley is now acting against your acoustics in a relative way. The inside of a drum is hollow for a purpose. If your auditorium floor covers a large empty space uuder it, you mustn't be surprised if you have a "drum" condition in your theatre. He might even be forced to tell you that you must eliminate those beautiful ceiling beams and put in a flat ceiling—that there is too much concrete and hard plaster used—necessitating covering those surfaces with an acoustical felt—and so I might enumerate the dozens of pitfalls to be avoided, to say nothing of the thousands of dollars to be saved by 'first being sure you are right, and then going ahead.'

"Everyone of you know that the modern interpretations of Mozart, or even Beethoven, who used only one or two flutes, where you now use an independent choir of flutes, is similar to a translation of one lanlanguage into another, though a kindred language; but how many of you know that similar choirs of individual instruments are liable to produce too much vibration and thereby prevent rhythmical combinations from being audible in a badly designed auditorium.

"In conclusion may I add this warning? As you value your reputations, before you sign a contract as conductor for any new theatre, be sure the plans have been drawn by an Architect who is a specialist in acoustical problems, or that the plans have been overhauled by an Acoustical Engineer. If it is an old building, try out the acoustical properties by playing a composition of one of the old masters of the eighteenth century as it was first composed, and then as it has been translated for a large orchestra of to-day. Take an Acoustical Engineer or Architect with you. Your combined findings may save you from a badly damaged reputation later, and a desire to murder the first man who tells you that 'You had ideas, but were not practical.'"

Other Addresses

IN the next columns are the digests of speeches of W. G. Stewart on "How Far Should a Theatre Ally with the Musical Activities"—Fred Stark on "Music in the South," C. M. von Brockoeven on "Community Opera in the Theatres."

Miss Nannine Joseph, representing Witmark & Sons, said—"I had many things I wanted to say and discuss but the other gentlemen, representing the different music publishing houses, speaking before me, have taken all these questions up with the exception of one thing. The motion picture director usually has a soloist perform before the picture which is to create the pre-feeling and atmosphere. Now, why shouldn't there be a soloist performing while the picture is running that will fit in with the picture?"

Mr. Fred Stark, Musical Director of the Superba Theatre, Raleigh, N. C.—"I represent the musical directors in that part of this country which has been the fifth wheel of the wagon—we have been sadly neglected. I represent the small musical director in the small theatre in a small town. The many points that I want to discuss of the neglectful way in which the Southern theatres are treated, will all come from the reading of my speech."

"REPRESENTING SMALLER THEATRES (SOUTH): While most of the delegates to this conference are associated with larger concerns, larger theatres with larger orchestras, better equipment, etc., I am representing the smaller exhibitor, resp. orchestra leader in smaller places, especially in the South.

"CONDITIONS AS THEY HAVE BEEN: Bad;—war times. Smaller theatres had practically no orchestra at all, or very badly crippled. Some local "towner" or "professor" hired to play almost anything for the picture. No experience, no library, etc. No competent musicians, impossible to import them a salary compared with North too small. Too uncertai engagements. Even larger cities at that time sma orchestras. Southern audiences, however, always ap preciated good music. Narrow policy of some theatr owners that the picture alone is the drawing card. A disgusted I left South, for Washington, D. C.

"RETURN; CHANGE OF CONDITIONS: Firs news of proposed conference reached me in Washing ton. Management of Superba Theatre—realizing grea value of music with pictures—made offer, promising ful cooperation in order to bring music in this theatr with less than 700 seats, in a town of 25,000 up t higher standards. Promised salaries for musicians fo six days per week equal to salaries paid in seven-da cities. Start orchestra of twelve, already augmented Result was very big success, highly pleased audiences willing to pay little increase in price of admission.

'MAIN TROUBLES: HIRING COMPETENT MUSICIANS: Most musicians do not want to go South on account of underpayment and uncertain engagements. Even with better salaries hard to get them. Notices on the bulletin boards of larger locals usually answered by inferior material, agitators; demand full railroad expenses but cannot produce the goods. Advertisements in 'International Musicians' not successful as this is only a monthly publication. Would suggest that a regular exchange of specially trained picture musicians shall be established; that NEWS shall cooperate with the different Locals of the A. F. of M., publishing weekly such "at liberty" and "wanted musicians" advertisements; send them to the different locals for publication and distributing purposes. To cover expenses make the locals or A. F. of M. subscribe for copies of NEWS, etc. It will help to bring steady employment to members. Beware of agencies who are not known! Beside the "agency fee" they charge for expenses both ways in advance and are sending only such men they are trying to get rid of themselves. The further away from New York the worse men you will get!

"NO COOPERATION OF EXCHANGES: Some film exchanges in some places here in South consider the music as a necessary evil. We have to run two and three pictures per week (features, beside all the other short subjects) and usually the pictures come in at the last minute. Have tried to get them early, to have a private reviewing the day before first showing, no success. An exchange man told me the other day, that it was impossible to do so, but that they could give me a very good "cue sheet." Cue sheet has been sufficiently discussed at this conference, needless to say that if a leader only relies on such help he will be lost. Many times a picture requires a special number, which the leader has not got in his library, and is forced to arrange it himself in a short time. Can he do it, if he only sees the feature the day of the showing to the public, beside laying out his other short subjects? No!

"NO POSSIBLE PROOF OF LENGTH OF SHOW: We are trying to give the people a two-hour performance if ever possible. When the hours of performances are advertised ahead of time, the people will get accustomed to such hours. However, we have no accurate means by which to determine the length of a show to see whether it will be necessary to add another short reel, or musical number to complete the show, etc. The trade papers in their release guides give the length of a feature perhaps to 6 reels, while another one says 8 reels, and after the show gets in we find 5 only. In small towns we have no chance to "run over to the exchange" and get some short reel to put in. We must know the definite running time ahead. Some cue sheets give the running time, based upon a certain speed. However, not always accurate. Would suggest that the release guides in the trade papers would give the actual footage, actual running time, based on certain speed. Also number of reels, whether small or large. Suggest that this association shall see that we have better cooperation from exchanges. The smaller exhibitor is paying a good price for his pictures, the people in smaller towns are paying bigger admissions than in large theatres and there is no reason why they should not be entitled to a first-class presentation of pictures. Under the present conditions it is impossible.

"SCORES: Whenever a score can be obtained from the film exchange, such scores should be sent ahead of the first showing of the feature. A score must be studied, all the typographical errors, etc., corrected. The print is bad, and musicians must be acquainted with the score. Also would suggest that regular ORGAN accompaniment parts shall be included, especially for use of smaller orchestras, where organ accompaniment in connection with the orchestra is very effective. As it is now we have to use some extra piano part or other, and the organist has to fake or make up necessary accompaniment most the time.

LIBRARY CLASSIFICATION: Laying out music for two or three features per week and all music for short reels, scenic, news, comedies, etc., is no easy task. A systematic classification and cataloguing of the leader's library is absolutely necessary. It saves a lot of time. Would, however, be glad to hear suggestion from other musical directors regarding cataloguing a library. Would like to see especially systems as used in the Rialto, Capitol, etc.

"PROSPECTS FOR FUTURE: The erection of our new large theatre, entirely on modern plan. Not—like many theatres—only a beautiful building, where in the last minute a row of seats has to be taken out

The New Era Organ

This pipe organ has in truth made possible a new era of music for the medium and smaller sized theatre. EVERY OWNER IS A SATISFIED OWNER.

to make room for the orchestra, where the organ is only decorative, etc. But it will be a house built with the musical end in view. Owner, manager, musical director, acoustical expert, organ builder, chief electrician, architect, etc., must agree first, before the plans are drawn. Conditions all over the South are improving. I predict that the South will advance faster than any part of the country, the possibilities are there. I shall stick here, carrying out this great problem, the new ideas I have gathered at the conference, and I know that success will be assured. Motion pictures and municipality, the community have to cooperate in smaller places especially. If it had not been for the motion picture industry, we would never be able to bring music to such high standards as it is now, and have "America First in Music."

"There should be a central booking-office where each style of artist in his or her particular line is listed, and who is easily accessible to the producer. Mr. Kroft is able to give you more information on that particular subject.

"The great question I am endeavoring to solve in my own mind, is whether or not anything should be done more than give solos and quartettes to fill the void of vocal effort, except in occasional cases, as the old question comes up about 'overshadowing the picture.'

"Certainly the vaudeville world should not be invaded, and the straight musical field should be left to the theatres which are equipped for the rendition of complete performances, as it is a generally conceded fact that any musical work must necessarily be given more time than that which is allotted to two-hour performances.

'To sum up the idea in my mind, I should say that my conclusion would be that the moving picture world should only ally itself with the musical field to the point where the moving picture is given a musical setting, which will not cause the audience to forget that it is a moving picture theatre, but keep the audiences there assembled aware of the fact that their first reason for being there is to view films and pictures."

MR. C. M. VON BROCKOEVEN

"It has been recognized by film producers and exhibitors that music is an absolute necessity as an artistic emotional factor in movie plays. The film play is a pantomime in the fullest sense of the word, producing neither the human speech nor voice. In the absence of this human emotional and intellectual element music has been called on to replace word and song by the purely instrumental side of the musical art. Music—as now employed in the movies—is expected to serve as substitute for the absent word and the singing voice. Instrumental music can not fulfill this dual function, no matter what use it is applied to in the movie plays. The film producers as well as the progressive managers of movie theatres are beginning to realize this fact; and are making attempts to introduce excerpts, or single acts from the standard operas, to supply the audience with the living emotional human speech, to offset the wordless film play. But to give the public a disjointed act from an opera—which has logical cohesion with an intelligent dramatic action—is no better than giving the audience a vocal concert. Hence this introduction of operatic fragments is a mere makeshift for something which the public will insist on having in due time.

"Film-opera will be the solution of this growing demand, if not opera without film. Film opera can be made a new and ideal artistic type of film-music-drama, a perfect form of drama in which all the arts are united: drama, music, dancing and painting. This cooperation of the arts was Wagner's ideal of his music-drama; but, in the absence of the artistic possibilities of the film in his day, he did not realize the technical perfection of his plan. This is clearly demonstrated in the clumsy aspect of the moving scenery in Parsifal, and certain situations in the Nibelungen. Considering Wagner's demands for almost impossible stage effects, we are safe in assuming that—were he now writing—he would employ the film to realize them. The ideal music-drama in the Wagner sense would thus include, beside the four artistic factors just mentioned, also the highly developed fifth element—the modern film. An artistic type of such a film opera also demands an artistic director; a man well versed in the possibilities of the allied arts with the drama: music, dancing and painting. For this a new type of scenario would be required, in which the musician, the dancing master, and the artist painter would have to be consulted. Neither of these arts could be treated as music now is a kind of Cinderella.

The participation of the film in such a music-drama would solve innumerable questions having always been obstructive in stage presentations. An artistically conceived scenario would have no difficulty in surmounting every obstacle which necessitated the change of scenes in Shakespeare's dramas. By the aid of the orchestra and vocal music a scenario would have the ready means at its disposal to present a music-drama, or film opera, which could be exhibited in a small movie theatre as well as a large one. It would simply be a question of a large or small orchestra, and the size of the chorus. This musical question would require the cooperation of a practical, able, and experienced musician with the director in planning and conceiving the scenario. Without this primary cooperation of representatives of the allied arts involved no artistic unity could be obtained in an ideal film opera. But by this cooperative process the film producers have it in their power to create an absolutely new and novel type of drama, which would fully realize Wagner's ideal of the music-drama; and bring such an artistic creation up to the high-water mark of modern art achievements. It would be a unique type of art, in that it would realize what the Greeks attempted in their drama, and Wagner came near achieving in his music drama.

"When we take into consideration the enormous sums that are expended by film producers in their ambition to perfect an artistic film, we are justified in assuming that some producers with a cultivated taste, and high art ideals, will be induced to give to the American people this new and modern type of film opera.

"The question which, no doubt, will be asked by every one is, What will be the expense? Can such a scheme pay? By stating a few points of expense now necessary by movie houses, these questions may be answered. It is known that Mr. Riesenfeld, the managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli, and Criterion, being an experienced musician himself, has a collection of fully 35,000 musical compositions, from which he selects his orchestral music for the films. Now it is not an overestimation to average every orchestra number of this collection at $10, which makes a round sum of $350,000. And when we understand that the regular habitues of the movies are now becoming surfeited—in the smaller houses—by a continual rehash of the more popular musical numbers, how long will it take for the public to become familiar with the 35,000 numbers? It is safe to state, therefore, that such libraries, by their continued use in every kind of film play, will become so cut and dried that the public will resent their use as musical dramatic material. And when this occurs the $350,000 invested will be dead capital. Since every movie theatre has to have a musical library, which is purchased either by the theatre or leader of the orchestra, its size depends on the financial capacity of these parties. From this condition we may conclude of the musical value and effectiveness of the film music as an artistic factor in the film play of such theatres. The orchestra leaders of these theatres are paid as high as $10,000 a year. For this amount a film producer could engage a musical director to compose the music for all the films he puts out. And this practice would relieve the movie theatre managers from engaging an orchestra leader, who merely patches up the film music, at such high figures. It would also remove the present demand for a large musical library, since the producer would supply the music with the film.

"The only expense which the introduction of a film opera would add to the movie manager's outlay would consist in the salary of the singers. The average chorus singers are now paid $35 per week; and vocal soloist receives from $75 to $150 per week. The number of singers to be employed in a film opera would have to be considered by the scenario director, and would have to be fixed in accordance with the nature of the plot and the character, and the capacity of the movie theatre—large or small—for which the film opera must be designed. If this practical aspect is taken into consideration by the opera film producer, local singers in every community could be prepared for a film opera. This feature is made feasible in the training by a local musician of a local chorus. A local interest in such film production would arouse a local pride, much to the benefit of the local theatre. It would engender a community interest in the local movie theatre which no pure film play could arouse.

"These phases of a film opera are but generalities stated at random. The practical launching of this new art creation would soon bring to the surface desirable details of great value to producer and exhibitor. No aspect of modern effort in promoting American drama would be so sure of arousing the interest of the public in every community—big and small, than would be brought about by this new plan of uniting the arts in this form of film opera. Its realization would call into cooperation the foremost men in the film industry. Men who have the capacity to see beyond the dollar dangling before the ordinary hustling business man. The whole nature of this novel form—if practically presented—will appeal to the film industry, the dramatic-musical profession, and the public. It is the opening of a new era in theatrical art; since it involves the promotion of all arts in a form artistic, educational, and entertaining, appealing to the people of all classes as no single art has been able to do.

"The coming convention of motion picture and musical interest presents the first opportunity for a general consideration of this progressive and artistic move in the film art. The spirit of progress is in the atmosphere, and the movie managers know that the public makes demands which must be met if the film industry, and last but not least, the film art is to rise to the occasion, viz: the creation of an up to date dramatic art; the ideal art of the twentieth century, involving a union of all arts in the form of film, music, drama."

MR. W. G. STEWART

"How am I to tell you, fellow artists, the answer which is already formed in your minds, viz: 'As far as is possible and practical without making the picture subservient.'

"There is just the point I have run up against in my enjoyable California experience, and believe me, I have found plenty to study here in the West.

"Naturally, having spent so many years in the purely musical field, my first desire was to make the music the big feature of the houses with which I have been connected, and I must say, and I think my managers will bear me out in my statement, that financially, it has paid, but even then the question arises, 'If it is not a mistake from the picture angle.'

"Take, for example, the performances given last Spring at the Capitol theatre, New York City, where musical works were given which drew the attention of the entire musical world, and which drew the highest prices and the largest box-office receipts in the history of moving picture houses, and yet, were they not a mistake in that the shows were more for a musical public than for a movie crowd? Mr. Rothafel, my distinguished friend, may have struck a happier combination in the faster and more varied style he is now giving, and undoubtedly has done so to get the two-hour turnover necessary for lower prices, but certainly it will be some time before the big alliance of music and film given at that time, will be approached.

"Now where to find the happy medium.

"Fundamentally we will, I think, all agree that the best and most varied of entertainment, both of film and music, must be given at all times, consistent with the expense and standing of the house and community, as in all forms of entertainment only the best can survive and keep ahead of the audience which is always being educated.

"Now what is best in Pictures or Film is not for discussion in this meeting, but what is best in music—IS—and when one looks at the programs of our largest houses, with their symphony orchestras, one sees very little chance for improvement in that direction. Take for instance our leading theatres here in the West. Orchestras in quite a few theatres here are able to open a program with from twenty to forty men playing not only the best of music of the best composers, but oftentimes new compositions by good writers, such as Cadman, etc., and it is quite the usual thing to interchange music with the regular symphony orchestra. Now this is regularly established and needs no comment, as the entire musical world recognizes the great work in education this has been.

"Then, this same orchestra will play something lighter for a scenic or weekly, still keeping up the musical atmosphere, to be followed in many instances by an organ solo, where again great strides have been taken, and by way of digression, there are some wonderful organists out here who should be heard in New York, as they perform feats with the organ I never dreamed were possible.

"Now comes the vocal end which is more in my line, and which is the 'hardest nut to crack' at present.

"Shall we prologue the picture or not?

"Personally, I say—NOT—as a good picture does not need one, unless the director of the picture is incapable, or allowances have been made for it when making the film, which, of course, may be the solution. How about having the musician and picture director work that out on the lot?

"If no prologue, what other form of vocal effort should be given? Personally, I would say, that depends entirely upon the resources, and should be carefully studied for each community."

Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A NATIONAL educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry.

This institution is directed by experienced writers and sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers.

The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call.

Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home-Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, noted photoplay author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum.

If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you.

"The day has passed when the so-called 'movie fan' is satisfied with the tinkling of a tin-panny piano as the accompaniment to the pantomimic actions of his favorite movie star," said Daniel Mayer, the New York and London impresario. "I must admit that there was a time when I personally felt that the best music was over the heads of those who ordinarily patronized this form of performance. Perhaps that was because at that time I did not go very often myself. However, all that is of the past.

"Who would have dreamt a few years ago of prefacing a motion picure play with a performance of any work so exotic as Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Sheherazade'? And yet such compositions form the major portion of the musical fare in the great New York theatres. Another work which seems to adapt itself very frequently to 'movie' exigencies is the Largo from Dvorak's 'Symphony to the New World.'

"I have devoted considerable time to the study of the problem of assisting the theatre managers to present before their patrons artists of the first class. In fact, last year I made a special trip to the Middle West to confer with a director who controlled a circuit. He was even less optimistic than I was, and hesitated because he feared that the time was not yet ripe. I was willing to give him some of the leading artists under my management, and of course I was backed up by my artists. They, too, had undergone a change of heart. If a year or so before I had suggested such a thing to them they would have held up their hands in holy horror, whatever that is, and protested that such engagements would have killed them for their ordinary concert appearances. Now they view such performances as so much more publicity and the extension of their field of activity.

"I now have on my roster artists of the highest distinction, who have sung with leading orchestras and at some of the biggest festivals, who between concert tours fill in their time with a few weeks in some of the bigger motion picture theatres."

Mr. Mayer speaks with the highest authority. He has been identified for over thirty years with artists whose names are now household words. It was he who first brought out Paderewski, Elman and Levitski, introducing them to the London public and later on presenting them elsewhere. He was responsible for the vogue of the Russian dance, since he first brought Pavlowa and Mordkin to London and later arranged for their appearance in America. Other artists who have been under his management include Edouard De Reszke, Melba, Gerhardt, Nordica, Van Rooy, Plancon, Bauer, and Yvette Guilbert, to mention only a few of the more notable ones.

Newspaper Attention

THE industry will be pleased to know that the newspapers of New York City were very kindly in their attention to the conference—a space of twenty columns being devoted to the activity, or in terms of lineage, practically $3,500 of advertising space.

Also other cities copied, and the wires of the press syndicates sent out accounts, and it is very conservatively estimated that altogether the conference received publicity worth $150,000.

Now Looking to the Future

To the Delegates and New Members of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests and to the Future Members:

We have just made our start. We have stated our platform. We have indicated the problems that face us.

We have called to our support the brainiest and most idealistic men and women in the industry. With them as our vanguard we cannot fail to proceed and win.

My life is dedicated to the plan we have indicated, along with those other ideas and ideals to which I am giving my energy and resources.

I am looking for a finer, nobler, more beautiful America.

Through the film theatres I see the way made easier and clearer.

I am willing to draw to the film theatres the love of music, and I am perfectly willing for the exhibitors and musicians to make more money, draw a tighter, more loyal patronage, if in so doing, I can assure myself that we will raise our American taste in the fine arts.

To the new Association my greetings and best wishes.

To the future—let us toast the baby organization and speed it on its way with hearty applause. Again I thank all who have been with us.

The convention closed with this resolution:

The conference wishes to give a rising vote of thanks to Charles D. Isaacson, who first conceived this plan and has worked so hard to bring it about. It wishes to thank the NEWS and its editor, Mr. Johnston, and its secretary, Mr. Gillette, and its other members of the staff and to say that the industry appreciates what it has done.

Personally, I appreciate the kindly words, and speaking for THE NEWS and Messrs. Johnston and Gillette, I can say that we are in this work to a finish—as supporters, not promoters.

That is my closing word tonight: The industry must stand by the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests and must see it to success.

CHARLES D. ISAACSON.

Bartola Co. Pioneering for Better Music

Figures just compiled by Dan Barton from records kept by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and going back five years, show that this pioneer for better music in motion picture theatres has done a wonderful work in making the consummation of this ideal possible.

Dan Barton, who had the advantage early in life of experience as a musician, actually playing in motion picture theatres, was quick to recognize the fact that musicians trained in playing the pictures as well as being skillful in the handling of an instrument, were an essential if theatres were to have better music. Therefore the haphazard method of hiring players to play musical instruments was done away with by the Bartola Company more than seven years ago and under Mr. Barton's direction a school for players was organized and still is maintained in the Bartola Musical Instrument Company's demonstrating rooms in the Mallers building, Chicago.

Through the Bartola Company's efforts Chicago musicians and others are brought into the Bartola school from all parts of the country where they are shown the operation of the Bartola and Barton organ and are schooled in the proper method of playing pictures, following which they are placed with exhibitors. This splendid service has been handled without charge to either the player or exhibitor and has done as much, if not more than any other agency in the field to improve the quality of music offered in hundreds of theatres.

In the last five years, during which time a complete record of players trained and placed has been kept by Mr. Barton, over one thousand players have been trained in the proper playing of the company's instruments and in giving pictures the proper musical setting.

The school at present is in charge of Vern R. Comstock, who has had years of experience as a player and is himself a writer of music especially adapted to motion pictures.

That this feature of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company's service to exhibitors has been highly appreciated is proved by the constant call for players trained in the school, and has added to the popularity of the Bartola and Barton organ among exhibitors.

"I never spent a more profitable three days in all my life.
"Mrs. A. F. OBERNDORFER,
"National Federation of Women's Clubs."

The Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests

¶ Motion Picture News acknowledges its pride in the fact that the First National Music and Picture Conference resulted in the organization of a body so promising as the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests.

¶ A full list is being compiled of the several hundred workers in motion picture and musical activities who have signified their intention of becoming actively associated with this body.

¶ Already the executive committees are laying the foundation of a fruitful career for the Association.

¶ So let us urge all who are interested in better music for the photoplay theatre — producer, exhibitor, leader, musician, impresario, artiste and manufacturer—to join the ranks of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests. Until further definite arrangements are made Motion Picture News will be pleased to receive these names.

Park Theatre Seating 3800 Opens in Cleveland

Latest Loew House Shows Thorough Work by Designers and Decorators

MARCUS LOEW'S new million-dollar Park theatre, at Euclid Avenue and East 101st Street, is not only a monument to the art of silent drama, but is a distinct compliment to the city of Cleveland.

Situated near the busiest section of the city, where thousands of people are continually hurrying to get intersecting street cars, where the leading markets are located, Loew's Park theatre offers photoplay entertainment to 3800 Clevelanders at a time. It's the largest theatre in the city. To say that it's likewise the finest theatre in the city doesn't half tell the story. The first thought that flashes across one's mind after entering the plain, dignified outer lobby and ascending the few marble steps that lead to the foyer is "Where could anybody spend any more money?" Everything is so elegant, so luxuriant, so expensive looking, that the vast expenditure of money necessary to achieve this effect is the predominating thought on entering the theatre.

The Park theatre measures 130 feet by 185 feet, and there isn't a single pillar or post to obstruct the view from any point. It is what is termed a double-decker, with first floor and balcony. The balcony, however, is practically concealed. A mezzanine balcony extends all around over the heads of the people on the first floor. This gives an appearance of nothing overhead. The balcony is over the mezzanine. The advantages of this type of construction are many. It gives the appearance of added size; it removes the oppressive feeling of having something heavy hang over your head, and it provides perfect air circulation, not to mention the additional beauty of the balcony.

Brown is the predominating color of the Park theatre. The walls are inlaid with brown brocade velvet. Three thousand yards of the material were supplied by The Sterling and Welsh Company. And miles of heavy carpet cover the fireproof floors in all sections of the house.

On the main floor is the huge auditorium, with loges; a beautiful ladies' room all done in lavender and blue silk brocade; a smoking room and the manager's offices.

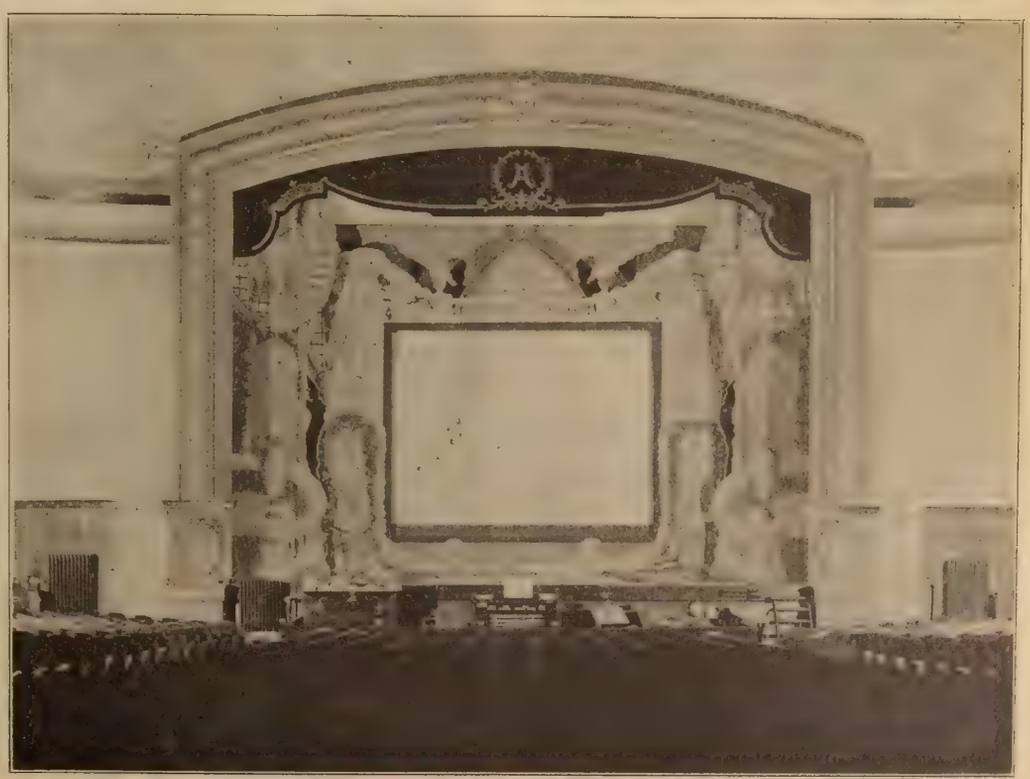
On the mezzanine floor there are additional rest rooms for ladies. The men's lounge of the mezzanine floor equals the lounge of the finest hotels. There is a tile floor, marble fireplace, elegant leather chairs, and wide tables. All around the balcony of the mezzanine floor are hand-woven tapestry wing chairs, davenports similarly upholstered, elaborately hand-carved chairs of the Chinese Chippendale period; spinet desks by the half dozen, fitted with complete writing equipment. And birds. There must be two dozen bird cages around the balcony, all singing canaries, and when the twenty-five-piece orchestra, which is under the direction of Homer Walters, former musical director of Loew's Alhambra theatre plays, the birds warble an accompaniment which is delightful.

The balcony proper is steep and deep. But there are easy risers to the higher levels, and the screen gives perfect projection to the furthermost parts.

The heating and ventilating system installed at the Park theatre by T. M. Shand, Cleveland, incorporates all the newest ideas of air circulation.

The lighting fixtures, supplied by the United Electric Fixture and Supply Company, were all original designs. Hand-painted parchment shades, all of similar design, conspicuous by their simplicity, decorate the lights.

The big novelty of the theatre consists of a tier of lights under the balcony. Hidden by a huge bowl, these lights change with the music. In other words, the lights synchronize with the music and the music synchronizes with the picture. This has never been done in Cleveland before, and the psychological effect of complete harmony of the arts is one of the interesting features of the theatre.



Miss Ann Dornin was in charge of the installation of drapes and colors; Frank McInerney, architect superintendent, and J. A. Perez, Mr. Loew's personal representative.

William J. Smith has been manager of the Park theatre. Mr. Smith has been associated with the Loew interests in Cleveland for several years as manager of the Mall and Alhambra theatres respectively.

Craig Curtis and Company were the general contractors.

The Park theatre has all of the newest equipment for providing its patrons with the best possible projection. Simplex machines have been installed. There is a 176-foot throw, but the distance from the machine to the screen is bridged so as to bring out a clear, concise picture.

Prices of admission have been kept down to the level of the most modest patron, it being Mr. Loew's pet policy to build theatres for the masses, not the classes. Matinee prices, except Sunday and holidays, are 25 cents. Sundays and holiday matinee prices are 30 cents in the balcony and 40 cents on the main floor. Evening prices are 30 cents in the balcony and 40 cents on the main floor.

View of arch, screen setting and organ location at the Amber theatre, Philadelphia

THE Merrick Theatre at Jamaica, Long Island, was opened to the public about two weeks ago. Although located in a town with considerable high class competition, the attractiveness in design and furnishings of the Merrick are such that it stands by itself. The facilities provided Manager O'Neil, together with his ability as an exhibitor, are already showing results by the patronage since the theatre opened. Once inside, the people are not only treated to a beautiful auditorium with the finest of lighting effects, but the screen picture is of such a high quality that it is doubtetd if it can be surpassed by any theatre of its size in the Metropolitan district.

The interior of the Merrick is finished in a combination of light blue and tan. On the side walls the ornamentation, while not simple, is not too complicated for the remainder of the house. Near the front of the theatre on both sides of the stage the architect has placed a series of Corinthian pillers between which blue draperies are hung. Immediately in front of the pillers is a balcony effect containing green plants. This feature of the design is illustrated in one of the photographs below.

An innovation in the way of lighting has been introduced in this play-house. On both sides of the proscenium arch and also across the top of the arch is lattice work backed by opalescent glass, which in turn is in front of a series of electric lights controllable from the projection room. These lights may be varied in intensity and color to suit the feature or to coincide with the atmosphere of the prologue. While the picture is being shown the lights may be dimmed down to a point where they are not obnoxious to the audience.

The 200 seat comprising the loge are a special wicker and upholstered type with wing backs.

The projection room has been placed in the rear top of the house, but the layout as furnished and installed by the Howells Cine Equipment Co., more than makes up for this delinquency on the part of the architect. One of the photographs shows the projection room with its equipment, and another shows the generator room with its machine and switchboard.

The projection room equipment consists of two Type S Simplex machines, a Bausch & Lomb double dissolving stereopticon and a Kleigl spot light. Portholes of ample size have been provided in the front wall. An intercommunicating phone allows communication with all the strategic points about the house and lobby. At the right of the room is the complete dimming equipment, consisting of sets of Ward Leonard dimmers.

The machine room houses a 90 ampere double arc Westinghouse motor generator and a Westinghouse switchboard, complete with emergency switches, voltmeter and ammeter. For emergency use there are two 60 ampere General Electric Compensares of the transformer type. This room and the projection room adjoining, was laid out by Mr. H. C. MacNary, who has also designed most of the projection rooms equipped by the Howells Cine Equipment Company.

All Roads Lead to Peoria Opening

CHICAGO producers, exhibitors and managers journeyed to Peoria Thursday to witness the opening of Ascher Bros. new $500,000 Palace theatre, at Main and Madison streets. The occasion was made a gala affair and the Ascher Bros. were congratulated upon the beauty of their finished playhouse, which is declared to be one of the most beautiful west of New York.

One of the most startling innovations is the departure from the cove lighting that has been a feature of playhouses built within the last decade. In the center of the main dome there hangs a beautiful crystal chandelier, 14 feet high, 9 feet in diameter, containing 33 lights and costing in excess of $10,000. Within this huge cut glass jewel is contained the apparatus for complete direct and indirect lighting of the theatre. Colored and clear lights may be blended, dissolved and reblended in every imaginable light tone, but as an indirect effect, only playing into the dome, but with an indirect effect. Auxiliary lights play on the proscenium arch in the same way. Lighting experts declare the innovation will revolutionize lighting effects in theatres.

From the Main street entrance, one goes into the stately Italian lobby, which in turn opens into the Foyer, done in beautiful French style. Lofty and imposing, it is lined with mirrored walls, beautifully draped. Combination ramps and stairways lead to the mezzanine lounge and

DU PONT FABRIKOID

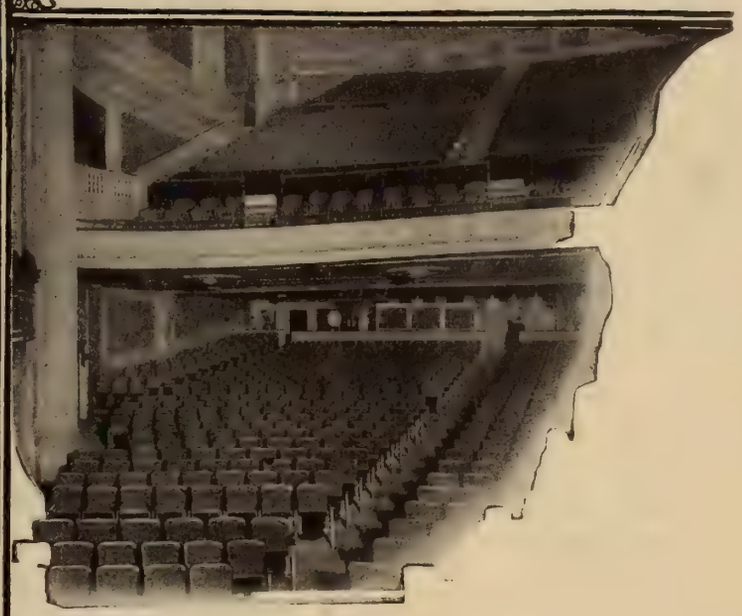
Upholstery to Match the Decorative Motif

BEAUTIFUL seat coverings—the final touch to a beautiful theatre.

Whatever your scheme of interior decoration there is a type of Craftsman Fabrikoid upholstery perfectly adapted to it. Fabrikoid comes in attractive blues and grays—beautiful shades of green—rich browns and reds. And in many different grains—the Moorish, two-tone finish is very popular with decorators.

With Fabrikoid—you are assured of interior harmony—so necessary if your theatre is to be really beautiful.

And Fabrikoid wears as well as it looks. It is strong and lasting. Perspiration can't rot it—for it is impervious to moisture. Because it is waterproof—it is readily washed with soap and water—easy to keep clean and spotless always.



We will gladly furnish you with samples of Fabrikoid and the names of theatre seat manufacturers who use it. Write to the nearest branch office.

lower levels of the balcony. This also is decorated in French style, soft lavenders, pinks and olives predominating.

Stepping into the auditorium one is not impressed with a vastiness, but rather of coziness, despite the fact that it is a large theatre. Wonderfully artistic draperies add to the impression of coziness. The design is Italian renaissance. Double pilasters at intervals about the walls carry the wonderful cornice, which in turn supports a beamed ceiling, out of which rises the graceful coffer dome which almost spans the ceiling.

Both from the main floor and the balcony, the view apparently is unobstructed, and little of the balcony may be seen from the first floor, which has an apparently unobstructed view of the ceiling and dome. But the same effect is seen in the balcony, which has the easiest incline of any theatre in the country, it is said.

The proscenium arch is a daring piece of work. The background of the color scheme is in two rich tones of gold, upon which rich colors have been used in such rare combinations that instead of appearing gaudy, it is richly dignified and fits into the ensemble amazingly well.

Clarence F. Menzing is the manager of the new theatre. He formerly managed the Chateau for Ascher Bros. in Chicago, and later opened the Portage Park and Forest park theatres for them. Harry L. Rogers, formerly with the Metropolitan Opera Co., the Chicago Grand Opera Co., and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, is the musical director. Incidentally, the orchestra pit is most effectively arranged and the great proscenium, with its artistic perforations, forms the grill work for the $20,000 pipe organ, built by the Moeller Organ Co., of Hoyertown, Md.

"The Branding Iron" was the initial play, and it was announced that the Ascher policy of a "unified Program" will be adopted.

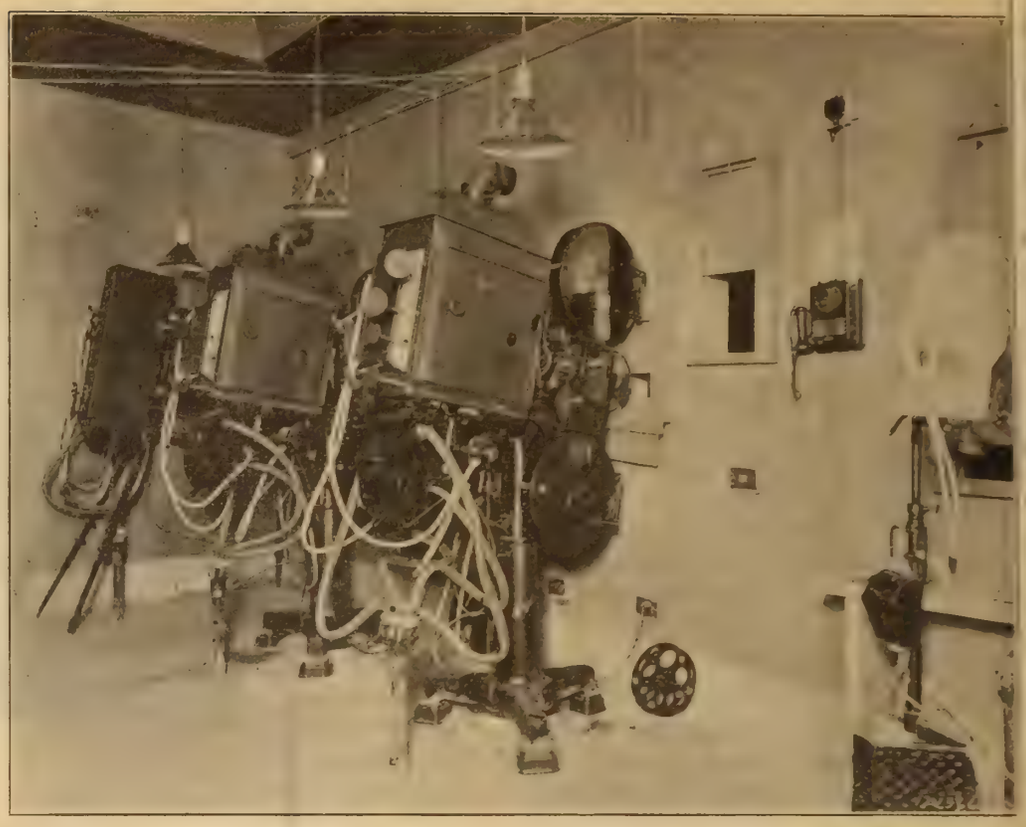
"Dance Creations," by the International Ballet, former members of the Metropolitan Opera Co. ballet, was the opening feature. Britt Wood, aided by a trio of singers of popular songs, was the feature of the comedy offering. The program changes will be Sunday and Thursday, with continuous performances every day from 2:30 to 11:30, the doors opening at 2.

Rest Rooms Are Feature of Lake Wales Theatre

THE little city of Lake Wales, Florida, does not loom up very big in the census figures, but she is sure on the motion picture map in large letters now, with her beautiful new Scenic theatre, which was completed last month.

The company was formed under the name of Lake Wales Amusement Company, and B. A. Bonfoey, the architect, of Tampa, Fla., was instructed to give them a theatre that would be a credit to any city, and Mr. Bonfoey certainly delivered the goods.

One thing that stands out big in the plans of this theatre was the rest rooms. There are two commodious and completely equipped rooms, one on each side of the theatre, for the comfort of the male and female patrons. Very few theatres in cities of the same size can boast of such a feature, and these rooms would be a credit to the largest houses.



The theatre proper is 40 feet wide by 80 feet deep. To the side, and connected with the house, is another building 20 feet wide, and running the entire length of the theatre, which will be used as a restaurant.

The construction is of steel and concrete, so it is as near fireproof as it is possible to make. The front is of the old Spanish Mission style, with outside finishing of stucco and ornamental tiling. The roof is tile.

A seating capacity of 500 has been provided, all on the ground floor. The interior walls are decorated with panels and columns. On the panels are lights and on each column an oscillating fan. The indirect lighting system is used on the panels as well as in the large chandelier in the dome. Besides the oscillating fans, there is a large exhaust fan on each side of the stage, and grill ventilators in the ceiling. Heat is provided, though needed very little in Florida, with a boiler room in the basement.

An attractive feature is the stage arrangement. Though the house is intended for motion pictures, still there is always the chance of a stage being needed, so it was provided, with ample space to accommodate vaudeville acts or lyceum numbers. The screen is at the back of the stage, and all around the screen is lattice work, with hanging vines, giving it the appearance of a garden. Curtains can be lowered to hide the screen when the stage is to be used. To further the garden effect there are French windows upon the back wall, with flower boxes and trailing vines.

The manager's office, a large concrete operating room, and a storage room, occupy the entire width of the building, on the second floor. The Scenic was constructed by the G. A. Miller Co. of Tampa, Fla., who carried out the plans of Mr. Bonfoey to the letter. The owners and the citizens of Lake Wales are delighted with their house and the latter are giving it the patronage it deserves.

Stern Planning Theatres for Jersey Towns

Mr. Joseph Stern is to build a 2,500 seat house in the Roseville section of Newark, the plans for which are being drawn up by Reilly and Hall, architects of New York City. The theatre will be built on the stadium plan and will have a lobby entrance 25 feet wide and 125 feet in length. The auditorium will be 100 x 125.

Another theatre which Mr. Stern is to build will be in Irvington, N. J., at Clinton and Springfield avenues. This house will seat 2,000 with an auditorium 95 x 176 and a lobby 37 x 90. Wm. E. Lehman of Newark is the architect.

Mr. Stern has been in the exhibiting business in Newark for ten years. He is a member of the National Executive Committee of the M. P. T. O. of America.

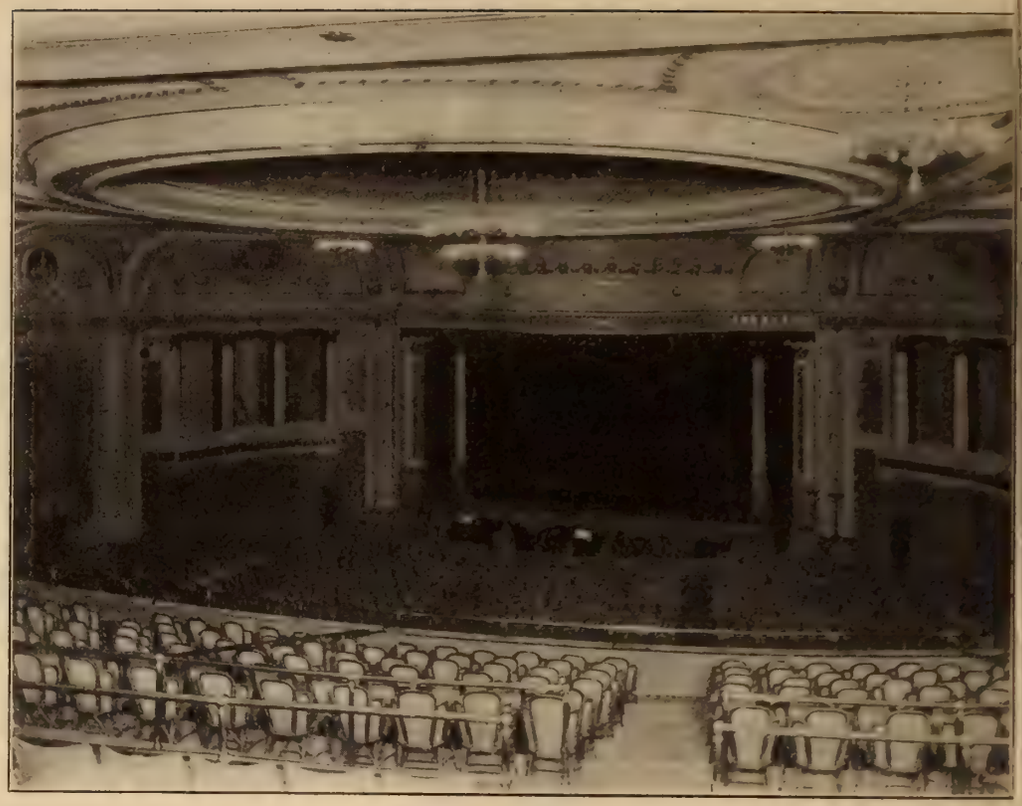
Theatre Ventilation Is Now Being Appreciated



You can hardly blame the enterprising exhibitor in the days gone by for his desire to keep his patrons cool and comfortable during the summer months, any more than you can the wide-awake theatre owner of today. The only difference seems to be in the fact that today we have much larger theatres, the equipment of which is in keeping with the construction, while during the days of the "movie house" nobody cared about summer comfort, or anything else, for that matter, as long as they saw the picture. The people didn't demand comforts of any kind, so they didn't get them.

In those days, however, there was one man who had an eye to the future. He was making ventilating and heating apparatus for schools and churches. He realized then the coming necessity of properly cooling and ventilating the picture theatres, and with this in mind, he set about the building of a system that would not only properly ventilate and cool any theatre. That man was Ernst Glantzberg, today president of the Typhoon Fan Company.

Some idea of the development in the Typhoon Cooling System may be had by glancing at the accompanying photograph. This is a picture of a twelve foot Typhoon Twin Set recently installed in the new Senate theatre, one of Chicago's handsomest new houses. This unit is only one of several Typhoon outfits necessary to keep this wonderful theatre cool in summer and comfortable in winter. Typhoon outfits similar to this one are being installed in other theatres throughout the country.

Equipment Gossip from the West Coast

Construction of a motion picture theatre to cost $500,000 on L street between Ninth and Tenth Sacramento, by the Paramount Pictures Theatre Corporation, will soon be commenced according to the directors who are Jesse L. Lasky, Herbert Rothchild, T. M. Henderson, Herman Webber, head of the San Francisco Paramount exchange, and George W. Peltier, vice-president of the California National Bank, Sacramento. H. L. Jacobs, Lasky Corp., architect and construction engineer, will be in charge of building operations.

The Haight theatre, San Francisco, has acquired adjoining property and will soon be enlarged, it is announced.

The Quincy, Cal., town hall is to be altered into a motion picture house or razed and a new building erected according to decision of the city fathers.

A $125,000 motion picture house for Madera, Cal., at Fifth and D streets is planned by A. C. H. Chamberlain. Seating capacity will be 1,200 to 1,400 according to A. W. Cornelius, architect.

Plans for a motion picture house to seat 1,500 persons on lower Main street, Petaluma, have been accepted by McNear and Egan, proprietors of the Mystic theatre. The new house will be the largest for many miles.

Arthur M. Miller, formerly manager of the T. & D. house at San Jose, is manager of the Oakland T. & D. vice Eugene L. Perry, who resigned to assume charge of distribution of African expedition films.

A new store on Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, to handle the exclusive Motiograph agency has been opened by Edward H. Kemp and is in charge of A. F. Howell, well known in the film game. The Motiograph projector is on hand in 3 modes, the De Luxe, Standard and Mazda. The Spencer Optical Company's Delineascope and 3 models of the Acme portable projectors and the Acme 110 volt automobile generator are in stock.

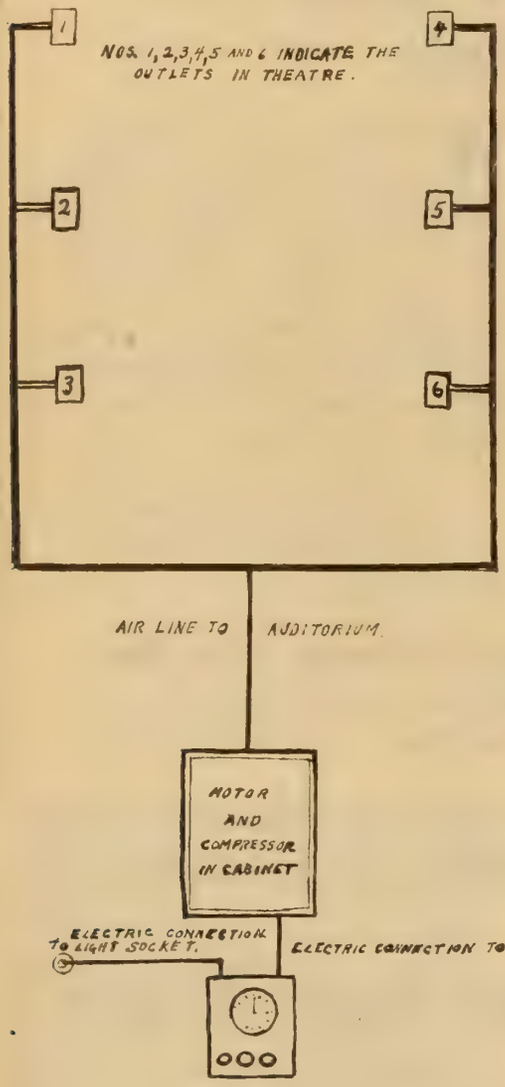
An Automatic Perfume Spray System

There are at least two methods of spraying a theatre atmosphere; one is by the hand spray, where an attendant walks up and down the aisle at frequent periods working a hand pump; the other is the new way, which takes care of the spraying automatically and in a hygienic manner. The latter system consists of an electric motor, which drives an air compressor, forcing air through lines of tubing that connect with the various containers placed about the building. The perfuming or deodoring is carried on without the knowledge of the patrons, all the working parts being hidden from view.



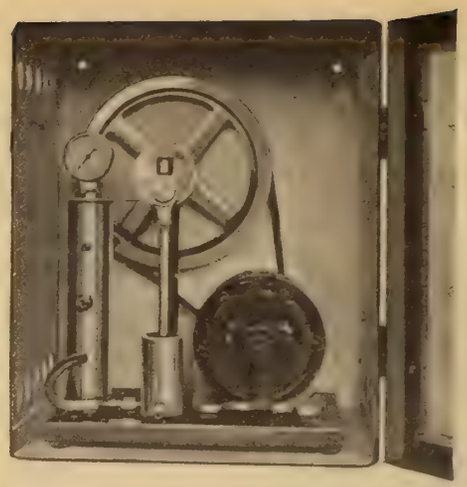


Diagram of theatre layout showing how the clock operates the air compressor and how the pipe lines for the perfume are run to various parts of the theatre.

Air Compressor and Motor. This size is for 6 outlets which corresponds to a theatre of 1,000 seats

According to reports, the operation of the set is noiseless, and after once being set and adjusted the device continues to perform without attention. The frequency of operation is made variable by setting a clock regulator to function at the desired times. Once installed it is necessary only to see that the supply of liquid is maintained in the atomizer.

Unique Lighting System in Shaw-Hayden Theatre

The Shaw-Hayden theatre, Cleveland, one of the season's most attractive new motion picture houses, has overcome one of the greatest aggravations of the exhibitor, by providing an excellent view of the screen from any point in the house. J. J. Mellert, manager of the Shaw-Hayden, worked out an original lighting system that has proved successful in making the side aisle seats as desirable as the center aisle seats, thus materially adding to the comfort of the patrons and to the revenue of the theatre.

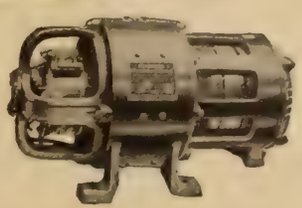
Mellert has operated a projection machine himsef. He noticed, among other things, that the side lights often interfered with his vision, even though he saw them from the projection machine. He concluded that these lights must be even more annoying to the people in the audience. So, when the Shaw-Hayden was built, Mellert arranged for the lights to be placed all around the moulding near the ceiling. They are screened from view by the moulding, much in the manner of the footlights in a theatre.

This results in reflected light only, providing plenty of illumination for seating purposes, without throwing any light whatsoever on the screen. Another advantage of this system of lighting is that it greatly enhances the effect. Red and blue lights are connected in series with the white ones which are regularly used, and when a picture is shown that has fire scenes, the red lights are timed with the screening. Night scenes are "atmosphered" in the same manner.

The controls for the lights are all in the projection booth, thus enabling the operator to synchronize the lighting with the scenes.

York, Pa., to Have Theatre Called Strand

A theatre to represent an investment of half a million dollars will be erected in York, Pa., by Jacob and Isaac Silverman of Altoona and Nathan Appell of York. Mr. H. Childs Hodgens of Philadelphia will be the architect in charge.



The building will probably be four stories in height, with an auditorium seating 2500. Every possible convenience will be incorporated in the design. The structure will be built of fireproof materials throughout, with a front of white tile.

This is the firm that was recently appointed distributor of the Powers machine in the Northwestern States. According to Matthew Aperton, manager of the company, he is to be the agency for a complete line of the best theatre equipment in existence. At the present time he is handling Bio carbons, Fulco products, the Halftone screen and the Clifton R. Isaacs products. Mr. Aperton recently sold a 6B machine to J. W. Silva, manager of the People's theatre at Clatskanine, Oreg., and one to the Gem theatre at Tillamook, Oreg. He also reports the purchase of an entire machine head by W. H. Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Information Compiled by H. F. Barnes, Lighting Service Department

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easily understandable language.

Types of Machines and Requirements

As regards lamps and lamp performance, perhaps the paramount feature in a housing should be that of ease of adjustment. To be able to get the maximum amount of light out of lamp, it must be always accurately focused and aligned. If the adjustments do not provide for this, mediocre results may be obtained.

Lamps vary. Due to their delicate nature, there is naturally quite a bit of hand work, consequently there will be slight variation in construction. For instance, even though one lamp is properly focused, it does not follow that screwing another lamp of the same kind into the socket previously used, without any change in adjustment, will bring the second lamp also in focus.

The filament may not be in the same position within the bulb as the former one. It may not be exactly the same light center length.

A lamp adjustment is therefore necessary.

With the cylinder type (C-5) of construction the best position of the filament with reference to the condenser is with the leading-in wires to the rear.

The question of mirror adjustment is largely debatable. Probably, for the majority of cases, a mirror which has been accurately centered and positioned with reference to the optical system and then fixed in place, is best practice.

As to slide carriers, there are several kinds available, and the most practical perhaps is one which, as the slide carrier is moved across, raises up the slide just shown so that it can be taken out with ease.

Before the advent of the Mazda lamp for stereopticon use, there were naturally a large number of machines in service, the majority of which can now be easily changed over the Mazda projection at a nominal cost. Most of the larger stereopticon companies furnish adapters that will in most cases fit inside of the old housing—whether arc or gas.

Where, for example, a 400-watt bulb is used, the housing should measure on the inside 8 in. high, 5 in. wide, to use a mirror, 7 in. long. Such a size, if ventilation is properly cared for, will provide sufficient radiating surface, and the lamp will not overheat.

The overall length, the perpendicular distance from botton of base to tip of bulb, is also of importance.

Most stereopticon lamps are designed to burn tip up, or at an angle not to exceed 45 degrees of vertical base up. Putting the base directly over the filament, where the hottest part of the lamp is, would not give satisfactory service, unless specially designed. If the base is put uppermost (in a standard design) the heat melts the glass stem inside the bulb so that the anchors which hold the filament in position may loosen and drop out. The filament will then sag and in all probability short circuit and burn out.

Mazdo lamps for stereopticon service are made in the following sizes, 100, 250, 400, 1000

In order to use a larger bulb, the 1000-watt, for instance, a new housing must be obtained. If a tubular bulb is used, the housing should be at least 12 in. high, 6 in. wide by 9 in. long. If a globular 1000-watt is used, the height can be decreased slightly.

If attachments are made up for the Mazda adoption, it should be remembered that four adjustments are necessary: first, an up-and-down motion; second, a motion sideways; third, a motion forward and back; lastly, a socket which will rotate.

The following companies are the three largest stereopticon manufacturers, and from whom literature and information relative to different types of machines can be obtained:

Spencer Lens Co., Buffalo, N. Y.
Bausch & Lomb Co., Rochester, N. Y.
Chas. Beseler Co., New York, N. Y.

An improved type of stereopticon machine is now coming into vogue, a type which permits of "dissolving" one view into the other. The Mazda outfit, being quite compact, is most admirably suited for a dissolving stereopticon.

In most cases two separate machines are used and each focused upon the screen. A simple mechanism that gradually covers up one projection lens and uncovers the other at the same time, produces the dissolve. Another style has a rheostat in connection with each lamp, and the dissolve is obtained by dimming one lamp and at the same time bringing the other up to full brilliancy.

Still another type produces a quasi-dissolving effect by moving the slide quickly out of focus and thus blurring the picture and at the same time bringing another slide into direct focus; the first slide is then withdrawn.

Another universal use of the stereopticon is for opaque projection, and is oftentimes combined in the same machine with the projection of slides. With opaque projection a condenser is rarely used. The opaque object, such as a postcard or picture, takes the place, in reality of the slide; the direct light of the lamp falls upon it, is reflected, and the projection lens picks up the reflected light. A much higher intensity of light is required for opaque projection.

Focusing

Satisfactory projection with stereopticon machines means more, as a rule, than pressing the button. Just as a careful motorist gives constant attention to his engine, so should the careful stereopticonist (if such a word can be coined), keep his house in order.

Granted the user has the proper apparatus, the first and most important rung in the ladder of projection success is accurate focusing.

Perhaps the easiest way to focus, is to move the lamp around until the screen seems to be brightest. At its best, however, the eye is a poor judge of intensity, unless it sees two different intensities at the same time, Juggling the lamp, therefore, is not the most accurate way of focusing, especially when the mirror must also be focused.

An accurate way of setting the lamp is as follows:

Set the stereopticon machine up ready for operation and focus on screen. Now remove the projection lens. Also turn to one side the mirror, which is behind the lamp. If the mirror cannot be turned and is fixed in position, cover it up with a piece of cardboard or paper.

(To be concluded)

Plans for Local 384 Ball About Complete

The grand reception and ball of Local 384 of Jersey City, which is to be held on Washington's Birthday will be a success if the hard-working members of the committee have their way. Besides arranging for entirely new and unusual electrical effects during the dancing, it is now certain that some of the foremost film stars will be present in person. The dancing will continue until morning. Anthony Boscarelli is chairman of the committee; Fred Harvey will be floor manager, with Harvey Sapp as his able assistant.

Local 306 Striving for License Changes

For several months past the officers of local 306 have been active in a campaign to make certain changes for the better in the city ordinances having to do with the licensing of motion picture theatre projectionists. The principal item called for the insertion of a clause that would make it prohibitory for a man to become a full-fledged projectionist unless he had had six months or more of apprenticeship under a duly licensed man. The idea is an excellent one, and should have the backing of every person interested in the advance of the industry.

The ability to pass an examination is not an absolute test of a man's fitness to serve as an operator in a motion picture theatre. What a man learns from books and what he learns from actual experience are two different things. The book taught man may be able to fix a fault after it has been brought to his notice, but the man with experience is more often able to detect the fault before it has a chance to affect the operation of the machine. This applies particularly well to the fire hazard.

As long as a high temperature light source is used in conjunction with an inflammable film there will always be a fire hazard in the projection room. An experienced man in charge of this hazard would realize conditions. It behooves the officials in charge, therefore, to see that only men with experience and of proven ability are placed in charge of the machines. The six months' apprenticeship idea will solve to a great extent this situation by making available a larger number of projectionists well trained in every branch of the work.

To present their case before the Committee on General Welfare, Local 306 has prepared a creditable booklet that explains their aims in language understandable to the laymen on the committee. It is probable that the change in the ordinance will be made.

Will Mazda Do the Trick for This Man?

Albert Court, of the Court theatre, Livingston, Cal., is thinking of changing his equipment. His letter says:

I am running a small picture show, about 200 capacity, but am building a new house of about 450 capacity. At present I am using a 6A Powers' projector with a 220-volt a. c. through a Powers' inductor. My throw is 45 feet and the picture is about 8'10"x11'6".

I would like to better my light in the new house but I don't feel that I can afford a motor generator set as I will only run three nights a week. I will get another projector and am figuring on a Mazda lamp equipment. This is where I need your advice. My throw will be 75 feet at the most but at present it will only be 65 feet, as the screen will be on the stage front and the stage won't be finished before I move in. My screen is just plain white chalk finish.

Do you think the Mazda outfit would be more satisfactory under these conditions than the 220 volt a. c. with the inductor. If so would you recommend the outfit put out by the Simplex people as I am figuring on getting a Simplex projector.

Reply: There is no reason at all why the Mazda in its present state of perfection should not be entirely suitable for your new house. A number of changes have been made in the lamp as now sold and the outfit is doing regular duty much more severe than yours. Besides giving a satisfactory light on the screen the cost of operations should be materially reduced—for instance: Assuming that you are now using 30 amperes a. c. for your short throw of 45 feet it is not probable that with the slightly larger screen at 75 feet that you would need more than 45 amperes a. c. The 45 amperes arc would require a voltage of about 55, which would mean a total wattage at the arc of about 2,500 watts. At 75 feet and with a screen slightly larger than the one you now have you would find that the 900 watt Mazda lamp gave good screen illumination. With the slight loss in the transforming equipment added to this lamp wattage the total would not be over 1,000 watts. On this basis your saving in current alone would be about 1,500 watts per hour.

The outfit put out by the Simplex Company is satisfactory as far as we know? This outfit uses what is known as the plano convex system of condensers in distinction to the prismatic or corrugated lens. There are adherents to both systems with separate claims for each. Whether one is better than the other depends a lot on the conditions under which they are installed. But assuming that the light from each is the same it is usually easier to adjust the prismatic system than the "plano." In either case, however, the finest results are obtained only by careful, attention to details.

55. In using a rheostat or rheostats, must the line fuses be as large as the rated capacity of the rheostat or rheostats?

Line fuses should not be the same as the rated capacity of the rheostats, as a fuse is a protection for a circuit it should be the weakest part of the line.

56. In using an A. C. compensarc or low voltage transformer, must the line fuses be as large as the rated capacity of the compensarc? If so, why? If not, why?

Line fuses should not be as large as the rated capacity of a compensarc for the same reason as stated in 55.

57. In using an A. C. compensarc, must the fuses after the compensarc be of a different size than the line fuse? If not, why? If so, what does the difference in size depend on?

The fuses situated nearest to the arc should be of the smallest capacity in order that time may not be lost in going to the main fuse for renewal in case of trouble on the line. The main fuses may be of a capacity of about 25 amperes larger than the customary load on the line to act as an additional protection in case the branch fuses fail. The capacity of a fuse is dependent on the area of cross section of the fusible material.

58. How much oil is necessary for any bearing of any projection machine head?

A drop at a time applied a la Common Sense.

59. How tight should take up tension be set?

Just tight enough to pull down without undue straining of film. A too high tension will make a jumpy picture. A too slight tension may jam up the film. Take up tension depends to a certain extent on tension of shoes.

60. Give relative position that upper, lower and intermittent sprockets and aperture plate must have to each other.

All feed and guide sprockets must be in a perfectly straight line.

61. Why should cam and geneva movement of a projection machine have a small amount of circumferential play?

A too tight set may bind the machine after it warms up, and when strain comes on it.

62. If the top gate idler is set too tight, what is likely to happen? If it is set too loose, what is likely to happen? If too far to either side what is likely to happen?

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way cooperate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

crease the likelihood of film catching on bad patches and cause buckling. (b) Might allow film to flop, causing side ways "jump," increase possibility of film running from intermittent sprocket if sprockets are at all out of alignment and have tendency to cause unsteadiness in image. (c) Answered in above.

63. What tests can be used to know that tension springs are set correct?

If referring to amount of "pinch" remove drive belt and with handle judge amount of force used to turn intermittent. Then with film locked in gate judge amount of force. If the machine turns over easily your tension springs are not too tight, if you are running new film. In case you are using old film allow tension springs to be as loose as possible and still preserve rigidity on your screen image. To test for too tight tension springs on old film thread up and with handle turn machine over slowly. If the film cracks when sliding off the sprockets providing the later are not hooked, the tension is too tight.

64. Explain proper method of removing emulsion from tension shoes or aperture plate.

Emulsion may be removed from tension shoes or aperture with a piece of copper or some soft material. To keep the machine in perfect condition, these parts may be cleaned occasionally with caustic soda.

65. Give full explanation in detail of the cause of the keystone. Effect, and its possible remedies.

When the booth is above the level of the screen and it is necessary to tilt the machine, the bottom of the picture will be wider than the top since the light rays have to travel farther to the bottom of the screen than to the top. This effect may be remedied by filing away and filling in the aperture plate opening.

66. In what relative position must the cam shaft and star shaft be to one another?

Must be exactly parallel.

67. Give approximately the proper distance for idlers to be set away from the sprockets.

About 1/16".

68. In a travel ghost, if streaks appear to travel upward, how should shutter be moved? If streaks appear to travel downward, how should shutter be moved?

Should be moved ahead. Should be moved back.

69. Give the size of the aperture.

.906" wide and .6795" high—approximately 29/32 x 87/128.

70. How can a condenser be measured? (a) How can an objective lense be measured?

Pass parallel light rays through condenser. Set up testing screen. Move latter until fairly distinct image of distant object appears. Distance from center of condenser to image represents focal length. Measure objective the same way. Start measurement from center point of distance between elements.

71. What does back focus mean? (a) What does equivalent focus mean?

Means distance from rear element to aperture of film plane.

Means the focal length of a compound lens referred to a similar simple lens as a standard.

72. What are the likely causes of picture jumping in and out of focus?

Either a cupping film at the aperture or a lens which is loose in its jacket. Sometimes a worn ratchet on lens jacket.

Simplex Strong in Fort Lee Laboratory

A most important branch of the film industry centers around the laboratory where the negative film is sent and put through the process of development and printing, and where, if not carefully handled, the finest photography and subjects can be irretrievably ruined.

The up-to-date film laboratory must, of necessity, be equipped with the finest appliances and presided over by the most efficient and experienced men in order to properly handle the wonderful examples of directorship and cameraman's skill as represented in the present day photography.

A brief glimpse into the huge building occupied by the Paragon Film Laboratories, at once convinces the visitor that here indeed is a splendid example of an efficient and modern film laboratory projection room.

The entire second floor of the Paragon plant is turned over to the perforating, printing, joining and inspection departments, and here also is quickly noted the speed, which must of necessity be maintained, while at the same time the highest type of efficiency and precision must prevail.

One of the most interesting departments of this bustling place is the large reviewing room, where are located six motor-driven Simplex Projectors. It is in this room, where every print is run through the projection machines, and the projectionist of each of the six machines is also the film inspector, who, in running the new print at amazingly high speed, watches the screen intently for photographic imperfections, poor assembling and any other causes that might creep into the work.

One of the Simplex machines is equipped with the special two to one movement which was developed by the Precision Machine Company's engineers for exclusive use in kinemacolor work, where twice the normal speed as used in black and white projection was required.

It is this fast movement that is used exclusively where unusual speed is required in running off a print that is needed to take the place of one that might have been destroyed or miscarried in some far-off city and where an exhibitor or exchange may be urgently calling for a substitute print.

Besides the six Simplex machines used in the reviewing rooms, there are two other similar machines used in another department on the same floor, while still another is located in a special reviewing room situated in the basement, making a total of nine Simplexes in all used by this one organization.

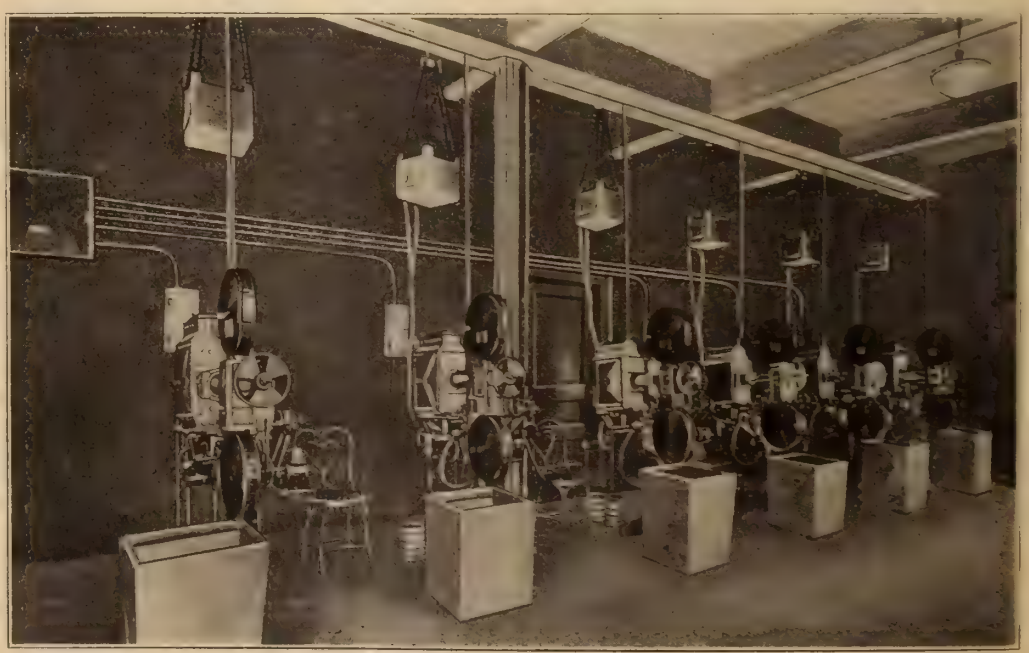
Mr. Jack Wolf, formerly connected with the Precision Machine Company for a period of four years, and who is an especially trained and high-class mechanic, has charge of the up-keep and maintenance of the equipment.

Regulation Sizes of Ventilation Ducts

E. M., Pennsylvania: Please let me know the regulation size for exhaust fan openings in projection room?

Reply: As usual in matters concerning the projection room there is no similarity in the laws of the various States. But usually whether there is a regulation or not it has been found advisable to make the exhaust opening not smaller than 12". In the case of the larger projection rooms with their two machines, stereo and spotlight an 18" exhaust fan is to be recommended.

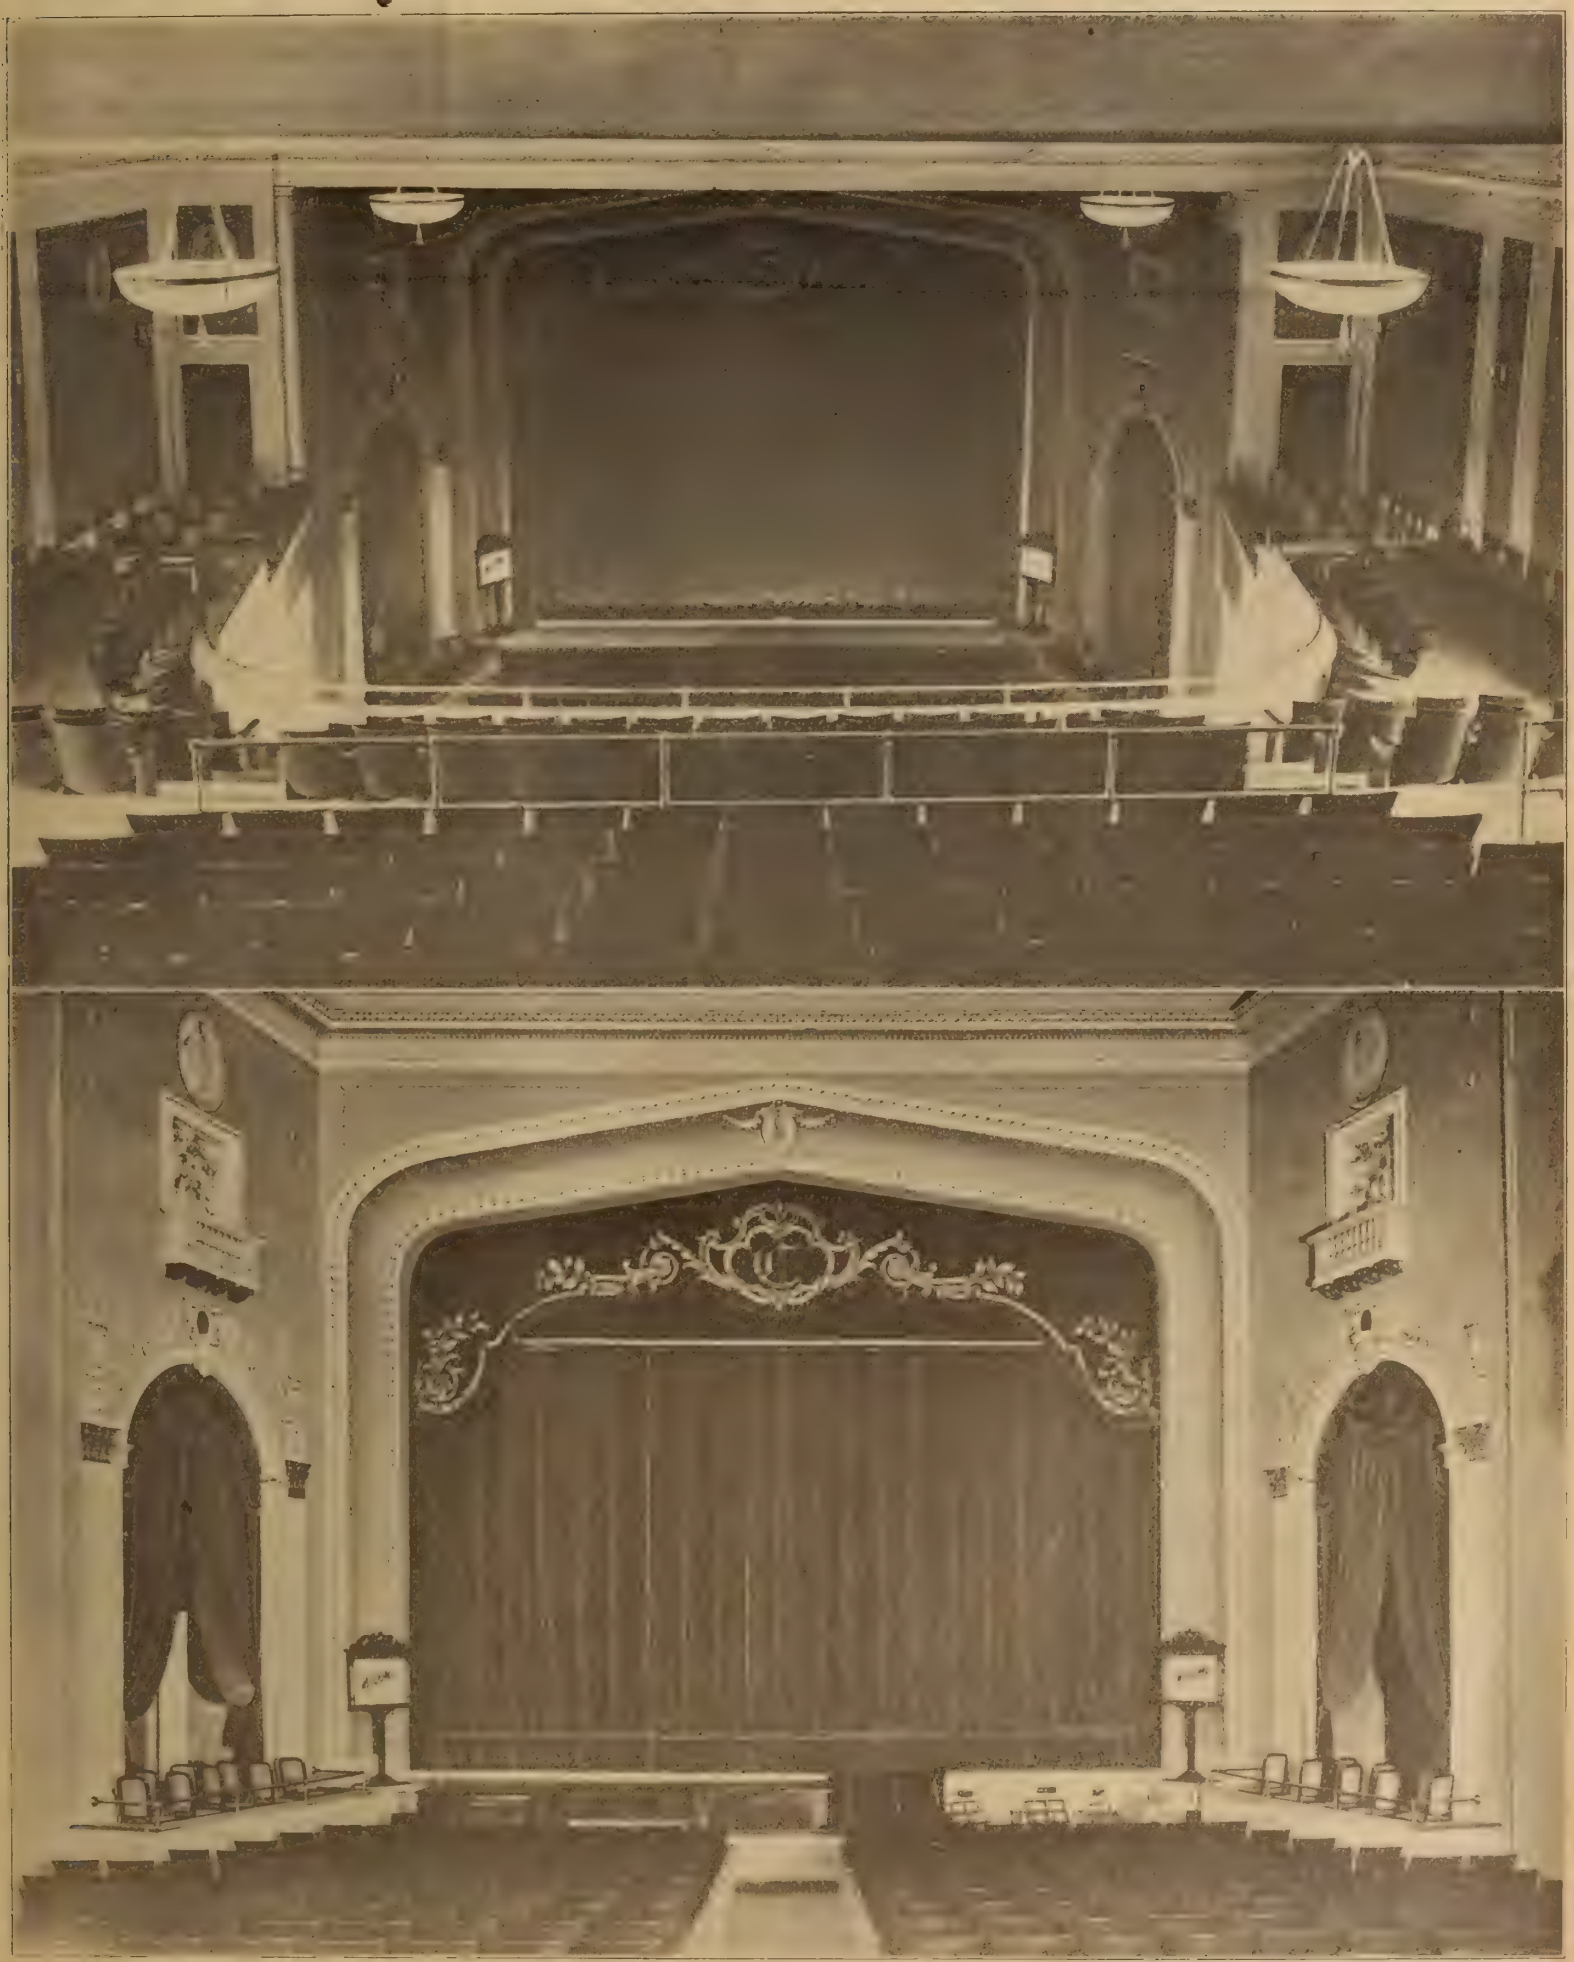
There are thousands of rooms with no mechanical ventilation. The only way the foul, dust filled air can leave the room is through the open doors or through rough openings cut through the walls near the ceiling. In other rooms, a 4" or 6" pipe does its best to carry away the used air.



Metallic Screen or Wall

T. M. D., No. 902, N. A. M. L.: Which would make the best screen, a home-made plaster wall surface or a manufactured one like the gold fibres?

Reply: It all depends. It depends first on the shape and style of your theatre, and second on your skill and luck in preparing the wall surface. We have seen plaster wall screens that produced the finest picture that a manager would want. We have seen others so poor that it was a crime to use them. A plaster wall is a diffusive surface, that is when light strikes it the beam is reflected to a wide angle. There is little fadeaway with a good screen of this sort



A metallic surface sceen, on the other hand, usually gives the best results near the center of the house in which it is installed, although certain of the screen manufacturers have invented screens that reflect light to a considerable angle.

As a rule, you would be better satisfied with a manufactured screen than one which you had made yourself.

Manheimer Addresses Famous Players' Executives

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation hold regular weekly meetings and discussions which are attended by all of the Department Heads and Executives. Various subjects are presented at these meetings by the heads of the departments and occasionally outside speakers are called in to talk on subjects of interest to the industry. These meetings are very much like that of a forum and many lively discussions have taken place between the various department heads which have resulted in improved methods of studio and office operation and increased efficiency in production.

At the last meeting held, Mr. J. R. Manheimer, the electrical engineer who designed and installed the power plant and electrical equipment in the new Long Island City studios and laboratories, gave a very interesting talk illustrated profusely with slides and moving pictures of the complete electrical and mechanical equipment in new studios and laboratories. His talk covered the various factors that were considered when the studio was still a dream and showed how completely the various requirements in a studio of this size were taken care of. He stated that the electrical equipment in the Long Island City studio was capable of supplying approximately 12 companies on a floor (24 on both studio floors) without interference with each other. This has been made possible by the design and application of the E-J Electric Installation Company's Remote Control System. Various new devices for use in studios, which were especially developed for this studio, were also shown and Mr. Manheimer stated that since the completion of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, a number of other studios had followed suit and were using the same type of equipment.

A rather unusual feature of the electric system in the Famous Players-Lasky studio is the feeder system. Mr. Manheimer stated that the current requirements were so great that the use of insulated cables and conduits would have been very awkward and cumbersome and, therefore, a system of bare copper bus-bar feeders was installed throughout the entire building. It was stated that these bus bar feeders could withstand considerable overloads without deterioration and without danger. These feeders are properly protected to prevent persons and objects from coming into accidental contact with them. According to the speaker the L. I. studio is the only studio in the world which is equipped in this way. At some future time when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation extend their buildings to cover the balance of the acreage in Long Island City, it will merely be necessary to add on to this bus-bar feeder and extend to the new section without any changes to the present system.

Mr. Manheimer gave a very interesting comparison between the studio of the past with its one or two stages, and the studio of to-day such as the one in Long Island City where 24 sets can be worked at one time if necessary.

An interesting point brought out the fact that continuity was considerably simplified since it was possible for a director to finish "shooting" one set and go into another set which would be ready for him either on the upper studio or the lower studio as the case may be, without loss of time waiting for the erection of the set. It is also possible in the new studio to leave sets up until the picture is finished, cut and reviewed by the director, so that if a retake is necessary this can be easily done without the expense of rebuilding the set.

Mr. Manheimer's talk was enthusiastically received and as time goes on he will give this talk to the Famous Players-Lasky personnel in the various big cities throughout the country.

A very elaborate program for weekly talks has been arranged. This lecture course of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation bids fair to become an important educational medium for the executives and department heads of the company and these meetings have been very well attended so that the company has every reason to feel that the success and permanency of the lecture course has been established.

Changes in Design in Corcoran Developing Tanks

For the purpose of saving space in the laboratory A. J. Corcoran, Inc., has made certain changes in the design of their developing tanks. It is now possible to develop the same number of feet of film with a much smaller quantity of solution and no one knows better than the laboratory man what this will amount to. This economy of solution coupled with the economy in space made possible by the altered sizes and capacity will make the tanks particularly suitable for those laboratories working under cramped conditions.

How the B&H Splicing Machine Operates

With the larger problems incident to the production of motion pictures satisfactorily solved by modern machines designed to keep step with the rapid strides the industry has taken of late, the manufacturers turned their attention to some of the smaller, but by no means the least important phases of the industry. Among the various stages the film goes through before being released, none is more important to the efficient editing of a production than the making of splices. Heretofore this operation has been conducted largely by hand and the conception of a machine to standardize and improve the making of patches was hailed with a certain degree of timidity on the part of the film editor on account of its secondary importance when compared to the machines used in the earlier stages of processing the film.

This prejudice however, was very quickly overcome by the neatness and celerity with which its operation was characterized and the completeness of the results accomplished. This machine is one of a series of machines designed by the Bell & Howell Company whose entire output incorporates the features of standardization to a high degree and it was the earnest endeavor of the manufacturers to bring the operation of splicing up to the same high plane of efficiency as each of their other pieces of apparatus has attained for its particular function.

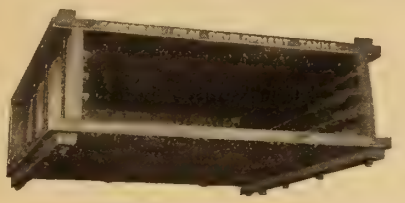
The development of a practical splicing machine presented problems quite as intricate as those of its co-worker, the printing machine and its present degree of perfection was attained only after considerable experimenting and combining the data thus gained in the present model. The prime requisite which was constantly keep in view was a mechanism to take the uncertainty out of splicing and making the joint an element of strength rather than one of weakness. In the hand-made patch it is necessary first to over-lap the film a distance varying from 1-16 of an inch to the total width of a sprocket hole and in passing over the various sprockets this presented a thickness double that originally intended and in time the joint became hard and inelastic. For this reason along the running of films that were slightly aged became a question of great annoyance to the projectionist and these patches were passed with a sigh of relief on his part. Aside from this, what is more distracting in the middle of a performance, than to have a majestic battleship or the deathbed scene suddenly give a lurch heavenward on the screen and frequently end with a glowing white surface and a pause for a few moments while the operator rethreads his machine. In this connection it is easy to note what an important factor that little insignificant joint which is a source of little thought to the assembling room help really amounts to; when the finished story makes its final debut before the public.



The wise producer has learned that these trifling little links necessary to the composition of the completed picture are not to be so lightly touched upon. He is, therefore, only too eager to give careful consideration to any device that will further the perfection of his product. The introduction of the film splicing machine marks the passage of this haphazard method, and has come to fill a predetermined place among that of the other elements necessary for the modern practice of the art of picture making.

The machine consists of a polished metallic surface along which the films are laid. This surface is divided in two sections the right hand one having a vertical movement and the left hand one being stationary. These surfaces are of a slightly larger width than of the film itself and of such a length to accommodate about four images of each end of the two rolls. Above these two surfaces are two more of the same dimensions made to move vertically so as to tightly hold the film when placed on the lower plates. The movement of these two upper plates or cutter blades is controlled by foot pedals. By an ingenious arrangement consisting of a locking lever the upper and lower right hand plates are made to move upward in unison. In operation the end of the roll of film to the right is placed on the right hand lower plate and extended slightly over its edge on to that of the left hand plate and there engaged with two projecting pins called pilot pins. The position of these pilot pins with reference to the frame line is very important and they should always be engaged with the sprocket holes to the left of the frame line on which the splice is to occur. At this stage of the operation the pedal controlling the upper right hand cutter plate is released allowing this plate to come down and tightly clamp the film thus far. The locking lever is then brought forward locking these two plates together with the film and the right hand foot pedal is operated again carrying both plates and film upward and out of the way allowing this process to be duplicated with the left hand roll of film. After both ends of the films are clamped in their respective plates the scraping block is brought into play. This device consists of a mounting for the scraping blade and is machined to fit square over the edges of the projecting cutter plates to allow the scraping blade to remove the emulsion from the ends of the film. A few strokes over each film is sufficient to attain this end and the cement is now applied by one stroke of the brush only, on the film at the left and immediately thereafter releasing the right foot pedal by which operation the end of the films are squarely cut off and pressure is automatically applied to firmly weld the two films together. It remains now only to raise both upper blades and pull the pilot ejector allowing the now continuous film to be rewound.

This is probably an exhaustive explanation and the actual time consumed once the films are placed in position is measured only by the rapidity of the foot action and is scarcely more than the fraction of a second.

The resulting splice is one whose edges do not over lap and present the thickness of only one continuous strip of film, effected by the angle of the blade used for scraping. The angle of this scraping blade can be varied so as to make a cut from a very shallow bevel to almost an end to end joint.

The width of the completed patch is approximately 1-32 of an inch as compared to that of the old style hand-made joints and owing to the small area available for contact it was found that the ordinary cement was unsuitable for the enormous strain this joint was subject to. In order to compensate for this the manufacturers experimented with various formulas and are now supplying a cement specially adapted for the requirements of their machine.

New Organ in Los Angeles

The Robert-Morton Orchestral Organ which has recently been installed in the Pantages thetre, Los Angeles, is in many ways a very remarkable instrument.

The concrete chambers in which the different pipes and instruments stand are located beneath the stage, occupying the full width of the proscenium arch. The organ contains a proper representation of almost all the voices in a modern orchestra, in addition to the fundamental organ tones which have caused the organ to be known as the King of Instruments.

The flute family is particularly well represented, there being a concert flute, orchestral flute, piccolo, 'cella piccolo, tibia or Roman pipe, and doppel flute.

The string family is well represented by first and second violin, viola, 'cello and double bass, together with the octave violins, which add greatly to the brilliancy of the organ.

The oboe, saxophone, clarinet and bassoon are all available for the organist to use in weaving tone fabrics. The brass section contains cornet, trumpet, tuba and orphicleide, which produce a fitting climax which heretofore belonged only to the symphony orchestra.

The most outstanding feature of the organ tone proper would, of course, be the dignified diapason, which is the backbone of every organ; and in addition to these families, the full-throated, cathedral-toned vox humana will recall memories of true ecclesiastical organ effects.

The instrument also contains many orchestral adjuncts, such as the harp, orchestral bells, xylophone, bass drum, snare drum, etc., all of which are so arranged that the expert musician can be sure of finding them just where he wants and when he wants them.

The pedal board and manuals are all equipped with the Robert-Morton Double Touch System, which permits the organist to use two separate combinations of tones from the same division simultaneously. The console or key desk, which is located in the orchestral pit, is equipped with the very latest devices in the form of adjustable combination action, which controls the almost countless stop keys and effects, so making the master organist's task as light as possible.

There is also an Upright Grand piano equipped with the mandolin effect.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Sportsman"

(Two-Reel Larry Semon Comedy. Released by Vitagraph)

TRICK photography and the reliable "lion stuff" save this from being just ordinary. It will get some laughs, but most of the gags are old and not especially clever. Compared to Larry Semon's recent pictures this is far below the average.

"The Sportsman" presents Mr. Semon as one of those present in a mythical Turkish kingdom where he is chased about by divers persons for the sole purpose of providing action and an excuse for pulling slap stick tricks. Many familiar scenes have been used, like tumbling into water, falling through trap doors, crawling under the rugs, throwing crockery and being speared in the rear with various weapons.

If an audience has not seen practically the same thing hundreds of times it will go over as a hit. If they have it will be mildly amusing and probably hold attention because it keeps moving. Mr. Semon is his usual self, working hard and provided with good support. However the lack of originality in the material provided relegates the production to ordinary slapstick. The lion mentioned is used in the last of the picture and is instrumental through clever camera work in providing some good comedy scenes.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Roaring Lions on Parade"

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

PROBABLY working on the premise that good things are more appreciated if they come not too often, Fox has turned out the first Sunshine comedy featuring lions in some time.

"Roaring Lions on Parade" is one of the best of this series which we have seen in some time. It has more than a few thrilling moments brought about by a ferocious looking lioness and a helpless baby. It opens with familiar hotel stuff. Tom Kennedy and Ethel Teare have the leading roles. A first class comedy vamp and a large number of lovers bring about the opening laughs.

Then the story takes a turn. Kennedy decides to discount a bragging hero. At the same time the baby has toppled off a swing into the lions' cages, and the villainous kidnappers, in trying to get possession of the infant, loose the animals. So there is ample opportunity for cross-purposes. Kennedy whispers in the ear of the real lion that it is time for him to begin his act, and the disguised bellboy is the victim of a terrific beating by the hotel people. Two animals are brought into the hotel lobby set, and chase a crowd upstairs and down in a ferocious manner. Of course, they turn up at most unexpected places and snarl into the face of man who believes that he has just escaped from them. One good shot is taken from above the lions cage with the beast jumping up to within several feet of the camera. The animal trainer is brought in at the end and will thrill an audience by putting his head into the lion's mouth.

There are good gags coupled with the lion-thrills, which will insure a steady stream of laughter from any audience. Harry Williams is responsible for the direction and familiar Sunshine comedy types appear in the cast.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Leading a Dog's Life"

(Sport Pictorial, Produced by Town and Country Films. Released by Merit Film Corporation)

"LEADING A DOG'S LIFE" is a very interesting series of scenes showing various dogs in various environments with a semi-humorous angle brought to the fore in some places.

Some of the shots secured of hunting dogs in action will bring a thrill to anyone who has ever hunted wild game, especially birds. Other scenes show various breeds of canines being trained. Among these are police dogs.

Some cute puppies are shown crawling out of a clay vase, during dinner time, etc. Received better applause at the Capitol theatre than the feature being shown. Some slow motion photography is used to illustrate how the police dogs climb over a fence seven and a half feet high.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"No Monkey Business"

(Universal)

JOE MARTIN is getting to be quite a "prop" comedian. In fact this young gentleman from the jungle can handle the well known accessories as well as his human contemporaries.

To see him perform in "No Monkey Business," one must certainly believe in the Darwinian theory, for he acts like a perfect leading man and handles his wife, another monk, as a leading man should.

But Joe is given to drink and late hours, thus causing his wife many unhappy moments. When he is censured by his better half, he recalls the days of his bachelorhood in the jungle and longs for his independence.

It is not until the last few scenes, however, that Joe regrets his folly and as he leans against a bathtub and feels his head, swears he will drink no more.

It is Joe's acting that counts in this reel, which is of the straight, rather than comedy variety.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Hypnotist"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—Half Reel)

THIS is absolutely the most ridiculous cartoon of the series which has reached the screen in some time. Nonsense-lovers will start laughing at almost the very beginning and never stop for a minute until the end. On the other hand some will think it very foolish, and possibly will not be able to find a laugh for the preposterous absurdities it contains. But the net laughter resulting from it should be very great in volume.

Mutt and Jeff are hypnotized. Jeff is ordered to act like a dog and Mutt like a cat. Then the mesmerizer is arrested and there is no one to take them out of their trance. So act like cat and dog they do, although they are drawn as men by the animator. They fight terrifically and then Mutt climbs a tree and spits forth his wrath, while Jeff leaps in a wild endeavor to reach him, at the same time barking in rage.

The little fellow goes in to a butcher's shop and steals a bone, and has a second fight, with a dog this time, over the right of ownership. Mutt, wandering alone, finds a little playmate on the back fence and howls his love song at her until old shoes and bottles are forthcoming from flat windows. The two are finally captured by a policeman and brought out of the hynotic spell by their enchanter.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Royal Family of Swaziland"

(Prizma-Selznick—One Reel)

A LINE up of these dusky natives of a South African principality takes on the form of a comic opera to judge from their name. It is a fantastic offering and acquaints the spectator with the conduct of the royal court and the customs of the Nubians in a far-away land. Mr. Sugden of Alaskan fame, takes credit for gathering close-ups of these people. And judging from the royal reception given him he must also take credit for being something of a diplomat. The Prizma effects are prominent in the colors of the royal wardrobe. Startling hues of red, yellow and brown are prominently displayed.

But it isn't the best Prizma because the natives are too dusky too appear at their best. It may interest some to know that the queen is nearly eighty years old and still able to rise from the royal chair and greet the white man with a royal and hearty handshake. The country has no Eighteenth Amendment on its hands, for the explorers are given a taste from the royal jug, which contains Kaffir beer. The picture will arouse more curiosity than it will satisfaction because the color effects are mostly of a sombre shade. The trap drummer in an orchestra pit can inject a deal of atmosphere with a tom-tom. It makes a good filler.—LAURENCE REID.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 23, 1920.

"Clever twists make interesting crook story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased." "Story little impossible but business was big. Some fine double exposures in this and picture one of his best." "An entertaining feature which drew well." "Great in story and in production. Wally Reid always has good following and great stories. Went over big." "Better than average business." "An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done." "Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and 'Always Audacious' pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week." "Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run." "Drew large crowds and met with the favor of home-going audiences." "A good production having entertaining story. Box-office reecipts good." "A very good picture to average business two days."

"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE ..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE ..... JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from fomous classic."—M. P. News.

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good melodrama that pleased lovers of this class of entertainment. Box-office returns better than usual." "Fairly good both as to pleasing the audiences and box-office returns."

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE ..... FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH ..... NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BRUTE MASTER, THE (HODKINSON) HOBART BOSWORTH ..... NOV. 6

"Washburn's best one in a dog's age—a real comedy."—M. P. News.

CHALLENGE OF THE LAW, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... OCT. 23
"Russell at his best; a real entertaining drama."—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID ..... JAN. 8
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business." "One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good." "Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen." "Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased." "Very good picture which held down big business for a week."

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.

CITY SPARROW, A (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON ..... DEC. 4
"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape." "Two days to average business."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... DEC. 18
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT, A (FOX) SPECIAL CAST ..... FEB. 12
"Mark Twain modernized in an appealing picture."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.

COUSIN KATE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE ..... FEB. 12
"Alice Joyce has strong personality in 'Cousin Kate.'"—M. P. News.

"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business." "Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying." "A good picture and brought more than usual business.' "This sure did go over big and deserved it for it's an interesting picture throughout." "Picture brought fine business. Very entertaining."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Vivid, 'punchy' story; production excellent."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This one went over good and brought more than the average business."

"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.

DEVIL TO PAY, THE (BRUNTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 4
"Strong mystery story carries interest."—M. P. News.

"Rather grewsome story, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment.—"Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business." "Its too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused." "Most unsatisfactory First National ever shown here."

"LYING LIPS"
(Ince-Asso. Producers)

Spectacular But False in Idea and Characterization

THIS picture looks like a million dollar production with a "below stairs" story. Mechanically it is perfect, there being a spectacular appeal in truly picturesque scenes and the staging, lighting and details standing out in bold relief. In fact it eclipses anything Ince has ever done from a spectacular standpoint. Which, of course, emphasizes the plot shortcomings. Characterized as a photoplay with a message it has nothing to say that smacks of humanity or reality. Indeed the characterization is false. Yet "Lying Lips" will be talked about and will attract patronage because of the immensity of its sets, the fine quality of its interpretation and the fact that it is sponsored by Ince. It attempts to paint the conflict of love between a selfish girl reared in luxury and a self-made man deprived of worldly goods.

For two or three reels the action is consistent, then it becomes exceedingly arbitrary and the characters are moved about in a mechanical fashion. The opening shot is a gem and presents in convincing fashion the reason for the heroine's attitude. A subsequent rainstorm is another remarkable scene. It shows the introduction of the hero who falls in love with the girl only to discover in a moment of extremity that she is unduly selfish. In other words he is just a convenient friend, who, because of his lack of culture and wealth, is not considered seriously. And so the characterization rings false. This development does not invite sympathy for either figure. The girl discards him and returns to England, but he is persistent enough to travel by steerage in the same boat.

Ince presents a miniature of the steamer striking a mine and a subsequent shipwreck which is most artistically achieved. Yet the logic is lost in the immediate action. A long shot shows the vessel being blown into fragments, yet the chief characters find refuge in a huge portion of it. There are matches, a kerosene lamp and hot coffee, bunks, dry clothing and what not to make them comfortable. And so they pledge themselves in sight of God thinking their days are numbered. The sight of a passing steamer brings the girl back to her customary train of thought. She defies her lover and excuses herself on the ground that life is sweet again and that she had used his protection in another moment of extremity. The picture at this point is melodrama with all of a melodrama's use of coincidence and convenience. A big scene shows a reception given her by a fiance, and the derelict of the wreck bobs up in arbitrary fashion with plenty of wealth obtained by an inheritance. He has realized her shallow and selfish nature and dismisses her from his life. It is then that the girl develops a soul. At the altar she cries out that she has been married to another in the sight of God. So she hastens to join the man who towers above her in character. Her repentance invites his forgiveness.

The spiritual note is striven for here, but never found. The picture is mechanical and melodramatic and judged in this manner is a winner because of its spectacular appeal. The church scene is a marvelous set. Indeed the offering shows the marks of lavish expenditure. Would that the story might have equalled the production. The acting is in the capable hands of House Peters and Florence Vidor, and they acquit themselves with forceful portrayals. They almost succeed in making the characters human.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The theme of Thomas H. Ince's spectacular drama is based upon the two most vital and mysterious elements of human existence, life and love. It is said that "Lying Lips" surpasses "Civilization" in the force of its dramatic contents and the appeal of its scenes and situations. This feature attraction will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— with House Peters and Florence Vidor heading a cast that includes Joseph Kilgour, Margaret Livingston and Emmett C. King. The picture is adapted by Bradley King from May Edington's story and depicts the contrast of unselfish love with that which is selfish. The heroine is a product of wealth and culture who is attracted to a resourceful type of manhood. In a crucial moment her courage deserts her and she becomes a product of deceit. The lovers are in a moment of extremity when she fails again. But her soul is purged through the force of conscience. The picture teaches a good moral. It teaches that confidence must be given in return when it is offered. The picture contains scene after scene of spectacular thrill—each one having been staged in a most artistic manner. In fact it is a picture which is appealing through its striking action and the high order of its interpretation.

"O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED"
(Hart-Paramount)

Good Incident and Bill Hart Touches Make It Interesting

IT is customary for an actor of Westerns to appear at some time or other in the Mounted Police story. Now that the leading exponent of them all, Bill Hart, has interpreted it, his repertoire may be called complete. It may be that the star has played the red-coated minion of the law before. If so, time in the writer's case has erased the memory of it. The pattern may be obvious, the plot may be anticipated, but Hart, being the author, has introduced enough incident and action to keep it moving with sustained interest. One knows that a member of the Mounted always gets his man. One knows for screen purposes it is wise to let the man have his liberty for the sake of romance.

This arbitrary development doesn't spoil "O'Malley of the Mounted," because it carries enough detail and typically Hart touches to keep one at attention. For instance, there is as good a representation of a rodeo show as has ever been shown. And it isn't an insert from a news weekly either. A good reel is given over to some expert riding, with the star acting as a spectator. It seems as if Hart and his director, Hillyer, appreciating the antiquity of the plot, had said, "Let's treat it in a new way." There is none of the forlorn chase over the snow with the inevitable fight, nor the conflict or torment of soul of the hero torn between love and duty. The red-coated officer indulges in flash-backs as he accepts his assignment and before he returns to the post—minus his man—there is offered a sure-fire brand of western melodrama. The rodeo has really nothing to do with the plot other than planting the crooked characters who walk off with the prizes. The officer knows that his man is a member of the gang and to become a member of it he is forced to disguise himself as a cowpuncher and show his worth as a bandit.

He robs a bank in broad daylight, but in returning the money is discovered and accused of treachery. While the characters are stereotyped, the manner in which they are introduced takes the sting off the obviousness of the plot. The real villain exposes the officer because of the beating up he received at his hands—a regular, old-fashioned Bill Hart fight—a hammer and tongs affair. Bill goes to the defense of the girl's honor—the girl being the cook of the organization of which her brother is a member. And the boy is the much wanted criminal. Bill is about to become the victim of a "necktie" party when his young friends rescue him. So he returns alone out of gratitude and with the knowledge that the crime was justified. The story has interludes of clever incident and keeps as much out of single-track channels as possible. There is a good measure of suspense and the romance isn't neglected. The scenes are united with good continuity and are staged against picturesque backgrounds. Bill Hart may have had better ones than this feature, but none which have carried a better wallop.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

O'Malley ..... William S. Hart
Rose Lanier ..... Eva Novak
Red Jaeger ..... Leo Willis
Bud Lanier ..... Antrim Short

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William S. Hart's latest Paramount picture of the West, "O'Malley of the Mounted," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The role of O'Malley is said to be one of the strongest character portrayals with which Mr. Hart has favored his followers in many months. Thrills and clever incident abound throughout the action of this virile photoplay. The star appears as one of the Mounted—the inexorable law of which is, Get Your Man! He hits upon the idea of robbing a bank to gain membership in a gang of outlaws, so that he can capture the man he wants for murder. But he is discovered in sending the money back and accused of treachery. He is forced to battle for a girl's honor—the girl being the sister of the alleged murderer.

She saves O'Malley from the outlaws and together they make a thrilling escape. It is then that the mounted policeman learns that the murder was justifiable. So he conducted them to the boundary line and permitted them their freedom, while he returned to the post and resigned. His resignation was decided upon when he found himself in love with the girl. The picture is graphic in action and is highly interesting. The star is supported by Eva Novak, Antrim Short and others. Lambert Hillyer directed from a story furnished by the star.

PROGRAM READER

Bill Hart is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as a red-coated horseman. Yes, the popular exponent of Westerns is a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. He has been assigned to the task of getting his man and a member of the Mounted never fails. He rode on a lone hunt, disguised as a cowpuncher. He was even forced to become a bandit. But he got his man. Then he gripped his prisoner's hand and stole away in the night. He returned to his chief alone. Why? That remains as a pleasant surprise for you. Suffice to say that "O'Malley of the Mounted" is a story that races across the screen to the tune of lively action, thrills, and typically Bill Hart incident. It is a picture which takes you to the big outdoors. See the big Western rodeo.

Exhibitor Comment—"Wesley Barry in this picture is proving a worthy attraction and causing favorable comment." "Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind." "Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic." "Good picture. Splendid vacation attraction. Big and little folks all like Wesley Barry." "Personally, think this is better than 'Go and Get It,' but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it." "Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house record." "This is a fine picture and brought good business for me." "Played to increasing business each day. Wonderful kid picture."

DRAG HARLAN (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....NOV. 6
"If they like Farnum, it's a good bet."—M. P. News.

813 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

"Mary Miles Minter scores in story of pathos and sentiment."—M. P. News.

FACE AT YOUR WINDOW, THE (WILLIAM FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Propaganda picture developed along orthodox lines."—M. P. News.

FATAL HOUR, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Crude melodrama makes mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FELIX O'DAY (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) H. B. WARNER.....SEPT. 18
"A good production from all angles."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture to average business one day."

FIREBRAND TREVISON (FOX) BUCK JONES.....JULY 31
"Buck Jones practically duplicates his last picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some of the others. Average business two days."

FIRE CAT, THE UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....FEB. 12
"Edith Roberts scores in Carmenesque role."—M. P. News.

FIRST BORN, THE (HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA.....FEB. 12
"A title, heart interest and Hayakawa's acting should attract them."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life."

FIXED BY GEORGE (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN.....NOV. 6
"Lyons and Moran produce successful farce."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent. Very funny and pleases the patrons who enjoy high class comedy." "A rather poor picture to poor business two days." "Good—one day to extra big business."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH.....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good." "Just average box-office results, though the picture is quite good."

"Very obvious, but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Light, pleasing little comedy. They came because they liked Wanda—and they did not register a kick. Box-office just fair." "This sure did go over big and the picture deserved it, for it is interesting and entertaining." "Fair picture with only average box-office receipts." "Better than 'Miss Hobbs.' Miss Hawley is likable in this sort of a story. Big to average business two days."

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST..FEB. 5
"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.

FORBIDDEN THING, THE (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS).....NOV. 27
"Vivid and vital story rich in spiritual quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business." "A fine production. People stood in line all week to see this picture. Big success." "Well acted and produced but rather long-drawn out; exploitation put it over to big business."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays." "Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel." "Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked." "Had poor business with this one for entire week." "Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair."

"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture which brought more than usual business."

FURNACE, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Talky picture has little appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures I have seen. It has strength and purpose and is wonderfully portrayed by excellent cast. Exceptionally good business." "An absolute sensation. A knockout. Had S. R. O. sign up from opening day till finish of week. One of the best picture I've ever seen." "Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business." "Very big production. Business better than average." "The plot of the picture is good but the details are not well worked out. It is fair. Average receipts." "Very high-class society picture with beautiful costuming and sets which appealed particularly to the women and did splendid business."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY.....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week." "Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses." "Madge Kennedy has considerable drawing power here. Her picture is not strong but our people liked it."

GODLESS MEN (BARKER-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Unpleasant story depending on acting and unusual twist to story."—M. P. News.

GOOD-BAD WIFE, THE (VERA McCORD PRODS.-FILM BOOKING OFFICE) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 30
"Good production given rather illogical story."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 22
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted."

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A poor picture. Average box-office reecipts." 'Fine picture with some very excellent acting and interesting story. Played to better than average business for week."

HALF A CHANCE (JESSE D. HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST).OCT. 30
"Well acted and directed, but development suffers."—M. P. News.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART.....OCT. 30
"Favorite formula given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regarded this as just a fair picture and drew average houses." "The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business." "This picture pleased. Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card."

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run." "Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses, which were pretty well crowded." "Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out." "An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week." "One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run." "Excellent. The patrons of this theatre filled the house at each performance every day for the entire week." "Broke all records for two years as the poorest drawing card. One million per cent. overrated and 1,000,000 per cent oversold picture. Otherwise a good picture with none of the muchly promised Hearst free advertising, even an extra $700 advertising appropriation could not put it over." "Thoroughly nice picture. Ought to go with most any kind of an audience."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 29
"Inconsequential and too rapid for feature length."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 29
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.

HER BELOVED VILLAIN (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....DEC. 18
"French farce adaptation that falls short in American requirements."—M.P. News.
Exhbitor Comment—"A good picture to average business three days."

"A SMALL TOWN IDOL"
(Sennett-Asso. Producers)

Mack Sennett Gives a Three Ring Circus Here

MACK SENNETT'S first picture for Associated Producers is certain to give him the spotlight of popular favor. True he has presented the feature comedy before. But where he eclipses his previous achievements is in the manner of assembling all the tried and true hokum and gag found in the ten, twent' and thirt' melodrama and not relying entirely upon the farm stuff, the bathing girls, or a burlesque on an old time favorite. Sennett has been more ambitious here than usual. He has spent money. In fact there are some big sets which would do credit to his associates of the organization. And he has all of the players who have made his comedies famous. Ben Turpin, Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver and Charles Murray make a rich quartette and they are ably supported by others equally well known. Louise Fazenda is present for just a brief second.

The only trouble with "A Small Town Idol" is its length. A good deal of its latter footage could be dispensed with since it generates very little humor. Indeed Sennett gives up the laughs in order to collect a few thrills. And there will be an argument with some if he hasn't trespassed outside of his domains. The comedy gets off to a breezy start and shows Ben as the country bumpkin, Phyllis Haver as his sweetheart, and James Finlayson as the villain. The church scene is a rare one and good for a large sized chuckle and the bit which shows the hero and rival fighting in the pool room is occasion for a mirthful explosion. And Ben attempting to fish is another good incident. The girl gives up Ben when she discovers a photograph from Marie Prevost and Ben is escorted to the station and advised not to return.

Sennett employs thousands in this picture and the effort to make it more or less spectacular takes away the intimate comedy with which he has been identified. In fact the picture presents him in a revolutionary frame of mind. Ben turns up at a moving picture studio. And here the offering loses some of its spontaneity. In the first place the director has utilized the idea before in much more humorous fashion. But it does give him a chance to play up the big sets. One of them takes up the entire studio floor space and the thousand extras are introduced again in ballet numbers and high jinks on the floor. There is none of the ridiculous tomfoolery here. In fact the latter development is akin to several legitimate features. Well, Ben becomes a star by his willingness to double for a timid thespian. He jumps off a high bridge and is forced to have a re-take because the director's cap covered the lens of the camera. Ben wants to commit suicide because of Phyllis' cold attitude. Than he comes home famous and attends the local theatre and watches himself on the screen. A good bit of business and well done. Finally he is accused of vile treachery and chased by the natives. A "necktie" party is waiting for him, but he is rescued by his old time sweetheart. Sennett has painted local color and atmosphere with a thick brush.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Small Town Idol," one of the few productions Mack Sennett has made in six reel proportions, comes to the ———— theatre next ————. With practically every member of his all-star aggregation of funny folk enrolled in a congenial part there is assurance that the comedy will furnish vast entertainment. Ben Turpin is the village hero. Phyllis Haver is his small town ideal; Marie Prevost is the city girl that befriends poor Ben when the home-folks turn him down; Charlie Murray is the indefatigable constable; James Finlayson is the wretched villain who concocts all the trouble, and Kalla Pasha and Eddie Gribbon and the other Sennett favorites are to be seen advantageously in the shifting scenes that cover as many places as are usually revealed in a half-dozen problem plays wherein the slums and the green fields are visited.

The comedy is rich satire and rare burlesque and carries enough material for a dozen two-reel offerings. The story value is legitimate, the humor arises from the characterizations and performances. The picture is decorated with five hundred girls or more; it also is lavishly staged.

PROGRAM READER

Mack Sennett's six-reel comedy-drama, "A Small Town Idol," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. As a melodrama it is as full of thrills and romance as a novel by Dumas; as a comedy it travels on high making the hills and miles of fun with plenty of hilarity; as a spectacle it is an Arabian Nights Dream visualized. There is a company that includes 1,000 beautiful girls—the type of girls which have been made famous by Sennett. And a typically Sennett cast includes those dependable players, Ben Turpin, Charles Murray, James Finlayson, Kalla Pasha, Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver and others. It is without question the most stupendous production ever conceived by Sennett. It carries every value. Manager ———— guarantees a most entertaining hour.

"THE GREATER CLAIM"
(Metro)

Alice Lake Scores in Ordinary Story

THE idea behind this photoplay is familiar to those readers who peruse sensational newspapers. A wealthy father, an independent son, and a chorus girl complete the triangle. You can anticipate every scene and guess it nearly right nine times out of ten. In "The Greater Claim" the story doesn't upset the conventions and manages to entertain because of some sure-fire incident, the heart interest note and the restrained acting of Alice Lake. Certainly she had opportunity to emote and stress the situations. But her performance is kept within bounds with the result that the human factor is considerably emphasized. The young man is kidnapped away from his honeymoon cottage and is shanghaied with his father's consent. Yet one cannot condemn the father because of the easy manner in which De Witt Jennings interprets the character. It is not a crusty type. And so the chorus girl-wife is forced to return to the footlights to eke out a livelihood.

Her suspicions are aroused to the idea that her husband may be a party to the scheme, so when he returns she drives him away with her gay conduct. There are several gaps in the continuity which are not easily explained with subtitles. Yet the picture holds the attention and is bound to be popular with the average patron. When a child is born the picture takes on a value which cannot be denied. It seems as if the director stressed the infant scenes a trifle. There is a deal of padding which has to do with the baby's bath. Eventually the story becomes "in-tri-kut," the complications presenting a shyster lawyer who conceives a plan to mulct the old man of his money. The latter offers to adopt the infant and the mother is chosen as the nurse, although her identity is not disclosed. The manner of her selection smacks of padded hokum. The same may be said with the by-play indulged in by the servants.

The characters are moved about arbitrarily at the convenience of the author. For three reels the stern parent doesn't make an appearance, although he is constantly referred to in the dialogue. And the scapegrace son is absent for a considerable period in the action. The old man's heart bends after the baby grows to early boyhood and the complications are swept aside with the return of the son for a second time. A pair of blackmailers are on the verge of stinging the old man when their little game is discovered. The picture could be compressed into five reels, thus the scenes would have more polish and the action would be more compact. The title finds its meaning in the fact that a mother will not give up her child for all the gold in the world. The heroine and the blackmailer are put to the test and the former is not found wanting in mother love. "The Greater Claim" is overdrawn, but it looks like a good bet for any exhibitor.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mary Smith	Alice Lake
Richard Everard	Jack Dougherty
Abe Dietz	Edward Cecil
Richard Everard, Sr.	De Witt Jennings
Gwendolyn	Florence Gilbert
Rosie	Lenore Lynard

By Izola Forrester and Mann Page.
Scenario by Albert Shelby Le Vino.
Directed by Wesley Ruggles.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of a girl's claim to the heart of her husband and her greater claim to her own child of whom she is deprived is offered in Alice Lake's newest Metro picture, "The Greater Claim," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a simple heart interest picture which scores for its generous measure of sentiment, pathos, human appeal and other vital ingredients. Miss Lake has an ideal role for the expression of her charm and talent. She gives a remarkably lifelike performance in the part of Mary Smith, a chorus girl who marries a rich man's son and finds that her father-in-law will not receive her. The husband is shanghaied and Mary is forced to return to the chorus.

In time a child is born and becomes a means of breaking down the barriers. The stern parent's heart is softened as he adopts the baby, the nurse being the mother who is not recognized. When the son comes home and claims his wife her happiness is complete. The picture is interestingly told against backgrounds which are thoroughly in atmosphere. Prominent in the supporting cast are Jack Dougherty, De Witt Jennings, Florence Gilbert and Edward Cecil. Wesley Ruggles directed from a story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page.

PROGRAM READER

The greatest claim of all is mother love. A baby brings a claim upon its parents which cannot be denied. Mary Smith married a young man who was kidnapped by his father and the marriage was annulled. In time a baby came to bring a measure of happiness—a baby that the stern grandfather adopted. His heart was softened. Then like a black shadow, came an adventuress who claimed the baby. Which woman won? How were they put to the test? The answer lies in "The Greater Claim" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Alice Lake. It is a picture charged with heart interest and sentiment and offers a most interesting hour. The star gives one of the finest portrayals of her career—a portrayal marked for its restraint.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no reason why Alice Lake cannot score with an audience. Surely she is exceptionally gifted. In this picture she gives a remarkably human performance in a role which fits her to a dot. The best plan for exploitation looks like concentrating upon her name. Tell of her past pictures. Play up the heart theme and detail a bit of the plot. Ask leading questions concerning the claims on a mother's heart. Play up the child interest. Interest the feminine patronage, telling them it is a picture of the heart and home. If the star hasn't a following in your town, then the chance is ripe to establish one for her. Make emphatic in your advertising scheme for program readers the mother love theme. Stress the sentiment and human interest.

"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Satisfactory picture both as an entertainment and as a box office attraction. Average good business.

HIS OWN LAW (J. PARKER READ-GOLDWYN) HOBART BOSWORTH ..... FEB. 12
"Trite story makes poor screen material."—M. P. News.

HOLD YOUR HORSES (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE) ..... FEB. 5
"Comedy titles and good incident make this fine entertainment.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Just ordinary picture and did just ordinary business."

HONOR BOUND (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO ..... NOV. 13

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ... JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG ..... JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day."

IDOLS OF CLAY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MAE MURRAY .... NOV. 27
"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business." "Opened up extra big and continued so during week run." "This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title." "Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week." "Picture is quite fair. Good business during run." "Went over very well and held over for two days to big business." "A picture with beautiful scenery, excellent acting, a rather mediocre plot and several daring scenes. The acting of Mae Murray and David Powell and the South Sea and London Limehouse settings make the picture well worth seeing. It drew good-sized houses." "Did not expect this to go but it grew each day and what surprised us was that it pleased, or rather we got no kicks." "An extraordinary picture which brought good business." "Consider this a fine picture though it brought us only average business."

"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Going over very well indeed. Good picture."
"Playing to excellent business through second week."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A William Russel picture of more than average value and the box-office results were pleasant." "A pleasing Western picture, well acted and produced. Did capacity business."

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal." "This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days." "Very good story. The picture follows the original narrative well and it drew the 'better class' audiences." "Good picture, pulling fairly well." "Had poor business with this, though it seemed to be a good picture."

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES ..... NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good. Played it one day to big business."

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST ..... FEB. 12
"Very little drama here; backgrounds are interesting."—M. P. News.

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN ..... JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wonderful picture and greatest box-office attraction we have ever run. Broke house records first and second weeks of its engagement and crowds are continuing to come in great numbers on third week."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.

KISMET (ROBERTSON-COLE) OTIS SKINNER ..... NOV. 6
"Otis Skinner gives superb performance in lavish production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advanced prices." "Opened fine and improved daily. Wonderful acting on part of Otis Skinner. Marvelous sets." "Wonderful picture. Consistently large attendance. A masterpiece, according to general talk around town." "Broke all attendance records. The kind of picture that points to big things in 1921 picturedom. A remarkable production in every way." "Wonderful picture. Brought great box office reports." "Extra good to extra big business two days." "Not a record breaker, but played to above average business. Pleased averagely well." "Pleased tremendous crowds who call it a great performance in every respect. Such pictures as this insure the steady growth of motion pictures." "Wonderful production and biggest business since 'While New York Sleeps.'" "Splendid production and Otis Skinner's name helped to bring in crowds. Did splendid business first part of engagement and is starting well the second week." "This went over very big. Audiences seemed enthused with it." "Crowds came and I packed them in. Surely a wonderful production."

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week." "Opened to great business. Assured of great success. Don't miss this one." "One of the best pictures seen here in many months. Wonderful scenery and enough action to please everybody. This is the type of picture that appeals to young and old. It went especially big with the school children."

"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy." "Fair picture, fair business. Some thought it great, but it is a question whether or not the public wants Arbuckle in long features." "Good picture as far as entertaining value goes, but did only average business during run."

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH .. DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LITTLE GREY MOUSE, THE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY ..... NOV. 13
"New star's first picture mildly interesting."—M. P. News.

"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three days." Just fair. Didn't do anything remarkable, just cleared expenses. As a picture it's awful; as a box-office attraction it just manages to get by." "Failed to draw after big advertising campaign. Louise Glaum's name is not a box-office getter."

"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed." "Splendid picture and business. Mary Pickford really pleased everyone. Never heard a complaint. Capacity all week." "Very good production and well liked. Business was good." "Fell down badly second week. Didn't seem to satisfy. For total showing went over from average to poor."

LURE OF CROONING WATER, THE (STOLL-PATHE) IVY DUKE-GUY NEWELL ..... JAN. 15
"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 22
"Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture not up to average. The plot is weak."

MAD LOVE (VICTOR KREMER PRODUCTION) LINA CAVALIERI ..... NOV. 6
"Average production stars Cavalieri."—M. P. News.

MADAME PEACOCK (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... OCT. 16
"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity."

MAD MARRIAGE, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS ..... FEB. 12
"Carmel Myers is appealing in Greenwich Village formula."—M. P. News.

MAMMA'S AFFAIR (FORST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE ..... FEB. 5
"Constance Talmadge has serious moments here; picture fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD ..... JAN. 22
"Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory."

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE (HOLUBAR-FIRST NATIONAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS ..... FEB. 12
"Propaganda and spectacular melodrama are blended here."—M. P. News.

"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big box-office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture." "Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked." "Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." "This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Wil hold over for another week." "Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

"Perfectly constructed picture stamps De Mille as master director."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid production. Great business. Held for second week on demand." "It took well for the entire week. Audience seemed to like it." "Fine picture playing to good business." "Good show—opened to moderate business." "People here educated to like these extravagant pictures, and they take very well. Held up to better than average business for two weeks." "Holding up nicely in second week of its run. Fair crowds." "Holding up fairly well in third week." "This one brought only average business for one week." "Fair picture with business about as usual."

"SILK HOSIERY"
(Ince-Paramount)

Long on Fashion, Short on Drama

ENID BENNETT'S latest offering, "Silk Hosiery," is far from being another "Hairpins" in point of plot material and characterization. In fact it carries very few ingredients of a dramatic nature and relies upon the romantic element for its strength. Yet it doesn't travel far because the romance is more or less subordinated to the display of a fashion show. Easily two reels are given over to a parade of manikins or trying on gowns. The action for considerable footage takes place in a modiste shop. Certainly "Silk Hosiery" is not a "he-man's" picture by any means. The star appears as a model in a shop and becomes romantic with the least encouragement. She longs to be the grande lady or the sweetheart of any good "catch" that comes into the store.

There is a good deal of strutting round, with nothing accomplished in the way of action or incident. The picture picks up a little when a plot appears along toward the third reel. The heroine has discovered that a certain patron of the shop is a crook and that jewels and incriminating letters are the instruments of theft. A visiting prince from some European nation is involved with the incriminating letter and to save innocent victims the little model doubles in brass. She bedecks herself in a customer's gown and is whisked away to a roadhouse by a group of gangsters. And she has the man of her heart for company, too. They make their escape and turn up at the ball for the prince, where she is charged with theft. But at the proper time she is exonerated by the son of royalty and finds romantic expression with the hero, who is a secret service agent.

The twist of this picture comes in the conclusion. It presents the dream situation. Romance being something elusive and intangible, the little model has conjured up in her mind the fancies of love and courtship. She has fallen asleep and awakened to find that life goes on as usual in the same old way. This development gives the picture a fantastic touch, yet even the liveliest dream cannot compensate for the real thing. There is nothing to indicate that this surprise is coming. There is no falling asleep by the model or any waving of a wand over her head by a fairy godmother. Which is a good thing for the picture, for if exposed ahead of time an audience might lose patience. The picture is handsomely staged, it being correct in every technical arrangement. And there is no denying the fact that it carries appeal to the feminine sex with its fashion display. Miss Bennett is a very able actress, but she deserves dramatic fare and not Cinderella-like ingenue roles. The story is well constructed as regards continuity. It will probably go in those houses which cater to a fashionable clientele.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Enid Bennett's latest starring vehicle, "Silk Hosiery," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is a story dealing with the existence of romance in modern life. The star, portraying a romantic little modiste's model, is afforded unusual opportunity for utilizing her exceptional dramatic abilities, as well as for displaying a number of beautiful gowns. The story was written by Frank Dazey and adapted for the screen by Agnes Johnston. Fred Niblo directed.

As Marjorie Bowen, Miss Bennett appears as a model in a fashionable modiste shop. There is very little romance in her life until Sir Leeds, a young Englishman enters the shop to wait for his fiancee. Later she overhears a conversation between the fiancee and one Cad Jones and discovers that they are crooks planning to steal certain jewels and an incriminating letter which the prince indiscreetly gave to a society woman in New York on a previous visit to America. Marjorie dons the fiancee's gown and while wearing it is kidnapped by thugs. Complications ensue which terminate in an unusual ending. It has all been a dream. The picture is rich in atmosphere and moves with considerable vigor. Prominent in the cast are Geoffrey Webb, Donald MacDonald and Marie Pavis.

PROGRAM READER

Enid Bennett, the popular Ince-Paramount star, who has shown a fine talent in several pictures, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest contribution to the screen, "Silk Hosiery." This is an original story by Frank Dazey which has been adapted by Agnes C. Johnston and it offers the star opportunity to display her dramatic capabilities as well as a chance to wear beautiful gowns. The question of romance—whether it is dead or buried or lives in the imagination of an impressionable youth or maiden is brought forth here. The picture is told in a most attractive way and interests because of its unique situations and the fine flavor of romance. The star is supported by a capable cast that includes Donald MacDonald, Marie Pavis and Geoffrey Webb.

"THE BRANDED SOUL"
(Stoll-Pathe)

Redemption Story Carries Little Appeal and Is Badly Overacted

STORIES of brothers who possess entirely opposite temperaments may carry dramatic values, but when they are presented with faulty characterization and interpreted in a slipshod style they lose their appeal. "The Branded Soul," Stoll's latest release offers a twin brother characterization—one being a dominie, the other, a gay adventurer. Both are presented in love with the same girl, who loves the bounder because he is more genuine. The author or director using a minister may jar members of the clergy and on second thought the figure could have been painted in different colors, although it would affect the contrast. The upshot of it all is the so-called good brother sins in order to win the girl and have his relative out of the way. He raises the amount of a check and covers his tracks completely and the weak-willed pleasure seeker pays the penalty by going to prison.

The scenes would ring more genuine if Reginald Fox, who plays the dual role, had used repression. He overacts dreadfully, rolling his eyes and distorting his facial muscles so that he loses sympathy for each characterization. It is when the innocent man is in Dartmoor, that the dominie becomes conscience-stricken and attempts to make amends. He has been successful in marrying the girl, but she is determined to remain his wife in name only. He accepts a pastorate which brings him in close proximity to the prison and at the opportune moment exchanges identity with the convict. This scene is the outstanding one of the picture and is realistic to the core. The English fog envelops the huge prison, the escaped convict and guards. This is a real feat of photography. The minister happens to meet him and the exchange is effected in a jiffy. Thus he finds redemption. One guard suspects the truth and is shot for his trouble.

"The Branded Soul" is a sombre story which is told in a minor key. There is no relief from its heavy moments. It is simply a false study in the redemption of a soul and carries no entertaining qualities. The continuity is rather ragged in places which makes the action difficult to follow. But aside from its technical faults, the idea is limited for dramatic expression. There is no suspense for the simple reason that the climax is anticipated. Had the leading role been intrusted to a more capable pantomimist the picture would appear more consistent. The titling does not advance the action either, most of the captions give away the subsequent scenes and a majority of them being descriptive. "The Branded Soul" is not in the same class with "Mr. Wu," and "The Lure of Crooning Water."—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of love and redemption is "The Branded Soul," adapted from Rita's story, "The Iron Stair." It will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The offering is said to contain the same dramatic elements as "The Lure of Crooning Water," and "Squandered Lives," previous Stoll pictures. It is also fortified with vital heart interest and sentiment. The story revolves around twin brothers, one of whom is a minister, the other a pleasure-seeking adventurer. Both are in love with the same girl, who in turn favors the latter.

Geoffrey, the gay brother, loses a gambling bet, for which he gives an I. O. U. A chance came for George Gale to square his brother's debt. It was the work of a moment to raise a check which came into his hands and palm himself as his brother. When the crime was discovered, Geoffrey was forced to go to prison while George married the girl. The latter became conscience-stricken and attempted to atone for his sin by prayer. Finally he makes compensation by full atonement. When Geoffrey escapes from prison, the minister exchanges clothes with him and permits himself to be captured. And so his redemption brings happiness to the others. The picture presents some realistic incident and atmosphere and is capably acted.

PROGRAM READER

A picture of love and redemption, developed around brothers of entirely different temperaments will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Branded Soul." It is a picture of a gay, weak willed adventurer and his brother, a minister. By a twist of circumstance both love the same girl, and a time comes when the strong-minded brother finds occasion to discredit the other. He commits a crime and succeeds in marrying the girl who is his wife in name only, while his brother is forced to go to prison. But happiness doesn't come. His conscience forbids it. "The Branded Soul" is a picture of human frailties and is capably directed and acted.

CATCH LINES

See "The Branded Soul," a vital picture of love and redemption. See the great English prison, Dartmoor. See the great English fog. A picture to be remembered.

He was a minister. His brother was a gay adventurer. In a moment of weakness the former committed a crime. And the latter was forced to pay the penalty. See "The Branded Soul."

"THE BIG PUNCH"
(Fox)

Buck Jones as a Minister; a Dull Picture

HERE is another reform picture. The erstwhile cowboy, Buck Jones, enters the ministry. Of course, he is not the rector of a large city church, and the production can still be classed under the general title of "Western." He plays the part of a circuit rider of the Western hills. A circuit rider is a kind of wandering preacher.

The picture is dull and not as interesting as other Buck Jones releases. It is too goody-goody, hackneyed, and supersaturated with Salvation Army and spiritual uplift sentiment that does not appear sincere. At least it has only a very slight effect upon the emotions. It appears that Jules Furthman, who is credited with the story and the scenario, filled a rush order in a very short time. There is such a dearth of refreshing incident that there is little zest to the whole production. Everybody does everything in the same old way, even up to the climax when the hero fights his way through a crowd to rescue the Salvation Army lassie who is struggling to escape the hot kisses of the proprietor of the saloon and dance hall. This scene, by the way, is a fast piece of action and the most commendable bit in the entire picture from an audience standpoint. It is about the only real action in the feature. The rest of it is made up of what is commonly known as "sob stuff"—a hero sent unjustly to prison; the rebirth of courage and enthusiasm brought about by a pretty face beneath a Salvation Army bonnet; and the scoffs of the populace as he tries to bury his past and enters the ministry. In the end the hardened drunkards are carrying the bass drum for the street corner meeting.

The best bit of acting is done by Jennie Lee, who plays the mother anxious to see her son wear the cloth. Jones himself can do little in the way of impressing as a regenerated, self-sacrificing sufferer. When he does enter the pulpit, he neither looks nor dresses his part.

There are a few typical "movie" improbabilities. For instance, three men must escape from prison. This they do by knocking three visitors on the head, dumping them into a large box and nailing down the lid. Then they walk out of the prison, dressed in their victims' clothes. The little action in the picture may pull it through, but only a very naive audience can like the reform and regeneration theme as it is handled here.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones, the popular Fox star, hero of many a thrilling Western production, will play the leading role in "The Big Punch," the Fox production which will be the featured picture at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a new type of picture for Jones. He has won laurels for his clever delineation of cowboy roles in the past. Here he plays the part of a "circuit rider" of the west.

Buck Jones, although he plays the part of a preacher, does not neglect to thrill with his daredevil riding and strength with his fists. There have been few more exciting moments on the screen at the ———— theatre for many a day than when Jones fights his way through a crowd of hoodlums to rescue the girl from her persecutor.

Buck Jones is in town again! He will be seen in his latest picture, "The Big Punch," written by Jules Furthman. It is a story of devotion and self sacrifice for a mother and a little Salvation Army lassie. The picture will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Buck Jones is in town again! He will be seen in his latest picture, "The Big Punch," at the ———— theatre beginning ———— for a ———— days' run.

"The Big Punch" is an adaptation of an original story by Jules Furthman, and one which is slightly different from the star's previous pictures, but not to such a degree that he is not allowed to thrill an audience by his hard riding and manly personality.

Jones is a perfect type of a son of the West. He is at home on a saddle just as much as the Easterner is in his office chair. "The Big Punch" is a story which gives him plenty of opportunity to ride and fight and to act, as well. For he plays the part of a circuit rider of the Western hills. The story is one of self sacrifice and devotion to a loving mother and a Salvation Army lassie.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture will satisfy the admirers of Buck Jones, so it would be best to exploit his name as much as possible. Tell of his previous work whether you have shown it or not, and describe the star as one of the most virile and attractive "he-man" personalities of the screen. Give the impression that he is a perfect type of picture hero who will win the hearts of all. If in a church-going neighborhood you might play up the fact that it is a picture of a "fighting parson played by the popular screen star."

CATCH LINES

A story of human interest, pathos and thrills. Buck Jones' newest and best picture, laid in the great West.

"WHAT WOMEN WILL DO"
(Associated Exhibitors-Pathe)

Pretty Arbitrary, But Has Audience Appeal

THIS starts off like a million dollars, with good incident, excellent suspense and wonderful technical achievements, and then degenerates into an arbitrary development of "The Miracle Man" idea, in which logic, probabilities and consistency are mostly sacrificed to build up a continuity that will dovetail and arrive at the conventional conclusion, a clutch for hero and heroine.

However, as an audience picture this will probably slide by as good entertainment. It has a lot of sure fire stuff in it, including a horse race in which the villains are foiled, good clothes, nice scenic settings, some unusual twists, if you aren't too particular about improbabilities, and wonderful photography. The cast is made up of excellent types and competent players, although they seem to be handicapped at times by too much direction. Anna Q. Nilsson, capable actress that she is, has the principal feminine part. Allan Forest is the hero, with not much to do but look the part.

The middle of the production sags considerably, due to a too painstaking continuity, but since the finish and beginning are strong this fault will probably be overlooked.

The picture has cost some money. There are a number of big scenes that have been very well done. The sets used are lavish. The story carries suspense in individual scenes and there is considerable doubt as to finish so far as the romance is concerned.

The story of "What Women Will Do" has to do principally with the reformation of a girl crook and show girl through her association with people of clean morals and kindly intentions, especially an old lady who lives by the golden rule. The picture has the same "uplift" idea as "The Miracle Man" and for this reason its audience strength is increased considerably.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— is "What Women Will Do," an original photoplay by Charles A. Logue and which has been adapted to the screen by Charles Whittaker. It is a story which has to do principally with the reformation of a girl crook through her association with people of clean morals and a healthy environment. These people are blessed with kindly intentions, especially an old lady who lives by the golden rule. In fact the picture has an uplift idea not unlike "The Miracle Man." It offers a cast which is of all-star proportions. Prominent among the players are Anna Q. Nilsson, who lends her radiant beauty in a part which she makes thoroughly compelling, Earle Metcalfe, Alan Forrest, George Majeroni and Riley Hatch. Edward Jose directed.

The picture moves with quiet force sending out strokes of simplicity and melodramatic vigor. It is chock full of action and a reasonable amount of suspense. The romantic element is well emphasized and is ably taken care of by Miss Nilsson and Mr. Metcalfe. The heroine is a worldly wise creature whose life is influenced by Dr. Joe, a fake spiritualist. His object is to wheedle gullible people out of their money. But into her life comes the motherly influence of Mrs. Wade and she finds redemption.

PROGRAM READER

This being a day when spiritualism is argued pro and con and which is taken up as a means of livelihood by certain vicious types who find it a medium to make an easy living—well, it is no wonder that such an idea has found its way to the screen. "What Women Will Do" brings into play the vicious practise of playing upon those who are easily susceptible. The girl has lived the life of a crook and is a party to the fakir's scheme to get rich at the expense of a kindly disposed woman. But something in the manner of the old lady—something which stamps her as blessed with humanity—acts as a force toward her redemption. And in time she has the satisfaction of finding her soul. This is the brief outline of the vital photoplay, "What Women Will Do," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with a cast that includes Anna Q. Nilsson and Earle Metcalfe. It is a picture charged with sympathy, pathos, sentiment and romance and builds with ever increasing action and suspense.

SUGGESTIONS

This is rather a timely photoplay, since it expliots the idea of getting rich quick by fake spiritualism. You can certainly interest those who are easily gullible. You can emphasize the fact that one should not countenance spiritualism unless one knows the medium. Make use of the title in a special exploitation. And by all means play up your cast. The names of Anna Nilsson and Earle Metcalfe are well known to your patrons. So play them up. Tell that it is a vital melodrama which is true and human to the core. If the director's name means anything to your audience use it in your advertising. Play up the human note. Stress the mother-love theme and the idea that there is a little bit of good in the worst of us. You can mention the outstanding scene such as the horse race, the good clothes worn by Miss Nilsson, the unusual settings.

CATCH LINES

She had been brought up in an evil environment, but when sympathy was extended her—when she discovered that there were people who were guided by the desire of doing good, she found redemption. See "What Women Will Do."

See "What Women Will Do," a picture of a girl's redemption. A picture of tense drama and romance, heart interest and suspense. Anna Q. Nilsson is in the cast.

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"What Women Love" (First National)—"Wheeler Oakman and the form in Annette Kellerman's one-piece bathing suit only things that stand out in this picture. Did good business. Second week to fair business. Majority of spectators men."

"Perfect Woman, A" (First National)—"As usual I steer 'em out with a Talmadge picture. Think this is a distinct improvement over 'The Love Expert.' Scored heavily here."

"Married Life" (First National)—"Nonsense, but so cleverly constructed that it pleased so many people that manager reported the biggest Sunday in several months. Held up well all week."

"Madam X" (Goldwyn)—"Splendid picture and excellent box-office attraction. Packed them in and had to put on three shows on closing night of engagement."

"Earthbound" (Goldwyn)—"So peculiar as to affect people very differently. Some were lavish in its praise. Others didn't like it at all. All agreed, however, that it's a wonderful production, wonderfully done. It's got the people talking and arguing all right, which has made for big houses. No records broken, though." "Didn't seem to entertain and business was only as usual." "My audiences seemed to find this very interesting and business was good during run."

"The Paliser Case" (Goldwyn)—"A fair attraction. Pauline Frederick has lost in popularity here and the picture played to only fairly good business."

"While New York Sleeps" (Fox)—"Good business to good houses."

"Madonnas and Men" (Jans)—"Capacity first week and held over for second. Four horses in chariot race provided prelude."

"The Jack Knife Man" (First National)—"A good picture but failed to hold up. Only fair box-office figures recorded."

"Blackbirds" (Realart)—"A mediocre picture. Justine Johnstone is good to look upon but not much of an actress. In addition, her vehicle is poor."

"Marooned Hearts" (Selznick)—"Impossible. The public is waiting eagerly for Conway Tearle's first starring vehicle. This is it—two more like it and he'll be among the also-rans. Poor box-office receipts—but not surprised after I saw it."

"Panthea" (Selznick)—"This is one of the best re-issues I've ever seen. It stands the test of time splendidly, and my patrons liked it. Good box-office attraction."

"The Leopard Woman" (Associated Producers)—"Just an average picture that was put over for week run by good advertising and exploitation."

"Earthbound" (Goldwyn)—"Falling down in its second week. Too highbrow for the average movie patron."

"The White Moll" (Fox)—"The idea of this picture being a serial was overcome by newspaper advertising. Had big business."

"Three Gold Coins" (Fox)—"Opening big and continued so during entire run. As to entertaining value, let the above speak for itself."

"Suds" (United Artists)—"This picture was a disappointment and even failed to hold the regular Pickford following. Some attribute their dislike to the film to the fact that Mary Pickford played a character part throughout and in no way was her beauty set off as usual. Others averred it was the poorest picture they have ever seen her play. Box-office receipts seem to strengthen the last-named contention."

"The Misfit Wife" (Metro)—"Not the best picture in the world, nor the worst. Alice Lake clever, and is becoming very popular. Not much material in this, trite and hackneyed story, but has a faintly novel twist at the end. Fair business."

"The Restless Sex" (Paramount)—"Elaborate picture. Wonderful pageant and dance scenes. Marion Davies improving. Big business."

"Earthbound" (Goldwyn)—"From an artistic angle it is wonderful and has unexcelled photography. Well directed and splendid acting. No box-office value here, however, because the theme is not accptable generally. This type of picture is more successful if played in legitimate theatres at $1.00 and '$1.50 with two shows a day.'" "Appeals mostly to women. Men remark, 'a church has nothing on you,' etc. Box-office receipts larger than usual."

"COLORADO"
(Universal)

Mayo's Latest Strong in Action

FRANK MAYO'S latest is developed more as a serial than a feature attraction, for the scenario writer or whoever is at fault, has taken Augustus Thomas' play and crowded it with entirely too much action.

Romance and love interest has been sacrificed for scenes depicting life in the mines with the miners rushing hither and thither in a vain endeavor to stop a mine flood.

In many of the latter scenes Mayo and his sweetheart are pictured rushing about the water swept "pit" until they finally reach the elevator and give the signal to be hauled up.

The father of the girl refuses to obey the call for aid, for he believes the "young man from nowhere" is secretly making love to his wife and is determined to use rough methods. When he is told that his daughter is "down there" with Mayo, he pulls the lever and the two lovers are brought to the surface.

We are previously shown, however, that it is the villain who is guilty of misconduct and when the latter confesses and "squares things" in the last reel, the heroine rushes to her sweetheart when he is about to leave town, secures his suitcase, throws it into his shack and gets ready for the final clinch.

The opening reels are rather slow in getting started and picture the star a victim of intrigue. He has discovered a gold mine and has gone fifty-fifty with the girl's father, only to lose his half because he believes the villain has "something on him."

If the story were developed with more heart or love interest it would have been more interesting. Still there are audiences which will delight in this sort of entertainment.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Frank Austin	Frank Mayo
Tom Doyle	Charles Newton
Kitty Doyle	Gloria Hope
Mrs. Doyle	Lillian West
James Kincaid	Charles Le Moyne
David Collins	Leonard Clapham
Lem Morgan	Dan Crimmins
Sally Morgan	Rosa Gore

Story by Augustus Thomas.
Scenario by Wallace Clifton.
Directed by Reaves Eason.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In the production of "Colorado," coming to the ———— theatre next ————, Frank Mayo will be seen in a role, for the portrayal of which he is eminently fitted by his temperament, dramatic force and physique.

And it all happened because Mr. Mayo in driving from New York to Los Angeles in his motorcar crossed the Colorado desert and there saw the appealing advantages Augustus Thomas' well known play would have in screen form.

Shortly after his return to Universal City, negotiations were made whereby the stage success was assured Frank Mayo as his next vehicle.

Although the star has not appeared in many western roles during his screen career, his first huge stage success was scored in a western part—that of Cash Hawkins in "The Squawman." And it was in the big London production of this American play that Mayo created the role which was originally played in New York by William S. Hart.

In filming "Colorado," Reaves Eason, the director, adhered to the original theme, but slightly modernized it and added dramatic punches and romance.

Gloria Hope plays opposite the star as his leading woman and Leonard Clapham, Charles LeMoyne, Lillian West and Charles Newton have other important characterizations.

PROGRAM READER

If you care to see a real good western, one written by a man who understood the western country as it was in the days when romance ruled that wonderful land, do not fail to see Frank Mayo in his latest Universal, "Colorado," for the personal popularity of the star and the thrilling situations in which the story abounds, should attract those who love the great outdoors.

Augustus Thomas is the author of "Colorado," which as a stage play occupied one of the prominent Broadway houses in New York for an indefinite period last season.

Although Frank Mayo has not appeared in many western roles during his screen career, his first huge stage success was scored in a western part—that of Cash Hawkins in "The Squawman."

The part of Frank Austin, alias Lieutenant Hayden, differs from those other virile roles in which he has been seen of late. Most of Mayo's big parts have shown him as a character of the north woods, as in "The Brute Breaker" and "The Red Lane."

In "Colorado" he appears as a man self exiled from polite society, trying to forget the past and start anew amid the sands and mountains of the rugged west.

Mr. Mayo is supported by a strong cast including Gloria Hope, Leonard Clapham, Charles LeMoyne, Lillian West and Charles Newton.

SUGGESTIONS

Do not play the story up too strongly if you book this feature unless your patrons like plenty of action.

Your one best bet is to play the newspapers as strongly as you can with a series of short stories on the play, without praising it. Mention the fact that it was written and produced by Augustus Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, and that the production had a very fair run in one of the Broadway houses in New York City.

You might also secure a number of stills of the star and his leading woman and place them in prominent positions about your town.

As the picture doesn't show many attractive exteriors and doesn't delve into the romantic, you cannot exploit the production's scenic advantages.

Play Mayo as strongly as you can, and exploit the title, for it is attractive.

CATCH LINES

He believed that the young man was making love to his wife. What did he do? See Frank Mayo in his latest feature, "Colorado," it will interest you.

"KAZAN"
(Selig-Hamilton—States Rights)

Another Curwood Story Makes Interesting Picture

THIS is episodic as the deuce, covering practically the whole Curwood story besides some necessary additions in the way of plot complication, hasn't been any too well acted and is convenient as to development, but all the same it is a remarkable picture.

The reason for this apparent paradox is the fact, that the production has as fine snow stuff as has ever been filmed, some wonderfully realistic animal scenes in which the dog used to portray "Kazan" performs with the intelligence of a human being and a most careful and well devised technical production.

As in the novel, practically two different dramas are carried along, one a melodramatic story of certain people of the land of the Great Snows, the other a sort of biography of a wolf-dog and his wolf mate. Dramatically, paying much attention to the dog episodes has hurt the picture, but it is in these sequences that much that is unusual in picture-making has been accomplished. Wolves, catamounts, and other wild animals apparently in their native haunts are shown doing things that only the patience of cameraman and director and a knowledge of how to trick the creatures of the wild, could have made possible. Snow storms that were certainly the real thing, with camera work of unusual calibre, are also features.

The acting of the cast is made subordinate to action and overshadowed by the technical production, except for one sequence where hero, heroine and villain are snow bound in a cabin for several days. Here the continuity is practically unbroken for the better part of a reel. This scene carries excellent suspense and also furnishes a thrill or two.

The atmosphere of the picture and the costumes and props used are first class.

For those who like the picture of the great outdoors we should call "Kazan" a great bet. The exploitation possibilities are of course equivalent to those of any Curwood picture, which is saying a good deal.

The cast portraying the various roles, while good types and for the most part competent, contains no name of any great importance except Jane Novak. "Kazan" is a picture to book and bill as a production.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Joan Raddison	Jane Novak
Jim Thorpe	Ben Deeley
Pierre Raddison	William Ryno
Frank Raddison	Ben Haggerty
Black McCready	Edwin Wallock
"Kazan"	By Himself

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another of James Oliver Curwood's stories of the North, "Kazan," that virile tale of the husky and the she-wolf that mated with him, has been made into a motion picture and will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

Like all of the other famous tales written by Mr. Curwood, "Kazan" is a story of the great out doors, full of melodramatic incident and replete with the feats of wild animals. "Kazan," the dog, has a really big role in this picture and his performance is a tribute to the intelligence of the canine and the patience of director and camera man who must have tricked the animal into doing many of the things that the film records.

The story of "Kazan" has to do with the life of Joan Raddison, a daughter of the North; Jim Thorpe, hunter and trapper and Black McCready a renegade and murderer. The action of the picture covers the problem of convicting Black McCready for the crimes he has committed, with a melodramatic climax when "Kazan" accomplishes that which human beings have been unable to do. The cast headed by Jane Novak, is universally good and the atmosphere and snow stuff will be a revelation. The picture was produced by Col. William N. Selig and is presented by George H. Hamilton.

PROGRAM READER

Those who remember the James Oliver Curwood pictures of the past, "Nomads of the North," "The Trail's End," etc., will know what to expect in the ———— booking for next week, "Kazan," from the famous novel of the hero wolf dog who brought to justice a renegade of the North country when human agencies had failed, a virile story of the land of snow, ice and deadly cold, where wild animals abound and life is a struggle against the elements. The picture version of "Kazan" presents along with a competent cast headed by Jane Novak, the most remarkable dog ever appearing in films. This big husky has been taught and tricked into doing stunts that will be considered marvelous. The dramatic story of the original novel has been strengthened by the addition of much original incident and the picture stands as an epoch making production of its kind. The atmosphere of the North is perfect. The drama that the picture contains is real. It will thrill and hold the attention of the most hardened picture fan. If you liked the other Curwood stories you will be more than pleased with "Kazan."

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation for the other Curwood pictures will be suitable for this production. Big newspaper advertising, with a strongly dramatic scene cut, emphasis on the dog and wild animal stunts, the wild animal tracks, the log cabin lobby displays, prologues carrying out the atmosphere of the North and such like are sure fire. We would not attempt to lay much stress on the cast, but give the author and production the best end of the billing. Stories about the exploits of the dog playing "Kazan" will be effective.

CATCH LINES

"Kazan," the Killer. Half wolf, half dog, treacherous husky, used to beatings and the lash of the whip, indomitable in spirit, never forgetting an enemy, but with one soft spot in his canine heart, a love for Joan Raddison, daughter of the Northland, who had patted his head when others kicked him. And the time came when he repaid the girl for her act of kindness. Black McCready had escaped the justice of man, he had laughed at the law, but "Kazan," half wolf, half dog, a big brute husky of the frozen North, was a different enemy to fight.

"WINGS OF PRIDE"
(Jans Pictures, Inc.)

Has Interest, But Too Melodramatic

"WINGS OF PRIDE" reminds us of the time when the good old melodramas had their days, the days when the hero was heartily applauded for his manliness and the villain hissed for his "dirty work."

In fact you can almost hear the hero utter the words, "You shall pay for this, Jack Dalton," as he faces the bold villain, who struts about the stage with the arrogance of one who feels his position.

And most of it happens because the two rivals are in love with the same girl.

To keep the plot in the proper atmosphere, the hero is cast in the usual role of a rising young district attorney with the handsome name of Kent Ordway, who is continually annoyed by the machinations of Kavanaugh, the political boss.

The latter is surrounded by the usual retinue, crooks and spies, who are always at the beck and call of their master.

The theme jumps from the home of the elete in the opening scenes, wanders about the saloons, dives and small town and ends in the home of the district attorney, where the big scenes are played.

The latter scenes are not well staged, the hero standing off six men, the henchmen of the boss, who have come to "settle him," in a very tame fight.

The finale is reached when Kavanaugh shoots the heroine's father and is arrested by the police.

The picture is fairly well directed and produced, but is entirely too melodramatic for the larger houses.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Olive Muir	Olive Tell
Kent Ordway	John O'Brien
Dick	Denton Vane
Mrs. Muir	Ida Pardee
Prentice	J. D. Walsh
Mrs. Prentice	Margaret Seddon
Kavanaugh	Edwards Davies
Lady Lou	Cora De Orsay
Alice Prentice	Raye Dean

Story by Louise Kennedy Mabie.
Scenario by Violet Clark.
Directed by B. A. Rolfe.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Olive Tell's latest production, "Wings of Pride," a Jans Pictures, Inc., feature, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It presents a story of New York social life and underworld life in the big city where a crooked political boss determines to get rid of the young District Attorney and "get the girl for himself."

The picture is strong in dramatic moments, swift action, exciting events and holds attention from first to last.

Miss Tell's supporting cast includes John O'Brien, a leading man who gives an excellent performance of a young District Attorney fighting the political boss and his gang. Ed Davies enacts the role of the political leader and makes it stand out strongly. Denton Vane, who played many prominent parts with the Vitagraph Company also has an important part while others in the cast include Raye Dean, Margaret Seddon, Ida Pardee and others.

The picture was directed by B. A. Rolfe, who also directed Miss Tell in "A Woman's Business."

PROGRAM READER

She was proud, haughty and the adopted daughter of a wealthy New York society woman. Olive Muir knew nothing of her real parents, nor did she bother much about anyone who did not come into her own sphere of life. And then one day the crash came. She was compelled to acknowledge a drunken tool of a political boss as her father.

"Wings of Pride," which will appear at this theatre shortly with Olive Tell as the star.

This is a brief synopsis of a tensely dramatic story written by Louise Kennedy Mabie. It has many rare dramatic moments, sensational scenes and thrills.

It shows the brutal political boss making advances to the beautiful daughter of a man whom he holds in his power and the determined efforts of a rising young District Attorney to offset the "bad man's" efforts.

It also brings to mind the sufferings of many human beings on this world who because they believe in right are compelled by some unknown power to endure terrible tortures of mind, until they are brought face to face with happiness.

Miss Tell's supporting cast includes John O'Brien, who gives an excellent performance in the leading role, that of the young District Attorney fighting the political boss and his gang; Edwards Davies, who enacts the role of the political leader, Denton Vane, Raye Dean, Margaret Seddon and Ida Pardee.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should please any audience that delights in strong situations and enjoys the thrills that go with straight from the shoulder melodrama.

If your patrons do not care for this type of picture, it is a question whether they will be satisfied with scenes depicting life as it is led in the bar-rooms and seamy side of life.

Of course the picture's opening deals with New York's social life but it does not rest there long, the plot being obvious.

You might run a series of short stories in your town papers telling the plot of "Wings of Pride" which will certainly look strong in print but be careful and do not promise too much.

The picture has a good star and a splendid cast which might be played up to good advantage.

CATCH LINES

She thought she was a wealthy society girl—but there was a crash and then she discovered something. What was it? See Olive Tell in her latest production, "Wings of Pride."

How would you like to be brought up by a wealthy society woman and have all that wealth could give you and then to discover that you were the daughter of a very poor man? See "Wings of Pride" with Olive Tell as the star. It will make you think.

"JUST OUT OF COLLEGE"
(Goldwyn)

Slender in Plot But Rather Amusing at Times

WITH those who have never seen the original production or either the stage or screen version of "It Pays to Advertise," this will probably earn some hearty laughs. To others it should prove mildly amusing farce, built on a slender, "it pays to advertise" idea and depending mostly on the mechanical part of picture making for its humorous qualifications.

In fact there is nothing in the acting or the incident provided for the cast that justifies much praise. The characters wander from one set to another and titles explain what is happening.

The star does not appear to the best advantage. He has only a small part and is presented with few opportunities. Besides Mr. Pickford and Bill Hart break about even as to ability to look comfortable in "dressed up" clothes.

The picture gets its entertaining qualities in some scenes that illustrate the advertising campaign that is being waged for "Bingo" pickles with the sole idea of selling out to heroine's father who is a big man in the pickle business. These sequences have been developed along the same lines as were those of "It Pays to Advertise." Everywhere prospective "Father-in-law Pickering" goes he is confronted by the "Bingo" advertising. George Hernandez has the role of "Pickering," which by the way is the only one worth calling a part. The rest of the cast are just in the show.

Titles have been used to excess and the picture drags badly on this account. Evidently the producers have had hard work to string Mr. Ade's farce out to feature length. However, with all its faults, "Just Out of College" is better than a lot of pictures for which greater claims are made and should slide by as an average program release.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Ed Swinger	Jack Pickford
Caroline Pickering	Molly Malone
Septimus Pickering	George Hernandez
Mrs. Pickering	Edythe Chapman
Professor Bliss	Otto Hoffman
Miss Jones	Irene Rich
Herbert Poole	Maxfield Stanley
Paul Greer	M. B. (Lefty) Flynn
Genevieve	Loretta Blake

Adapted from George Ade's stage play of the same name.
Directed by Alfred Green.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Just Out of College," George Ade's famous stage farce of "pickles and advertising," has been made into a motion picture with Jack Pickford as "Ed Swinger" and pretty Molly Malone in the role of "Caroline Pickering," daughter of the "Pickle King," and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

Mr. Ade's play has proven ideal material for the photoplay and the producers have made a highly entertaining vehicle for Mr. Pickford from it. It is light and amusing, free from preachments, sex complications, etc., to which many people object. It is a picture to be seen, laughed over and forgotten, which after all makes the best photoplay fare.

A very capable cast that includes George Hernandez is in support of Mr. Pickford and Miss Malone and the technical part of the production is unusual. There are plenty of "clothes," fine sets and pretty exteriors. "Just Out of College" will please those who are partial to the pleasant clean picture and is especially recommended for those who are admirers of George Ade's writings. A great many of the titles used are from Mr. Ade's original play.

PROGRAM READER

There are few people who have not heard of George Ade with his "Fables in Slang" and other clever stories and stage plays, including which is "Just Out of College," a highly amusing farce comedy founded on "It Pays to Advertise" ideas.

"Just Out of College" has been adapted to the screen by Goldwyn, with Jack Pickford in the leading juvenile role and pretty Molly Malone as the heroine and will be the feature attraction at the ———— for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

For a picture which will entertain, earn a lot of hearty laughs and a whole grist of chuckles we can recommend "Just Out of College."

All the well known Ade humor of the original has been retained in the picture version and a lot of new incident has been added. "Just Out of College" will be a welcome change from heavy plays, with complex plots and perhaps questionable themes. It is recommended for a pleasant evening's entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill with the idea of bringing the fame of the play and the author to the front and give some idea of the theme.

Unless the star is unusually popular advertise as a production rather than as a starring vehicle for Mr. Pickford. Mention Molly Malone and George Hernandez in your billing. In your newspaper advertising copy the George Ade style so far as you are able. A prologue staged by S. L. Rothafel at the New York Capitol theatre is described in another column.

CATCH LINES

George Ade's famous play adapted to the screen with all its original humor and cleverness retained.

The story of two pickle companies, one real and another on paper, with much that is really funny told in the story of how the real pickle company came to buy out the one whose assets consisted of billboards and a demonstrating parlor.

About Players

Buster and the corpulent Roscoe answered the call to bigger roles and the happy film family was broken up. Miss Lake first was featured by Metro, then was made a full fledged star. Keaton, under contract to star in a series of two-reel comedies for Metro, made such a decided hit in his first picture that his success was assured. Arbuckle, meanwhile, has made a definite place for himself in the production of feature pictures.

Although the paths of the members of the trio have crossed and re-crossed during the succeeding years of their greater success it has so happened that they never have been gathered together before the camera since they ceased working before Arbuckle's lens. The Metro re-union was the result of an invitation from Miss Lake to join her noon-day dressing room tea party.

Mr. Arbuckle paid a high tribute to the two Metro stars who are the products of his training during the course of a discussion of the making of comedies.

"There's no more trying school for screen players than comedies," said he. "And I can honestly say that I know of nobody who has profitted to such an extent from her early training as has Miss Lake. When she was with our little family of laughmakers, I always knew I could depend on her to hold up her end of the game. Making comedies requires an agile body and nimble wits. You can't wait for the voice of the director—you have to know what to do in the face of any sudden change of situation.

"As for Keaton—Buster is far beyond any need of praise from me. He has a distinct personality and an ability for getting into and out of impossible situations that keeps anybody who sees him work, on edge every moment.

"I have seen many experienced players leave the legitimate stage to go into film comedies. And the failures are so numerous it would take a book to publish the names of those I can recall. Entering screen work through this gateway one either makes good with a bang, or is retired to oblivion. I am sure that Buster and Alice, who already have reached an enviable position on the screen, will go further than any of the comedy workers it has been my good fortune to select."

Lionel Pape has signed to play an important role in the Jewel Carmen production, a Roland West independent special, yet without a working title, but advanced to the point of engaging players.

Justine Johnstone, noted beauty, and known for her exquisite taste in feminine attire, is engaged, busily, playing the leading role in a starring vehicle (Realart) in which she will be seen robbed of all her finery, and clothed in cotton stockings, low heel slippers, such as are worn by very young country girls, and dresses that carry out the "atmosphere." Which proves Miss Johnstone is willing to act, and does not confine her desires to looking her best. In a gingham apron, she will still be possessed, however, of her famed face and figure.

Tom Moore's first appearance in motion pictures was in a story written by himself and Stuart Holmes. They described it as a Kentucky comedy. Now both Moore and Holmes are at the Goldwyn studio, the former being the star in "Made in Heaven" and the latter the "heavy" in "The Bridal Path."

They can be seen any day between scenes, laughing over some reminiscence of those days, now twelve years in the past, when they would sit up until three in the morning or later to write their parts. They collaborated in a series of three reel comedies—considered long pictures for those days.

Alan Forrest has been engaged by Louis B. Mayer to play a leading role with Anita Stewart in "The Invisible Fear." This is the star's second Mayer-First National attraction since her return from the East. Edwin Carewe will direct. Hampton Del Ruth wrote the story and Madge Tyrone prepared the screen version.

The R. Cecil Smiths en Tour

"To the coast—via New Orleans," is where R. Cecil Smith states he and his wife, professionally known as Ella Stuart Carson, have gone. Fashionable, indeed, it seems for players, writers, etc., to dart too and from the coast, so known for "Keeping up with the Joneses," the R. Cecil Smiths hurriedly packed a few belongings, and away from the wintry weather in New York.

Incidentally, before leaving, the clever couple, who write scenarios, original stories, and all other compilations connected with picture play productions, for Selznick, learned that upon the two acres of ground purchased by them in Ocean Park Heights, nothing less than oil had been discovered. No wonder they wished to investigate. First thing we know, there will be an original story, scenario, continuity et al, written by the R. Cecil Smiths—in oil, and framed with respectful precision.

Alice Joyce and Holmes Herbert in Miss Joyce's next starring vehicle for Vitagraph, "Her Lord and Master"

With News Correspondents

S. A. Lynch Enterprises have taken over the Grand, Greensboro, N. C., from Jake Wells, and are playing vaudeville there. Don Trent is the manager.

The Strand, Durham, N. C., is closed for a week for repairs and redecorating. The Broadway will close early in February for two weeks for the same purpose.

SAN FRANCISCO

The engagement of Charles M. Pincus, manager of the California theatre, San Francisco, and Miss Viola Jacoby has been announced. They expect to be married in June.

Urging exhibitors in the San Francisco territory to tie up with his distributing concern, W. W. Hodkinson is spending a few weeks on the Pacific Coast announcing the embarkation by the distributing company on a plan of contracts contingent on the right of the W. W. Hodkinson Corp. to cancel any contracts with exhibitors contingent on the right of the W. W. Hodkinson Corp. to cancel any contracts with producing units if pictures do not come up to the required standard.

W. S. Wessling, Western division manager of the aPthe exchanges, is in San Francisco. Other visitors to the city this week are: Frank Rogers, general manager of Blackton productions, and Harry Leonheardt, producer of the Pathe release, "The Devil."

Motion pictures on steamship lines sailing from San Francisco are to become the custom. The Matson Line has made the beginning with pictures on the service between the Western metropolis and Baltimore, Md.

CLEVELAND

The Gordon Square theatre, West 65th and Detroit avenue, started out with a new policy Monday, January 31. Vaudeville and high grade photoplays will be shown instead of a straight picture program as heretofore.

The Liberty theatre, Cleveland, is said to be the first Loew house of the country to put on a serial picture for six days a week. The Liberty is running "The Son of Tarsan" every afternoon except Sunday.

The Standard Film Service of Cleveland is about to put upp its own exchange building. Forty feet of land have been purchased by the Standard Film Service Company on Payne avenue just east of East 21st street, and directly adjoining the property on which the Film Building is being erected. The building of the Standard Film Company will have three stories and a basement, with a footage of 20,000 square feet, all of which they will utilize.

National Film Corpany, with Louis Levenson at the head of the local territory, announced this week the purchase of "Infatuation of Youth," a Paul Cappellani picture; and "The Restless Sex," a Signet picture, for distribution in Ohio and Kentucky, through the Sterling Film Service of Cleveland.

NEW ORLEANS

The Southern Amusement Company of Lake Charles, La., has purchased the Strand theatre at Jennings, La., for $40,000. The deal involves the lot and new brick building and all equipment, including a fine organ installed about a year ago. The Southern Amusement Company owns the Princess theatre at Natchez and was beginning the construction of a new and up-to-date movie building to cost about thirty to forty thousand dollars.

The company owns a chain of motion picture shows in southwest Louisiana, three in Lake Charles, one in Vinton, and one in Jennings. The company was represented in the transaction here by A. G. Wachsen and Bert Tiller, officers of the company. It is understood the operation of the Princess will be discontinued.

Prospects of New Orleans becoming a second Hollywood loomed last week with the arrival in the city of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company. Mr. Laemmle came to look over the advantages the city offers for the permanent establishment of one of his film producing companies, it is said.

"You see," said Mr. Laemmle, "the reason the Coast on the west has so many companies producing there is atmosphere. And that, together with business potentialities and the situation as regards film production here, has impelled me to visit New Orleans.

"This is my first visit to the city, and I intend to make a thorough examination of all prospects."

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its subsidiary distributing organization, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is in New Orleans paying his first visit to the branch office opened here some months ago.

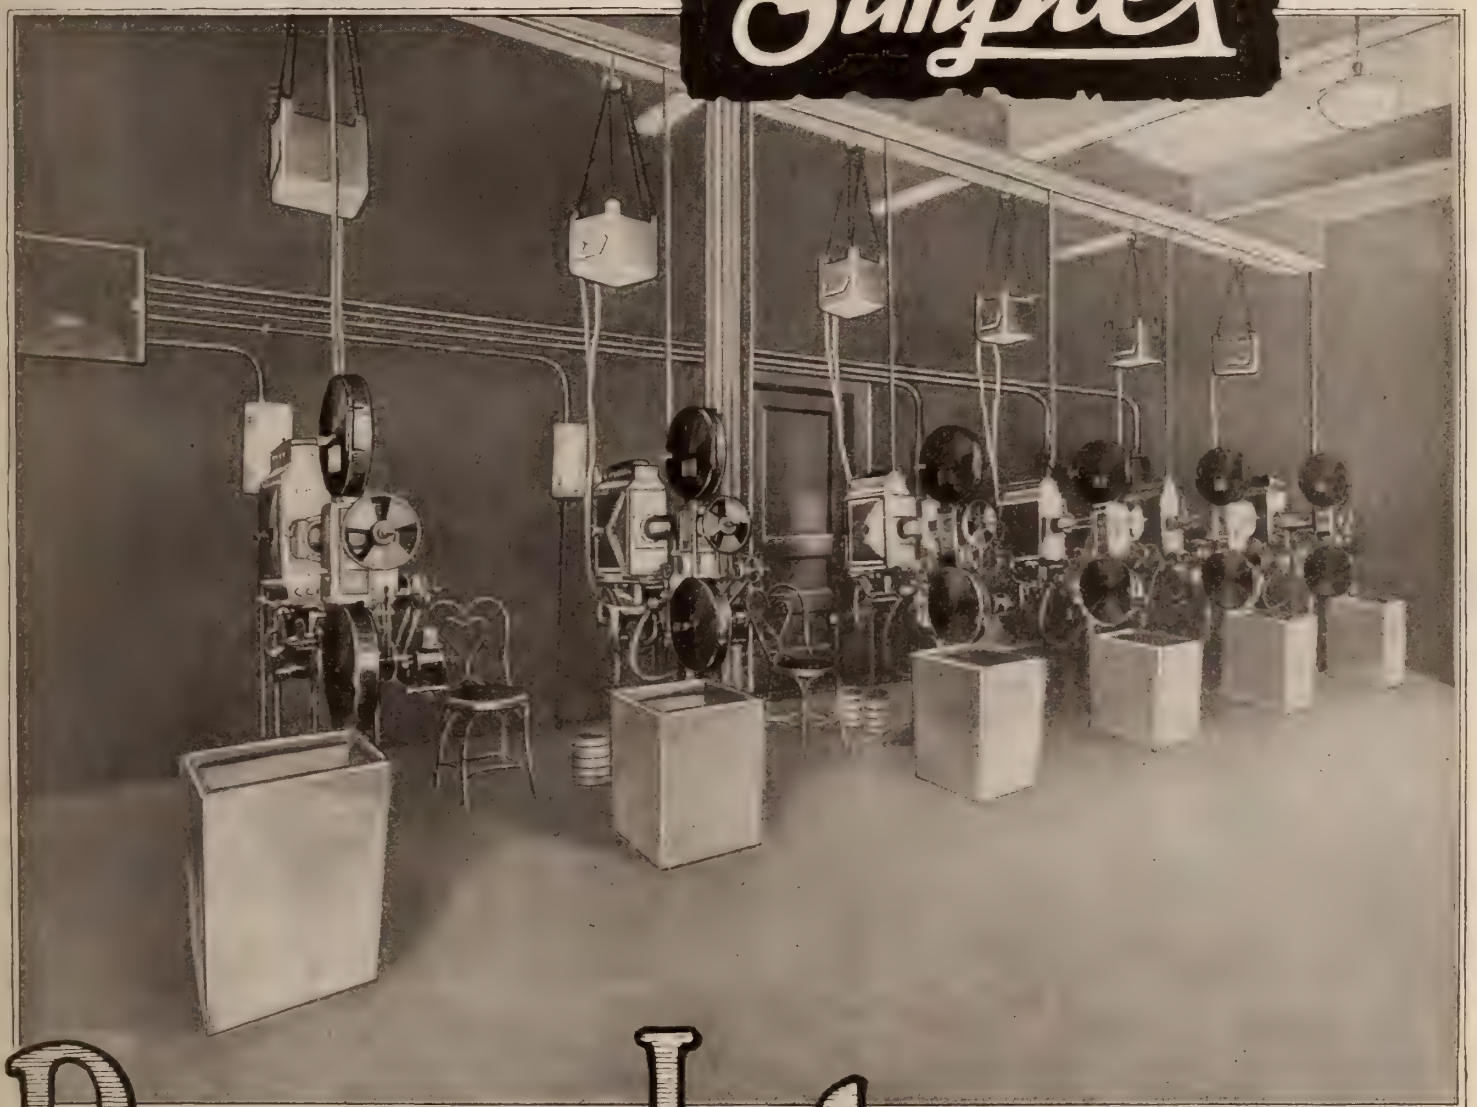
Nick Fiorito, grocer, of Dauphine and Elizardi streets, New Orleans, is the latest addition to the motion picture field in that city. He has recently completed the erection of a very pretty neighborhood theatre adjoining his grocery store.

CANADA

For the fourth time in almost as many weeks, Mr. Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, Ontario, suffered loss because of burglary on the night of January 26 when a padded-brick artist smashed the window in the jewelry store owned by Mr. Brouse in the Canadian Capital. A considerable quantity of jewelry was snatched from the store window. Exactly one week previously, burglars broke into the Imperial theatre office and secured about $700 in cash. A short time before that a burglar caused considerable damage in the box office of the Imperial theatre and only a few weeks ago a burglar stole all the watches from the Brouse store that had been left for repairs—and Brouse had a whale of a time compensating customers for the several score of solid gold eighteen-jeweled, diamond-studded time-pieces that had been left to be fixed.

Mr. James T. Moxley, manager of the Allen's Russell and Regent theatres, Ottawa, Ontario, received the congratulations from fellow-exhibitors in the city on the occasion of the marriage of his son, Edward John Moxley, to Miss Martha Agnes Lamb of Ottawa. Mr. and Mrs. Moxley, Jr., will reside in Pembroke, Ontario, where the son will be manager of the Copeland House, a large hotel owned by interests which include his father.

"Alf's Button," the Hepworth comedy which is said to be the superior of "The Better 'Ole," has been booked by Manager Ben Stapleton of the Centre theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, for a second engagement of three days to start February 7. This picture drew big crowds to the Centre for a whole week a short time ago. The feature is being distributed in Eastern Canada by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, Montreal and London, England, through Horsfall Productions, Limited.



Mrs. Vallance Patriarche, a veteran member of the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors, gave an address on "The Influence of Motion Pictures on National Life" before the quarterly meeting of the Provincial Chapter of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire at the Fort Garry Hotel, Winnipeg, on Thursday, January 27.

Mr. Harry Kaufman, Toronto, sales manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, is making a business tour of the Canadian West, being accompanied by Mr. H. L. Nathanson, manager of the Winnipeg branch of the exchange company, and brother of Mr. N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the Regal Films, Famous-Players Canadian Company and subsidiary companies. The two officials are securing advance bookings for a line-up of strong releases, including "The Four Horsemen of Apocalypse," "The Witching Hour," "One Man in a Million."
